musicHound

folk

The Essential Album Guide

edited by Neal Walters
and Brian Mansfield

foreword by Mark D. Moss,
Sing Out!
magazine

MUSICHOUND FOLK: TH 32727
781.62
[redacted] 7

musicHound

781.62 Mus

MusicHound folk

REED CITY PUBLIC LIBRARY
410 West Upton Avenue
Reed City, MI 49677
(616) 832-2131

Please be aware that under the Michigan Library Law, ruining or failing to return books IS a misdemeanor.

DEMCO

musicHound

folk

The Essential Album Guide

edited by Neal Walters
and Brian Mansfield

foreword by Mark D. Moss, Sing Out! magazine

DETROIT • NEW YORK • LONDON

VISIBLE INK PRESS

musicHound™ folk
The Essential Album Guide

Copyright © 1998 Visible Ink Press®
A Cunning Canine Production®

Since this page cannot legibly accommodate all copyright notices, the credits constitute an extension of the copyright notice.

No part of this book may be reproduced in any form without permission in writing from the publisher, except by a reviewer who wishes to quote brief passages in connection with a review written for inclusion in a magazine or newspaper.

MusicHound Folk is a creative work fully protected by all applicable copyright laws, as well as by misappropriation, trade secret, unfair competition, and other applicable laws. The editors of this work have added value to the underlying factual information herein through one or more of the following: unique and original selection, coordination, expression, arrangement, and classification of the information.

All rights to this publication will be vigorously defended.

Published by Visible Ink Press a division of Gale Research 835 Penobscot Building
Detroit, MI 48226-4094

Visible Ink Press, MusicHound, the MusicHound logo, and A Cunning Canine Production are trademarks of Gale Research.

Most Visible Ink Press books are available at special quantity discounts when purchased in bulk by corporations, organizations, or groups. Customized printings, special imprints, messages, and excerpts can be produced to meet your needs. For more information, contact Special Markets Manager, Gale Research, 835 Penobscot Bldg., Detroit, MI 48226. Or call 1-800-776-6265.

Cover photo of Pete Seeger © UPI/Corbis-Bettmann

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data has been applied for.

ISBN 1-57859-037-X
Printed in the United States of America
All rights reserved

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

musicHound contents

list of sidebars . . . . . vii
foreword (by mark d. moss, sing out! magazine) . . . . . ix
introduction . . . . . xi
musicHound owner's manual . . . . . xiii credits . . . . . xv
acknowledgments . . . . . xxiii

a–z guide to folk acts / 1

compilation albums / 867

publications / 873

web sites / 879

record labels / 891

radio stations / 895

music festivals and workshops / 899

five-bone album index / 915

band member index / 923

producer index / 943

roots index / 995

category index / 1023

musicHound sidebars

editor's choice: 11 folk harp albums 3
the 1920s 8
editor's choice: 7 great highland bagpipe albums 19
the 1930s. 30
editor's choice: 5 uilleann pipe albums 39
the 1940s. 52
editor's choice: 13 celtic fiddle albums. 61
the 1950s. 68
editor's choice: 12 cape breton albums 79
scottish fiddle styles 90
editor's choice: 9 mountain dulcimer albums . 101
bodhrán 112
editor's choice: 15 singer-songwriter albums . 123 celtic music 132
editor's choice: 11 blues albums 151
cape breton music. 158
editor's choice: 13 english folk-rock albums 173
bagpipes 182
editor's choice: 5 celtic folk-rock albums 195 great highland bagpipe 208
editor's choice: 10 tin whistle albums 221
folk harp 224
editor's choice: 5 zydeco albums 245
british folk rock 256
editor's choice: 9 dobro albums 271
old time music 280
editor's choice: 10 acts to watch 291 old time fiddle 300
blues guitar styles 308
slack key guitar 322
banjo styles 334
editor's choice: 13 desert island discs 349
uilleann pipes. 358
banjo types 368
klezmer music 380
irish fiddle styles 392
bluegrass music 404
cajun fiddle 418
editor's choice: 15 old time fiddle albums . . . 425
hurdy-gurdy 434
editor's choice: 15 unjustly overlooked gems 449
sean-nós singing 460
editor's choice: 12 old time banjo albums . . . 467 bouzouki 482
editor's choice: 4 more pipe albums you can't live without 493 folk rock in the u.s. 506

editor's choice: 20 bluegrass albums 517
concertinas 528
editor's choice: 10 cajun albums 539 morris dance 550
editor's choice: 14 celtic albums 561 cajun accordion 570
accordion. 580
editor's choice: 11 slack key guitar albums . . . 593 cajun music 606
editor's choice: 18 folk albums from across the usa 607 zydeco music 612
editor's choice: 7 autoharp albums 627
the 1960s. 638
editor's choice: 14 hammered dulcimer albums 651
the 1970s. 660
editor's choice: 20 old time albums. 673
the 1980s. 684
editor's choice: 11 country/folk albums 695
the 1990s. 706
hammered dulcimer 716 mountain dulcimer 726
editor's choice: 5 bluegrass albums 739 bowed psaltery. 750 autoharp 760
dobro 772
editor's choice: 5 songs that shook the folk-rock world. 783 open tunings for guitar 788 moses asch (1905–1986) 804 editor's choice: 13 more desert island discs . . 817 harry smith (1923–1991). 830
cecil sharp (1859–1924) 840
alan lomax (1915—) 850

You're holding in your hands an answer to that most reviled of all rhetorical questions: "What is folk music?"

Oh, yeah. I can hear the universal groans already. But if you've picked up a book with the word "folk" emblazoned across the cover in 96-point type, it's likely that you're bringing some kind of personalized preconception to the project already. And therein lies the rub. If we want to have a discussion about folk music, we have no choice but to find a common ground for the definition of the genre. To do that, it can't hurt to gain a little historical perspective on the subject.

"Folk music," as a phrase, was first coined in the early decades of this century by the noted folklorists John A. and Alan Lomax to describe "orally transmitted, community music." Put simply, they collected the music "of the folk," so it seemed logical to call it folk music. What set it apart from other musical forms was that the genre was driven as much, or more, by the context in which the music existed, thrived, changed, and was used as it was by the "style." The Lomaxes' folk music was played and sung on front porches, on the range, in the fields, in churches, at a cradle, over a pile of wood, at a dance, or in prison. This was music that was an integral and active part of the lives of the people who made it, sang it, danced it . . . not something pasted on via a trip to a mall superstore.

But times change, and with those changes come mutations of even the most exacting definitions. The Lomaxes and other folklorists recorded much of the music they collected. By the late 1940s, a new generation of revivalists, inspired by their work, had come along. They began singing, playing, and recording those same tunes, adding to and processing the material as well. World War II and radio had done much to eradicate most of the regional cultural boundaries in this country (not the music, mind you, but the physical and cultural boundaries that had prevented intermingling of styles). Without calculated forethought, people were cherishing the undefinable thread that runs through traditional and rooted music . . . and incorporating parts of it into the popular music of the times. By the end of the next decade, folk music was in the throes of a commercial boom.

By the time the dust settled in the latter part of the 1960s, the music industry had succeeded in convincing much of the public that "folk music" equaled "singer-songwriter." (Try stopping someone on the street today and asking them to name a folk artist. You're unlikely to get an answer beyond Jewel or Bob Dylan.) Tradition-bearers and aficionados of those traditions began finding other ways to describe their music. Old time . . . country blues . . . gospel . . . Cajun . . . klezmer . . . ballads . . . bluegrass . . . as well as dozens of other genres (and their hybrids) splintered off and went their separate ways. Oh, there remained (and remain) lots of us who continue to carry the torch of a broader, umbrella-style definition for folk music—but it's hard to share a definition that simply doesn't fit into neat, objective, unique columns.

And that's where a book like MusicHound Folk gains its power and worth. By looking for that ethereal thread that binds the music of seemingly disparate artists to the roots or continuum of recorded folk music, the editors have created a perfect foundation for our own journeys to find a personal definition for folk music. Leafing through these pages you can find thousands of connections and inspirations between, from, and toward other artists and approaches to music. Yeah, there are songwriters who are mostly inspired by the folk boom years . . . but it doesn't take "six degrees of separation" to find a traditional artist who sings ballads passed for generations through his or her family tree. Look up the artists you know and love, follow their influences and inspirations back and forth. It won't be long before it becomes impossible to explain folk music with a single artist or style again. And not much longer before you'll be giddy with all the possibilities that this new way of looking at music offers. Go ahead, try it. Before long, you'll know what I mean.

Since 1983, Mark D. Moss has edited Sing Out! The Folk Song Magazine, the longest running (since 1950!) periodical devoted to folk music in the world. He also serves as the executive director of its parent not-for-profit educational organization, also called Sing Out!, and oversees the SORCe (a multi-media resources center focusing on folk revival material from the 1940s to the present) and Sing Out! Publications, publishers of folk song collections like the enormously popular Rise Up Singing, the group singing songbook. He resides in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, with his wife, folksinger Anne Hills, and their daughter, Tamlyn.

The job of co-editing MusicHound Folk has been an intensely pleasurable, professionally rewarding, and certainly a humbling educational experience. As a musician myself and an avid collector for nearly 40 years now, I thought I knew a lot about this music. After immersing myself in it for the best part of six months, I can tell you that I now realize just how very little I really did know—starting with the question I was asked nearly every day during this period: "What is your definition of folk music?" Gulp. Until the question was asked, I was sure I knew the answer: folk music was what I liked. Of course, I had also observed Internet discussion groups arguing this question for weeks with an intensity that normally accompanies religious debate and with no one willing to compromise in the slightest. At one extreme, people argue broadly that "it's anything that folks sing," a definition that encompasses nearly everything from children's nursery rhymes to Gregorian chants to Delta blues to Bob Dylan protest songs. Some purists respond that it's anything that folks sing as long as: 1) it has survived some sort of aging process with origins more or less lost in antiquity; 2) the performer learned it through some sort of ongoing oral tradition; 3) it's completely non-commercial in nature; or any of a dozen other qualifiers. Trained folklorists—with whom I did not consult—would presumably tend toward the latter definition, pausing only to add an extra mouthful or two of precise technical jargon to make it read more like a primer for a graduate course in anthropology than a practical definition for "folks" to understand. This definition would exclude virtually everything that you see in the folk sections of our nation's commercial music outlets, dismissing the lot as simply "popular music with acoustic instruments." While that may be academically correct, it ignores the fact that millions of people have a very different definition or, perhaps, millions of definitions. The only thing that we can say with complete certainty is that no single definition of folk music is going to please everybody. This is a discussion that only a lawyer would truly enjoy.

Nobody let me off that easily, though. My co-editor, Brian Mansfield, in his introduction to MusicHound Country, quoted Tom T. Hall as saying that country music "is what you make it," a definition that incorporates everything from Montana Slim to the Kentucky HeadHunters and all the states in between. The logic is one of accepting the fact that differing opinions and taste are facts of life in the commercial marketplace. Since this book is intended for the album-buying public in general and not simply for the odd folklorist, we have chosen to recognize those differences and to include those artists that the average consumer would reasonably expect to find in the folk bins at his or her favorite store. This doesn't mean that we are surrendering to the popular tendency to equate the word "folksinger" exclusively with the phrase "singer-songwriter." You'll find plenty of singer-songwriters in here, of course, but we've also included a healthy sampling of old time banjo and fiddle players, bluegrass bands, autoharp players, mountain and hammered dulcimer players, Celtic fiddlers and pipers, and British and American folk rockers. You'll also find artists from such diverse sub-genres as country blues, klezmer, Cajun and zydeco, Western swing, and even rock and country crossovers. These are all part of a larger fabric that—academic purists aside—the general public widely recognizes as folk music. You'll also find that the MusicHound version of folk music isn't a popularity contest measured in terms of platinum albums produced or the number of Grammy nominations received. Some of the best traditional musicians and singers tend to labor in relative obscurity, making, as the joke goes, "hundreds of dollars a year." They're all in here.

On the other hand, we can't possibly cover every artist across such a broad range of folk genres. For example, you won't find much of what is known as "world music" in here, not because it's not folk music but simply because we didn't have the space and we opted to limit our coverage to artists in the primarily "Anglo" tradition. Additionally, since this is an essential guide for the album-buying public, we also limited our coverage to albums that are currently in print on CD in the U.S. or readily available as imports, an approach that affects many of the Celtic and British entries, for example. This approach also excludes a number of deserving artists who—to date—have no CDs in print. Of the traditional artists who are represented on CD, many also have extensive back catalogs on cassette and LP, most of which have yet to be re-released on CD. Where appropriate, we have identified the more important of these albums as "worth searching for."

Unfortunately for the buying public, not all CDs are created equal in terms of general availability. There is a decided trend toward independent releases in the folk world and many of these small labels do not get shelf space in the larger retail outlets. Happily, much of this material is available for purchase by mail directly from the label or artist, or even—somewhat ironically, given the traditional nature of the music—over the Internet. We've attempted to include appropriate contact information for independent artists and labels as part of each entry and we've also appended an extensive listing of resources that should help you find what you're looking for.

Each entry contains a biographical sketch that provides some pertinent information about the artist, summarizes affiliations with other performers or groups, and indicates primary influences. Sometimes these influences are direct—Ramblin' Jack Elliott and Bob Dylan both owe a direct debt to Woody Guthrie, for example—and sometimes, where direct influences are difficult to discern or the artist really hasn't been around long enough to influence others widely, this merely translates to "if you like this artist, you're quite likely to appreciate the music of that artist."

As with all the MusicHound volumes, we've included our usual expert advice on what to buy, what to buy next, what to avoid, and what's worth searching for. You'll also find the MusicHound Folk contributors' opinions reflected in some very subjective Editor's Choice selections, which you can use as shortcuts to building an informed and eclectic folk collection. As opinionated as I am about the music that I like personally, I can't wait to purchase some of this material that our writers have been raving about.

Since this volume does cover such a broad cross-section of traditional and roots music, some of it may be unfamiliar to you. We have included informational sidebars on many of the subgenres or traditions covered and on some of the more unusual instruments involved.

So whether folk music to you begins and ends with Woody Guthrie, the Weavers, and Pete Seeger; flowered in the 1960s with the Kingston Trio and Joan Baez; only got interesting when electricity was added by folk rockers such as Fairport Convention and Steeleye Span; is never better than when it features the Celtic fiddles of Kevin Burke or Frankie Gavin; is at its best when it celebrates the blues stylings of Mississippi John Hurt or Robert Johnson; or simply has to resonate with that lonesome sound of banjos and fiddles echoing down the "holler," this book should be a useful tool in your search for the vital music that you call folk music.

So how do you use MusicHound Folk? Here's what you'll find in the entries, and what we intend to accomplish with each point:

• An introductory paragraph, which will give you not only biographical information but also a sense of the artist's or group's sound and its stature in the folk—and overall music—pantheon.

• what to buy: The album or albums that we feel are essential purchases for consuming this act. It may be a greatest hits set, or it may be a particular album that captures the essence of the artist in question. In any event, this is where you should start—and don't think it wasn't hard to make these choices when eyeballing the catalogs of Pete Seeger, Joan Baez, Altan, Bill Monroe, B.B. King, the New Lost City Ramblers, and some of the other folk titans. Note that for acts with a limited catalog, what's available may take the place of what to buy and the other sections.

• what to buy next: In other words, once you're hooked, these will be the most rewarding next purchases.

• what to avoid: Seems clear enough. This is Hound poop.

• the rest: Everything else that's available for this act, rated with the Hound's trusty bone scale (see below for more on this). Note that for some artists with sizable catalogs, we've condensed this section down to best of the rest.

• worth searching for: An out-of-print gem. A bootleg. A guest appearance on another artist's album or a film soundtrack. Something that may require some looking but will reward you for the effort.

• ⏪: The crucial influences on this act's music.

• ⏩: The acts that have been influenced by this artist or group. Used only where applicable; it's a little early for Dar Williams to have influenced anybody.

We should also remind you that MusicHound Folk is a buyer's guide. Therefore, for the most part we only discuss CDs that are currently in print and available in the United States.

Now, you ask, what's with those bones? (Down, boy! Sheesh. . . .) It's not hard to figure out—𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥 is nirvana (not Nirvana), a woof! is dog food. Keep in mind that the bone ratings don't pertain just to the act's own catalog, but to its worth in the whole music realm. Therefore a lesser act's what to buy choice might rate no more than 𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥; some even rate 𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥, a not-so-subtle sign that you might want to think twice about that act. Note that for recent releases that were not available to be reviewed before press time, N/A will appear instead of a bone rating.

As with any opinions, all of what you're about to read is subjective and personal. MusicHound has a bit of junkyard dog in it, too; it likes to start fights. We hope it does, too. Ultimately, we think the Hound will point you in the right direction, and if you buy the 𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥 and 𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥𝅘𝅥 choices, you'll have an album collection to howl about. But if you've got a bone to pick, the Hound wants to hear about it—and promises not to bite (but maybe bark a little bit). If you think we're wagging our tails in the wrong direction or lifting our leg at something that doesn't deserve it, let us know. If you think an act has been capriciously excluded—or charitably included—tell us.Your comments and suggestions will serve the greater MusicHound audience and future projects, so don't be shy.

Editors

Neal Walters has been a folk music performer, teacher, and collector for nearly 40 years with more than 5,000 albums in his personal collection. He has been playing the dulcimer for over 20 years after starting with the guitar and autoharp; he also plays fiddle, banjo, mandolin, and bass. He is a member of two bands: the Mill Run Dulcimer Band, with whom he has recorded seven albums, and a new group, Doofus, which has just released its first CD. An experienced performer and teacher, he has taught dulcimer and autoharp for the past ten years or so in and around Washington and at camps and festivals such as Appalachian State University (Boone), the Augusta Heritage Program in Elkins, West Virginia, Kentucky Music Week in Bardstown, Kentucky, the Great Black Swamp Festival in Lima, Ohio, the Autumn Hills and Housatonic Dulcimer Festivals in Connecticut, the Cranberry Gathering in Binghamton, New York, the String-A-Long workshops sponsored by the University of Wisconsin (Milwaukee), and others. He writes a review column for the Dulcimer Player's News and, with musical partner Heidi Cerrigione, recently co-published 30 Old Time Songs for Mountain Dulcimer and Autoharp.

Brian Mansfield previously co-edited MusicHound Country. He also has contributed to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound R&B, and MusicHound Lounge. His work has appeared in USA Today, Request, Country America, New Country, Daily Variety, and No Depression. He currently serves as the Nashville correspondent for CountryNow.com, a daily music news and information service; he has also provided content for the Launch and Wall of Sound Web sites. A graduate of Boston's Berklee College of Music, he currently lives in Nashville, Tennessee, with his wife and two sons.

Supervising Editor

Gary Graff is an award-winning music journalist and supervising editor of the MusicHound album guide series. A native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, his work is published regularly by Reuters, Guitar World, ICE, the San Francisco Chronicle, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Michigan's Oakland Press, SW Radio Networks, Country Song Roundup, and other publications. A regular contributor to the Web sites Mr. Showbiz/Wall of Sound, Jam TV, and Electric Village, his weekly Rock 'n' Roll Insider report airs on Detroit rock station WRIF-FM (101.1). He also appears on public TV station WTVS' Backstage Pass program and is a board member of the North American Music Critics Association and co-producer of the annual Detroit Music Awards. He lives in the Detroit suburbs with his wife, daughter, and two stepsons.

Managing Editor

Judy Galens is a senior editor at Visible Ink Press and the managing editor of MusicHound Jazz. She has an abiding love for many different kinds of music, particularly songs she can sing along with while driving. She resides in the Detroit suburbs with her husband and some pets.

Associate Managing Editor

Dean Dauphinais is a senior editor at Visible Ink Press and a contributor to MusicHound Rock and MusicHound R&B. His CD collection contains a whole lot of Frank Sinatra and Marvin Gaye, but he also enjoys Lyle Lovett, Alison Krauss, and the Bad Livers, a group he's been hooked on ever since he saw them perform live in Austin, Texas, in 1997. The co-author of two books, Astounding Averages! and Car Crazy, Dauphinais lives in suburban Detroit with his three favorite folks: his wife, Kathy, and two sons, Sam and Josh.

Copy Editors

Pam Shelton is a freelance writer and copy editor living in Connecticut. She used to write a bluegrass column for Country in the City News.

Brigham Narins is a freelance editor, writer, and gradual student who lives with his wife in suburban Detroit. Despite being a longtime electric guitar enthusiast (the Fender sound), he appreciates the fact that acoustic music is more than just "unplugged."

Publisher

Martin Connors

MusicHound Staff

Michelle Banks, Christa Brelin, Jim Craddock, Kathy Dauphinais, Beth Fhaner, Jeff Hermann, Brad Morgan, Carol Schwartz, Devra Sladics, Christine Tomassini

Art Direction

Tracey Rowens, Michelle DiMercurio, Cindy Baldwin

Contributing Photographers

Jack and Linda Vartoogian grew up in late 1950s Detroit and heard, but did not get to see, some of the best performers in music. To compensate, they have devoted themselves to photographing musicians (and dancers) from across the country and around the world. While their New York City home virtually guarantees that, eventually, most acts come to them, they continue to seek opportunities to discover new talent and new venues—the farther from home the better. Their images appear regularly in The New York Times, Time, Newsweek, Living Blues, and JazzTimes, among many other periodicals, as well as in innumerable books, including their own Afropop! (Chartwell Books, 1995) and The Living World of Dance (Smithmark, 1997), and MusicHound Blues, MusicHound R&B, MusicHound Lounge, and MusicHound Jazz.

Ken Settle is a Detroit-area photographer who has specialized in music photography for over 16 years. His photos have been published worldwide in magazines such as Rolling Stone, People, Guitar Player, Playboy, Audio, Japan's Player, France's Guitarist, and Australia's Who Weekly. His work also appears in MusicHound Country, MusicHound Blues, MusicHound R&B, MusicHound Lounge, and MusicHound Jazz.

Stephen Ide is a graphic designer, photographer, and contributing writer to MusicHound Folk.

Robert J. Huffman is a copywriter and the proprietor of Field Mark Publications. When he isn't out chasing butterflies to supply the needs of his natural history photo business, Bob occasionally attends folk festivals. He can also fake a pretty good version of Mississippi John Hurt's "My Creole Belle."

Graphic Services

Randy Bassett, Pam Reed, Barbara Yarrow

Permissions

Maria Franklin, Michele Lonoconus

Production

Mary Beth Trimper, Dorothy Maki, Evi Seoud, Shanna Heilveil, Wendy Blurton

Technology Wizard

Jeffrey Muhr

Typesetting Virtuoso

Marco Di Vita of the Graphix Group

Marketing & Promotion

Marilou Carlin, Kim Marich, Betsy Rovegno, Nancy Hammond, Susan Stefani

MusicHound Development

Julia Furtaw

Contributors

Grant Alden is co-editor of No Depression and an occasional contributor to Rolling Stone, Request, RayGun, and one or two paper and electronic publications whose names don't begin with R.

Gil Asakawa is the content editor for Digital City Denver, a site on America Online. He's written for Rolling Stone, Pulse!, Creem, No Depression, and New Country, co-authored The Toy Book (Knopf, 1992), and has contributed entries to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, and MusicHound Blues.

Karen Ashbrook plays hammered dulcimer, Irish flute, and pennywhistle. She has several recordings on Maggie's Music, a music book with Mel Bay Publications, and an instructional book/tape set for Irish music on dulcimer with Oak Publications; her Irish book has become a classic tutorial within dulcimer literature in America. Karen performs and records with the Celtic women's trio Ceoltoiri and also plays Jewish and contra dance music. Her private lessons in Silver Spring, Maryland, and week-long classes at Common Ground, Augusta Arts Center, and other camps around the country are very popular.

Robert Baird is music editor of Stereophile Magazine in Santa Fe, New Mexico, and a contributor to MusicHound Country.

Stephen L. Betts is a Nashville-based columnist for Country Song Roundup magazine and researcher for the TNN shows Today's Country and This Week in Country Music. He is a contributor to MusicHound Country.

Peter Blackstock is co-editor of the alternative country bimonthly No Depression, a senior editor at the northwestern music biweekly The Rocket, a weekly columnist for the daily Seattle Post-Intelligencer, and a contributor to MusicHound Rock and MusicHound Country.

Steve Braun is a Chicago-based national correspondent for The Los Angeles Times. He covered the second Woodstock and the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame concert and has written about Jerry Lee Lewis's brushes with the law.

Myron Bretholz is a respected percussionist who has appeared on nearly 40 recordings of Celtic music. He is also a frequent contributor of liner notes to recordings on Green Linnet, Maggie's Music, and Sony America. He is an accomplished workshop coordinator and can be found teaching "Socially Acceptable Bodhrán Playing" at various music camps, including Gaelic Roots in Boston and Catskills Irish Arts Week in East Durham, New York, during the summer months.

John C. Bruening is a freelance writer from Cleveland, Ohio. He has written CD reviews, concert reviews, and artist profiles for Blues Access magazine, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and the Pittsburgh City Paper.

Ken Burke is a singer-songwriter whose column, "The Continuing Saga of Dr. Iguana (The Story So Far)," has been running in small press publications since 1985. He lives in Arizona with the two best people he knows: his wife Lorraine and daughter Emily.

Bob Cannon is a songwriter and journalist who has written for magazines such as Entertainment Weekly, New Country, TuTTi, and Parenting, and for the New York Daily News. He is a contributor to MusicHound Country.

Salvatore Caputo is a freelance writer living in Phoenix with his wife and three kids. The pop music columnist for The Arizona Republic from 1990 to 1997, his interest in folk music spurred many coffeehouse gigs in the late '60s and early '70s.

Heidi Cerrigione is a traditional musician and freelance writer from Ellington, Connecticut. She plays autoharp, hammered dulcimer, and mountain dulcimer and performs with her husband, John, as the duo Cabin Fever; with a contra dance band called Heart's Ease; and with Doofus, a non-contra band with no discernible agenda. She contributes regularly to the Autoharp Clearinghouse Magazine and typesets music for various publications. She recently published her first book, 30 Old Time Songs and Tunes for Autoharp and Mountain Dulcimer, co-written with her partner in Doofus Music, Neal Walters.

Martin Connors has contributed to a variety of MusicHound and VideoHound books, and is especially fond of Celtic music and that country folk alternative guitar-strumming high-lonesome sound emanating from a lot of places, but especially Texas. He is thankful for the Ark in Ann Arbor, his access to Canadian radio and television, and great record stores on land and on the Web.

Randall T. Cook is a certified air force brat, part-time urban miner, former country and rock disc jockey, and staff member at New Country magazine. He is a contributor to MusicHound Country.

Tim Davis is a consultant with Jacobs Media, a suburban Detroit firm that created the modern rock format "The Edge" as well as the "Classic Rock" format.

Jay Dedrick is entertainment editor of the Daily Camera newspaper in Boulder, Colorado, and a contributor to MusicHound Lounge.

Kate Dunlay was raised in Massachusetts, studied folklore and ethnomusicology at the University of Indiana, and now lives in Ontario. A fiddler and a stepdancer, she is co-author (with David Greenberg) of Traditional Celtic Violin Music of Cape Breton, the DunGreen Collection. She also does research for Puirt a Baroque, a group that performs Scottish traditional and baroque music.

Daniel Durchholz is co-editor of the forthcoming second edition of MusicHound Rock and a contributor to MusicHound Country, MusicHound R&B, MusicHound Blues, MusicHound Lounge, and MusicHound Jazz. He was founding editor of the now-defunct Replay magazine, and is a former associate editor of Request magazine and St. Louis, Missouri's Riverfront Times. He writes for various magazines, newspapers, and Web sites from his home outside St. Louis.

Tom Ellis III has been writing about blues and playing harmonica since 1968. From 1995 to 1997 he authored a five-part series on the life of Paul Butterfield for Blues Access magazine and is currently at work on a book about Butterfield. He lives in Dallas, Texas, and owns Tom's Mics, selling vintage microphones to professional and amateur harmonica players worldwide.

Brian Escamilla is a freelance editor and writer and the former editor of Contemporary Musicians. He is a contributor to MusicHound Rock.

Shane Faubert played in a band called Cheepskates during the 1980s and is presently a solo artist in Montvale, New Jersey.

David Feld is a contributing writer for Blues Access magazine and plays guitar and bass in the Diminished Capacity Revue. By day, he is a deputy public defender in Alameda County, California.

Jon Hartley Fox is an award-winning writer and record producer who lives in Sacramento, California. He is a 20-year veteran of the bluegrass wars and a contributor to MusicHound Country.

Bill Friskics-Warren is a Nashville-based freelance writer whose work has appeared in MusicHound Country, New Country, No Depression, The Oxford American, the Nashville Scene, and the Washington Post.

Douglas Fulmer is a Cleveland-based freelance writer who writes extensively for the Cleveland Plain Dealer and has contributed to MusicHound Country, Bluegrass Unlimited, New Country, Country Weekly, Bluegrass Now, and other publications.

Christina Fuoco is a music journalist for the Livonia, Michigan–based Observer & Eccentric newspapers and has contributed to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound R&B, and MusicHound Lounge. She lives in Berkley, Michigan, with her portly cat.

Lawrence Gabriel is a Detroit-based writer, poet, and musician who is also editor of Detroit's Metro Times.

David Galens is the editor of Gale Research's Drama for Students print series and Contemporary Authors on CD, and a regular contributor to Gale's Contemporary Theatre, Film, and Television and Contemporary Authors print series. He is also a member of the Detroit-based band the Civilians.

Steve Gardner is a disc jockey at WXDU in Durham, North Carolina, where he plays old time, bluegrass, and Celtic music on his weekly show Topsoil. He has also contributed articles and reviews to Twangin' and Country Standard Time. Steve is not an aspiring songwriter, and frankly, can't play the guitar worth beans, though he's been trying for ten years.

Simon Glickman is the lead singer and lyricist for the L.A. band Spanish Kitchen. He has written for MusicHound Rock, MusicHound R&B, Contemporary Musicians, Uncommon Heroes, Entertainment Today, Rockrgrl, and other publications, and served as co-editor of Native North American Biography.

Gary Pig Gold has been publishing his own music fanzine, The Pig Paper, since 1975, and is a proud contributor as well to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, MusicHound R&B, and MusicHound Lounge. A member of Hoboken, New Jersey's # 1 "maximum rhythm 'n' bluegrass" combo the Ghost Rockets, he all too vividly remembers his first public performance as a young child, singing Kingston Trio songs to a bemused Canadian Cub Scout pack.

Alex Gordon is an associate editor of Inside Sports magazine and the co-author of the book College: The Best Five Years of Your Life, published by Hysteria Press and available in finer bookstores.

Gary Graff is supervising editor of Visible Ink Press' MusicHound series.

Jill Hamilton is a Los Angeles–based freelance writer whose work has appeared in MusicHound Rock, MusicHound R&B, the Ann Arbor (Michigan) News, Rolling Stone, and other publications.

William Hanson is a former movie critic for the Detroit Sunday Journal and has written for Michigan's Ann Arbor News and the Detroit Free Press.

Jeff Hannusch is a New Orleans–based freelance writer who has written hundreds of articles on the subject of music. His book, I Hear You Knockin': The Sound of Rhythm and Blues (Swallow, 1985), won the American Book Award. He is also a contributor to MusicHound Blues.

Craig Harris, a native of New York living in Boston since 1981, has been called by Sing Out! magazine "one of the hardest working music journalists in New England." The author/photographer of The New Folk Music, published by White Cliffs Media in 1991, Harris has written an annual average of two hundred articles for such newspapers as The Boston Globe and The Middlesex News and for the music magazines Dirty Linen and Folkroots. His photographs have been used for album covers by Greg Greenway, Northern Lights, Robin Williamson, Max Po-Kriv-Shak, Jazz Futures, and Barbara Kessler. Harris has been the staff photographer for the Winter-hawk Bluegrass Festival, the Cajun-Bluegrass Festival, and Falcon Ridge Folk Festival.

Geoffrey Himes writes about music on a regular basis for the Washington Post, Replay, New Country, and Country Music. He contributed to The Blackwell Guide to Recorded Country Music, The Rolling Stone Guide to Jazz and Blues Albums, and The Country Music Foundation Encyclopedia. He has also written about music for Down Beat, Request, National Public Radio, No Depression, Fi Magazine, Crawdaddy, Musician, Sing Out!, the Baltimore Sun, and the Patuxent Newspapers. He lives in Baltimore with his wife Elizabeth Cusick.

Bill Hobbs is a Nashville freelance writer and former music magazine writer and editor. He is a contributor to MusicHound Country.

Steve Holtje has contributed to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, MusicHound Blues, and MusicHound R&B, and is co-editor of MusicHound Jazz. He has written for The Wire, Jazziz, Newsday, Rhythm Music, Allstarmag.com, and many other magazines, newspapers, and online publications. He was a senior editor at the late, lamented Creem.

Pete Howard is the editor and publisher of ICE magazine and a contributor to MusicHound Rock.

Stephen Ide is a graphic designer who in his spare time is a writer, photographer, guitarist, and harmonica player. He pens a monthly folk records review column for The Patriot Ledger in Quincy, Massachusetts, contributes articles, reviews, and photographs to publications, including the New England Folk Almanac, Dirty Linen, and Bluegrass Unlimited, and is the webmaster for the Rose Garden Coffeehouse in Mansfield, Massachusetts.

Jack Jackson is a freelance journalist now living in Denmark. His articles have appeared in the New Orleans Times-Picayune, Offbeat, Denver's Westword, and The Miami Herald.

Steve Knopper is a Chicago-based freelancer who has written for Rolling Stone, George, Newsday, the Chicago Tribune, Request, Billboard, Yahoo! Internet Life, and many other publications. Former music critic for the Boulder (Colo.) Daily Camera, he is also editor of MusicHound Lounge: The Essential Album Guide to Martini Music and Easy Listening (Visible Ink).

John Koetzner is a freelance music critic who has written for MusicHound Blues, Down Beat, Bass Player, Mix, Relix, Bam, the Reno News & Review, California's Press Democrat and Healdsburg Tribune, and numerous other publications.

John Lupton is a native of Wilmington, Delaware. In addition to his work as a contributing writer for Sing Out! magazine, he is a longtime board member and current president of the Brandywine Friends of Old Time Music, a Delaware-based organization that sponsors concerts and festivals, including the Delaware Valley Bluegrass Festival and the now-defunct Brandywine Mountain Music Convention. He is also a board member of the Green Willow Folk Club, which specializes in presenting Celtic and British artists in the Delaware area. Since 1989, he has been co-host of Rural Free Delivery, a weekly radio show featuring bluegrass, country, and old time music, broadcast over WVUD-FM (91.3), the non-commercial station owned and operated by the University of Delaware. Professionally, he works in computer network management and administration at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.

Elizabeth Lynch is an Evanston, Illinois, writer and novelist who has written for MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, the Chicago Sun-Times, the Miami Herald, the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel, Replay magazine, and MusicHound Rock.

Lynne Margolis is a music critic and entertainment writer for the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review and its sister publications, and a contributor to MusicHound R&B, MusicHound Lounge, and MusicHound Rock. She has no children, pets, or plants named Dylan.

Patrick McCarty has written about rock 'n' roll for the past 20 years for various publications, including MusicHound Rock, MusicHound R&B, Richmond, Virginia's Times-Dispatch and News Leader, and Style Weekly. He is a classically trained musician, producer, and songwriter.

TJ McGrath is a co-founder and contributing editor to Dirty Linen, a magazine featuring folk and world music. He also wrote and edited Fairport Fanatics, the first American newsletter devoted to English folk-rock and artists such as Fairport Convention, Sandy Denny, Richard Thompson, Nick Drake, and Iain Matthews. His freelance writing has also appeared in the magazines Trouser Press and Guitar Extra. He has written liner notes for albums by Jackson C. Frank and Scott Appel. He has penned feature articles on a variety of folk performers including: Paul Brady, Greg Brown, the Nields, Graham Parker, Clive Gregson and Christine Collister, and Dar Williams. He lives in a drafty cottage in Connecticut called Mole's End with his wife, four boys, and a cat named Lulu.

David Menconi is the music critic at the Raleigh (N.C.) News & Observer. He has also written for Billboard, Spin, No Depression, Request, MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, MusicHound Blues, MusicHound R&B, and MusicHound Lounge.

D. Thomas Moon is a Chicago-based educator, guitarist, and music journalist. His writings have appeared in CD liner notes and in MusicHound Blues, Blues Access, Living Blues, Blues Revue, and Latin Beat magazines. He is currently working on a children's picture book, Wang Dang Doodle Day.

Lisa M. Moore is a freelance writer and editor based in Boston. She has written for Launch, Pulse!, Alternative Press, and the Boston Phoenix and was the editor for Boston Rock, a monthly magazine focusing on the frenetic but fascinating Boston music scene. Her dog did not appreciate her working on this project one bit but thought the bone rating system was inspired.

Jo Hughey Morrison is a Celtic harper and freelance writer whose work has appeared in Mostly Folk, Folk Tales, and The Folk Harp Journal.

David Okamoto is the music editor at The Dallas Morning News and a contributing editor to ICE magazine. His work has also appeared in CD Review, Rolling Stone, and Jazziz.

Allan Orski has written for Rolling Stone Online, Replay, Requestline, Black Book, and SW Radio Networks, as well as for MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, and MusicHound Lounge. He lives in a loft under the Manhattan Bridge, where he alienates his peers by singing along with Sam Cooke records.

Michael Parrish is Associate Professor of Biological Sciences at Northern Illinois University, with research focusing on dinosaurs and other extinct reptiles. He is also a freelance music writer who contributes to, among other publications, the Chicago Tribune, Dirty Linen, and Sing Out!

Alan Paul is a senior editor of Guitar World and the editor of Guitar World Online (www.guitarworld.com). His proudest professional moment was interviewing Albert King for Guitar World in 1991.

Bob Paxman is a Nashville-based entertainment journalist whose works have appeared in MusicHound R&B, Country Weekly, Billboard, TV Host, and numerous other publications.

Matt Pensinger is a music writer and columnist for the Colorado Springs Gazette and Digital City Denver, a site on America Online. He has also written for national music publications such as Blues Access and No Depression and contributed to MusicHound Blues.

James Person is a senior editor at Gale Research and a musician who has written songs for small gatherings.

Mark J. Petracca is the former editor in chief of Creem magazine and a contributor to MusicHound Rock.

Rick Petreycik lives in Bridgeport, Connecticut, and has written for Guitar Player, New Country, Keyboard, Musician, and Live. He is also a contributor to The Comprehensive Country Music Encyclopedia and MusicHound Country.

Doug Pippin is an advertising copywriter in New York and a drummer who ran the band music practice facility Jamland. He is a contributor to MusicHound Rock and MusicHound R&B.

Randy Pitts is a contributor to MusicHound Country who has labored in the vineyards of traditional music in various circumstances for nearly 20 years, most recently as artistic director of the Freight and Salvage in Berkeley, California, where he worked from 1989 until 1996.

Bryan Powell is a musician and freelance writer-editor based in Lawrenceville, Georgia. He is a regular contributor to Blues Access and Acoustic Guitar magazines and has also written for MusicHound Blues and MusicHound Lounge.

Doug Pullen is the music and media writer for the Flint (Michigan) Journal and Booth Newspapers. He is a contributor to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, MusicHound R&B, and MusicHound Blues.

Bob Remstein is a keyboardist and composer who was music editor for Los Angeles View before he began writing for publications in cyberspace, where he now resides.

Chris Rietz has been managing the record department (now the CDs & tapes department!) for 17 years at Elderly Instruments, one of the world's most elite folk music retailers and mail-order houses. In addition to publishing occasional pieces about folk and indigenous music in various publications, he currently chairs this year's Showcase Selection Committee for the North American Folk Alliance. And—he plays the guitar a lot.

Ken Roseman is a freelance journalist who's covered Anglo-European folk and roots music for over 20 years. Presently he writes the "Discography Notes" column for The Book of Ballads and Sagas (Green Man Press), a unique comic book series featuring adaptations of traditional folk ballads, and contributes reviews to: Sing Out!, Big World, and Goldmine. When not listening to (and/or writing about) music, Ken indulges himself by watching his favorite television shows: Monty Python and Buffy the Vampire Slayer.

Leland Rucker is managing editor of Blues Access magazine, a quarterly journal. He edited MusicHound Blues: The Essential Album Guide, and was co-author of The Toy Book (Alfred Knopf, 1992). Everything he knows about music can be traced back to the Kingston Trio or Bob Dylan.

Robert Sacré is a professor at the University of Liege in Belgium, where, since the early 1980s, he has taught ethnomusicology ("Story of African American Music & Literature"). He has conducted research in Africa and the United States and has published numerous articles on blues, gospel, Cajun, and zydeco music. Among his books are The Voice of the Delta: Charley Patton and the Mississippi Delta Blues Traditions (Presses Universitaires de Liege, 1987) and Saints and Sinners: Religion, Blues, and Evil in African-American Music and Literature (Presses Universitaires de Liege, 1996). He is a contributor to MusicHound Blues.

Christopher Scanlon is the former editor of The Video Source Book and a contributor to MusicHound Rock. He is pursuing his master's degree in social work.

Christopher Scapelliti is an associate editor of Guitar magazine and a contributor to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, and MusicHound R&B.

Tim Schuller was a factory worker/Teamster/rock musician in Ohio and Chicago before moving to Texas in 1977. He presently writes for the Dallas Observer and Blues Access magazine. A contributor to MusicHound Blues, his sidebar passions include European horror videos, guns, and Mexican beer.

Joel Selvin has covered pop music for the San Francisco Chronicle since 1970 and has contributed to MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, MusicHound R&B, and MusicHound Lounge. His seventh book, Sly and the Family Stone: On the Record, will be published in 1998.

Craig Shelburne lives in Nashville and has written for MusicHound Country, Nashville Scene, Gospel Voice, Music City News, and New Country.

David Shombert has been around the old time music scene for about 12 years. He plays fiddle and banjo and has done extensive study of the traditional Appalachian music that is preserved in the recorded archives of the West Virginia Collection at West Virginia University. He has written for the Old Time Herald on various topics of interest to the old time music community. He currently makes his home in Elkins, West Virginia.

David Simons is a freelance writer who fronts a rock band, the Raymies, in New England. He is a contributor to MusicHound Country.

Jared Snyder is a graduate of Boston University who currently lives in Philadelphia. He has published articles on music from the United States, Caribbean, and Africa. His current project is a book of historic images of accordion players from around the world. He plays diatonic accordion and electric guitar professionally in the Philadelphia area.

Denise Sofranko is a freelance writer.

David Sokol, senior editor at Disney Magazine, served as music editor and production, manager of the Advocate Newspaper chain in Massachusetts and Connecticut from 1977 to 1993. He was hired as editor in chief to launch New Country magazine in November 1993 and quickly turned it into the most respected and objective monthly in the field of country music. His writing appears in MusicHound Country: The Essential Album Guide as well as in numerous publications, including Stereophile and Launch Online.

Steven Stolder is the former entertainment editor for the Excite Internet search engine and Bay Area editor of Bam magazine. His byline has appeared in Rolling Stone, Entertainment Weekly, the San Francisco Chronicle, Pulse!, Request, and several other leading entertainment publications.

Mario Tarradell is the country music critic for the Dallas Morning News. His work has also appeared in MusicHound Country and New Country magazine.

Lauri Taylor, sales manager by day, musician by night, plays fiddle in a contra dance band, violin in a renaissance mixed consort, and plays autoharp and hammered dulcimer just to annoy the neighbors. She wrote reviews for five years for the now-defunct Best Sellers magazine. She found it was a pleasure to turn her attention to folk resources on the web and in print.

Suzy Rothfield Thompson grew up in the Northeast, studied classical violin as a child, and became enamored of Cajun music after hearing the Balfa Brothers in 1976. Several visits to southwest Louisiana culminated in an NEA fellowship to study with master fiddler Dewey Balfa in 1981; other mentors include Canray Fontenot, Wallace "Cheese" Read, and Dennis McGee. In 1981, Suzy helped form the Blue Flame Stringband, which evolved into the California Cajun Orchestra. Suzy has performed and recorded with the Blue Flame Stringband, Any Old Time, the Klezmorim, and Eric Thompson. She has recorded as a side musician with bluegrass singer/fiddler Laurie Lewis, avant-garde vocalist Rinde Eckert, the Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band, Sukay, British ballad singer Frankie Armstrong, and others. She appears in the film J'ai Etais au Bal (aired on PBS as French Dance Tonight), playing fiddle with D.L. Menard and with Danny Poullard. In 1994, she represented the United States on a Masters of the Folk Violin Tour in Scotland and England. She has taught advanced fiddle at several music and dance camps, including Augusta Heritage Center in Elkins (West Virginia), Festival of American Fiddle Tunes at Centrum (Port Townsend, Washington), and Ashokan Fiddle & Dance Camp in New York. She is also a music reviewer for the Old Time Herald.

Philippe Varlet is a performer and teacher of Irish traditional music as well as an ethnomusicologist doing research on many aspects of that tradition. In particular, he specializes in the history of early recordings of Irish music, which he collects and with which he has produced several CD anthologies, including From Galway to Dublin (Rounder), Milestone at the Garden (Rounder), and Joe Derrane—Irish Accordion (Rego/Copley). Varlet resides near Washington, D.C., where he performs regularly at local ceilis and concerts and provides private tuition on Irish fiddle playing. His name is familiar to members of Internet Irish music lists who seek assistance in identifying tunes and their sources. He has a master's degree in composition from Catholic University and studied ethnomusicology at the University of Maryland.

Tim Walters's main claim to fame is a losing Jeopardy! appearance in 1996, but he's also known among the cognoscenti as the electric dulcimer player for San Francisco folk-rock band Pledge Drive. In addition, he has worked extensively in electronic music, as documented on his CD The Dry Well and Circular Firing Squad's CD Oxide.

Dan Weber is a copywriter at J. Walter Thompson advertising agency in Detroit.

Hilary Weber is an actress who recently made her first Hollywood picture. A contributor to MusicHound Rock, she also contributes movie reviews to Magill's Cinema Annual and VideoHound's Golden Movie Retriever.

Stephen Winick is a Ph.D. candidate in Folklore and Folklife at the University of Pennsylvania. He is a contributing editor at Dirty Linen magazine and the All-Music Guide, where he covers folk, Celtic, and related musical styles. His reviews have also appeared in the Philadelphia City Paper, Tower Records Pulse! magazine, and the Journal of American Folklore.

Pamela Murray Winters is a freelance writer whose work often appears in Dirty Linen. She is currently researching and writing the first book-length biography of Sandy Denny. She loves serial commas and hates deadlines.

Art Wojtowicz is a Detroit-based freelance copywriter, folk singer-songwriter, and recording studio owner and operator. His writing credits include a successful Broadway-style musical, an album of original piano music, and numerous pieces of political satire and poetry. His upcoming CD will present a loving and humorous look at the heroes of everyday life on this planet Earth. Art's greatest accomplishment is finding continuing peace and happiness. His life's goal—to be a kid again.

David Yonke writes about popular music for the Toledo Blade and is a contributor to MusicHound Rock and MusicHound Country.

Joshua Zarov works for Ticketmaster's Chicago office and writes for "Clublands," a weekly listing on Ticketmaster's World Wide Web site.

Tony Ziselberger is a freelance writer.

Jennifer Zogott currently writes about blues for Blues Access, Blue Suede News, and Folk Roots. She is also a contributor to MusicHound Blues and the forthcoming Rolling Stone Jazz & Blues Album Guide. She lives in New York City.

This was my first attempt at doing a project of this magnitude. From the outset, I was apprehensive. In the end, I knew I was right to feel that way. Fortunately, I didn't have to do this alone—far from it. I offer my undying gratitude to Brian Mansfield, whose experience and advice proved invaluable in terms of getting things started properly and in subsequently keeping everything on track. In the fullness of time, Brian's passion for accuracy and his "no excuses allowed" attention to detail both proved infinitely more useful than they were aggravating. It's a very good thing I didn't have to judge that around New Year's though. I'd also like to offer very special thanks to Managing Editor Judy Galens, who was gracious enough to nod her head when I asked if she still loved me despite all I put her through. Of course, it's possible that she misunderstood the question. Judy, you're not too bad yourself and I know you didn't mean it when you put that little catch in your voice before sobbing uncontrollably—and incoherently I might add—about some sort of legal action.

Thanks also to Kathy Wieland for mentioning my name to Lauri Taylor, to Lauri who subsequently recommended me to the powers that be, and to the senior people at Visible Ink who actually believed her story.

To the many writers who contributed directly and indirectly to every aspect of the book, I can only say that your combined knowledge and intense love of the music is little short of awe inspiring. It's worth noting also that your combined appreciation and understanding of the concept of a "drop dead date" is improving marginally even if most of you didn't get a merit badge this time around. Special thanks go to Lauri Taylor for singlehandedly compiling the Resources section.

Major huzzahs to the many artists who responded to my requests for information and review material. There couldn't be a book without the music and the music is great. And speaking of great music, thanks to the kind folks at Rounder Records—Bill Nowlin, Ken Irwin, Ellen Taintor, and Amy Bouvé Jodice—for the CD sampler.

I don't know how to properly thank the Internet for its contribution. I do know that this book couldn't have been written in the time allotted without access to e-mail and to the World Wide Web.

This book came together between October and February with a very intense few weeks on either side of Christmas. My wife, Coleen, deserves special praise and a big hug for her patience and understanding throughout that period and, particularly, for helping me to convince my children and grandchildren that I couldn't afford to waste time on such frivolous pursuits as Christmas shopping and Christmas dinner.

Neal Walters

After completing MusicHound Country, I told people that working on such a book was like watching your house burn down—you knew you couldn't take everything you wanted, you just had to get as much out as possible before the whole structure came crashing down around you. And, at the end, you might have to choose between saving the wedding pictures and the uninsured computer equipment. In the same way, it's hard to include every worthy performer into a guide that purports to cover a genre as broadly defined as "folk." But with more than 1,100 entries, I think nearly everyone can learn something from this book—and find out about great musicians they never knew existed. I know I certainly did.

This kind of project couldn't be accomplished without the help and generosity of numerous people, and some of the people who contributed to this book without receiving a byline include Lance Cowan, Glen Dicker, Cary Mansfield, Kurt Nishimura, Mark Pucci, Lisa Shively, Rebekah Radisch, and Megan Rubiner Zinn.

This book wouldn't have been possible without Neal Walters, whose scope and expertise shaped the soul of this book. He also provided a thoroughness that brought a much-needed sense of structure to the process. Neal and I spent many hours on the phone and sent literally thousands of e-mails during the course of editing this book. Perhaps now that this book is finished, we can actually meet in person.

Thanks also to Judy Galens and Gary Graff for providing assistance, direction, and information whenever it was needed. Judy, I enjoyed working with you for the first time, and Gary, thanks again for bringing me into the MusicHound fold. It's always a blast.

Finally, I have to thank my wife, Nancy, and sons Nick and Zach, who endured a second consecutive year of having their father on deadline during all the best holidays of the year. I love you all a great deal and owe you even more.

Brian Mansfield

A

A. Robic and the Exertions

See: Paul Brown, Bruce Molsky, Mike Seeger

Rick Abrams

See: Piney Creek Weasels

Nathan Abshire

Born June 27, 1913, in Gueydan, LA. Died May 13, 1981, in Basile, LA.

"The good times are killing me" was painted on the side of Nathan Abshire's accordion case and was his motto in life. He started playing the accordion at six years old, learning from both of his parents, who were well known as accomplished accordionists. As a young teenager, he played dances with his longtime friend, fiddler Lionel Leleux, sometimes walking home 10 miles with his accordion over his shoulder. Legendary accordionist Amédée Ardoin regularly used friendly coercion to have the young Abshire substitute for him at dances. When he finally did record for Bluebird in 1934, his recordings reveal an extremely "bluesy" Cajun accordionist. The accordion fell from favor until the 1950s. One of the records that helped bring back the popularity of the instrument was Abshire's "Pine Grove Blues." The song was a massive regional hit and continues to be extremely popular amongst Cajuns and Creoles. Abshire's singing was just as soulful and bluesy as his accordion playing and he continued to produce regional hits, including "Bayou Teche Waltz," "Musician's Life," and a Cajun version of "The Games People Play."

what to buy: French Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1993, prod. Chris Strachwitz) brings together all the recordings Abshire made for the Koury label. Forget about the funky quality of the recordings; these are the real deal: a soulful Cajun sound with Abshire's accordion cutting through the sawing fiddle of Will Kegley and a swooping steel guitar. Abshire's playing is a little like "cracklin's," the Cajun delicacy made from fried pork skin: hot like his blues, crisp on the outside like his two-steps, and liquid fat on the inside like his waltzes.

what to buy next: The Legendary Jay Miller Sessions ♪♪♪♪½ (Flyright, 1990, prod. Ray Templeton) is a little cleaner than French Blues, but there is still plenty of soul in these recordings, which include the superb fiddling of Dewey Balfa. Miller also includes several production experiments, such as the horse clops on the "Mardi Gras Song" and the pairing of Abshire's bluesy accordion with the sound of blues harpist Lazy Lester on "La La Blues."

the rest:
Cajun Tradition: Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪ (La Louisianne, 1990)
Cajun Tradition: Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (La Louisianne, 1990)
The Good Times Are Killing Me ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1986)
Cajun Fais Do Do ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1996)

worth searching for: The compilation of great classic Cajun 78s, Le Grand Mamou: A Cajun Music Anthology: The Historic Victor/Bluebird Sessions, 1928–1941 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Country Music Foundation, 1990, prod. Country Music Foundation), includes "One-Step de Lacassine" by a young Nathan Abshire and the Rayne-Bo Ramblers. On this one-chord vamp, Abshire surges past the string band with his bluesy riffs, almost tipping over the group as they bear down to keep up. This appears to be the only one of Abshire's early songs that he never recorded in the later part of his career.

influences:

Amédée Ardoin, Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin

The Balfa Brothers, Michael Doucet, Buckwheat Zydeco

Jared Snyder

Acousticats

Formed 1990, in Santa Barbara, CA. Disbanded 1995.

Cyrus Clarke, guitar, vocals; Phil Salazar, fiddle, vocals; Charl Ann Gastineau, fiddle, percussion; Tom Corbett, mandolin, guitar, vocals (1993–95); Mike Mullins, mandolin, mandola, guitar, vocals (1990–93); Rick Borella, bass.

The Acousticats were a five-member band from California, specializing mainly in original, but traditional-based, songs. Featuring the twin fiddles of Charl Ann Gastineau and Phil Salazar and the songs of guitarist Cyrus Clarke and mandolinist Mike Mullins, and propelled by Rick Borella's electric bass, they were an exciting band live or on record. Clarke was one of the founders of the Cache Valley Drifters, and his distinctively mellow vocal style and evocative compositions, many of which reflect the feel of his central California home, were Drifters mainstays that carried over to the Acousticats.

what to buy: The second, and final, album by the Acousticats, The Cat's Meow ♪♪♪½ (Ranch Records, 1994, prod. Cyrus Clarke), features some stunning improvisation, particularly during the band's two extended pieces, an acoustic version of the Allman Brothers' "In Memory of Elizabeth Reed" and the group's own "Crazy Cat." Otherwise, the emphasis is on first-class original songs, like Clarke's "Kern County Fandango" and Corbett's "As I Go Marching By."

what to buy next: The first Acousticats CD, Down at Evangelina's ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish Records, 1992, prod. Cyrus Clarke), is another sparkling example of California acoustic music. With the exception of the extended, anthem-like "California Republic," most of the selections, the bulk of which were penned by Clarke, are tightly arranged and concise, emphasizing the twin fiddles of Salazar and Gastineau.

solo outings:

Cyrus Clarke:

Sunrise on the Radio ♪♪♪ (Ranch, 1997)

The Phil Salazar Band:

The Phil Salazar Band ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1989)

influences:

Cache Valley Drifters, Phil Salazar Band, Kate Wolf, New Grass Revival, Bob Wills and His Texas Playboys, Stephane Grappelli

Rincon Ramblers

Michael Parrish

Roy Acuff

Born September 15, 1903, in Maynardville, TN. Died November 23, 1992, in Nashville, TN.

The King of Country Music, elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1962 (the first living artist to be so honored), was an institution and a starring member of the Grand Ole Opry from 1938 until his death. Violinist, singer, bandleader, publisher (Acuff-Rose), Acuff was the first star developed by the Opry primarily as a vocalist; he was enormously popular through the 1940s, with such classic hits as "The Wabash Cannonball," "The Great Speckled Bird," "Wreck on the Highway," and "Fireball Mail." His impassioned, powerful (and loud) vocal style owed much to the Baptist hymns he sang as a youth. He also featured first-rate string bands, in which his great dobroists always figured prominently: first Clell Summey ("Cousin Jody") and later Beecher Kirby ("Bashful Brother Oswald"). Acuff was among many traditional country music artists whose stature received an unexpected boost as a result of participation in the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band's Will the Circle Be Unbroken.

what to buy: The Essential Roy Acuff 1936–1949 ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1992, prod. various) contains 20 of Acuff's most familiar hits from 1936 to 1949; the "Wabash Cannonball" here is a 1947 remake with Acuff as featured vocalist. Roy Acuff Columbia Historic Edition ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1985, prod. various) is an outstanding reissue featuring the initial recording of "The Wabash Cannonball," with vocalist "Dynamite" Hatcher, along with 15 other vintage recordings from Acuff's earliest days. The King of Country Music ♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1993, prod. various) is an interesting two-CD set of Acuff's post-Columbia 1950s recordings for MGM, Decca, and Capitol.

the rest:

Best of Roy Acuff ♪♪ (Curb, 1991)

worth searching for: Two reissues on Rounder, Roy Acuff: 1936–1939 "Steamboat Whistle Blues" ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1985, prod. Lou Curtiss) and Roy Acuff & the Smoky Mountain Boys 1939–41 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Lou Curtiss), contain more outstanding recordings of vintage Acuff and his bands.

influences:

⏪ Hank Williams Sr., George Jones

Randy Pitts

Eddie Adcock

See: Country Gentlemen

Aengus

See: Skylark

Caroline Aiken

Born in GA.

Caroline Aiken has been singing for her supper since she was 14. In just the past few years, her acquaintance with Amy Ray and Emily Saliers of Indigo Girls has gotten her music the attention it deserves, and she's finding that fans and reviewers alike are giving her credit for the dues she's paid on the road for the past 20-some years. Her material, both original and borrowed, is that blend of roadhouse blues and gospel-tinged slow ballads popularized by Bonnie Raitt and Rory Block, and Aiken is certainly in their league. Her spunky, sexy, soulful style elevates her from the teeming masses; her voice wears its years well.

what's available: Live at the Attic ♪♪♪½ (Glutton for PuBlishment, 1993, prod. Caroline Aiken) was recorded, as the title suggests, at Eddie's Attic, the renowned club in Aiken's adopted home of Atlanta. "White House Blues" features her Indigo pals to fine effect. Live Bait ♪♪♪½ (Glutton for PuBlishment, 1995, prod. Caroline Aiken) is Aiken's second live album. It's also her most personal, with some unexpected covers (including Elton John's "Madman across the Water"). Aiken's young daughter contributes vocals on Michele Malone's "Greatest Show on Earth." The album showcases Aiken's 12-string guitar playing, notably the self-explanatory "Pseudo Kottke." Butler Field ♪♪♪½ (Silverwolf, 1997, prod. Murray Krugman), Aiken's first studio album, peters out before it ends—and it's only a 35-minute CD. Its flaws are more a matter of song arrangement than anything else; it's an impressive effort that should convince anyone of her talent. "Left Wet" is a too-rare look at female erotic longing, and the other songs are equally strong.

editor's choice

11 folk harp albums

Sue Richards, Hazel Grove (Maggie's Music)
Knodel & Valencia, Forest (SpookyTree)
Sileas, Delighted with Harps (Green Linnet)
Patrick Ball, Fiona (Celestial Harmonies)
Sileas, Beating Harps (Green Linnet)
Sue Richards, Grey Eyed Morn (Maggie's Music)
Wendy Stewart, About Time (Greentrax)
Kim Robertson, Wind Shadows II (Invincible)
Wendy Stewart, About Time II (Greentrax)
Sylvia Woods, Harp of Brandiswhere (Tonmeister) Loreena McKennitt, Elemental (Quinlan Road)

influences:

⏪ Bonnie Raitt, Rory Block

⏩ Indigo Girls

Pamela Murray Winters

David "Stringbean" Akeman

See: Stringbean

Scott Alarik

Born January 5, 1951, in Minneapolis, MN.

With a deep resonating voice, jovial stage persona, melodic fingerstyle guitar, and a command of traditional balladry, Scott Alarik is a throwback to the folk music of earlier days. The brother of Steve Alarik, one-time manager of the Coffeehouse Extempore in Minneapolis, Alarik was a semi-regular on the first shows of National Public Radio's A Prairie Home Companion. After releasing a solo album, Stories, in 1979, Alarik recorded his second album with the show's house band, the New Prairie Ramblers, in 1981. His third collection, Simply Christmas, is a solo celebration of the Yuletide season. The political slant of much of Alarik's repertoire comes naturally. A non-registering draft resister in 1969, he served a 19-month prison sentence beginning in 1971. Since moving to Boston in 1984, Alarik has focused more on writing about folk music for The Boston Globe than on his own career. He founded, edited, and wrote for The New England Folk Almanac from 1990 to 1997. During the past few years, however, Alarik has increasingly concentrated on his role as a performer. Appearing frequently at coffeehouses throughout New England, he's been able to recapture the momentum of his days in Minnesota. His latest album, Old Fashioned, was released on cassette in 1995.

what's available: The only one of Alarik's four albums in print is Old Fashioned ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1995, prod. Geoff Bartley), which is available on cassette only. It features traditional ballads and original songs, including the hard-hitting modern ballad, "Mexico."

worth searching for: Alarik's seasonal tribute, Simply Christmas ♪♪♪ (Wisconsin Public Radio) is a superb collection of traditional tunes ("Coventry Carol," "Away in a Manger," and "What Child Is This"), memorable covers (Bob Franke's "Thanksgiving Eve" and Bob Stuart's "This Christmas Day"), and well-crafted originals ("Caroling Child" and "Old Scrub Pine"). Recorded for Simply Folk (a popular Wisconsin Public Radio show) and unfortunately out of print, Simply Christmas is a much-valued treasure.

influences:

◀◀ Gordon Bok, Art Thieme

▶▶ Geoff Bartley, Bob Franke

Craig Harris

Albion Band

See: Ashley Hutchings

Pat Alger

Born September 23, 1947, in Long Island City, NY.

A singer/songwriter with considerable performing experience, Pat Alger became one of the most successful songwriters in country music during the late 1980s and continuing into the 1990s, penning hits for Garth Brooks, Hal Ketchum, Kathy Mattea, Don Williams, Trisha Yearwood, Nanci Griffith, and others. His own performing style is understated and intimate, as one might expect from a veteran of coffeehouses and listening rooms.

what's available: True Love & Other Short Stories ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1991, prod. Pat Alger, Jim Rooney) is a chance to hear the man who wrote them sing such songs as "Once in a Very Blue Moon," "Lone Star State of Mind," "True Love," "Small Town Saturday Night," "Going Gone," and "She Came from Fort Worth." Seeds ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1993, prod. Jim Rooney) contains more originals from this highly successful writer of hits for others, including Alger's version of the huge Garth Brooks hit "The Thunder Rolls."

influences:

◀◀ Don Williams, Kris Kristofferson

▶▶ Fred Koller, Steve Seskin

Randy Pitts

The All Girl Boys

Formed 1989, in Berkeley, CA.

Kathy Barwick, guitar, vocals; Carolyn Cirimele, bass, vocals; Debby Cotter, banjo, vocals; Mary Gibbons, guitar, vocals; Chris Lewis, mandolin, vocals.

It seems fitting that the San Francisco Bay Area, long an attractive destination for eastern and southern folks with itchy heels, should develop a healthy, distinctive bluegrass tradition of its own: a vigorous hybrid of reverence for tradition and California free-spiritedness. From hippie-generation visionaries like David Grisman and Peter Rowan down to modern Olympians like Laurie Lewis, bluegrass music has developed a grand tradition of its own out West. Where else would you be likely to find a band like the aptly named All Girl Boys, a quintet with impeccable instrumental skills, a steeled-in-the-club-scene rhythmic tightness, and five voices wedded in unearthly, lonesome harmony, who also all happen to be women?

what's available: This band was in the trenches for six years before releasing its only album, Heart's Desire ♪♪♪♪ (Wildershore, 1996, prod. Jim Nunally), and it has all the polish and flair that a hard-working, committed band can acquire only by playing together for a long time. The three talented songwriters in the band (Cotter, Gibbons, and Lewis) serve up a helping of fresh material into the bluegrass repertoire, seamlessly blended with some deftly chosen older songs from the likes of Clarence Ashley, Lester Flatt, and the White Brothers.

worth searching for: Although this may be a little tougher to find, Carolyn Cirimele's Lookin' for Ida Rose ♪♪♪♪ (Wildershore, 1995, prod. Carolyn Cirimele) was a labor of love for the All Girl Boys' bassist, and a cool breeze in the somewhat glutted world of recorded children's music. It's a kid-friendly program with a (not surprisingly) traditional country slant, and with the (regrettably uncommon) quality of being worthy listening for everybody else, too.

influences:

◀◀ Muleskinner, Good Ol' Persons, Grant Street String Band

▶▶ Kathy Kallick

Chris Rietz

Red Allen

Born February 12, 1930, in Pigeon Roost, KY. Died April 3, 1993, in Dayton, OH.

One of the truly underrated singers in the history of bluegrass, Harley "Red" Allen was a master of the "high lonesome" style and a major influence on subsequent generations of bluegrass vocalists. Allen first rose to prominence during the mid-1950s, joining forces with the Osborne Brothers for a string of memorable MGM recordings (especially "Once More"). After parting with the Osbornes in 1958, Allen spent most of the rest of his career leading his own band (usually called the Kentuckians), working in Washington, D.C., and Dayton, Ohio, and recording for such labels as Folkways, Melodeon, Rebel, and County. An intense and powerful singer, Allen worked from the late 1960s on with his four sons (Neal, Greg, Ronnie, and Harley), who also performed separately as the Allen Brothers. Red Allen's last recording was the Grammy-nominated Bluegrass Reunion in 1992. Some of Red Allen's most inspired music was made with mandolinist Frank Wakefield (born June 26, 1935, in Emory Gap, Tennessee), the player who David Grisman says "split the mandolin atom." Allen and Wakefield first worked together in Dayton, recording for the Kentucky label in 1954; they reunited in Washington, D.C., during the early 1960s, recording an influential album for Folkways, Red Allen, Frank Wakefield and the Kentuckians. The partnership ended when Wakefield joined the Greenbriar Boys in 1964, though Allen and Wakefield would occasionally play together during the years before Allen's death.

what's available: It's depressing that, in an age when the complete works of many lesser artists are readily available, virtually nothing by Red Allen is in print. Recorded within the last year of Allen's life, Bluegrass Reunion ♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1992, prod. David Grisman) puts the legendary singer together with David Grisman, Herb Pedersen, Jim Buchanan, Lance Kerwin, and special guest Jerry Garcia. The Allen-Pedersen duet on "Letter from My Darlin'" is the highlight, but some older songs associated with Allen ("She's No Angel," "Is This My Destiny") are also pretty satisfying. Not prime Red Allen by any stretch, but until promised reissues of the County, Rebel, and Folkways recordings materialize, this will have to do. The Kitchen Tapes ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1994, prod. David Grisman, Peter K. Siegel), which captures Allen and Frank Wakefield sitting around the kitchen table one day in 1963, is an unexpected treat, featuring the two on a collection of 25 songs and tunes. It's raw, loose, and rough as a cob, but the music is transcendent. In addition to the off-hand intensity of songs like "I'm Just Here to Get My Baby out of Jail" and "I'm Blue, I'm Lonesome," the highlights include several original instrumentals by Wakefield ("New Camptown Races," "Catnip," "Hey Mr. Mando").

influences:

◀◀ Bill Monroe, Jimmy Martin

▶▶ Harley Allen, James King

Jon Hartley Fox

Terry Allen

Born Terrence Lain Allen, May 7, 1943, in Wichita, KS.

Terry Allen was making Americana music about 20 years before it was cool. That makes his survival in the fickle world of country music, even fringe country music, all the more amazing. A visual artist and songwriter, Allen cut his teeth on rock, country blues, and folk as a kid growing up in West Texas. He moved to San Francisco at age 19, a true multimedia artist who dabbled in music, art, theater, and film. He moved to Lubbock during the late 1970s, at a time when the Texas Panhandle city had become a hotbed of rootsy, rockified country blues with such local artists as Joe Ely and Butch Hancock, a place with a lively club scene that was visited by the Fabulous Thunderbirds, Delbert McClinton, and Stevie Ray Vaughan in his pre-Double Trouble days. Allen's songs lean on sparse, often acoustic, or bare instrumentation as his wizened rasp of a voice veers from the profoundly poignant to hysterically cynical. After all these years—most of Allen's early albums were sold through his mail-order label, Fate, now run by his daughter-in-law in Austin—he's begun to find an audience outside of the cultish, chic Texas fringe art crowd thanks to a deal with North Carolina's Sugar Hill Records, which released his last two albums and plans to reissue earlier work. Allen told William D. Kerns of the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal: "People tell me it's country music, and I ask, 'Which country?'" what to buy: Allen met drifters like Ely after he left sunny California for the dingy, flat, Bible-belt town of Lubbock during the late 1970s. But their artistic sensibilities were a good fit, and Ely's brazen, devil-may-care approach to country, rock, and folk rubbed off impressively on his new friend on Lubbock (on Everything) ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1979, prod. Terry Allen), a wide-ranging work as sprawling and colorful as the hard Southern plains folk who inspired it.

what to buy next: Human Remains ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1996, prod. Terry Allen, Lloyd Maines) rocks a little harder than some of his more folk- and country-influenced work. David Byrne, Joe Ely, and the Sexton Brothers, Charlie and Will, make appearances. The Silent Majority: Terry Allen's Greatest Missed Hits ♪♪♪½ (Fate, 1993, prod. various) compiles a sampling of Allen's music for films, including contributions to Byrne's True Stories soundtrack along with songs for theatrical and dance productions.

what to avoid: Allen's music has always been an acquired taste, but the uneven Bloodlines ♪♪ (Fate, 1983, prod. Lloyd Maines, Terry Allen) is a little hard to swallow. Allen's current label, Sugar Hill, reissued it as a two-for-one package with Smokin' the Dummy in 1997. It hasn't gotten any better.

the rest:
Juarez ♪♪ (Fate, 1981)
Smokin' the Dummy ♪♪♪½ (Fate, 1982)
Pedal Steel/Rollback ♪♪ (Fate, 1985)
Bloodlines/Smokin' the Dummy ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1997)

worth searching for: Allen's involvement in theater is almost as significant as his musical output, with two records worth finding. Amerasia ♪♪♪ (Fate, 1984, prod. Terry Allen) is an out-of-print album that followed a play about Amerasian children in South Vietnam, while Songs from Chippy ♪♪♪ (Hollywood, 1994, prod. Joe Ely, Terry Allen) features two originals and two songs he helped write for the musical theater piece of that name. This show, based on the diaries of a 1930s Texas madame, was conceived by Allen with his wife, actress Jo Harvey Allen, and fellow Texans Ely, Hancock, and Jo Carol Pierce.

influences:
◀◀ Hank Williams, Buddy Holly
▶▶ Joe Ely, Butch Hancock, Jimmie Dale Gilmore

Doug Pullen

Jenny Allinder

Born April 20, 1959, in Gallipolis, OH.

Jenny Allinder was born in Ohio but moved to West Virginia as a child and has remained there ever since. She started playing violin at age 10 with the help of Nelle Wiant, a violinist with the Charleston symphony. With the influence of guitarist and fellow mountain state musician Robin Kessinger, her interest eventually turned to traditional music. Her playing reflects her love of Celtic music, in traditional pieces and her own compositions. Jenny performs in her hometown of Charleston and teaches occasionally at traditional music workshops.

what's available: Allinder's only CD release to date is Jenny Allinder ♪♪♪½ (JMP Records, 1996, prod. Jim Martin), which compiles material released earlier on two cassettes. It consists of 19 tunes, with Jenny's sweet fiddling accompanied variously by cello (Jack Bowman), guitar (Robin Kessinger, John Blisard), piano (Bob Thompson), mountain dulcimer (Alan Freeman), Irish harp (John Blisard), or hammered dulcimer (Bob Shank). Roughly half of the tunes are traditional; most of the others are her own compositions, and all have a Celtic feel that tells you unmistakably where her heart is. Allinder mentions the playing of Irish fiddler Kevin Burke as influential in her own playing, and it's obvious in her renditions of "Chief O'Neill's Favorite" and a tune identified only as "G Minor Jig." Another highlight on this disc is the haunting "Women of Ireland" with fiddle and Irish harp. "Rose of My Heart" is a waltz that'll make you look around for your partner. There's a two-tune medley with fiddle and mountain dulcimer that stands out from the others, and one vocal—a poem by Benjamin Cooke that Allinder sings (all three parts) as a round. This is a disc you'll want to have on hand on a cold winter night with a roaring fire in the fireplace. It might be hard to find in record stores but is available from JMP Productions, P.O. Box 152, St. Albans, West Virginia 25711.

influences:
◀◀ Kevin Burke, James Bryan
▶▶ Eugene O'Donnell

Dave Shombert

Luther Allison

Born August 17, 1939, in Widener, AR. Died August 12, 1997, in Madison, WI.

Frustrated by a stalled career, Chicago guitarist Luther Allison moved to Paris in 1983. After establishing himself as something of a superstar in Europe, Allison commenced a strong domestic comeback with 1994's Soul Fixin' Man, reclaiming the sterling domestic reputation he earned as a young man. All of his Alligator releases feature a wide range of material spotlighting his slashing guitar work and gravelly, soulful vocals. From uptempo rockers to contemplative acoustic blues, from bouncy, horn-driven soul tunes to organ-fueled, gospel-style ballads, Allison performed with the fiery energy of a teenager and the grizzled soul of a veteran. His only weakness was an occasional tendency to do a little too much, go over the top. Usually, however, his guitar playing was reckless in the best sense of the word, dancing on a razor's edge, remaining just this side of out-of-control. Allison came from the same school of West Side Chicago guitar as Buddy Guy, Otis Rush, Magic Sam, Freddie King, and Jimmy Dawkins, favoring hard-driving, piercing single-note leads with a soul base and a rock edge. He also played a mean slide.

what to buy: Soul Fixin' Man ♪♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1994, prod. Jim Gaines) launched Allison's American comeback, and it is a gem—soulful, intense, varied, and never out of control. You also won't go wrong with Reckless ♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1997, prod. Jim Gaines). Where Have You Been? Live in Montreux 1976–94 ♪♪♪♪ (Ruf, 1996, prod. Thomas Ruf) is an excellent live collection, spotlighting Allison's transcendent performance powers.

what to buy next: More straightforward than most of what followed, Allison's debut, Love Me Mama ♪♪♪½ (Delmark, 1969, prod. Robert Koester), makes clear why he was considered a rising star of the blues at the time of its release. Similarly, Love Me Papa ♪♪♪½ (Disques Black & Blue, 1978/Evidence, 1992) is a straight-ahead Chicago-style session performed with flair and a sort of off-handed charm.

what to avoid: Motown Sessions, 1972–76 ♪♪½ (Motown, 1996) collects Allison's best work as Motown's only bluesman. Even as the creme de la creme, it is not what it could and should have been.

the rest:
Serious ♪♪♪½ (Blind Pig, 1987)
Blue Streak ♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Robert Nighthawk, Magic Sam, Freddie King
▶▶ Kenny Neal, Joe Louis Walker

Alan Paul

Mose Allison

Born Mose John Allison Jr., November 11, 1927, in Tippo, MS.

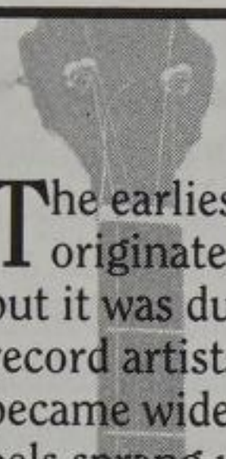
Though Allison's light, improvisational piano style has more in common with jazz than blues, he built his early reputation by personalizing Sonny Boy Williamson's "Eyesight to the Blind," Willie Dixon's "Seventh Son," and Muddy Waters's "Rollin' Stone." Interpreting blues standards in his lazy and smart-alecky—but always warm—voice, he also influenced rockers Pete Townshend, Van Morrison, the Clash, and the Yardbirds. Townshend in particular, who liked the blues but didn't want the Who to become another blues-reviving Yardbirds or Rolling Stones, found inspiration in "Eyesight to the Blind" and Allison's most enduring anthem, "Young Man's Blues." But all the rock influence has distorted Allison's legend. He has been recording albums and touring nightclubs (where he refuses to let anybody smoke) for 40 years, and his devastating sense of humor led to such wonderful jazz songs as "Your Mind Is on Vacation" and "If You're Going to the City." His piano style, reminiscent of long-time Waters sideman Otis Spann, is fast and playful but never so busy it clutters up the lyrics. Not much has changed over the past several decades for Allison, though he collaborated on Tell Me Something with Van Morrison (who once covered his "If You Only Knew") and occasionally does joint interviews with his country-rocking daughter, the talented Parlor James singer Amy Allison.

what to buy: Allison Wonderland: The Mose Allison Anthology ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1994, prod. Joel Dorn, James Austin) shows why Allison was such an important link between mid-century Chicago blues and early 1960s British rock 'n' roll. The compilation displaced The Best of Mose Allison ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1988, prod. Bob Porter) and Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1959/1988, prod. Bob Weinstock) as the essential places to find "The Seventh Son," "Eyesight to the Blind," "Young Man's Blues," and "Your Mind Is on Vacation."

what to buy next: His original studio albums are hard to find, but Back Country Suite ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1957), Local Color ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1958, prod. Bob Weinstock), and Ramblin' with Mose Allison ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1961) are among the best of a prolific recording career. His 1980s Elektra period, which produced Middle Class White Boy ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1982, prod. Esmond Edwards) and Lesson in Living ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1983, prod. Philippe Rault), allowed him to revitalize his style with a more soulful touch. Tell Me Something ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1996, prod. Van Morrison, Ben Sidran, Georgie Fame), a collaboration with Morrison and Fame, is a nice tribute and return to form after years of nondescript studio albums.

what to avoid: Allison has been churning out records with incredible regularity for four decades, and sometimes he releases a rushed batch of stuff: Mose Alive! ♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1966), Western Man ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1971), and Mose in Your Ear ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1972) are examples of this lack of inspiration.

the rest:
Parchman Farm ♪♪♪ (Original Jazz Classics)



the 1920s

The earliest audio recording technology originated before the turn of the century, but it was during the 1920s that the ability to record artists cheaply, and in regional settings, became widespread. Literally hundreds of labels sprang up that recorded obscure string bands, solo banjo players and fiddlers, and blues artists throughout the southern United States. Many of these recordings were not distributed far beyond the towns where the recordings were made, others, such as the legendary sides cut by Ralph Peer in Bristol, Tennessee, made stars of Jimmie Rodgers, the Stoneman Family, and the Carter Family throughout the South, and essentially founded the country music industry in the process. Radio shows like the WLS Barn Dance, which ironically originated up north in Chicago, were heard all over the heartland every Saturday night, and proved an effective launching pad for country, folk, and string band music. "Race records" were abundant, including the earliest sides by instrumental geniuses like Blind Blake and Big Bill Broonzy as well as the brief but enormously influential recording output of Robert Johnson, who became known and respected only long after his death. Although much of this material was not widely heard until the latter half of the century, a mother lode of incredible roots music was being documented for the first time.

Michael Parrish

Creek Bank ♪♪♪½ (Prestige, 1958)
Ol' Devil Mose ♪♪♪½ (Prestige, 1958)
Young Man Mose ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1958)
Autumn Song ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1959)
Mose Allison Plays for Lovers ♪♪♪½ (Prestige, 1959)
Transfiguration of Hiram Brown ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1960)
I Love the Life I Live ♪♪ (Columbia, 1961)
V-8 Ford Blues ♪♪♪½ (Epic/Legacy, 1961)
I Don't Worry about a Thing ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1962/Rhino, 1993)
Mose Allison Takes to the Hills ♪♪♪½ (Epic/Legacy, 1962)
Mose Allison Sings ♪♪♪½ (Prestige, 1963)
Swingin' Machine ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1963)
The Word from Mose Allison ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1964)
Wild Man on the Lane ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1966)
I Been Doin' Some Thinkin' ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1968)
Mose Goes ♪♪ (Columbia, 1968)
Hello There Universe ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1970)
Retrospective ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1971)
Mose Allison ♪♪♪½ (Prestige, 1972)
The Seventh Son ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1973)
Your Mind Is on Vacation ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1976)
Ever Since the World Ended ♪♪ (Blue Note, 1988)
My Backyard ♪♪ (Blue Note, 1990)
Mose Allison Sings and Plays ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1991)
The Earth Wants You ♪♪ (Blue Note, 1994)
High Jinks!: The Mose Allison Trilogy ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ Muddy Waters, Willie Dixon, Art Tatum, Ray Charles, Charles Brown, Sonny Boy Williamson II, Otis Spann

▶▶ Pete Townshend, Bonnie Raitt, Van Morrison, Elvis Costello, Ray Davies

Steve Knopper

Peter Alsop

Born 1946, in CT.

Together with such innovative children's music performers as Raffi and Bill Rosen (formerly of RosenSchantz), Peter Alsop, a singer-songwriter, lecturer, and humorist residing in California's Topanga Canyon, has introduced a new generation to songs that are as much fun as they are insightful. Although his first albums were directed at adults, Alsop has shifted most of his attention to children's music since founding his own record label, Moose Head, in 1983. All six of his albums for the younger set, including the memorable Wha D'Ya Wanna Do and Staying Over, received Best Children's Album awards from either Parent's Choice or the National Association of Independent Record Distributors and Manufacturers. Videos of Alsop's songs for children include the Yuletide classic, When Jesus Was a Kid, winner of a prestigious National Parenting Publications award in 1992. Alsop holds a Ph.D. in educational psychology and previously worked as director of the Harbor Schools Residential Treatment Center for emotionally disturbed adolescents in Maine and as an elementary school teacher in the South Bronx of New York. Alsop is a popular lecturer at colleges and universities and conferences for educators, psychologists, nurses, physicians, social workers, funeral directors, and computer programmers—using songs, stories, and humor to examine ethical issues, motivation techniques, communication skills, and ways to stay creative in education. Among the many films and television shows that have included Alsop's compositions are Steven Spielberg's The Money Pit and Nickelodeon's Nick Jr. Rocks and The Fred Penner Show. Alsop has made numerous appearances as an actor in films, television, and theatrical productions.

what to buy: Alsop's first album aimed at the younger set, Wha'D'Ya Wanna Do? ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1983, prod. Peter Alsop), remains his most fun. While songs like "My Body," "Be Gentle Robin," and "You Get a Little Extra When You Watch T.V.!" address serious issues, the album is successfully balanced by humorous novelty tunes including "I Am a Pizza," "I Wanna Be a Dog," and "Yecch!"

what to buy next: Uniforms ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1983, prod. Peter Alsop) remains Alsop's adult masterpiece. Accompanied by such stellar musicians as Byron Berline on fiddle, John Hickman on banjo, Fred Tackett on electric guitar and trumpet, and Robin Willamson on pennywhistle, Alsop's witty and politically minded songs are given an uplifting, West-Coast-bluegrass-meets-folk sensitivity. As he does on his children's albums, he explores serious subjects, including conformity (the title track) and sexual identity ("It's Only a Wee Wee" and "Hopelessly Heterosexual") in a light, witty, way.

the rest:

Family Albums:

Take Me with You ♪♪♪♪ (Moose Head, 1986)
Stayin' Over ♪♪♪♪½ (Moose Head, 1987)
In the Hospital ♪♪♪ (Moose Head, 1989)
Pluggin' Away ♪♪♪ (Moose Head, 1991)

Adult Albums:

Recorded Live in Concert ♪♪♪ (Moose Head, 1975)
Asleep at the Helm ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1977)
Draw the Line ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1978)
Fan Club Favorites ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1985)
Family Roles ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)
Wake Up! ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1993)

worth searching for: Chris Moos Holidays ♪♪♪♪½ (Moose Head, 1995, prod. Peter Alsop), Alsop's playful nod to the Yuletide, sparkles with infectious spirit and serves as the perfect antidote to the holiday blues. He also has released the following videos: Opening Doors (Moose Head, 1988), Costume Party (Moose Head, 1988), When Jesus Was a Kid (Moose Head, 1992), Wake Up! (Moose Head, 1993), Get Real! (Moose Head, 1995), and When Kids Say Goodbye (Moose Head, 1995).

influences:

◀◀ Pete Seeger, Tom Paxton, Ella Jenkins, Malvina Reynolds

▶▶ Ginni Clemmens, Fred Small, Jon Gailmor, Sally Rogers, Marcy Marxer

Craig Harris

Altan

Formed 1987, in Gaoth Dobhair, Co. Donegal, Ireland.

Mairéad Ní Mhaonaigh, fiddle, vocals (1987–present); Frankie Kennedy, flute, whistle, vocals (1987–1994); Ciarán Curran, bouzouki (1987–present); Mark Kelly, guitar, vocals (1987–present); Paul O'Shaughnessy, fiddle (1988–92); Cíarán Tourish, fiddle, whistle, vocals (1990–present); Dáithí Sproule, guitar, vocals (1992–present); Dermot Byrne, accordion (1994–present).

As sure as Planxty and the Bothy Band were the Irish supergroups of the 1970s, Altan has dominated the traditional scene since the end of the 1980s. What is somewhat unusual about it is that the band's music is deeply rooted in the Donegal tradition, one which had received little attention before Altan's commercial success popularized the Gaelic songs and Scottish-tinged highlands, strathspeys, and reels which give the band its unique sound. From the start, the two main ingredients at the core of that sound were the dynamic interplay of the flute and fiddle, played by husband and wife Frankie Kennedy and Mairéad Ní Mhaonaigh, and Ní Mhaonaigh's magical soprano. These were first captured on disc on the couple's 1983 Ceol Aduaidh, made at a time when few people had ever heard of Irish "Germans" (a type of Donegal barndance) or mazurkas. Ciarán Curran was one of the accompanists, and so was keyboardist Eithne Ní Bhraonáin, better known today as Enya. Indeed, Ní Mhaonaigh grew up in Gaoth Dobhair (Gweedore), in West Donegal, just a few miles away from the Brennans, whose family band, Clannad, had started performing their brand of traditional music and jazz fusion in the early 1970s.

By the mid-1980s, Ní Mhaonaigh and Kennedy had begun touring the United States with Curran and guitarist Mark Kelly when they caught the attention of Green Linnet. As Dónal Lunny and Mícheál Ó Domhnaill had in the Bothy Band a decade earlier, Curran and Kelly were crafting highly inventive accompaniments for the foursome's tunes and songs. Their first album on the new label, released in 1987, was simply called Altan after Loch Altan, the name of a lake near Ní Mhaonaigh's home—as well as that of a reel she composed and played on the album. The title stuck and became the name of the band. By the time they recorded their next album, Horse with a Heart, in July

altan

Altan (from left): Ciarán Curran, Frankie Kennedy, Mairéad Ní Mhaonaigh, Cíarán Tourish, Dáithí Sproule (© Jack Vartoogian)

1988, the quartet had become a quintet with the addition of Dublin fiddle player Paul O'Shaughnessy, and the same ensemble made The Red Crow in 1990. Because O'Shaughnessy could not commit to constant touring, yet another musician, Inishowen fiddle player Cíarán Tourish, was added to the lineup, bringing his fiery playing into the mix on the band's highly successful 1992 Harvest Storm. Not too long after, O'Shaughnessy was obliged to leave the band for good. Donegal-born singer and guitar player Dáithí Sproule, a long-time friend of Ní Mhaonaigh and Kennedy who lives in Minneapolis, had been called upon on occasion to substitute for Mark Kelly. His status as a full-fledged member was made official on the band's next album, Island Angel.

The 1993 release was to be the band's last original recording for Green Linnet. These were trying times for Altan, most of all because of Frankie Kennedy's ongoing battle with cancer, one he ultimately lost in September 1994. By then, another longtime musical friend, accordionist Dermot Byrne, from Bridgend in North Donegal, had joined the ranks. Eventually, the band signed with Virgin and in 1996 released Blackwater, a rather disappointing mixture of somewhat uninspired tune medleys and overproduced vocal tracks, possibly a result of the transition to the big label. Their latest album, Runaway Sunday, is in a similar vein but with more exciting instrumental work, and gives us hope that, indeed, they will carry on.

what to buy: Although not an Altan album strictly speaking, Ceol Aduaidh ♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1983/Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Nicky Ryan) is the first commercial recording made by Mairéad Ní Mhaonaigh and Frankie Kennedy. However, the magical sound of their fiddle and flute duets and of Ní Mhaonaigh's singing, already accompanied by Ciarán Curran's cittern, are just as you can hear them on later albums by the group. Altan ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1987, prod. Dónal Lunny), the first official band album, is very similar in some ways, but the accompaniments and the song arrangements in particular have become quite sophisticated thanks to the addition of Mark Kelly's guitar. However, it is the magnificent Horse with a Heart ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1989, prod. Phil Cunningham) that established Altan as a new force on the Irish traditional music scene. As with the Bothy Band's 1975 album, instrumental medleys such as the opening reel set "The Curlew" or the jig "The Road to Durham" were learned and repeated at many a session in the early 1990s. Other, quieter moments of the album, like Ní Mhaonaigh's achingly beautiful vocals on "The Lass of Glenshee" or Kennedy's flute solo on Tommy Peoples's air "An Feochán" are likely to be remembered as well. Throughout, the production by ex–Silly Wizard Phil Cunningham, who also contributes understated keyboards and whistle parts, is exemplary. Although recorded with the same lineup and later given a NAIRD award, The Red Crow ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1990, prod. P.J. Curtis) is not quite as strong an album as Horse with a Heart. Still, Ní Mhaonaigh's singing on the County Down song "The Flowers of Magherally" and on "Mallaí Chroich Shlí," as well as the instrumental renditions of Jerry Holland's now universally known reel "Brenda Stubbert's," Ní Mhaonaigh's own reel "The Red Crow," and the charming "Tommy Bhetty's Waltz" are some of the album's high points. The addition to the lineup of yet another fiddler, in the person of Cíarán Tourish, could have been a mixed blessing, but the opening track of Harvest Storm ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992, prod. P.J. Curtis) dispels all doubts. The powerful sound of the band's three fiddles on the reel medley "Pretty Peg" is simply breathtaking. This is followed by one of the very best vocal tracks recorded by the band, the song "Dónal Agus Mórag," featuring beautiful guitar work by Kelly and haunting vocal harmonies. With the presence of guest musicians like Dónal Lunny, Hothouse Flowers' Liam Ó Maonlaí, and ex–Stockton's Wing percussionist Tommy Hayes, there is some experimentation with new instrumental sounds, like that of the bass bodhrán and of the Australian didgeridoo, but P.J. Curtis's production keeps things nicely balanced. Island Angel ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Brian Masterson, Altan) continues in the same vein. The band got around to recording some tunes Ní Mhaonaigh and Kennedy had been performing for years, like their friend Fintan McManus's reel, known to many as "The Guns of the Magnificent Seven," or Charlie O'Neill's highland. Ironically in view of sad events yet to come, Kennedy's flute playing is heard very strongly, for instance on his own reel "Humours of Andytown," or on the bittersweet "Island Angel," a piece composed for him by Ní Mhaonaigh. Ní Mhaonaigh's voice shines on "Bríd Óg Ní Mháille" and the children's song "Dúlamán," with superb vocal harmonies that evoke the sound of Clannad (they recorded the song in 1976). There are two well-produced anthologies available, The First Ten Years, 1986–1995 ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Dónal Lunny) and The Best of Altan ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. various), both based on the band's first five albums. The latter includes a bonus CD containing eight tracks recorded live in Germany in 1989 by the Horse with a Heart lineup and first released as part of the collection Ireland ♪♪♪♪ (WDR, 1993, prod. Christian Scholze, Jean Trouillet, Jan Reichow). The sound is quite good and one gets a chance to experience the strength of the band's live sound. The last track, a medley of reels concluding with that essential Donegal reel "The Gravel Walk," was not recorded on any of the band's studio albums.

what to buy next: The band's latest, Runaway Sunday ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1997, prod. Altan, Alastair McMillan), is not quite in the same vein as Altan's early work but is a step up from the previous Blackwater. Obviously, the sound of Kennedy's flute is missed on the instrumental tracks. This time around, though, they include some mighty tunes, "John Doherty's Reels," the two Con Cassidy jigs in "Australian Waters," and a version of "Scots Mary," with a third part that came from Doherty as well, to name a few. As on Blackwater, however, the song arrangements often sound suspiciously mainstream, as if Ní Mhaonaigh were being promoted as the next great Irish folk vocalist. Still, it is hard not to fall under the spell of Ní Mhaonaigh's heart-rending "Time Has Passed," seemingly a sung acknowledgement of the trauma caused by her husband's death and of what the last three years must have been like—"Time has passed, You are gone, Your tune is played, I must carry on."

what to avoid: Blackwater ♪♪½ (Virgin, 1996, prod. Altan, Brian Masterson) was the band's first album after Frankie Kennedy's untimely death. What may have been a cathartic experience for the musicians did not necessarily translate into their best work. The instrumental tracks, while missing the unique tone color to which Kennedy's flute contributed, still feature some superior lead playing by Ní Mhaonaigh, Tourish, and new band member Dermot Byrne on accordion. However, the vocal tracks suffer from overproduction, with the addition of everything from Brendan Power's harmonica to Dónal Lunny's popish keyboards, to a string quartet on "Blackwaterside." The album concludes on Ní Mhaonaigh's somber "Tune for Frankie."

the rest:
Altan ♪♪♪½ (K-Tel, 1996)

worth searching for: The most devoted fans of Mairéad Ní Mhaonaigh's playing and singing may want to look for the first LP recorded by the Irish all-women band Macalla, Mná na hÉireann (Women of Ireland) ♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1984, prod. Nicky Ryan), featuring, alongside Ní Mhaonaigh, Paul O'Shaughnessy's mother, Pearl, on fiddle, and a host of other terrific musicians.

influences:

⏪ John Doherty, Con Cassidy, Proinsias Ó Maonaigh, Tommy Peoples, Clannad, Planxty, the Bothy Band, Macalla

⏩ Four Men and a Dog, Déanta, Dervish, Craobh Rua

Philippe Varlet

Dave Alvin

Born November 11, 1955, in Los Angeles, CA.

As a member of the Blasters, Dave Alvin coined the term "American Music," and he has spent the rest of his career defining the term, crafting a distinctive brand of music commonly called roots—a genre that draws on such solidly domestic forms as country, vintage R&B, rockabilly, and blues. After a split with his brother Phil ended the Blasters' too-brief run, Alvin joined X for one album, then began a solo career that has been marked by songs showing a gift for narrative and a fine poetic sense that cuts through Alvin's brusque delivery. He also plays a mean lead guitar. Of late, Alvin has gained a reputation as producer of West Coast roots music, and he also put together the excellent Merle Haggard tribute Tulare Dust in 1994.

what to buy: Blue Blvd ♪♪♪♪ (HighTone, 1991, prod. Chris Silagyi, Dave Alvin, Bruce Bromberg) reads like a book of short stories and rocks like nobody's business. "Haley's Comet," co-written with Tom Russell, recounts the dubious end of rock 'n' roll legend Bill Haley, while "Andersonville" is the most vivid song about the civil war since "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down." King of California ♪♪♪♪ (HighTone, 1994, prod. Greg Leisz) is an acoustic-based album on which Alvin finally grew into his voice, allowing quieter arrangements to show off its distinctiveness rather than its limitations. You could carp about Alvin taking still another run at "Fourth of July," but songs like "Barn Burning," which rolls like a freight train, and the lush title track, Alvin's best ballad ever, more than make up for the repetition.

what to buy next: Romeo's Escape ♪♪♪½ (Epic, 1987/Razor & Tie, 1995, prod. Steve Berlin, Mark Linett) contains some of Alvin's finest songs, including several reprised from the Blasters' albums. And while some of the arrangements, notably "Border Radio," cast the songs in new light, Alvin's limited vocal abilities hold him back. Museum of Heart ♪♪♪½ (HighTone, 1993, prod. Chris Silagyi, Bruce Bromberg, Dave Alvin) is a wrenching album of heartbreak, as most of this album's 13 tracks sift through the shards of a shattered relationship. The best of the lot, "Don't Talk about Her" and "A Woman's Got a Right" could be seen as the laments of a man smart enough to see both sides of the story.

the rest:

(With the Guilty Men) Interstate City ♪♪♪½ (HighTone, 1996)

worth searching for: The bizarre "stuporgroup" effort The Pleasure Barons Live in Las Vegas ♪♪½ (HighTone, 1993, prod. Mark Linett, Country Dick Montana) is of more interest to serious fans of any one of the principals—Alvin, Mojo Nixon, and the late, lamented Country Dick Montana—than it is to the general populace. Alvin's cover versions of "Closing Time" and "Gangster of Love" stand out, but Country Dick's Tom Jones medley must be heard to be believed.

solo outings:

The Blasters:

The Blasters Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1990)

American Music ♪♪♪½ (Rollin' Rock, 1980/HighTone, 1997)

influences:

⏪ Big Joe Turner, Sonny Burgess, Chuck Berry, Hank Williams, Merle Haggard

⏩ Big Sandy & His Fly Right Boys, the Reverend Horton Heat, Jason and the Scorchers, Chris Gaffney, the Derailers

Daniel Durchholz

Amazing Blondel

Formed late 1960s, in Scunthorpe, England.

John David Gladwin, lute, oboe, cittern, double bass; Terry Wincott, pipe organ, harmonium, cittern, recorders, flute, crumhorn, tabor pipe, ocarina, guitar; Edward Baird, guitar, guitern, percussion.

Amazing Blondel was a 1970s trio that specialized in a "medieval" sound a la City Waites or Gryphon. Named for Richard the Lionhearted's legendary favorite minstrel, they recorded their first album, Amazing Blondel, in 1970. The trio became known for playing upwards of 40 instruments on stage, passing the instruments around so that no more than three instruments were ever played at once. The instruments required an incredible amount of time to tune and the band would sometimes refuse to perform if they couldn't actually get in tune. Their material tended to be long and somewhat boring but their switching of instruments managed to keep audiences entertained. Gladwin, who was the band's songwriter and soul, left the band soon after the release of their most popular album, England, in 1972, and Wincott and Baired soldiered on as a duo for the next album, Blondel, in 1973. Their later work was more rock-oriented and not nearly as successful. The really "amazing" thing about this group is that 24 years later they reunited to tour again and release a new album, Restoration, seemingly picking up where they left off. They are alive, well, and touring together as of this writing.

what to buy: Restoration ♪♪♪♪ (HTD Records, 1997, prod. Amazing Blondel) reunites the original trio in a collection of 12 songs that hearken back to their most successful formula. The trio obviously spent a long time in the studio trying to recapture the magic and it shows; however, the band's musical sensibilities have changed somewhat over the years. Restoration incorporates elements from all four of the band's Island albums, with a liberal sprinkling of new musical directions.

what to buy next: Fantasia Lindum ♪♪♪♪ (Island Records, 1971/Edsel Records, 1997, prod. Paul Samwell-Smith) is considered the band's magnum opus and resonates with the medieval images the band cultivated. "Swifts, swains and leafy lanes, this country brings them near; As a love to his lass, and a woodsman to his deer." You get the picture. Of course, embellished with outstanding harmonies and with more than competent instrumental work, it wasn't nearly as bad as the above snippet may indicate.

the rest:

The Amazing Blondel/The Amazing Blondel & a Few Faces ♪♪½ (Bell Records, 1970/Edsel Records, 1995)
Evensong ♪♪½ (Island Records, 1970/Edsel Records, 1996)
England ♪♪½ (Island Records, 1972/Edsel Records, 1996)
Blondel—The Purple Album ♪♪ (Island Records, 1972/Edsel Records, 1996)
Mulgrave Street ♪♪ (DJM Records, 1974)
Bad Dreams ♪♪ (DJM Records, 1974)
Inspiration ♪♪ (DJM Records, 1975)
Live in Tokyo ♪♪ (DJM Records, 1977)
Englishe Musicke ♪♪½ (Edsel Records, 1993)
A Foreign Field That Is Forever England ♪♪½ (HTD Records, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ King Crimson, Moody Blues

▶▶ Gryphon, Jethro Tull, Traffic

Neal Walters

The Amazing Rhythm Aces

Formed 1972, in Memphis, TN. Disbanded 1980. Reunited 1994.

Russell Smith, guitar, vocals; Butch McDade, drums, percussion, vocals; Barry "Byrd" Burton, guitar, dobro (1972–77); James Hooker, piano (1994–present); Billy Earhart III, organ; Jeff Davis, bass; Duncan Cameron, guitar (1977–80, 1994); Danny Parks, guitar (1994–96); Kelvin Holly, guitar (1996–present).

Formed by Russell Smith and Butch McDade, the Amazing Rhythm Aces were essentially a country band that blended elements of old-time music, bluegrass, R&B, and Western swing into its repertoire. The band is probably most well-known for the hit single "Third Rate Romance," which appeared on its debut album, Stacked Deck. Subsequent albums lacked Stacked Deck's verve and drive, although in 1976 Russell's "The End Is Not in Sight" garnered the band a Grammy award. After the group formally disbanded in 1980, Billy Earhart joined the Bama Band, Duncan Cameron joined Sawyer Brown, and Russell Smith, after releasing a solo album, joined Run C&W, a country/bluegrass novelty group. In 1994, original members Smith, McDade, Earhart, and Davis reunited and hooked up with pianist James Hooker and guitarist Danny Parks for Ride Again, a tasty reworking of former ARA tunes. The group then delivered a one-two punch in 1997 with Out of the Blue, a brilliant amalgam of blues-soaked country soul, cleverly crafted lyrics, and killer guitar work courtesy of new member Kelvin Holly, who replaced Parks.

what to buy: Out of the Blue ♪♪♪♪ (Breaker Records, 1997, prod. Russell Smith) features the trademark melding of Stax-Volt funk and down home country that the group built its career on more than two decades ago. Especially noteworthy is Smith's gritty, "bluesy" vocal delivery on "The Blue Room" and McDade's rollicking "Get Down."

what to buy next: Ride Again ♪♪♪ (Breaker Records, 1994, prod. Russell Smith) features newer versions of fan favorites from the mid-1970s to early 1980s.

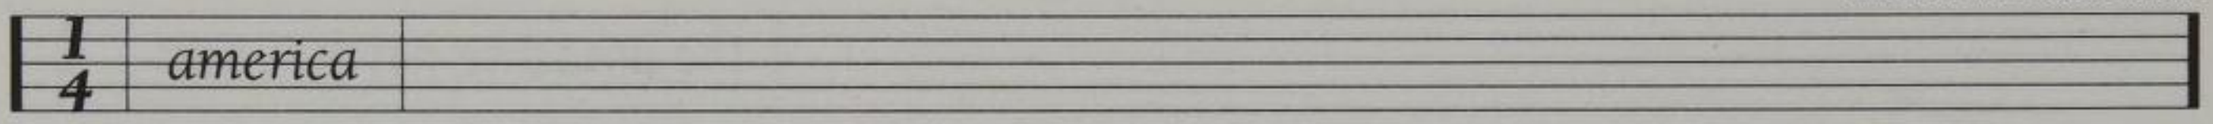
worth searching for: Stacked Deck ♪♪½ (MCA, 1975, prod. Barry "Byrd" Burton) contains "Third Rate Romance," which showcases some hot guitar playing by Barry Burton, and the "bluesy," gospel-tinged "Life's Railway to Heaven."

influences:

◀◀ The Boxtops

▶▶ Sammy Kershaw, Sawyer Brown, Toby Keith

Rick Petreycik



America

Formed 1969, in London, England.

Dewey Bunnell, vocals, guitar, drums; Gerry Beckley, guitar, vocals; Dan Peek, guitar, vocals (1969–77).

America was folk-rock's Fabian—tuneful and easy on the ears, not terribly subversive and, therefore, more commercial. The trio, which formed on a U.S. armed forces base, enjoyed a string of hit singles during the '70s, beginning by aping Neil Young on "A Horse with No Name" and hitting a few other high points—including some sides produced by Beatles collaborator George Martin—along with the drivel of "Muskrat Love." After Peek left, however, the bottom seemed to drop out. With the exception of the 1982 hit "You Can Do Magic," Bunnell and Beckley simply soldier along on the oldies circuit, pairing up with fellow travelers such as the Beach Boys and Three Dog Night.

what to buy: History: America's Greatest Hits ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1975, prod. various) has everything you'd want—and need—from the group's peak period.

what to buy next: Encore! More Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1990, prod. various) provides a nice addendum for those who want more of the story.

what to avoid: Alibi woof! (Capitol, 1980) is the worst of the myriad sub-par albums America, as a duo, has recorded during the '80s and '90s.

the rest:

America ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1972)
Homecoming ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1972)
Hat Trick ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1973)
Holiday ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1974)
Hearts ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1975)
Hideaway ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1976)
Harbor ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1976)
Silent Letter ♪½ (Capitol, 1979)
View from the Ground ♪♪ (Capitol, 1982)
Your Move ♪ (Capitol, 1983)
Perspective ♪½ (Capitol, 1984)
Hourglass ♪♪ (American Gramophone, 1994)
King Biscuit Flower Hour Presents ♪♪♪½ (KBFH, 1996)

influences:

⏪ James Taylor, the Eagles, Jackson Browne, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, Poco, the Kingston Trio

⏩ Firefall, Roger McGuinn, Gene Clark & Chris Hillman

Gary Graff

The American Cafe Orchestra

Formed 1985, in Copenhagen, Denmark.

Ruthie Dornfeld, fiddle, viola; Morten Alfred, guitar.

The American Cafe Orchestra is not really an orchestra, and that's not just because there are only two people in it. It's more an attempt to formalize the relationship between two people who discovered that they love playing together, enough that more than a decade of fertile music-making and a couple of splendid, bafflingly eclectic recordings have resulted. Ruthie Dornfeld is little known outside the Northeast, where her stellar fiddling is much in demand among traditional dance circles. She's a longtime member of Yankee Ingenuity, an institution among New England's contradance bands—but Dornfeld's dazzling, decidedly post-modern tune-mongering sensibility is hard to contain, and if her style owes much to the grand Maritimes fiddling tradition, her wide-ranging tastes and seemingly immeasurable repertoire completely defy any such stylistic circumscription. Morten Alfred is a kindred soul, a man of pangalactic musical interests and a beguiling way of insinuating his swingy archtop acoustic guitar style into nearly anything. Dornfeld and Alfred met at a bluegrass festival in Denmark in 1985 and hit it off instantly. Despite that the North Atlantic lay between their two home towns, they started to visit each other regularly, playing dances in the U.S. and cafes in Europe. "The American Cafe Orchestra grew out of this confluence of dance and cafe music," wrote Dornfeld, "as well as just plain fooling around with fiddle tunes of all types."

what's available: Except for an earlier self-produced cassette tape, the cryptically titled Egyptian Dominoes ♪♪♪♪½ (Northeastern, 1992, prod. Ruthie Dornfeld, Morten Alfred) is the only recording the Orchestra has produced—although there's such a profusion of musical riches here and such a bewildering array of stylistic tangents that there's more than enough to satisfy through repeated listenings. The Orchestra expands to a quintet for this recording, adding "members" Bill Morrison on bass; Danny Noveck on tenor banjo, fiddle, and percussion; Maine's instrumental whiz, John McGann, on mandolin, mandola, guitar, and pedal steel, and an array of other musical guests. The program is sprinkled equally with southern Appalachian fiddle tunes and traditional fiddle music from Scandinavia, as well as a Greek kalamatianos, some waltzes, guest Glenn Jones's indefinable "Cant," and the title cut. All this is knit together with Alfred's compelling, jazzy guitar and Dornfeld's dark-toned, fiery fiddling. If you want to hear more of Dornfeld, check out her band the Poodles, a quartet consisting of Dornfeld, bassist Carol Hamm, fiddler Leah Weiss, and guitarist Ruth Rappaport

(they all sing, too). Their sole CD features a far-ranging stylistic bent akin to the American Cafe crew: modal Appalachian, Cajun, Southwestern swing, and some detours to eastern Europe.

solo outings:
The Poodles:
Unleashed ♪♪♪½ (Northeastern, 1993)

influences:

- Rodney Miller, Wild Asparagus, Fourgone Conclusions, Yankee Ingenuity
- Hillbillies from Mars, anyone who's ever played (or wanted to play) "Jesusita en Chihuahua" for a contradance

Chris Rietz

The Amidons

Formed 1975, in Cambridge, MA.

Peter Amidon, vocal, piano, guitar; Mary Alice Amidon, vocal, banjo, accordion; Sam Amidon, vocal, fiddle; Stefan Amidon, vocal, percussion.

Peter and Mary Alice Amidon met in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1975, where they became deeply involved in traditional music and dance. After touring the U.S. and Europe with Vermont's Word of Mouth Chorus/Bread and Puppet Theatre, the Amidons moved to Brattleboro, Vermont, and eventually became elementary school teachers. They also became Vermont Council on the Arts touring artists and VCA Artists-in-Education, performing their songs and stories at concerts throughout New England. They eventually left their teaching jobs to devote full time to their music, and to conduct elementary school residencies of singing, storytelling, and traditional dance. Peter is founder and director of the Brattleboro Music Center Children's Choir and is stage manager for Circle of Song, a participatory singing stage at the Great Hudson Clearwater Revival Music Festival. Additionally, he leads Sacred Harp singing at the Old Songs Festival near Albany, New York. Mary Alice is co-director of the Village Harmony Camp, which brings together 20 teenaged singers from Vermont and around the world who rehearse and tour, performing a concert of early and contemporary American folk hymns, Eastern European village music, and vocal music from the Renaissance. Sam and Stefan have been performing with their parents for several years and, with Thomas Bartlett on piano, have recorded Popcorn Behavior, an album of New England contradance tunes.

what to buy: I'll Never Forget ♪♪♪ (Amidon Music, 1993, prod. Pete Sutherland) features the family in a varied program of traditional songs and tunes ranging from fiddle tunes like "Texas" to sacred harp songs. It will probably be the only album on which you'll hear "Benton's Dream," a fiddle tune from Benton Flippen, paired with "Amazing Grace" in a medley. Mary Alice's vocals and banjo playing are a special treat. All recordings are available from the Amidons, 6 Willow St., Brattleboro, VT 05301.

what to buy next: The Amidons' other releases are available only on cassette. The seasonal offering This Longest Night—Songs of Christmas, Chanukah, and the Winter Solstice ♪♪♪ (Amidon Music, 1989, prod. the Amidons) is excellent holiday fare and features several winter songs that are "off the beaten path."

the rest:
Things Are Going My Way—Traditional Songs for Children ♪♪½ (Amidon Music, 1984)
All I Really Need—Songs for Children ♪♪♪ (Amidon Music, 1988)
This Pretty Planet—Songs for the Earth ♪♪½ (Amidon Music, 1990)

solo outings:
Popcorn Behavior:
Popcorn Behavior ♪♪♪ (Amidon Music, 1995)

influences:

- The Beers Family, the Dildines
- The New Golden Ring

Neal Walters

Eric Andersen

Born February 14, 1943, in Pittsburgh, PA.

Eric Andersen hit the folk circuit during the '60s, becoming one of the first "new" Dylans, a label that is somewhat shortsighted. Andersen is similar to Dylan only in his phrasing; but where Dylan is elusive and biting, Anderson is open and thoughtful. His vision is nowhere near as far-reaching, however, as he prefers to stick to more romantic themes. His career was thrown off track during the '70s after the master tapes for the follow-up to his masterful Blue River album were inexplicably lost. After meandering for a decade or so, Andersen appears to be back on track, recently releasing some of the most focused work of his career.

what to buy: Blue River ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1972, prod. Eric Andersen) is undoubtedly his greatest work and stands alongside anything that the singer movement produced during the '70s. Once located, the tapes for Stages: The Lost Album ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1991, prod. Amy Herot) proved as complete and substantial as the rumors indicated. Certainly "Baby, I'm Lonesome" is one of the more moving love songs he's recorded. Also included are some strong new recordings with guests Garth Hudson, Rick Danko, Shawn Colvin, and the Hooters' Eric Bazilian.

what to buy next: Ghosts Upon the Road ♪♪♪♪ (Gold Castle, 1988, prod. Steve Addabbo, Eric Andersen) marks a full-force comeback. It's a mature, vast record with vivid, literate songs including the 10-minute title track. The Best of Eric Andersen ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1970, prod. various) is a solid intro to his coffeehouse folk beginnings, containing his signature "Thirsty Boots."

what to avoid: More Hits from Tin Can Alley ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1968, prod. Al Gorgoni) is not without its moments, but the Beatlesque production will be a bit florid for the purists and is certainly incongruous with anything else in his catalog.

the rest:
Today Is the Highway ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1965)
'Bout Changes and Things ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1966) worth searching for: Andersen, Danko, Fjeld ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1993) is a wonderfully intimate and understated album recorded with Jonas Fjeld and the Band's Rick Danko.

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, Woody Guthrie, Hank Williams
▶▶ John Gorka, Tom Rush, James McMurtry

see also: The Band

Allan Orski

Pink Anderson

Born February 12, 1900, in Lawrence, SC. Died October 12, 1974, in Spartanburg, SC.

Pink Anderson sang East Coast acoustic folk music, blues, minstrel tunes, and ballads. He hit the road at age 14 as a performer in the Indian Remedy Company's traveling medicine show, staying with the show until 1945. As captured in his recordings, he performed diverse material in a plaintive style, drawing from both black and white country traditions. Like many of his peers from the Piedmont region of the Southeast—and unlike countless Mississippi Delta bluesmen—his legacy in modern folk music, or even blues or rock 'n' roll, is not substantial (ironically, Anderson's most lasting recognition may come from the fact that the rock band Pink Floyd took his first name as their own when naming their band). The obsolescence of Anderson's music only serves to make his recordings all the more unique and valuable as documents of a musical heritage that—though not embraced by contemporary culture—certainly is worth remembering.

what to buy: The Blues of Pink Anderson: Ballad & Folksinger, Vol. 3 ♪♪♪♪ (Original Blues Classics, 1995) captures some of Anderson's best work, including "The Titanic," "Boweevil," and "John Henry." This reissue of Prestige/Bluesville LP BV-1071 was recorded by Samuel Charters in September 1961. One negative point: at less than 35 minutes, it's over too soon!

what to buy next: Pink Anderson: Carolina Blues Man, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Original Blues Classics, 1992) packages Anderson's more overtly blues-based material. It's well executed, but less unique and more familiar than Ballad & Folksinger, including tunes such as "Baby Please Don't Go" and Brownie McGhee's "Meet Me in the Bottom." Rev. Gary Davis and Pink Anderson: Gospel, Blues and Street Songs ♪♪♪ (Original Blues Classics, 1987) includes seven tunes from Anderson recorded in 1950 in Charlottesville, Virginia, among them the irresistible "Greasy Greens." The sound quality does not measure up to Anderson's 1961 recordings or to the standard of the day, however.

worth searching for: Inexplicably, the second volume of the series mentioned above, Medicine Show Man, which captured Anderson's medicine show recordings, is not available and not scheduled for reissue at press time. The original Prestige/Bluesville LP is worth finding, though.

influences:
▶▶ Paul Geremia, Roy Book Binder, Steve James

Bryan Powell

Molly Andrews

See: Duck Baker

Any Old Time String Band

Formed 1976, in the San Francisco area. Disbanded 1980.

Kate Brislin, guitar, banjo, bass, vocals; Sue Draheim, fiddle, guitar, vocals; Genny Haley, guitar, banjo, dobro, triangle, bass, vocals; Valerie Mindel, guitar, mandolin, bass, vocals (1976–79); Suzy Rothfield (Thompson), bass, fiddle, vocals (1976–79); Barbara Montoro, bass (1979–1980).

The Any Old Time String Band's eclectic mix of old-time, Cajun, country, and Dixieland styles made them a popular concert attraction in their native Bay Area. The more eclectic counterparts of the other pioneering mostly female Bay Area ensemble, the Good Ol' Persons, Any Old Time featured the considerable talents of Kate Brislin and Suzy Thompson, who also worked together in the Blue Flame String Band, along with ex–Albion Band member Sue Draheim and multi-instrumentalists Valerie Mindel and Genny Haley.

what's available: The recent reissue/compilation I Bid You Goodnight ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1996, prod. Chris Strachwitz, Mike Cogan) contains all the tracks from the group's two LP releases Any Old Time String Band ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1978, prod. Chris Strachwitz) and Any Old Time String Band ♪♪♪½ (Bay, 1980, prod. Mike Cogan). On the group's debut album, they alternated between fine harmonies ("Dear Companion"), hot picking ("Dixieland One-Step"), French-Cajun waltzes ("Valse de Orphelin"), and depression-era camp ("Home in Pasadena"). The second LP's sound shifted away from the jug band material, emphasizing country ("Hello Stranger," "California Blues"), early blues (Brislin's hot rendition of Bessie Smith's "Lock and Key"), and Cajun music.

influences:

◀◀ New Lost City Ramblers, Balfa Brothers, Pindar Family, Carter Family

▶▶ Jody Stecher and Kate Brislin, Eric and Suzy Thompson

see also: Jody Stecher and Kate Brislin, Eric and Suzy Thompson

Michael Parrish

Scott Appel

Born August 3, 1954, in Brooklyn, NY.

Scott Appel is a talented guitarist who has mastered traditional bottleneck playing and Celtic open tuning styles. He has made his name in the folk world as one of the foremost interpreters of the music of Nick Drake. Appel learned to play the guitar at age 8 and grew up listening to such stylists as Davey Graham and Bert Jansch. His dexterity on the six-string earned him admission to the Berklee College of Music in Boston in 1972. During this time, to make ends meet, Appel played in supper clubs, coffeehouses, and jazz nightspots as a solo artist. Realizing the potential to earn good money playing rock, Appel worked in a number of "cover" bands in the New York/New Jersey area during the 1970s. By the early 1980s, Appel turned once again to his first love, acoustic folk, and began to make his name as a regular on the coffeehouse folk circuit. His first full-fledged album, devoted mainly to his original songs, was Glassfinger, which highlights his singular bottleneck style of playing. More than just straight blues bottleneck, songs like "Meshes of the Afternoon," "Bridge," and "Leaving" are mini-mood pieces that tend to roam across time and space and the heavens: New Age with punch, as one musician describes it. Glassfinger also includes rousing Celtic traditional tunes like "Killakee House" and "Haste to the Wedding," wonderful and frantic jigs and reels that prove Appel's cleverness on the fretboard. Appel's next album, the highly praised Nine of Swords, is an homage to Nick Drake and his (Drake's) inventive guitar style. Filled with Drake's own compositions like "Place to Be," "Parasite," "Blossom," and "Bird Flew By," the album also includes the fascinating "Nearly/Far Leys," a song inspired by a snippet of unreleased music of Drake's sent to Appel by Drake's mother. Appel's own songs like "Somnus" and "Thanatopsis" meld seamlessly into Drake's, and there is a slow and pulsating melancholy to the experience of listening to the songs as a whole. Billboard called the album "Magnificent!" and Tower Pulse! said it was "highly recommended!" Both albums feature outstanding session musicians Chris McNally (guitar), Don Sternecker (keyboards), and Ace Toye (drums).

what's available: Nine of Swords ♪♪♪♪ (Schoolkids' Records, 1995, prod. Scott Appel) can be ordered by contacting Schoolkids' Records, 523 E. Liberty St., Ann Arbor, MI 48104, or e-mail: steve@schoolkids.com. Written up by Dave Fricke in Rolling Stone as "a compelling salute to Drake's tortured genius," this album features six Drake tunes and eight other songs and instrumentals, all dreamy landscapes of the drifting soul-spirit.

worth searching for: Glassfinger ♪♪♪ (Kicking Mule, 1985, prod. Scott Appel) is available on cassette from Kicking Mule Records, P.O. Box 158, Alder Point, CA 95411. Brittle Days ♪♪ (Imaginary Records, 1992, prod. Alan Duffy) is a collection of Nick Drake songs performed by various artists. Appel's rendition of Drake's "From the Morning" and "Hazy Jane" is worth the price of the album itself. Appel provides the liner notes to this collection and explains Nick's transcendental influence. It is an English import. Another rare album with two Appel songs is Songwriter ♪♪ (X111 Bis Records, 1995, prod. Johan Asherton), which was released in France. Appel produced the original songs "Let All the Clocks Stop" and "Winterlight" for inclusion in the collection.

influences:

◀◀ Nick Drake, Richard Thompson, Leo Kottke, Tim Buckley, Joni Mitchell, Sandy Denny

◀▶ David Sylvian, Duncan Sheik, Jeff Buckley, Sloan Wainwright, Syd Straw, Peter Blegvad

TJ McGrath

Dan Ar Bras

See: Fairport Convention

Arcady

Formed 1988, in Dublin, Ireland.

Johnny Moynihan, bodhrán; Frances Black, vocals (1988–94); Niamh Parsons, vocals (1994–present); Patsy Broderick, piano; Brendan Larrisey, fiddle; Nicolas Quemenar, guitar, flute, whistle; Jackie Daly, accordion (1990–95); Conor Keane, accordion (1995–present).

Named for the land in ancient Greece where poets and artists came together, the group Arcady does indeed represent the coming together of many of Ireland's top traditional musicians. Anchored by founder Johnny Moynihan's bodhrán and the outstanding piano playing of the underrated Patsy Broderick, Arcady plays a rhythmic, straightforward style of Irish music with a few world music elements (harmonica and didgeridoo for example) thrown in for spice. Like Moynihan's earlier band De Dannan, Arcady features English language songs sung by talented, accessible singers such as Frances Black and Niamh (pronounced "Neeve") Parsons. A constant fixture on the concert scene, Arcady has managed to fashion an identifiable style in spite of a tremendous amount of turnover in personnel. Sharon Shannon, Sean Keane, Cathal Hayden, and Tommy McCarthy are a few of the people who have briefly passed through the band during its history.

what's available: Many Happy Returns ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1995, prod. Johnny McDonough) is a tribute to the tunes and songs that form the backbone of traditional Irish music. Each of the musicians knows this material inside and out from years of playing it in sessions and competitions, and they give it their all in the studio. The band's adventuresome yet tasteful arrangements, using non-traditional instruments like didgeridoo and harmonica, keep these well-known pieces sounding fresh and contemporary. Accordion player Conor Keane, in particular, must be singled out for his driving, exuberant style that keeps the energy level high from the album's very first tune. The vocals are handled by Niamh Parsons, whose husky, Dolores Keane–like alto breathes new life into songs that have been sung literally millions of times. Anyone wishing to play Irish music would receive a crash course in the standard Irish music repertoire with a few listens to this album. After the Ball ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. P.J. Curtis) is Arcady's debut album: a solid, pleasant collection of traditional and contemporary material from Ireland and beyond. Singer Frances Black brings her sweet voice to pop-folk songs by Bill Staines, Stan Rogers, Andy Stewart, and Dan Seals, and the players attack a variety of tunes from Ireland, Brittany, and the U.S. The playing, while always solid, lacks a little of the fire that shines so brilliantly on Many Happy Returns.

solo outings:

Frances Black:

Talk to Me ♪♪♪ (Dara Records, 1995)

Frances Black and Kieran Goss ♪♪♪ (CBM Records, 1994)

Niamh Parsons:

Loosely Connected ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1992)

influences:

◀◀ De Dannan, Planxty, Joe Cooley

▶▶ Sharon Shannon, Four Men and a Dog

see also: Jackie Daly, De Dannan

Tony Ziselberger

Jann Arden

Born Jann Arden Richards, March 27, 1962, in Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

Arden writes and performs convincing, heartfelt tales of heartbreak, though critics have been quicker to notice than listeners. Her debut album, Time for Mercy, earned her two Juno Awards (the Canadian version of the Grammys) for Most Promising Solo Performer and Best Video for "I Would Die for You."

what to buy: A collection of beautifully structured, full-throated pop songs, her second album—Living Under June ♪♪♪♪½ (1994, A&M, prod. Ed Cherney)—made her a minor force in the burgeoning AAA radio format. Her songwriting, as in the delicate but spiteful ode to an ex-lover, "Insensitive" ("I'm out of vogue/I'm out of touch/I fell too fast/I feel too much/I hope that you might have some advice to give/on how to be insensitive"), shows a gem that's been shining from the beginning.

the rest:

Time for Mercy ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ Sarah McLachlan, Joni Mitchell

▶▶ Jewel, Chantal Kreviazuk

Christina Fuoco

Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin

Born November 16, 1927, in Duralde, LA.

"Bois Sec" (meaning dry wood) grew up playing triangle behind his uncle, the legendary Creole accordionist Amédée Ardoin. He rapidly learned to play accordion and teamed up with fiddler Canray Fontenot. It was a partnership that would survive until Fontenot's death in 1995. Their duets of fiddle and accordion were eventually augmented by Bois Sec's sons and, eventually, grandsons. The sound was always funky and loose with a great beat and an engaging originality. At the heart of the music is the syncopated accordion of Ardoin and the soaring fiddle of Fontenot. Ardoin continues to play and influence a new generation of young Cajun and zydeco musicians.

what to buy: The Ardoin Family Band with Dewey Balfa: A Couple of Cajuns ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sonet, 1987, prod. Samuel Charters) is the best recording of the Ardoin Family band. They swing and swoop around Bois Sec and guest fiddler, Dewey Balfa. Lawrence Ardoin kicks the drums the way his son Sean does now in Double Clutchin', and Russell Ardoin's bass bounces off the beat like a superball. Balfa gives some of his most blues-inspired playing with this group, showing a looser funkier side than his own recordings reveal. Bois Sec is the focus that holds it all together, with the gentle croak of his singing and his accordion-playing that constantly shifts beats and accents.

what to buy next: Les Blues du Bayou ♪♪♪♪♪ (Melodeon, 1967, prod. Richard Spottswood) is simply duets between Canray and Bois Sec with triangle contributed by Revon Reed or Isom Fontenot. Recorded at a studio in Washington, D.C., when both were fresh from an appearance at the Newport Folk Festival, the playing is crisp and marvelous. Bois Sec and Canray played with a loose kind of telepathy, where both musicians knew the melody for the tune but rarely played it, preferring to play around the melody. Canray's fiddle, gliding high, cries over the bouncing rhythmic playing of Bois Sec.

the rest:

Louisiana Cajun French Music from the Southwest Prairies, Vol. 2: 1964–1967 ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1976)

worth searching for: La Musique Creole ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1997, prod. Chris Strachwitz) contains recordings of the Ardoin family band from Morris Ardoin's Cowboy Club and more duets by Canray and Bois Sec made in 1970 and 1971. There is almost no overlap with the above recordings and even when there is you'll barely notice because these guys never play a tune the same way twice.

editor's choice

7 great highland bagpipe albums

G.N.M Stoddart, Pipers of Distinction (Klub)

G.N.M Stoddart, The World's Greatest Pipers, Volume 3 (Lismor)

Donald MacPherson, Highland Bagpipes (Tradition)

Colin MacLellan, The World's Greatest Pipers, Volume 11 (Lismor)

James McGillivray, The World's Greatest Pipers, Volume 10 (Lismor)

Donald MacPherson, The Master Piper (Lismor)

Greg Wilson, Pipers of Distinction (Klub)

influences:

◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Dennis McGee

▶▶ Chris Ardoin, Keith Frank, Geno Delafose, Tasso, Beausoleil

see also: Canray Fontenot

Jared Snyder

Amédée Ardoin

Born c. 1896, in L'Anse Rougeau, LA. Died November 4, 1941, in Pineville, LA.

The heart and soul of traditional Cajun music is Amédée Ardoin, an artist who can be considered the true father of both modern Cajun and zydeco music. His virtuoso accordion playing and emotionally charged singing continues to be highly respected by both black and white musicians. He refined and adapted traditional Cajun and Creole songs that had been played on the fiddle or the diatonic accordion. His music was a major influence on both Clifton Chenier and Iry Lejeune as well as the primary influence on the "bluesy" fiddling and singing of Michael Doucet and the accordion of Marc Savoy. Born the seventh of seven brothers, he was raised in L'Anse Rougeau near the town of Basile where he became friends with fellow accordionist Adam Fontenot (father of Canray Fontenot). He met Cajun fiddler Dennis McGee while sharecropping in 1921 and the two rapidly became extremely popular at dances in the Eunice area. Their partnership eventually led to three seminal recording sessions. These, combined with his final recording session, form a canon for modern Cajun and zydeco music in the same way the recordings of Robert Johnson do for the blues or the Bristol Sessions do for country music. His last years were spent at the state sanitarium in Pineville, where he had been committed after what some sources say was a brutal beating, while others claim he was poisoned by a jealous musician.

20 amédée ardoin

what to buy: I'm Never Comin' Back: The Roots of Zydeco ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1995, prod. Chris Strachwitz) contains all of the second, most of the third, and all of Ardoin's fourth recording session. It's full of classic performances, but the sound is somewhat harsh for those not used to it. "Les Blues de Crowley," which is reissued for the first time on this CD, is clearly the first zydeco recording, just needing some juiced-up bass and drums behind it to make it a current dance hall hit. Almost every song on this CD has been rehashed and re-recorded by other Cajun and Creole performers.

what to buy next: The compilation Cajun Music: Fais Do-Do ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1994, prod. Lawrence Cohn) contains the six truly classic recordings of Ardoin and McGee that are not found on the Arhoolie release and represent Ardoin at his best. All of these songs continue to be found in the repertory of Cajun and zydeco bands throughout Louisiana, including "Eunice Two-Step," "Quoi Faire," and "Madame Atchen."

worth searching for: Louisiana Cajun Music, Vol. 6: Amade Ardoin: The First Black Zydeco Recording Artist ♪♪♪♪ (Old Timey, 1983, prod. Chris Strachwitz) is a fine collection. (In the credits of his early recordings, Ardoin's first name was spelled Amade.) An earlier compilation on LP of Ardoin can be found on Old Timey and covers the recordings on Cajun Music: Fais Do-Do and many of the tunes on I'm Never Comin' Back: The Roots of Zydeco.

influences:

- Dennis McGee, Joe Falcon
- Clifton Chenier, Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin, Michael Doucet, Iry LeJeune

Jared Snyder

Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin (© Jack Vartoogian)

Chris Ardoin /Chris Ardoin and Double Clutchin'

Formed 1995, in Lake Charles, LA.

Chris Ardoin, one row accordion, three row accordion, vocals; Sean Ardoin, drums, vocals; Tammy Ledet, frattoir, vocals; Derek Dee Greenwood, bass, vocals; Gabriel Pandy Perrodin Jr., guitar, vocals.

Chris and Sean Ardoin have one serious zydeco pedigree. They are sons of zydeco musician Lawrence "Black" Ardoin, the grandsons of Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin, and the great grandnephews of the legendary Amédée Ardoin. They are part of a generation of extremely young zydeco musicians who are reshaping the music based on the combination of their strong family traditions and contemporary musical influences. They can mix together funk and hip-hop with a Creole tinge or play revved-up versions of traditional two-steps and waltzes. At 15, Chris already had three albums under his belt. Like Steve Riley has done with Cajun music, the Ardoin brothers have added three-part vocal harmonies to zydeco. Overall, theirs is a new and fresh approach to zydeco that still has roots back out in the countryside.

what to buy: In the first minute of "Lake Charles Connection," featurd on Gon' Be Jus' Fine ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Scott Billington), you get all the elements that make up the Double Clutchin' sound. The double bass drum beat, popularized by Beau Jocque, mixes with the slinky bass guitar and chippy minor key rhythm guitar, the virtuoso accordion playing of Chris Ardoin, and the clean three-part harmonies. The vocals are mostly in English with the constant interjections and asides sometimes straying to French. This sound seems to work the best on "Lake Charles Connection," "When I'm Dead and Gone," and "I Don't Want What I Can't Keep." The family tradition is represented by the frantic "Ardoin Two Step" and by Sean's singing of his grandfather's valse "Dimanche Apres Midi." A solid and different-sounding record.

what to buy next: Lick It Up! ♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1995, prod. Lawrence Ardoin) features the early sound of a very young Chris Ardoin. The youthful zydeco band shows that they can bust a groove with a lot of older players.

the rest:

That's Da Lick ♪♪♪ (Maison De Soul, 1995)

influences:

- Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin, Beau Jocque, Canray Fontenot

joan armatrading

Keith Frank, Geno Delafose

Jared Snyder

Joan Armatrading

Born December 9, 1950, in Basseterre, St. Kitts, West Indies.

Armatrading's loyal cult following has kept her touring and recording for more than 25 years. Her revealing, emotionally charged lyrics and excellent, though underrated, guitar playing reveal a solid, consistent talent. Raised in England, Armatrading's first public notice came in 1970, when she appeared in Hair and began a folk collaboration with songwriter Pam Nestor. After one duo album, Armatrading went solo with a sound that blended jazz, Caribbean, and rock influences into a folk format; she was also among the first to bring synthesizers into an essentially acoustic setting. Her later work featuring electric guitars is less satisfying, but her steady songwriting skills have maintained the integrity of the music. The coordination and interplay between her vocals and her guitar playing lend distinction to much of her work.

what to buy: Joan Armatrading ♪♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1976, prod. Glyn Johns) is full of pining lyrics and sparse arrangements that color and enhance her pleasing, husky voice. The anthem-like gospel ending to "Love and Affection" tops off one of the most joyous and revealing looks ever at the effects of love. Some of her electric stuff does hit, and The Key ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1983, prod. Steve Lillywhite, Val Garay) is one of Armatrading's least introspective forays. There's a taste of the old Joan on "Drop the Pilot," "(I Love It When You) Call Me Names," and the title song, but she also casts an eye on the social ravages of drugs and violence. Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1996, prod. various) is exactly what it says.

what to buy next: Much of what fans like most about Armatrading is on Back to the Night ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1975, prod. Pete Gage), a spare, folkish work with great songs such as "Dry Land," "Cool Blue Stole My Heart," and "Body to Dust."

what to avoid: Armatrading's ability to produce a hook or memorable line largely evaded her on Hearts and Flowers ♪½ (A&M, 1990, prod. Joan Armatrading), although the title tune is a keeper.

the rest:
Whatever's for Us ♪♪½ (A&M, 1972)
Show Some Emotion ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1977)
To the Limit ♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1978)
Me, Myself and I ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1980)
Walk under Ladders ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1981)
Track Record ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1983)
Sleight of Hand ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1986)
Classics, Vol. 21 ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1986)
The Shouting Stage ♪♪½ (A&M, 1988)
Square the Circle ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1992)
What's Inside ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1995)

worth searching for: The hard-to-find Secret Secrets ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1985, prod. Mike Howlett) contains some of Armatrading's most densely produced music, including horns, but the change does her good. There's a pervasive joy here so that even a "bluesy" lyric such as "Friends Not Lovers" gets delivered with a bouncy, infectious beat.

influences:

Odetta, Joni Mitchell

Tracy Chapman, Dionne Farris

Lawrence Gabriel

Frankie Armstrong

Born in Workington, Cumbria, England.

Frankie Armstrong is one of the classic voices of the English folk-song revival. A social worker who has worked with blind people as well as with addicts, Armstrong brings a strong sense of social justice and concern for humanity to the songs she sings. She came to the attention of the listening public in 1966, when she sang two songs on the album The Bird in the Bush, a thematic album compiled by the leading folklorist of the revival, A.L. Lloyd. During the same period, she joined the Critics Group, a collection of young singers who gathered to discuss and explore folksong and the revival, under the direction of Ewan MacColl. She released several albums with the Critics Group during the later 1960s, and in 1971 began her career as a solo recording artist. In 1975, Lloyd wrote that Armstrong was "the outstanding woman singer in the folk revival," no small praise from such an eminent critic and authority. Lloyd also pointed out that Armstrong's great strength lies in her combination of "a distinctive approach to traditional ballads with a discriminating ear for contemporary songs." Unfortunately, the numerous solo albums she recorded during the 1970s and 1980s, all of which are marvelous examples of these talents, are out of print, although plans are afoot to reissue at least one of them. During the later 1980s and early 1990s, Armstrong concentrated on areas of life other than her own career as a recording artist. She was, for example, running singing workshops at which she helped others to liberate their own voices. Therefore, the only CD release during this period was an album that she shared with Dave Van Ronk. During the later 1990s, however, she decided to strike a different balance between teaching and recording, which led to three CD releases in a six-month period during late 1996 and early 1997.

Joan Armatrading (© Jack Vartoogian)

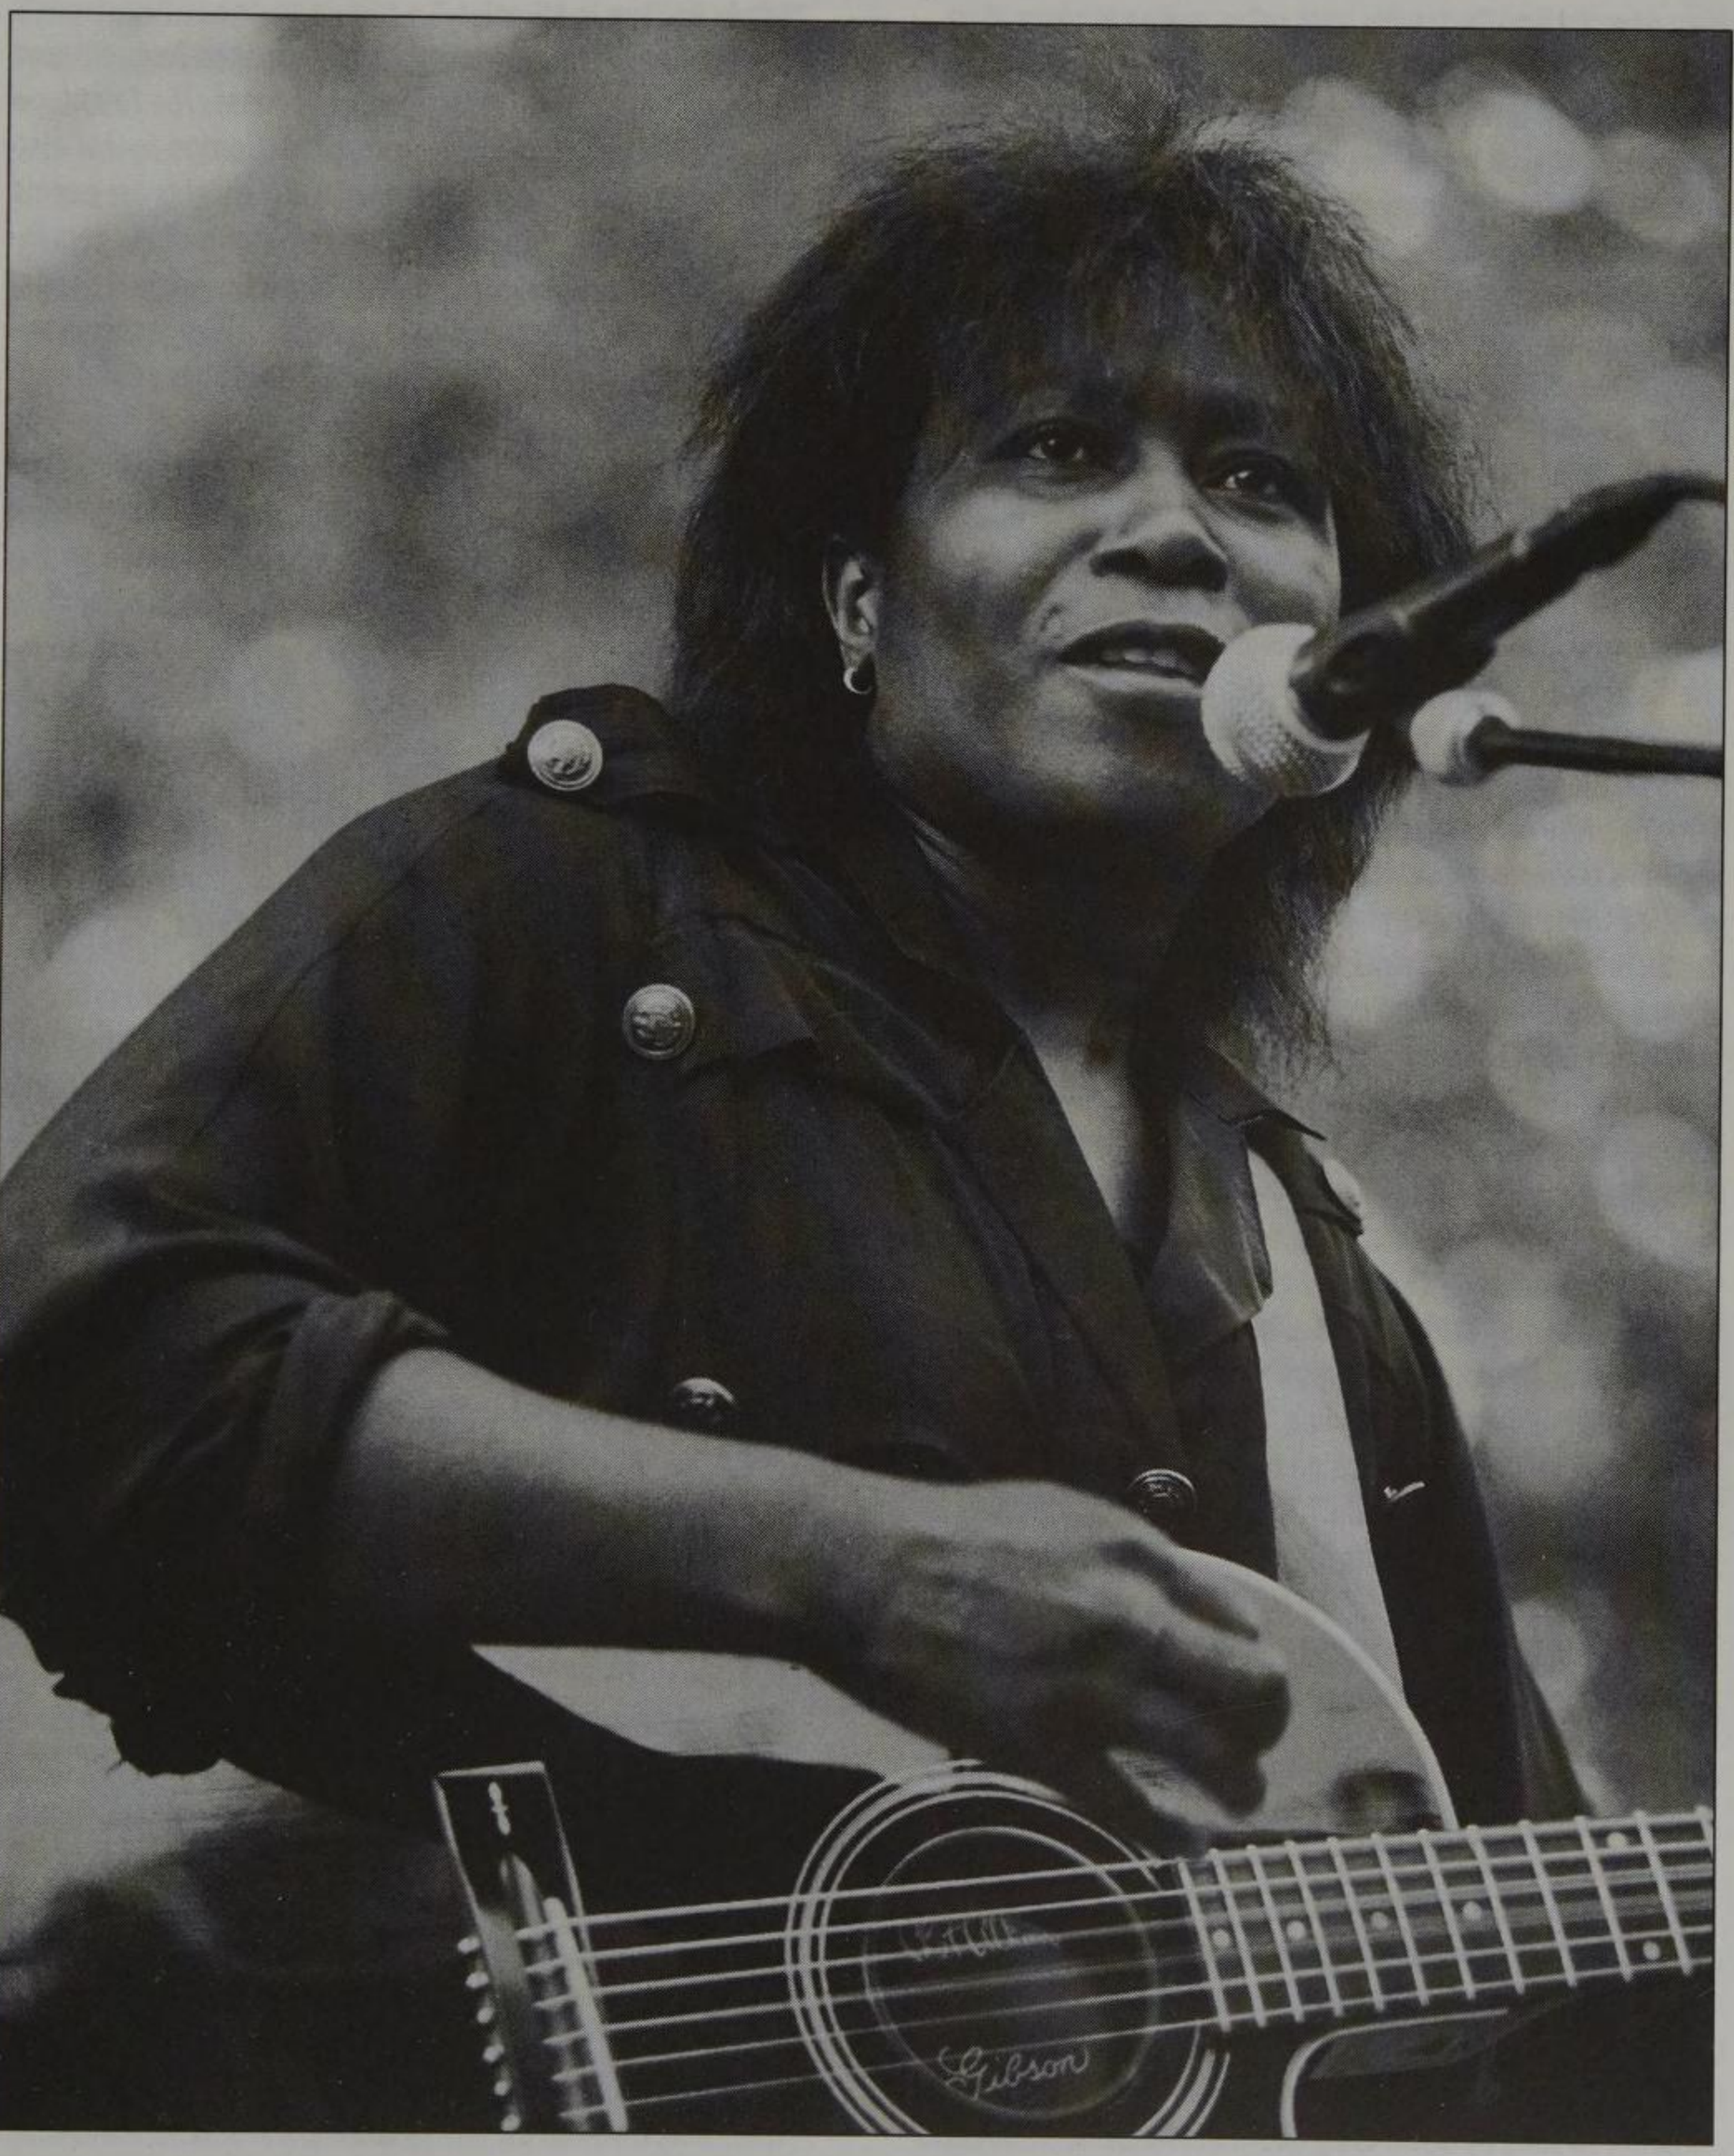
frankie armstrong



artisan

what to buy: Till the Grass O'ergrew the Corn ♪♪♪♪♪ (Fellside, 1996, prod. Paul Adams, Frankie Armstrong) features Armstrong singing her favorite traditional British ballads. Accompanied on many tracks by John Kirkpatrick on accordion or melodeon, and on a few by Maddy Prior's vocal harmonies, Armstrong treats the listener to 12 magical and mysterious ballads from the "Child Ballad" canon. Her voice is as strong as ever, and the hairs on the back of one's neck are apt to stand up listening to her sing these old songs. Most of Armstrong's ballads deal with relations between the sexes, from husbands rescuing their kidnapped wives ("Young Orphy") to incest and murder between brothers and sisters ("Fair Lizzy"). The most powerful of them are the ones she sings with no accompaniment, including "Lady Diamond" and the 11-minute "Child Waters," whose hair-raisingly cruel storylines are enhanced by the starkness of unaccompanied performance. Similarly frightening is the ballad of "The Well below the Valley," a story of incest and rape in which the victim takes the blame, sung by Armstrong with harmony vocals by Prior; and "Clerk Colvin," the story of a two-timing rogue whose mermaid lover does him in, to which Kirkpatrick adds ominous accordion drones and noises. A few of the ballads are lighter-hearted, including "The Broomfield Hill," "John Blunt" and, in an unusual version told from a woman's point of view, "Hares on the Mountain." These do a lot to add levity to the otherwise gloomy feeling of the album. Erudite liner notes by Brian Pearson, who is clearly better-read and more knowledgeable about ballads than many professional folklorists, add the finishing touch to this fine package.

what to buy next: Ways of Seeing ♪♪♪♪ (Harbourtown, 1996, prod. Charlie Grey) is a recording made live at London concerts. It's a diverse collection of material, including Eastern European songs, a translation of a Gaelic croon, and many modern songs. Armstrong is accompanied by a chorus of women singers on many cuts, and on the rest sings unaccompanied. Some highlights include the Sydney Carter song "Girl in a Garden," on which Armstrong does incredible things with her voice, "Low Ground," a song by David Craig about the Norse in Britain, and "I Only Believe in Miracles," a tribute to one of Armstrong's friends. The album, including its title, makes frequent and poignant references to Armstrong's blindness. The Fair Moon Rejoices ♪♪♪ (Harbourtown, 1997, prod. Gordon Jones) also contains a variety of material. Two of the highlights are poems by William Blake set to music by Mike Westbrook. Others include songs from plays, poems set to music, original songs, and several tunes by songwriter Leon Rosselson. Accompaniments are provided by Peter Stacey on saxophones and bagpipes, Ben Lawrence on djembe and cello, and Geoff Haynes on piano. The overall feeling of many of the songs—due to Armstrong's emotional and dramatic singing and the jazz/classical arrangements, is that of theater music, but inflected by the folksong movement. Let No One Deceive You: Songs of Bertholt Brecht ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1989, prod. Gary Cristall) was an inspired idea. The politics and poetry of Brecht were an inspiration to many in both the American and the British folksong revivals, and this album brings together a giant of the American movement, Dave Van Ronk, with one of the British. Armstrong's contributions are among her most powerful, enraged, defiant, and sometimes gentle recorded performances. Van Ronk's beefy growl is equally riveting.

worth searching for: Armstrong has recorded numerous solo albums over the years, all of which are worth hearing. Some highlights of her career include Lovely on the Water ♪♪♪♪ (Topic Records, 1972), her debut album, and Songs and Ballads ♪♪♪♪, a 1975 collection of traditional songs that was issued in the U.S. on the Antilles label. Her collaboration with Brian Pearson and Blowzabella to create the song cycle and LP Tam Lin ♪♪♪♪ (Plant Life, 1980) is also a fascinating piece of work. Finally, several LPs that she recorded with the Critics Group are worth hearing, especially The Female Frolic ♪♪♪♪ (Argo, 1968), on which she was joined by Sandra Kerr and Peggy Seeger to sing traditional songs from a feminist perspective.

influences:

- A.L. Lloyd, Ewan MacColl
- June Tabor

Steve Winick

Artisan

Formed 1994, in Birdsedge, Yorkshire, England.

Brian Bedford, vocals; Jacey Bedford, vocals; Hilary Spencer, vocals.

Artisan has to be heard to be understood; even then, it's hard to describe why an art that is so simple works so well. Akin in

REED CITY PUBLIC LIBRARY
410 West Upton Avenue
Reed City, MI 49677
(616) 832-2131

some ways to fellow British vocal groups such as Swan Arcade, Artisan was not initially influenced by such folk artists; the members were more familiar with the Andrews Sisters and other pop artists. The trio began as a hobby in 1984, and it's been a full-time, internationally touring entity since 1990. The group's winter "Stuff the Turkey" shows are an annual tradition in England. Artisan's style is theatrical, entertaining, and original, drawing on everything from music hall to gospel. In just over five minutes on Breathing Space, the trio kicks out the jam (and scones) Yorkshire style in the goofy "Bed Rap" and then offers one of its best serious songs, "The Rainbow Never Came." All three singers are superb, but Artisan's secret weapon is the songwriting of Brian Bedford, who has a photographic eye for detail and an excellent melodic gift.

what to buy: Our Back Yard ♪♪♪♪ (Bedspring, 1996, prod. Brian Bedford) is a nostalgia trip that suits the timeless charm of Artisan's voices. Breathing Space ♪♪♪♪ (Bedspring, 1993, prod. John Adams) is quite different: while it includes silliness like "Silly Old Fool" and "Hammer Ghost" ("Hammer" as in the horror film series), it also includes such sophisticated songs as "Power Cut" and "Curupay Freijo." Brian Bedford's hallmark lyrical detail shines here.

the rest:
Rocking at the End of Time ♪♪♪♪ (Festival, 1991/Bedspring, 1995)
Bygone Christmas ♪♪♪½ (Bedspring, 1994) worth searching for: One of Artisan's two Christmas albums, The Season of Holly and Ivy ♪♪♪♪½ (Brewhouse, 1989, prod. Eric Cowell), is available only in the United Kingdom; it's a marvelous collection of wassails and carols.

influences:
◀◀ Andrews Sisters, the Beatles, Vin Garbutt
▶▶ Black Voices

Pamela Murray Winters

Karen Ashbrook

Born April 28, 1959, in Columbus, OH.

Known for her delicate touch and natural affinity for Irish music, Karen Ashbrook has made her mark in the hammered dulcimer world. After spending five years traveling the world and studying its music, she settled in the Washington, D.C., area, where she has become a celebrity. Her in-depth knowledge of a wide variety of musical styles and traditions has made her an extraordinary all-around musician. Besides her exquisite hammered dulcimer playing, she also plays a mean pennywhistle and wooden flute. She studied flute with celebrated flautist Chris Norman. She has worked with several groups, including Ceoltoiri, King David's Harp, and Celtic Naught. Karen began learning how to play the hammered dulcimer the week after building one as a high school project. Her love of her instrument is reflected in her nationally acclaimed instruction book and cassette Playing the Hammered Dulcimer in the Irish Tradition. Across the country, Ashbrook teaches at festivals and workshops, including Common Ground in Westminster, Maryland, and Augusta Heritage Arts Center in Elkins, West Virginia. Notable performances for Ashbrook have included the Smithsonian Institution, National Public Radio, and a request to play for part of the festivities surrounding the marriage of Prince Charles and Lady Diana.

what's available: Ashbrook's debut recording Knock on the Door ♪♪♪½ (Fools-Cap Pub., 1988/Maggie's Music, 1995, prod. Karen Ashbrook) has been digitally re-mastered. On this delightful collection of Irish and Breton tunes, Ashbrook works with many other talented musicians to display her first-hand understanding of Irish music, creating an upbeat and enjoyable recording. On Hills of Erin ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1994, prod. Bob Read), Karen is joined by a host of excellent musicians, including David Scheim on piano, Bob Read on reeds, Carolyn Surrick on viola da gamba, and Sue Richards on harp. The result is a rich tapestry of Irish music, taking the listener on a magic carpet ride to Ireland. The choice of tunes ranges from the slow and haunting "The Osprey" to the jolly and jocular "The Cabin Boy." Karen displays her versatility and passionate expression with her rendition of J.S. Bach's "Prelude to the First Suite for Unaccompanied Violincello" on hammered dulcimer.

influences:
◀◀ Bach, the Bothy Band, Alasdair Fraser, the Irish Tradition, Nick Blanton, David James ▶▶ Jody Marshall, Maggie Sansone

see also: Ceoltoiri

Jo Hughey Morrison

Clarence "Tom" Ashley

Born September 29, 1895, in Bristol, TN. Died July 2, 1967.

Clarence "Tom" Ashley played with traveling medicine shows as a comedian and a performer on the banjo and guitar from 1913 to 1943. He had a short recording career with Victor and Columbia between 1929 and 1933, recording solo and with such bands as Byrd Moore and his Tarheel Hotshots. In 1960, after Harry Smith's Anthology of American Folk Music compilation (which included some of these old sides) was starting to take hold among young musicians devoted to this old style of folk music, Ralph Rinzler met Tom Ashley at the Union Grove Old Time Fiddlers Convention. Ashley had given up playing banjo during the '40s but when Rinzler asked Ashley to make a recording he spent the next four months reintroducing himself to the instrument. On Labor Day weekend, 1960, Ralph Rinzler recorded Tom Ashley along with many of his neighbors (including Clint Howard, Fred Price, and a young Doc Watson.) Thus began the second recording career for Clarence "Tom" Ashley. From that time until his death in 1967, Tom performed all over the United States and England. It is impossible to say how many young musicians Tom has influenced over the years through his performances; it is fair to say, however, that old-time and bluegrass musicians the world over owe a debt to this influential man.

what to buy: Doc Watson and Clarence Ashley's two-CD set The Original Folkways Recordings 1960–1962 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1994, prod. Ralph Rinzler) presents the music from the beginning of Ashley's second phase of his recording career through 1962.

what to buy next: Many of Ashley's recordings from the late '20s and early '30s can be found on Harry Smith's Anthology of American Folk Music ♪♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1952/Smithsonian/Folkways, 1997, prod. Harry Smith).

influences:

◀◀ Uncle Dave Macon

▶▶ Doc Watson

Steve Gardner

Asleep at the Wheel

Formed 1970, in Paw Paw, WV.

Ray Benson, guitar, vocals; Lucky Oceans, pedal steel; Leroy Preston, drums, guitar, vocals; and a cast of nearly thousands.

The brainchild and passion of its towering frontman and sole surviving founding member, Ray Benson, Asleep at the Wheel got its start in West Virginia as an attempt to keep the spirit of traditional country and Western music, particularly Western swing, alive. Benson moved the band to Austin, Texas, during the early 1970s and managed to weather myriad personnel changes while keeping his artistic vision intact. Musically the group pays tribute to and updates Texas swing, blues, rock and even pop—along with jazz, Cajun, blues, rock, and hardcore country. Its various lineups have included double fiddle, accordion, pedal steel, sax, guitar, mandolin, keyboards, and harmonica, with each new face bringing something fresh to the mix. Recognition has come slowly to this eclectic, elastic band of Texas transplants. But it has come. Among the group's recent accolades are two Grammys for its loving Bob Wills tribute album.

what to buy: For lots of pure Wheel fun, check out the boxed set Still Swingin' ♪♪♪½ (Liberty, 1994, prod. various), which features a wide range of material, from previously unreleased obscurities to remakes of AATW staples featuring such high-profile guests as Garth Brooks and Dolly Parton. This exhaustive collection features 51 tracks, including Wheel spokes like "Take Me Back to Tulsa," "Route 66," "The Letter That Johnny Walker Read" and some of its best lesser-known stuff, like the torchy "Ruler of My Heart" (featuring former AATW vocalist Chris O'Connell).

what to buy next: Asleep at the Wheel: Tribute to the Music of Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys ♪♪♪½ (Liberty, 1993, prod. Ray Benson, Allen Reynolds) is the most ambitious album this little ol' swing band from Texas ever attempted. Wills is the band's sturdiest musical root, so with surviving Playboys Johnny Gimble and Eldon Shamblin in tow, the Wheels and guests (Lyle Lovett, Chet Atkins, Vince Gill, George Strait, Garth Brooks) eloquently and faithfully recreated Wills signatures, including "Red Wine" and "Corine, Corina." The album won two Grammys.

what to avoid: Benson has spent most of the 1990s looking back on the band's career with hits albums, live albums, and a boxed set. A misguided attempt to combine all of those formats, Greatest Hits (Live & Kickin') ♪♪ (Arista, 1992, prod. Ray Benson) doesn't do the band's live show, or its legacy, any justice.

the rest:

Asleep at the Wheel ♪♪ (MCA, 1985)
10 ♪♪½ (Epic, 1987)
Western Standard Time ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1988)
Keepin' Me Up Nights ♪♪ (Arista, 1990)
The Swingin' Best Of ♪♪½ (Epic, 1992)
The Wheel Keeps on Rollin' ♪♪ (Capitol, 1995)

worth searching for: The Wheel's earliest, edgier efforts are long out of print. One vinyl album worth tracking down is Collison Course ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1978, prod. Ray Benson), which captured the band in all its stylistic diversity, with two fiddlers, velvet-voiced singer Chris O'Connell, and pedal steel guitarist extraordinaire Lucky Oceans.

influences:

Bob Wills, Phil Harris, Count Basie, Merle Haggard

Lyle Lovett and His Large Band, Marty Stuart, Mark O'Connor, Alison Krauss

Doug Pullen

Chet Atkins

Born June 20, 1924, in Lutrell, TN.

An internationally known guitar wizard who guided many artists' careers (from Elvis to Dottie West to Steve Wariner) as label executive/producer for RCA, Chet Atkins, for better or worse, was an important contributor to what became known as the "Nashville Sound"—also referred to as "countrypolitan" music, mixing pop rhythms and instrumentation with country elements, and incorporating classical, jazz, and other music as well. Atkins's first instrument was a fiddle, which he learned as a child before switching to guitar at age 9. His first professional job was as part of the Bill Carlisle Show on WNOX radio in Knoxville. Other artists he worked with early in his career included Homer and Jethro, Mother Maybelle and the Carter Sisters, and Red Foley. Hired as assistant to RCA label executive Steve Sholes in 1952, Atkins played on numerous sessions for other artists, recorded many solo albums featuring his Merle Travis–influenced finger-picking style, and began producing countless records for RCA artists. He also helped guide the careers of artists on other labels, most notably the Everly Brothers. By 1957 Atkins was in charge of recording operations for RCA's Nashville office, and became a label vice-president in 1968. After winning a number of Grammys and Country Music Association awards throughout the 1970s, Atkins left RCA in 1982 to sign with Columbia Records, for whom he continues to record. Highlights of the last decade include his tasteful collaborations with artists like Dire Straits' leader Mark Knopfler, Suzy Bogguss, and Steve Wariner. Atkins was elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1973.

what to buy: In spite of limited chart success, The Essential Chet Atkins ♪♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1996, prod. various) is a collection of 20 tracks that are a good indication of Atkins's influence as instrumentalist and producer.

what to buy next: Chet Atkins and Mark Knopfler's Neck and Neck ♪♪♪♪ (CBS, 1990, prod. Mark Knopfler) is a collaborative effort that, while sticking pretty close to the pattern established by most of Atkins's recent records, is distinguished by the sheer joy the two obviously have in working together. The RCA Years ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1992, prod. various), a two-CD set, isn't quite the value of "The Essential," but it's still worthwhile.

the rest:

Chet Atkins Picks on the Beatles ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1966/1996)
East Tennessee Christmas ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1983)
Street Dreams ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1986)
Sails ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1987)
Stay Tuned ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1987)
Guitar for All Seasons ♪♪½ (Pair, 1988)
Chet Atkins, C.G.P. ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1989)
Country Gems ♪♪½ (Pair, 1990)
Read My Licks ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1994)
(With Suzy Bogguss) Simpatico ♪♪♪½ (Liberty, 1994)
Almost Alone ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1996)
Chet Picks the Hits ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1996)
Music from Nashville, My Home Town ♪♪½ (RCA Camden, 1996)
(With Tommy Emmanuel) The Day Finger Pickers Took Over the World ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1997)
Christmas with Chet Atkins ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1997)

worth searching for: If you can find it or afford it, Galloping Guitar: The Early Years ♪♪♪♪½ (Bear Family, 1995, prod. Stephen Sholes, Chet Atkins) is a four-CD import set of early Atkins recordings that includes all manner of rarities. A Prairie Home Companion aside, you don't normally associate Atkins with singing, but he has quite a nice voice as these recordings show. Of course, you'll also get his incredible guitar stylings in full measure as well. The set includes a great booklet by Russ Kienzle.

influences:

Merle Travis, Les Paul

Mark Knopfler, Lenny Breau

Stephen L. Betts

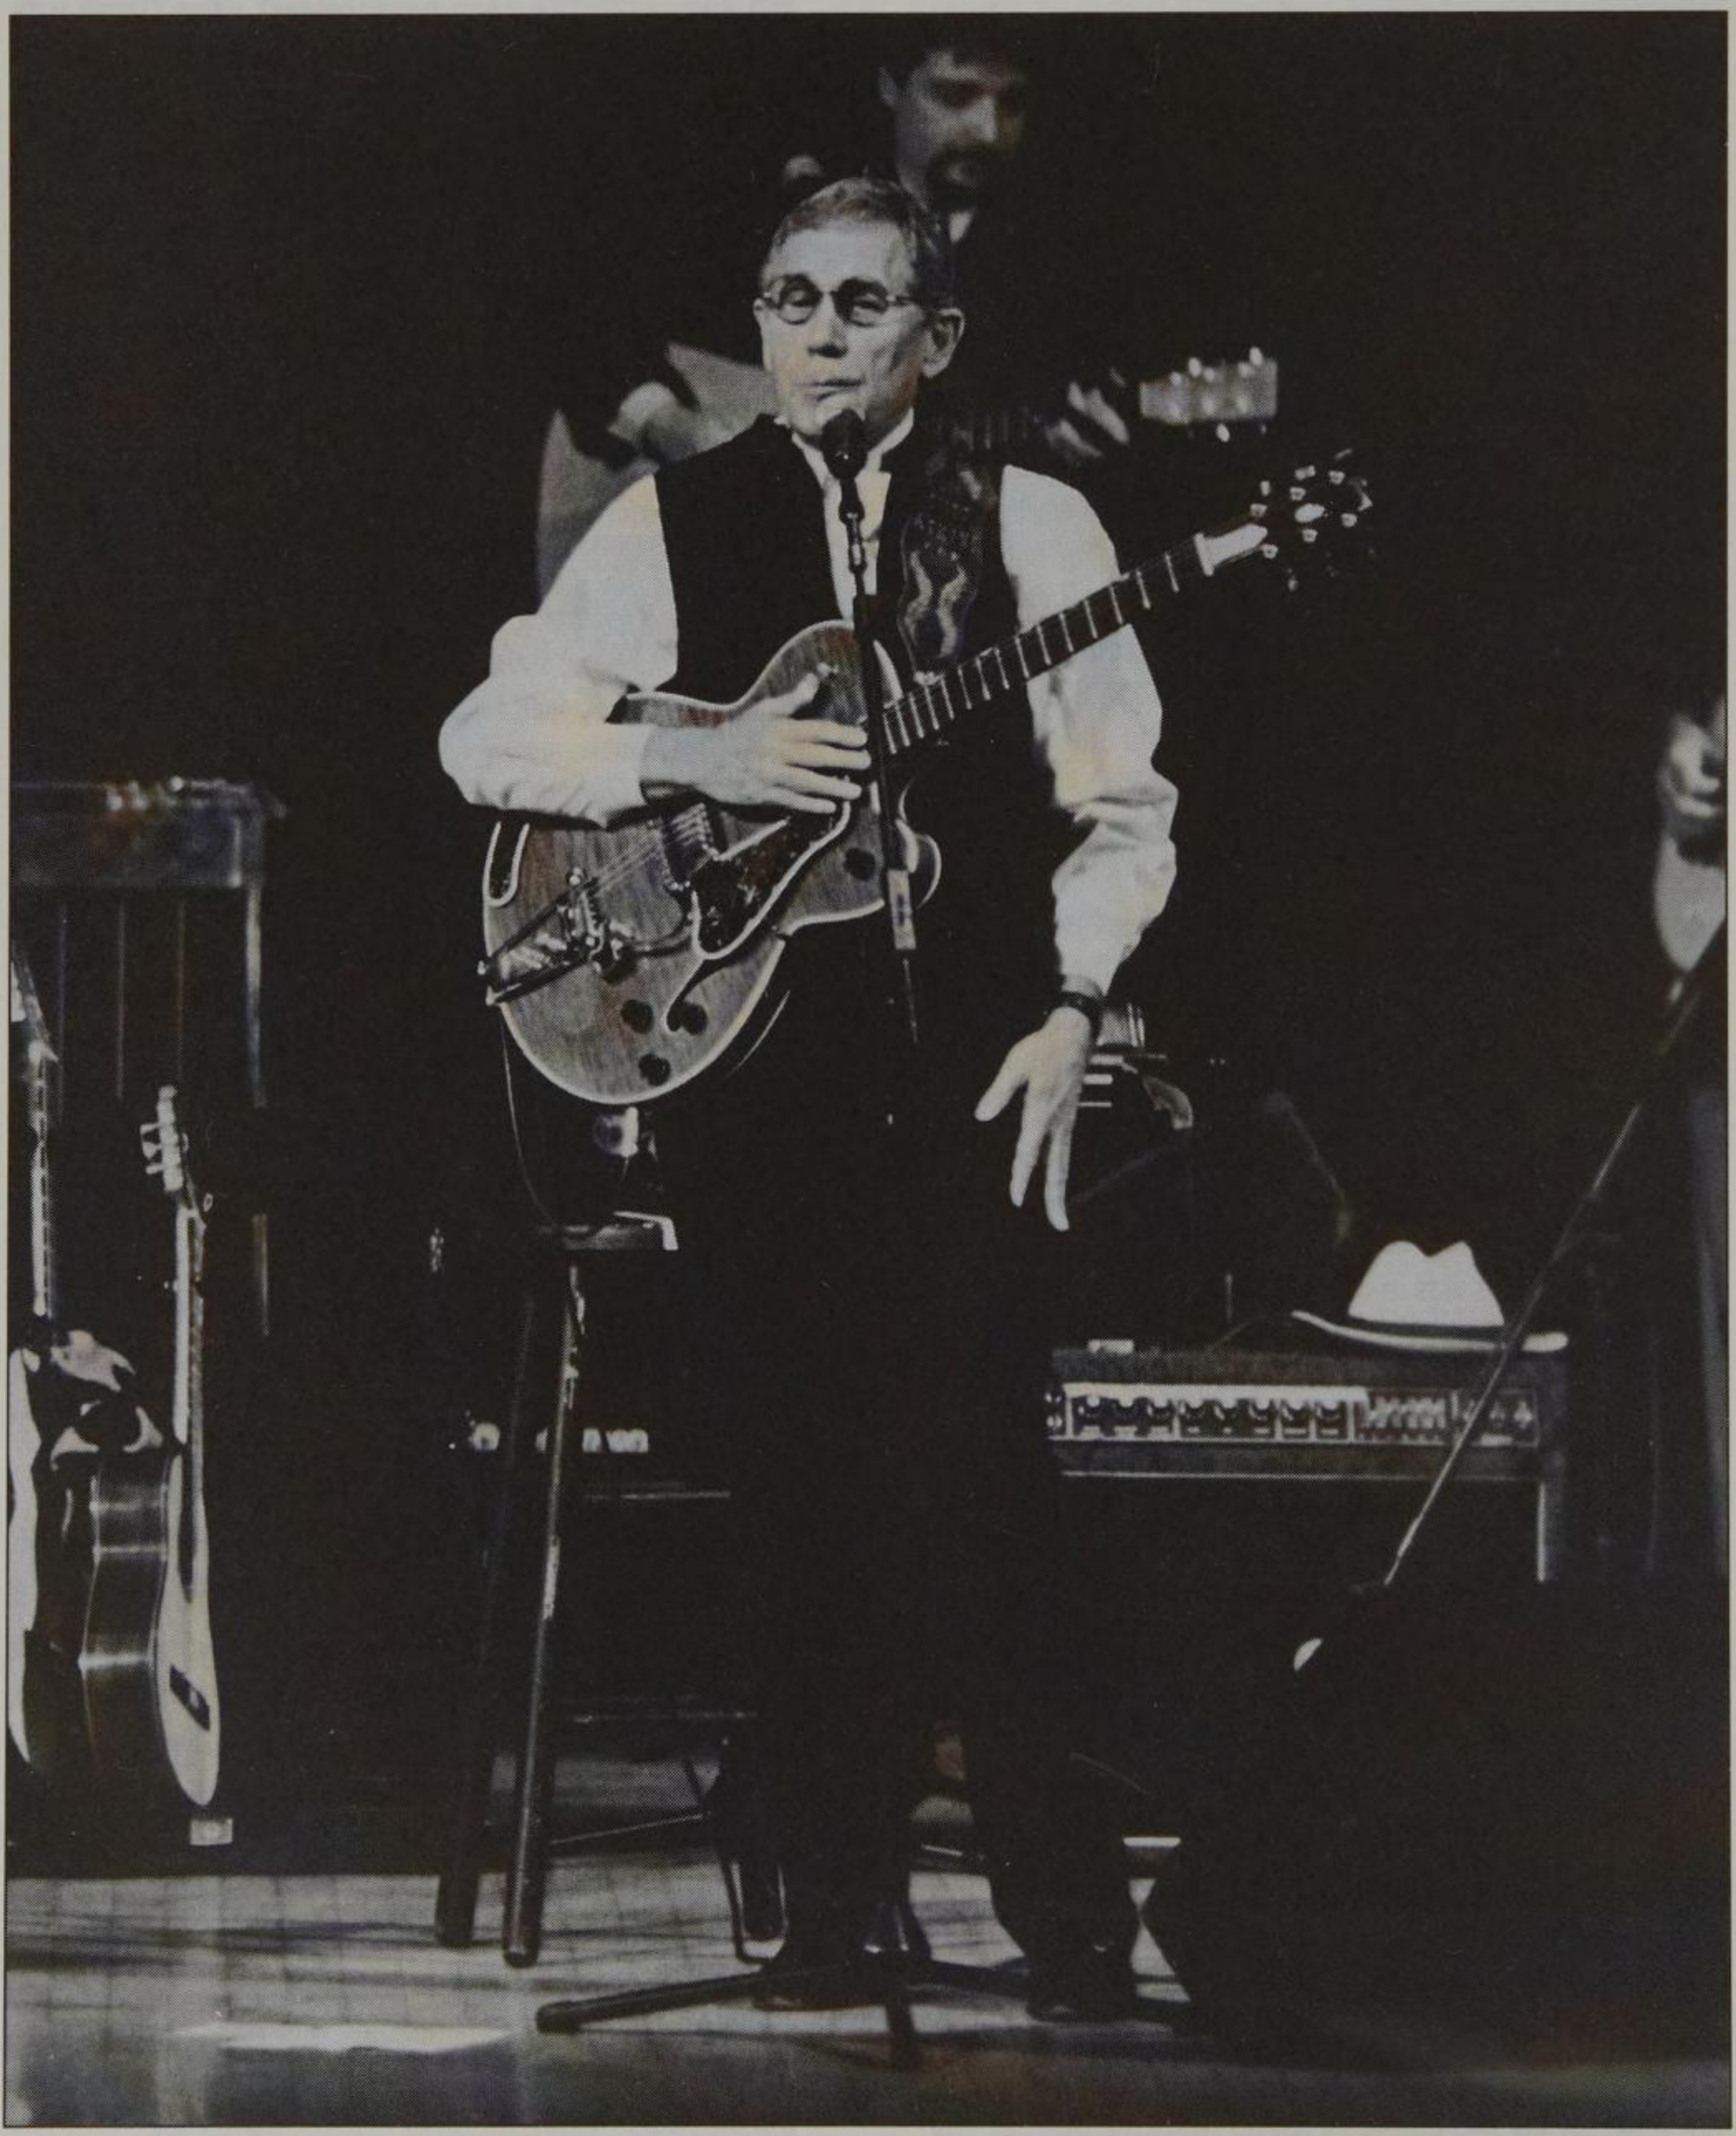
Atwater-Donnelly

Formed 1987, in Providence, RI.

Aubrey Atwater (born September 22, 1963), mountain dulcimer, banjo, guitar, tin whistle, vocals; Elwood Donnelly (born January 30, 1950), mountain dulcimer, guitar, bones, harmonica, bodhrán, vocals.

Consisting of a Rhode Island husband and wife, Atwater-Donnelly is a singing-songwriting team dedicated to preserving the essence of traditional music. They are well known in New England folk circles for their repertoire of traditional Irish, Scottish, and English folk songs, Appalachian music, sea chanteys, and Shaker hymns. Their harmonies, punctuated by Aubrey Atwater's powerful soprano and Elwood Donnelly's solid tenor, are delicious and meticulously crafted, honed since they first

atwater-donnelly



performed together in 1987. Though most of their music is traditional, they are not wedded only to those styles, having included originals on their albums as well. Atwater recorded the solo (though Donnelly joins her on a couple of songs) Simple Sentences in 1992, offering a forum for her exquisite voice and a variety of original songs.

what to buy: Where the Wild Birds Do Whistle ♪♪♪♪ (Rabbit Island Music, 1997, prod. Atwater-Donnelly) offers a warm blend of mostly traditional music, from Appalachian songs to Celtic music, and a touch of poetry, with the duo singing beautifully mixed harmonies. Along with a few guest musicians, they play instruments from guitar, mandolin, banjo, and fiddle to tin whistle and jawharp.

what to buy next: Atwater's Simple Sentences ♪♪♪♪ (Rabbit Island Music, 1992, prod. Atwater-Donnelly) is a personal collection of songs written by Atwater that shows her contemporary side, with originals on such topics as homelessness, alcoholism, and illiteracy, strewn with painful images drawn from her work as a literacy teacher in the low-income neighborhoods of Providence, Rhode Island.

the rest:
Labor and Love ♪♪♪½ (Rabbit Island Music, 1988)
Culled from the Garden ♪♪♪♪ (Rabbit Island Music, 1991)
Like the Willow Tree ♪♪♪♪ (Beacon Records, 1994)

worth searching for: Atwater has published one book of poetry, Be Careful, Don't Walk Barefoot on My Kitchen Floor (1995).

influences:
◀◀ Jean Ritchie, Mary Black, Andy Stewart, Andy Irvine, Cari Norris, Ani DiFranco, Loreena McKennitt, Dougie MacLean
▶▶ Cindy Mangsen, Anne Hills & Priscilla Herdman

Stephen Ide

Lynn August

Born August 7, 1948, in Lafayette, LA.

Lynn August grew up in a Creole family in Lafayette. Blind from birth, he gravitated toward music, working the crawfish circuit as a drummer, including work in Buckwheat Zydeco's R&B band prior to Buckwheat's conversion to zydeco. He came to zydeco himself only in 1988 when he began to play the piano accordion with encouragement from his wife and Marc Savoy. He clearly took to the instrument and has become an excellent piano accordionist. His pride in Creole culture is shown by his inclusion of snippets of Creole dialogue and jurès, ancient call-and-response singing only accompanied by percussion, on his CDs. His musical choices are as eclectic a mix as his musical experiences, moving from Esquirita (with whom he played drums) to a very traditional jurè in a couple of pumps of a piano accordion.

what to buy: August may turn off the zydeco purist, but for the open-minded his diversity is just pure fun. Lynn August: Creole Cruiser ♪♪♪♪½ (Black Top Records, 1992, prod. Lynn August, Hammond Scott) was recorded in New Orleans and includes bassist George Porter of the Meters in the band. You can hear August howl through a pure Clifton Chenier workout like "Bernedette," but it is when he moves from the totally traditional "Jurè #1" all the way to the other end with "Undivided Love" that you realize what the man can do. Maybe too much range for most to cope with.

what to buy next: Sauce Piquante ♪♪♪♪ (Black Top Records, 1993, prod. Hammond Scott) offers more of August and the Black Top sound. This record includes Porter and New Orleans legendary guitarist Snooks Eaglin. This is the sequel to Creole Cruiser and it's almost as good. August continues his exploration of the Afro-Caribbean roots of Creole music through the jurè and his Little Richard roots with "Slippin' and Slidin'."

the rest:
Zydeco Groove ♪♪♪½ (Maison de Soul, 1976)

influences:
◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Clifton Chenier, Buckwheat Zydeco
▶▶ Nathan Williams

Jared Snyder

Mike Auldridge

See: Seldom Scene

Austin Lounge Lizards

Formed 1980, in Austin, TX.

Hank Card, vocals, guitar; Conrad Diesler, vocals, guitar; Tom Pittman, vocals, banjo, pedal steel; Michael Stevens, bass, vocals (1980–84); Tim Wilson, mandolin, fiddle, vocals (1980–84); Kirk Williams, bass, vocals (1984–95); Paul Sweeney, mandolin, vocals (1984–93); Richard Bowden, fiddle, mandolin, vocals (1993–present); Boo Resnick, bass, vocals (1995–present).

It's telling that in the Austin Chronicle's annual readers poll, the award the Austin Lounge Lizards have walked away with more

Chet Atkins (© Jack Vartoogian)

30 judy austin

the 1930s

An eventful decade in the development of folk music, the '30s saw the emergence of giants of the field as diverse as Lead Belly, Bessie Smith, Woody Guthrie, Bill Monroe, and Josh White. Monroe, first with his brother Charlie and later with the Bluegrass Boys, arguably founded bluegrass, while the close sibling harmonies of the Delmore Brothers captured the style, if not the instrumentation, of the genre. This was also the era of the Singing Cowboys, with performers like Gene Autry, the Sons of the Pioneers, and Roy Rogers becoming stars on record as well as on the matinee screen. Their cowgirl counterparts included Patsy Montana and Girls of the Golden West. The thirties were the era of the first recording trips by John and Alan Lomax, as well as the decade when Moses Asch started up his first traditional music label, Asch Records. In Texas, musicians like Bob Wills and the Light Crust Doughboys blended country music and jazz, creating a new form of music, western swing, in the process. Some of the first folk festivals were established both in the South and on the East Coast, and performers like Big Bill Broonzy and Lead Belly successfully crossed racial lines.

Michael Parrish

than once is "Best None of the Above Band," for this ensemble does indeed resist categorization. Offering the instrumentation and harmonies of a progressive bluegrass outfit, the group quotes liberally from rock 'n' roll songs (a mandolin-driven cover of Pink Floyd's "Brain Damage" is a notable example), and comes with a wry sense of humor to boot. It may be a stretch, but imagine the cast of Hee Haw if it was mildly dosed with LSD and had an Ivy League education (founders Card and Diesler met while both were history majors at Princeton). Detractors could probably tag the group a novelty, but the Lizards offer ample chops to go along with the yuks. Because the Lizards hail from the American music capital of Austin, their records are laced with guest appearances by such notables as Junior Brown, Ray Benson, Katy Moffatt, Marcia Ball, Charlie Sexton, and Jerry Jeff Walker.

what to buy: The Highway Cafe of the Damned ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1988/Watermelon, 1993, prod. Conrad Deisler) offers the Lizards' most potent brew of bluegrass and hilarity. The titles—"Industrial Strength Tranquilizer," "When Drunks Go Bad," and "The Chester Nimitz Oriental Garden Waltz"—give some indication of the level of hijinks going on here. Meanwhile, "The Ballad of Ronald Reagan" indulges the group's political streak and "Cornhusker Refugee" stands as perhaps the first (and only) gay-themed country song.

what to buy next: Small Minds ♪♪♪½ (Watermelon, 1995, prod. Conrad Diesler) fires satirical salvos at a number of targets: know-it-alls ("Old Blevins," "Gingrich the Newt") and know-nothings (Mark Graham's "Life Is Hard, but Life Is Hardest When You're Dumb") take it in the neck all the same. And the New York downtown hipster scene gets a long-distance wake-up call with a version of Terry Allen's "Truckload of Art." Funny stuff. The six-song EP Live Bait ♪♪♪½ (Watermelon, 1996, prod. Conrad Diesler) contains a quick tour of Lizard history, from the witty 1981 tune "The Car Hank Died In" to the relatively recent political tract "Teenage Immigrant Welfare Mother on Drugs."

the rest:

Creatures from the Black Saloon ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1984/Watermelon, 1993)
Lizard Vision ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)
Paint Me on Velvet ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1993) Employee of the Month N/A (Sugar Hill, 1998)

influences:

◀◀ Homer and Jethro, John Hartford, Frank Zappa
◀◀ Junior Brown

Daniel Durchholz

Judy Austin

Born July 31, in Athens, GA.

In 1987, Judy Austin began performing with Beth Heidelberg, as a duo called Harp and Soul, in the Atlanta area. In 1993, Austin launched her solo act and released her first solo recording. Austin's rich, confident voice captivates her audiences as she sings everything from contemporary songs with a country flair to traditional, well-loved hymns. Austin adds tasteful autoharp accompaniment to her singing, interlaced with nice melodic instrumental breaks. She favors a single-key diatonic autoharp, which provides superb harmony to support her outstanding vocals.

what's available: Country Radio ♪♪♪♪ (Rainy Day Records, 1997, prod. Judy Austin) is Austin's solo recording debut. As the title implies, the selections are country oriented and Austin offers them in a variety of settings. Of the 14 cuts offered, eight are written by Joyce Brookshire, a talented songwriter from Atlanta. Topics vary from "Love Crisis," about a love relationship in trouble, to the comical "Fishing Fever," which will put a smile on any fisherman's face. Supporting instrumental and vocals are provided by a variety of musicians, including Hal Jeans (mandolin, mandola), Jayne Olderman (bass, piano), and Chip Epsten (fiddle). Two traditional hymns, "Precious Memories" and "Sweet Hour of Prayer," are exceptionally well done, and demonstrate the strength and power of Austin's lovely voice. Country Radio is available from the artist at 36 String Productions, P.O. Box 49323, Atlanta, GA 30359.

worth searching for: Pickles and Wine ♪♪♪ (Harp & Soul, 1990, prod. Judy Austin, Beth Heidelberg) is available only on cassette.

influences:

◀◀ Aretha Franklin, Sarah Vaughan, Ella Fitzgerald, Janis Ian, the Carter Family

▶▶ June Maugery, Laurie Sky

Heidi Cerrigione

Gene Autry

Born Orvon Gene Autry, September 29, 1907, in Tioga Springs, TX.

In his younger days in Sepulpa, Oklahoma, Gene Autry passed the night working as a railroad telegraph operator. He played his guitar to break the monotony and made up the occasional tune. One customer heard his voice, told him to quit the dead-end job and try the exciting, relatively new realm of radio. The customer was Will Rogers. Autry heeded his advice, headed to New York, and never looked back. Like Roy Rogers and Tex Ritter, Autry is also widely regarded for his endearing Western films, in which his heroic singing-cowboy characters saved more days than daylight savings time (at least a hundred). Any American who was a youngster during the days of the 10-cent, double-feature matinee remembers the silver-screen Autry. Kids today, however, are usually more familiar with the Christmas carols Autry introduced: "Frosty the Snow Man," "Rudolph, the Red-Nosed Reindeer," and the self-penned "Here Comes Santa Claus." Autry's mainstream hits included "Back in the Saddle Again," "Deep in the Heart of Texas," and "Don't Fence Me In"; a song written with Fred Rose during World War II, "At Mail Call Today," sold more than a million copies. An astute businessman as well, Autry also co-founded an American League professional baseball team, the Los Angeles Angels, now located in Anaheim.

what to buy: The Essential Gene Autry (1933–1946) ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1992, prod. various) collects 18 songs from Autry's years with the Oriole, Vocalion, Okeh, and Columbia labels. It includes not only such signature Western songs as 1939's "Back in the Saddle Again," but also examples of the pop-oriented fare that Autry favored ("Blueberry Hill," "Maria Elena").

what to buy next: The three-disc compilation Sing, Cowboy, Sing: The Gene Autry Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1997, prod. various) features much of the music from Essential but extends the scope to his later Columbia years, when Autry built a new career singing the original versions of holiday tunes like "Here Comes Santa Claus" and "Rudolph, the Red-Nosed Reindeer." This collection also includes previously unreleased transcriptions from The Melody Ranch Radio Show.

the rest:

Columbia Historic Edition ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1982)
Country Music Hall of Fame Album ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1987)
A Gene Autry Christmas ♪♪♪½ (Columbia/Legacy, 1994)
His Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Legacy, 1994)
Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)
Back in the Saddle Again: 25 Cowboy Classics ♪♪♪♪ (ASV, 1996)
Back in the Saddle Again ♪♪♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1996)
Gene Autry ♪♪½ (Member's Edition, 1997)
Christmas Classics ♪♪♪ (Chicago Music Co., 1997)
Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer ♪♪♪ (Madacy, 1997)

worth searching for: In his early recording days, Autry seems to have been influenced almost equally by Jimmie Rodgers and Robert Johnson. Blues Singer 1929–1931: Booger Rooger Saturday Night ♪♪♪ (Legacy, 1996, prod. Lawrence Cohn) shows a side of the singer that is otherwise largely hidden. Silver-screen buffs should note that Gene Autry with the Legendary Singing Groups of the West ♪♪♪ (Varese Sarabande, 1997, compilation prod. Cary Mansfield, Karla Buhlman) and The Singing Cowboy, Chapter One ♪♪♪ (Varese Sarabande, 1997, compilation prod. Cary Mansfield, Karla Buhlman) both contain the versions of Autry's tunes that actually were used in his films. Gene Autry with the Legendary Singing Groups of the West showcases him with the Sons of the Pioneers, the Cass County Boys, and other Western vocal groups.

influences:

◀◀ Sons of the Pioneers, Jimmie Rodgers

▶▶ Rex Allen, Riders in the Sky

Craig Shelburne and Brian Mansfield

3/2 hoyt axton

Hoyt Axton

Born May 25, 1938, in Duncan, OK.

From a songwriting family (his mother, Mae Axton, co-wrote "Heartbreak Hotel"), the bearish, gruffy-voiced Axton has been a prolific songwriter and actor (Heart Like a Wheel, Gremlins) and sometime performer/recording artist. His songs have been covered by the Kingston Trio, Waylon Jennings, Glen Campbell, Tanya Tucker, John Denver, and Commander Cody, although his biggest hits came from Three Dog Night ("Joy to the World," "Never Been to Spain") and Steppenwolf ("Snowblind Friend," "The Pusher"). Axton's albums were more modest, but he had a minor country hit with 1974's "When the Morning Comes."

worth searching for: At present there are no American albums by Axton in print. An import, Snowblind Friend ♪♪♪ (Demon, 1995), recorded in 1977, includes guests Jeff Baxter, Jim Messina, and Byron Berline and includes "Never Been to Spain" and the title track. One stateside disc, American Originals ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1992, prod. Todd Everett), is hard-to-find but includes down-home sessions with the cream of L.A. folk/country musicians and offers the best of Axton's early 1970s Capitol work. They're long out of print, but two of his A&M albums, Life Machine ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1974), which includes "When the Morning Comes," and Road Songs ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1977), a best-of, include some of his best writing and typically professional musicianship.

influences:

◀◀ Elvis Presley, Waylon Jennings

▶▶ Three Dog Night, Bobby Bare

Leland Rucker

B

Bad Livers

Formed 1990, in Austin, TX.

Danny Barnes, banjo, guitar, mandolin, vocals; Ralph White, fiddle, accordion; Mark Rubin, bass, tuba, vocals; Bob Grant, mandolin, guitar (1997–present).

Call it thrash-grass or bluegrass-punk, call it pickin'-and-grimacin', but don't call the Bad Livers late to dinner. This genre-busting trio plays a postmodern form of bluegrass that is informed as much by the Butthole Surfers and Motörhead as it is by Bill Monroe and Ralph Stanley. Delusions of Banjer, after all, was produced by Butthole Surfer Paul Leary, and the group has been known to reel off a high-stepping version of rock icon Iggy Pop's "Lust for Life" that inspires fits of furious tater-diggin'. It would be easy to dismiss the group as a novelty—Rubin's occasional tuba playing sticks out like a sore thumb—but they've got the chops to back up their non-traditional take on a traditional music.

what to buy: Horses in the Mines ♪♪♪♪ (Quarterstick, 1994, prod. Danny Barnes) contains plenty of attitude, but, for the most part, de-emphasizes the novelty elements that crop up on Delusions of Banjer. Anyone doubting the Livers' ability to play pure bluegrass should check out their lightning-fast take on the old-time breakdown "Blue Ridge Express." White's "Chainsaw Therapy" is a fine fiddle tune, and the group's punk influences get a nod on "Puke Grub."

what to buy next: Delusions of Banjer ♪♪♪½ (Quarterstick, 1992) is a little schticky, but it's a fine effort, nonetheless. Hard-bitten banjo tunes such as "Git Them Pretty Girls," "I Know You're Married," and "Crow Black Chicken" lead the way, but they're undercut by the bathroom humor of "Shit Creek" and "The Adventures of Pee Pee the Sailor," which are less about rock 'n' roll attitude than the band would wish.

the rest:

Dust on the Bible ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1991/Quarterstick, 1994)
Hogs on the Highway ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1997)
(With others) Music from the Motion Picture The Newton Boys ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1998)

worth searching for: Seek out The Golden Years ♪♪♪♪ (Southern Studios, 1992, prod. Bad Livers), an import-only gold-vinyl EP that collects early radio transcriptions of covers and a medley of fiddle tunes.

influences:

◀◀ Bill Monroe, Ralph Stanley, Killbilly, Motörhead

▶▶ Southern Culture on the Skids

Daniel Durchholz

Joan Baez

Born January 9, 1941, in Staten Island, NY.

The acknowledged diva of the folk-music world, Joan Baez has recorded albums in five different decades and remains an influence to a whole new generation of female song interpreters today. Baez peaked commercially some 35 years ago with an array of studio and live albums that celebrated the protest movement and helped give credentials to the writings of Bob Dylan and Phil Ochs. Though that movement faded, Baez nonetheless remained a "committed" artist, and at the same time delved into a variety of new music forms including Celtic, Latin, and country. During the early 1970s, Baez brought Robbie Robertson's "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down" within a whisker of the top of the charts, and a few years later went gold again with her collection Diamonds and Rust before reuniting with Dylan in the Rolling Thunder Review. Recently, Baez has toured and recorded with such folk and country voices as Mary Chapin Carpenter, Tish Hinojosa, and Dar Williams. Williams, in addition to country songsmith Sharon Rice, offers songwriting assistance on Baez's most recent effort, Gone from Danger.

joan baez

Joan Baez (© Jack Vartoogian)

what to buy: Baez's most influential work comes from her early 1960s period, a good chunk of which is included on The First Ten Years ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1970/1987, prod. Maynard Solomon), a sampler of Baez's later-1960s folk, Dylan, and country soundings. To catch a glimpse of the singer as she moved into the "modern" folk era, check the enduring work Joan Baez 5 ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1964, prod. Maynard Solomon), in which Baez helped raise the profile of Dylan, Phil Ochs, and other important songwriters of the day.

what to buy next: More than 20 years since its release, Diamonds and Rust ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1975, prod. David Kershenbaum) remains a remarkable "comeback" album in which Baez demonstrated to the world that she wasn't about to be retired as an old-fogie folkie. Besides the memorable title track (her own), she covers Jackson Browne, John Prine, and the Allman Brothers with real flair. Meanwhile, Baez's most recent effort, Gone from Danger ♪♪♪½ (Guardian, 1997, prod. Wally Wilson, Kenny Greenberg), finds Baez doing what she's often done so well in the past—unearthing excellent material from promising young songwriters, in this case Dar Williams and Richard Shindell.

the rest:
Joan Baez in Concert, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1962/1990)

aly bain

Joan Baez in Concert, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1963/1990)
Farewell Angelina ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1965)
Noel ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1966/1997)
Joan ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1967)
Any Day Now ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1968)
Baptism ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1968)
One Day at a Time ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1969)
David's Album ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1969)
Carry It On ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1972)
Ballad Book ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1972)
Blessed Are . . . ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1972)
Hits/Greatest and Others ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1973)
Lovesong Album ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1975)
From Every Stage ♪♪½ (A&M, 1976)
Best Of ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1977)
Blowin' Away ♪♪♪ (Epic Legacy, 1977/1990)
Honest Lullaby ♪♪♪ (Vanguard 1979/1990)
The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1979)
The Joan Baez Country Music Album ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1979)
Very Early Joan ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1983)
The Contemporary Ballad Book ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1987)
Ballad Book, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1990)
Play Me Backwards ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1992)
Rare Live and Classic ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1993)
Joan Baez Ballad Book ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1994)
Ring Them Bells ♪♪♪ (Guardian, 1995)
Live at Newport ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1996)
Recently ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1996)

influences:

Mother Maybelle Carter, Bob Dylan

Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Mary Chapin Carpenter

David Simons

Aly Bain

See: The Boys of the Lough

Duck Baker /Duck Baker and Molly Andrews

Born Richard Royall Baker IV, 1949, in Washington, DC.

Duck Baker first hit the scene as one of Kicking Mule Records' stable of fingerstyle steel-string guitarists, recording four LPs for that label from 1977 through 1980. An inauspicious beginning, perhaps, considering that most of that original crew—Ton van Bergeyk, Leo Wijnkamp Jr., Dave Evans, and some others—largely have faded from the racks. But Baker has remained more than visible, thanks in part to a second life for some of his Kicking Mule sides on Stefan Grossman's "Guitar Artistry" series on the Shanachie label, his current albums with Peter Finger's Acoustic Music label, and his many instructional books and videos—not to mention his seemingly ubiquitous appearances on recordings by other artists of the international fingerpicking guitar Mafia: Grossman, Finger, John Renbourn, etc. But perhaps a better reason for Baker's continued presence is his zealous devotion to traditional and indigenous musical forms of all kinds. The world of fingerstyle guitar tends to be something of a parallel universe to the musical mainstream, paying attention mostly to itself and visiting other musical styles and traditions mainly for plundering repertoire (the world of dulcimer players is another such arena). On the other hand, the astonishing depth of Baker's knowledge of (and obvious passion for) myriad musical styles, particularly straight-ahead jazz, blues, old-time country, and Irish, places him in a class by himself. It's not just that he can write an astute review for a magazine or clever liner notes (both of which he has done many times), but Baker seems to have taken to heart Segovia's dictum to his students: "You must love music more than you love the guitar." His knowledge of and commitment to many kinds of music gives a depth and resonance to his playing that transcends that of the garden-variety guitar aficionado.

what to buy: You might as well start with Spinning Coin ♪♪♪½ (Avant, 1997, prod. John Zorn, Kazunori Sugiyama), his latest effort and one about which he's professed tremendous enthusiasm. Here he transcribes for the guitar the jazz piano music of Herbie Nichols, a currently neglected master whose music represents a true project of the heart for Baker. This is high-octane stuff, and few guitarists have the acumen even to think about such a project—it's the fruit of two decades of exploring and arranging jazz onto his guitar fingerboard.

what to buy next: And don't miss the often-overlooked American Traditional ♪♪♪♪ (Dayjob, 1994, prod. Duck Baker, Molly Andrews), a treasure of an album with singer and autoharp player Molly Andrews. Again the program seems highly variegated; it's mostly old-time mountain stuff but liberally sprinkled with blues, show tunes, Irish, and other things in a way that all seems uncannily organic and relaxed—eclecticism without the self-consciousness. Baker's guitar work is understated and sweet, yet such a perfect complement to Andrews's honeyed vocals; it's some of the best playing he's ever put on record.

what to avoid: The Art of Fingerstyle Jazz Guitar ♪ (Shanachie, 1980, prod. Stefan Grossman) is the only one of Baker's Kicking Mule LPs still in print on CD. Label chief Stefan Grossman showed a penchant for packaging and releasing records with didactic-sounding titles, a regrettable strait-jacket for an instinctively eclectic player like Baker. There are certainly some nice moments here; but there's an adequate array of stronger stuff to choose from in Baker's discography. The fact is, he just plays better now than he did 17 years ago.

the rest:

(With John Renbourn) A Thousand Words ♪♪♪ (Acoustic Music, 1994)
Clear Blue Sky ♪♪♪ (Acoustic Music, 1995)
(With Molly Andrews) The Moving Business ♪♪♪♪ (Dayjob, 1996)
(With Stefan Grossman) Northern Skies, Southern Blues ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997)

influences:

Eric Schoenberg, Steve Mann, Davey Graham

Martin Simpson, Pat Donohue, Stefan Grossman, Pat Kirtley

Chris Rietz

Etta Baker

Born 1913, in Caldwell County, NC.

In her quietly unassuming way, Etta Baker has lived a remarkable life. She is among the greatest practitioners of acoustic Piedmont finger picking (an open-tuned guitar style that owes a great deal to bluegrass-style banjo) but toils in obscurity because she spent the better part of her musical career never playing outside of family gatherings. Born to a musical lineage, Baker began playing guitar at an early age and learned the traditional folk-blues dance tunes, rags, and ballads from her father. She remains active on the folk and blues festival circuit.

what's available: Baker first appeared on vinyl with her father and other relatives on the 1956 field recording Instrumental Music of the Southern Appalachians ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1956/Rykodisc, 1997, prod. Diane Hamilton, Liam Clancy, Paul Clayton), resulting in the closest thing to being at a Baker family house party. It would be 35 years before Baker recorded again, during which time she worked in the textile mills of western North Carolina and raised nine children before finally turning pro as a musician in her sixties. One-Dime Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Wayne Martin, Lesley Williams) arrived seemingly out of nowhere—it's a stunning 20-song collection of some of the finest folk-blues guitar you'll hear anywhere, especially the title track (popularized by Woody Guthrie as "New York Town").

worth searching for: The Rykodisc reissue of Instrumental Music of the Southern Appalachians has a different cover than the original. For that reason, the original vinyl version is worth finding—it has a borderline offensive hillbilly caricature on it that is simply not to be believed (and which has absolutely nothing to do with the music) and stands as a landmark in political incorrectness.

influences:

Elizabeth Cotten, Blind Boy Fuller

Roy Book Binder, Andy Cohen

David Menconi

Kenny Baker /Kenny Baker and Josh Graves

Born June 26, 1926, in Jenkins, KY.

The man Bill Monroe called "the greatest bluegrass fiddler in the world" served three tours of duty with Monroe's Blue Grass Boys between 1957 and 1984 after starting with Don Gibson in 1953. Baker worked extensively with dobroist John Graves (formerly with Flatt & Scruggs) during the 1990s.

what to buy: Master Fiddler ♪♪♪♪♪ (County, 1993, prod. Gary B. Reid) showcases Baker's work between 1968 and 1983 and is one of the very best bluegrass fiddle albums. The 20 cuts include traditional numbers, songs Baker learned as a child, and six Baker originals, including "Grassy Fiddle Blues."

what to buy next: The Puritan ♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1972, prod. Dave Samuelson), Baker's earliest collaboration with Josh Graves, finds the noted fiddler playing guitar. The Puritan collects 24 songs the pair recorded in 1972 and 1973.

the rest:

(With Josh Graves) The Puritan Sessions ♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1972/1989)

worth searching for: Baker and another former Blue Grass boy, fiddler Bobby Hicks, join together on Darkness on the Delta (County, 1980) for an all-instrumental album of 11 originals, traditional numbers, and bluegrass standards, including four from their original boss, Bill Monroe.

influences:

Bill Monroe, Don Gibson

Bobby Hicks, Blaine Sprouse

Douglas Fulmer

Butch Baldassari

See: Lonesome Standard Time

The Balfa Brothers /Freres Balfa

Formed 1946, in Basile, LA. Disbanded 1978, after the death of Will and Rodney Balfa in an automobile accident.

Will Balfa, fiddle, vocals; Rodney Balfa, guitar, vocals; Dewey Balfa, fiddle, guitar, harmonica, vocals; Harry Balfa, guitar; Burkeman Balfa, percussion; Hadley Fontenot, accordion; Marc Savoy, accordion, fiddle; Nathan Abshire, accordion.

The Balfa Brothers' sound was based around the lonesome twin fiddles of Will and Dewey Balfa and the rock solid guitar of Rodney Balfa. The two fiddles were not the sweet sound of the western swing, but a hearkening back to the raw sound of the Cajun house dance prior to the introduction of the accordion. At those dances, one fiddle played lead while the other had to provide the rhythm for dancing on the low strings. Taking that as their starting point, the Balfas added a sophistication from their exposure to swing and country music that created a new/old sound. Though the fiddle dominated, they worked with the finest of Cajun accordionists, including Hadley Fontenot, Nathan Abshire, and Marc Savoy. Dewey's singing was always passionate, but Rodney's tenor seems to hit the hardest. Their song choices were always superb, chosen from deep within the Cajun tradition, often from their own family. The thoughtful arrangements respected the occasional extra bar or beat that is the hallmark of music passed down from generation to generation.

The Balfa Brothers began performing in 1946 with just the two fiddles of Will and Dewey Balfa and a friend on guitar. Dewey recorded with Elsie Deshotel in the early 1950s for the Koury label and the band continued to play locally. It was Dewey's experiences as a last minute substitute, playing guitar accompaniment with Gladius Thibodeaux and Louis Lejeune, at the 1964 Newport Folk Festival that changed the career of the Balfa Brothers. Their wildly well-received performance led to Dewey's triumphant return three years later with a band that included brothers Rodney and Will, daughter Nelda, and Hadley Fontenot. Dewey also had a long performing and recording career with the great accordionist Nathan Abshire, accompanying him on records from the 1950s onward. Dewey came away from the 1964 Newport Folk Festival with a sense of the value of traditional Cajun music and the uniqueness of the rich family traditions of the Balfas. The group participated in folk festivals throughout the U.S., Canada, and France, while continuing to live fairly nondescript lives in Louisiana. All that came to an end in 1978 when Will and Rodney were killed in a car accident outside of Bunkie, Louisiana. Dewey continued to perform, with the help of friends like Tracy Schwarz and Robert Jardell and a new generation of musicians that included his own daughter Christine.

what to buy: The Balfa Brothers Play Traditional Cajun Music, Vols. 1 & 2 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1987, prod. Floyd Soileau) is the Rubber Soul of Cajun music. The Balfas put away the drums and bass and play in an all acoustic setting, long before the term "unplugged" came into vogue. What you get is superbly soulful fiddling and singing, song after song. Many of these songs are standards that have been covered by groups like the Savoy-Doucet Band, Steve Reilly, and Balfa Toujours.

what to buy next: On J'ai Vu le Loup, le Renard et la Belette ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Gerard Dole), producer Dole has the Balfas play a mix of traditional waltzes and two-steps along with some "house" music like a Cajun version of "Casey Jones" and an old contra dance, "La Vieille Danse a Balfa." The charming "J'ai Vu le Loup, le Renard et la Belette" shows the place where Cajun and French folk music meet.

the rest:
New York Concerts ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1980)

worth searching for: Louisiana Cajun French Music from the Southwest Prairies: Vol. 1, 1964–1967 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1976, prod. Ralph Rinzler) contains the earliest recordings of the Balfa Brothers.

influences:
◀◀ Lawrence Walker, Dennis McGee, Leo Soileau

▶▶ Steve Riley, Balfa Toujours, Marc & Ann Savoy, Tracy Schwarz, Michael Doucet

see also: Nathan Abshire

Jared Snyder and Randy Pitts

Balfa Toujours

Formed 1992, in Basile, LA.

Christine Balfa, guitar, triangle, vocals; Dirk Powell, fiddle, accordion, vocals; Kevin Wimmer, fiddle, vocals; Mike Chapman, drums. Regular guests include: Nelda Balfa, vocals and triangle; Tony Balfa, drums and bass; Peter Schwarz, fiddle, bass, vocals.

Christine Balfa is the guitarist, singer, songwriter, and heart of Balfa Toujours (Balfa Forever). She carries on the tradition of her father, Dewey Balfa, and her uncles Will and Rodney. Christine and her older sister Nelda both write and sing. The lonesome double fiddle sound is recreated by fiddler Kevin Wimmer, who was a protégé of Dewey, and by Christine's husband, Dirk Powell. Powell is also a brilliant accordionist. Although Christine is the dominant voice, both Dirk and Kevin sing and, on record, the band is joined by Nelda.

what to buy: A Vieille Terre Haute ♪♪♪♪½ (Swallow, 1995, prod. Balfa Toujours) is the second effort of Balfa Toujours and really their finest work so far. The addition of Mike Chapman on drums revs up the traditional sound without detracting from it. The quality of the musicianship is uniform and Christine Balfa has matured into a strong passionate singer. Her songwriting in collaboration with Dirk Powell has matured also. "Les Fleurs du Printemps" stacks up with just about any traditional Cajun song around for the words, in the way that the images fold back into one another. The last four songs qualify as almost a mini-tribute to the Balfa Brothers, but show how Balfa Toujours is developing their own sound, building gracefully on that tradition.

what to buy next: Deux Voyages ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Tim O'Brien) suffers from the warm sheen in which Tim O'Brien wraps the group. It takes away some of the buzz and wheeze that's an integral part of the appeal of Cajun music. Listening to Christine do that upward glide on Canray Fontenot's "La Valse à Canray" or her passionate reading of the Balfa standard "La Valse à Grand Père" will convince anyone of her skills as a singer. That she and husband Dirk Powell can write pieces like "Le Canard à Bois Sec" that musically and lyrically evoke the essence of old-time Creole music demonstrates their continuing development as songwriters.

the rest:
Pop, Tu Me Parles Toujours ♪♪♪½ (Swallow, 1993)

worth searching for: The American Fogies, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Ray Alden) is an anthology of regional American groups and includes a track of Balfa Toujours kicking it through "Duson Two Step."

influences:

- Dennis McGee, Marc and Ann Savoy, Lawrence Walker, the Balfa Brothers, Dewey Balfa, Tracy Schwarz, Steve Riley

- Tasso, Magnolia Sisters, Kristi Guillory

see also: The Balfa Brothers, Horace Trahan, Steve Riley, Tracy Schwarz

Jared Snyder

E.C. Ball and Orna Ball

Formed 1930s in Rugby, VA.

E.C. Ball, vocals, banjo, and guitar; Orna Ball, vocals, accordion, and pump organ.

Husband and wife, Estil "E.C." and Orna Ball are one of the great singing duos of old-time and traditional music. Like most old-time musicians of their era, the Balls spent most of their lives playing in venues close to home, instead of on a national circuit. Although they owned a general store and service station on the North Carolina–Virginia border, they always found time to attend the fiddlers conventions and dances in the area. E.C. began to play fingerstyle guitar at age 12. E.C.'s first band was the Rugby Gully Jumpers, which was recorded by John Lomax for the Library of Congress. E.C. and Orna are best known today, though, for the fabulous traditional and gospel songs that they sang together.

what to buy: E.C. Ball with Orna Ball ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Bruce Kaplan, R.N. Drevo, Bob Marsh) is a reissue of their first Rounder LP of mostly gospel material. Even if you are not a religious person this is the recording to get. E.C. and Orna are at their prime when they are singing a religious song. Their strong convictions, E.C.'s picking, and the mixture of Orna's nasally high-pitched vocals with E.C.'s low, smooth, resonating voice provide for some intensely beautiful songs. The CD reissue adds seven cuts from their 1972 radio program on WKSK in West Jefferson, North Carolina.

what to buy next: E.C. and Orna Ball can also be heard on High Atmosphere ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. John Cohen), a compilation recorded and released by John Cohen of the New Lost City Ramblers. Originally released in 1974 this expanded reissue includes one cut with the Balls and three more with E.C. solo.

worth searching for: Fathers Have a Home Sweet Home ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1976, prod. The Rounder Collective) and E.C. Ball with the Friendly Gospel Singers ♪♪♪♪ (County, 1967, prod. Charlie Faurot) are out-of-print LPs, but either would definitely be worth buying if you happen to find them at a garage sale.

influences:

- The Carter Family, Riley Puckett, Vernon Dalhart, Jimmie Rodgers, Merle Travis

- Hazel Dickens, Alice Gerrard, Tracy Schwarz, Ginny Hawker

Steve Gardner

3/8 patrick ball

Patrick Ball

Born March 27, 1950, in San Francisco, CA.

A dynamic performer, Patrick Ball combines his loves of Irish music and history to bring passionate shows to his audiences. His unique touch on the wire-strung harp creates a bell-like tone of great beauty, neither as percussive nor as strident as many of his contemporaries in wire-strung harping. This soft touch allows his music to sing more intimately and more freely, creating at once a magical and expressive sound. Add to this his remarkable talent of arranging for the instrument, and true genius is born. His arrangements take traditional melodies and allow them to shine their brightest through the use of simple, yet full, accompaniment, which never interferes with the melodies in any way. The best way to understand how Ball developed this skill is to explore how he came to play harp in the first place. Growing up, it was always his intention to follow in his father's footsteps and become a lawyer. Without questioning this plan, he dutifully went to college to pursue a law career, until his father's untimely death. Soon, the thought of becoming a lawyer was forgotten, and he was pursuing a graduate degree in history. This led to a trip to Ireland, where he quickly fell in love with the Irish oral tradition. His master's degree did not assist in his search for a job in the field, however, so he soon found himself working odd jobs. Another trip to Ireland brought him to the realization that he would like to combine his love of words, history, and music into one career. Before long, he had taught himself to play harp, and began weaving his magic spell with stories and songs for audiences nationwide. His talents most recently culminated in the completion of a one-man play, O'Carolan's Farewell to Music, which Ball wrote in collaboration with Peter Glazer. Ball plays the title role with passion and insight.

what to buy: Fiona ♪♪♪♪½ (Celestial Harmonies, 1993, prod. Patrick Ball) features a delightful collection of beautifully arranged Celtic tunes. Ball displays his gift for arranging through the highly-evocative and emotional use of his harp, occasionally joined by Tim Britton on uilleann pipes and tin whistles and Kevin Carr on fiddle. The arrangements have a simplicity and clarity to them that allow the melodies to shine to their fullest, without sounding empty or hollow. Highlights of the album include a bewitching "She Moved through the Fair," and the heart-felt Scottish "Farewell to the Land of Mist." Christmas Rose ♪♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1990, prod. Patrick Ball) won an Indie award for Best Seasonal Recording of 1991 and contains sprightly arrangements of upbeat carols, such as "Bring a Torch, Jeanette Isabella," and haunting renditions of more somber carols, including a little-known Appalachian carol, "Jesus, Jesus, Rest Your Head." This is an unusual holiday recording not to be missed.

what to buy next: On The Music of Turlough O'Carolan ♪♪♪♪ (Fortuna, 1983, prod. Dan Drasin), Ball manages to make solo harp remain alive and vibrant throughout an entire album without any additional instruments to add variety to the music: a rare talent indeed. It is a wonderful collection, including 15 outstanding melodies written by the famous blind harper, O'Carolan. Ball's love of O'Carolan's music radiates through his playing. Containing more O'Carolan, as well as a number of other Irish tunes, Secret Isles ♪♪♪♪ (Fortuna, 1985, prod. Dan Drasin) also displays Ball's remarkable talents with elegance and vivacity. Particularly lovely on this album is a Manx set, with "Song of the Water Kelpie" and "The Sheep under the Snow" paired together beautifully.

what to avoid: Those who desire strictly music recordings will not enjoy the story albums, despite their excellence. Ball is a master storyteller, and he shows his talent well on his album Storyteller: Gwilan's Harp and Other Celtic Tales ♪♪♪½ (Celestial Harmonies, 1995, prod. Patrick Ball). This is not an album for those searching for music, as the stories take center stage, backed by the joyous sounds of Ball's harp. The Irish tales in this collection are hauntingly told. The album won an Indie for Best Spoken Word Recording in 1995. Finnegans Wake ♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1997, prod. Patrick Ball) is a more ambitious effort; here Ball reads passages from the well-known and highly enigmatic work of James Joyce. These carefully chosen excerpts are read with an ear for the musicality of the words themselves, and brought further alive through interwoven harp music. There is not very much music on this one at all, however.

the rest:

O'Carolan's Dream ♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1989)
From a Distant Time ♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1983)

influences:

◀◀ Turlough O'Carolan, Derek Bell, Alan Stivell

▶▶ Carol Thompson, Wendy Stewart

Jo Hughey Morrison

Baltimore Consort

Formed 1980, at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, MD.

The core of this group consists of six members: Mary Anne Ballard, viols, fiddle, rebec; Mark Cudek, cittern, viols, guitars, crumhorns, recorder, lute, bandora; Custer LaRue, vocals; Larry Lipkis, viols, recorders, crumhorns, gemshorn; Ronn McFarlane, lutes; Chris Norman, flutes, pennywhistle, bagpipes, crumhorn, drum.

Baltimore Consort boasts a delightful array of early music instruments, joined with the pure, crystal tones of Custer LaRue's vocal talents. This combination has proven highly successful, creating a nationwide following for this unusual group. Virtuoso string lines and hauntingly lyrical flute lines by Chris Norman characterize their work. In keeping with the themes of their various recordings, and adding complexity and variety to their music, they have included many fine guest performers in their work, including Paul Bensel, recorder; Webb Wiggins, harpsichord, virginal; Edwin George, bagpipe, recorder; and Pat O'Brien, bandura. Originally formed to perform Elizabethan repertoire for "broken consort" (a specific set of instruments including viols, flute, lute, and cittern), the group quickly expanded their musical selections to include their interest in English and Scottish dances and airs. By 1983, Baltimore Consort had put together an entire program of Scottish origin, with a rich repertoire of English, French, and Italian music as well. They have toured across the U.S. and in Europe, holding residencies in such places as the Walters Art Gallery, Peabody Conservatory, and Strathmore Hall, and performing on radio with Performance Today. Their recordings have risen to the Top 10 on the Billboard magazine charts on several occasions.

what to buy: The group's best overall album is Tunes from the Attic ♪♪♪♪½ (Dorian, 1997, prod. Douglas Brown). This recording returns to their roots, exploring a variety of English and Scottish tunes and traditions, and captures some of their best, but previously unrecorded, repertoire while reworking a couple of their old favorites. The standouts on the album include the "Paven/Galliard" track, with its spiritually uplifting flute line, and "The Old Maid of the Mill Dust," a fun and frolicking tune featuring bagpipes, lute, and bass viol. This is a wonderful treat for the ears.

what to buy next: The rest of Baltimore Consort's recordings are centered on a variety of themes. On the Banks of Helicon: Early Music of Scotland ♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1990, prod. Douglas Brown) explores some early Scottish music and its derivatives. Worth noting are the sprightly "Scotch Cap" and the pleading tones of "Our Father God Celestial." Choosing among the vast works collected by John Playford in the seventeenth century, A Trip to Killburn: Playford Tunes and Their Ballads ♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1996, prod. Douglas Brown) delightfully reproduces some of the popular music played in London circles during that time, although the tunes' origins vary greatly.

editor's choice

5 uilleann pipe albums

Leo Rowsome, The King of the Pipers (Claddagh/Shanachie)

Seamus Ennis, The Return from Fingal (Radio Telefis Éireann)

Willie Clancy, The Pipering of Willie Clancy, Vols. 1 & 2 (Claddagh)

Various Artists, The Drones and the Chanter, Vols. 1 & 2 (Claddagh)

Various Artists, The Piper's Rock (Mulligan)

the rest:

Watkins Ale ♪♪♪½ (Dorian, 1991)

The Art of the Bawdy Song ♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1992)

La Rocque 'n' Roll: Popular Music of Renaissance France ♪♪♪½ (Dorian, 1993)

Bright Day Star: Music for the Yuletide Season ♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1994)

influences:

NY Pro Musica, Musica Reservata, Aaron Copland, Charles Ives, Igor Stravinsky, Béla Bartok

Hesperus, Ensemble Galilei

see also: Helicon, Chris Norman

Jo Hughey Morrison

The Band

Formed 1967, in Woodstock, NY.

Robbie Robertson, vocals, guitar (1967–1976); Levon Helm, vocals, drums (1967–present); Rick Danko, vocals, bass, guitar (1967–present); Richard Manuel, vocals, piano (1967–1986); Garth Hudson, keyboards, saxophone (1967–present); Jim Weider, guitar (1983–present); Randy Ciarlante, vocals, percussion (1983–present); Richard Bell, vocals, piano (1986–present).

By the time they became known as simply the Band, the four cocky, young Canadians with the drummer from Arkansas had played together for almost seven years. As part of Ronnie Hawkins's back-up group and later on their own as the Hawks, they had became the baddest of the bad-ass bands that

the band

Rick Danko of the Band (© Ken Settle)

roamed the lounge-lizard circuit from Ontario and Quebec in Canada through the Rust Belt and the American South during the early '60s. But they worked as hard as they played, and by the time Bob Dylan tapped them as his electric backing band for a world tour in the summer of 1965, the Hawks had become a very sophisticated quintet, with several unique secret weapons: three equally distinct lead singers, including Manuel's seductive soul pipes, Hudson's multi-instrumental mastery, and Robertson's pin-point guitar; increasingly incisive song lyrics; and the well-lubricated rhythm section of Helms and Danko. After working with Dylan on what became known as The Basement Tapes, they released Music from Big Pink in 1967, their first collection of distinctly American short stories told in a musical language that bridged the growing generation gap. (Is there anybody under 50 who doesn't know what it feels like to pull into Nazareth a' feelin' about half past dead?) The Band subsequently emerged as a live unit, and the high expectations were never met again. The group toured sporadically and sputtered and coughed through a series of less and less interesting albums; the best of the later work would be re-workings of the bedrock material. They ended it all in 1976 by throwing and filming and recording a huge farewell party dubbed The Last Waltz, which, as it turns out, hid well the serious acrimony that had developed among the members, especially between Helm and Robertson. It would be the last time the five of them would appear on stage together. Listening to any of their post-Band efforts, the sad irony is inescapable: Robertson has become a songwriter without musicians, and the others a band without a writer.

what to buy: Fortunately, all the Band's music is readily available. You still can't beat Music from Big Pink ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1968, prod. John Simon) and The Band ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1969, prod. John Simon), two of rock's most original, imaginative, enduring, and enigmatic albums and bookends for the group's short-lived collective muse. Moondog Matinee ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1973, prod. the Band) is a rousing return to their roadhouse days, a set of old favorites that perfectly evokes their youthful charisma by utilizing their mature sophistication. Rock of Ages ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1972, prod. the Band) is a superb live recording filtered through Allen Toussaint's soulful horn charts.

what to buy next: Stage Fright ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1970, prod. the Band), their third album, includes several classics, including "The Shape I'm In," "W.S. Wolcott Medicine Show," and the autobiographical title track. Across the Great Divide ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1995, prod. various), is a fine three-disc retrospective with more than a third devoted to rarities and early recordings.

what to avoid: Islands ♪ (Capitol, 1977, prod. the Band) is an uneven plate of leftovers that, as the title suggests, demonstrates the huge divisions that had isolated the group members.

the rest:
Cahoots ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1971)
Northern Lights—Southern Cross ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1975)
The Best of the Band ♪♪ (Capitol, 1976)
The Last Waltz ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1978)
To Kingdom Come ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1991)
Jericho ♪♪♪ (Pyramid/Rhino, 1993)
The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol Special Products, 1994)
The Band Live at Watkins Glen ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1995)
High on the Hog ♪♪ (Pyramid/Rhino, 1996)

worth searching for: The wrongly titled bootleg the Concert at Royal Albert Hall—it's the Manchester, England, concert performed by Dylan and the Hawks in 1965—captures them at their most musically adventurous at a time when hostile audiences were booing them.

solo outings:
Robbie Robertson:
Robbie Robertson ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1987)
Storyville ♪♪ (Geffen, 1991)
Music for the Native Americans ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1995)

Rick Danko:
Rick Danko ♪♪♪ (Arista, 1977)
Rick Danko, Eric Anderson/Jonas Fjeld ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1991)

Levon Helm:
Levon Helm and the RCO All-Stars ♪♪♪ (ABC, 1977)
American Son ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1980)
Levon Helm ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1982)

influences:
◀◀ Clarence "Frogman" Henry, Bobby "Blue" Bland, the Impressions, Chuck Berry, the Miracles, Marvin Gaye, Booker T. & the MG's

▶▶ Graham Parker, the Rumour, Eric Clapton, McGuinness-Flint, Long Ryders, Uncle Tupelo, Wilco, Son Volt, subdudes

Leland Rucker

Junior Barber

See: Gibson Brothers Band

Bare Necessities

Formed 1980s, in MA.

Peter Barnes, flute, flageolet, recorder, guitar; Earl Gaddis, violin, viola; Mary Lea, violin, percussion; Jacqueline Schwab, piano.

Bare Necessities began as a group of English country dance musicians, and the band still plays at dances in the eastern United States. Its repertoire has broadened, however, to include chamber music sounds and a healthy dose of improvisation, with rhythms driven by Jacqueline Schwab's eclectic musical interests (tango, ballet, etc.).

what's available: English Country Dances ♪♪♪♪ (Varrick, 1989, prod. Bare Necessities) is great dance music that also makes for good listening. "Dick's Maggot" and "Maiden Lane" are standouts. Take a Dance ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991, prod. Bare Necessities) is pretty but more stylized than its predecessor; it's got a Renaissance coldness that contrasts with the earthy energy of earlier music.

influences:
◀◀ Vivaldi
▶▶ Ensemble Galilei

Pamela Murray Winters

Russ Barenberg

Russ Barenberg is a virtuoso acoustic guitarist with a background in bluegrass. His albums under his own name exhibit myriad influences, from calypso to traditional Appalachian and Celtic fiddle tunes to inventive original compositions. He has also toured extensively and recorded with fellow virtuosos, dobroist Jerry Douglas and bassist Edgar Meyer.

what's available: Hollywood Rehearsal ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987, prod. various) is a compilation of tracks from Barenberg's Rounder albums up to that point. Atmospheric, beautifully played, at times captivating, Moving Pictures ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Russ Barenberg) contains seven Barenberg original compositions and two traditional numbers. Accompanists include Stuart Duncan, Béla Fleck, Jerry Douglas, Mark O'Connor, Mark Schatz, and Edgar Meyer. Skip, Hop, & Wobble ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1993, prod. Russ Barenberg, Jerry Douglas, Edgar Meyer) is one of the most enjoyable instrumental albums from the acoustic music scene in years, a breath of acoustic fresh air that showcases the many talents of Douglas, Barenberg, and Meyer—three outstanding pickers.

les barker

influences:

Chet Atkins, Doc Watson

David Grier, Scott Nygaard

Randy Pitts

Les Barker

Born January 30, 1947, in Manchester, England.

Les Barker is the holy fool of British folk. He writes song parodies, gently off-kilter poems, and other bits of humorous wordplay. The more you know about British folk music, the more you'll appreciate his humor, but it still brings smiles to the intelligent listener. Barker is an accountant turned raconteur. In his early performances, he toured with his dog, Mrs. Ackroyd. The late Mrs. Ackroyd is commemorated in the name of Barker's erstwhile band and in the numerous references to dogs in his oeuvre ("Dachshunds with erections can't climb stairs," etc.). His many books include Viva a Spaniel, Dog Only Nose, Corgi and Bess, Hound of Music, A Quite Short Goat and a Pink Dalmatian, and the unexpected English Book of Penguin Folk Songs. Most of these are collections of doggerel. Barker has enlisted such talents as June Tabor and Martin Carthy on his albums; the Mrs. Ackroyd Band usually includes Lesley Davies and Chris Harvey. Barker doesn't limit his work to shaggy dog tales; he's also written a folk opera, The Stones of Callanish, and released at least one "serious" album—that is, an album that doesn't hound the listener for laughs. His albums are listed under various artist names, but all can be found at Mrs. Ackroyd Records, PO Box 95, South District Office, Manchester M20 4LB, United Kingdom (phone: 0161 434 7499; e-mail: ackroyd@cix.compulink.co.uk).

what to buy: A Cardi and Bloke ♪♪♪♪½ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1995, prod. Les Barker) is an excellent jumping-off point for Barker's oddball poesy, including "Cosmo the Fairly Accurate Knife Thrower" and "Deja Vu" (worth hearing more than once). For more musical delights, choose a selection by the Mrs. Ackroyd Band—either Oranges and Lemmings ♪♪♪♪½ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1990, prod. Chris Harvey) or Gnus and Roses ♪♪♪♪½ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1994, prod. Chris Harvey). Oranges culminates in the multicultural "William Patel Overture." Gnus includes "The Schwarzenegging Song" and the Richard Thompson parody "Down with the Sausage Roll" and features the magnificent Norma Waterson singing the adultery lament "My Husband's Got No Porridge in Him" (she's found a blonde sleeping in his bed).

what to buy next: For a taste of Barker's serious side, look for the "various artists" selections Some Love ♪♪♪♪ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1992, prod. Chris Harvey) and The Stones of Callanish ♪♪♪♪½ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1989, prod. Jim Sutherland). On both albums, Barker's words are set to traditional and composed music and sung by some of England's best voices, including June Tabor, Roy Bailey, and the Waterson-Carthy family. Callanish is a folk opera with lyrics in English and Gaelic.

the rest:

Earwigo ♪♪♪♪ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1987)
An Infinite Number of Occasional Tables ♪♪♪♪ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1991)
Up the Creek without a Poodle ♪♪♪♪½ (Mrs. Ackroyd, 1996)

influences:

Peter Cook, Billy Connolly

Pamela Murray Winters

Barolk Folk

See: Carrie Crompton

Tina Louise Barr

Born in Modesto, CA.

Californian Tina Louise Barr is an immensely talented autoharpist who placed second in the International Autoharp Championships in both 1993 and 1996. Barr cites her music teachers as introducing her to bluegrass and Celtic music. Add some unique rhythms influenced by calypso and vintage rock, and that begins to describe her innovative autoharp playing. Barr and her husband, John Gwinner, a mandolinist and guitarist, perform as "Frettin' Around" and are often joined by two other members who play banjo, fiddle, and guitar. She also performs with the Drifting Gilligans, a group that features Celtic music. She is a frequent and featured performer at festivals and has become well known on the "workshop" circuit as a teacher.

what's available: Breakin' Tradition ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1996, prod. Tina Louise Barr) is Barr's debut release and is an all instrumental recording, adding an occasional guitar, electric bass, synthesizer, or light percussion (bodhrán, tambourine, claves, etc.) as backup to her featured autoharp. This solo recording is a nice combination of traditional and contemporary pieces, including two original compositions, "Breakin' out the Bubbly" and "Doggy Doin's." What makes this recording exceptional is the tasteful rhythmic treatment that Tina gives to some of the old standard tunes; it's just enough to pique your interest and keep you listening for more. The last cut, "La Bamba," has become Barr's signature tune and has great energy and infectious rhythms. Breakin' Tradition is available from the artist at 1801 H Street, Suite B-5, #225, Modesto, CA 95354.

influences:

Maybelle Carter, the Beach Boys, Bob Wills, Sam Bush, Dave Edmunds

Alan Mager, Karen Mueller

Heidi Cerrigione

The Barra MacNeils

Formed 1986, in Sydney Mines, Cape Breton, Canada.

Sheumas MacNeil, piano, keyboard, vocals; Kyle MacNeil, violin, acoustic & electric guitar, mandolin, vocals; Stewart MacNeil, vocals, accordion, keyboards, whistle, flute, electric guitar; Lucy MacNeil, vocals, bodhrán, Celtic harp, backing vocals, viola, violin.

Growing up together in a home where musicians would casually drop by for a jam session, the Barra MacNeils had it made when it came to a nurturing environment for folk musicians. Each of the four had appeared on TV and radio by the time they were ten, and they were touring during school breaks as they grew up. Each is an outstanding multi-instrumentalist, and they frequently switch roles from one piece to the next. All four also have rich, evocative voices, which blend to create memorable mouth music or modern harmonies. Drawing on their Maritime roots, this quartet has forged ahead into a world of modern visions, giving listeners a shower of styles and sounds on their eight albums. Rapidly switching from traditional folk to jazz, pop, and even punk, this group's sound encompasses myriad styles. It is this lack of a single genre definition that has been the very defining feature of the Barra MacNeils's success. Never seeming satisfied with having grasped one type of music, they keep reaching for others, combining the sounds along the way. This is a group that put out the highly successful and critically acclaimed recording The Traditional Album, which showcases traditional music, and immediately followed it up with The Question, wherein they question the very roots they had just presented so beautifully. Fusing pop, folk, and world beat, they strive to see where music could take them. Stewart writes much of the music for the group, and has a firm grasp on many musical styles. The group has been the recipient of a variety of awards, including Pop-Rock Artists of the Year in 1996 and winner of the Roots/Traditional Artist Category in 1995, both at the East Coast Music Awards.

what to buy: The Traditional Album ♪♪♪♪½ (Iona, 1994) is considered a classic in the traditional music genre. Entirely instrumental, this album shows the Barra MacNeils at their best—with fiery reels and jigs galore. This is a must-have for traditional music fans.

what to buy next: Until Now ♪♪♪♪ (1997) showcases much of the material that has made the group famous, with heavy leanings on their traditional Scottish heritage. The Barra MacNeils ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1986) is the group's first recording, with a rich variety of traditional music beautifully presented.

what to avoid: Fans will either love or hate The Question ♪♪ (1995, prod. Nick Griffiths), which lives up to its name by leaving the listener wondering what type of music the Barra MacNeils really play. Bordering on punk, jazz, and world-beat at times, this album shows almost nothing of the traditional roots for which the Barra MacNeils are famous.

the rest:

Rock in the Stream ♪♪♪½ (Polydor/PolyGram, 1989)
TimeFrame ♪♪♪ (Polydor/PolyGram, 1992)
Closer to Paradise ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1993)
Timespan ♪♪♪ (Iona Records, 1996)

influences:

The Rankin Family, Buddy MacMaster

Mouth Music

Jo Hughey Morrison and Neal Walters

Cathy Barton and Dave Para

Formed mid-1970s, in MO.

Cathy Barton (born June 12, 1955, in Fort Benning, GA), dulcimer, banjo, guitar, harp, vocals; Dave Para (born February 6, 1955, in Evergreen Park, IL), guitar, banjo, vocals.

This husband/wife duo have described themselves as "children of the folk revival" who met during the mid-1970s at the Chez, a coffeehouse in central Missouri, and soon began sharing tunes and singing together. Cathy Barton is a recognized master of the frailing banjo and has twice won the Tennessee Old Time Banjo Championship. Her passion for collecting traditional songs and tunes is also evident in her extensive hammered dulcimer repertoire of fiddle tunes. Dave Para's distinctive guitar style includes flatpick leads and innovative moving bass lines. This versatile duo often includes autoharp, fretted dulcimer, and rhythm instruments (bones, spoons, mouth bow) in their performances, which range from hard-driving string band music to contemplative ballads and airs. Their ease in exchanging lead and harmony vocals make this duo a perfect vocal combination. Their work has taken them to festivals, clubs, concert halls, schools, and recording studios across the United States and on five European tours. Barton and Para take great pride in researching the history of the songs and tunes they collect, passing along much of the information in the extensive liner notes to their recordings and in the wonderful stories they tell their audiences.

what to buy: Barton and Para are joined by their neighbor/songwriter Bob Dyer on two recordings of Civil War Songs from the Western border. The first is Johnny Whistletrigger ♪♪♪♪ (Big Canoe Records, 1993, prod. Cathy Barton, Dave Para, Bob Dyer), one of the first albums ever devoted to Civil War music from west of the Mississippi River. Their extensive research is evident in the album's 32-page illustrated booklet, which includes lyrics and details that trace and relate the stories behind the songs, tunes, and recitations. The trio presents a unified collaborative sound with lyrics sung with emotional vigor above impeccable instrumentation of fiddle, banjo, hammered dulcimer, guitar, cello, and bass. This album was named a Notable Recording for 1994 by the American Library Association. The sequel to this recording is Rebel in the Woods ♪♪♪♪ (Big Canoe Records, 1995, prod. Cathy Barton, Dave Para, Bob Dyer); here the three artists continue to add a new dimension to the understanding of the Civil War conflict. All of the Barton/Para CDs are available from Folk-Legacy Records, Box 1148, Sharon, CT 06069, including some cassettes on other labels.

what to buy next: For All the Good People ♪♪♪½ (Folk-Legacy Records, 1992, prod. Folk-Legacy) is subtitled "A Golden Ring Reunion." Barton and Para are joined by Caroline Paton (mountain dulcimer, vocals), David Paton (hammered dulcimer, concertina), Sandy Paton (guitar, vocals), Ed Trickett (guitar, hammered dulcimer, piano, vocals), and Harry Tuft (guitar, bass, vocals), reviving the spirit of "a gathering of friends for making music." 'Twas on a Night Like This ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy Records, 1989, prod. Folk-Legacy) is a Christmas recording and includes many of the musicians who played on For All the Good People, with the addition of Skip Gorman (fiddle), Robin Paton (vocals), and Gordon Bok (narration).

worth searching for: On a Day Like Today ♪♪♪♪½ (Folk-Legacy Records, 1986, prod. Folk-Legacy), available on cassette, is one of the finest examples of this duo's work, both instrumentally and vocally. Ballad of the Boonslick ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1982, prod. Cathy Barton, Dave Para) and Movin' on Down the River ♪♪♪ (Biscuit City Records, 1979/self-released, 1985, prod. Cathy Barton, Dave Para) are two earlier recordings well worth adding to your collection. Reflections on the Carter Family ♪♪♪ (Take II Productions, 1981, prod. Jay Round, Ron Penix) is an out-of-print vinyl treasure.

influences:

- Taylor McBaine, Kermit Moody, Grandpa and Ramona Jones, Bill Spence
- Dick Harrington and Victoria Young, Jody Stecher and Kate Brislin

Heidi Cerrigione

Basin Brothers

Formed 1982, in Celcilia, LA.

Al Berard, fiddle, vocals; Errol Verret, accordion, vocals; Dwayne Brasseaux, bass; Keith Blanchard, drums, triangle; Tommy Comeaux, guitar, mandola. Past members include: Danny Collet, accordion, vocals.

The Basin Brothers are named after the Atchafalaya Basin where Al Berard was born and raised. His father trapped and crawdad-fished the basin, passing those skills on to his son. Like many younger Cajuns, Berard felt stigmatized by his Cajun upbringing. His outlook changed while touring Canada and having his French singing appreciated by a new audience. The core of the group has remained Berard, Brasseaux, and Blanchard, with former Beausoleil members Errol Verret and Tommy Comeaux joining in more recent years. The Basin Brothers' sound is based around the singing and playing of Berard. His rich accent is like walking into a kitchen where the gumbo has been cooking away. His fiddling rests between the austerity of Balfa traditional fiddling and Michael Doucet without the flights of fancy that only Doucet can pull off. Unlike many Cajun accordionists who "sit" out when they are not playing lead, Verret is constantly commenting and filling in, wrapping his playing around that of Berard.

what to buy: The quality of the musicianship on Dans la Louisiana ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Basin Brothers) will remind listeners of Beausoleil. This is due in part to the interplay between Berard and Verret and in part to the abundant use of mandolin and acoustic guitar. Berard wrote two waltzes for this CD that step a little outside the realm of Cajun chord progressions, but fall right into traditional sentiment. His "Saute la barriere" sounds like a polished up version of a song from the 1920s. The second half of the CD is a romp through a set of Cajun standards, with the exception of Verret's "Creole Jam" that seems to fit right in, despite the conga drums and new chords. Still, maybe it's just too much Cajun mandolin. Anyone who has seen Berard and Verret play a dance with just bass and drums will probably want to hear them try and catch that magic on record sometime.

what to buy next: Let's Get Cajun ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1990, prod. Al Berard) is the first and the most traditional of the Basin Brothers recordings. It includes very traditional 2-steps like "Bayou Pon Pon" and "Bosco Stomp," but also the Fernest Arceneaux zydeco classic "Zydeco Boomer-Rang." Mixed in are originals by Berard like "Tous Les Cadien Content" and "Quoi Faire Tu Ture Mon Chochon " that show him writing in the tradition of Lawrence Walker and Shirley Bergeron.

the rest:
Stayin' Cajun ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)
C'est Dans Le Sang Cadjin ♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Aldus Roger, the Balfa Brothers, Lawrence Walker, D.L. Menard

▶▶ Kristi Gulliory, Steve Riley

Jared Snyder

Robin Batteau

See: David Buskin

Battlefield Band

Formed 1969, in Glasgow, Scotland.

Alan Reid, keyboards, guitar, vocals (1969–present); Brian McNeill, fiddle, viola, mandolin, vocals (1969–90); John McCusker, fiddle, vocals (1990–present); John Gahagan, concertina, whistle (1977–78); Jamie McMenemy, cittern, guitar, mandolin, vocals (1977–79); Pat Kilbride, guitar, cittern, vocals (1978); Jenny Clark, dulcimer, guitar, vocals (1978); Ged Foley, guitar, vocals (1980–84); Alistair Russell, guitar, cittern, vocals (1984–97); Davy Steele, guitar, cittern, bodhrán, vocals (1997–present); Duncan McGillivray, bagpipes (1979–83); Dougie Pincock, bagpipes (1984–90); Ian MacDonald, bagpipes (1990–97); Mike Katz, bagpipes (1997–present).

Named for a suburb of Glasgow, the Battlefield Band, along with the Tannahill Weavers and Silly Wizard, was at the very heart of the Scottish folk revival of the last three decades. Hard driving and energetic, the band has built a loyal and impressive audience by fusing traditional Scottish music with elements from jazz and rock 'n' roll. Although their current albums sound traditional when compared with the likes of Shooglenifty or recent Capercaillie, their experiments with synthesizers and pop music were revolutionary for their day. The band's early recordings were more or less traditional, with the sparing use of synthesizer adding a slight modern touch. During the early 1980s, the band developed a larger, more aggressive sound and produced its two defining albums; Home Is Where the Van Is and There's a Buzz established the band as favorites in both Scotland and the U.S. The albums were marked by modern arrangements using electric keyboards, a brace of traditional songs, a few compositions by band members, and most importantly, great bagpiping and fiddling. After wholesale personnel changes in the mid-'80s, the band developed a more political sound, but kept the energy just as high with the fine Anthem for the Common Man and two instrumental albums with harper Alison Kinnaird. By the late 1980s, the band seemed to be losing steam. Although they finally recorded Home Ground, a much-needed live album, recordings from this period represent a low point in the band's history and display a distinct lack of drive. The addition of fiddler John McCusker, replacing Brian McNeill, brought some new youthful energy and ideas to the band, and by 1997's Across the Borders, the band was once again playing solid Scottish music mixed with outside influences, this time the Irish music of master flute player Seamus Tansey. More wholesale changes in late 1997 mean that the band will once again be forming a new sound, this time with former Ceolbeg members Davey Steele and Mike Katz joining John McCusker and Alan Reid.

what to buy: Home Is Where the Van Is ♪♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1980, prod. Robin Morton) made the Battlefield Band's reputation; it's a collection of traditional tunes and songs given a jolt through the addition of electric bass, synthesizer, and some imaginative arrangements. Alan MacGillavry's killer bagpiping sent kilts flying, and guitarist Ged Foley's tasteful playing filled in all the gaps. Featuring a strong set of songs, including one original by Brian MacNeil ("The Lads O' the Fair"), the group proved that the tradition could take some updating without losing its soul. The group has never been better than when it featured Alan Reid, MacNeil, Foley, and MacGillavry. There's a Buzz ♪♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1982, prod. Robin Morton) made two in a row for this great line up. Highlights include Robert Louis Stevenson's "Shining Clear," set to music by Reid, and a sweet set of tunes beginning with "The Presbyterian Hornpipe." Anthem for the Common Man ♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1984, prod. Robin Morton) saw Dougie Pincock pick up the piping mantle and singer Alistair Russell replace Foley. The lyrics became more political, featuring a great cover of Richard Thompson's "The Old Changing Way." Any worries about a loss of energy were dispelled by the opening track "The Four-Minute Warning" featuring the new man, Pincock, more than holding his own on the pipes.

what to buy next: The Battlefield Band is at its best in concert, and Home Ground ♪♪♪½ (Temple, 1989, prod. Robin Morton) accurately captures its entertaining stage show. Jammed with more than 70 minutes of music, the album shows the band working through an exuberant set of songs and dance tunes. Particular highlights are the two sets featuring Dougie Pincock's solo piping, and the nine minute tour de force "Band of a Thousand Chances," in which the group combines Scottish classics with Tunes by Wilson Pickett and the Beatles.

what to avoid: Quiet Days ♪♪ (Temple, 1992, prod. Robin Morton) is a little too long, has no great songs or great tunes, and features a band looking for direction. Threads and Across the Borders found them with new life and ideas and are better albums.

the rest:
Battlefield Band ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1977/Temple, 1994)
At the Front ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1978/Temple, 1994)
Music in Trust ♪♪♪ (Temple, 1986)
On the Rise ♪♪♪ (Temple, 1986)
After Hours ♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1987)
Celtic Hotel ♪♪♪ (Temple, 1987)
Music in Trust 2 ♪♪♪ (Temple, 1988)
New Spring ♪♪½ (Temple, 1991)
Opening Moves ♪♪♪½ (Topic, 1993)
Threads ♪♪♪ (Temple, 1995)
Across the Borders ♪♪♪½ (Temple, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Tannahill Weavers, Silly Wizard
▶▶ Shooglenifty, Tartan Amoebas, Run Rig

Tony Ziselberger

Bayou Seco /Bayou Eclectico

Formed 1978, in LA.

Jeanie McLerie Blackmar, fiddle, guitar; Ken Keppeler, fiddle, accordion, harmonica.

Jeanie McLerie began singing in French at age five and took up the ukulele at age eight. For those familiar with the sound of Bayou Seco, that might sound like things haven't changed very much. McLerie and Keppeler have been researching and playing the music of the Southwest—from the Mississippi River to the deserts of Arizona—for 20 years. McLerie got interested in folk music during the 1950s and learned to play Travis-style guitar in time to show a young James Taylor how to do it one summer on Martha's Vineyard. In 1962, she went to France to study at the Sorbonne and began to get really involved with the folk scene. While in France, she met future husband, Sandy Darlington, and the two eked out a living busking the movie theatre queues. In 1964, the couple moved to England to perform in folk clubs there and became acquainted with most of the traditional and revival singers—in fact, Maddy Prior served as their roadie for a time. They returned to the U.S. in 1967 to play the Newport Folk Festival and settled in the Berkeley, California, area. McLerie published Grow Your Own, a book on organic gardening that was subsequently picked up by Random House and sold over 180,000 copies. In 1971, they moved to New Mexico, and McLerie and Darlington separated in 1973.

Keppeler, a fourth-generation Southwesterner, came from a musical family; his father played harmonica and was a very good singer. His maternal great-grandfather was a fiddler and pump organ player. He began to play guitar in high school and often hung out at the old Ash Grove where he would hear such people as the Kentucky Colonels, Doc Watson, and Clifton Chenier. In 1978, he met Jeanie in Louisiana and they began a long association with Cajun music, learning directly from a host of renowned Cajun musicians including Michael Doucet, Dennis McGee, Canray Fontenot, and Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin. During the late '70s, McLerie worked with Ann Savoy and Jean Broussard in a group called the Magnolia Sisters and recorded Music from the Old Timey Hotel with Franny Leopold. In 1979, she joined Alice Gerrard and Irene Herrmann as the Harmony Sisters and they toured extensively until 1983 when she and Keppeler moved to Santa Fe, New Mexico. As Artists-in-Residence, they visited every nook and cranny of New Mexico to learn music and songs from cowboy, Hispanic, and Navajo sources. Keppeler also learned to make violins and mandolins and subsequently made instruments for Peter Ostroushko and Norman and Nancy Blake.

McLerie and Keppeler have strong ties to traditional musicians in New Mexico, and over the years they met and encouraged Cleofes Ortiz, a traditional Hispanic fiddler, and Max and Antonia Apodaca, traditional musicians whose music they brought to public attention and who taught them many of the tunes that have since become Bayou Seco staples. Similarly, they discovered the music of the Guachi Fiddlers of the Tohono O'odham people of southern Arizona. Through fiddler Elliott Johnson of Cababi, Arizona, they learned much of the old style music that was rapidly being forgotten. They continue to share the music and dances they were taught by these old masters, touring extensively in Europe and throughout the Southwest from their home in Silver City, New Mexico. McLerie recently started a school of fiddle instruction called "The Fiddling Friends," which focuses on an international repertoire of fiddle styles and emphasizes the sources of the music including contact with traditional musicians. Keppeler continues to make fine violins. All of these experiences and influences have combined to form the Bayou Seco sound, which they describe as "delightfully danceable Chilegumbo with a spicy bite and delicious aftertaste." Bayou Seco recordings are available from Bayou Seco, P.O. Box 4296, Albuquerque, NM 87196-4296.

what to buy: Following in the Tune Prints ♪♪♪♪ (UBIK Sound, 1995, prod. Ken Keppeler, Jeanie McLerie, Manny Rettinger) finds Bayou Seco in fine form, presenting a program that the CD subtitles as "old music in the new West . . . desert stomps, Cajun romps, and songs for modern cowgirls and vaqueros." The CD mixes genres shamelessly but allows the group to salute the old masters they've learned from while pursuing their own eclectic, but delightful, musical tastes. The music is not slick but it is most definitely authentic, blending elements of Cajun, Norteno, chicken scratch, and zydeco into a down-home composite sketch of the Southwest. Also check out a couple of great anthologies that have one or more cuts by the group: Old Time Music on the Air, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Old Time Music on the Radio) and The American Fogies, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Ray Alden). These are filled with very generous selections of great music.

what to buy next: The cassette-only Songs of New Mexico and Beyond ♪♪♪½ (UBIK Sound, 1991, prod. Ken Keppeler, Jeanie McLerie, Manny Rettinger) is another eclectic batch of Cajun, New Mexican, Navajo, original, and only they know what else. Cross cultural to the max! For a more consistent, i.e., less of a mixed bag, approach, Memories in Cababi: Tunes of the Tohono O'odham ♪♪♪½ (UBIK Sound, 1995) (cassette only) is a real treat. The tunes are all delightful and not at all what one might expect.

the rest:
No Borders ♪♪♪½ (UBIK Sound, 1986) (cassette only)
Orquesta Cleofonica ♪♪♪ (UBIK Sound, 1987) (cassette only) Recuerdos de Rociada ♪♪♪ (UBIK Sound) (cassette only)
Music from the Old Timey Hotel ♪♪♪ (UBIK Sound, 1994)

worth searching for: Cactus Gumbo and Alligator Enchiladas ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Guitar Productions, 1983, prod. Ken Keppeler, Jeanie McLerie, Paul Rangell, Jimmy Borsdorf) is the one Bayou Seco album that is out of print and unavailable. It's certainly worth grabbing if you come across it.

solo outings:
Harmony Sisters:
Harmony Pie ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1980)
Second Helping ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1983)

influences:
◀◀ The Balfa Brothers, Dennis McGee, Cleofes Ortiz, Elliott Johnson ▶▶ Balfa Toujours, Delta Sisters

see also: Hazel & Alice

Neal Walters

Beacon Hillbillies

See: Blood Oranges

Keola Beamer /Keola and Kapono Beamer /Nona Beamer

Born Keolamaikalani Breckenridge Beamer, February 18, 1951, in HI.

One of Hawaii's most popular contemporary musicians, Keola Beamer can trace his island history back to the 15th century. Many of those ancestors were musicians: his great-grandmother, Helen Desha Beamer, was a noted songwriter and performer, and his mother teaches dancing and music and occasionally records. Beamer's available output is perhaps more far-reaching than any other slack-key guitarist's; it incorporates elements of chants and other traditional Hawaiian sounds, and it contains elements of soft Western pop. Through the years he has recorded as a solo artist as well as with his brother Kapono Beamer and his mother, Nona Beamer.

what to buy: The gorgeous Mauna Kea: White Mountain Journal ♪♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1997, prod. George Winston) is Beamer's finest moment on record, an instrumental album that features him playing electric as well as acoustic guitar. Beamer plays many of the tunes solo, overdubs a few; George Winston occasionally joins on guitar as well. Beamer's arrangements of "Kaula 'ili" and "Hi'ilawe," songs associated with Sonny Chillingworth and Gabby Pahinui, respectively, are both exquisite. Moe'Uhane Kika (Takes from the Dream Guitar) ♪♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1995, prod. George Winston) is of similar quality, only here Beamer's the only guitar player, sometimes adding a nylon-string acoustic guitar or electric guitar part.

what to buy next: The rare Dancing Cat release recorded with a full band, Wooden Boat ♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1994, prod. George Winston) has a more contemporary sound than most of the label's other albums. Producer George "Keoki" Winston plays guitar on several tracks, including the duets "Kalena Kai" and "He Aloha no 'O Honolulu (Beloved Is Honolulu)," and piano on the instrumental "no Ke Ano Ahiahi (In the Evening Time)."

what to avoid: Though Keola & Kapono Beamer's Honolulu City Lights ♪♪ (Paradise, 1987, prod. Teddy Randazzo) is considered one of the most successful albums ever recorded in Hawaii, it will have more value to tourists and honeymooners than slack-key aficionados. Both it and Pure Hawaiian Magic ♪♪ (Paradise, 1991, prod. Tom Moffatt), a second duo album, contain some fine slack-key picking, but the songs and arrangements are saccharine and overly romanticized.

the rest:

Hawaiian Slack Key Guitar in the Real Old Style ♪♪♪ (Music of Polynesia, 1972)

Sweet Maui Moon ♪♪ (Paradise, 1989)

worth searching for: Beamer has published an instructional video, The Art of Hawaiian Slack Key Guitar and a book-and-cassette package, Guitar Playing Hawaiian Style.

solo outings:

Nona Beamer:

The Golden Lehua Tree ♪♪♪ (Starscape, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Sonny Chillingworth, Gabby Pahinui

▶▶ Ozzie Kotani

Brian Mansfield

Beausoleil

Formed 1975, in Lafayette, LA.

Michael Doucet, fiddle, vocals; David Doucet, guitar; Billy Ware, percussion; Tommy Alesi, drums (1977–present); Jimmy Breaux, accordion (1988–present); Al Tharp, bass, banjo, fiddle, backing vocals (1990–present); Errol Verret, accordion (1975–87); Tommy Comeaux, bass, mandolin (1975–90); Robert Vignaud, bass (1982–84).

Led by fiddler, singer, and Acadian/Cajun zealot Michael Doucet, Beausoleil is not only Louisiana's premier Cajun band, but during the past 10 years they've also become the best-known regional or "world music" band from North America. When Europeans, for example, think of Cajun music, they inevitably think of Beausoleil. Based in acoustic Cajun music—a fiddle and accordion-led genre that generally follows two forms: the waltz and the two-step—Beausoleil (most of the lyrics are sung in French) has consistently had the vision and instrumental skill to add elements of New Orleans R&B, blues, folk, jazz, and country to their very vital take on traditional French music from Louisiana. A Cajun music, culture, and history enthusiast since he was a teenager, Doucet made a trip to France in 1973 that convinced him of the value of his native culture. He returned to Louisiana determined to play the string music that had come to Louisiana from France via the Acadian people of eastern Canada. Combining musical history and infectious dance music, Beausoleil (named for Acadian resistance leader Joseph Broussard, whose nickname was "Beausoleil") was initially the alter ego of a regionally famous cosmic Cajun band called Coteau. Fronted by Michael Doucet and known locally as "the Cajun Grateful Dead," Coteau lasted until 1977 when it broke up and Beausoleil continued on. The fledgling group recorded its first album for Pate Marconi/EMI in France in 1976. The second disc, The Spirit of Cajun Music, was made in the U.S. for Louisiana-based Swallow Records in 1977. The band signed with Arhoolie Records during the early 1980s and in the fashion of that label released a number of traditional music records, one of which, the soundtrack to the film Belizaire the Cajun, won a Grammy nomination. Constant touring and a revival of interest in all things Cajun (thanks in large part to New Orleans chef Paul Prudhomme) aided and abetted the band's growing popularity. In 1986 the band members quit their day jobs and committed to music full time. In that same year they released four albums: the Belizaire the Cajun soundtrack, Allons a Lafayette, Christmas Bayou, and Bayou Boogie, the last of which was the band's first disc for Rounder Records. Bayou Boogie was also the first time the band recorded with electric instruments. At the same time the band was featured several times on Prairie Home Companion and was invited to play Carnegie Hall. In 1990 Beausoleil signed with Rhino Records' RNA imprint (which was later changed to Forward Records). Three consecutive Beausoleil albums won Grammy nominations in the Best Contemporary Folk category: 1989's Bayou Cadillac, 1991's Cajun Conja, and 1993's La Danse de la Vie. In 1991 Mary Chapin Carpenter won a

Michael Doucet of Beausoleil (© Linda Vartoogian)

Grammy for "Down at the Twist and Shout," a song she'd written about Beausoleil. When she performed the song during the Grammys telecast, the band joined her onstage, a feat they repeated at the 1997 Super Bowl. The band has even come to the attention of the rock community, Rolling Stone referring to them as "the best damned dance band you'll ever hear." Having performed at two presidential inaugurations—Jimmy Carter (1977) and Bill Clinton (1993)—Beausoleil continues to tour over 200 nights a year.

what to buy: Bayou Deluxe: The Best of Michael Doucet & Beausoleil ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1993, prod. various) is probably the best place to jump into Beausoleil's ever-expanding catalog. Upbeat tunes like "Vieux Crowley" mix with slower, more introspective numbers like "Je M'Endors." Drawn from eight different albums and two compilation discs, this collection is a generous slice of the many sides to this traditional music powerhouse.

what to buy next: Choosing one album by a band that has yet to make even a mediocre disc is nearly impossible. Bayou Cadillac ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Michael Doucet, Ken Gorz, Ken Irwin) gets the nod on the strength of classic Louisiana tunes like "Bon Temps Rouler" and great Doucet originals like "Valse Bebe." Add to that the fact that the band stretches here into a successful "Bo Diddley" and "Iko Iko" and you have one of their best. Again though, this is strictly a matter of taste: Cajun Conja ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1991, prod. Al Tharp, Michael Doucet) and La Danse de la Vie ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1993, prod. John Jennings, Michael Doucet, Beausoleil) are very close seconds.

the rest:

Spirit of Cajun Music a.k.a. Louisiana Cajun Music ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1977)
Michael Doucet dit Beausoleil ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1981/1994)
Zydeco Gris Gris ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1985)
Allons a Lafayette & More with Canray Fontenot ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1986)
Christmas Bayou ♪♪♪½ (Swallow, 1986)
Bayou Boogie ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1986)
Belizaire the Cajun ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1986)
Hot Chili Mama ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1988)
Live! From the Left Coast ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
Deja Vu ♪♪♪½ (Swallow, 1990)
Parlez-Nous a Boire ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1991)
L'Echo ♪♪♪♪ (Forward, 1994)
L'Amour ou la Folie ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1997)
The Best of Beausoleil ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1997)
Arc de Triomphe Two Step N/A (Hemisphere/Metro Blue, 1998)

worth searching for: Vintage Beausoleil ♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1995, prod. Bob Haddad) collects live performances from 1986–87 in New York City. Several are from a rain-delayed Central Park concert where the band is responding to the enthusiasm of the muddy, dedicated crowd. Another disc worth hunting down is Le Hoogie Boogie ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1992), a charming children's record of Cajun music featuring Michael Doucet, his wife Sharon Arms Doucet, and the members of Beausoleil.

solo outings:
Michael Doucet:
Michael Doucet & Cajun Brew ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988)
Beau Solo ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1990)

influences:
◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Dewey Balfa, Canray Fontenot
▶▶ Filé, Balfa Toujours

Robert Baird

Harry Belafonte

Born March 1, 1927, in New York, NY.

From out of the racial discord that characterized 1956, Harlem-born Harry Belafonte became an unlikely major star when his "Jamaica Farewell" flew up the charts and ignited a calypso craze, to be followed by an even bigger smash, "The Banana Boat Song (Day-O)," a year later. Strikingly handsome and gifted with an expressive, rich tenor, Belafonte scored repeatedly on the singles charts through the end of the '50s, and after the calypso fad waned, the singer proved his real versatility, recording Irish ballads, American folk tunes, prison songs, and of course Christmas classics. Additionally, Belafonte put his star quality to political use, becoming an outspoken civil rights campaigner and a champion for human rights—even taking part in the recording of USA for Africa's "We Are the World" some three decades after his recording debut.

what to buy: Though a sizable portion of his catalog has been removed from circulation, the presence of All-Time Greatest Hits Vol. 1–3 ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1987, prod. Chick Crumpacker) ensures that the essential elements of Belafonte's career remain available to the listening public. Containing more than 50 tracks and spanning two decades (beginning with some early '50s cuts that pre-date his explosion as a vocal superstar), the three-part collection shows the breadth of Belafonte's interpretive powers. It contains all of his calypso hits and proves that Belafonte continued to be a force through the '60s, even after he'd stopped having hit singles.

what to buy next: At the height of his late '50s popularity, Belafonte appeared at Carnegie Hall. His performance is captured on the remarkable Belafonte at Carnegie Hall ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1959, prod. Bob Bollard). Backed by his spare combo, Belafonte is in top form as he fills the room with "Day-O" and "Jamaica Farewell" and even includes a beautiful reading of "Danny Boy."

the rest:
Calypso ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1956)
Jump Up Calypso ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1961)
Pure Gold ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1975)
All Time Greatest Hits, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1978)
Belafonte Returns to Carnegie (RCA Victor, 1994)
An Evening with Harry Belafonte (PolyGram, 1997)
To Wish You a Merry Christmas (RCA, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Nat King Cole, Lena Horne
▶▶ Miriam Makeba, Al Jarreau, Sting

David Simons

Delia Bell and Bill Grant

Formed 1959, in OK.

Delia Bell, vocals; Bill Grant, vocals.

Working in the tradition of duos Wilma Lee and Stoney Cooper and Lulubelle and Scotty Roman, Delia Bell and Bill Grant have sung hard-country duets that made them popular for decades on the bluegrass circuit. The duo formed in 1959, after Bell's husband introduced the two, but they didn't go professional until the late '60s. Grant started his own label and recorded the pair's band, the Kiamichi Mountain Boys, throughout the '70s. The Kiamichi Mountain Boys disbanded around 1980, and Bell took a shot at a solo career, recording one album with Grant for County and another on her own for Warner Bros. In 1984, Bell and Grant began recording for Rounder Records, for which they made three albums.

what to buy: Dreaming ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Bill Grant, Ken Irwin) takes the best of the three albums the duo recorded for Rounder during the '80s and puts them on one marvelous, 14-track disc. There's only one original ("Louisa"), but with interpretations as good as the duo's versions of George Jones's "Flame in My Heart," Harlan Howard's "The Wall," and Hazel Dickens's "Won't You Come and Sing for Me?," who needs originals?

what to buy next: The Johnson Mountain Boys provided accompaniment for all of Bell and Grant's Rounder albums, but A Few Dollars More ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1986, prod. Ken Irwin, Bill Grant) also featured the talents of brothers Del and Jerry McCoury on guitar and bass, respectively.

the rest:
Cheer of the Homefires ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1984)
Following a Feeling (Rounder, 1988)

worth searching for: Bell wrote "Roses in the Snow," which became the title track for an Emmylou Harris album. Harris returned the favor by producing Delia Bell ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., prod. Emmylou Harris), a country album that produced two charting singles, "Coyote Song" and "Flame in My Heart." Bell, Grant, and the Kiamichi Mountain Boys recorded nine albums for Grant's Kiamichi Records label during the '70s; all are long out of print.

influences:
◀◀ Wilma Lee and Stoney Cooper, Bill Monroe, the Stanley Brothers, Carl Story
▶▶ Emmylou Harris

Brian Mansfield

Derek Bell

Born 1935, in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

If one were to assess the short, sixty-something, bespectacled, unprepossessing, and vaguely rumpled Derek Bell by his appearance, you'd guess he was perhaps a professor of some sort—as indeed he is. You'd be less likely to picture him consorting with Mick Jagger, Van Morrison, most of the notable cats in Nashville, or opening for the Pope in Dublin; but that's just the beginning of his resume as a member of the Chieftains, Ireland's musical ambassadors to the world. It may be unique among the world's republics that Ireland's chief symbol—the image that appears on their flag and their currency—is a musical instrument: the harp. Although he was the son of a fiddler, and received a thorough and formal musical education as a youngster, this world-famous harp player didn't start to play the instrument until he was well into his 30s. He played piano and xylophone as a youth and eventually trained on oboe and English horn, graduating from London's Royal College of Music in 1957 and, two years later, earning a degree from Trinity College in Dublin. Despite such deep musical training (or perhaps because of it), and despite the fact that he was captivated by the sound of the Irish harp all his life, Bell's career took him elsewhere, leaving the harp as "a reward for goodness to be played in heaven!" But his

5/2 derek bell

the 1940s

During the decade of World War II, folk music made its way into the public eye to an unprecedented extent and through many distinct routes. Alan Lomax and his imitators used the public airwaves, even armed forces broadcasts, to bring previously obscure folk ballads into the living rooms of America. The Almanac Singers, an unabashedly populist and intellectual group of socially active performers including, among others, Pete Seeger, Cisco Houston, Bess Hawes, and Woody Guthrie, became highly visible performers at political rallies and at concert halls. Moses Asch released records by Guthrie, Lead Belly, and others, and the Lomaxes continued to release the fruits of their field recording efforts of the previous decades. Musicians-turned-actors like Burl Ives and Paul Robeson brought folk music to the theatrical stage, often utilizing songs taken from the public domain. After the war ended, the political spectrum shifted towards the right, and the stage was set for the McCarthy era of the early '50s. Undaunted, Seeger, Lee Hays, and others formed the People's Songs Collective, which, although short-lived, set the stage for later grass roots folk organizations and ultimately gave roots to the first superstars of the folk revival—the Weavers.

Michael Parrish

life-long love for this ancient folk instrument remained unquenched, and one day he borrowed a harp from the North of Ireland Arts Council and started lessons; by 1965 he had joined the BBC in Belfast as solo harper for its Northern Ireland Orchestra. He eventually became Harp Professor at the Belfast Academy, a position he still holds; but the course of his future was secured in 1972, when he joined an aggregate of folk instrumentalists who called themselves the Chieftains. Bell joined the Chieftains just as they were about to record their fourth album, a critical point in their early history. It was the first recording they made together as a full-time, professional ensemble; the lineup had stabilized and everyone had by then left their day jobs. It was also the first evidence on record of founder and musical director Paddy Moloney's ultimate dream for the band: to mold a repertoire of traditional Irish music into a unique, almost chamber-music ensemble. Indeed, such a group would be unthinkable without a harp player, and Derek Bell has been with the celebrated Chieftains ever since.

what to buy: Carolan's Receipt ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Paddy Moloney) was the first, and may well be the best, of many recordings devoted to the music of Turlough O'Carolan, the eighteenth-century Irish bardic figure and beloved composer of harp tunes. Here Bell plays the more commonly heard harp strung with nylon or gut strings, but also devotes much of the program to the more ancient, wire-strung harp, an instrument with an entirely different timbre and technique. Various members of the Chieftains guest on this delightful album, providing welcome variation with the solo tracks. O'Carolan wrote at a time when the English suppression of Irish culture was relatively relaxed; in those days the indigenous music was popular, as well as the classical music of Italy and the European continent. O'Carolan's music was characterized by a distinctive blending of these two sensibilities, and it's hard to imagine a more perfect modern interpreter than Derek Bell, in whose nimble fingers the music of the academy and the pub converge.

what to avoid: Unfortunately, Bell forgot the winning formula used on his first collection of O'Carolan's music and the second, Carolan's Favourite ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989, prod. Paddy Moloney), perhaps in an ill-advised attempt to distinguish itself from the first, buries the tang and spontaneity of the composer's music in an over-gentrified, orchestral sugar-coating. Even the stuff without the Belfast Orchestra, while appealing enough, suffers from the curse of all sophomore outings: it's material that wasn't chosen for the first album.

the rest:
Derek Bell's Musical Ireland ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Ancient Music for the Irish Harp ♪♪♪½ (Claddagh, 1996) Mystic Harp ♪♪♪ (Crystal Clarity, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Sheila Larchet-Cuthbert, Seamus Ennis
▶▶ Patrick Ball, Kim Robertson, Sheila Woods, Maire ni Chathasaigh

see also: The Chieftains

Chris Rietz

Vince Bell

Born in Dallas, TX.

That Vince Bell has a career in music, or that he ever recorded an album, is almost beside the point. That he is alive is miracle enough. A promising singer/songwriter who toured Texas one roadhouse at a time, Bell's life was rudely interrupted in 1982 when, on the way home from the studio, he was struck down by a drunk driver. His injuries were so serious that an obituary mistakenly ran in the Austin American-Statesman. After learning to walk and talk again, and then learning to play and sing, Bell set about reclaiming his career.

what's available: Phoenix ♪♪♪½ (Watermelon, 1994, prod. Bob Neuwirth) is an album of small vignettes, full of rough edges and hard truths—not particularly easy to take, especially given Bell's gruff voice. But, as is the case with the songs of John Prine and Randy Newman, Bell's work deserves a close listen. Plus, it's hard to go wrong with a.supporting cast that includes Lyle Lovett, Victoria Williams, John Cale, Stephen Bruton, Mickey Raphael, David Mansfield, and Geoff Muldaur. The highlight is "Woman of the Phoenix," which is perhaps best known in Nanci Griffith's version.

influences:

◀◀ John Prine, Townes Van Zandt, Randy Newman

▶▶ Lyle Lovett, Victoria Williams

Daniel Durchholz

Peter Bellamy

See: Young Tradition

Mac Benford /Mac Benford and the Woodshed All-Stars

Formed early 1990s, in and around Ithaca, NY.

Mac Benford, banjo, vocals; Marie Burns, mandolin, vocals; John Kirk, fiddle, vocals; John Rossbach, guitar, vocals; Pete Sutherland, fiddle, vocals; Doug Henrie, bass.

Mac Benford is one of the best known of the many younger musicians who were attracted to old time music in the 1960s. He has become a seminal figure in the ensuing "revival" that now spans some 35 to 40 years. Originally a member of the Fat City String Band with Walt Koken and Bob Potts, Benford was a fixture on the Berkeley, California, old time scene in the '60s. The band became the Highwoods String Band and the trio added Jenny Cleland and Doug Dorschug after a move to the Ithaca, New York, area. Highwoods was the band that basically defined the form for many who heard them throughout the '70s. As Benford says, adding "a big beat rhythm section to the tight banjo-fiddles trio . . . was quite unique during those days." The band had a large repertoire of traditional tunes and songs that they learned from old 78s, but, rather than the purist approach of groups like the New Lost City Ramblers, they felt free to combine various styles to create their own special "groove" and blend. Later, after the breakup of Highwoods, he founded the Backwoods Band and that band, which also included Eric and Suzy Thompson, put out a couple of very nice LPs, which are all unfortunately now out of print. Since then, Benford has kept a relatively low profile, making the odd festival performance as a solo act or with ad hoc groups. Nonetheless, his work with Highwoods served to make him a household name in old time music circles. In the '90s he has formed Mac Benford and the Woodshed All-Stars, an old-time string band with a refreshing difference. The lovely Celtic-influenced voice of Marie Burns enhances the band's sound, which otherwise relies heavily on Benford's clawhammer banjo and North Georgia twin fiddles. Most of the members are still involved in other bands and recording projects, notably Marie, who records with sisters Jeannie and Annie in a folky/bluegrass trio, the Burns Sisters.

what's available: Willow ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Mac Benford) is the group's only CD release to date and clearly shows that Benford has not lost his touch. It's not exactly the rebirth of Highwoods, but it's not bad. The presence of Marie Burns's vocals adds a measure of variety to the straightforward string band sound and the band cruises through a program of mostly standard material.

worth searching for: Feed Your Babies Onions ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Highwoods String Band) contains 23 of the best live recordings from Highwoods' heyday and is essential listening. The Woodshed All Stars also have one additional release on cassette only, 1/2 Century in C ♪♪♪½ (Marimac, 1991, prod. Mac Benford), which is also worth seeking out.

solo outings:

John Rossbach:

Never Was Plugged ♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ The Carter Family, Skillet Lickers, New Lost City Ramblers

▶▶ Freight Hoppers, Dry Branch Fire Squad

see also: The Burns Sisters, Walt Koken

Neal Walters and Stephen L. Betts

5/4 pierre bensusan

Pierre Bensusan

Born 1958, in Algeria.

In 1975, a 17-year-old Algerian-born Parisian named Pierre Bensusan released Pres de Paris, a precocious first album that went on to win that year's prestigious Gran Prix du Disque. His first recordings mirror the influence of Western European (and particularly Irish) traditional music, but Bensusan's musical interests have grown to assimilate the sensibilities of many cultures; more important, he has devoted increasing attention to his already rare skill for composition. By the time his third album, Musiques, was issued, he settled upon a non-standard modal tuning for the guitar (the six strings tuned, low to high, to the notes D-A-D-G-A-D), a tuning he has since used exclusively. A passionate player, voracious assimilator, and irrepressible improviser, Pierre Bensusan has developed into a powerhouse instrumentalist without peer in the world of steel-string acoustic guitar. If he's left some of his more traditionally oriented fans behind, he (like Joni Mitchell, Miles Davis, or many artists who seem repeatedly to outgrow their various devotees) doesn't seem to notice. His brilliant, mercurial, unflaggingly lyrical guitar playing is as exciting to listen to as it is hard to pigeonhole.

what to buy: Start with Solilai ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982, prod. Pierre Bensusan). This was perhaps the first sample of Bensusan in artistic maturity, when a fully developed, impressionistic sense of jazz harmony was informing his compositions. A more focused, "bring-it-along-slowly" feel to his pieces is also in evidence here (as it was to be in all his subsequent work)—you can tell in a half-minute of listening that these tunes weren't just concocted last week.

what to buy next: Musiques ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1980, prod. Pierre Bensusan) presents classic Bensusan with perhaps a more folky sensibility—shorter, less developed pieces and lots of superb originals mixed in with some tasty versions of traditional material. Some obviously improvised pieces (like "Climats Doux et Temperes") give a hint of things to come.

what to avoid: By no means an artistic failure, Spices ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Pierre Bensusan) is many people's least favorite Pierre Bensusan album. This was his only recording with a band, and it also features his several-year experiment with his "electro-acoustic" guitar, complete with flanger, echo, and other effects pedals. Whether it was the missing intimacy of solo performance, a distaste for the electrified sound, or simply neglect from CBS's promotional machinery (it originally was issued on Columbia, Bensusan's first and only major-label effort), Spices languished with lackluster sales.

the rest:
Pres de Paris ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1975)
2 ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1977)
Wu Wei ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995)

influences:
Davey Graham, Bert Jansch, Martin Carthy
Michael Hedges, Andrew York, El McMeen, Martin Simpson, and virtually every Celtic, British, or New Age fingerstyle guitarist

Chris Rietz

Mary Bergin /Dordan

Born September 13, 1949, in Dublin, Ireland. Dordan formed 1991, in Galway, Ireland.

Mary Bergin, flute, whistle, fiddle; Kathleen Loughnane, harp; Dearbhaill Standun, fiddle, viola; Martina Goggin, vocals, percussion, guitar (1996–present).

Mary Bergin is the undisputed queen of the Irish tin whistle. Her astounding technique and beautiful repertoire have defined tin whistle playing in Irish music for the past 30 years and have set a new standard for the instrument. Born in Dublin, she grew up hearing traditional music both at home and on family vacations in the west of Ireland, where she fell under the spell of legendary musicians like Willie Clancy and Junior Crehan. She began playing as a young girl and soon developed her own unique style, winning the all-Ireland title while in her late teens. After playing briefly with Ceoltoiri Laighean, a group that melded traditional and classical music in the manner of the Chieftains, she moved to Galway, married, and pursued a solo career. Her debut album Feadoga Stain was an instant classic, redefining the role of the tin whistle and propelling her to the front of the traditional music scene in Ireland. Since her debut, she has toured as a solo artist, with De Dannan, and with Joe and Antoinette McKenna. She has also recorded a second solo album. In 1991, Bergin, along with harper Kathleen Loughnane and violinist Dearbhill Standun, formed Dordan. Playing a combination of baroque pieces and Irish dance tunes, the group has recorded three albums and toured in Ireland, England, and the U.S. Bergin continues to perform and record both as a solo artist and with Dordan, and can often be found teaching tin whistle at music camps in the U.S. and in Ireland.

what to buy: Feadoga Stain ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gael Linn, 1976/Shanachie, 1992, prod. Michael O'hEidhin) is a classic of Irish music and should be among the first albums purchased by anyone with a serious interest in the tradition. At the time of this album's original release, there had been only a few full-length recordings of tin whistle music released, the instrument being taken somewhat less seriously than its cousins the flute and the uilleann pipes. Bergin's debut album changed forever the whistle's status in Irish music. Driving, lyrical, and tasteful, Feadoga Stain set a new standard for tin whistle playing, exploring different keys and pushing the simple instrument to its limits. Mary rips through reels and jigs with awesome grace and precision at a breakneck speed and pulls every bit of soul out of a pair of ancient song airs. Accompanied by De Dannan's Ringo McDonough and Alec Finn, Bergin plays Irish music on this recording with as much power, elegance, and style as anyone before or after.

what to buy next: Feadoga Stain 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Mary Bergin) shows Bergin is still an awesome musician 15 years later. The guest list is a little bigger this time, with appearances by the McKennas and Dordan. The sound is a little fuller as well, with uilleann pipes, guitar, and even bass on a few tracks. The whistle playing, of course, is at the same high standard, with her exquisite taste in tunes and arrangements always on display. The Night Before . . . A Celtic Christmas ♪♪♪½ (Narada, 1997, prod. Dordan) is Dordan's third album and their first holiday collection, as well as the first Dordan album to feature vocals. The group's mix of classical and traditional styles works to great effect on Christmas material, remaining tasteful without sinking into safe holiday dullness. Their material, several originals mixed with some traditional Irish holiday music, is well chosen and arranged to allow each of the members to show off their considerable skills (especially on Tommy Coen's reel, "Christmas Eve.") Guests Steve Cooney and Johnny Connolly, on guitar and accordion respectively, provide some extra punch, and the addition of Goggin's warm alto voice adds a new dimension to the group's sound.

what to avoid: Irish Traditional and Baroque ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Jackie Small) was Dordan's debut album. A pleasant collection that introduced the group's syncretic blend of baroque and traditional music to the world, the record featured some tasty individual playing but never really cut loose. The album features some standard pieces by Handel, Bach, and Purcell, among others, alongside traditional Irish tunes and one piece composed by the group. This was a solid debut album, making explicit the links between the two genres, but it has been overshadowed by the group's two subsequent releases.

worth searching for: Jigs to the Moon ♪♪♪½ (Gael Linn, 1994, prod. Dordan) was Dordan's second album and a deeper, more successful exploration of the common ground between baroque and Irish music. The group plays a German chaconne, a sonatina by the Czech composer Dussek, and a whole bunch of Turlough O'Carolan tunes in conjunction with a few traditional waltzes, reels, and jigs. Highlights include a stately version of Jerry Holland's beautiful waltz, "My Cape Breton Home," and a set of polkas drawn from English, Irish, and Austrian sources. Unfortunately, it seems that the band's sound, part Irish, part classical, falls between the marketing cracks in the U.S. Perhaps considered too traditional for the classical market, too reserved for the Irish tunehead crowd, and too serious for the new agers, this album has yet to see release in the United States.

influences:

◀◀ Willie Clancy, Tom McHaile, Seamus Ennis

▶▶ Sean Ryan, Kevin Crawford, Hesperus

Tony Ziselberger

Bergmann Brothers

See: Tina Bergmann

Tina Bergmann

Born February 21, 1971, in Charlevoix, MI.

Hammered dulcimer recording artist Tina Bergmann began performing in 1980 as part of Strings & Things, which also included Diana Bergmann (lap dulcimer) and Monty Bergmann (harmonica). Tina Bergmann's hammered dulcimer style has been heavily influenced by playing for contra dances, described as "rhythmically grounded and excitingly syncopated." She learned to play in the aural tradition and continues to play for contra dances in the Richfield, Ohio area. This dulcimist has been teaching privately since age 12, plus she travels to perform and teach at various folk festivals.

what's available: The Bergmann Brothers—Fine Artiste ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1997, prod. the Bergmann Brothers) is an excellent recording featuring Tina's hammered dulcimer playing. She is joined by David Rice (guitar, harmonica, and vocals), Bryan Thomas (bass), and Diana Bergmann (banjo uke). The 18 selections are nicely varied, from "Langstrom's Pony," a traditional Irish tune with an African clave pattern accompaniment, to "La Partida," a Venezuelan waltz, to "I Had to Give Up Gym," a 1929 tune in which Tina sings lead. Shady Grove ♪♪♪ (Strings & Things, 1994, prod. Tina Bergmann) is an excellent contra dance collection of mostly reels, a few jigs, and a couple of waltzes. The addition of Mark DeLozier (piano) and Jason Hamilton (fiddle) makes this an exciting recording. These two recordings are available from the artist at 3365 Treelawn Drive, Richfield, OH 44286.

worth searching for: Strings & Things also have two recordings that are now out of print: Just Because ♪♪♪ (Strings & Things, 1983, prod. Strings & Things) and Going to Boston ♪♪♪ (Strings & Things, 1985, prod. Strings & Things).

influences:

◀◀ Loy Swaggert

▶▶ Steve Schneider, Rick Thum, Kendra Ward-Bence

Heidi Cerrigione

Byron Berline

Born July 6, 1944, in CA.

Fiddler Byron Berline mixes bluegrass, Western swing, old-time, and Texas-style fiddling into his style. He's worked as a regular member of Bill Monroe's Blue Grass Boys, Country Gazette, Sundance, Berline-Crary-Hickman, and that band's successor, California. One of the most in-demand fiddlers in the world, Berline has recorded with Monroe, the Dillards, Vince Gill, Bob Dylan, the Rolling Stones, the Eagles, and others.

what to buy: Bluegrass, Western swing, country, rock, and a little Cajun mix on Fiddle & a Song ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Byron Berline), an album worth buying just for "Sally Goodin," on which Bill Monroe and Earl Scruggs play together for the first time since 1948. Old Sundance bandmate Vince Gill sings Monroe's "Rose of Old Kentucky."

what to buy next: Jumpin' the Strings ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1990, prod. Byron Berline), an amazing collection of 21 original fiddle tunes, is a showcase for Berline's writing skills and his mastery of a wide range of fiddle styles.

the rest:

(With Dan Crary and John Hickman) Night Run ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1984)
(With John Hickman) Double Trouble ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1986/1995)
(With Dan Crary and John Hickman) B-C-H ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1987)
(With Dan Crary and John Hickman) Now They Are Four ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1989)
(With California) Traveler ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1992)

influences:

◀◀ Country Gazette, Bill Monroe

▶▶ Laurel Canyon Ramblers, Jason Carter, Stuart Duncan

see also: Dan Crary

Douglas Fulmer

Berline-Crary-Hickman/BCH

See: Dan Crary, Byron Berline

Dan Bern

Born in Mt. Vernon, IA.

Like most of those anointed "the new Bob Dylan," Dan Bern didn't seek that designation. If anything, he prefers another designation: Messiah. He says so right there in his song, "Jerusalem." In it, he sings about how he wanted to wait awhile before announcing his status, to build up the suspense a little, but it came out anyway, and hey, it's a relief that everybody knows. It's a weight off his shoulders. As his analyst, Dr. Mandelbaum, said it would be. Get the idea that Dan Bern isn't exactly the most morose of songwriters? Oh, he'll deliver a love-gone-wrong song with the best of 'em, but there's always a twist—always a uniquely Bern take on the labors of love, life, and, well, labor. He's got just two discs out, a self-titled release and an EP, Dog Boy Van, but both are must-haves for anyone who calls him or herself a fan of iconoclastic, harmonica- and guitar-wielding folkies who point slings and arrows at the ironies of our times while embracing the best traditions of those who came before.

what's available: It's no accident that Plotkin produced Dan Bern ♪♪♪♪½ (WORK/Sony, 1997, prod. Chuck Plotkin); he's also known for helming the work of another "new Dylan"—Bruce Springsteen—as well as Bob himself. Clever, witty, and at times sweet and heartfelt, this collection of tunes is highlighted by "Jerusalem," "I'm Not the Guy," "Marilyn," "King of the World" . . . heck, just listen to the whole thing. Bern also earned big raves for Dog Boy Van ♪♪♪♪ (WORK/Sony, 1997, prod. Chuck Plotkin). First released in 1996 as a teaser for his full album, this disc was reissued in late '97 by popular demand. It has only six songs, but they're beauts, from the laugh-out-loud sardonicism of "Talkin' Alien Abduction Blues" to the poignant reflectiveness of "Oklahoma" (about the deadly terrorist blast) and the semi-angry, semi-sad ode "Kurt" (about a certain prematurely deceased rock star).

influences:

◀◀ Bob Dylan, Loudon Wainwright III, John Prine, John Hiatt, Woody Guthrie, Arlo Guthrie, Bruce Springsteen, Tom Waits, Elvis Costello, Ani DiFranco

Lynne Margolis

Cindy Lee Berryhill

Born in Los Angeles, CA.

Originally running with the post-punk folk crowd that included

Kirk Kelly and Roger Manning, San Diego–based Berryhill was one of the first new acts signed by the reissue kingpin Rhino Records in the late '80s. A precocious teenager, Berryhill grew up with an affection for performing music (she once played in a punk band called the Stoopuds) and documenting her deepest thoughts and strongest opinions in her journal. As a result, her first two albums were driven by attitude and backhanded feminist statements ("Damn, I Wish I Was a Man," "Baby, Should I Have the Baby?") and were overloaded with yippie-skippy, Beat-poetry earmarks. In 1990, frustrated with the commercial indifference to her work, Berryhill temporarily relocated to Taos, New Mexico. There she cleared her mind, delved back into her journal, and reinvented herself; she came up with a broader sound and more playful outlook by following Alejandro Escovedo's chamber-rock lead, enhancing her swooping soprano with a swirling mix of cellos, tympani, violins, vibraphones, and offbeat percussion.

what to buy: Garage Orchestra ♪♪♪♪ (Cargo, 1994, prod. Cindy Lee Berryhill, Michael Harris)—boasting such engaging numbers as "I Wonder Why," "Song for Brian" (a love letter to Brian Wilson), and "UFO Suite"—dabbles in avant-garde dissonance but mostly demonstrates the tasteful, textural range that strings can bring to pop music.

what to buy next: Straight Outta Marysville ♪♪♪½ (Cargo, 1996, prod. Cindy Lee Berryhill, Michael Harris) finds her striking the perfect balance between the daring textures of Garage Orchestra and her earlier folk sound on such quirky tracks as "Just Like Me," "High Jump," and a funky cover of Donovan's "Season of the Witch."

the rest:
Cindy Lee Berryhill ♪♪ (Rhino, 1987)
Naked Movie Star ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1989)

influences:
◀◀ Jack Kerouac, Patti Smith, Jonathan Richman
▶▶ Brenda Kahn, Jane Gillman, Dar Williams

David Okamoto

Lou and Peter Berryman

Formed 1975, in Madison, WI.

Lou Berryman (born January 30, 1947, in Appleton, WI), vocals, accordion; Peter Berryman (born April 7, 1947, in Philadelphia, PA), vocals, 12-string guitar.

The professional accomplishments of Lou and Peter Berryman are numerous, not the least of which is continuing to produce original, highly creative music following their divorce in 1974. The honeymoon is over and both are remarried, but the musical chemistry only gets better with time. The Berrymans offer refreshing observations on the human condition in a style blending folk music with musical comedy. And they manage to translate it all into hilarious songs that have become folk classics, including "Double Yodel," "The F-word Song," "Your State's Name Here," and "Cow Imagination." The humor draws on Lou's gifts as a melody writer, accordion player, and vocal comedienne, as well as Peter's guitar and vocal skills and extraordinary lyric writing. And to match that, they have successfully self-produced and marketed their own record label since 1974 (with the exception of a brief stint in 1982). While some listeners may initially find the Berrymans' vocal style and lyrical content trite, few can resist laughing out loud by the middle of the second song: this stuff grows on you.

what to buy: As Lou and Peter's wit sharpens with age, their tenth and latest CD Double Yodel ♪♪♪♪♪ (Cornbelt Records, 1995, prod. Lou and Peter Berryman) is not surprisingly a peach. Their subjects are extrapolations of some of the preciously mundane topics of everyday life, inspired by recipes ("Orange Cocoa Cake"), house ads ("New Listing"), endless winters ("Pushing Spring"), and, well, even performing music ("Every Week"). Their wordplay is clever throughout, including the beating of a canine metaphor into the ground in "The Dog of Time." And a gentle contrast is provided with "Comes to Mind," a song of child-like wonder. The recording, which features just Lou and Peter without any accompanying musicians, provides a taste of the Berrymans' enchanting concert presence. Witty, innovative, skewed—Double Yodel is required listening.

what to buy next: What, Again?! ♪♪♪♪ (Cornbelt Records, 1993, prod. Lou and Peter Berryman) is a nifty set of re-recordings of Lou and Peter's hits from the vinyl years. "Squalor" is dedicated to the fact that Hostess Twinkies have a shelf life of 27 years. "Play It Again" parodies songs like "Hey Jude" that seem to go on forever despite scant lyrical content. "Classified Rag" is dedicated to an ad seen in a laundromat: "Roommate wanted. Prefer Christian, but will accept non-smoker." "A Chat with Your Mother" (casually "The F-word Song") is described by Pete Seeger as "one of the great American folk songs of the twentieth century." And "Your State's Name Here" generically declares "No sky could be deeper, no water so clear, as back in the meadows of Your State's Name Here." These two delightfully twisted imaginations continue in full bloom with Cow Imagination ♪♪♪♪ (Cornbelt Records, 1990, prod. Lou and Peter Berryman). Peter coined the lyrics to "Spring Chicken" on his birthday, insisting the aging process has not yet caught up with him. "Gilda Gray" glamorizes Wisconsin through its famous inventor of the shimmy. "Pass the Pepper" features a long-time couple in a routine dinner conversation—each self absorbed and not listening to the other. "Handyman" is ironically dedicated to all whose ideal mate would be a great fixer-upper. We Don't Talk about That! ♪♪♪½ (Cornbelt Records, 1992, prod. Lou and Peter Berryman) presents a solid collection of originals, showcasing the artists' ascent toward their prime. The title track lampoons the baby boomers' fascination with dysfunctional family issues: "I asked my folks the other day what my shrink asked me—am I the only nut on the family tree? They said you go tell that shrink . . . that we're all sane and you became a nut all by yourself." The Berrymans also show wit in handling the male sports ego ("Here's Louie with the Sports") and the standard mid-sized city's answer to urban decay ("A Convention Center"). "Hard Work and Perseverance" presents a joke that Pete Seeger reportedly stole from Carl Sandburg. The liner notes apologize for the necessity of misspelling the lyrics in order to condense them into the confined space of a CD insert.

5/8 big blow and the bushwackers

what to avoid: No Relation ♪♪½ (Cornbelt Records, 1980, prod. Lou and Peter Berryman) is currently available in cassette only. Every mediocre collection has one gem—but in this case the precious "Squalor" reappears on their greatest-vinyl-hits collection What, Again?! So there's really no reason to pick up No Relation, not unless you'd like to risk offending a family member with "Are You Drinkin' with Me Jesus?"

the rest:
Cupid's Trash Truck ♪♪♪ (Cornbelt Records, 1981)
So Comfortable ♪♪♪½ (Cornbelt Records, 1984) (cassette only) February March ♪♪♪ (Cornbelt Records, 1986) (cassette only) Forward Hey ♪♪♪ (Cornbelt Records, 1988) (cassette only) Your State's Name Here ♪♪♪ (Cornbelt Records, 1988) (cassette only)

influences:
◀◀ Memphis Jug Band, Kweskin Jug Band, Pete Seeger, Leadbelly, Tom Waits, Roger Miller, the Beatles
▶▶ Michael Cooney, Cathy Fink and Marcy Marxer, Claudia Schmidt, the Chenille Sisters, Sally Rogers, Anne Hills, Garrison Keillor

Art Wojtowicz

Big Blow and the Bushwackers

Formed 1993, in Salisbury, MD.

Don Plehn, vocals, accordion, harmonica, trombone, Mister Thing, Funky Diva ektar; Tim Whittemore, vocals, didgeridoo, tuba, recycle bin; Ted Porter, vocals, mandolin, mandola, banjo-mandolin, crumhorn, dahkla, pennywhistle, flute, gobichand, melodica; Ted Watkin, vocals and voice effects, tenor sax, harmonica, musical saw, steel drum, flopophone, percussion, bones, rain stick, jingle beads, chicken shake, steel drum; Mick Haensler, doumbek, congas, percussion, bodhrán.

Some spell it didgeridoo, some spell it didjiridu. It's that long tube that drones and clicks, and for a long time in the U.S. it's been confined mostly to Australian restaurant ads. Maryland's Big Blow and the Bushwackers use the ancient Australian instrument in clever, eclectic arrangements. They straddle the line between serious music and novelty act, but ambitious efforts like their Celtic album suggest they're more than just a sideshow.

what's available: Habagoula ♪♪♪ (Wedgie, 1995) contains mostly original songs and tunes played on a variety of instruments (including something called a Funky Diva ektar). Off Kilter: A Celtic Outerlude ♪♪♪½ (Wedgie, 1997, prod. Ted Porter) is a collection of English and Celtic songs and tunes with inventive, didge-based arrangements. The didge works surprisingly well in Celtic settings; it's not that different from a bagpipe drone. "Jug of Punch" is a highlight.

influences:
◀◀ The Billys, the Chieftains, They Might Be Giants

Pamela Murray Winters

Theodore "Theo" Bikel

Born March 2, 1924, in Vienna, Austria.

With a treasure-trove of folksongs and a mastery of 11 languages, Theodore "Theo" Bikel was one of the originators of "world music." A world-renowned actor, Bikel made his deep voice and benevolent bear-like presence felt in such classic films as The African Queen, Moulin Rouge, A Day to Remember, The Pride and Passion, and The Defiant Ones, for which he was nominated for an Academy award as best supporting actor in 1958. The following year he had the lead role in Rodgers and Hammerstein's The Sound of Music. The cast album, released by Columbia, sold millions of copies. One of folk music's most eclectic performers, Bikel signed with Elektra in the mid-1950s and recorded such thematic albums as From Bondage to Free- dom, Yiddish Theater and Folk Songs, Songs of the Russian Gypsy, and Folk Songs from Just about Everywhere. Bikel's debut solo concert at New York's Town Hall on October 5, 1958 was subsequently released as Bravo Bikel. A native of Austria, Bikel moved with his family to Palestine in 1938. After learning to speak English in hopes of becoming a linguist, and working on a collective farm, he became involved with the Habimah Theater in Tel Aviv and helped to organize the Tel Aviv Chamber Theater in 1943. He continued to refine his acting at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts in London and made his professional debut in a European production of A Streetcar Named Desire. Moving to New York, in 1955, he continued to find memorable roles in movies and plays through the 1960s and 1970s, touring with such shows as Jacques Brel Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris, The Rothschilds, The Good Doctor, and Zorba. The president of Actors Equity from 1973 to 1982, Bikel was appointed to the National Council for the Arts in 1977.

what to buy: Bikel's performance as Baron Von Trapp on the cast album The Sound of Music ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1960) is one reason why Rodgers and Hammerstein's musical was one of the most successful shows in Broadway's history.

what to buy next: Best of Theodore Bikel ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1962) includes cuts from Bikel's earlier albums and showcases his full-bodied vocals and diverse repertoire.

the rest:
Actor's Holiday ♪♪ (Elektra, 1956)
Folk Songs from Just about Everywhere ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1959)
Bravo Bikel ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1959)
From Bondage to Freedom ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1961)
On Tour ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1962)
Folksinger's Choice ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1964)
Yiddish Theater & Folk Songs ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1965/Bainbridge, 1991)
Folk Songs of Israel ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1966)
Songs of the Russian Gypsy ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1967)
New Day ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1969)

influences:
◀◀ Leadbelly, Burl Ives, Pete Seeger
▶▶ Oscar Brand, Will Ackerman

Craig Harris

The Bing Brothers

Formed 1975, in Huntington, WV.

Mike Bing, mandolin, vocals; Tim Bing, old-time banjo, vocals; Dave Bing, fiddle, vocals (1975–1996); Greg Gibson, bass (1975–1994); Joey Broughman, guitar (1975–1978); Joe Roberts, bluegrass banjo (1975–1978); Pat Mullarky, guitar (1978–1981); Dan Wilson, bluegrass banjo (1977–1978); John Blisard, bass, old-time banjo (1994–1996); Roger Cooper, fiddle (1996–present); Danny Arthur, guitar, vocals (1981–1997).

The Bing Brothers originally consisted of the brothers—Mike, Tim, and Dave—and friends Greg Gibson, Joey Broughman, and Joe Roberts. They played regularly at several Huntington venues, such as the Circle Grill, and established themselves as one of West Virginia's finest traditional bands. As the years passed, some band members dropped out and were replaced by other friends who shared their love of traditional music with a bluegrass flair. They toured in Canada in 1979 and in Ireland in 1994. Although they live in different parts of the state, they remain active playing local concerts and teaching at various music camps. In 1997 they organized and conducted a new music camp at Snowshoe Resort in Pocahontas County, dedicated to the traditional music of West Virginia.

what's available: The band's only CD to date is Just for the Sake of It ♪♪♪♪ (JMP Productions, 1993, prod. Jim Martin). At the time of this recording, the band consisted of the three Bing brothers, Greg Gibson, and Danny Arthur. Despite the lack at that time of a bluegrass banjo player, the characteristic Bing Brothers sound—traditional string-band music with shades of bluegrass—comes across loud and clear. This comes partly from the mandolin, as on "Sugar in the Gourd," and partly from the tight vocal harmonies, as on "Cruel Willie." These guys are all superb musicians, and the sound of the band is clean and tight. On "Birdie," learned from the playing of Ohio fiddler Jim Wheeler, Dave's fiddle is smooth and fluid, Mike's mandolin is precise and letter-perfect, and the banjo, guitar, and bass are as steady as the proverbial rock. Tim Bing's banjo playing has a crispness to it that makes you think he's playing with finger picks—he's not, it's clawhammer (a style that employs the thumb and one or more fingers), and it's as good as you're likely to hear. The well-known West Virginia piece "Big Scioty" is done here in a version that ought to be used as a model for aspiring old-time musicians. This band plays high-energy, hard-driving pieces and slower ones equally well. For an old-time band to have stayed together for this long, and through this many personnel changes, is unusual; and to have retained their orientation and characteristic sound as well as they have is truly remarkable. As with all JMP recordings, the sound quality is excellent. This disc might be hard to find in record stores but is available from JMP Productions, PO Box 152, St. Albans, WV 25177.

influences:

- Sherman Hammons, Burl Hammons, Jim Wheeler, Junior Ruggles, Boo Boo Ramey
- Skeeter and the Skidmarks

see also: Dave Bing

Dave Shombert

Dave Bing

Born May 5, 1955, in Huntington, WV.

Dave Bing is a native West Virginia musician who grew up immersed in the traditional music of that state. He started playing guitar at age 6 and by his late teens had added the fiddle and banjo. With brothers Mike and Tim he spent many days and weeks with the legendary Hammons family, particularly Sherman and Burl Hammons. The three brothers and a couple of friends formed an old-time string band, the Bing Brothers, in 1975. Their popularity spread quickly from Huntington to the rest of West Virginia, then to the rest of the country. Along the way, Dave's fiddling developed under the influence of other West Virginia fiddlers such as Glen Smith and George Steele. Now retired from the Bing Brothers band, Dave lives a rural life with his wife and daughters in Roane County. Well known for his patient teaching style with beginning fiddlers, he is a regular at music camps and workshops throughout West Virginia.

what's available: The CD Dave Bing ♪♪♪♪♪ (JMP Records, 1997, prod. Jim Martin) is a compilation of material issued previously on two cassettes, Family and Friends and Fiddlin' Solo, both also produced by Jim Martin. You get a lot of music on this disc—29 tunes totaling more than 70 minutes—but it isn't just a Dave Bing recording. The recording Family and Friends was so named because it consists of Dave Bing's sweet fiddling with the able assistance of family members (brothers Mike and Tim play mandolin and banjo, respectively), and several musician friends. These include Robin Kessinger (guitar), Alan Freeman (mountain dulcimer), Diane Jones (banjo), and several others. The Fiddlin' Solo tape was just that, and Dave has many tunes in his repertoire that are best as solos. An example of that, and one of the highlights of this disc, is the Hammons family tune "Star of Bethlehem," a hauntingly beautiful slow air. This is mountain music born of mountain life—a mix of beauty, sadness, mystery, and a few other emotions. All of that feeling comes through in Dave's playing, especially on this particular tune. There are several old-time standards on this disc, and they're rejuvenated by the Dave Bing touch; "Sandy River Belles" and "June Apple" stand out. The disc also includes West Virginia poet Kirk Judd reciting some of his poems with musical accompaniment. Kirk, a longtime family friend of the Bings, also spent much time with the Hammons family, and two of the poems are about Sherman Hammons. Sherman is long gone, and his way of life is fading fast; this combination of poetry and music gives a glimpse of it to those of us who missed it. If you want to hear one of the best in West Virginia traditional music, this disc is for you. It might be hard to find in music stores, but it can be ordered from JMP Productions, PO Box 152, St. Albans, WV 25177.

worth searching for: You can also hear Bing's fiddling, along with a couple of other Mountain State musicians, on a cassette release by banjo player Ron Mullenex, Sugar in My Coffee ♪♪♪♪ (JMP Records, 1997, prod. Jim Martin). Ron is also a West Virginia native who grew up with the traditional music of the state. Primarily known as a banjo player, he plays a few solo pieces on this tape and is joined by Dave Bing, fiddler Gerry Milnes, and guitarist/banjo player Mark Payne. These four also play as the band named Gandydancer, but this tape focuses on Mullenex. One of the highlights is Bing and Mullenex playing a decidedly different version of the well-worn "Turkey in the Straw."

influences:

- Sherman Hammons, Burl Hammons, Jim Wheeler, Junior Ruggles, George Steele
- Roger Cooper and too many aspiring old-time fiddlers to count

see also: The Bing Brothers

Dave Shombert

Tony Bird

Born February 18, 1945, in Malawi, Africa.

The traditional music and environmental setting of southern Africa has been combined with western influences by Malawi-born white African Tony Bird. His songs have successfully alternated between exposés of African racism and celebrations of a childhood spent amongst monkeys and mango trees. Recorded while he was still living in Africa, Bird's first two albums, Tony Bird and Bird of Paradise, predated Paul Simon's more commercial attempts at incorporating Africa's music by more than a decade. Despite a 16-year struggle with muscular paralysis, Bird, who moved to New York in 1979, has continued to perform in folk music coffeehouses throughout the world. His 1991 album, Sorry Africa, featured musicians from Simon's Grace- land sessions. Bird has been working on a follow-up recording, Precious Africa, for more than four years. Initially intended as an acoustic project, the album has expanded into a full-band recording with background vocals furnished by Ladysmith Black Mambazo.

what to buy: Sorry Africa ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Morris Goldberg, Tony Bird) is one of the all-time classic albums, capturing the scenic vision and lifestyle of Bird's homeland. With musicians from Paul Simon's Graceland sessions blending African and Western musical influences, Bird recalls the struggles and joys of his youth. A personal view of racism is hauntingly expressed in the ballad, "Ahalone Incident," which tells of being stranded at night in a Black township in South Africa, while the title track is an apology for apathy. "Mango Time" and "Rift Valley" offer more optimistic recollections of the dark continent.

what to buy next: Predating Paul Simon's Graceland by a decade, Bird of Paradise ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1978, prod. Tony Bird) looks back fondly at the Africa of Bird's youth with tunes including "Zambezi Zimbabwe," "There's a Bright Dawn," "The Cape of Flowers," and "The Mynah Birds." "Black Brother" is a chilling indictment of apartheid.

the rest:
Tony Bird ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1974)

influences:
◀◀ Hugh Masakela, Johnny Clegg
▶▶ Paul Simon

Craig Harris

editor's choice
13 celtic fiddle albums

Michael Coleman, Michael Coleman (Gael Linn)
Kevin Burke, If the Cap Fits (Mulligan)
John Doherty, The Floating Bow (Claddagh)
Frankie Gavin, Frankie Gavin & Alec Finn (Shanachie)
Liz Carroll, Liz Carroll (Green Linnet)
Tommy Peoples, The Iron Man (Shanachie)
John Carty, John Carty (Shanachie)
James Kelly, Traditional Irish Music (Capelhouse)
Martin Hayes, Under the Moon (Green Linnet)
Various Artists, My Love Is in America—The Boston College Irish Fiddle Festival (Green Linnet)
Various Artists, Milestone at the Garden (Rounder)
Bonnie Rideout, Kindred Spirits (Maggie's Music)
Alasdair Fraser, The Driven Bow (Culburnie)

Joni Bishop

Born in NC.

Nashville-based folksinger Joni Bishop came to folk only after a career in country failed. She briefly had a country deal with CBS Records and she recorded a Billy Sherrill–produced single that charted, but just barely. She remained in Nashville after her record deal fell apart, becoming a regular in the town's songwriter clubs. She later won a New Folk Award at the Kerrville Folk Festival. The daughter of Latvian immigrants, Bishop speaks four languages and often tours Europe, where her albums Everyday Miracles and Endless Threads were released before she signed with Utah-based BWE Entertainment in 1996.

what to buy: Bishop likes to take individual details and weave them together into a larger, more universal picture. That's the theme of nearly every song on Threads ♪♪♪ (BWE, 1997, prod. Joni Bishop), which can be summed up with one line from the title track: "Will the pieces make a pattern when you gather up all those threads?" More often than not, the answer is yes.

what to buy next: Recorded independently in 1995 and released by BWE a year later in the U.S., Everyday Miracles ♪♪♪ (BWE, 1995/1996, prod. Joni Bishop) doesn't have quite the full country band sound that Threads does, but a four-piece band that includes violinist Tammy Rogers and former Lone Justice drummer Don Heffington does a good job fleshing out Bishop's tunes.

the rest:
Endless Christmas ♪♪ (BWE, 1995/1996)

influences:
◀◀ Crow Johnson

Brian Mansfield

Black 47

Formed 1989, in New York, NY.

Larry Kirwan, guitar, keyboards, percussion, lead vocals; Chris Byrne, uilleann pipes, tin whistle, bodhrán, vocals; Fred Parcells, trombone, tin whistle, vocals; Geoffrey Blythe, saxaphone, clarinet; Thomas Hamlin, drums, percussion; Andrew Goodsight, bass (1995–present); Kevin Jenkins, bass (1993–1995), David Conrad, bass (1985–1993).

Black 47 is an Irish-American band combining the attitude of the Big Apple with the pride of Ireland. Essentially an extremely rowdy bar band in the best sense, Black 47 is so named for the peak year of the Irish famine during the nineteenth century. Larry Kirwan, erstwhile playwright hailing from the Emerald Island, and Chris Byrne, a New York City cop with a passion for Irish traditional, rap, and punk music, shared several pints at the hole-in-the-wall Paddy Reilly's while complaining about the dismal state of modern music. At some point that evening, Black 47 was born, and soon thereafter Paddy Reilly's became the band's home. Kirwin and company's reputation for original music and a confrontational attitude soon attracted a loyal following in the city. Kirwin's songs, crowded with lyrics and ecstatic horn arrangements, tend toward the rousing anthem as the band wails like a Memphis soul band trapped in the body of an Irish folk singer. The band's first recording was a self-produced independent release that was basically sold by hand as the band toured Irish hot spots around the country, always landing back at Paddy's. After catching the band one evening, Ric Ocasek volunteered to polish that first album, and Fire of Freedom was completed in a mere three weeks. The CD caught the attention of the New York media, and soon the band found itself a rising star, while still fulfilling its dates at Paddy's. Jerry Harrison arrived for production duty on the second album, and appearances on The Tonight Show and other national media soon led to more widespread recognition. Still a regular at Paddy's, Black 47 recently released their third major label album.

what to buy: The first release is the essential Black 47 album. Fire of Freedom ♪♪♪ (SBK Records, 1992, prod. Ric Ocasek, Larry Kirwin) is Celtic to its core, while still strongly suggesting the band's American roots. Songs range from the swing of "Funky Ceili" to the rabble rousing pint raising of "James Connelly." While the production seems a bit crowded and thin, the band's exuberant personality is well captured. The independent label version of this album, eponymously titled, contains a slightly different song list. An EP version of the SBK album also is available, with a selection of songs from both versions of the first release.

what to buy next: Green Suede Shoes ♪♪♪ (SBK Records, 1996, prod. Larry Kirwin) returns to the band's pub roots, supplying a sweaty, passionate sound supporting the usual free-the-Irish-or-we'll-really-bang-on-the-bodhrán anthems (e.g. "Bobby Sands MP").

the rest:

Home of the Brave ♪♪ (SBK Records, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ The Pogues, Enemy Orchard, Them, Bruce Springsteen, Booker T. & the MG's

▶▶ Goats Don't Shave

Martin Connors

The Black Family /Shay, Michael, and Martin Black

Formed 1965, in Dublin, Ireland.

Mary Black, vocals; Shay Black, vocals, guitar, piano, synthesizer; Michael Black, vocals, tenor banjo, guitar; Martin Black, vocals, fiddle, bouzouki, tenor banjo; Frances Black, vocals.

Hailing from Dublin, the Black Family ranks with the "Clannad/Enya" Brennans on the scale of Ireland's most successful musical clans. As kids, Mary, Shay, Martin, and Michael Black absorbed music from their household. Their father was a fiddle player from Rathlin Island off the coast of Antrim, and their mother was a Dublin-born singer of traditional and music hall songs. Although both parents were amateur musicians, they played and sang with passion, and they passed that passion on to their children. In their teen years, the four Black siblings played together around Dublin, but their family act was broken up in 1977, when Mary went professional with the group Terrace. Terrace later changed their name to General Humbert, and recorded two albums that are now out of print. Mary Black's career took her from General Humbert to De Danann, one of Ireland's top traditional bands, in 1983. In 1986, after several albums with De Danann, she left the band. As she embarked on an extremely successful solo career, Mary also took the opportunity to revive the family group, with an album and a tour. For this version of the Black Family, Mary's youngest sibling, Frances, also participated. By 1989, Mary Black's solo career was moving fast: she was a household name in Ireland, and too busy to play with the family group. The Black Family continued as a quartet: Shay, Michael, Martin, and Frances, who recorded the second Black Family album with harmony vocals and production assistance from Mary. Frances's initial success with the Black Family led her to a gig with the traditional folk group, Arcady, a track on the best-selling compilation, A Woman's Heart, and ultimately to her own successful solo career. By 1995, she, too, was a household name in Ireland, with big-selling albums and sold-out tours under her belt. Still, both she and Mary found time to contribute harmony vocals to the 1995 album of Shay, Michael, and Martin Black, the trio that remained of the Black Family. These days, Michael and Shay Black live in the San Francisco area while their three siblings remain in Ireland. The family rarely gets a chance to sing together anymore, though all five siblings did come together for a reunion concert at Milwaukee's famed Irish Fest in the summer of 1997, to raise money to restore the house on Rathlin island where their father was born.

what to buy: The Black Family ♪♪♪♪♪ (Dara, 1986, prod. Declan Sinnott) was the group's debut, and it is a truly terrific album. It features a variety of different songs, from ballads to Bob Dylan, from sea chanteys to sweet love songs, and from political commentary to Victorian music-hall silliness. The songs on which Mary takes lead vocals show why she's the most famous singer of the lot; "James Connolly" and "Will Ye Gang, Love" are exactly the kind of achy-breaky songs she excels at, and she nails both of them beautifully. Frances's songs are cast in a similar vein, sad and full of longing. The men, on the other hand, sing energetic sea chanteys and music-hall songs along with a few sad numbers like Michael's "Broom of the Cowdenknowes." Musical accompaniment is provided by the Black brothers, as well as by members of Mary's touring band.

what to buy next: What a Time ♪♪♪♪ (Dara, 1995, prod. Maire Breatnach) is the first recording credited to the trio of Shay, Michael, and Martin Black. It's about a fifty-fifty mix of traditional material and contemporary songs by Jez Lowe, Ron Kavana, Kieran Goss, Bob Franke, and other writers. As an added attraction, their mother Patty sings lead on one silly music-hall ditty, in which a young woman's boyfriend dumps her for her widowed mother; the song's title is the bitter observation, "Now I Have to Call Him Father." A lot of the traditional songs, in fact, are anonymous pieces of amusing doggerel from the Victorian music-hall stage, performed with audible good humor by the Blacks. The contemporary songs deal with Ireland's past and present, but also with the universal theme of love: long-distance love, true love, and the fear of losing love. The Black boys' sharp nasal voices suit most of these songs quite well, especially the working-class tough-guy tunes "Down Our Street," "London Danny," and "The Recruiting Sergeant." The instrumental backing is by the Blacks, with Maire Breatnach on fiddle, Mairtin O'Connor on accordion, Noel Eccles on percussion, and others. The singing and arrangements are full of ebullient energy, making this a fun listen. Time for Touching Home ♪♪♪ (Dara, 1989, prod. Declan Sinnott, Mary Black) was recorded by the quartet of Shay, Michael, Martin, and Frances, with harmony vocals and production assistance by Mary. It features a panoply of contemporary folk from Irish, North American, and British songwriters, including Nanci Griffith, Jimmy McCarthy, Jez Lowe, Leon Rosselson, Stan Rogers, and Dougie MacClean. In this it marks a shift away from older traditional material, but also includes a few old sea chanteys and a version of "Peat Bog Soldiers" from the Irish tradition. The backing ensemble includes such prominent Irish traditional musicians as Maire Breatnach (fiddle) and Peter Brown (uilleann pipes), along with the Black brothers and members of Mary's band. All the arrangements are tastefully done, and the voices, as always, shine.

influences:

◀◀ Nanci Griffith, Jez Lowe, Ron Kavana

▶▶ Mary Black, Frances Black

see also: Mary Black, Arcady

Steve Winick

Frances Black

See: Arcady

Mary Black

Born May 22, 1955, in Ireland.

Singing in an emotionally rich soprano brogue, Mary Black is one of the preeminent Irish vocalists. A member of General Humbert in the 1970s and De Danann in the 1980s, and a soloist since, Black has successfully bridged the musical traditions of her native country and the lyrical poetics of modern singer-songwriters. Black grew up surrounded by music. Her father, who hailed from a small island off the northern coast of Ireland, played fiddle, while her mother sang in the music halls of Dublin. Taught to sing folk songs at the age of eight by a brother, she sang with her four siblings in small taverns in Dublin. After recording two albums with the tradition-rooted Irish band General Humbert, Black recorded a self-titled debut album in 1982. Produced by Declan Sinnott, the album reached number four on the Irish music charts. Joining one of Ireland's most successful bands, De Danann, she performed in the United States and sang (along with Maura O'Connell) with the band for three years, recording several albums, including Anthem, winner of an award for "Irish album of 1983." Black balanced her collaborations with De Danann with her own work. She released the solo albums Collected and Without the Fanfare in 1984 and 1985. Shortly after being named "Irish entertainer of 1986," she left the band to concentrate on her own career. Her solo album, By the Time It Gets Dark, attained multi-platinum status and she was voted "Ireland's best female artist of 1987 and 1988." Her album No Frontiers remained on the Irish top 30 charts for more than a year, while Babes in the Woods spent six months on the United States Adult Alternative charts in 1989. In 1993 The Holy Ground was voted "Best Irish album of the year" and Black expanded her following with several cuts on the million-selling showcase of female Celtic singers, A Woman's Heart. In the spring of 1995 Black joined Joan Baez at the Bottom Line to record duet versions of "Ring Them Bells" and "Song for Ireland" for Baez's album Ring Them Bells. Black also helped produce and sing back-up on several albums recorded by the Black Family.

what to buy: On Babes in the Woods ♪♪♪♪ (Gifthorse, 1991, prod. Declan Sennott), Black turns songs by Richard Thompson ("Dimming of the Day"), Joni Mitchell ("Urge for Going"), and Noel Brazil ("Golden Mile," "Might As Well Be a Slave," and the title track) into very personal statements.

what to buy next: Collected ♪♪♪ (Gifthorse, 1984, prod. Declan Sinnott) spotlights Black's ability to make traditional Irish tunes, including "She Moved through the Fair," sound contemporary.

the rest:
(With General Humbert) Dolphin ♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1975)
(With General Humbert) II ♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1978)
Mary Black ♪♪♪ (Gifthorse, 1982)
Without the Fanfare ♪♪♪ (Gifthorse, 1985)
By the Time It Gets Dark ♪♪♪ (Gifthorse, 1987)
No Frontiers ♪♪♪ (Gifthorse, 1989)
The Holy Ground ♪♪♪ (Gifthorse, 1993)
Circus ♪♪♪ (Grapevine, 1995)
Looking Back ♪♪♪ (Curb, 1995)
Shine ♪♪♪ (Curb, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Sandy Denny, Billie Holiday, Bonnie Raitt
▶▶ Maura O'Connell, Triona Ni Domhnaill, Nanci Griffith

see also: De Danann, the Black Family

Craig Harris

Blackie and the Rodeo Kings

See: Stephen Fearing

Becky Blackley

Born June 10, 1947, in Long Island, NY.

According to FRETS Magazine, "Becky Blackley has been as closely identified with the autoharp as Julia Child with French cooking." Her interest in the performing arts started at age five when she made her television debut as a member of the "peanut gallery" on the Howdy Doody Show. In 1980 she founded The Autoharpoholic magazine, the first international autoharp publication, and subsequently published The Autoharp Book, the only comprehensive history of the first 100 years of the instrument. Her teaching and publishing credits have made her, along with Maybelle Carter, Bryan Bowers, and Mike Seeger, one of the instrument's seminal champions and a major reason for what Bluegrass Unlimited calls "the newfound respectability of the autoharp." She was inducted into the Autoharp Hall of Fame in 1996.

what's available: Gathering the Harvest ♪♪♪♪ (San Bruno, 1995, prod. David Maloney, Becky Blackley) is Blackley's only CD release to date, but it is an excellent—and at 60 minutes long, very generous—mixture of contemporary songs by the likes of Hazel Dickens, Hugh Moffat, Lori Holland, Dolly Parton, and Jimmy Buffett, combined with a sampling of traditional and original material. Producer David Maloney adds guitar and vocals and there are guest appearances by musicians such as Sally Van Meter on dobro—but Blackley's autoharp playing is out front.

worth searching for: The Flower of Loudoun County ♪♪♪ (San Bruno, 1986, prod. Becky Blackley), available only on LP, is Blackley's first album; it spotlights her fine autoharp playing and is available from i.a.d. productions, P.O. Box 504, Brisbane, CA 94005.

influences:
◀◀ Maybelle Carter, Mike Seeger, Harvey Reid
▶▶ Julie Davis, Karen Mueller

Neal Walters

Norman Blake /Norman & Nancy Blake /Norman Blake & Tony Rice

Born March 10, 1938, in Chattanooga, TN.

Norman Blake is a singer-songwriter who also happens to be a talented multi-instrumentalist. Blake plays mandolin, mandola, fiddle, viola, and dobro, but he is especially well known for his prowess as a flat-picking acoustic guitarist in the Doc Watson vein. He began playing guitar at the age of 11, and by the time he was 16, he was performing with the Dixieland Drifters, who appeared on radio stations in Knoxville and Chattanooga, Tennessee, and on television in Rome, Georgia. In 1960, Blake got a steady gig as a member of June Carter's touring band. That same year he also played dobro and mandolin for Hylo Brown on the WWVA Wheeling Jamboree in West Virginia before moving to Nashville. After a brief stint in the military between 1961 and 1963, Blake became friends with country music legend Johnny Cash and subsequently became the Man in Black's guitar picker of choice in dozens of his recordings. The two musicians hit it off extremely well, and in 1969, Blake landed a job as Cash's house band guitarist on the singer's weekly television series on ABC. During the late 1960s and early 1970s, Blake also became a much sought-after session musician, and his trademark flatpicking adorned recordings by Bob Dylan (Nashville Skyline), Kris Kristofferson, John Hartford (the classic Aereo Plain), and Joan Baez (the 1970 hit single "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down"). In 1971, Blake returned to his bluegrass roots and became John Hartford's road and studio guitarist. The following year he teamed up with a host of Nashville notables to lend support to the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band in the recording of their landmark triple album project, Will the Circle Be Unbroken. In 1974 Blake embarked on a solo career with the recording of Back Home in Sulphur Springs. Subsequent solo recordings on the Rounder, Flying Fish, and Shanachie labels continued to showcase his flair for lightning-fast flatpicking coupled with syncopated rhythms. Through the years, Blake has also recorded a number of albums with his wife, Nancy, who is also an accomplished multi-instrumentalist and a master of the cello, mandolin, guitar, bass, fiddle, and accordion.

what to buy: Whiskey before Breakfast ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1976, prod. Norman Blake) is really a duo album that features guitarist Charlie Collins.

what to buy next: The Norman and Nancy Blake Compact Disc ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1986, prod. Norman Blake) teams the super picker with his wife Nancy on cello and mandolin. Blake and Tony Rice's Blake & Rice ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987, prod. Norman Blake) is a guitar player's delight, as Blake exchanges runs, fills, and riffs with Rice, another super picker from the Doc Watson/Clarence White school.

the rest:
Back Home in Sulphur Springs ♪♪ (Rounder, 1974/1995)
Full Moon on the Farm ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1981)
Original Underground Music from the Mysterious South ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1983)
Nashville Blues ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1984)
Lighthouse on the Shore ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1985)
Slow Train through Georgia ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
(With Nancy Blake) Natasha's Waltz ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
(With Nancy Blake) Blind Dog ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988)
(With Tony Rice) Norman Blake and Tony Rice 2 ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990)
Fields of November ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)
(With Nancy Blake) Just Gimme Somethin' I'm Used To ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992)
(With Nancy Blake) While Passing along This Way ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994) Chattanooga Sugar Babe ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Doc Watson
▶▶ Vince Gill, Steve Wariner

Rick Petreycik

The Blasters

See: Dave Alvin

Blind Blake

Born Arthur Phelps, 1890s, in Jacksonville, FL. Died 1930s.

Though little is known of his life and death, Blind Blake was one of the leading exponents of the ragtime-influenced dance music that gained wide popularity along the Southeastern seaboard states in the 1920s and 1930s. In stark contrast to the dense and driving rhythms that characterize Delta blues, Blake played in a relaxed, fingerpicking style. For most numbers, he employed a syncopated accompaniment with his thumb on the bass strings while fingering complex figures on the treble strings. Aspects of his inimitable technique influenced Blind Boy Fuller, the Rev. Gary Davis, Buddy Moss, and others of the Piedmont blues school. He began his recording career in August 1926 and became one of Paramount's best-selling artists, turning out 80 titles over a mere six-year period. His adept picking is showcased in such tunes as "Blind Arthur's Breakdown," "Scoodle Loo Doo," "Southern Rag," and "Righteous Blues," the latter a particularly adroit example of his intuitive grasp of harmony. Always an adaptable player, Blake proved his competence in a number of stylistic contexts—he recorded as an accompanist with vaudeville artists such as Ma Rainey,

6/6 ralph blizard

Papa Charlie Jackson, and Leola B. Wilson, and made some classic piano-guitar duet recordings, most notably the superb "Hastings Street." Blake even cut a handful of jazz-flavored sides with clarinetist Johnny Dodds, including "Southbound Rag," "Hot Potatoes," and "C.C. Pill Blues," each an awe-inspiring masterpiece. While much of his popularity can be credited to his instrumental prowess, Blake's penchant for outrageous and occasionally risqué lyrics ("Too Tight," "Notoriety Woman Blues," "Righteous Blues") also helps to account for his high sales figures. Indeed, few musicians have been able to duplicate the multifarious scope of Blake's success.

what to buy: For an exceptional sampler showcasing the breadth of Blake's musical legacy, one can do no better than The Master of Ragtime Guitar: Essential Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Indigo Records, 1996). "He's in the Jailhouse Now" and "That Will Never Happen No More" hail from his repertoire of songs rooted in the vaudeville tradition, while "Early Morning Blues" and "Cold Hearted Mama" are proof of his authority in the blues arena. The fabulous recording made with pianist Charlie Spand, "Hastings Street," is included, along with three from the 1928 jazz session with Johnny Dodds and Jimmy Bertrand. There are plenty of incendiary finger-picking workouts on this disc, including "Diddie Wa Diddie," "Blind Arthur's Breakdown," "Come on Boys Let's Do That Messin' Around," "Skeedle Loo Doo," and "Police Dog Blues." Ragtime Guitar's Foremost Fingerpicker ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1990, prod. Nick Perls) duplicates his best guitar rags, though on several numbers he is featured in a supporting role with various vaudeville singers. Missing is his glorious debut recording of "West Coast Blues," though the presence of the riotous and politically incorrect "Righteous Blues" more than makes up for the omission.

what to buy next: For a comprehensive look at Blake's recorded output, pick up Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order, Vols. 1–4 ♪♪♪♪ (Document, 1991, prod. Johnny Parth). While not for the casual fan, Blake's music is engaging enough to sustain itself over four discs. Consider this the primer for any serious student of fingerstyle guitar.

what to avoid: Although there is much to enjoy on Blind Blake: The Accompanist ♪♪♪ (Wolf, prod. Hannes Folterbauer), one must tolerate the rather awful singing of Daniel Brown as well as dubs from some well-worn 78s. The novelty dialogue between Blake and Charlie Jackson, "Papa Charlie and Blind Blake Talk about It, Parts 1 & 2," while interesting, becomes tiresome with repeated listenings.

the rest:
The Best of Blind Blake ♪♪♪♪ (Collectables, 1995)
The Best of Blind Blake ♪♪♪♪ (Wolf, 1995)

influences:
- Nineteenth-century black dance music, minstrel/medicine shows, jazz ensembles
- Josh White, Big Bill Broonzy, Leon Redbone, Ry Cooder

D. Thomas Moon

Ralph Blizard /Ralph Blizard and the New Southern Ramblers

Born December 5, 1918, in Kingsport, TN. New Southern Ramblers formed 1982.

Ralph Blizard, fiddle, vocals; Phil Jamison, guitar, bass; John Herrmann, banjo, bass; Gordy Hinners, banjo; John Lilly, bass, guitar, mandolin.

Ralph Blizard formed his current band in 1982, fiddling in a style he refers to as "Appalachian Mountain Longbow." While in high school Blizard played with his band, the Southern Ramblers, on radio stations throughout Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia, then left the music business for 25 years to work at the Eastman/Kodak Company. Upon retirement he re-formed the Ramblers and toured the country, participating in numerous festivals and workshops and promoting the group's distinct brand of traditional Appalachian music.

what to buy: Southern Ramble ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Phil Jamison, Gordy Hinners) is a delightful mix of traditional tunes and a few originals by Blizard and other band members.

the rest:
Blizard Train ♪♪♪ (June Appal, 1989) (cassette only)

influences:
- The Carter Family, Doc Addington
- The Freight Hoppers, Mac Benford and the Woodshed All-Stars

Stephen L. Betts

Rory Block

Born Aurora Block, November 6, 1949, in Princeton, NJ.

Though she tried recording disco and R&B songs in the 1970s, Block found her muse in the Rev. Gary Davis, Son House, and Robert Johnson in 1981 and has rarely strayed beyond acoustic blues ever since. She's an excellent guitarist and interpreter who loves to faithfully reproduce well-known classics like Skip James's "Devil Got My Woman" and unearth obscure gems like Mattie Delaney's "Tallahatchie Blues." Many compare Block to Bonnie Raitt, which is apt in so far as they're both women who play the blues. But Block seems perfectly comfortable staying underneath the pop radar screen, and most of her influences recorded in the 1920s and 1930s. Block's father owned a sandal shop in Greenwich Village, so when she was growing up in the 1960s, she got to meet such folkies as Bob Dylan and Joan Baez. She was more inspired, though, by the visits from Son House, "Mississippi" John Hurt, and Fred McDowell, who were in town for blues festivals.

what to buy: High Heeled Blues ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Rory Block, John Sebastian) kick-started her blues career, and you can almost hear Block's sense of relief that she can play country blues covers instead of the pop slop in which she used to dabble. Tornado ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995) is slightly more pop-oriented, but Block's growing songwriting skills produce the country-blues gem "Gone Woman Blues," inspired by O.J. Simpson's murdered wife, Nicole Brown.

what to buy next: Blues history buffs will enjoy Gone Woman Blues: The Country Blues Collection ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995), with its three Robert Johnson covers (including the stark "Hellhound on My Trail") and songs by Charlie Patton, Skip James, Blind Willie McTell, and many others.

what to avoid: The Early Tapes 1975/1976 ♪♪ (Alacazam!, 1989, prod. Rory Block) are interesting, but Block still hadn't discovered her ultimate inner muse.

the rest:
Rhinestones and Steel Strings ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1983/1990)
Best Blues & Originals ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1987)
House of Hearts ♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
Blue Horizon ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
I've Got a Rock in My Sock! ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
Mama's Blues ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991)
Ain't I a Woman ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1992)
Angel of Mercy (Rounder, 1994)
Best Blues & Originals, Vol. 2 (Munich, 1994)
When a Woman Gets the Blues ♪♪ (Rounder, 1995)
Turning Point (Munich, 1995)

worth searching for: Block's children's record, Color Me Wild ♪♪♪ (Alacazam!, 1990), is fun and fresh and full of non-condescending blues humor.

influences:
◀◀ Son House, Robert Johnson, Tommy Johnson, Charley Patton, Rev. Gary Davis, Mississippi John Hurt, Stefan Grossman

Steve Knopper

Blood Oranges /Cheri Knight /Wooden Leg /Beacon Hillbillies

Formed 1987, in Boston, MA.

Cheri Knight, guitar, vocals; Jimmy Ryan, vocals, mandolin; Mark Spencer, guitar.

Combining the efforts of three significantly talented musicians, the Blood Oranges were somewhat like the Buffalo Springfield of alternative country music, releasing only a couple of albums that were a few years ahead of their time but served as a proving ground for its members' future projects. By the mid 1990s, "alternative country" had became an over-used buzz word, but the Blood Oranges had created an intriguing, inventive, and eminently listenable hybrid of rock, bluegrass, country, punk, and pop from the decade's outset. By 1995, however, side projects began to pull band members in different directions; though they've never formally called it quits, and indeed have hinted at the possibility of future Blood Oranges records, all three have kept themselves plenty busy during the last couple years. Jimmy Ryan continued working with a more specifically bluegrass-oriented act called the Beacon Hillbillies and recorded an album of his own (with considerable help from Mark Spencer) under the name Wooden Leg. He's also toured with Catie Curtis. Cheri Knight's solo debut attracted major-label interest, and Spencer became a guitarist-for-hire of considerable note with the likes of Freedy Johnston, Lisa Loeb, and Kelly Willis, as well as furthering his career as a producer out of his own home studio.

what to buy: The Crying Tree ♪♪♪♪ (East Side Digital, 1994, prod. Eric "Roscoe" Ambel) is the apex of the Blood Oranges' output, a confident, inspired collection of instantly catchy rockers, darkly haunting ballads, and bluegrassy stompers. Knight's solo debut, The Knitter ♪♪♪½ (ESD, 1996, prod. Eric "Roscoe" Ambel), proved she was more than capable of carrying the load on her own, focusing on the more song-oriented side of the Oranges' material and including such should-be hits and classics as "Light in the Road" and "Last Barn Dance."

what to buy next: Corn River ♪♪♪ (ESD, 1990, prod. Paul Kolderie, Blood Oranges), the band's debut, is a bit more tenta-

6/8 luka bloom

the 1950s

As the postwar decade began, Sing Out! magazine emerged from the house organ of the People's Songs Collective. The Weavers, comprising Pete Seeger, Ronnie Gilbert, Lee Hays, and Fred Hellerman, were the toast of the pop charts with a vibrant form of folk music that blended the traditional repertoire with a strong contemporary political conscience. A couple of years later, the group was in disarray as they became targets of the McCarthy hearings and their bookings and recording contracts dried up. The middle '50s were lean times for folk music per se, although artists like Harry Belafonte and Burl Ives (who tarnished his folkie credibility by turning in a list of names to the House Un-American Activities Committee) kept a toned-down version of this music in the public eye. By the latter half of the decade, the Weavers had recouped their audience, and the folk revival began to build steam with the "striped shirt" brigade, consisting of groups like the Kingston Trio, the Limeliters, and the Smothers Brothers, crossing over from the coffeehouse circuit to the mainstream. When the Kingston Trio hit the top of the pop charts with their somewhat homogenized rendition of the murder ballad "Tom Dooley," the genre again became, almost overnight, a significant economic factor in the popular music industry. The fifties were also an important decade for traditional music recordings, with many of the fruits of Alan and John Lomax's field expeditions seeing release for the first time, and the appearance, in 1952, of Folkways' landmark Anthology of American Folk Music.

Michael Parrish

tive then The Crying Tree but proves the Oranges were onto something quite early in their career; the disc also introduced songwriter Jim McGinniss's classic ballad "Thief." Wooden Leg ♪♪♪ (ESD, 1996, prod. Mark Spencer), in effect a Ryan solo disc, is less immediately catchy than Knight's albums but has its own allure in more of a quirky string-band vein.

the rest:
Lone Green Valley ♪♪♪ (EP) (ESD, 1992)

solo outings:
Cheri Knight:
Northeast Kingdom ♪♪♪½ (E Squared, 1998)

Beacon Hillbillies:
Duffield Station ♪♪½ (ESD, 1992)
More Songs of Love and Murder ♪♪½ (ESD, 1994)
A Better Place ♪♪½ (ESD, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Jason & the Scorchers, Rank & File, the Clash, Patsy Cline
▶▶ Marty Stuart, Buckets, Angry Johnny & the Killbillies

Peter Blackstock

Luka Bloom

Born Barry Moore, May 23, 1955, in Newbridge, County Kildare, Ireland.

Brother of Irish minstrel Christy Moore, Barry Moore began his career in the pubs of Dublin before moving to Washington, D.C., in 1987. There he became Luka Bloom and a favorite on the Eastern Seaboard club circuit, perfecting an intense, explosive rhythmic guitar attack and a mix of introspective and socially aware folk-rock. His style owes as much to the romanticism and mysticism of his Irish roots as it does to traditional folk balladeers like Woody Guthrie and modern folksters such as Joan Armatrading and Joni Mitchell. Although Bloom is a charismatic, riveting live performer, his recordings have increasingly emphasized somber melodies and reflective lyrics that only suggest the power he brings on stage. "Life is not a sterile business," he says, explaining his love of performing. "Life is blood and guts and shit and heartbreak, and it's fucked up, and it's a mess. I think you can articulate that better sweating in a club with a wooden instrument in your hand."

what to buy: Although Bloom's debut album is stirring, his second, The Acoustic Motorbike ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1992, prod. Paul Barrett) is more immediately engaging. Recorded in Ireland with musical assists by brother Christy and the Hothouse Flowers, the album peaks with the passionate Celtic rap of L.L. Cool J's "I Need Love" and the strumming charm of the title song.

what to buy next: Bloom came to national note with Riverside ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1990, prod. Jeffrey Wood) for good reason: it's a striking first album, notable for its earnestness, melodies, and Irish soul. "You Couldn't Have Come at a Better Time" and "Delirious" immediately grab the listener, while the remainder of the album stands up to repeated listening. Contributors include Irish American fiddle whiz Eileen Ivers and Liam 'O Maonlai on bodhrán.

the rest:
Turf ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Boomtown Rats, the Cowboy Junkies, Joan Armatrading, Suzanne Vega, Michelle Shocked, Joni Mitchell

▶▶ Tracy Chapman, Hothouse Flowers, Sinéad O'Connor

Martin Connors

Michael Bloomfield

Born July 28, 1944, in Chicago, IL. Died February 15, 1981, in San Francisco, CA.

Born into an enormously wealthy Chicago family, Michael Bloomfield helped push the electric guitar into the forefront of the rock and blues revolution of the 1960s. Bloomfield immersed himself in Chicago's blues scene as a teenager and endeared himself to the older players with his sincerity, his passionate support of the music, and his enthusiastic ability to quickly learn what they taught him. His charisma, powerful attack, and lyrical style, which he learned from Albert King, Muddy Waters, and others, while not commercially successful, was highly influential. He backed James Cotton and joined Paul Butterfield's hard-nosed blues unit in time for the group's seminal appearance at the Newport Folk Festival in 1965. That same year his explosive guitar work kicked Bob Dylan's Highway 61 Revisited into the stratosphere. Bloomfield's contributions to the Butterfield Band were immense, especially the modal-scaled "East-West," but he left in 1967 to form the Electric Flag. He lasted for one album before making Super Session with Stephen Stills and Al Kooper and The Live Adventures of Michael Bloomfield and Al Kooper, both of which greatly raised his reputation. After the much-admired Flag, Bloomfield's career settled into a much quieter mode. He toured the country as a solo act, often dividing his shows between acoustic guitar and piano songs that displayed his encyclopedic knowledge of blues and American traditional music; in his home town of San Francisco he performed electric blues with a band that often included friend Mark Naftalin on keyboards. He recorded a number of albums, wrote soundtrack music for low-budget films (The Trip, You Are What You Eat, Steelyard Blues), and wrote the nonfiction book Me and Big Joe (1980) that chronicled his relationship with bluesman Joe Lee "Big Joe" Williams. Bloomfield was both a lifelong insomniac, a condition for which he had an open-ended perscription for sleeping pills, and an occasional abuser of alcohol. His apparently accidental death in 1981 is attributed to these factors.

what to buy: In general, Bloomfield was only as good as his surroundings dictated, so it's not a surprise his best work is in ensemble situations. Start with The Lost Sessions ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1964/Rhino, 1995, prod. Paul Rothchild) and East-West ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1966, prod. Paul Rothchild, Mark Abramson, Barry Friedman), his early recordings with the Paul Butterfield Band, and follow that with Super Session ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1968, prod. Al Kooper) and The Live Adventures of Michael Bloomfield and Al Kooper ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1969, prod. Al Kooper). The Electric Flag, with its hard-bitten horn section, provided a nice backdrop for Bloomfield's charms. Check out Old Glory, the Best of Electric Flag ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1995) and A Long Time Coming ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1968/1988, prod. John Court).

what to buy next: Dylan's Highway 61 Revisited ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1965, prod. Bob Johnston), is an excellent example of his sideman abilities, especially on the blues numbers. While none is truly great, Don't Say That I Ain't Your Man! Essential Blues 1964–69 ♪♪♪½ (Columbia/Legacy, 1994, prod. various), It's Not Killing Me ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1969), and Living in the Fast Lane ♪♪♪½ (Waterhouse, 1981, prod. Norman Dayron) offer flashes of brilliance.

what to avoid: Triumvirate ♪♪ (Columbia, 1973/1989) is a jam with Dr. John and John Hammond that just doesn't catch the fire it should have.

the rest:
Try It Before You Buy It ♪♪½ (CBS, 1975)
Between the Hard Place & the Ground ♪♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1979)
The Best of Michael Bloomfield ♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1987)
I'm with You Always ♪♪♪ (Demon, 1987)
American Hero ♪♪♪ (Thunderbolt, 1991)
Blues, Gospel and Ragtime Guitar Instrumentals ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993)
The Gospel of Blues ♪♪♪ (Laserlight, 1994)
The Root of Blues ♪♪♪ (Laserlight, 1994)
Rx for the Blues ♪♪½ (Eclipse, 1996)
Gospel of Truth ♪♪♪♪ (Thunderbolt, 1997) worth searching for: Never miss a chance to see Festival, an obscure, long-out-of-print film on the Newport fest in the early 1960s. It includes part of the infamous 1965 Butterfield Band workshop, an interview with a bushy-tailed Bloomfield about his love for the blues, and plenty of other worthwhile performances by famous bluesers of that era.

70 michael bloomfield

influences:

◀◀ B.B. King, Albert King, Muddy Waters, Elmore James, Son House, T-Bone Walker

▶▶ Peter Green, Bob Dylan, the Band, Blood, Sweat and Tears, Chicago, Black Crowes, Buddy Miles

Leland Rucker

Blowzabella

Formed 1978, at the London College of Furniture, London, England. Disbanded c. 1990.

The original group consisted of Jon Swayne, bagpipes, woodwinds; Bill O'Toole, bagpipes, woodwinds; Sam Palmer, hurdy-gurdy; Dave Armitage, melodeon, percussion. The final lineup consisted of Andy Cutting, melodeons, percussion; Nigel Eaton, hurdy-gurdies, 'cello, percussion; Jo Freya, vocals, saxophone, clarinet; Paul James, soprano saxophone, bagpipes, rauschfeife; Ian Luff, guitars, cittern; Jon Swayne, saxophones, bagpipes.

A far cry from the typical folk music produced in England, Blowzabella's distinctive sound is carried on the base of a drone. Using bagpipes and hurdy-gurdy to establish this core, the group explores the driving and almost primitive sound to its fullest through the interweaving of dance melodies over the drones. The result is hypnotic and extremely unusual. Sounding almost as much Middle Eastern as English, the group pulls on a variety of traditional roots for the basis of its music, including Eastern European, English, and Irish influences. The original group, a bunch of musical instrument craftsmen, set out to combine traditional dance melodies with the use of the drone, which it accomplished with great success. The later incarnations of the band explored this further through the use of original material and further harmonic sounds. Although the sound of the band remained easily recognizable and distinctive throughout its years, the growth and maturity of the music in later years reflects a sophistication not associated with the original line-up.

what's available: Blowzabella's only album currently out on an American label, Vanilla ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1990, prod. Paul James), represents Blowzabella at its best. After years of exploring dance music, this exciting album shows how far the group had come in its 12 years. Exciting and highly danceable, the group explores more complex harmonies in its instrumental work and displays strong emotion in song through vocalist Jo Freya. The result is a more varied, highly textured album, still highlighting the Blowzabella trademark of drone-based music.

worth searching for: Compilation ♪♪♪ (Osmosys, 1995) chronicles the history of the band, featuring two or three cuts from each of their six original albums. This album gives a good feel for the group's consistency of sound, and the liner notes provide a history of the band and its albums. A Richer Dust ♪♪♪ (Osmosys, 1988) includes "Wars of the Roses Suite," which was written on a grant from a local arts council to commemorate the 500th anniversary of the Battle of Stoke Field. This piece marks a major turning point for the band, where confidence in its own material soared, and it began to explore more concert-like music rather than strictly dance material.

influences:

◀◀ John Kirkpatrick, Ashley Hutchings, Roger Nicholson

▶▶ Tanteeka

Jo Hughey Morrison

Blue Highway

Formed 1994, in Johnson City, TN.

Shawn Lane, fiddle, mandolin, vocals; Wayne Taylor, bass, vocals; Tim Stafford, guitar, vocals; Rob Ickes, dobro, vocals; Jason Burleson, banjo, mandolin.

Arguably the most impressive new bluegrass band of the 1990s, Blue Highway had a breakthrough year in 1996, winning awards from the International Bluegrass Music Association for Best Emerging Artist and Album of the Year. (Rob Ickes also won solo honors for Dobro Player of the Year.) Organized by five youthful musicians (with experience in the bands of Alison Krauss, Doyle Lawson, and Ricky Skaggs) who wanted to perform mostly original material in a democratic setting, Blue Highway is blessed with three outstanding lead singers (Taylor, Lane, and Stafford), several good songwriters, an approach that's modern yet rooted in traditional bluegrass. Theirs is a captivating sound that's unlike any other band in bluegrass.

what's available: It's a Long, Long Road ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1995, prod. Blue Highway), the band's award-winning debut, spent several months at the top of the national bluegrass charts, spawning three Top 10 singles, "In the Gravel Yard," "Lonesome Pine," and the title song. Other highlights include Wayne Taylor's historical saga "Before the Cold Wind Blows" and Tim Stafford's "Farmer's Blues." Wind to the West ♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1996, prod. Blue Highway) builds on the band's strong debut with seven good new songs, a Merle Haggard cover, and a foray into a more country sound on "I Can Stand the Truth." Exceptional performances on a pair of old gospel songs, "Two Coats" and "God Moves in a Windstorm," demonstrate the band's feel for traditional material. With songs like "Gettin' Over You" and the Civil War tale "Walked All the Way Home," the group's third album, Midnight Storm ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1998, prod. Blue Highway), left little doubt that Blue Highway was one of the great young bluegrass groups of the '90s.

Michael Bloomfield (© Peter Ampft/Ken Settle)

influences:

◀◀ Nashville Bluegrass Band, Alison Krauss, Doyle Lawson

▶▶ Rarely Herd

Jon Hartley Fox and Brian Mansfield

Blue Sky Boys

Formed in Hickory, NC.

Bill Bolick, vocals; Earl Bolick, vocals.

Bill and Earl Bolick's singing style—close harmony coupled with simple guitar accompaniment—influenced dozens of duet acts through the years, including the Louvins, the Delmores, and even the Everly Brothers. In 1936 Bill and Earl (who chose a name—the Blue Sky Boys—that didn't include "Brothers" to set themselves apart from other brother duets) were working on radio station WGST in Atlanta, when they first recorded for Victor. After serving in World War II they resumed their career, continuing to record for RCA, until they disbanded in 1951. By 1963, however, the Blue Sky Boys were back together, propelled by the old-time/folk revival then sweeping the country. Their last recordings were made for the Starday label in 1975.

what to buy: The Blue Sky Boys ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Ken Irwin), taken from the Bolicks' 1975 Starday sessions, is a great place to start. Forty years into their career the Blue Sky Boys' harmony is still awe-inspiring.

what to buy next: In Concert, 1964 ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Bill Bolick, Ken Irwin) includes several of the duo's best-known songs, as well as a few they'd never recorded before. Another feature is Earl's portrayal of hayseed comic character Uncle Josh, a regular part of their early radio shows.

the rest:

On Radio, Volume One ♪♪♪ (Copper Creek, 1993)
On Radio, Volume Two ♪♪♪♪ (Copper Creek, 1993)
The Sunny Side of Life ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993)
Farm and Fun Time Favorites, Volume One ♪♪♪♪ (Copper Creek, 1994)
Farm and Fun Time Favorites, Volume Two ♪♪♪♪ (Copper Creek, 1994)
Treasury of Rare Song Gems ♪♪♪♪ (Starday, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Bradley Kincaid, Mac & Bob

▶▶ The Louvin Brothers, the Whitstein Brothers

Stephen L. Betts

The Bluegrass Cardinals

Formed 1974, in Los Angeles, CA. Disbanded 1997.

Don Parmley, banjo (1974–96); David Parmley, guitar (1974–93); Bill Bryson, bass; Randy Graham, mandolin; Herschel Sizemore, mandolin; John Davis, bass; Warren Blair, fiddle; Norman Wright, mandolin; Larry Stephenson, mandolin; Ernie Sykes, bass; Tim Smith, fiddle; Ronnie Bowman, bass; Greg Luck, guitar; Keith Pyrtle, guitar; Lester Deaton, bass; others.

Banjo player Don Parmley performed with several Los Angeles–area bluegrass bands, including the Hillmen (with Vern Gosdin and Chris Hillman), before forming the traditional-style Bluegrass Cardinals with son David in 1974. David left the band in 1993 to (unsuccessfully) pursue a career in country music; he eventually formed the bluegrass band David Parmley, Scott Vestal and Continental Divide. The Cardinals disbanded in January 1997 with Don Parmley's retirement.

what's available: The Bluegrass Cardinals ♪♪♪½ (Copper Creek, 1997), the group's debut, originally released on Sierra, is the only Bluegrass Cardinals album currently available on CD.

worth searching for: Harder to find but also worth a listen are Welcome to Virginia (Rounder, 1977), Livin' in the Good Old Days (CMH, 1978), and Sunday Mornin' Singin' (CMH, 1980).

influences:

◀◀ The Hillmen

▶▶ David Parmley, Scott Vestal & Continental Divide

Douglas Fulmer

Hugh Blumenfeld

Born October 11, 1958, in Jamaica, NY.

Poetic lyrics, sensitive vocals, and melodic fingerstyle acoustic guitar playing has made Jamaica, New York–born and Connecticut-based singer-songwriter Hugh Blumenfeld one of the spearheads of the Greenwich Village folk music scene of the 1990s. With a master's degree in creative writing from the University of Chicago and a Ph.D. in poetics from New York University, Blumenfeld may be one of contemporary folk music's most literate purveyors. An associate editor of Fast Folk Musical Magazine (1986–91, 1996–97) and a former professor of poetry and songwriting at NYU, Bard College, and Eastern Connecticut State University, Blumenfeld didn't turn to music full-time until 1994. His well-crafted songs, however, have been attracting attention since his recording debut, which coincided with the first anniversary edition of Fast Folk in February 1983. Blumenfeld is a three-time finalist at the songwriter competition at the Kerrville Folk Festival in Texas.

eric bogle 7/3

what to buy: Barehanded ♪♪♪ (Grace Avenue, 1991/1-800-Prime-CD, 1992, prod. David Seitz) set the standards for his future work. Accompanying himself on acoustic guitar and backed by Mark Dann on bass, Blumenfeld set his songs to sparse but warm settings. The opening tune, "Break Stones," is marked by unique syncopated rhythms. "America Redux" is a condemnation of political hypocrisy, while "A Wedding Song" is an ode to the joys of romantic love.

what to buy next: Blumenfeld's first album, The Strong in Spirit ♪♪½ (Grace Avenue, 1988/1-800-Prime-CD, 1994, prod. David Seitz) is an overview of his earliest work and includes several tunes previously recorded for Fast Folk. The album features musical accompaniment by Mark Dann (second guitar, bass guitar, and synthesizer), Kenny Kosek (fiddle), and Marshal Rosenberg (percussion); it also presents the vocal harmonies of Lucy Kaplansky, Josh Joffen, Nikki Matheson, Richard Meyer, and Judith Zweiman. Mozart's Money ♪♪♪ (1-800-Prime-CD, 1997, prod. David Seitz) is a further step in Blumenfeld's musical evolution with songs such as "Waiting for the Good Humor Man" reflecting his poetic view of modern society.

worth searching for: In addition to three albums on his own (The Strong in Spirit, Barehanded, and Mozart's Money), Blumenfeld has been featured on 12 issues of Fast Folk and on Christine Lavin's compilation On a Winter's Night. Live versions of his tunes have been included on the 30th Anniversary Album, produced by Columbia University's folk music coffeehouse, the Postcrypt, and on Folk Next Door, recorded during a 1992 concert produced by Hartford, Connecticut, radio station WWUH. His song "Brothers" appears in the songbook The Best of Contemporary Folk, published by Cherry Hill Music.

influences:

⏪ Jack Hardy, Steve Forbert, Rod MacDonald, Cliff Eberhardt, Richard Meyer

⏩ Five Chinese Brothers, Richard Shindell, Richard Julian

Craig Harris

Dock Boggs

Born Moran Lee Boggs, February 7, 1898, in West Norton, VA. Died February 7, 1971.

Singer and banjo player Dock Boggs's modest recorded legacy—a total of 66 sides—is as rugged and austere as the Clinch Mountains where he began working in the coal mines at age 12. Rooted in both the African American blues and Anglo-Celtic ballad traditions, Boggs's 1927 and 1929 recordings for the Brunswick and Lonesome Ace labels stand as a testimony to endurance amid adversity comparable to that expressed in Bascom Lunsford's monumental "I Wish I Was a Mole in the Ground." Despite the undeniable power of his recordings, at the insistence of his wife, Boggs laid his banjo aside for 35 years until musician-folklorist Mike Seeger persuaded him to record again during the 1960s. Those sides, recorded for Folkways between 1963 and 1968—and currently out-of-print—don't match Boggs's commercial recordings from the late '20s; they nonetheless confirm his stature as an American original.

what's available: Country Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Revenant, 1998, prod. John Fahey, Dean Blackwood) contains 17 commercial recordings from the late 1920s that established Boggs as Appalachia's answer to delta blues singer Robert Johnson. In a raw nasal whine, Boggs sings of violence, hardship, and lovesickness less as tragedy than as incontrovertible facts of life. The resilience and, at times, defiance, in his voice is as eerie as it is astounding.

influences:

⏪ Jim White, Homer Crawford, Sara Martin

⏩ New Lost City Ramblers, Bob Dylan, Holy Modal Rounders

Bill Friskics-Warren

Eric Bogle

September 23, 1944, in Peebles, Scotland.

Scotsman Bogle emigrated to Australia in 1969 and settled in Canberra, where he found work as an accountant. In his spare time he frequented local clubs and folk venues, soon realizing that he had enough talent to play his own songs in front of an audience. Inspired by the sight of a military parade, he wrote his most famous composition, "And the Band Played Waltzing Matilda" in 1972. This song is an anti-war folk masterpiece and has been recorded by artists such as June Tabor, the Clancy Brothers, the Men They Couldn't Hang, and the Pogues. Packing in the day job by 1980, Bogle turned to music full-time, hitting the road and traveling throughout Australia. Meeting John Munro, another Scottish lad and a brilliant guitarist and mandolinist, was fortuitous—the two proved to be a good match and they toured the United Kingdom. Adding bassist Brent Miller turned the duo into a trio and made for a fuller, richer soundtrack to Bogle's piercing lyrics. By 1983 Bogle's first album, Now I'm Easy, turned up gold, and the three musicians headed out for an international tour. Bogle standards like "Leaving Nancy," "No Man's Land (The Green Fields of France)," "Now I'm Easy," and "Nobody's Moggy Now" made quite an impression on other artists and soon Mary Black, Donovan, De Dannan, the Dubliners, Stan Rogers, and even Rod McKuen were covering Bogle tunes. In 1986 Bogle was honored by the Australian Federal Government with a Peace Medal, given for his involvement to promote peace and racial harmony through his music. He was also awarded in 1991 the title of "Folk Performer of the Year" at the Australian Entertainment MC Awards. In the last few years Bogle has released two albums that have sold especially well in Australia, The Emigrant and the Exile and Small Miracles. Now a resident of a town near Adelaide, Bogle continues to tour almost non-stop, with recent travels to Europe and America completed. A prodigious songwriter and performer, Bogle has made more than 15 albums on labels such as Larrikin, Rounder, Greentrax, Autogram, and Alcazar. In addition, there are two Eric Bogle songbooks and a performance video out on the market for Bogleheads. (An Eric Bogle Homepage has been set up by his friends. To find out more about Bogle and his music, you can contact http://www.windbourne.com.)

7/4 boiled buzzards

what to buy: Two Bogle compilation albums demonstrate the amazing scope of his compositions and his evolution into a first-class songwriter: The Eric Bogle Songbook ♪♪♪½ (Greentrax, 1989, prod. various) and The Eric Bogle Songbook, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1994, prod. various). Two other good ones to start with are Something of Value ♪♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1988, prod. John Schumann) and Mirrors ♪♪♪♪ (Larrikin, 1993, prod. Andy McGloin). Both present Bogle as a master lyricist with a good ear for melody.

what to buy next: Two early Bogle albums—Scraps of Paper ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish/Rounder, 1981, prod. Eric Bogle, Chris Nicholson) and Voices in the Wilderness ♪♪♪½ (Alcazar, 1991, prod. Andy McGloin)—showcase his penchant for controversial songwriting. You also can't go wrong with When the Wind Blows ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish/Rounder, 1985) and Singing the Spirit Home ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish/Rounder, 1987). His two most recent collections, The Emigrant and the Exile ♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1996, prod. Brian McNeill) and Small Miracles ♪♪♪ (Larrikin/Greentrax, 1997, prod. Ian Blake), are also recommended listening. To find out how Eric Bogle wins over his audience on stage, check out I Wrote This Wee Song ♪♪♪½ (Greentrax, 1994, prod. Andy McGloin, Eric Bogle), a live concert recording of Bogle's best numbers.

worth searching for: Three albums that Bogle made for Autogram Records are worth the hunt if you have lots of patience: Down Under ♪♪ (Autogram, 1982), In Person ♪♪ (Autogram, 1982), and Pure ♪½ (Autogram, 1982). Many of Bogle's albums are available through Greentrax (greentrax@aol.com), Rounder (info@rounder.com), and Larrikin (larrikin@geko.net.au). An excellent source of Bogle music in the U.S. is Tayberry Music (mtice@cetlink.net and http://tayberry.com).

influences:

◀◀ Dick Gaughan, Archie Fisher, Ewan MacColl, Phil Ochs, Tom Paxton

▶▶ Tony Bird, Archie Roach, Billy Bragg

TJ McGrath

Boiled Buzzards

Formed 1988, in Cleveland, OH.

Dan Levenson, banjo, fiddle, vocals; Ruth Kass, bass; Joe Collins, guitar; Dave Rice, harmonica (1988–90); Annie Trimble, guitar, vocals (1990–present); Chris Wig, fiddle (1991–92); Mark Tamsula, fiddle (1993–96); Liz Stephens, fiddle (1997–present).

The Buzzards' original lineup was banjo, bass, harmonica, fiddle, and guitar. In the band's first year, however, their fiddler left; so, when no one else seemed to fit with the style and direction the Buzzards were taking, it was decided they would work as a four piece unit with the harmonica taking the fiddler's part (as in the tradition of Dr. Humphry Bate). Over the years there have been a few more lineup changes. Although they still perform as a band, Dan Levenson has been doing most of his recent work as a solo act. Dan also released his first solo CD in 1997 called Light of the Moon. Originally from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and now living in Wolverine, Michigan, Dan was voted one of the top 10 clawhammer banjo players by Banjo Newsletter readers. Bluegrass Unlimited calls his playing "melodic, meticulous and uncluttered."

what to buy: Early Bird Special ♪♪♪ (Buzzard Productions, 1994, prod. Dan Levenson) is a good, representative collection of the Boiled Buzzards' output as a whole. It's worth more than just the chuckle you'll get from your friends when they ask you what band you're listening to.

what to buy next: Fine Dining ♪♪♪ (Buzzard Productions, 1991, prod. Dan Levenson) nicely showcases the band when it relied on the harmonica (rather than the fiddle) as the lead instrument.

the rest:
Salt and Grease ♪♪♪ (Marimac, 1990)
Eat at Joe's ♪♪♪ (Buzzard Productions, 1992)

solo outings:
Dan Levenson:
Light of the Moon ♪♪♪ (Buzzard Productions, 1997)

Dan Levenson & Kim Murley:
New Frontier ♪♪½ (Blue Rose, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Highwoods String Band, Kevin Enoch, Tommy Jarrell
▶▶ Jake Krack, Freight Hoppers

Steve Gardner

Boiled in Lead

Formed 1983, in Minneapolis, MN.

Drew Miller, bass; Robin Adnan Anders, drums, percussion (1989–present); Josef Kessler, violin (1994–present); Adam Stemple, guitar, vocals (1994–present); Jane Dauphin, guitar, vocals (1983–86); Dave Stenshoel, fiddle, mandolin, mandocaster, saxophone (1983–91); Mitch Griffin, drums (1983–86); Todd Menton, guitar, vocals, tin whistle, saxophone (1986–91).

From the very first sound on their first album—a bloodcurdling primal scream—Boiled in Lead has followed a unique and eclectic path. They stretch both elements of the folk-rock mixture to their limit, and are comfortable performing feedback-laden slabs of noise, sensitive acoustic renditions of traditional music from around the globe, and all styles in between. They're also one of the few contemporary bands to appear in a fantasy novel (Emma Bull's 1987 War for the Oaks). Boiled in Lead are the most important folk-rock band to appear since the 1970s, and are required listening for anyone interested in this genre.

what to buy: Orb ♪♪♪♪½ (Omnium, 1991, prod. Hijaz "Hank" Mustapha) is the band's finest hour. The traditional material comes from sources as diverse as Serbia and Thailand (as well as the more usual American and Irish fare), while Todd Menton's originals range from the frantic absurdity of "Tape Decks All over Hell" to the moving irony of "Brave Bombardier." The whole album is bursting with energy, and the natural, un-hyped production lets the songs breathe. From the Ladle to the Grave ♪♪♪♪½ (Atomic Theory, 1989, prod. Boiled in Lead, Willie Murphy) features the same lineup as Orb, and most of the same virtues; it's a bit less diverse and a bit more raucous, and would be the best choice for those who like plenty of rock in their folk-rock.

what to buy next: Stenshoel and Menton were replaced by Kessler and Stemple for Antler Dance ♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1994, prod. Frank London). Stemple's heavy metal tendencies make this the hardest-rocking Boiled in Lead album to date, but don't quite make up for losing Menton's deranged charm. Nevertheless, Antler Dance is packed with goodies, from the barn-burning "Sugarfoot Congress" to the hilarious cover of Boney M's "Rah Rah Rasputin." Boiled in Lead converts will definitely want to check out Old Lead ♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1985/1987, prod. Boiled in Lead, Amos Box), a compilation of the band's first two albums featuring Jane Dauphin and Mitch Griffin. While less technically adept than their later releases, and concentrating mostly on Celtic material, Boiled in Lead's energy and inventiveness are manifest even at this early stage, and hearing them destroy "The Gypsy Rover" is worth the price of the CD by itself.

what to avoid: Just when you think it might be time for '70s-style concept albums to make a comeback, along comes Songs from the Gypsy ♪♪ (Omnium, 1995, prod. Adam Stemple) to change your mind. While Boiled in Lead performs admirably, Stemple's writing isn't strong enough to pull off this song cycle based on a fantasy novel by Stephen Brust and Megan Lindholm.

worth searching for: Boiled in Lead have put out several rarities over the years, including a series of demo and live cassettes—Boiled Alive ♪♪♪, A&E ♪♪♪, and Boiled Alive '92 ♪♪♪. All are of spotty sound quality but feature material not found on their official releases. In addition, the 7" single Fück the Circus ♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1994, prod. Frank London) explains why they hate clowns and mimes, and reveals their secret influence: Flipper (the band, that is, not the dolphin).

influences:
◀◀ Fairport Convention, Hickory Wind, People's International Silver String Band ▶▶ Cordelia's Dad, Tempest

Tim Walters

Gordon Bok (© Robert J. Huffman/Field Mark Publications)

Gordon Bok

Born October 31, 1939, in PA.

The musical traditions of the sea are preserved by Maine-based singer-songwriter Gordon Bok. With his deep resonating voice and fingerstyle approach to six- and 12-string acoustic guitars, Bok provides a musical voice for the sailors and great sailing vessels of the past. His full-bodied 12-string acoustic guitar sound is in the tradition stemming from the music of Leadbelly, through Pete Seeger, and up to Leo Kottke. Bok was inspired by his mother, who played folk songs on nylon-string guitar, and his father, who preferred jazz and classical music, to learn guitar at age nine. A summer job on boats, after graduating from high school, led to his meeting a fiddle player and sailor who encouraged him to sing. Traveling to larger East Coast cities during the winter to work as a carpenter, Bok discovered a thriving folk music scene. Performing in folk music clubs and coffeehouses, he quickly attracted attention with his musical skills and large repertoire of sea songs. Bok, however, has been a reluctant musical presence, preferring to stay in his rural Maine workshop, where he spends hours working on wood sculptures. It took five years of prodding by Noel Paul Stookey of Peter, Paul and Mary before he agreed to have Stookey produce his debut album. In addition to working as a soloist, Bok has periodically performed and recorded in a trio that includes Ann Muir and Ed Trickett.

what to buy: With his album A Rogue's Gallery of Songs for 12-String ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1983), Bok used the double six-stringed instrument as a dynamic setting for his deep, emotional, baritone vocals. Despite the traditional sound of the album, Bok's material represents a wide range of influences, including jazz saxophonist Sonny Rollins ("St. Thomas"), Australian songwriter Henry Lawson ("On the Wallaby"), and American folk music ("Duncan and Brady").

what to buy next: A series of disturbing dreams inspired Bok to compose, in the ancient style of cante-fables, a non-rhyming style of balladry. His latest such effort was The Play of Lady Odivere ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1989).

the rest:
A Tune for November ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1970)
Peter Kagan and the Wind ♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1971)
(With Ann Mayo Muir) Bay of Fundy ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1975)
Time and the Flying Snow ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1977)
Seal Djiril's Hymn ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1978)
Jeremy Brown and Jeannie Teal ♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1981)
Clear Away in the Morning ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1983)
Fashioned in the Clay ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy,1985)
(With Ruth Brown) Cold as a Dog and the Wind Northwest ♪♪ (Timberhead, 1986)
Ensemble ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1988)
Another Land Made of Water ♪♪♪ (Timberland, 1994)
Return to the Land ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1994)
North Wind's Clearing ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1995)
Schooner's ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1995)
(With Cindy Kallet) Neighbors ♪♪♪ (Timberland, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Louis Killen, Pete Seeger, Cisco Houston, Leadbelly

▶▶ Cormac McCarthy, Stan Rogers, Garnet Rogers, Scott Alarik, Schooner Fare, Devonsquare

see also: Bok, Muir & Trickett

Craig Harris

Bok, Muir & Trickett

Formed 1969, in Vermont.

Gordon Bok (born October 31, 1939, Philadelphia, PA), guitar, vocals; Ann Mayo Muir (born June 30, 1937, Grosse Pointe Farms, MI), flute, harp, vocals; Ed Trickett (born April 14, 1941, Uniontown, PA), hammered dulcimer, guitar, vocals.

Ann Muir met Gordon Bok while performing in Vermont in 1961. In 1962, she met Ed Trickett at Trinity College in Connecticut, where he was a student and her husband worked in the admissions office. Muir decided to bring Bok and Trickett together the only way possible at the time, by urging them to exchange tapes of their music. Bok had been working as a sailor off the Northeast coast, and Trickett was headed toward Ohio, Colorado, and California for doctorate and post-doctorate work. In 1969, Trickett returned to Connecticut, and the trio was born. Today they tour together once or twice a year. Although the three perform together, they don't really play as a trio; instead, each takes a turn as the lead with the other two in supporting roles—in this way each retains his or her individual musical identity. They each have solo projects, mostly produced and distributed by Connecticut's Folk-Legacy Records; Bok runs his own Timberhead label. Their songs, representing a mixture of both traditional and contemporary folk chestnuts as well as meticulously written originals, are sung with refined, inviting harmonies. The repertoire varies from child ballads to sea chanteys to stories of everyday folk to drovers. From Camden, Maine, Bok is a poet, woodcarver, instrument builder, songwriter, and former professional sailor. He draws much of his material from his sea-going experiences, and, with his rich, distinctive bass/baritone voice, Bok is a commanding and stirring performer; he also plays guitar, cellamba, and "Bok-whistle," a six-hole whistle of his own creation. Muir, who lives in France, was raised with a love of all music, and her contralto voice does justice to every song she touches. An artist, potter, actress, and musician, she has performed throughout the United States, Great Britain, and Europe. Muir plays guitar, classical baritone ukulele, whistle, flute, and harp. Trickett, who plays guitar, hammered dulcimer, and piano, brings a tenor voice to the trio. He is a psychology professor and writer, as well as a collector of fine songs.

what to buy: Anyone starting their collection of Bok, Muir & Trickett releases should start with two: Bok, Muir & Trickett: The First 15 Years, Vol. I ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1992, prod. Sandy Paton) and Bok, Muir & Trickett: The First 15 Years, Vol. II ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1992, prod. Sandy Paton). The CDs contain cuts from the trio's first seven albums. Between both CDs, there are 31 songs—Folk-Legacy likes to pack their albums full. They contain many of the group's better-known tracks, from Bok's hopeful and stirring "Turning Toward the Morning," to nautical songs like Archie Fisher's "The Final Trawl," the traditional "The Golden Vanity," or Dale Marxen's silly and entertaining tale, "Waltzing with Bears."

what to buy next: And So Will We Yet ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1990, prod. Sandy Paton) is a 69-minute collection marked by magnificent, driving harmonies, with mostly contemporary songs of loss, bitter loneliness, traveling, love, and the sea. The trio shares the limelight, as they do on other releases, and play ably on guitar, hammered dulcimer, cellamba, and flute. True to the folk tradition, many of these songs—some rousing, some haunting—have been remade in their own style. Most are simple and singable. A repartee between a determined piglet and its realistic mother, "Tails and Trotters," is the only comical song on the disc. Trickett sings a lovely version of Stan Rogers's "Lock-keeper." Bok's baritone is formidable throughout, particularly in the sea chantey "The Loss of the Bay Rupert" and the traditional whaling song from New Zealand, "Soon May the Wellerman Come."

7/8 polly bolton

the rest:
The Ways of Man ♪♪♪♪½ (Folk-Legacy, 1978)
A Winter over Stone ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1980)
All Shall Be Well Again ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1983)
Turning Toward the Morning ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1984)
Fashioned in the Clay ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1985)
Minneapolis Concert ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1987)
Language of the Heart ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1994)

solo outings:
Ann Mayo Muir:
So Goes My Heart ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1985)

Ed Trickett:
The Telling Takes Me Home ♪♪♪♪½ (Folk-Legacy, 1972)
Gently Down the Stream of Time ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1977) People Like You ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1982)

influences:
◀◀ Peter, Paul & Mary, Burl Ives, Pete Seeger, Howie Mitchell

▶▶ Schooner Fare

see also: Gordon Bok

Stephen Ide, Craig Harris, and Neal Walters

Polly Bolton

Born April 27, 1950.

Polly Bolton's passionate, jazzy vocal style (she's a real belter when she wants to be) sets her apart from most British femme folk singers. Bolton began singing in the 1960s and in 1970 joined Dando Shaft, a Pentangle-like folk-jazz group with whom she recorded three albums. In 1973, she moved to the United States and for several years worked with various soul and jazz bands. Moving back to England in 1976, she joined Bert Jansch's Conundrum in 1978 and toured North America and Europe. In 1979, Bolton joined a jazz-rock unit, About Time. Bolton dropped out of the music business in 1980 to concentrate on her plant nursery, but re-surfaced in 1986 when Ashley Hutchings asked her to sing on the sessions for his theme album, By Gloucester Docks I Sat Down and Wept. She also toured with the Albion Band and sang on their 1988 release, I Got New Shoes. That year Hutchings produced Bolton's only solo album to date, No Going Back, which contains an incredible range of material, from out-and-out pop-rock like "When I Get Home" to a completely straight a capella reading of "The Silver Swan." Bolton also toured and recorded with the Ashley Hutchings All Stars. For her next project, Woodbine and Ivy, Bolton teamed up with John Shepherd (piano, keyboards) and Steve Dunachie (fiddle, viola), a pair of sympathetic musicians she's collaborated with on several subsequent recordings. Bolton's latest recording was the 1997 cassette single "The Child of Loss." The song was written by Jennifer Cutting, who also accompanied Bolton on piano. A portion of the proceeds from cassette sales will benefit the Motherless Daughters organization.

what's available: Get Woodbine and Ivy ♪♪♪♪½ (self-released, 1990, prod. Polly Bolton) as soon as possible. Not only does it feature excellent (but rather different) versions of popular ballads like "Sovay," "Bonnie Light Horseman," and "The Blacksmith," but it was only released on cassette and as of this writing not many copies are left. Songs from a Cold Open Field ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1991, prod. Polly Bolton) includes a surprisingly rockin' rendition of "Gypsie Laddie" credited to the Polly Bolton Band (Bolton, Shepherd, Dunachie, with several guests). Loveliest of Trees ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1996, prod. Polly Bolton) is a theme album consisting of original music set to lyrics of poems by A.E. Housman from his book A Shropshire Lad. Actor Nigel Hawthorne contributed readings of several poems to this recording.

worth searching for: If you want to hear Polly Bolton as a pop-rock singer, listen to "When I Get Home" on No Going Back ♪♪♪♪½ (Making Waves, 1989, prod. Ashley Hutchings). Also included in this eclectic collection is a lovely voice/keyboards interpretation of "The Drowned Lover," which anticipated the chamber folk-jazz sound Bolton further developed with Dunachie and Shepherd in the 1990s.

influences:
◀◀ Sandy Denny, Fairport Convention, Pentangle, Joni Mitchell, Linda Thompson

▶▶ Sally Barker, Christine Collister, the Poozies, the New St. George (U.S.), Cassandra Wilson

Ken Roseman

Karla Bonoff

Born December 27, 1951, in Los Angeles, CA.

A singer-songwriter who came to prominence when Linda Ronstadt chose three of her songs to perform on her 1976 album Hasten Down the Wind, Bonoff has had a solo career marked by consistently good material but precious little public acclaim. As a performer, Bonoff—who first hit the stage with the singer-songwriter collective Bryndle (which included Kenny Edwards, Andrew Gold, and Wendy Waldman)—displays considerable charm and intellect, if not overpowering expressiveness. In other words, it's clear why her chief success has been as a songwriter. Still, her albums have their moments, and looking back on them now—particularly the first three—they recall a time during the late '70s when an "El Lay" singer/songwriter was something to be. Songs from that first trio of albums were covered by Nicolette Larson, Bonnie Raitt, Maria Muldaur, Kim Carnes, and Judy Collins, among others. In recent years, Bonoff has turned her eye toward Nashville; Wynonna scored a country smash with "Tell Me Why" and Bonoff has written for and performed on albums by Reba McEntire, Kathy Mattea, and Wynonna, among others. That makes perfect sense, given that Bonoff's brand of West Coast pop is what passes for Nashville country these days. What goes around comes around.

what to buy: Karla Bonoff ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1977, prod. Kenny Edwards) reprises versions of the Ronstadt-covered "Someone to Lay Down Beside Me," "Lose Again," and "If He's Ever Near." But the surprise here is that, in taking those three, Ronstadt didn't exhaust Bonoff's supply of good songs; the album also features the lovely waltz "Home," the lightly rocking numbers "I Can't Hold On" and "Isn't It Always Love," and the yearning "Falling Star."

what to buy next: New World ♪♪♪½ (Gold Castle, 1988/MusicMasters, 1995, prod. Mark Goldenberg) predated the adult-contemporary format by enough to keep it from getting the attention it deserves. Goldenberg's too-rich production aside, the album contains Bonoff's best batch of songs since her debut, including "All My Life"—which Ronstadt and Aaron Neville turned into a Grammy-winning hit. Her off-shoot group, Bryndle, which re-formed in 1993, finally put out an album in 1995. Written in almost total collaboration, the album sounds like it could be the result of an old-fashioned guitar pull. All four members trade lead vocals and contribute honeyed harmonies.

what to avoid: Restless Nights ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1979, prod. Kenny Edwards) is pleasant but is carried more by its two covers—the Searchers' "When You Walk in the Room" and the traditional "The Water Is Wide"—than by Bonoff's originals.

the rest:
Wild Heart of the Young ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1982) worth searching for: The soundtrack for the TV series thirtysomething ♪♪½ (Geffen, 1991, prod. various) features Bonoff's performance of "The Water Is Wide."

editor's choice
12 cape breton albums

The Rankin Family, The Rankin Family (Rankins)

Natalie MacMaster, Fit As a Fiddle (NM)

Ashley MacIsaac, How Are You Today? (A&M)

The Barra MacNeils, The Traditional Album (PolyGram)

Buddy MacMaster, Judique on the Floor (SeaScape)

Doug MacPhee, Master of the Keyboards (NQD)

Natalie MacMaster, 4 on the Floor (Astro Custom)

Natalie MacMaster, Road to the Isle (Astro Custom)

Buddy MacMaster, Glencoe Hall (BM)

The Rankin Family, North Country (EMI)

Doug MacPhee, Road to Tulloch (MacPhee)

Ashley MacIsaac, Close to the Floor (Independent)

solo outings:
Bryndle:
Bryndle ♪♪♪½ (MusicMasters, 1995)

influences:
⏪ Stone Poneys, Laura Nyro, Wendy Waldman

⏩ Kathy Mattea, Wynonna, Trisha Yearwood

Daniel Durchholz

Roy Book Binder

Born Roy Bookbinder, October 5, 1943, in New York, NY.

A long-time acoustic guitar master, Roy Book Binder mixes Piedmont blues, folk, country, and hillbilly with an affable performing style that has traveled many miles over three decades. Turned onto blues while in the service in the 1960s, he traded being chauffeur for the Rev. Gary Davis to learn the secrets of the master before beginning his own recording career. He has lived, literally, on the road since making a mobile home his primary residence in 1976.

boone creek

what to buy: Travelin' Man ♪♪♪♪ (Adelphi, 1970/Genes, 1997, prod. Gene Rosenthal) is still the book on Book Binder, as he soaks up influences and turns them into his own folk/blues, including Pink Anderson's title track and Davis's "Delia," in Book Binder's ever-pleasant solo style. For a band experience, try the rockabilly-tinged The Hillbilly Blues Cats ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992).

what to buy next: Bookeroo! ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Jerry Douglas) includes "Gonna Get Myself a Motorhome" with the tasty backing of Douglas's dobro, percussionist Kenny Malone, and bassist Edgar Meyer.

the rest:
Goin' Back to Tampa ♪♪ (Rounder, 1979)
Live Book: Don't Start Me Talkin' ♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)
Polk City Ramble N/A (Rounder, 1998)

influences:

- Pink Anderson, Rev. Gary Davis, Mississippi John Hurt, Bo Carter, Blind Boy Fuller, Blind Willie McTell, Blind Blake

Leland Rucker

Boone Creek

Formed 1977 in Kentucky.

Ricky Skaggs, mandolin, fiddle, guitar, lead vocals; Jerry Douglas, dobro, vocals; Terry Baucom, banjo, fiddle, vocals; Wes Golding, guitar, lead and harmony vocals; Steve Bryant, bass, bass vocals.

Ricky Skaggs's last bluegrass band before he went into country music was together only briefly but had an influence that reached beyond its limited recorded output, as Skaggs, Douglas, and Baucom went on to success individually and with other bands. Boone Creek mixed modern treatment of bluegrass standards with Golding's originals.

what to buy: Sugar Hill re-released the formerly out-of-print One Way Track ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1977/1991) with three bonus live tracks added to the 10 original songs. Skaggs's bluesy lead vocals are strong and the four-part harmony on "Daniel Prayed" and "Little Community Church" is devastating. The fine vocal work is supported by intricate and imaginative picking, including Skaggs's fiery fiddling on "Sally Goodin."

worth searching for: Boone Creek ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1977, prod. Boone Creek) is quite good, too, but harder to find.

influences:

- J.D. Crowe & the New South, Country Gentlemen
- Doyle Lawson & Quicksilver, IIIrd Tyme Out, Ricky Skaggs & Kentucky Thunder

see also: Ricky Skaggs, Jerry Douglas

Douglas Fulmer

Laura Boosinger

Born December 27, 1957.

Laura Boosinger studied Southern Appalachian music at Warren Wilson College under the tutelage of old-time banjo player David Holt, with whom she has also performed. She has also performed with the Painless Band, the Luke Smathers Band, Timmy Abell, and a host of other musicians from around the Asheville, North Carolina, area. Boosinger lives in Asheville, where she performs in concert, does children's programs, and teaches at old-time music camps.

what to buy: Boosinger's first CD, My Carolina Home ♪♪♪♪ (Upstream Records, 1990, prod. Steven Heller), is a nice mix of well-known songs like "Under the Weeping Willow" and a few that aren't heard often enough, such as Cousin Emmy's "Pretty Little Miss out in the Garden." All the songs have musical accompaniment, usually by Boosinger's clean, crisp clawhammer banjo playing. Holt's influence is evident; her timing is rock-steady, and she plays with the same eloquent phrasing. Her voice is as clear as the proverbial bell, with an unstrained, effortless quality that is particularly moving on "I Will Arise." On some songs she uses a guitar or lap dulcimer for accompaniment. The latter instrument works particularly well with "What'll We Do with the Baby-O." Boosinger is ably assisted throughout by Raymond McLain (guitar, mandolin, fiddle, and vocals), Mark Schatz (acoustic bass), Steven Heller (guitar and vocals), and Holt (harmonica). Mark Schatz makes "Under the Weeping Willow" stand out by playing bowed acoustic bass. All in all, this is a fine recording by a bunch of fine musicians. It might be hard to find in record stores, but it can be ordered from Boosinger at 400 Beaverdam Road, Asheville, NC 28804.

what to buy next: Boosinger's most recent CD is Sing It Yourself ♪♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1996, prod. Laura Boosinger, Mark Howard). You won't have any excuse for not singing it yourself—all of the words are provided in the liner notes. Most of the selections are well known, like "Sourwood Mountain," "Groundhog," even "Skip to My Lou." This isn't necessarily a presentation of kids' music, but most of the songs would go well in a kids' concert and Boosinger probably uses them for that. This would be a good disc for parents who wanted to get their kids singing some folk songs.

influences:

◀◀ Luke Smathers, Quay Smathers, Carroll Best, David Holt, Byard Ray, Sheila Adams

▶▶ Numerous old-time banjo players

Dave Shombert

The Bothy Band

Formed February 1975, in Dublin, Ireland. Disbanded August 1979, in Ballysadare, County Sligo, Ireland.

Dónal Lunny, bouzouki, guitar, bodhrán, synthesizer, vocals; Paddy Glackin, fiddle (1975); Paddy Keenan, uilleann pipes, whistles; Matt Molloy, flute, whistles; Mícheál Ó Domhnaill, guitar, vocals; Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, vocals, clavinet, harmonium, electric piano; Tommy Peoples, fiddle (1975–76); Kevin Burke, fiddle (1976–79).

When Dónal Lunny left Planxty and formed his record company, Mulligan, he also began to work with a select group of musicians, Matt Molloy (flute), Paddy Keenan (pipes), and Paddy Glackin (fiddle), who had been performing with Tony MacMahon (accordion) for radio broadcasts. The five were joined soon afterwards by siblings Mícheál Ó Domhnaill (guitar, vocals) and Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill (vocals, clavinet), whose songs from the Donegal sean-nós tradition had brought them recognition with the band Skara Brae. They had recorded with Lunny, Molloy, and Donegal fiddle player Tommy Peoples on Mick Hanly's 1974 Celtic Folkweave, and Tríona had also played and recorded with Molloy, Peoples, piper Peter Browne, and singer Liam Weldon in 1973 under the name Sixteen Ninety-One. The initial band, called Seachtar ("seven" in Gaelic), was short-lived, Tony MacMahon soon being forced to leave because of his work as a TV and radio producer. With a new name, the Bothy Band, the six remaining musicians made their debut at Trinity College, Dublin, on February 2, 1975. Only a few months later, Glackin was replaced by Donegal fiddle player Tommy Peoples, with whom the band made its first recording, simply called The Bothy Band 1975. The impact of that recording was tremendous, and many of the tunes and songs on it became instant classics, played and replayed to this day at sessions in Ireland and beyond. After Kevin Burke replaced Peoples as the band's fiddle player, the Bothy Band recorded two equally memorable studio albums in 1976 and 1977, then released a live recording made in Paris in 1978. By then, the strain of constant touring and financial mismanagement had taken its toll, and band members were starting to pursue other projects. The band made its final appearance at the Ballysadare festival in August 1979. While hopes of a reunion have not materialized so far, all former members of the band have continued to be major creative forces in the Irish traditional music scene and beyond.

what to buy: From the very first chord strummed by Lunny and Ó Domhnaill, with Keenan's drones adding their low buzz before he and Molloy launch into "The Kesh Jig," to the last echoes of the reel "The Sailor's Bonnet," The Bothy Band 1975 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1975/Green Linnet, 1983, prod. Dónal Lunny, Mícheál Ó Domhnaill) is a monumental album that set the scene for much of what has happened since in the world of Irish traditional music. The sound quality may not be quite as good as what listeners might expect today, the lead instruments may be slightly out of tune on a couple of tracks, still this is the quintessential Bothy Band recording. Peoples's razor-sharp, urgent fiddle playing gave the band unmatched raw sound and energy, while Lunny and Ó Domhnaill's inventive chord progressions and tightly matched accompaniment patterns propelled the music forward. Last but not least, the Ó Domhnaills' thrilling songs in English and Gaelic perfectly balanced the band's instrumental virtuosity. Old Hag You Have Killed Me ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1976/Green Linnet, 1982, prod. Dónal Lunny, Mícheál Ó Domhnaill) is the band's mature album. With Kevin Burke's flowing and bluesy Sligo and Clare–tinged fiddle playing replacing Peoples's hard-edged sound in the mix, the band may have lost some of its grittiness but none of its energy. The production is first-rate and one gets a sense that the band is graduating from its experimental phase and taking charge of its sound. At any rate, they achieve a near perfect balance between breathtaking instrumentals, like the fiddle-driven "Farewell to Erin" or the dramatic "Michael Gorman's," and striking vocal tracks, like the piece of Scottish mouth music "Fionnghuala" and Ní Dhomhnaill's lilting "16 Come Next Sunday." The group's third album, Out of the Wind into the Sun ♪♪♪♪½ (Mulligan, 1977/Green Linnet, 1985, prod. Dónal Lunny, Mícheál Ó Domhnaill), while still packing a punch, did not quite achieve that same balance. Although they are classics, Ní Dhomhnaill's songs (she is the only vocalist on this one) are all pretty much in the same vein. On the other hand, the band's instrumentals are as powerful as ever, especially the reel marathon "Rip the Calico," Kevin Burke's setting of the classic pipe tune "The Hag at the Churn," and the amazing closing set of slides. By the time the live album Afterhours ♪♪♪♪½ (Mulligan, 1978/Green Linnet, 1984, prod. the Bothy Band) was recorded in Paris, the band was reportedly falling apart, a victim of the pressures of the road. Yet, the performance is as good as one might hope for—and there are even a few surprises, like some songs that did not appear on any of the band's studio albums, particularly "The Death of Queen Jane" and "The Heathery Hills of Yarrow."

phil boulding

what to buy next: The Best of the Bothy Band ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1988) is an appealing collection of 12 tracks taken from the band's four original albums. When rumors started circulating about new Bothy Band recordings about to be released, they generated a considerable amount of anticipation. As it turns out, the 16 tracks on Live in Concert ♪♪♪♪ (Windsong, 1994/Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Pete Dauncey) were selected from two BBC-sponsored concerts that took place in 1976 and 1978. Although perhaps not as impressive as Afterhours, the album has its moments. The first batch of tracks is somewhat curious because sitting in for Paddy Keenan is piper Peter Browne, formerly associated with some of the "Bothies" in the band Sixteen Ninety-One. Browne is not nearly the piper Keenan is, but his presence may be the cause of changes in the instrumental medleys that will keep the listeners attentive. Keenan's pipe solo, from the 1978 concert, may also sound odd but will make sense to anyone who has met this moody genius or heard him perform. There is still plenty of exciting music throughout, as the crowd's reactions during the closing "Rip the Calico" medley will attest.

worth searching for: As obscure albums go, one could hardly beat the two Breton-produced LPs mixing tracks by Sixteen Ninety-One with recordings by the Castle Ceili Band of Dublin. On Irish Music ♪♪♪½ (Escalibur, c. 1973) and Chants et Danses d'Irlande ♪♪♪½ (Folk Loisirs, c. 1973), which were combined on the more recent CD release Irish Traditional Pub Music (Arfolk), Bothy Band fans can hear the emergence of some of the ideas that shaped the band's sound a few years later. A prototype version of the famous "Green Groves" track has Molloy's flute introducing the tune, soon joined by Tommy Peoples's fiery fiddling, with Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill's now classic clavinet accompaniment taking it up a notch on "Flowers of Red Hill." While the mix is often rough, there are some nice surprises, particularly with Tríona's songs, which include the unaccompanied "Rinne Me Smaointeadh Im Intinn" and a version of "The Banks of Claudy," which her brother recorded with Mick Hanly on the LP Celtic Folkweave ♪♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1974, prod. Dónal Lunny). There is also hope that the Ó Domhnaills' work on Skara Brae ♪♪♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1971/Shanachie, 1983) will eventually reappear on CD, but for now one must search the used LP bins for it.

influences:

◀◀ Ceoltóirí Cualann, Sweeney's Men, Planxty, Skara Brae, Sixteen Ninety-One, Seachtar

▶▶ Touchstone, Moving Hearts, Nightnoise, the Dónal Lunny Group, Altan, Dervish

see also: Kevin Burke, Nightnoise

Philippe Varlet

Phil Boulding

See: Magical Strings

Bob Bovee and Gail Heil

Formed 1980s, in Minnesota.

Bob Bovee, guitar, harmonica, autoharp, vocals; Gail Heil, fiddle, banjo.

Bob Bovee and Gail Heil live in Houston County, Minnesota. Houston County is a rural area in Minnesota sometimes called "Bluff Country." The rolling hills and wide open natural spaces found there are a strong influence on the type of music they make together. They sing and play the old country and western songs that were popular in the days of 78s and field recordings. They play for lots of dances, barbecues, private parties, nursing homes, and community events . . . as they say, "grassroots stuff."

what to buy: Rural Route 2 ♪♪♪½ (Marimac, 1996, prod. Bob Bovee, Gail Heil) is an 18-song CD that brings old-time country music into the 1990s without many significant updates. The liner notes mention that this couple took the "rural route" many years ago, with their home (at Rural Route 2) and in their music. For fans of the more traditional forms of western and cowboy music, you will be pleased to hear this CD. This is not the cowboy music of the neatly groomed singing stars of the silver screen, complete with orchestral backing. No, this is more along the lines of what you might hear if you were out on the actual trail sitting around an actual campfire and listening to an actual cowboy . . . and his saddle pal.

the rest:

Behind the Times ♪♪♪ (Marimac, 1986) (cassette only) Come Over to See Me Sometime ♪♪♪ (Marimac, 1991) (cassette only)

solo outings:

Bob Bovee:

Pop Wagner and Bob Bovee ♪♪½ (Train on the Island, 1977) (cassette only) Come All You Waddies ♪♪♪ (Marimac, 1988) (cassette only)

influences:

Almeda Riddle, New Lost City Ramblers, G.B. Grayson

Skip Gorman, Ann and Phil Case, Liz Masterson and Sean Blackburn

Steve Gardner

Robin Huw Bowen

Born June 7, 1957, in Liverpool, U.K.

Robin Huw Bowen is on a mission to reinvigorate the tradition of the triple harp in Wales. The triple harp is a very unusual type of harp, in that it has three rows of strings, instead of the standard single row. The triple harp is the only truly chromatic harp available, and brings a whole new repertoire to the instrument. When the Welsh discovered the triple harp in the sixteenth century, they adopted it as their national instrument. This nationwide interest helped maintain the tradition of harping in Wales long past the time when the tradition had flagged in the neighboring Celtic countries. So, while Irish and Scottish harping traditions were all but lost, the Welsh maintained a living tradition with their harp, keeping the music always alive. Although the Welsh eventually turned to the pedal harp instead, there were a few proponents of the triple harp that kept this living legacy alive. This included the gypsy harpers, and later a few dedicated individuals who learned from the last of the gypsies. Bowen studied the work of several of those last dedicated souls. In his quest, he has developed an amazing virtuosity, surpassed by none. His mastery of his instrument, his love of his ancestral roots, and his passion to revive the triple harp of his country have allowed him to give a special gift to the harping community, namely a wealth of knowledge about and music for the triple harp. In 1987 he published a book of some 200 Welsh hornpipes, which he collected, edited, and arranged for the triple harp. His in-depth understanding of the Welsh form of theme and variation is demonstrated in his arrangements. He has toured the world on his mission, introducing the magic of the triple harp to assorted audiences. Bowen is known as a solo performer whose concerts demonstrate his amazing dexterity and his enthralling story-telling.

what to buy: In general, Bowen shines in live performance in a way that doesn't quite translate to recording. On Greet the Harp ♪♪♪♪ (Sain, 1988), Bowen is joined by a few other musicians on fiddle, banjo, and guitar. This adds a depth and variety to this recording that is lacking on all his other solo recording efforts. This is Bowen's first recording, and unquestionably his best. His sparkling rendition of "The Bells of Aberdyfi" shines, and his arrangement of "Ruddlan Marsh/Cuckoo's Nest" is vibrant. There are fun collections of both jigs and polkas. All around, this is a high-quality, enjoyable collection of tunes.

what to buy next: Bowen's other solo outings lack the vivacity he brings to the stage and the variety he brought to his first album with the addition of other musicians. He also has an unfortunate habit of repeating material between albums. He combines much of his choicest solo material on Harp Music of Wales ♪♪♪ (Saydisc Records, 1995, prod. Gef Lucena). A wide scope of Welsh music is represented here, from the well-known "Ash Grove" and "All through the Night" to gypsy tunes such as "Polca Saiforella." Along with the assortment of traditional tunes, two modern Welsh compositions are included: "Sailing Home," a beautiful, wistful air, and "The Thread of Life," an amazingly seductive tune clearly written for the harp. The Sweet Harp of My Land ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1991, prod. Steve Howard, Dai Shell) has a few special gems on it, including "The Swan Song."

what to avoid: Unless you find you are a particular aficionado of Welsh gypsy music, Hunting the Hedgehog ♪♪ (Firebird, 1994, prod. Steve Howard) is likely to sound very repetitive by the 3rd or 4th listen. There is no break in the toe-tapping gypsy offering. The music is brilliantly performed, however, with unbelievable speed and accuracy.

worth searching for: Bowen's group outings have all been strong performances. Particularly wonderful is Cusan Tan's Kiss of Fire ♪♪♪♪♪ (Fflach, 1992/Firebird, 1994), a rich example of what current-day Wales has to offer. Here Bowen teams up with Ann Morgan Jones and Sue Jones Davies to create new and invigorating Welsh music in the traditional vein. Lush open vocals, deep resonant cello, and soaring flute lines accompany Bowen's exquisite harp. Check out Mabsant's Through the Wire ♪♪♪ (Sain, 1987) if you'd like to hear Welsh music with a modern twist. Combining triple harp with vocals, guitar, synthesizers, and other modern instruments, this group explores a variety of musical styles with a political slant.

solo outings:

Cusan Tan:

Esgair—The Ridge ♪♪♪½ (Sain, 1995)

influences:

Alan Stivell, Nansi Richards, Ar Log

Siwsann George

Jo Hughey Morrison

bryan bowers

Bryan Bowers

Born August 18, 1940, in VA.

The musical potential of the autoharp was greatly expanded by the playing of Bryan Bowers. Accompanying his earth-toughened baritone with melodic five-finger playing of the multi-stringed instrument, Bowers has used the Carter Family–popularized instrument as the setting for his interpretations of traditional folk songs and humorous originals. A native of rural Virginia farm country, Bowers came to music naturally. As a child, he heard chants in the fields and watched dancers as they walked up the railroad line laying down the track. His first exposure to the string band tradition was at a Catholic Church where a string band played old time dance music and Czechoslovakian fiddle tunes. Although he first heard an autoharp played by a teacher in school, Bowers remained unimpressed until he heard a performance by a professional musician much later. While he had previously studied guitar, slide guitar, dulcimer, and mandocello, Bowers found his natural musical voice after buying an autoharp and spending months learning to play. Bowers developed his unique technique in order to get a denser sound and a louder volume level as a street singer. Beginning his professional musical career in Washington, D.C., Bowers's first gig was a six-month engagement as opening act for a then-unknown Emmylou Harris. His first break came when he was befriended by Mike Seeger of the New Lost City Ramblers. With Seeger's endorsement, he was able to secure a spot at the Chicago Folk Festival. When he received three major reviews in Chicago newspapers, his future was secured. Bowers's music was introduced to bluegrass audiences by the Dillards, who brought him with them when they performed at festivals. Washington, D.C.-based duo Bill and Taffy Danoff brought Bowers's tune "Berklee Women" to John Denver, who changed it from a ballad to a rocker and featured it on three albums including a Greatest Hits collection. Bowers has lived in Seattle, Washington, since 1975.

what to buy: On By Heart ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1985), Bryan's autoharp playing and gruffy baritone vocals are accompanied by members of the New Grass Revival (Sam Bush and John Cowan) and the Seldom Scene (Mike Auldridge, John Duffy, Tom Gray, Phil Rosenthal, and Ben Eldridge). In addition to unique versions of traditional folk songs ("Shady Grove" and "Ezekiel") and traditional-sounding tunes by Tommy Thompson of the Red Clay Ramblers, the album includes the memorable tongue-in-jowl ditty "Zen Gospel Singing."

what to buy next: On his debut album, The View from Home ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1979, prod. Bryan Bowers), Bowers sets his songs to the accompaniment of bluegrass bands the Seldom Scene and the New Grass Revival as well as to that of the late folk-pop instrumentalist Steve Goodman. The result is a memorable blend of the string band tradition and the country music-in-overdrive sounds of bluegrass.

the rest:
Home, Home, on the Road ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1980)
For You ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ The Carter Family, Bill Monroe, the New Lost City Ramblers, Mike Seeger
▶▶ John McCutcheon

Craig Harris

Boys from Indiana

Formed 1973, in Sunman, IN. Disbanded 1994.

Aubrey Holt, guitar, vocals; Tom Holt, mandolin, bass, guitar, vocals; Jerry Holt, bass vocals; Paul Mullins, fiddle (1973–79); Noah Crase, banjo (1973–79); Harley Gabbard, dobro; Sam Jeffries, fiddle; Tony Holt, bass; Jamie Johnson, mandolin; Cabe Conley, banjo; others.

Formed around the nucleus of brothers Aubrey, Tom, and Jerry Holt, the Boys from Indiana were a fixture on the bluegrass festival circuit for two decades. The band came together after Aubrey Holt failed to establish himself as a songwriter in Nashville. They were known for structuring their shows around a theme, such as "The Pioneers of Bluegrass." They disbanded in 1994 after brothers Tom and Jerry left the group.

what's available: Touchin Home ♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1992, prod. Aubrey Holt, Buddy Spicher) contains 12 songs, including eight originals and the Buck Owens/Don Rich instrumental "Cajun Fiddle." This is a relaxed album with the instrumental work usually backing up the vocals rather than being in the forefront.

influences:
◀◀ Bill Monroe, Flatt & Scruggs ▶▶ Traditional Grass

Douglas Fulmer

Boys of the Lough

Formed 1967, in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

Aly Bain, fiddle; Cathal McConnell, flute, tin whistle, vocals; Dave Richardson, mandolin, cittern, English concertina, button accordion;

boys of the lough

Aly Bain of Boys of the Lough (© Jack Vartoogian)

Christy O'Leary, uilleann pipes, tin whistle, mouth-organ, vocals; Chris Newman, guitar; John Coakley, piano, guitar; Robin Morton, vocal, Anglo concertina, bodhrán. Past members include: Dick Gaughan, guitar, vocals; Tich Richardson, guitar; Mike Whellans, vocals, guitar; Tommy Gunn.

The Boys of the Lough formed in Belfast as a trio of Northern Irish musicians: Cathal McConnell and Tommy Gunn, both of County Fermanagh, and Robin Morton from County Armagh. That line-up fell apart quite quickly, and the Boys of the Lough ceased to exist for a short period, but McConnell and Morton continued to perform as a duo. At the 1969 Falkirk folk festival, the duo met Shetland fiddler Aly Bain and singer/guitarist Mike Whellans, who were playing on the Scottish folk circuit. They played a set together at the festival and left with the hope of teaming up again. Their opportunity came in 1971, and soon thereafter the band was officially re-formed, this time as a hybrid Irish/Scottish band. Dick Gaughan of Glasgow replaced Whellans in 1972, when the band was most of the way through recording its first LP. Interestingly, they scrapped the original takes and re-did all the tracks to include Gaughan, which suggests a "lost" Boys of the Lough album somewhere, waiting to be issued—though it probably never will be. Gaughan was replaced after two years and one LP by Dave Richardson of Northumberland, completing the group's "internationalization" by the addition of its first Englishman. The four-piece line-up of McConnell, Bain, Richardson, and Morton lasted for six years, touring widely in Europe and America and releasing six albums. Robin Morton left in 1979 to found Scotland's Temple Records. He was replaced by Dave Richardson's brother, Tich, on guitar. This line-up survived until 1983, when Tich Richardson was killed in a car accident. Although they recorded three albums, none of them is currently in print. After two years of recuperation, the band came together again in 1985, with new members Christy O'Leary and John Coakley. That line-up survived 10 years, until Coakley was replaced by jazzy English guitarist Chris Newman in 1995. The latest news from the Boys of the Lough is that both O'Leary and Newman have left the band due to contractual disputes. No replacements have been named as of this writing.

8 6 boys of the lough

what to buy: The title track on Farewell and Remember Me ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1987 prod. Peter Harris, Boys of the Lough), a sad emigration song sung by McConnell, is only one highlight of the Boys of the Lough's best available CD. Mostly an album of Irish music, this features two songs each from McConnell and O'Leary, the best being O'Leary's rendition of the Gaelic ballad "An Spailpin Fanach." It also contains a set of music played on a historically fascinating set of uilleann pipes, made by Taylor of Philadelphia in about 1890, and later owned by the piper William Hanafin. The rest of the album is as solid a set of Irish and Scottish dance music as you'll find.

what to buy next: To Welcome Paddy Home ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. Peter Harris, Boys of the Lough) is only a slight step down from Farewell and Remember Me. The first album since the devastating car accident that killed Richardson, it reflects the new band's predominantly Irish makeup with lots of material from Ireland. Mostly a terrific album of jigs, reels, and hornpipes, this also features two songs, of which the title track is the most affecting. Sweet Rural Shade (Shanachie, 1988, prod. Boys of the Lough, Peter Harris) is very much in the mold of the previous two albums by this lineup: mostly traditional Irish music, mostly strong, textured arrangements of dance music, with impeccable musicianship on fiddle, flute, pipes, mandolins, and other instruments. It also has a couple of songs for good measure. Live at Passim ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1975, prod. Boys of the Lough) captures an early version of the band, complete with Robin Morton, and is the only CD release to feature Morton's singing and sense of humor. One of his songs here, a humorous ballad/recitation/vaudeville act, is a hilarious account about trying to care for an uncooperative baby. Other highlights of this CD include a set of Shetland fiddle tunes (including perennial favorite "The Day Dawn,") a "piece," or descriptive tone-poem, from the piping tradition, and some lovely songs sung by McConnell. The group's other live effort currently available on CD is Live at Carnegie Hall ♪♪♪½ (Sage Arts, 1992, prod. Boys of the Lough, Peter Harris, Matthew Sutton). Although it was recorded in 1988, 14 years after Live at Passim, the group includes another version of "Flower of Magherally," which has changed remarkably little since its earlier incarnation. This album captures a good but short Boys of the Lough concert, one at which they played support to Bill Monroe and the Blue Grass Boys. Perhaps to highlight the connections between their own music and Monroe's, they performed a high proportion of Scottish music, almost none of it from Bain's native Shetland. Jigs, reels, and polkas galore fill up this album; it has only two songs besides "Flower of Magherally," one of which is a very silly untitled song introducing the band, written and sung by emcee Garrison Keillor. A Midwinter Night's Dream ♪♪♪ (Blix Street, 1994, prod. Boys of the Lough) is the Boys of the Lough's Christmas album. With driving rhythms from guest guitarist Chris Newman and guest pianist Henning Sommero, the four-piece group of O'Leary, Bain, McConnell, and Richardson performs a lot of beautiful dance music from Ireland and Shetland. They also sing two carols and a heartbreaking ballad. Interesting twists include some Swedish tunes and one tune that is said to have come from Yaki Eskimos. Bain's strong fiddling, a preponderance of Shetland tunes (including the well-known "Da Day Dawn," "Christmas Day in the Morning," "The Papa Stour Sword Dance," "Da Trowie Burn," and "Da Fields of Foula," all of which have appeared on previous Boys of the Lough albums), and a long section in the notes about "Yule in Shetland" make this an album focused on Bain's native islands. Released in the U.K. as The Day Dawn.

what to avoid: Good Friends—Good Music ♪♪ (Philo, 1977) isn't really a Boys of the Lough CD. It's really "members of the Boys of the Lough play in duets and trios with friends who are not in the band." While this can be diverting, and isn't by any means bad, it isn't what most people will want to hear when they sit down to listen to the Boys of the Lough.

the rest:
The Fair Hills of Ireland ♪♪♪ (Sage Arts, 1992)

worth searching for: Two albums, Lochaber No More ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1976, prod. Boys of the Lough) and The Piper's Broken Finger ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1976, prod. Boys of the Lough), are both available on cassette but not CD. The band's very first album, The Boys of the Lough ♪♪♪♪♪ (prod. Boys of the Lough), features Dick Gaughan, later to become one of the great voices of the Scottish folk scene. His renditions of several ballads are unforgettable, and are very much worth buying if you can find an old LP copy; it was available on LP in the U.S. for many years from Shanachie Records.

solo outings:
Aly Bain:
Aly Bain & Friends (Greentrax, 1994)
Lonely Bird (Green Linnet, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ The Chieftains, Tom Anderson
▶▶ Craobh Rua

Steve Winick

Carrie Bradley

See: Ed's Redeeming Qualities

Paul Brady

Born May 19, 1947, in Strabane, County Tyrone, Northern Ireland.

Few singer/songwriters steeped in traditional music have seen their songs reach such a broad audience as Paul Brady has. After studying Gaelic at University College Dublin, he played in various local bands and took an interest in traditional Irish music. Expanding on his early talents as a guitarist and organist, Brady took up mandolin, bouzouki, and 12-string, and during the mid-'70s was a member of the folky Johnstons and the more traditional and internationally acclaimed Planxty, the first modern Irish band to expose a young mass audience to traditional Irish music. Although Planxty split up for the first time in 1975, Brady and fellow member Andy Irvine continued to record together. The acoustic Andy Irvine/Paul Brady was recorded in 1976, though not released in the United States until 1981, on Green Linnet. Brady recorded his first solo album, Welcome Here Kind Stranger in 1978 and then shifted gears to embrace a more electric sound. While 1981's brilliant Hard Station rocked harder than Brady had before, his evocative, intelligent songwriting and inviting, edgy voice retained the passion of his quieter work. Hard Station contains "Crazy Dreams," his breakthrough song that turned into a major hit in Ireland, and the lead track, "Busted Loose," which became the first of his songs to be covered by better-known artists, in this case, Dave Edmunds. During the '80s and '90s, Brady has continued to record powerful albums, but his songs' widest exposure has generally come from other voices. Tina Turner has gone to the Brady well more than once, and included the raucous "Steel Claw" on her Private Dancer album. Brady penned the title track of Bonnie Raitt's multi-platinum Luck of the Draw, which also includes his "Not the Only One." Santana, Maura O'Connell, and country singer Bryan White are just a few of the other artists who've recorded his songs. But not only is Brady a world-class songwriter, he's also a musician's musician, having appeared as a singer and/or instrumentalist on albums by Mark Knopfler, Rosanne Cash, Mary Chapin Carpenter, the Chieftains, and Raitt, to name a few.

what to buy: Recorded in Dublin during the spring of 1981, Hard Station ♪♪♪♪½ (21 Records/PolyGram, 1981, prod. Hugh Murphy, Paul Brady) is essential in its bridging of folky melodies, rocking arrangements, and passion-drenched lyrics, often about struggle and disillusion. "Nothing but the Same Old Story" is the masterpiece among masterpieces on this album, a song about leaving one's homeland but never fulfilling the promise of a better life. A jarring song about longing and prejudice fit inside a wonderfully catchy melody, this song sums up Brady's multi-layered perceptions and brilliance as well as any, but on Hard Station, it's only the tip of the iceberg.

what to buy next: Songs and Crazy Dreams ♪♪♪♪ (Fontana, 1992, prod. Hugh Murphy, Paul Brady, Ian Maidman, Nigel Gray, Phil Palmer, Neil Dorfsman) compiles four of Hard Station's best songs along with a decent sampling of some of Brady's better work from various other releases during the '80s, including the gorgeous ballad "Helpless Heart," a song later covered by country good-boy Bryan White.

the rest:

Andy Irvine/Paul Brady ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1976/1981)
Welcome Here Kind Stranger ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1978/93)
Trick or Treat ♪♪♪½ (Fontana, 1991)
Spirits Colliding ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1995)

worth searching for: Recorded live at the Half Moon Putney in London on the evening of April 6, 1984, Full Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Demon, 1984, prod. Paul Brady, Phil Palmer) brings Brady and band right into your living room for an energized romp through eight of his best songs, including "Hard Station," "Steel Claw," "Helpless Heart," and "Busted Loose." Recorded at a time when Brady's songs were being covered with a vengeance, Full Moon finds the singer stretching out with playful abandon. Time spent digging for this out-of-print gem will be rewarded. True for You ♪♪♪½ (21 Records/Atco, 1986, prod. Neil Dorfsman, Paul Brady) is treasured for its inclusion of the original versions of "Steel Claw" and "Not the Only One," which aren't available on either Hard Station or Songs and Crazy Dreams. Easier to find is Live for Ireland ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1988, prod. Avril MacRory), the recorded document of a multi-artist live "self-aid" concert to benefit and call attention to Ireland's huge unemployment problem. Brady contributes "The Island," a powerful song about learning from and transcending the mistakes of the past. Other performers on this collection include Van Morrison, the Pogues, the Chieftains, Elvis Costello, Clannad, and U2.

influences:

◀◀ Van Morrison, Bob Dylan

▶▶ Mark Knopfler, Bruce Cockburn, Richard Thompson

see also: The Johnstons, Planxty

David Sokol

Billy Bragg

Born December 20, 1957, in Essex, England.

The sight of this brash Brit busking with an electric guitar and speakers mounted on his backpack was an irresistible image in 1983. His fiery mixture of the Clash's energy and Woody Guthrie's political fervor was an equally irresistible image. Since he often performs solo, Bragg could be dismissed as just another angry folk singer, but underneath the sometimes laborious left-wing rhetoric is a startling command of pop music that made his better albums a fascinating tug-of-war between message and melody. His best known song, "A New England," was turned into a British radio hit by Kirsty MacColl and was recently ransacked by American punk-pop act Too Much Joy.

what to buy: Back to Basics ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1987, prod. Kenny Jones) compiles his first three British releases—Life's a Riot with Spy Vs. Spy, Brewing Up, and Between the Wars—and offers the most cohesive look at Bragg's earlier, gruff appeal. Talking with the Taxman about Poetry ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1986, prod. Kenny Jones, John Porter) reflects a marked jump in maturity as a songwriter ("Levi Stubbs' Tears," "Greetings to the New Brunette") and the start of a warmer, more-fleshed out sound that reaches fruition on Don't Try This at Home ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1991, prod. Grant Showbiz). The latter includes his prettiest, most reflective material, and the song "You Woke Up My Neighborhood" sports backing from members of R.E.M.

what to buy next: Workers Playtime ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1988, prod. Joe Boyd) is Bragg's first attempt to integrate a band sound with help from noted British folk producer Boyd. Such infectious tunes as "Life with the Lions," "She's Got a New Spell," and "Waiting for the Great Leap Forwards" foreshadow what he will achieve on "Don't Try This at Home."

what to avoid: The Internationale ♪ (Elektra, 1990, prod. Wiggy, Grant Showbiz) is a turgid EP that finds Bragg on his socialist soapbox offering heavy-handed adaptations of protest anthems dating back to the Industrial Revolution of the nineteenth century.

the rest:
Help Save the Youth of America ♪♪♪ EP (Elektra, 1988)
William Bloke ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1996)
Bloke on Bloke ♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1997)

worth searching for: Let Them Eat Bingo ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1990), the debut album by Beats International, finds guest vocalist Bragg mustering up a convincing falsetto on the Philly soul-flavored "Won't Talk about It."

influences:
The Clash, Woody Guthrie, Elvis Costello
Hammell on Trial, John Wesley Harding

David Okamoto

Oscar Brand

Born February 7, 1920, in Winnipeg, Canada.

Oscar Brand has been a major influence on the evolution of American folk music for more than a half century. The host of a weekly radio show, The World of Folk Music, on New York Public radio station WNYC, Brand has provided a forum for everyone from Woody Guthrie and Leadbelly to Pete Seeger and Bob Dylan. In addition to over 100 albums of his mostly satirical "bawdy" songs, Brand has written numerous scripts and scores for television as well as off-Broadway and Broadway shows. His first book, Singing Holidays, was published in 1957 and his second book, The Ballad Mongers, remains an important historical exploration of early American folk music.

Born on a Canadian wheat farm, Brand moved with his family to Minneapolis and Chicago before settling in New York. During the Depression, he traveled the United States and sought work as a farm hand. After earning an undergraduate degree in abnormal psychology from Brooklyn College, he served in the U.S. Army during World War II. Discharged in 1945, he toured for a few months as a singer in the Herb Shriner Show. In 1945, Brand was hired as coordinator of folk music at WNYC and as the host of a weekly radio show, Folksong Festival, that was broadcast throughout Europe by the United States Information Service. Brand's current show, The World of Folk Music, was launched in 1966. Brand maintained a busy schedule throughout the 1960s and early 1970s. A member of the board of directors for the Newport Folk Festival, he hosted and served as music director for televisions shows including NBC-TV's Exploring Show and The First Look in the United States, and Let's Sing Out and Brand New Scene in Canada.

what to buy: With the release of I Love Cats ♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1994), Brand showed that he had lost none of the humor that made his albums of "bawdy" songs so memorable in the 1950s and '60s. Accompanying himself on acoustic guitar and joined by John Pickow (vocals, synthesizer, banjo), John Foley (vocals, guitar, bass), Jean Ritchie (vocals), and Steve Guglielmo (sax, clarinet, strings), Brand sings 11 original songs that pay musical tribute to felines including "Cat-alist," "Them Doggoned Cats," "Cat Rap," and "The Great Big Little Cat Show."

Oscar Brand (© Linda Vartoogian)

what to buy next: On Folk Songs for Fun ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1962), Brand and folksinging quartet the Tarriers emphasize the joys of folk music with their interpretations of traditional songs including "Cotton-Eyed Joe," "Sweet Betsy from Pike," and "The Big Rock Candy Mountain."

the rest:

Bawdy Songs and Backroom Ballads ♪♪♪ (Audio Fidelity, 1956)
Wild Blue Yonder ♪♪ (Elektra, 1959)
Every Inch a Sailor ♪♪ (Elektra, 1960)
Out of the Blue ♪♪ (Elektra, 1960)
Boating Songs ♪♪ (Elektra, 1960)
Tell It to the Marines ♪♪ (Elektra, 1960)
All Time Hootenanny Folk Favorites ♪♪ (Decca, 1960)
Sports Car Songs for Big Wheels ♪♪ (Elektra, 1960)
Bawdy Western Songs ♪♪♪ (Audio Fidelity, 1960)
Bawdy Songs Go to College ♪♪♪ (Audio Fidelity, 1961)
Up in the Air ♪♪ (Elektra, 1961)
Election Songs of the U.S. ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1961)
Songs for Adults ♪♪ (ABC, 1961)
(With the Backroom Boys) Sing Along Bawdy Songs & Backroom Ballads ♪♪♪ (Audio Fidelity, 1962)
Snow Job for Skiers ♪♪ (Elektra, 1963)
Songs Fore Golfers ♪♪ (Elektra, 1963)
For Doctors Only ♪♪ (Elektra, 1963)
(With Dave Sear and Eric Weissberg) Rollicking Sea Shanties ♪♪ (Audio Fidelity, 1966)
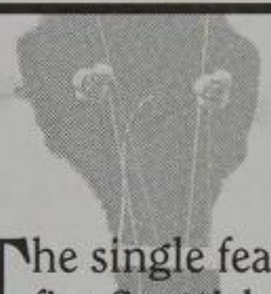
Oscar Brand and Jean Ritchie ♪♪♪ (Archives of Folk and Jazz Music, 1967)
The Americans and Songs of Our Country ♪♪ (Pickwick, 1974)
Billy the Kid in Song and Story ♪♪ (Caedmon, 1977)
Pie in the Sky ♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1996)
Get a Dog ♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ Pete Seeger, Woody Guthrie, Burl Ives, Leadbelly

▶▶ Bob Dylan, Steve Goodman, Arlo Guthrie

Craig Harris



scottish fiddle styles

The single feature that most clearly identifies Scottish fiddling is the use of the Scots snap, a pair of notes, the first of which is short and the second of which is long. This dotted rhythm, and its opposite, give Scottish strathspeys and marches a bouncy or spiky feeling. Reels and jigs, however, are played more evenly. Scottish fiddling can be thought of as folk music, but it is not strictly so. In eighteenth-century Scotland, fiddling was not limited to rural peasants, but had its place in the ballrooms and drawing rooms of high society as well. The bulk of the well over 15,000 known (published) fiddle tunes were composed in that "golden age." Scottish fiddle tunes have always been transmitted both by aural tradition and written sources.

Of the regional styles, the Northeast has been predominant in the twentieth century. It shows a strong classical influence. Cape Breton (Nova Scotia) fiddling is thought to have preserved the Gaelic flavor of the old Highland style. It has a dance-oriented, driving rhythm. The modern West Highland style is smoother, and influenced greatly by bagpiping. The fiddle music of the Shetland islands was at one time more Scandinavian than Scottish, and this aspect of the style has been revived, although Scottish tunes are still played.

Instruments that have been used to accompany the fiddle over the years include the harpsichord, cello, pump organ, spoons and bones, piano, accordion, and guitar.

Kate Dunlay

Brave Combo

Formed 1979, in Denton, TX.

Carl Finch, vocals, accordion, guitar; Bubba Hernandez, bass, vocals; Jeffrey Barnes, saxophone, clarinet, percussion.

A self-described "nuclear polka" band, Brave Combo is often shortchanged as a novelty act since its frenetic live shows zigzag from stampede-inducing romps through "Who Stole the Kishka" and "The Happy Wanderer" all the way to a surf version of "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning." But over the years the Combo—a revolving six-piece band built around the nucleus of Finch, Hernandez, and Barnes—has evolved into a versatile outfit capable of being both faithful and funky: they've developed a startling command of traditional folk music from Greece, Israel, and Mexico while retaining the infectious, dance-frenzy enthusiasm that makes them a favorite at weddings, bar mitzvahs, Oktoberfests, and alternative-rock clubs. Once a band to simply get wrecked to, Brave Combo is now a group to be reckoned with.

what to buy: No, No, No, Cha Cha Cha ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Brave Combo) focuses on the group's Latin influences and boasts a seamless medley of the Rolling Stones' "Satisfaction" and Ringo Starr's "No No Song," a festive salsa version of Cher's "The Way of Love," and a boss bossa-nova rendition of "Fly Me to the Moon." Polkas for a Gloomy World ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Brave Combo) is their Grammy-nominated return to straight-ahead polka, mixing jaunty originals like "Flying Saucer" with traditional Mexican, Russian, and German polkas. Group Dance Epidemic ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Brave Combo) collects studio versions of such live favorites as "The Chicken Dance," their Devo-like demolition of "The Hokey Pokey," and other vintage tunes designed for conga lines and bunny-hop parades. The band's warped genius is revealed on its cover of Van McCoy's "The Hustle," in which it uncovers the melodic thread connecting the disco hit with Lou Reed's "Walk on the Wild Side."

what to buy next: Girl ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Brave Combo, Bucks Burnett), a surprisingly listenable collaboration with Tiny Tim, demonstrates the depth of Brave Combo's musical vocabulary and its astounding ability to make anyone sound good. Check out the hepcat-jazz version of "Stairway to Heaven" and the "Wooly Bully"-like re-working of "Bye Bye Blackbird."

what to avoid: Musical Varieties ♪♪ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Brave Combo) is a compilation of pre-Rounder tracks from the early '80s. Although hardly horrid, they lean toward predictable gimmickry ("People Are Strange" and "Sixteen Tons" as polkas), sideswiping genres the band would eventually tackle head-on.

the rest:

Polkatharsis ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
Humansville ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
A Night on Earth ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1990)
It's Christmas, Man! ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1992) Mood Swing Music ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996)

worth searching for: The Hokey Pokey ♪♪♪ (denTone, 1994, prod. Brave Combo), a self-released EP, features early versions of several tunes on Group Dance Epidemic and the otherwise unavailable concert favorite, "The Hava Nagila Twist."

solo outings:
Brave Combo & Lauren Agnelli:
Kiss of Fire ♪♪♪½ (Watermelon, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ You name it, from Xavier Cugat to Astor Piazzolla
▶▶ The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

David Okamoto

The Breeders

See: Ed's Redeeming Qualities

Maire Brennan

See: Clannad

Pap Brewer

Born Finley J. Brewer, December, 27, 1906, in Justis Siding, NC. Died September 4, 1993, in Roan Mountain, TN.

At age 15, Finley J. "Pap" Brewer Sr.'s parents signed him up to work in the coal mines of Pond Creek, Kentucky, owned by Henry Ford. Here Brewer learned to play the fiddle, although he had been playing homemade instruments and dancing since he was just a toddler. When Pap took up the banjo, he didn't play it in the old clawhammer way like his father, but in the modern two-finger style like other musicians of his generation in that area. This style of banjo playing was also used by Wade Mainer, Bascom Lunsford, and Doc Watson over in Western North Carolina. Pap eventually came to play fiddle, banjo, and guitar at all the local gatherings as well as radio gigs on WOPI out of Bristol, Tennessee. He continued to play music until his death in 1993, in an auto accident; he was 86.

what's available: Pap Brewer/Finley J. Brewer Sr. from Roan Mountain, TN ♪♪♪ (June Appal, 1994, prod. Carolyn H. Sturgill, Gary Brewer) is a great glimpse into the old tradition of mountain music. Many of the songs performed here are the basis for the songs and tunes that became bluegrass standards. The recordings on this CD were made at various locations later in Pap's life. The final recordings made just a few weeks before his death. An additional tune, "Cumberland Gap" is added by grandson Gary Brewer as a tribute to his grandfather.

influences:
◀◀ Uncle Dave Macon, G.B. Grayson, Wade Mainer
▶▶ Gary Brewer and his Kentucky Ramblers

Steve Gardner

Anne Briggs

Born September 29, 1944, Toton, Nottinghamshire, England.

In the liner notes to Classic Anne Briggs, Norma Waterson says of Anne Briggs, "Before her there was a twee style of women singing English folk songs and she brought balls to it really." We have Briggs to thank, in part, for Waterson, Shirley Collins, Maddy Prior, Sandy Denny, and June Tabor. Briggs began singing at age 17, and was soon touring England as part of the left-wing cultural project Centre 42. Thanks to the support of A.L. Lloyd and Ewan MacColl, she became one of the best-known and most respected traditional singers of the early 1960s. She eventually left music to raise a family.

what's available: Classic Anne Briggs: The Complete Topic Recordings ♪♪♪♪½ (Fellside, 1990, prod. A.L. Lloyd) introduces Briggs's charm to today's listeners. Most of the songs on this collection are unaccompanied, leaving Briggs's voice nakedly bold and as beautiful as a Goya painting. Such folk standards as "Blackwater Side" (also recorded by Bert Jansch and Sandy Denny, among others), "Willy O' Winsbury," and "Reynardine" are included, but the most moving track is Briggs's own composition, "Go Your Way."

influences:
◀◀ Isla Cameron, A.L. Lloyd
▶▶ Sandy Denny, Maddy Prior, June Tabor

Pamela Murray Winters

Fletcher Bright Fiddle Band

Formed 1995, in Chattanooga, TN, area.

Fletcher Bright, fiddle; George Bright, guitar; Sam Currin, mandolin; "Doc" Ed Cullis, banjo; Bob Chuckrow, bass, mandolin, mandola.

The Fletcher Bright Fiddle Band was formed when a contradance group needed some musicians. Fletcher is a versatile fiddler who can go from the bluegrass "White Horse Breakdown" into the old "Tombigbee Waltz" with relative ease. He has an affinity for James Bryan tunes and performs them often. The band may be relatively unknown, but their music is extremely enjoyable.

what's available: The Fletcher Bright Fiddle Band ♪♪♪♪ (The Three Guys Records, 1995, prod. Fletcher Bright Fiddle Band) is a collection of fiddle tunes from various old-time, bluegrass, and folk sources including James Bryan, Bill Monroe, and Norman Blake. This band is seemingly not concerned with sticking just to one genre, so as long as you aren't either, you'll enjoy this recording. His version of the Irish "Si Bheag, Si Mhor" is beautiful.

influences:

◀◀ Norman Blake, James Bryan, John Hartford

▶▶ Chirps Smith, Charlie Walden

Steve Gardner

Bright Morning Star

Formed 1983, in Greenfield, CT. Disbanded 1987.

Charlie King, lead and background vocals, acoustic guitar; Marcia Taylor, acoustic guitar, lead and background vocals; Court Dorsey, trombone, high-hat cymbal, drums, harmonica, vocals; Cheryl Fox, electric bass, vocals; Ken Giles, five-string viola, violin, vocals; Stephen Snyder, piano, synthesizer, electric bass, vocals.

Led by topical singer-songwriters Charlie King and Marcia Taylor, Bright Morning Star was a throw-back to the congregation-like folk groups like the Weavers, the Limelighters, and the Chad Mitchell Trio. Although they were only together for a few years, the group was a popular attraction at folk festivals on the East Coast. King and Taylor sang most lead vocals, but each member of the group has his or her moment in the spotlight. Although King and Taylor contributed original songs, the bulk of the group's repertoire showcased the songwriting of other folk-rooted writers including Bob Blue, Lorre Wyatt, and Bob Franke.

what to buy: Bright Morning Star's third album, Sweet and Sour ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1988, prod. Bright Morning Star) represented their brightest moments. Politics remain at the core of the band's repertoire. But a sense of humor comes through with such songs as "Invasion of the Money Snatchers," a witty condemnation of yuppies, "Shopping Mall," a tongue-in-jowl look at the spread of commercialism, and "Their Way," an anthem of conformity.

the rest:

Arisin' ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1984)
Live in the U.S. ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986)

influences:

◀◀ The Weavers, Chad Mitchell Trio, the Limeliters, the Kingston Trio, Pete Seeger

▶▶ The Foremen, Bob Franke

see also: Charlie King

Craig Harris

Chuck Brodsky

Born May 20, 1960, in Philadelphia, PA.

Novelty-song guru Dr. Demento and folksinger David Wilcox don't have much in common. But both of them recognized the cunning appeal of Chuck Brodsky's "Blow 'Em Away," a riotous road-rage blues that Demento included on a compilation album and Wilcox adopted into a much-requested hallmark of his own concerts. "Blow 'Em Away" has become Brodsky's signature tune and a coffeehouse staple (there's a folkie in your hometown learning the chords as you read this), but it also diverts attention from the rich textures of his touching autobiographical story songs and his endearing penchant for sports metaphors. Delivered in his raspy John Prine–like tenor, "The Ballad of Eddie Klepp" is an homage to the first white player in baseball's Negro Leagues but doubles as a commentary on racism; similarly, "Letters in the Dirt" looks beyond the home-run power of his childhood idol, the controversial Richie Allen, to examine the inner-strength that makes the difference between heroes and stars; and "Unbridled Reins," written from the viewpoint of a racehorse pumped up on steroids, reflects the pressure parents and coaches often put on teenage athletes. By relying on storytelling rather than preaching, Brodsky encourages his listeners to discover life's cold, hard truths for themselves—he doesn't hit them over the heads, but he still occasionally blows them away.

what's available: A Fingerpainter's Murals ♪♪♪ (Waterbug, 1995, prod. Chuck Brodsky, Brian C. Doser) opens with two of his finest baseball songs ("Lefty," "The Ballad of Me and Jones") and showcases his range with compassionate portraits of family farmers ("Acre by Acre") and victims of domestic violence ("Maria's Lament"). "Blow 'Em Away" is here, but its novelty feel seems out of place on an otherwise moving debut. Letters in the Dirt ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1996, prod. Kristian Bush, Don McCollister) is more polished and band-oriented, but once again, the funny songs ("No More Mr. Nice Guy," "Talk to My Lawyer") pale in comparison to "The Ballad of Eddie Klepp" and the lovely "Until You Can Forgive."

influences:

◀◀ John Prine, Steve Goodman, Bob Dylan

David Wilcox

David Okamoto

David Bromberg

Born September 19, 1945, in Philadelphia, PA.

A New York session musician who first came to prominence playing on Bob Dylan's Self Portrait and New Morning albums, stringed-instrument virtuoso David Bromberg cut a wholly unconventional series of 10 albums for the Columbia and Fantasy labels through the 1970s that matched his refined acoustic musicianship with a wacky sense of humor. Linda Ronstadt, Emmylou Harris, Dr. John, Bonnie Raitt, Ricky Skaggs, and members of the Grateful Dead have all made guest appearances on his recordings, underlining Bromberg's reputation as a musician's musician. He abruptly quit recording and touring to concentrate on making and repairing instruments, and has released records and performed rarely since 1981.

what to buy: How Late'll Ya Play 'Til ♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1976, prod. Steve Burgh, David Bromberg) is a two-disc set—one live, one studio—that's available either individually or together and finds Bromberg at the height of his powers, supported by a remarkable band.

what to buy next: His debut, David Bromberg ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1971, prod. David Bromberg) blends the bluesy with the blowzy, the wry with the wistful, and showcases his considerable skills.

the rest:

Demons in Disguise ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1972)
Wanted Dead or Alive ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1974)
Midnight on the Water ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1975)
Reckless Abandon ♪♪½ (Fantasy, 1977)
My Own House ♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1978)
You Should See the Rest of the Band ♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1980)
Long Way from Here ♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1986)
Sideman Serenade ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)

worth searching for: Bromberg plays in a relaxed Western swing vein on the Vassar Clements album Hillbilly Jazz ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1977).

influences:

Bob Dylan, Bill Monroe, Rev. Gary Davis

David Grisman, Loudon Wainwright

Joel Selvin

Jonatha Brooke

See: The Story

Big Bill Broonzy

Born William Lee Conley Broonzy, June 26, 1893, in Scott, MS. Died August 15, 1958, in Chicago, IL.

Broonzy's body of work—including his enduring originals "Key to the Highway" and "Black, Brown and White"—ranks him among Muddy Waters, B.B. King, and Robert Johnson in terms of influence. A storyteller as much as a lonesome singer, Broonzy was among the first performers to marry rough rural blues (like Johnson's brand of Mississippi Delta moaning) with upscale jazzy city blues (like Charles Brown's cocktail piano crooning). He began his career as a violinist (a skill he learned from an uncle) and learned from mentor Papa Charlie Jackson how to adapt those skills to the guitar. As his obvious talent gradually turned him into a star, he moved to Chicago and started hooking up with Memphis Slim, Brownie McGhee, John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson, and Big Maceo; he also recorded for many different labels, including Columbia, OKeh, and Bluebird. Most refused to put out "Black, Brown and White," a powerful attack on racism with the memorable tell-it-like-it-is chorus, "Get back," after Broonzy wrote it in 1949; two years later, in France, writer-critic Hugues Panassie and record company officials helped him get it in circulation. Broonzy's pockets of regional popularity coagulated into an adoring national audience after he played John Hammond's "From Spirituals to Swing" concert (as a replacement for Robert Johnson, who had just died) at New York City's Carnegie Hall in 1938. Regular Chicago and southern gigs followed until the 1950s, when Broonzy—along with peers Leadbelly, Josh White, and Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee—became an avatar of the folk movement. While touring and recording in Europe throughout the 1950s, he wrote a fascinating biography, Big Bill Blues, with Danish writer Yannick Bruynoghe.

what to buy: Because Broonzy was such a prolific writer and because so many different big record companies put out his stuff, plenty of thorough CD collections document various stages of his career. Most impressive include Good Time Tonight ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1990, prod. various), which spans 1930 to 1940 (including, of course, his classic "I Can't Be Satisfied"); Do That Guitar Rag (1928–35) ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1973); and Blues in the Mississippi Night ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1990), a sometimes chilling 1946 Alan Lomax–recorded no-holds-barred conversation among Broonzy, pianist Memphis Slim, and harpist Sonny Boy Williamson about racism in the South.

9/4 the brother boys

what to buy next: As per usual with the archivist label, Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order, Vols. 1–11 ♪♪♪♪ (Document, 1991, prod. various) is far too complete unless you're a major fan or an obsessive collector; if you are, of course, you can't go wrong.

best of the rest:

Big Bill Broonzy Sings Folk Songs ♪♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1962)

Big Bill Broonzy & Washboard Sam ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1962)

The Young Big Bill Broonzy (1928–35) ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1968)

Feelin' Low Down ♪♪♪♪½ (GNP Crescendo, 1973)

worth searching for: Big Bill's Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Portrait) captures Broonzy's seriousness and humor as well as the spontaneity of his recording process.

influences:

◀◀ Papa Charlie Jackson, Son House, Robert Johnson, Jimmie Rodgers, Blind Lemon Jefferson

▶▶ Muddy Waters, Leadbelly, Bob Dylan, Woody Guthrie, Brownie McGhee & Sonny Terry, Eric Clapton, Taj Mahal, Cephas & Wiggins

Steve Knopper

The Brother Boys

Eugene Wolf, vocals; Ed Snodderly, vocals, guitar, dobro, fiddle, harmonica.

Though not brothers, Eugene Wolf and Ed Snodderly owe much to the classic country brother duets. Playing what they call "New Hillbilly Music," the two are no mere "retro act." Backed on their recordings by a variety of instrumentation, the Brother Boys deftly back their harmony vocals with a mix of bluegrass, country, and country/blues with a discernible rock influence.

what's available: On Plow ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1992, prod. Jerry Douglas), six originals are mixed with covers of songs from the Wilburn Brothers, Loretta Lynn, and Bill Anderson. Presley's Grocery ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1996, prod. Ed Snodderly) is a refreshing mix of bluegrass songs like Bill Monroe's "Can't You Hear Me Calling," traditional country ("Those Two Blue Eyes"), and rockabilly-flavored originals ("Let's Shake Loose").

influences:

◀◀ The Wilburn Brothers, the Louvin Brothers, the Everly Brothers

▶▶ Tony Rice, Jerry Douglas

Douglas Fulmer

The Brothers Four

Formed 1958, in Seattle, WA.

Bob Flick, vocals, bass; Michael Kirkland, vocals, banjo; John Paine, vocals, guitar; Richard Foley, vocals, percussion; Mark Pearson, vocals, banjo; Terry Lauber, vocals, percussion.

The Brothers Four were a major college campus attraction in the late 1950s and early 1960s, mainly because they happened to be college kids themselves. They met as fraternity "brothers" at the University of Washington in 1958, which gave rise to the somewhat innocuous, if certainly logical, group name (none is related). As they began to find a harmonious groove, the Brothers sought work in the Seattle coffeehouses and played their first professional date in 1958 at the city's Colony Club. In July of 1959, Columbia Records signed the Brothers Four to a contract. Even though the Brothers Four came along at the beginnings of the folk revival, where cynicism and individual freedom were the burgeoning themes, it was hard to imagine the group railing at anything in particular. These were four clean-cut cheerleaders for the American way, who preferred gentle folk ballads to songs that took aim at society's values. They held a definite identification with the middle class, college-educated audience that merely wanted to hear music, not become radicalized by it. In February 1960, Columbia released the group's single "Greenfields," which became a national hit, peaking at #2 on the Billboard Top 40. Greenfields was also the title of their first album. It proved to be their most successful hit, though the standard "Green Leaves of Summer" did mildly well in 1962. The Brothers Four were named "America's Most Promising Group of 1960" by Billboard. This was an era in which live performances, not album sales, were the popularity barometers, and the Brothers Four were among the biggest men on campus. During 1961 and 1962, they played more than 100 colleges. They also landed spots on most of the major television variety shows. Their star vanished, along with those of other folk artists, with the onslaught of the British invasion during the mid-1960s. They reappeared briefly on Fantasy Records in 1969. The Brothers Four brought back group harmony to a genre that had become dominated by individual stylists. They released several additional albums for Columbia, including Brothers Four and Rally 'Round in 1960; B.M.O.C.: Best Music On/Off Campus and Roamin' Song Book in 1961. Their final Columbia albums came in 1964 with Brothers Four Sing of Our Times and More Big Folk Hits. Flick, who now runs a production company in Seattle, is still the leader of the band, which currently includes original member Paine and replacements Pearson and Lauber. The Brothers Four continues to loom large on the revival circuit, playing numerous festivals in the U.S. They make yearly appearances in Asia and Japan, where they've released a number of albums not available in the States.

what to buy: Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1962/1987) represents the best overview of the Brothers Four, primarily for its staunch collection and the fact that it's one of the few of their albums still in print. "Greenfields" and "Green Leaves of Summer" head up the verdant treasures.

what to buy next: The Tokyo Tapes ♪♪♪ (Folk Era, 1997) is a double-length set of live music.

the rest:
Greenfields & Other Gold ♪♪♪ (Folk Era, 1997)
Merry Christmas ♪♪ (Sony, 1997)

worth searching for: In Person (Columbia, 1962) is one of the best of the early LPs.

influences:
◀◀ The Weavers, Burl Ives, Christy Minstrels
▶▶ Smothers Brothers

Bob Paxman

Alison Brown

Born August 7, 1962, in Hartford, CT.

Besides being one of the few women to make her reputation on the banjo, Brown is a progressive instrumentalist who's equally at home in traditional bluegrass as well as more experimental settings. Moving to San Diego at age 12 and growing up there, she went on to Harvard, where she studied pre-med, history, and literature. She then received her M.B.A. from UCLA and worked as an investment banker before devoting herself fully to music. She played with Alison Krauss & Union Station from 1989 to 1991 and in 1993 founded Small World Music, which evolved into the singer-songwriters' label Compass Records in 1995.

what to buy: Quartet ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1996, prod. Garry West), her fourth album, is a delight, featuring John Burr on piano, Garry West on bass, and Rick Reed on drums. With its heavy jazz and Latin overtones, it won't remind anyone of Earl Scruggs, but Brown's use of the five-string is consistently clever, exciting, and melodic.

what to buy next: Look Left ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1994, prod. Garry West) is Brown's third album and contains more elements of pure bluegrass, but it expands her sound into Cajun ("Etouffée Brutus?"), jazz ("Look Left"), and world beat ("Deep North") as well. It's a smorgasbord of styles that holds together and makes a pretty grand statement.

what to avoid: Be wary of the Alison Brown Quartet's Out of the Blue ♪♪ (Compass, 1998, prod. Garry West). Using a lot of nylon-string banjo takes the edge off Brown's playing, resulting in way too much fern-bar jazz noodling.

the rest:
Simple Pleasures ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1990)
Twilight Motel ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1992)

worth searching for: For those really into Brown's playing, she performs very nicely on the following albums: Alison Krauss & Union Station's I've Got That Old Feeling ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990, prod. Bil VornDick, Jerry Douglas); Michelle Shocked's Arkansas Traveler ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1992, prod. Michelle Shocked); and Clive Gregson's I Love This Town ♪♪♪♪ (Compass, 1996, prod. Clive Gregson, Garry West).

influences:
◀◀ Alison Krauss, Béla Fleck, David Grisman, Tony Trischka
▶▶ Kate Campbell, Clive Gregson

Bob Cannon

Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown

Born April 18, 1924, in Vinton, LA.

Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown is one of the foremost architects of modern blues guitar, second only to T-Bone Walker in terms of influential Texans. But with Gate, that's just the start of the story. A multi-instrumentalist (violin, harmonica, piano, mandolin, viola, and drums as well as guitar), Brown embraces a host of musical categories, throwing Cajun, country, bluegrass, and jazz into his blues-dominated arsenal. Gate's versatility sometimes works against him—even his best albums often include one misguided venture—but it also informs everything he does with a wide-ranging sense of possibility. And he remains a damned fine blues guitarist.

what to buy: The Original Peacock Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990, prod. Scott Billington, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown) collects Brown's 1950s work and is the best indication of how and why his playing was so influential on several generations of Texan guitarists. He returned to a big band format more than 40 years later with Gate Swings ♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1997, prod. John Snyder, Jim Bateman) with smashing, jazzy results. Pressure

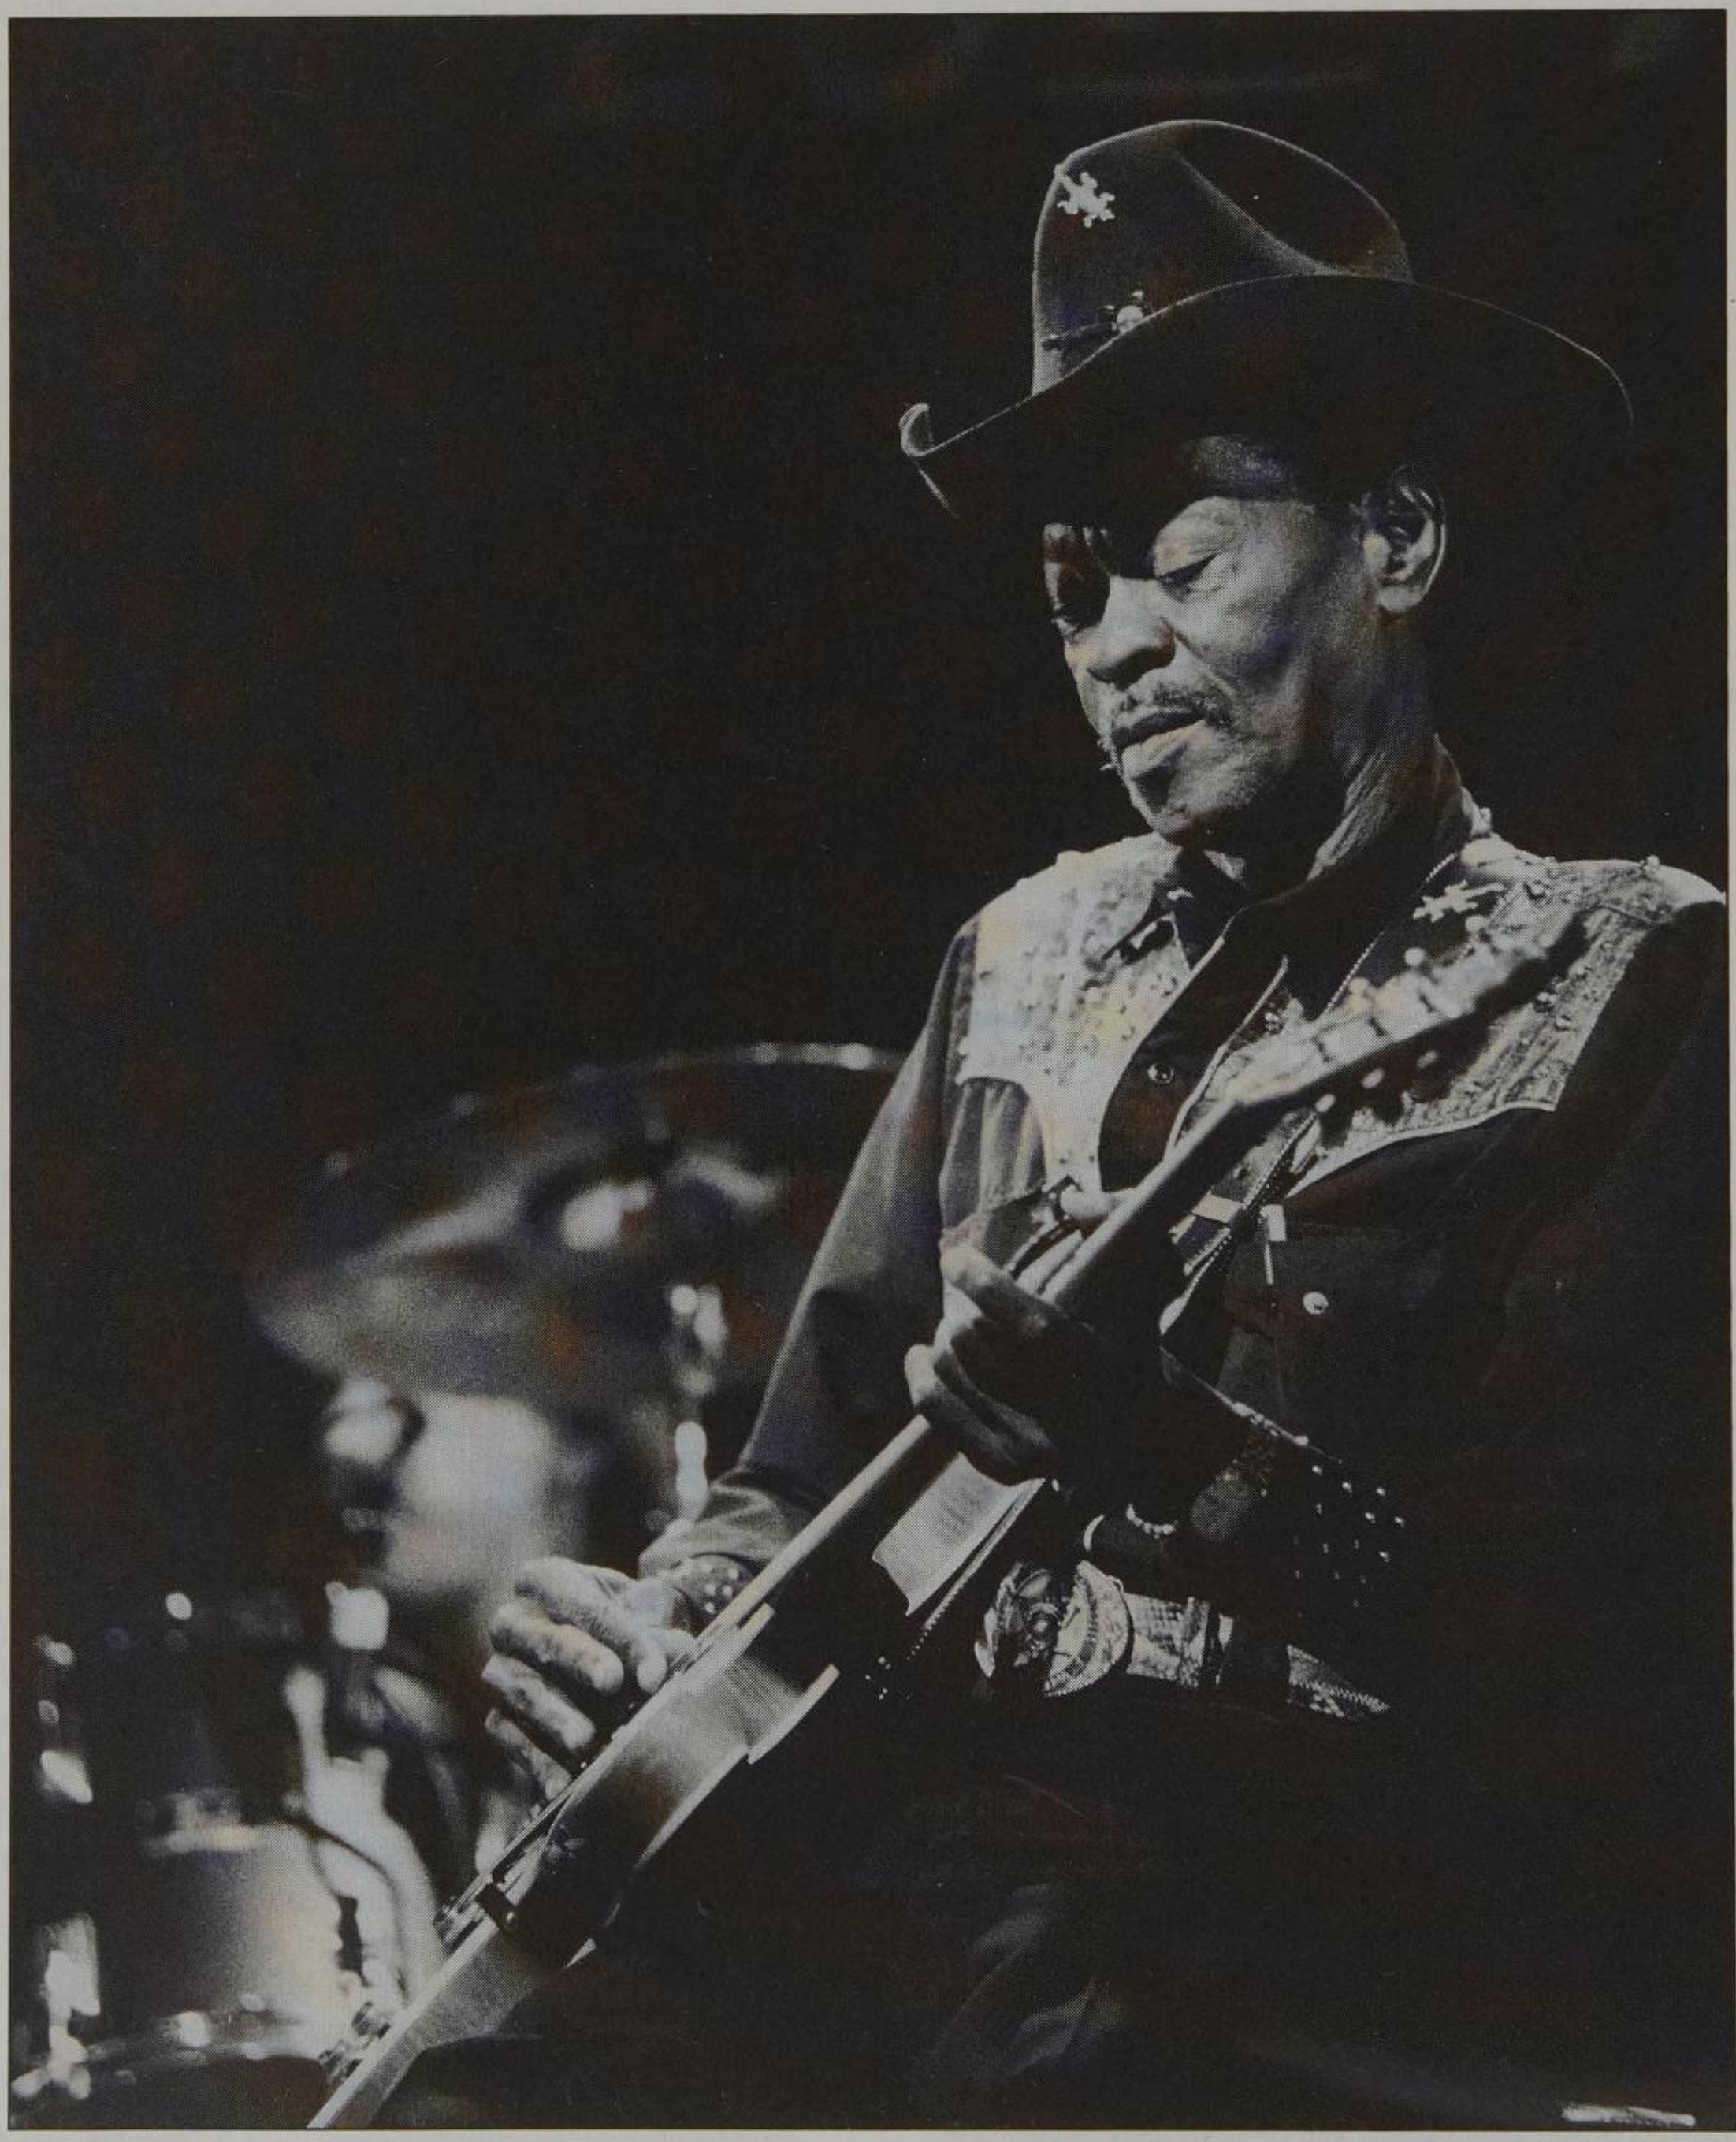
clarence "gatemouth" brown



Cooker (Alligator, 1987, prod. Bruce Iglauer) reissues 1973 French sessions, in which Brown is backed by jazz greats including Jay McShann, Arnett Cobb, and Milt Buckner. The result is a predictably swinging set.

what to buy next: Brown stuck to horn-driven blues on his comeback album, Alright Again! ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982, prod. Scott Billington, Jim Bateman), which won a Grammy and quickly reestablished him as an American original and a musical force to be reckoned with. Most of his many subsequent albums have been quite strong, but Standing My Ground ♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1989) stands out.

what to avoid: On Long Way Home ♪♪½ (Verve, 1996), Brown is mostly just hindered by guest stars ranging from Eric Clapton, who lays down a few generic solos, to John Loudermilk, who sings a wretched version of his own "Tobacco Road." The album does, however, include several excellent and unexpected acoustic tracks. Gate's on the Heat ♪♪ (Verve, 1975) found him saddled with a lame, stiff band.

the rest:
One More Mile ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1983)
Real Life ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
Texas Swing ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
Just Got Lucky ♪♪♪♪ (Evidence, 1993)
Man ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1995)
San Antonio Ballbuster ♪♪♪♪ (Drive Archives, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ T-Bone Walker, Louis Jordan
▶▶ Johnny Copeland, Johnny Winter, Albert Collins, Roy Clark

Alan Paul

Greg Brown

Born in IA.

Iowa singer/songwriter Greg Brown possesses a quirky sensibility, a gift for wordplay, a wry, ironic stage presence, and a rumbling, phlegmatic baritone voice that has found much favor with festival-goers and folk club fans over the past 15 years. Probably the Brown song most familiar to traditional country music fans is "The Train Carrying Jimmie Rodgers Home," which was recorded by the Nashville Bluegrass Band. It also appears on his first Red House album.

Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown (© Jack Vartoogian)

what to buy: Down in There ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1990, prod. Bo Ramsey) contains 10 of Brown's most endearing, quirky originals. The Live One ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1995) captures Brown in the venue best suited for full appreciation of his sense of humor and wordplay.

what to buy next: On Songs of Innocence and Experience ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1986, prod. Bob Feldman, Greg Brown), Brown sets to music and sings the poems of William Blake, while Michael Doucet accompanies on fiddle. Greg Brown and Bill Morrissey team up on Friend of Mine ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1993, prod. Ellen Karas), a batch of songs they've sung together at parties, backstage, and in green rooms. The album has a loose, amiable feel to it, and the repertoire is eclectic enough—everything from "Little Red Rooster" and "You Can't Always Get What You Want" to Hank Williams's "I'll Never Get Out of This World Alive."

the rest:
44 & 66 ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1980)
In the Dark with You ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1986)
One More Goodnight Kiss ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1987)
One Big Town ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1989)
Dream Cafe ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1992)
Bathtub Blues ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1993)
The Poet Game ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1994)
Further In ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ John Prine, Tom Waits
▶▶ Bill Morrissey, John Gorka

Randy Pitts

Herschel Brown /J.H. Brown

Born last half of nineteenth century, in northern GA.

Washboard player Herschel Brown recorded for both Victor and OKeh. His recordings for Victor consisted exclusively of breakdowns, but his more extended term with OKeh also produced talking blues, rags, and comic sketches in a variety of instrumental settings. Tony Russell, whose liner notes accompany the recently released Document recording, suggests that he may also have been known as J.H. Brown and that his recording career may have begun in November 1927 with a band called the Spooney Five, who recorded "Chinese Rag" and "My Little Girl" for Columbia Records. Russell reports that J.H. Brown played in a group with a similar-sounding name on Atlanta's WSB earlier that year and was described by the Atlanta Journal

9/8 milton brown and the musical brownies

as performing with "two ordinary table spoons and a wash or scrub board, with symbols (sic) attached to the fingers." In any case, Brown's recordings on Victor and OKeh were landmark recordings that were "somewhat unusual for recorded hillbilly music but probably preserved the flavor of many forgotten small-town bands."

what's available: Herschel Brown 1928–1929 ♪♪♪♪ (Document Records, 1996, prod. Johnny Parth) contains the complete recorded works, a total of 23 tracks, of Herschel Brown in chronological order. Document has released a number of recordings that document the earliest recorded material from hillbilly and black musicians in the South. Like the others, this one is very well done, with excellent sound given the source material.

influences:

◀◀ John Dilleshaw, Chris Bouchillon

▶▶ The Skilletlickers, New Lost City Ramblers

Neal Walters

Milton Brown and the Musical Brownies

Formed 1932 in Fort Worth, Texas.

Milton Brown (born 1903; died April 18, 1936), bandleader, vocals; Derwood Brown, guitar; Wanna Coffman, bass, steel guitar; Ocie Stockard, banjo; Fred "Papa" Calhoun, piano; Cecil Brower, fiddle; Bob Dunn, steel guitar; Cliff Bruner, fiddle. Other members include: Jesse Ashlock, fiddle; Theodore Grantham, fiddle; Johnny Borowski, fiddle; Buck Buchanan, fiddle; Iris Harper, tenor sax; Wilson "Lefty" Perkins, steel guitar.

For a brief moment in 1930 the twin pillars of Western swing—Milton Brown and Bob Wills, along with guitarist Herman Arnspiger—worked together in Fort Worth, first as the Aladdin Laddies, then as the Light Crust Doughboys. Disputes with management led Brown, who had been leading his own vocal group since the mid-1920s, to start his own ensemble; Wills followed that same path a few months later. That meant there were two great dance bands working in Texas and Oklahoma, but the two men most responsible for fusing big band, jazz, blues, vaudeville, and hillbilly music into a classic American style recorded only two sides together ("Sunbonnet Sue" and "Nancy Jane"). Before his death in 1936 of injuries from a car accident, Brown and his band recorded better than 100 songs, some originals, most pulled from those disparate traditions and recast into this new, regional dance music. That so many sides were cut during the depth of the Depression speaks volumes about the audience for Brown's music. Wills wore Western swing's crown for most of his life, but even a casual pass through Brown's oeuvre reveals the unmistakable trace of rare genius. Brown's vocals swing with an easy, carefree joy—the same breezy confidence that made Bing Crosby an influential stylist—and he surrounded himself with a first-rate band of extraordinarily versatile musicians. Of particular note is the work of legendary steel guitarist Bob Dunn.

what's available: Every extant side cut by Milton Brown and the Musical Brownies, along with several cut by the group under his brother's leadership, those two tantalizing tracks from the Fort Worth Doughboys, and two comparatively recent recreations are assembled in the five-disc The Complete Recordings of the Father of Western Swing: Milton Brown and the Musical Brownies 1932–1937 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Texas Rose Records, 1995, prod. Michael Kieffer). This is as close to an essential document of indigenous American music as you will find this side of Robert Johnson, Duke Ellington, or Bill Monroe. Mastered beautifully from the original 78s, these songs still glisten with the joy of invention. Highlights include the treacle of "My Precious Sonny Boy," a glorious "Sweet Georgia Brown," and the blues of "St. Louis Blues" (later recast by Elmore James and many others as "Whose Muddy Shoes").

influences:

◀◀ Bob Wills, Light Crust Doughboys, Herman Arnspiger

▶▶ Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Asleep at the Wheel

Grant Alden

Paul Brown

Born May 2, 1952, in New York City, NY.

Paul Brown is a lifelong banjo picker and old-time musician. He was raised in a small town in New York state, where his Virginia-born mother sang old-time songs and gave him recordings of Harry and Jeanie West for Christmas while his friends were getting the Rolling Stones. He started playing banjo at age ten, followed by fiddle and guitar in his early twenties. He has been a radio journalist and producer, music collector and presenter, sawmill worker, professional furniture upholsterer, vegetable gardener, and antique car driver all these years. He can be found on numerous recordings playing fiddle, guitar, and banjo.

what to buy: Paul Brown and Mike Seeger recorded an album together called Way Down in North Carolina ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Paul Brown, Mike Seeger). This CD is the best introduction to Paul because it showcases his versatility as a performer. On this CD you will hear him in all his talents (singer, banjo, guitar, fiddle).

what to buy next: Paul Brown has spent many years with the musicians of Mt. Airy, Surry County, North Carolina. The best recording to come out of these relationships is the one he made with Benton Flippen, Old Time, New Times ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Paul Brown, Ken Irwin), who was once a member of the Camp Creek Boys. Paul recorded much of this CD, wrote the liner notes, and played banjo on most of the cuts.

solo outings:

Toast String Stretchers:

Wanted ♪♪♪ (Toast String Stetchers, c. 1995)

A. Robic and the Exertions:

Old Time Music Dance Party ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1987)

influences:

◀◀ Fields and Wade Ward, Benton Flippen, Tommy Jarrell, Fred Cockerham

▶▶ Jim Newberry, Dirk Powell, Bill Mansfield

Steve Gardner

Jackson Browne

Born October 9, 1948, in Heidelberg, West Germany.

Jackson Browne was the right artist for his times—during a decade in which rock fans were growing up and dealing with real-life problems for the first time, Browne's thoughtful personal reflection seemed, well, thoughtful. When he titled his second LP For Everyman, a generation of fans took it for granted that they were the "everyman" Browne was writing about. At his best, he's a powerful songwriter because he writes personal truths and sings realistically about love from a post-collegiate point of view (Joni Mitchell was the female equivalent emotionally, though musically she was much more complex and experimental). His early songs such as "Ready or Not" and "Take It Easy" may have been sexist drivel, but guys were like that then. First noticed as a waif-like folksinger and sucked into the vortex of the New York City avant garde via a brief encounter with Velvet Underground chanteuse Nico, Browne found himself an early member of the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, before settling into the nascent Southern California country-rock scene that also birthed the Eagles and Linda Ronstadt in the 1970s. Over the course of his albums, you could watch Browne grow up; his best work—songs such as "Fountain of Sorrow" or "For a Dancer"—weren't macho manifestos like his boyish songs, but thoughtful (there's that word again) ruminations on lost love that went well beyond the simple romanticism of Top 40 radio. But on Late for the Sky—the same album that yielded "For a Dancer"—Browne planted the seeds of his ultimate downfall as an artist. His socio-political conscience, revealed on the anti-nuke song "Before the Deluge," powerful and moving as an album closer, was the beginning of Browne's immersion in issues of the day. By the 1980s, Browne's somewhat one-dimensional sound sounded strident because of his insistence on using his position as a pop star to issue political harangues, albeit important ones, about Central America, the environment, and modern America in general. Most of his recent output makes him sound as tedious and preachy as Bruce Cockburn, even though he's tried to reach back to earlier styles and musical values.

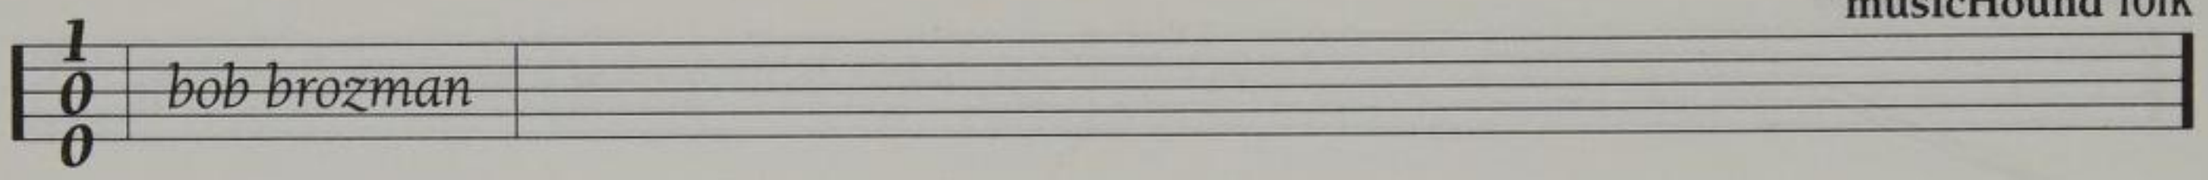
what to buy: Late for the Sky ♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1974, prod. Jackson Browne, Al Schmitt) is a bit mopey, but it hangs together as Browne's strongest and most melodious album, with a couple of rockers thrown in to perk up the listeners. The best song, the fondly reflective "Fountain of Sorrow," is typical of Browne's ability to make personal experiences seem universal.

what to buy next: The Pretender ♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1976, prod. Jon Landau) gets a little ponderous on songs such as "Sleep's Dark and Silent Gate" and the title track, Browne's first rant at middle America, but it also was emotionally powerful, with songs of regret ("Your Bright Baby Blues," "Here Come Those Tears Again"), and hope for the future ("The Only Child," "Daddy's Tune") following his first wife's 1976 suicide. It solidified his commercial cachet and was his first platinum LP.

what to avoid: Running on Empty ♪ (Asylum, 1977, prod. Jackson Browne) was hailed at the time as a brilliant concept album about life on the road, but it hasn't held its luster. It now sounds like an indulgent pastiche thrown together with second-rate, emotionally uncompelling material, and a couple of curio-like cover songs (the Rev. Gary Davis's "Cocaine" and the Zodiacs' "Stay," with a cameo vocal by guitarist David Lindley).

the rest:

Jackson Browne ♪♪½ (Asylum, 1972)
For Everyman ♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1973)
Hold Out ♪♪ (Asylum, 1980)
Lawyers in Love ♪♪ (Asylum, 1983)
Lives in the Balance ♪♪ (Asylum, 1986)
World in Motion ♪♪ (Elektra, 1989)
I'm Alive ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1993)



Looking East ♪♪ (Elektra, 1996)
The Next Voice You Hear: The Best of Jackson Browne ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1997)

worth searching for: The promotional CD for Browne's 1993 single "I'm Alive" was accompanied by a well-chosen 12-song retrospective that was digitally re-mastered to sound better than Browne's regular CDs.

influences:
◀◀ Leonard Cohen, Eric Andersen, Phil Ochs
▶▶ David Wilcox, Garth Brooks, Natalie Merchant, Alanis Morissette

Gil Asakawa

Bob Brozman

Born March 8, 1954, in New York, NY.

The foremost contemporary champion of the National steel guitar, Bob Brozman is an exciting and very exacting guitar player who has mastered a variety of slide styles along with swing and fingerstyle playing. One of Brozman's passions is Hawaiian music, which he has approached with a scholar's thoroughness and a fan's zeal, producing five compilations of early Hawaiian music and making new recordings with the legendary Tau Moe Family and slack key master Ledward Kaapana. A former member of R. Crumb's Cheap Suit Serenaders, Brozman is also well versed in electric and acoustic blues styles, and has published the definitive history of National guitars and recorded a series of instructional videos for Homespun Tapes.

what to buy: Bob Brozman teamed with Ledward Kaapana to record Kika Kila Meets Ki Hoalu ♪♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1997, prod. Bob Brozman, George Winston). This pairing works nicely: Kaapana's full-bodied fingerpicking covers the melody and rhythm, allowing Brozman's amazing slide work to provide the textural accents and coloration his instrument has traditionally provided in Hawaiian music. This is soulful, happy music, played with verve and respect.

what to buy next: Brozman's electric blues album, A Truckload of Blues ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Bob Brozman, Pete Carlson), finds him in fine, if gruff, voice on classics like "Come on in My Kitchen" and "We Gonna Move" alongside new period pieces like the rockin' "Never Hit the Same Place Twice" and "Backwards Blues."

the rest:
Devil's Slide ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982)
Hello Central, Give Me Dr. Jazz ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1984)
Bob Brozman and His Thieves of Sleep (Sky Ranch)
Blues Round the Bend (Sky Ranch)
Snapping the Strings (Kicking Mule)
Blue Hula Stomp (Kicking Mule, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Tau Moe, the Genial Hawaiians, Robert Johnson
▶▶ Ry Cooder, David Lindley, Ben Harper

Michael Parrish

Brute

See: Vic Chesnutt

James Bryan

Born November 24, 1953, in Gadsden, AL.

Fiddler James Bryan grew up surrounded by the traditional music of his native northeastern Alabama. He learned to play fiddle as a young boy from his father and from neighbors John and Mac Blaylock, Marvin Downer, and Tommy Smith. As a teenager he traveled to Nashville to study under bluegrass legend Kenny Baker, turning professional soon after. He toured for a while with Bill Monroe and with Tennessee Ernie Ford among others before finding a home in Norman Blake's Rising Fawn String Ensemble. Bryan's fiddle playing, rooted firmly in the old-time tradition yet technically strong and expressive, was a natural fit in Blake's quietly virtuosic ensemble and he shared many years of great recordings and concerts with the group. As a solo performer, Bryan has recorded two albums of fiddle tunes and one album with fellow Rising Fawn alumnus Carl Jones. James's fiddle style is smooth and precise, closer to the showy, fast, notey fiddle style of Missouri than to the more archaic sounding Galax or Round Peak styles. His professional training under Kenny Baker and his years as a touring musician have left him with great technique wedded to a deep love and understanding of southern old-time music. In recent years Bryan has performed less frequently, staying home in Mentone, Alabama, and raising a family. Long known for finding and recording obscure tunes, primarily from Alabama, he has in recent years turned his attention to resuscitating the vast repertoire contained in nineteenth-century music books, primarily banjo tutors. Several of these tunes appeared on his most recent album, Two Pictures. Bryan is one of the great lights of the old-time music revival and should be more widely known than he is.

what's available: James Bryan and Carl Jones's Two Pictures ♪♪♪ (Martin, 1995, prod. Carl Jones) is an album of duets between Bryan and guitarist Jones. It is a strong collection of both traditional tunes and newly composed material. Bryan's fiddling is still strong and smooth, as he provides another load of unknown tunes for fiddlers to get to know. Jones provides a strong guitar accompaniment and some choice songs from his own pen. The cassette-only The First of May ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1986, prod. James Bryan) and Lookout Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1983, prod. James Bryan) are great old-time fiddle albums, chock full of unknown tunes and played with great feeling and technical skill. Bryan's technical training gives him the musical vocabulary to express himself fully, while his deep roots in southern old-time music and life keep him close to the music's core. It's a shame Rounder hasn't reissued these fine recordings on CD; we can only hope they do so soon. Lookout Blues, his solo debut, features a raft of older traditional tunes, as well as several tunes from the pen of Bill Monroe and Kenny Baker. It features appearances from fellow Rising Fawn String Ensemble members Norman and Nancy Blake and Tom Jackson, among others. The First of May contains another bunch of largely unknown tunes including several by the great young fiddler Bruce Greene. The sound is again solid and warm, with sensitive accompaniment from the Blakes and Tom Jackson. Among the many highlights on The First of May are a beautiful "Swedish Waltz" and the opening reel, "Julianne Flanigan."

influences:

⏮ Kenny Baker, Tommy Jackson

⏭ Bruce Molsky, Kirk Sutphin

see also: Norman and Nancy Blake

Tony Ziselberger

Bryndle

See: Karla Bonoff

Rachel Buchman

Born July 3, 1956, in New York, NY.

The enthusiasm and creativity that Texas-based vocalist, pianist, guitarist, songwriter, and folksinger Rachel Buchman once brought to the theatrical stage as an actress continues to be expressed through her recordings and performances as a children's music performer. Buchman's 1986 debut album, Hello Ev'rybody! Playsongs and Rhymes from a Toddler's World, received prestigious awards from the American Library Association, Parent's Choice, and Oppenheimer Toy. Subsequent albums have included playsongs and poems collected during her travels around the globe and Jewish holiday songs. Raised in a musical home in New York City, Buchman sang in a choir and studied piano as a youngster. Although she initially focused more on acting, she began to entertain at children's parties to supplement her work as an actress. Buchman's interests in Jewish music for children were sparked by a trip she made, as a college student, to Israel. While visiting relatives in London on her way home, she met a cousin who was a Holocaust survivor. Inspired to learn the Yiddish language, she enrolled at Yivo University in New York upon her return. While there she developed an interest in Yiddish theater and Yiddish music. Buchman's first opportunity to bring Jewish and Yiddish songs to the public came during the year that she and her husband, Harvey Yunis, a teacher of ancient Greek and Roman languages, lived in Berlin. Her multi-lingual songbook and guide to Jewish holidays, Jewish Holiday Songs for Children, was published by Mel Bay Publications in 1997. The mother of two children, Buchman expanded her knowledge of languages and musical traditions while working in a day-care center at Harvard University in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Buchman, who currently works at the Becker Early Childhood Center of Temple Emanu El of Houston and is a frequent performer at Texas schools, has recently incorporated classical music and piano improvisation into her performances for children.

editor's choice
9 mountain dulcimer albums

Jerry Rockwell, The Blackbird and the Beggarman (Wizmak)

Various Artists, Masters of the Mountain Dulcimer (Susan Trump)

Hollis Landrum, Swing Dulcimer (HL)

Lois Hornbostel, Dulcimer Jubilee (AHR)

Mike Casey, The Pleasures of Hope (Wizmak)

Don Pedi, The Hog Went through the Fence Yoke and All (Class IV)

Gary Gallier, On the Wing (Dancing Thumb)

Mark Nelson, Autumn (Wizmak)

Alan Freeman, The Mountain Dulcimer (JMP)

what to buy: A seasonal theme threads the British, Scottish, and American folk songs that Buchman interprets on Sing a Song of Seasons ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Steve Netsky, Rachel Buchman). Accompanying herself on guitar, glockenspiel, harmonica, and miscellaneous sound effects, Buchman sings of summertime swims, spring flowers, winter snows, and autumn leaves. While most of the songs are traditional, Buchman offers musical adaptations of Robert Louis Stevenson, Dixie Willson, and Marie Louise Allen poems and an original story, "Mystery of the White Things."

what to buy next: The culmination of Buchman's fascination with Yiddish and Jewish music, Jewish Holiday Songs for Children ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Steve Netsky, Rachel Buchman), is a musical sampling of Jewish tradition. With accompaniment provided by Eitan Ornoy (violin), Ruth Shechter (accordion), Aviva Weisel (cheese grater, whisk, and tambourine), and seven children, including her son Jacob and daughter Judith, Buchman offers a musical exploration of the Jewish calendar.

the rest:

Hello Ev'rybody! Playsongs and Rhymes from a Toddler's World ♪♪♪ (A Gentle Wind, 1986)
Songs and Games from around the World ♪♪ (Rounder, 1988)
Baby and Me—Playsongs and Lullabies to Share with Your Baby ♪♪ (A Gentle Wind, 1991)
Hello Rachel! Hello Children! ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Pete Seeger, Theodore Bikel, Ella Jenkins

▶▶ Priscilla Herdman, Sally Rogers, Peter Alsop

Craig Harris

The Buckets

See: Ed's Redeeming Qualities

The Buckhannon Brothers

Formed 1993, in Saint Charles, MO.

Curtis Buckhannon, mandolin; Dennis Buckhannon, guitar.

Curtis and Dennis Buckhannon are two young old-time musicians who, although they don't sing, have an instrumental style reminiscent of several brother duets of the 1930s and 1940s. As brothers, they've obviously grown up appreciating the music of earlier times and they describe themselves as having gotten "hooked on old-time music so long ago that neither of them can remember exactly how it happened." They are mainstays of the Midwestern old-time music scene.

what's available: The Buckhannon Brothers ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1993, prod. the Buckhannon Brothers) is their only release, but it is a definite winner if you like mandolin and guitar played with danceable energy, unfailing good humor, and excellent musicianship. Sprightly fiddle tunes from New Mexico, Sweden, and their own Ozark region, ragtime masterpieces, peppy polkas, and sweet waltzes are played impeccably; and there's a full 73 minutes of music. Frank Reed, a dance fiddler from Moberly, Missouri, once said, "You can't listen to this music and feel bad. If you do, the devil's got your soul."

influences:

◀◀ The Blue Sky Boys, the Monroe Brothers

▶▶ The Case Brothers, Mando Mafia

Neal Walters

Jeff Buckley

Born November 17, 1966. Died May 29, 1997, in Memphis, TN.

Jeff Buckley was the son of legendary experimental folk artist Tim Buckley, and, as Julian Lennon will tell you, having a famous father can be both a blessing and a curse. As the inheritor of such a legacy, Buckley endured comparisons to his late father and the expectations of fans eager for the progeny to take up where the sire left off. Like his father, Buckley possessed an ethereal voice capable of dramatic sweeps of range; his singing uncannily evoked Tim's. However, Buckley the junior clearly had a musical agenda quite apart from his father's. In fact, Jeff claimed very little musical influence from his father, who died before his son was old enough to remember him. While his material tangentially recalls Tim's florid romanticism, Jeff's musical direction—especially with a band—leaned more toward '70s album-rock than folk ballads. He drowned in the Mississippi River near Memphis; at the time of his death he was recording his second full-length album.

what's available: Grace ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1994, prod. Andy Wallace, Jeff Buckley) is Buckley's second recording, and his first with a full band following the more intimate solo coffee house EP Live at Sin-E ♪♪♪ (Big Cat/Columbia, 1993, prod. Jeff Buckley, Steve Berkowitz). The material ranges from progressive rock ("So Real") to meditative ballads (a stunning voice and guitar arrangement of Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah"), to dreamy psychedelia ("Mojo Pin"), yet the album impresses as a cohesive work. The unifying principle is Buckley's versatile singing; his voice can sinuously entwine itself around a beautiful melody, hover with growling menace, and soar to startling falsetto heights, often within the same song. The most pop-friendly material here ("Last Goodbye," "Grace") boasts smart hooks, inventive arrangements, and restrained yet aggressive playing. Buckley's writing on Grace shows a distinct knack for interesting melodies and haunting lyricism, and the album stands as an impressive early achievement.

Jeff Buckley (© Jack Vartoogian)

influences:
Tim Buckley, Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan

David Galens

Tim Buckley

Born February 14, 1947, in Washington, DC. Died June 29, 1975, in Santa Monica, CA.

One of numerous folk singer-songwriters to surface in Dylan's mid-60's wake, Buckley soon parted company with his peers to chart a path very much his own. Though his earliest records seem innocently romantic today (he was just 19 when his first album appeared), his turn towards a more free-form, jazz-influenced sound pushed his introspective and always impassioned vocals right off the map. For it was Buckley's voice, above all, that distinguished him—a stunning, four-octave wonder that ranged from angelic tenderness to blistering passion. Recording for Frank Zappa's Straight label from 1970 to 1973, his folk/jazz experimentation—and angst-ridden, sexually direct material (e.g. "Get on Top of Me Woman")—was critically admired but found little commercial acceptance. By 1975, Buckley was dead of a heroin overdose. Ironically, his underappreciated legacy is being rediscovered today through the popularity of his son Jeff Buckley (who sounds uncannily like his father).

what to buy: Oddly, for a singer of Buckley's improvisational talents, no live recordings appeared during his lifetime. Two recent releases have remedied that—and are a perfect place for the uninitiated to start. Dream Letter: Live in London, 1968 ♪♪♪♪ (Manifesto, 1990, prod. Bill Inglot, Lee Hammond) is a two-CD set recorded by the BBC, generously capturing the passion of Buckley's early performances, with jazz-textured guitar, bass, and vibraphone backing. Honeyman ♪♪♪♪ (Manifesto Records, 1995) is from a 1973 New York radio show—and an altogether edgier, more incendiary affair from a man who had now left his '60s innocence far behind.

what to buy next: Adventurous listeners should proceed directly to Starsailor ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1970, prod. Tim Buckley), Buckley's most uncompromising work—by a long shot. Consciously experimental, its raw passion still outweighs its avant-garde pretensions. The more accessible, languidly melancholy Blue Afternoon ♪♪♪½ (Straight, 1969) is the best of the '60s discs. Greetings from LA ♪♪♪½ (Straight, 1972, prod. Jerry Goldstein) is gloriously decadent late-era Buckley, in full carnal heat.

what to avoid: Near the end, the inspiration was sadly lacking. Look at the Fool ♪ (Planet 3 Records, 1974, prod. Joe Falsia) provides the evidence.

the rest:
Tim Buckley ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1966)
Goodbye and Hello ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1967)
Happy/Sad ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1969)
Lorca ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1970)
Sefronia ♪♪ (Planet 3 Records)
The Peel Sessions ♪♪♪ (Dutch East India, 1991)
Live at the Troubadour, 1969 ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1994) worth searching for: If you can find it, Buckley's soundtrack for the 1969 Hall Bartlett film Changes is worth hearing.

influences:
Bob Dylan, Leadbelly, Miles Davis, John Coltrane
This Mortal Coil, Bono, Patti Smith, Jeff Buckley

Doug Pippin

Richard Buckner

Born in Chico, CA.

Though this San Francisco singer-songwriter's twang resembles Dwight Yoakam's, it carries a soft, emotional intensity instead of a honky-tonking joy. Critics compared him to the comparatively upbeat Gram Parsons when his debut, Bloomed, came out during 1995, but a heavy sense of dread hangs over Buckner's best songs. For example, "22" is a classic country tear-jerker about suicide, only much darker and scarier, like the script for a good horror movie. On Devotion & Doubt, producer J.D. Foster contributes droning pump organs, rumbling drums, and whining dobros—and the overall sound complements Buckner's observations about tightening throats, deadly highways, and lying awake at 4 a.m. By the time he opens "On Travelling" with the words "I love you, darling," you just know something terrible is going to happen.

what to buy: Bloomed ♪♪♪♪ (Dejadisc, 1995, prod. Lloyd Maines) would be a great album even if it were just "22" and 11 lemons. Although the songs of lost love, misery, tears, and snuffed fires inside occasionally get heavy-handed, Buckner establishes himself as an important new voice in country music.

the rest:
Devotion & Doubt ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Dwight Yoakam, Gram Parsons, the Violent Femmes, Johnny Cash, the Cowboy Junkies ▶▶ Gillian Welch

Steve Knopper

Buckwheat Zydeco

Born Stanley Dural Jr., November 14, 1947, in Lafayette, LA.

Although Stanley Dural Sr. was a respected La-La (pre-zydeco) accordionist, his son Stanley Junior rebelled and took up the piano. By nine he had gone professional. He put together his first R&B band in 1971 and worked the busy Lafayette scene. During the late 1970s he began playing organ with Clifton Chenier's Red Hot Louisiana Band. Chenier lectured Dural on the importance of Creole culture and music. By 1979 Buckwheat had learned the piano accordion and left to start his own band, Il Sont Partis. His combination of tradition and more contemporary sounds have given Buckwheat accessibility to listeners far outside the normal zydeco audience. He has been able to attract major label interest and promulgate the zydeco gospel throughout the world. His bands have a reputation for being extremely well rehearsed and tight, as well as highly danceable.

what to buy: 100% Fortified Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Black Top, 1985, prod. Hammond Scott, Nauman S. Scott) shows Buckwheat and his band rocking away. It has the mix—from the very rural and funky to the very urbane—that packs the floor at El Sido's in Lafayette.

what to buy next: When Buckwheat steps up with just the drums before him and drives the music with his accordion, you can hear how good this man can be. It is the litmus test for all good zydeco accordionists. Waitin' for My Ya-Ya ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Scott Billington) comes close to finding that balance between his talent and his desire to please a diverse audience.

the rest:
On a Night Like This ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1987)
Buckwheat's Party ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
Turning Point ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988)
Taking It Home ♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1988)
Ils Sont Partis ♪♪♪ (Blues Unlimited, 1988)
Buckwheat's Zydeco Party ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988) (compilation album)
Where There's Smoke There's Fire ♪♪♪ (Island, 1990)
Menageri: Essential Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Mango/Antilles, 1993) (compilation album)
Five Card Stud ♪♪½ (Island, 1994)
Choo Choo Boogaloo ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1994) Trouble ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Clifton Chenier, Boozoo Chavis, Amédée Ardoin
▶▶ Nathan Williams, Lynn August, Zydeco Force

Jared Snyder

Buffalo Springfield

Formed 1966, in Los Angeles, CA. Disbanded 1968.

Stephen Stills, guitar, vocals; Neil Young, guitar, vocals; Richie Furay, guitar, vocals; Dewey Martin, drums, vocals; Bruce Palmer, bass, vocals (1966); Jim Fielder, bass, vocals (1967); Ken Koblun, bass (1967); Jim Messina, bass, vocals (1968).

This was a transitional, seemingly jinxed group that is almost more important for what its members did after they left it, especially Stills (Crosby, Stills, and Nash), Furay (Poco), and Young. Short-time bassist Fielder went on to Blood, Sweat and Tears, and Messina, after a stint with Poco, hooked up with Kenny Loggins. Still, its traumatic, short career doesn't take away from the charm of Buffalo Springfield's music. "There's something happening here/What it is ain't exactly clear," from the band's first hit single, "For What It's Worth," became a catch-phrase for the growing counterculture and introduced Stills as a songwriter. Young's contributions, from "I Am a Child" to "Broken Arrow" and "Mr. Soul," are nascent blueprints of his formidable talent. There are kernels of CSN, Poco, the Eagles, and every other West Coast rock group in the Springfield's mostly pleasant soft folk and country-flavored rock.

what to buy: Buffalo Springfield Again ♪♪♪♪♪ (Atco, 1967, prod. York/Pala) is the group's strongest effort song-wise, with great contributions from Young ("Mr. Soul," "Broken Arrow," "Expecting to Fly") and Stills ("Rock and Roll Woman," "Bluebird"). Retrospective ♪♪♪♪ (Atco, 1969, prod. various), released soon after the group broke up, will have to do until the overdue boxed set comes out.

what to buy next: Buffalo Springfield ♪♪♪♪ (Atco, 1966, prod. Charles Greene, Brian Stone) is a surprising debut, with "For What It's Worth," "Go and Say Goodbye," "Sit Down I Think I Love You," "Nowadays Clancy Can't Even Sing," and "Burned."

the rest:
Last Time Around ♪♪♪ (Atco, 1968)

worth searching for: Bootlegs of Stampede ♪♪♪, the group's aborted final album, boasts a few keepers such as "Neighbor Don't Worry" and "Down to the Wire."

influences:
◀◀ The Everly Brothers, the Beatles, the Byrds

▶▶ Crosby, Stills and Nash, Poco, the Flying Burrito Brothers, Linda Ronstadt, the Eagles, Loggins and Messina, Warren Zevon, Uncle Tupelo

see also: Crosby, Stills and Nash, Neil Young, Loggins & Messina

Leland Rucker

Jimmy Buffett

Born December 25, 1946, in Pascagoula, MS.

Jimmy Buffett came to Nashville with hopes of becoming a country and folk singer, and even though he eventually made his mark as a tropical troubadour, his country roots still show. Buffett's songs about beaches, boats, booze, and women offer a temporary escape for every office-bound baby boomer with a mortgage, three-car garage, and a surly boss. Few can resist the singer/songwriter's balmy fantasyland filled with palm trees, fast boats, cold beer, cheeseburgers, margaritas, and romance. Sure, there are sharks to reckon with and volcanoes to flee and broken hearts to mend, but Buffett's songs assure us they can be dealt with. Buffett majored in journalism at Auburn University and the University of Southern Mississippi, then worked briefly at Billboard magazine before heading to Nashville to write songs. A failed marriage and a move to Key West, Florida, triggered a new appreciation for the healing powers of the tropical sun. Buffett started out writing earnest, positive songs with humor and wit, and his audiences grew slowly but steadily. He scored his first big hit in 1974 with the wonderfully wistful ballad "Come Monday," but it was the booze-in-the-blender philosophical shrug of "Margaritaville" that put the wind in Buffett's sails. With little radio play and a glaring shortage of hit singles—but a large and loyal group of fans known as Parrotheads—Buffett has become one of the wealthiest beach bums in history.

what to buy: Songs You Know by Heart: Jimmy Buffett's Greatest Hit(s) ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1985, prod. Jimmy Buffett) is an essential first step for anyone curious about the Parrothead phenomenon. The album includes the hit(s) ("Margaritaville," "Cheeseburger in Paradise") and concert favorites ("Fins," "Volcano," "Pencil Thin Mustache"). Buffett's breakthrough album, Changes in Latitudes, Changes in Attitudes ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1977, prod. Norbert Putnam) is a perfect sampler of feel-good folk-rockers (e.g. the title track, "Margaritaville") and pensive ballads ("Biloxi," "Wonder Why We Ever Go Home"). Another good overview is offered on Feeding Frenzy ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1990, prod. Michael Utley, Elliot Scheiner), a live recording featuring 72 minutes worth of classic concert craziness.

what to buy next: If Buffett has cast his spell on you, you won't mind indulging in the four-disc box set Boats Beaches Bars & Ballads ♪♪♪♪ (Margaritaville/MCA, 1992, prod. various), an extensive retrospective dividing the 72 songs included by the categories listed in the title. Living and Dying in 3/4 Time ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1974, prod. Don Gant) captures the lyrical charm of early Buffett ("Come Monday," "The Wino and I Know"), while Banana Wind ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1996, prod. Russ Kunkel) shows some justifiable crankiness ("Jamaica Mistaica," "Cultural Infidel") along with Buffett's first instrumental tune, the steel-drum calypso title track.

what to avoid: Keep out of the way of Last Mango in Paris woof! (MCA, 1985, prod. Jimmy Bowen) and Off to See the Lizard ♪ (MCA, 1989, prod. Elliot Scheiner), which, after their one-trick titles, wander around in a sea of overly slick production, losing sight of Buffett's laid-back charm.

the rest:
A White Sport Coat and a Pink Crustacean ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1973)
A-1-A ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1974)
Havana Daydreamin' ♪♪½ (MCA, 1976)
Son of a Son of a Sailor ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1978)
You Had to Be There ♪♪½ (MCA, 1978)
Volcano ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1979)
Coconut Telegraph ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1981)
Somewhere over China ♪♪ (MCA, 1981)
One Particular Harbor ♪♪ (MCA, 1983)
Riddles in the Sand ♪♪ (MCA, 1985)
Floridays ♪½ (MCA, 1986)
Hot Water ♪♪ (MCA, 1988)
Before the Beach ♪♪½ (Margaritaville/MCA, 1993)
Fruitcakes ♪♪♪ (Margaritaville/MCA, 1994)
Barometer Soup ♪♪½ (Margaritaville/MCA, 1995)
Christmas Island ♪♪½ (Margaritaville/MCA, 1996)
Banana Wind ♪♪½ (Margaritaville/MCA, 1996)

worth searching for: All the Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪♪ (Prism Leisure, 1994, prod. various), a British hits collection, is a bit more generous than Songs You Know by Heart.

influences:

◀◀ Gamble Rogers, Irma Thomas, Benny Spellman, Jerry Jeff Walker

▶▶ Iguanas, subdudes, Blues Traveler

David Yonke

Luke and Jenny Anne Bulla

Formed in Grant's Pass, OR.

Luke Bulla (born 1981), fiddle; Jenny Anne Bulla (born 1982), fiddle.

Siblings Luke and Jenny Anne Bulla entered their first fiddle contest in 1987 at ages 6 and 5, respectively. By 1990 they'd become so proficient in bluegrass and Texas fiddling styles—Luke placed in the Top 10 at the Grand Masters Fiddling Championships—that the pair became something of a sensation in the fiddling-contest world.

what's available: Luke and Jenny Anne Bulla ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Bil VornDick), recorded when Luke was 11 and Jenny Anne 10, shows two musicians with unlimited promise. They're accompanied on these largely traditional tunes by a band that includes their father on guitar, Mark Schatz on bass, and Butch Baldassari on mandolin.

influences:

◀◀ Mark O'Connor, Alison Krauss

▶▶ Chris Thile

Brian Mansfield

Robin Bullock

Born April 19, 1964, in Washington, DC.

Bullock, said the Baltimore City Paper, is "one of those guys who can play just about anything with strings disgustingly well." Bullock has recorded on guitar, cittern, mandolin, fiddle, viola, pennywhistle, piano, and bass guitar and is known to be practicing on other instruments as well. He came up through the folk scene in Washington, D.C., and he joined the chamber-folk trio Helicon in 1986. His exposure in that band led to gigs with Walt Michael & Company, the John Whelan Band, and the dance ensemble Footworks. Bullock has kept an active solo career alive, often performing in group shows with his labelmates at Maggie's Music.

what to buy: The best introduction to Bullock's music is Midnight Howl ♪♪♪½ (Maggie's Music, 1995, prod. Robin Bullock), his second solo album. Subtitled A Celebration of the Wild American Spirit and its Roots in Traditional, Irish, and Old-Time Music, the all-instrumental recording illuminates the connections between the Old World and the New. Unlike most Celtic folkies, Bullock pays special attention to the rhythmic bottom of his sound, and this album features two drummers (Celtic percussionist Myron Bretholz and Afro-Cuban percussionist Steve Bloom) as well as Bullock himself multi-tracked on bass. As a result the sparkling Celtic-Appalachian melodies (fleshed out by Helicon flutist Chris Norman and Ceoltoiri harpist Sue Richards) are pushed along with considerable momentum.

what to buy next: The flat-backed cittern is a medieval cross between the lute and the guitar and has recently become popular in Celtic circles for its four mandolin-like pairs of strings and its bouzouki-like range. The cittern and guitar are primarily used as rhythm instruments in Celtic music, but Bullock successfully proves they can be used in lead roles as well. Though the multi-tracking of the one-man album, Green Fields ♪♪♪ (Dorian Discovery, 1993, prod. Robin Bullock), lacks the animated give-and-take of Midnight Howl, it does make a vigorous case for the Celtic guitar as a soloing instrument.

solo outings:

Helicon:

Between Earth and Sky N/A (Maggie's Music, 1998)

influences:

◀◀ Arty McGlynn, Alec Finn, Norman Blake

▶▶ Zan McLeod, Jesse Winch

see also: Helicon

Geoffrey Himes

Kevin Burke

Born June 9, 1950, in London, England.

With parents of Sligo heritage, Kevin Burke grew up on the music of the Sligo master fiddlers of the 1920s and 1930s, Michael Coleman, James Morrison, and Paddy Killoran. As a budding fiddle player, he was also exposed to the playing of the many expatriate Irish musicians who lived in London during the 1950s and 1960s, hence the unmistakable blend of influences, mainly from Sligo and Clare, which characterizes Burke's style. A chance encounter with Arlo Guthrie during Willie Clancy Week in Milltown Malbay led to an invitation to go to the United States to appear on one of Guthrie's albums. This was a turning point for Burke, who then made the decision to become a professional musician. It was during that first visit to the States that he recorded his first album, Sweeney's Dream, for

kevin burke

Folkways. Back in Dublin, Burke was playing in Christy Moore's backup band when he was offered to replace Tommy Peoples in the Bothy Band in 1976. With Moore's blessing, he jumped at the chance of joining the best Irish band on the scene. During the period of his playing with the band, he would do the odd gig with one or two of the other members if the venue could not accommodate the full lineup. Burke especially liked to work with Mícheál Ó Domhnaill and the two of them collaborated on Burke's first solo album, If the Cap Fits, in 1978, then made the very successful Promenade as a duet the following year. After the Bothy Band officially called it quits in 1979, Burke and Ó Domhnaill decided to try their luck in America and ended up based in Portland, Oregon, where future Open House member Paul Kotapish had set up some gigs for them. Their equally successful second duet album, entitled Portland, was recorded for Green Linnet in 1982. Shortly thereafter, with Ó Domhnaill having decided he had had enough playing backup guitar and starting to work with Portland violinist Bill Oskay, Burke found guitarist Gerry O'Beirne to replace him and recorded Up Close with him in 1984. In the meantime, Kerry accordionist Jackie Daly, who had appeared on If the Cap Fits and with whom Burke had recorded Eavesdropper in 1979, had left De Danann. Burke, Daly, and former Planxty member Andy Irvine toured together, with guitarist Arty McGlynn soon joining in, and the band Patrick Street was born in 1987. Meanwhile, Burke had kept in touch with Portland guitar and mandolin player Paul Kotapish. Kotapish introduced him to singer and harmonica player Mark Graham—Kotapish and Graham appeared on Up Close—who, in turn, introduced them to dancer Sandy Silva, and the quartet was soon touring the Pacific Northwest and started to record for Green Linnet in 1992. Yet another musical venture with which Burke was associated during that period was the Celtic Fiddle Festival, a tour first organized in 1992 and bringing together, besides Burke's, the talents of Scotland's ex–Silly Wizard fiddler Johnny Cunningham and Brittany's ex-Kornog member Christian Lemaître. The tour led to a live album being released the following year. One of today's best known and busiest Irish musicians, Kevin Burke continues to appear solo as well as with Patrick Street, Open House, and the Celtic Fiddle Festival at festivals and concert venues all over the United States and abroad.

what to buy: Although recorded early on, Kevin Burke's If the Cap Fits ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1978/Green Linnet, 1981, prod. Dónal Lunny) remains one of the quintessential Irish fiddle albums. The repertoire is Burke's typical mixture of Sligo and Clare tunes, with a few Kerry polkas learned from accordion player Jackie Daly, who appears on a couple of tracks. The debt to the Bothy Band is clear, Burke's main two accompanists being Dónal Lunny and Mícheál Ó Domhnaill. Yet, there are some new ideas, like the double and triple tracking of the fiddle to vary the texture, which Burke will continue to exploit on later recordings. The most spectacular experiment on the album has to be the relentless, 16-minute long medley of reels, which occupied most of side two of the original LP, in which Burke keeps going from tune to tune while the instrumental combinations vary with each change. Promenade ♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1979/Green Linnet, 1981, prod. Gerry O'Beirne, Mícheál Ó Domhnaill) is a somewhat quieter affair, and a different kind of album since it is a duet with Ó Domhnaill, even if the fiddle instrumentals outnumber the songs. Burke performs some of his classic tune medleys, like the reels "Pigeon on the Gate" and "Lafferty's," in his characteristically fluid yet lilting style. Ó Domhnaill's songs include the now famous ballad "Lord Franklin," relating the events of Franklin's doomed expedition of 1845–47 to the North-West Passage. By contrast, Eavesdropper ♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1981/Green Linnet, 1981, prod. Kevin Burke, Jackie Daly), a duet album made in 1979 with Kerry accordion and concertina player Jackie Daly, is entirely instrumental. It features some of the closest duet playing one is likely to hear, with sparse guitar or piano accompaniment or none at all, and an eclectic repertoire of lesser-known tunes. Among the latter, a beautiful arrangement with guitar of an uncommon version of "The Blackbird" stands out. Cork flute player Conal Ó Gráda guests on a few tracks, and so does Paul Brady on piano. The excellent Portland ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1982, prod. Kevin Burke, Mícheál Ó Domhnaill), the first album made by Burke and Ó Domhnaill in the United States, follows the same formula as Promenade but the result is even more exciting. Burke's renditions of Ed Reavy's "Maudabawn Chapel," the jig set "The Rolling Waves," and the final reel medley starting with "Tom Morrison's" and "The Beare Island Reel" have inspired many a fiddle player. Ó Domhnaill's love songs in Gaelic provide a melancholic counterpoint to the dance tunes, and the piece of Scottish mouth music "S'iomadh Rud a Chunnaic Mi" fits perfectly in the set of instrumental flings. The entirely instrumental Up Close ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1984, prod. Gerry O'Beirne) is the product of Burke's later association with guitarist Gerry O'Beirne. The fiddle playing is as inspiring as ever, for instance on the opening "Lord Gordon's Reel" or on Bill

Kevin Burke (© Jack Vartoogian)

Monroe's "Jerusalem Ridge," and O'Beirne's distinctive accompaniments complement it well. The participation of musical guests like ex–Bothy Band flute player Matt Molloy, Galway accordionist Joe Burke, and the amazing harmonica-playing Murphy family from Wexford, brings variety to the album, even if it ends up sounding a bit piecemeal.

what to buy next: Sweeney's Dream ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1973) was Kevin Burke's first album, recorded while he was on his first visit to the United States. Still available from Folkways through the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C., it has also been issued on compact disc by the Irish label Ossian (1989). Burke's selections lean heavily towards the Sligo repertoire, with famous medleys heard from the 78s of Coleman and Killoran, and quite a few tunes that he recorded again later solo or with the Bothy Band. The accompaniment on guitar, five-string banjo, mandolin, and autoharp gives some of the tracks an American string band sound. Burke's contributions to The Celtic Fiddle Festival ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Johnny Cunningham) include two unaccompanied solos, the Clare jigs "Garrett Barry's" and "Cliffs of Moher," and a reprise of the "Pigeon on the Gate" medley from Promenade. The remarkable ensemble playing on the album's trio tracks makes it well worth a listen. Kevin Burke appears on a few tracks on two superior live albums, My Love Is in America—The Boston College Irish Fiddle Festival ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Mícheál Ó Súilleabháin) and Dear Old Erin's Isle—Irish Traditional Music from America ♪♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1992, prod. Mícheál Ó Súilleabháin, Robin Broadbank), recorded live on the occasion of the 8th annual Éigse na Laoi festival of traditional music at University College, Cork.

the rest:

(With Johnny Cunningham, Christian Lemaître) Celtic Fiddle Festival Encore N/A (Green Linnet, 1998)

worth searching for: Burke was one of four fiddle players featured on the LP An Fhidil Sraith II (The Fiddle, Volume II) ♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1980, prod. Paddy Glackin), an outstanding collection of unaccompanied traditional fiddle playing. Of the several albums on which Burke was a guest fiddle player, few rival the classic Andy Irvine, Paul Brady ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1976/Green Linnet, 1981, prod. Dónal Lunny). Although the focus of the album is vocal, there are some dance tunes on which Burke's playing can be savored, particularly the jig "The Blarney Pilgrim" and the reel medley of "Fred Finn's" and "Sailing into Walpole's Marsh." One of Burke's most curious guest appearances, though, would have to be Arlo Guthrie's Last of the Brooklyn Cowboys ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1973, prod. John Pilla, Lenny Waronker), on which the fiddler performs two short reel medleys, one with Guthrie on banjo and Ry Cooder playing bottleneck guitar.

solo outings:

Open House:

Open House ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992)
Second Story ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1994)
Hoof and Mouth ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Michael Coleman, Paddy Killoran, Michael Gorman, Bobby Casey, Martin Rochford, Paddy Fahy

▶▶ Martin Hayes, Dale Russ, Randal Bays

see also: The Bothy Band, Patrick Street

Philippe Varlet

Dave Burland

Born July 12, 1941, in Barnsley, South Yorkshire, England.

Dave Burland, the son of a policeman, became a policeman himself before moving into folk music; he became a professional musician in 1968. Burland's first album, A Dalesman's Litany (now out of print), was voted best folk album of 1971 by Melody Maker. Once a member of the folk-rock band Hedgehog Pie, in recent years the British singer-songwriter has recorded albums of songs by Richard Thompson and Ewan MacColl.

what's available: Benchmark ♪♪♪½ (Fat Cat, 1994, prod. John Leonard) includes sprightly versions of "The Rambling Sailor" and "Hot Asphalt," with energetic guitar accompaniment, and 13 other "Trad. Arr. Burland" songs. His Master's Choice: The Songs of Richard Thompson ♪♪½ (Road Goes on Forever, 1992, prod. John Leonard, Steve Robertshaw) will be hated by most fans of Thompson's albums; it might be best appreciated by those who like Thompson's songs but can't stand his singing voice. Burland delivers an unusual assortment of Thompson compositions in a vibrato-heavy, echoey baritone that suggests Perry Como or Roger Whittaker. It's worth noting that Thompson plays acoustic and electric guitar on the album, and the supporting players include Julie Matthews, Christine Collister, and Clive Gregson. Burland's style works well on the melancholy "Down Where the Drunkards Roll."

worth searching for: Dave Burland's collaboration with Tony Capstick and Dick Gaughan, Songs of Ewan MacColl ♪♪♪♪ (Black Crow, 1978), demonstrates Burland's affinity for MacColl's songs and his collaborative skills with Sheffield's Cap-stick and Scotland's Gaughan. The album is not currently in release in the United States.

influences:

Richard Thompson, Ewan MacColl

Pamela Murray Winters

T-Bone Burnett

Born John Henry Burnett, January 14, 1948, in St. Louis, MO.

One of popular music's true men out of time, T-Bone Burnett is an old-school moralist in the mold of his one-time employer Bob Dylan—which is to say that Burnett's God is one of wrath. He can be pretentious and overbearing, but Burnett's saving grace is that he tends to be at least as hard on himself as he is on his creations. He initially gained notice as part of Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue during the mid-'70s, and as one-third of the Rolling Thunder spin-off, the Alpha Band. Burnett was the one who wrote the "weird" songs on the Alpha Band's three albums, the surreal narratives that namechecked obscure artists and faded starlets. He has continued on a similar course of wiseacre existentialism on his solo albums, ensuring his following will remain cult-sized. Providing partial compensation is Burnett's acclaim as a producer for Counting Crows, Los Lobos, Sam Phillips (his wife), Peter Case, Gillian Welch, Jimmie Dale Gilmore, the Wallflowers, and Marshall Crenshaw, among many others.

what to buy: T-Bone Burnett ♪♪♪♪ (Dot, 1986, prod. David Miner) is the purest and most unadorned country music he's ever made, a folksy effort knocked out in four days just like they used to do way back when. In stark contrast is the lush bombast of Proof through the Night ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1983, prod. Jeff Eyrich), a guest-laden super-session that was Burnett's big shot at stardom. Proof may be the definitive Burnett album, encapsulating his bad as well as good tendencies. It's his preachiest work, certainly (especially the narcissist character sketch "The Sixties"), but also his most accessible.

what to buy next: Burnett's first post–Alpha Band album, Truth Decay ♪♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1980, prod. Reggie Fisher), is Christian cosmic-cowboy music that picks up where his former band left off. The follow-up EP, Trap Door ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1982, prod. Reggie Fisher, T-Bone Burnett), is slicker but also hookier. It also has, in the deadpan rockabilly reading of "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend," Burnett's single finest on-record moment.

the rest:

J. Henry Burnett, the B-52 Band & the Fabulous Skylarks ♪♪♪ (Uni, 1972/One Way, 1994)

Behind the Trap Door ♪♪♪ (Demon, 1984)
The Talking Animals ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1988)
The Criminal under My Own Hat ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1992)

worth searching for: When the Night Falls ♪♪♪ (Bench, 1990, prod. Reggie Fisher), by Black Tie, is a quasi–Rolling Thunder reunion featuring Burnett and many longtime cronies including Billy Swan and his Alpha Bandmates Steven Soles and David Mansfield. There's also the 1995 Rykodisc reissue of Elvis Costello's 1986 Burnett-produced masterpiece King of America (Rykodisc, 1995, prod. T-Bone Burnett). Among the reissue's bonus tracks are two songs Costello recorded with Burnett under the name the Coward Brothers—Leon Payne's "They'll Never Take Her Love from Me," and the brilliant proto-twangcore "The People's Limousine."

influences:

Bob Dylan, Kris Kristofferson, Roger McGuinn, Buddy Holly, Randy Newman, Van Dyke Parks, John Prine

Peter Case, Tonio K., Joe Henry, Alejandro Escovedo

see also: Alpha Band

David Menconi

The Burns Sisters

Formed in Binghamton, NY.

Marie Burns, vocals; Jeannie Burns, vocals; Annie Burns, vocals.

The seventh, eighth, and ninth of 12 children, Marie, Jeannie, and Annie Burns are now based in Ithaca, New York. The sisters began singing together in 1980, cut two albums of pop-rock material for Columbia during the 1980s as a fivesome (along with sisters Terry and Sheila), then split up for several years. Terry became a Nashville songwriter and Sheila taught art in Ithaca. In 1991, solo projects by Marie, Jeannie, and Annie were combined to make the self-distributed Songs of the Heart, and in 1993 the three reunited and were signed to Philo Records. Their sound is country-based folk, with shimmering harmonies that are a consistent highlight.

what to buy: Produced by the former E Street Band bassist, In This World ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1997, prod. Garry Tallent) is the Burns' most exhilarating and focused work, adding a dash of rock to their sound and featuring adventurous vocal interplay and strong songwriting on tracks like "Dance upon This Earth" and "Johnny Got a Gun."

what to buy next: Close to Home ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1995, prod. Rich DePaolo), the Burns Sisters' first official trio album, is a more

1
1
2 laura burns

bodhrán

The traditional frame drum of Ireland, known as the bodhrán, has become an increasingly popular instrument in Irish music, and of late has crossed over into other musical forms as well. Though it was originally a ritual instrument, used to accompany mummers during their annual rounds on Saint Stephen's Day, rudimentary forms of the bodhrán were appearing on recordings of traditional Irish dance music as early as the mid-1920s. By the early 1960s, Sean O'Riada, who led the pioneering Ceoltoiri Chualann (later to metamorphose into the Chieftains), was utilizing the bodhrán as a less jarring alternative to the ceili-band-style trap drums then in vogue. The Chieftains opened the floodgates, and before long, the bodhrán was entrenched in Irish music. Traditionally made with a goatskin head (and, less frequently, from a greyhound skin) and a wooden rim, and more often in recent years made from synthetic materials as well, the bodhrán, like percussion instruments in many cultures, looks and sounds deceptively easy to play. It is actually quite a complex and baffling instrument in that it can be used not only (in the right hands) to enhance and intensify the rhythm of a session or a recording, but (in the wrong hands) as a "session-buster," ruining any hope of a musically euphonic gathering. Players such as Ireland's Dónal Lunny (a founder of both Planxty and the Bothy Band, and a notable producer who makes salubrious use of the bodhrán at every opportunity), Tommy Hayes (formerly of Stockton's Wing), Johnny "Ringo" McDonagh (ex-De Dannan, now with Arcady), Mel Mercier (who is involved with many of Micheal O'Suilleabhain's projects), Martin O'Hare (of La Lúgh), Frank Torpey (Nomos), Scotland's Jim Sutherland (Easy Club), and America's Jesse Winch (Celtic Thunder) and Mark Stone (a frequent accompanist of fiddler James Kelly) have all added to the bodhrán's luster, owing to their sensitive and often unconventional approaches.

Myron Bretholz

rustic affair, stressing their folk and gospel roots on tunes like "I Am a Patriot" and "Into the Wind."

the rest:
The Burns Sisters ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1986)
Endangered Species ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1989)
Songs of the Heart ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1991)
Tradition: Holiday Songs Old and New ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1997)

worth searching for: The sisters briefly sing on the soundtrack to Louis Malle's 1981 film Atlantic City. Also, albums by Charlie Louvin—The Longest Train ♪♪½ (Watermelon, 1996)—and Mac Benford & the Woodshed All-Stars—Willow ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996)—feature Marie Burns.

solo outings:
Annie Burns:
(With the Rain) Annie Burns and the Rain (Art for Art's Sake, 1992)

influences:
◀◀ Sweethearts of the Rodeo, Kate & Anna McGarrigle, Whites
▶▶ Cox Family, Beth & April Stevens, McCarters

see also: Mac Benford

Bob Cannon

Laura Burns

See: The Burns Sisters

Sam Bush

Born April 13, 1952, in Bowling Green, KY.

Bush was a founding member of the innovative New Grass Revival and a regular part of Emmylou Harris's Nash Ramblers before making his debut as a solo recording artist in 1996. The three-time International Bluegrass Music Association Mandolin Player of the Year is one of the most in-demand session players in Nashville, with credits on albums by Trisha Yearwood, Pam Tillis, and others.

what to buy: In Glamour & Grits ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1996, prod. Sam Bush) Bush mixes traditional bluegrass sounds with a little rock 'n' roll. Former New Grass Revival mates John Cowan and Béla Fleck are among an impressive group of guests. Glamour & Grits includes high-powered originals and even a cover of Bob Marley's "Is This Love."

influences:
◀◀ New Grass Revival, Bill Monroe
▶▶ Butch Baldassari, John Reischman

Douglas Fulmer

David Buskin /Buskin and Batteau

David Buskin born December 13, 1943, in New York, NY; Robin Batteau born January 12, 1948, in Boston, MA. Buskin and Batteau formed 1984, in Boston; disbanded in 1990.

Acoustic guitar player, piano player, and vocalist David Buskin has had his greatest success as a songwriter. His songs have been covered by Judy Collins, Tom Rush, and Mary Travers of Peter, Paul and Mary, and used as television commercials by Burger King, the United States Postal Service, Amtrak, Stouffer's, and NBC. A former sideman for Mary Travers and Tom Rush, Buskin teamed up with violinist, guitarist, vocalist, and songwriter Robin Batteau to form the popular pop-folk duo Buskin and Batteau in the 1980s. Since the breakup of the duo, Buskin has continued to perform as a soloist. He released a solo album, Heaven Is Free Tonight, in 1993. Buskin began lessons in piano at the age of five. By the time he reached high school, he played well enough to join a rock and roll band, the Premiers, that covered tunes by Chuck Berry, Buddy Holly, and Duane Eddy. His earliest exposure to folk and acoustic music came at the impromptu jam sessions held at Washington Square Park in Greenwich Village on Sunday afternoons. Buskin didn't write his first song until he graduated from Brown University with a degree in American Literature. A copy of the song, sent to Mike Stoller of the influential rock 'n' roll songwriting duo, Leiber and Stoller, was accepted for publication.

Although his early success came to a halt when he was drafted into the U.S. Army, Buskin spent the next two years strengthening his skills as a performer with the Third Army Soldiers' Chorus and as musical director of an Army variety show in Atlanta. Following his military discharge, Buskin returned to New York to pursue a career in music. After releasing a solo album, he came to the attention of Mary Travers of Peter, Paul and Mary, who recorded five of his songs on her album Morning Glory and hired him as a member of her band. An invitation to join a rock band, Pierce Arrow, led Buskin to a more commercial sound. Although the group only released two commercially disappointing albums, the experience introduced Buskin to multi-instrumentalist and vocalist Robin Batteau. When Pierce Arrow disbanded, the two musicians continued to play together, both as the duo Buskin and Batteau as well as in an acoustic trio with Tom Rush. One of their most productive collaborations was a songwriting project with Judy Collins, shortly before they disbanded in 1990. The duo composed several songs for Collins's album The Fires of Eden, including "Home before Dark," which they wrote with Collins. With their success writing and singing advertising jingles, the duo was pushed further apart. Buskin reached his commercial apex with his first jingle, "We're NBC, Just Watch Us Now," which won a prestigious Cleo Advertising Award in 1982, while Batteau's rendition of "Chevrolet—the heartbeat of America" made him one of television's most-heard voices. In the aftermath of the duo's separation in 1990, Buskin remained at a loss until spending time on Martha's Vineyard at a songwriter retreat run by Christine Lavin in 1991 and 1992. Two multi-artist albums came out of the retreat weekends. Big Times in a Small Town features Buskin's satirical anthem "A Folksinger Earns Every Dime," while Follow That Road includes a live version of Buskin's tender love song "Heaven Is Free Tonight" with Jonathan Edwards on harmonica.

what to buy: Although he initially planned his first post–Buskin and Batteau album, Heaven Is Free Tonight ♪♪♪ (Joe-Pye, 1993, prod. Lloyd Paul Donnelly), as an intimate solo recording, his plans evolved into a craftsman-like full-blown production. Buskin displays a poet's touch with romantic songs, including "Words That Bring the Tear" and the title track, while remaining equally effective with up-tempo pop tunes like "Standing Still and Dancing."

what to buy next: While Buskin and Batteau's final recording together, B&B ♪♪♪ (Silver Wing, 1989, prod. David Buskin, Robin Batteau) failed to bring the duo the commercial success they seemed destined to attain, it remains an infectious pop-folk document. Most songs reflect their individual talents as songwriters, but three co-written tunes—"These Nights," "You're Not a Kid Anymore," and "A Little More Each Time"—show that their collaborative efforts were more than what they could do alone.

influences:

◀◀ Peter, Paul and Mary, Tom Rush, Aztec Two-Step

▶▶ Christine Lavin, David Wilcox

Craig Harris

Paul Butterfield Blues Band /Paul Butterfield's Better Days

Paul Butterfield Blues Band formed 1963, in Chicago, IL. Disbanded 1971. Paul Butterfield's Better Days formed 1972, in Woodstock, NY.

Paul Butterfield Blues Band members: Paul Butterfield (born 1941, in IL; died 1987), harmonica, piano, flute, vocals; Smokey Smothers, guitar (1963–64); Elvin Bishop, guitar, vocals; Jerome Arnold, bass (1963–67); Sam Lay, drums, vocals (1963–65); Michael Bloomfield, guitar, vocals; Mark Naftalin, piano/keyboards (1964–69); Billy Davenport, drums/percussion (1965–67); Gene Dinwiddie, tenor saxopaul butterfield blues band

phone, mandolin, flute, vocals (1967–71); David Sanborn, tenor/alto/soprano saxophones (1967–71); Keith Johnson, trumpet, keyboards (1967–79); Philip Wilson, drums/percussion, vocals (1967–69); Bugsy Maugh, bass, vocals (1967–69); Buzzy Feiten, guitar (1968–69); Steve Madaio, trumpet (1968–71); Rod Hicks, bass, vocals (1969–71); Trevor Lawrence, baritone saxophone (1969–71); Ted Harris, keyboards (1968–69); Ralph Wash, guitar, vocals (1970–71); George Davidson, drums (1970–71); Dennis Whitted, drums (1971). Paul Butterfield's Better Days members: Paul Butterfield, vocals, harmonica, piano; Geoff Muldaur, vocals, guitar, keyboards; Amos Garrett, guitar, vocals; Ronnie Barron, vocals, piano/organ; Billy Rich, bass; Christopher Parker, drums.

It's hard today to estimate the immeasurable impact the Butterfield Blues Band had on the course of blues, folk, pop, and rock and roll music when the band burst on the scene in 1964. Initially introduced on a 1965 sampler LP of Elektra artists by what became their signature tune—"Born in Chicago"—the Butterfield Band was no group of rank amateurs or folkies attempting to make the jump from acoustic to amplification. This was a group of seasoned musicians, trained playing six sets a night in the legendary Southside blues clubs. Butterfield, a child prodigy on flute, had left his middle class home in Hyde Park and moved into the Southside in his late teens and immersed himself in the blues scene, studying with Little Walter and James Cotton, and had become a respected member of the scene and an adopted son of Muddy Waters and Smokey Smothers. Guitarist and co-founder Elvin Bishop had taken a similar route from his home in Tulsa, as had guitarist Mike Bloomfield—who joined the group in 1965—a blues musicologist comfortable in the acoustic blues traditions, as well as the amplified Southside approach. The band's rhythm section of Sam Arnold and Lay had served years with Howlin' Wolf. This fully integrated group took Chicago's Northside by storm, then floored the audience at the 1965 Newport Folk Festival; their appearance at the latter firmly established them as leaders in the new movement of amplified American bands on the East Coast, probably the finest working young group in the country. The band had a similar impact on the West Coast scene, especially in San Francisco and Los Angeles, where their level of musicianship and professionalism placed them in a class separate from and high above any of the groups working there. The 1965 West Coast tour not only introduced their highly respectful, energetic take on the blues, but also a growing interest in jazz and Indian music, especially in their long, improvisational approach to Cannonball Adderley's "Work Song" and Bloomfield's raga/rock "East-West." The latter, based on Eastern scales and motifs, would set the tone for the entire San Francisco sound exemplified by the Grateful Dead, Jefferson Airplane, Quicksilver Messenger Service, et al. The band's impact on club owners like the Fillmore's Bill Graham was also immense and would lead to his reliance on their recommendations to book Muddy, B.B. King, Wolf, and others, which would introduce a new white audience to these masters; Butterfield and Bloomfield are arguably the sourcepoint for the beginning of the popularity of the blues in the U.S.

By 1966 almost everyone in blues and rock—from coast to coast—was watching and aping the Butterfield Blues Band. Bloomfield left in 1967 claiming fatigue from the road, but his creative energies were clearly focused on other directions. Butterfield, always hearing a new and different type of blues in his head, elevated Bishop to the lead guitarist role, gave Naftalin more room as both pianist and arranger, and added bassist/vocalist Maugh, as well as a group of young jazz players—Dinwiddie, Johnson, and Sanborn—heavily influenced by both the blues and avant jazz. This first "big band" reached its zenith with the LP In My Own Dream, an assemblage of songs evocative of the blues but entirely unique to the genre, an album of democratic input and superb soloing by Sanborn and Bishop, whose squawking style would predate similar efforts of New York's Eastside jazz guitarists of the '80s. Bishop would leave in 1969 to pursue solo fame, but was followed by a stellar array of guitarists, including Buzz Feiten and Ralph Wash. By 1970 the band was as much a jazz outfit as a blues group, and Butterfield's harp playing was on another level from that of his Chicago predecessors—swinging, exploratory, and highly emotional. The big band opened musical doors for its many progeny, including Blood, Sweat & Tears and Chicago. However, by 1971, musical trends were changing, and the band was suffering from a plague of drugs and recording inertia. Although still famous for its live shows and highly profitable on the road, the band split after its final album, Sometimes I Feel Like Smilin', stiffed.

what to buy: The Box Set ♪♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1998) is two CDs that collect the great examples of the great powers of each evolution of the Butterfield Band, starting with their unreleased (until 1995) first studio effort through to the end. Taken as a tour-de-force of Butterfield's leadership abilities, proof of his harmonica genius and artistry, or of his bands' incredible blowing power, there's nary a wasted moment throughout. Invaluable for the long out-of-print tracks from the last four LPs. The Paul Butterfield Blues Band ♪♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1965, prod. Paul Rothchild) is the band's episodic debut, wherein a variety of blues styles are respectfully altered to the Butterfield sound—loud, aggressive, incredibly musical. This is the album that made Bloomfield and Butterfield legends. The Lost Sessions ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1964/Rhino, 1995, prod. Paul Rothchild) marks Bloomfield's initial days with the band, but really showcases the tough four-piece unit with Lay, Arnold, and Bishop that wowed Chicago audiences. East-West ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1966, prod. Paul Rothchild, Mark Abramson, Barry Friedman) is Bloomfield's swan song, and although not representative of the band's live prowess, it set the stage for all rock experimentation to follow and marked Bloomfield as a guitar deity. East West Live ♪♪♪♪♪ (Winner, 1997, prod. Mark Naftalin) is a lo-fi masterpiece from live tapes. These three versions of the title tune—12, 15, and 28 minutes long—freeze frame the brilliance of this band, whose playing seems modern and progressive even today. A timeless recording of their ferocious artistry and proof; this was possibly the greatest blues and rock band of its time, maybe all time. The final (1967) version of the song is pure musical genius, six musicians weaving a seamless, exotic tapestry of styles. Expect greatness from Bloomfield (and Bishop), but the real discovery is Davenport, and Butterfield's remarkable explorations on harp. The Resurrection of Pigboy Crabshaw ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1968, prod. John Court), rushed out not long after the big band had been formed, consists mostly of blues covers, but is a harbinger of what would develop with the horn players. Taken from live performances taped by fans, 1966–68, Strawberry Jam ♪♪♪ (Winner, 1995, prod. Mark Naftalin) can be a tough listen at times, but is worth the effort for its many gems. Butterfield appears on only half of An Offer You Can't Refuse ♪♪ (Red Lightnin', 1997), with mentor Smokey Smothers as well as Lay and Arnold; it was recorded from a 1963 Big John's/Chicago live date. Butterfield's harp style shows its uniqueness and rarely derivative punch in these blues standards.

what to buy next: After the Blues Band broke up, Butterfield rebounded in 1972 with a completely different venture; Paul Butterfield's Better Days occasioned another great assemblage of players—Ronnie Barron from New Orleans, Amos Garrett from Canada, Geoff Muldaur a storied Cambridge folkie, mixed with a very young rhythm section. The musical depth of Muldaur, Butterfield, and Barron, mixed with the stellar guitar work of Garrett, made for some great music reflecting blues traditions from around the U.S. Their first album, Better Days ♪♪♪♪♪ (Bearsville, 1973, prod. Paul Butterfield, Geoff Muldaur), was a great collection of new and old blues compositions, ranging from Robert Johnson and Percy Mayfield to Eric Von Schmidt and Bobby Charles—with Barron, Muldaur, and Butterfield sharing the vocal chores. Barron's work is terrific throughout, and Muldaur's take on "Please Send Me Someone to Love" is a classic. Butterfield's singing is in top form, and his harp playing—acoustic to amplified—shows him to be the best of the best. By the time It All Comes Back ♪♪♪½ (Bearsville, 1973, prod. Paul Butterfield, Geoff Muldaur, Nick Jameson) arrived, the band was in the throes of a breakup, and although this album is strong, it doesn't capture the essence or completeness of the first. Butterfield's playing, however, is stunning, and Muldaur's reading of "Small Town Talk" is beautiful. Butterfield would carry on with three solo albums to follow; there were highpoints on most, but each showed his abilities were stronger in a band environment, not as a solo artist.

worth searching for: Butterfield would also lend his harp to great releases by Muddy Waters: Fathers & Sons (Chess, 1969, prod. Norman Dayron) and The Woodstock Album (Chess, 1975, prod. Henry Glover), the former one of Muddy's greatest albums, wherein Butterfield shows himself the true successor to Little Walter, and the latter Muddy's Grammy-winning effort. Of special interest to folk fans and harmonica enthusiasts is Paul Butterfield Teaches Blues Harmonica Master Class ♪♪♪♪ (Homespun 1982/1998) wherein Butterfield gives a Zen-like lesson on acoustic playing, mostly unaccompanied; with Happy Traum as his backup on guitar, he provides beautiful readings of "Key to the Highway," "St. James Infirmary," and other folk standards. His mastery of technique and expressiveness are overwhelming. Highly original, this CD shows Butterfield to be one of the greatest of all harmonica players—in either acoustic or amplified settings.

solo outings:

Paul Butterfield:

Put It in Your Ear ♪♪♪½ (Bearsville, 1974)
North-South ♪♪½ (Bearsville, 1981)
Rides Again ♪ (Amherst, 1986)

influences:

◀◀ Little Walter, Sonny Boy Williamson, James Cotton, Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Otis Rush, Bobby Bland, B.B. King, Gene Ammons, Charlie Parker, Don & Dewey, Marvin Gaye, Bobby Charles, Henry Glover, Rick Danko

▶▶ Eric Clapton, Cream, Electric Flag, Bob Dylan, the Band, Blood, Sweat & Tears, Chicago, Stephen Stills, Quicksilver Messenger Service, Grateful Dead, Robben Ford, Janis Joplin, Maria Muldaur, Bonnie Raitt, Charlie Musselwhite, Rod Piazza, J. Geils Band, Canned Heat, John Mayall

Tom Ellis III

Buttons and Bows

See: Skylark

The Byrds

Formed 1964, in Los Angeles, CA. Disbanded 1973.

Roger McGuinn, guitars, vocals; Chris Hillman, bass, vocals (1964–68); Gene Clark, vocals, tambourine (1964–66); David Crosby, guitar, vocals (1964–67); Michael Clarke, drums, vocals (1964–67); Kevin Kelley, drums (1967–68); Gram Parsons, guitar, vocals (1967–68); Gene Parsons, drums, vocals (1968–72); Skip Battin, bass, vocals (1968–73); John York, bass (1968); Clarence White, guitar, vocals (1968–73); John Guerin, drums (1972–73).

In terms of guitar sound, along with Neil Young, Jimi Hendrix, and the Allman Brothers, the Byrds were among the most important American rock 'n' roll group of the 1960s. Inspired by the Beatles in the film A Hard Day's Night, especially by the Rickenbacker 12-string guitar George Harrison occasionally shouldered, Roger McGuinn and company jump-started a hazy Bob Dylan tune called "Mr. Tambourine Man," initiating a challenge that would ring back and forth across the Atlantic for several years. It's not that someone wouldn't have stumbled across the idea of playing folk songs on an electric guitar, it's that it was Roger (then Jim) McGuinn, David Crosby, Chris Hillman, Gene Clark, and Michael Clarke in Los Angeles who did—especially McGuinn, whose eclectic tastes ranged from Pete Seeger to bluegrass and whose proficiency on the 12-string was far beyond most pop practitioners of the time. The essence of the original sound and appeal was simple: folk music on electric guitars with choir-boy harmonies. In doing so they exposed the beauty and textures of the electric guitar; McGuinn's 12-string work on "Turn, Turn, Turn" and "Eight Miles High" became blueprints for folk/rock, one of the longest-running rock music genres. The Byrds became a jumping-off place for Clark, Hillman, Crosby, and Clarke, but McGuinn and whoever was with him added jazz, Moog synthesizers, and psychedelia before stripping it all away back to country music with Sweetheart of the Rodeo. It's not hard to hear echoes of their music everywhere today.

what to buy: Mr. Tambourine Man ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1965, prod. Terry Melcher) is filled with mystery, harmonies, intrigue, and electrified Dylan songs—one of rock's all-time great debuts. Though flawed, Sweetheart of the Rodeo ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1968, prod. Gary Usher) is still the album that turned rock back to country. The Byrds ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1990, compilation prod. Don DeVito, Bob Irwin) is a boxed set actually worth its price, with four discs that pretty much cover the band's output, including the long-awaited-and-well-worth-it original version of Sweetheart of the Rodeo.

what to buy next: "So You Want to Be a Rock 'n' Roll Star" still rings true today, as does the rest of the quiet Younger Than Yesterday ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1967, prod. Gary Usher). The Notorious Byrd Brothers ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1968, prod. Gary Usher) is the prequel to Sweetheart of the Rodeo. If you don't buy the boxed set, 20 Essential Tracks from the Boxed Set: 1965–1990 ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1992, compilation prod. Don DeVito, Bob Irwin) is a nice compilation. The Byrds (Untitled) ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1970) includes McGuinn's ethereal equine meditation, "Chestnut Mare," and a stunning live set.

what to avoid: Like the pictures of the individual members on the front cover, Byrds woof! (Asylum, 1973, prod. David Crosby) was stitched together, leaving no group identity of any kind.

the rest:

Turn! Turn! Turn! ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1966)
Fifth Dimension ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1966)
Byrds Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1967)
Dr. Byrds and Mr. Hyde ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1969)
Preflyte ♪♪♪ (Together, 1969/Columbia, 1973)
The Ballad of Easy Rider ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1970)
Byrdmaniax ♪♪ (Columbia, 1971)
Farther Along ♪♪ (Columbia, 1971)
The Best of the Byrds (Greatest Hits Vol. 2) ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1972)
The Byrds Play Dylan ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1980)
The Original Singles 1965–1967 ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1981)
The Very Best of the Byrds ♪♪♪ (Pair, 1986) worth searching for: Never Before ♪♪♪♪ (Re-flyte, 1988, prod. Bob Hyde) includes, on good vinyl, the "other" version of "Eight Miles High."

solo outings:

Roger McGuinn:

Roger McGuinn ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1973)
Peace on You ♪♪ (Columbia, 1974)
Roger McGuinn and Band ♪♪ (Columbia, 1975)
Cardiff Rose ♪♪ (Columbia, 1976)
Thunderbyrd ♪♪ (Columbia, 1977)
Back from Rio ♪♪ (Arista, 1991)
Born to Rock and Roll ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia Legacy, 1991)
Live from Mars ♪♪ (Hollywood, 1996)

Roger McGuinn of the Byrds (© Ken Settle)

McGuinn, Clark and Hillman:
McGuinn, Clark and Hillman ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1979)

Gene Clark:
Two Sides to Every Story ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1977)
Echoes ♪♪♪♪ (Legacy, 1991)
Looking for a Connection ♪♪ (Dos, 1994)
This Byrd Has Flown: The Essential Gene Clark ♪♪♪½ (Monster Music, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ New Christy Minstrels, the Beatles, Bob Dylan, John Coltrane, Ravi Shankar, Merle Haggard

▶▶ Bob Dylan, Flying Burrito Brothers, Desert Rose Band, the Beatles, R.E.M., Buffalo Springfield, Crosby, Stills and Nash, Poco, the Eagles, Blue Oyster Cult, Searchers, Gin Blossoms, Tom Petty & the Heartbreakers, Elvis Costello & the Attractions, Soul Asylum

see also: The Flying Burrito Brothers, Chris Hillman, Gram Parsons

Leland Rucker

C

The Cactus Brothers

See: David Schnaufer

Greg Cahill

See: Special Consensus

J.J. Cale

Born Jean Jacques Cale, December 5, 1938, in Oklahoma City, OK.

Cale is a lo-fi roots rocker and songwriter who, besides having more success with other artists covering his songs, can whip up some brilliant guitar playing when so desired. He's also one of the first artists to utilize drum machines and other new technology without losing the organic sensibilities of his songs about honky-tonk livin' and wonder. A limited vocalist but an overachiever as a tunesmith, Cale can lull you into an ambient splendor. His best-known covers include: Eric Clapton's interpretations of "Cocaine" and "After Midnight"; Lynyrd Skynyrd's (and more recently the Mavericks') take on "Call Me the Breeze"; Bryan Ferry and Captain Beefheart's renditions of "Same Old Blues"; the Band's crackling "Crazy Mama"; and Randy Crawford's jazzed-up version of "Cajun Moon." His 1982 song "A Thing Going On" from his Grasshopper album was recently featured in the hit movie "Phenomenon."

what to buy: Naturally . . . J.J. Cale ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1972, prod. Audie Ashworth) is a cornucopia of roots rockin' tunes that features the hit song "Crazy Mama" (one of the first songs to utilize a drum machine) and stellar backing from Tim Drummond and Carl Radle on bass, and David Briggs on piano and organ. Special Edition ♪♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1984, prod. Audie Ashworth, J.J. Cale) is a 14-track best-of collection from Cale's Mercury albums, boasting the well-covered hits plus less-known but equally compelling songs such as "Money Talks," "Don't Cry Sister," and "Carry On." Closer to You ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1994, prod. J.J. Cale), Cale's first album for Virgin and his 11th overall, is another display of top-notch guitar playing and songwriting.

what to buy next: Number 10 ♪♪♪♪ (Silvertone, 1992, prod. J.J. Cale) may be just a notch below Naturally in the song department but more than makes up for it with Cale's guitar heroics throughout.

what to avoid: There's nothing terribly wrong with Five ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1979, prod. Audie Ashworth, J.J. Cale), but there's a sense of interchangeability about the albums Cale recorded around this time.

the rest:
Really, J.J. Cale ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1972)
Okie ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1974)
Troubadour ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1976)
Shades ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1980)
Grasshopper ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1982)
Eight ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1983)
Travel-Log ♪♪♪ (Silvertone, 1990)
Guitar Man ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1996)
Anyway the Wind Blows: The Anthology (Mercury, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Chet Atkins, Grand Ole Opry

▶▶ Dire Straits, Eric Clapton, Wilco, Uncle Tupelo, John Campbell

Mark J. Petracca

Andrew Calhoun

Born 1957, in New Haven, CT.

Andrew Calhoun is the founder and president of Waterbug, a label that represents "renegade singer-songwriters," according to his press material. Calhoun doesn't seem like much of a renegade, just a thoughtful and romantic composer with a rich, classically folk-steeped voice. More than many of his peers, Calhoun sounds like he's spent a lifetime listening to folk and blues and answering a muse that's more than a mirror image.

Calhoun, the son of a philosopher-poet and a teacher-novelist, played his first coffeehouse at the age of 12. In 1977, he traveled to Great Britain, where he got a chance to work with one of his heroes, Ewan MacColl. He continued composing, performing, and recording over the next decade, and in 1991 he founded Waterbug, a label that includes other intelligent songsmiths: his partner, Kat Eggleston, as well as Kate MacLeod, Chuck Brodsky, and Sloan Wainwright, among others. Tor Jonassen of WRDV summed up Calhoun's superior gifts: "He's the difference between claiming to be a singer-songwriter and actually being one."

what's available: Phoenix Envy ♪♪♪♪½ (Waterbug, 1996) opens with some almost expected stuff—a couple of sad songs, a piedmont-style blues—then offers a deadpan Calhoun, before a live audience, singing "Nobody comes to the coffeehouse/ Folksingers are boring." His own album disproves that notion! Calhoun is mostly alone with his guitar, and the album has the feel of an intimate live concert. Hope ♪♪♪♪ (Waterbug, 1993, prod. Andrew Calhoun, Kat Eggleston, Steve Rashid) is more bluegrass than blues; "Glad Old Man" combines the bright future of Michelle Shocked's "When I Grow Up" with the goofy humor of a Tom Paxton song, and Fred Campeau's banjo adds zest.

influences:

◀◀ Ewan MacColl, Ralph McTell, Stan Rogers

▶▶ Sloan Wainwright

Pamela Murray Winters

California

See: Dan Crary, Byron Berline

California Cajun Orchestra

Founded 1982, in San Francisco, CA.

Danny Poullard, accordion, vocals; Eric Thompson, guitar; Suzy Thompson, fiddle, vocals; Sam Siggins, bass; David Hymowitz, drums. Past members include: Kevin Wimmer, fiddle; Alan Senauke, guitar.

Danny Poullard is one of the finest Cajun accordionists anywhere. He was born in Eunice, Louisiana, and grew up hearing his father playing accordion with his grandfather, who was a fiddler. Like many other Creole South Louisianans, he relocated to the San Francisco Bay region. He began playing with John Simien's Louisiana Playboys at the same Creole Catholic church dances where Queen Ida got her start. He took over the band when Simien died and continued to play the dances. By the early 1980s he was being backed up by the Blue Flame stringband, which included Suzy Rothfield (now Thompson) and Eric Thompson. Suzy had studied with Dewey Balfa through an NEA grant and visited such other traditional Cajun and Creole fiddlers as Dennis McGee, Wallace "Cheese" Read, and Canray Fontenot. The steady dance work evolved into the California Cajun Orchestra. The band has an extremely extensive repertoire and has garnered regular airplay in south Louisiana for their CDs on Arhoolie.

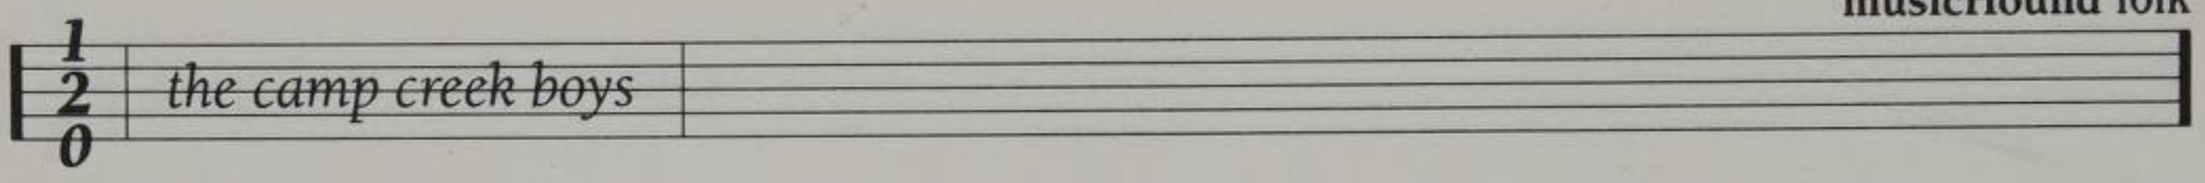
what to buy: On Nonc Adam Two-Step ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1995, prod. Bob Shumaker, Jody Stecher) you can hear how well the years have served this band—Poullard's playing continues to get better and better. He rips through a whole group of Iry Lejeune tunes, the standard that every Cajun accordionist is measured against. But it is the Creole tunes in particular, such as "John Pollard's Two Step" and "Nonc Adam Two-Step," that are absolutely unique in current recordings of Cajun or zydeco music, evoking the old time Creole music of Canray Fontenot and Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin.

what to buy next: Not Lonesome Anymore ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1991, prod. Chris Strachwitz, Michael Doucet, Suzy Thompson, Jody Stecher) was the first record by the band and it shows them in good form and demonstrates the richness of the repertoire they pull from. Using four different vocalists brings an additional richness to the recording. Suzy Thompson wails through a version of the Shorty LeBlanc hit "Sugar Bee," while Charlie St. Mary sings Canray Fontenot's "Jolie Bassette." Guest singer Andrew Carriere contributes the vocals to old chestnuts like "Valse Crimenelle" and "L'anse Paille" and Danny Poullard gets to sing "Monsieur Leonard," written by his old band leader John Simien.

the rest:

Adam & Eve Had the Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1989)

worth searching for: Michael Doucet, Danny Poullard, and Alan Senauke's Cajun Jam Session ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1983, prod. Chris Strachwitz) is a somewhat raw recording of a live radio program over KPFA in Berkeley, California, hosted by Chris Strachwitz of Arhoolie Records. The music has a loose quality, but is played by two true masters of the genre in Michael Doucet and Danny Poullard.



influences:

Tracy Schwarz, Dewey Balfa, Canray Fontenot

Steve Riley, Balfa Toujours

see also: Eric and Suzy Thompson

Jared Snyder

The Camp Creek Boys

Formed in Mt. Airy, NC. Disbanded c. 1969.

Kyle Creed, banjo; Fred Cockerham, fiddle, banjo (until 1967); Benton Flippen, fiddle (1968–69); Verlin Clifton, mandolin; Paul Sutphin, guitar; Ronald Collins, guitar; Ernest East, fiddle, guitar; Roscoe Russell, guitar.

The Camp Creek Boys were one of the most exciting old-time bands to ever be recorded. Their driving traditional songs and tunes led by Kyle Creed's legendary banjo playing and Fred Cockerham's energetic fiddling caused them to be the band to watch at the fiddler's conventions in their native Surry County. Later, this reputation for being one of the best old-time string bands around had spread far and wide. Not only did they become an inspiration to many of the younger old-time revivalists of the late '60s, but they also captured the attention of the bluegrass camp with their unleashed energy. In the late '60s, with Fred Cockerham's health declining, Benton Flippen was asked to replace his spot on fiddle. After only a few years, though, the Camp Creek Boys split up, with Kyle Creed taking possession of the name of the group and forming a new one with bluegrass banjo in place of the older clawhammer style. Thirty years after the band's breakup you can still hear musicians talking about this group. To say they were an influential old-time band is like saying that Elvis had a few fans. The Camp Creek Boys are legendary.

what's available: Old Time String Band ♪♪♪♪♪ (County, 1967/County, 1997, prod. Dave Freeman) is a reissue of their classic County LP from 1967. This is a great snapshot of the classic band with Fred Cockerham still on fiddle. No old-time music collection, or bluegrass collection for that matter, is complete without this album.

solo outings:

Benton Flippen:

Old Time, New Times ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)

influences:

Bill Monroe, Tommy Jarrell

Highwoods String Band, Paul Brown

Steve Gardner

Hamilton Camp

See: Bob Gibson

Glen Campbell

Born April 22, 1936, just outside Billstown, AR.

Although unjustly remembered as a somewhat ingratiating, over-the-top cornball (his hugely successful CBS television series The Glen Campbell Goodtime Hour can still strike terror in the faint-of-heart), Glen Campbell's long and successful career as an entertainer is testament to the obvious drive and abundant talent behind the rhinestones. First leaving home as a teen to tour with his Uncle Dick Bills's Western swing combo, the Dick Bills Band, Campbell landed in Los Angeles in 1960 at the perfect time to make use of his growing prowess on the guitar. Over the next five years, he was one of the city's most sought-after studio musicians, performing behind everyone from Spector to Sinatra. He was even a bona fide Beach Boy for a while! He also worked with his friend Jimmy Bowen for an L.A. music publisher, and performed in an early incarnation of Merle Haggard's Strangers alongside James Burton and Glen D. Hardin. Signed to Capitol Records in 1962, he quickly scored a Top 20 country hit with "Kentucky Means Paradise." He first appeared in the pop Top 50 three years later with a version of Donovan's "Universal Soldier," and in 1967 his signature tune, John Hartford's "Gentle on My Mind," placed respectably on both the country and pop charts. But it wasn't until he began recording the brilliant songs of Jimmy Webb that he became a regular visitor to the Top 10 ("By the Time I Get to Phoenix," "Wichita Lineman," and "Galveston" remain classics of their genre). After several years spent entertaining on both the small and big screens (joking that his role in True Grit helped co-star John Wayne win an Academy Award), he returned to the top of the charts in 1975 ("Rhinestone Cowboy") and again in '77 ("Southern Nights") before hitting the scandal sheets with Tanya Tucker and letting years of pharmaceutical dabbling get the better of him. The following decade was spent bouncing somewhat aimlessly from label to label and from style to style (including successful reunions on MCA with Jimmys Bowen and Webb), culminating with a self-confessed "work-horse" stint in the lounges of Branson's country-chic. The '90s, however, found Glen both physically and spiritually cleansed and refreshed, and he remains a popular performer—and red-hot guitarist—to this day. And he can still sing Jimmy Webb like nobody else.

what to buy: The Essential Glen Campbell ♪♪♪♪ series (Capitol Nashville, 1995, prod. various) gathers, in three volumes, all the hits in gorgeous sound and includes just enough rarities, instrumentals, and live recordings to demonstrate both the depth and scope of this decidedly all-round entertainer. The Glen Campbell Collection (1962–1989) ♪♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1997, prod. various) provides a more compact and concise overview.

what to buy next: Capitol has begun a long-overdue reissue of Glen's earliest albums, starting with his very first from '62, Big Bluegrass Special ♪♪♪ (Capitol Nashville, 1996, prod. Nick Venet), originally released by The Green River Boys. Also newly available are his three fine breakthrough LPs from '67 and '68: Gentle on My Mind ♪♪♪ (Capitol Nashville, 1996, prod. Al DeLory), By the Time I Get to Phoenix ♪♪♪½ (Capitol Nashville, 1996, prod. Al DeLory, Nick Venet), and Wichita Lineman ♪♪♪½ (Capitol Nashville, 1996, prod. Al DeLory).

what to avoid: Beware the myriad Greatest Hits and In Concert recordings, all of which have been rendered superfluous by the Essential series. More than a few of the following fall into that category.

the rest:
Greatest Country Hits ♪♪½ (Curb, 1990)
Favorite Hymns ♪♪½ (Word/Epic, 1992)
Live: His Greatest Hits ♪♪½ (Laserlight, 1994)
Phoenix ♪♪½ (Drive Archive, 1994)
All Time Favorite Hits ♪♪½ (Capitol Special Products, 1994)
Classics Collection ♪♪½ (Collectables, 1995)
Christmas with Glen Campbell ♪♪ (Laserlight, 1995)
All-Time Favorites ♪♪½ (CEMA/Capitol, 1996)
Wings of Victory ♪♪½ (Intersound International, 1996)
Greatest Hits Live ♪♪½ (Prime Cuts, 1997)
Jesus and Me: The Collection ♪♪♪ (New Haven, 1997)
Best of Glen Campbell ♪♪½ (Alliance, 1997)
Glen Campbell ♪♪½ (Members Edition, 1997)

worth searching for: Glen's oft-overlooked gift as an instrumentalist is readily apparent on any of the budget reissues of his early Folkswingers recordings, particularly the 12-String Guitar albums on World Pacific; and just as fascinating is his just-before-fame work with the baroque Beach Boy band Sagittarius alongside Gary Usher, Terry Melcher, Bruce Johnston, and Curt Boettcher.

influences:
◀◀ Django Reinhardt, Barney Kessel, Roger Miller, Jimmy Dickens
▶▶ Jim Stafford, Ricky Skaggs, Lee Greenwood, Garth Brooks

Gary Pig Gold

Kate Campbell

Born October 31, 1961, in New Orleans, LA.

Although she was born in New Orleans, Campbell grew up in Sledge, Mississippi, where her father was a Baptist pastor. She picked up the ukulele at age four and the piano at age six. She eventually moved to Nashville, though she went to college in Alabama. A clear-voiced singer/songwriter whose vivid, driven lyrics paint powerful images of Southern life in the style of Eudora Welty and Flannery O'Connor, Campbell creates refreshingly intelligent country-folk that's energizing as well as evocative.

what's available: Songs from the Levee ♪♪♪♪ (Large River, 1994/Compass, 1995, prod. Johnny Pierce, Jim Emrich), Campbell's debut album, is a rich collection of story songs that reaches a peak with the nostalgic "Wild Iris" and "A Cotton Field Away," a reflective tale about prejudice. This is smart stuff that never slips into pretentiousness. Moonpie Dreams ♪♪♪½ (Compass, 1997, prod. Johnny Pierce) begins with a funky, horn-driven song about pop culture and prehistory called "When Panthers Roamed in Arkansas." Campbell's second outing is more musically varied than Levee, and packs just as much lyrical punch. Other highlights include the folky "Delmus Jackson" (a tribute to an old janitor) and her ode to a vintage family car ("Galaxie 500"). With songs like "Moonpie Dreams" and "See Rock City," Moonpie Dreams has the makings of a minor Southern classic.

influences:
◀◀ Bobbie Gentry, Iris DeMent, Mary Chapin Carpenter, Nanci Griffith, Emmylou Harris
▶▶ Carrie Newcomer, Lucy Kaplansky, Lynn Miles

Bob Cannon and Brian Mansfield

Rosamund Campbell

Born in Brooklyn NY.

Rosamund Campbell came to the gentler world of folk music with a classical piano background, wishing—as she finds many of her students do—for music that felt more personal and more portable. Educated at Sarah Lawrence College and the Juilliard School, Campbell and her Appalachian dulcimer specialize in performing music of the nineteenth century. She has performed and given workshops at festivals throughout the country and teaches dulcimer in the Chicago, Illinois, area. In 1979, she founded the Dulcimer Society of Northern Illinois. An antique dealer as well as a classically trained musician, she has channeled both interests into her books and recordings, which abound with the music of Stephen Foster, sentimental parlor ballads, sprightly shaker melodies, temperance tunes, and songs of the Civil War. She weaves her renditions with historical notes and anecdotes, seasoned with compassion and humor.

what's available: Both her CD releases, The Parlour Dulcimer ♪♪♪♪ (Mel Bay, 1995, prod. Mel Bay Publications) and The Victorian Dulcimer ♪♪♪♪ (Mel Bay, 1992, prod. Mel Bay Publications), focus on music of the Victorian era, in her words, that era of "romance, comfortably eclectic clutter, hearts and flowers, lace and birdsong—all of this over-upholstered and overstated." Despite that seemingly critical remark, she manages to show us that the music is indeed melodious, charming, and even captivating. It is music ideally suited to the dulcimer, which was itself a parlor instrument throughout much of its history. Both releases feature companion books with notes, musical notation, and dulcimer tablature to all the tunes. These are excellent resources for budding dulcimer players or people with an interest in the Victorian era.

worth searching for: A Tender Recollection ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1993, prod. Rosamund Campbell) is a cassette-only release of Victorian favorites including maudlin "weepers," genteel parlor songs, and solemn hymns. Lovers of Victorian music will find this a treasure.

influences:

⏪ Stephen Foster, William Shakespeare Hayes, George Frederick Root, John Hill Jewett

⏩ Susan Trump, Tull Glazener

Neal Walters

Emily & Al Cantrell /The Cantrells

Formed 1983; Emily Cantrell, born in Memphis, TN; Al Cantrell, born Al Ehlers in Corvallis, OR.

Oregon-born Al Ehlers was raised along the shores of Washington's Puget Sound in a place with the picturesque name of Three Tree Point, roughly midway between Tacoma and Seattle. The son of a church organist (his father), he traces his earliest musical influences to the Bach fugues he heard while still in the womb. After a false start as a violinist in grade school, he gravitated to rock 'n' roll and the electric bass, with his introduction to country music coming by way of Grateful Dead covers of Merle Haggard songs. Becoming disenchanted with the "fast lane" rock 'n' roll life, he returned to the fiddle and came under the influence of Idaho fiddler Teddy Jones. By the early 1980s, having absorbed the further influences of fiddlers the likes of Vassar Clements and Johnny Gimble, he had made his way around the British Isles and Norway and had returned to play throughout the Southwest as part of the Chuckwagons of the West shows. He was living in Estes Park, Colorado, in 1983 when he was invited to audition for a Boulder-based bluegrass band called the Tractors (not the retro-country band of the '90s). Emily Cantrell was the band's leader, and two years later they were married. They have been performing together as a duo ever since, combining elements of folk, bluegrass, old-time, Western swing, and whatever else suits their fancy into their own distinctive brand of acoustic country music.

Emily Cantrell was raised in Nankipoo, Tennessee, a few miles north of her Memphis birthplace. She began playing the piano at age four, and spent much of her childhood playing music with her older brother Jim. She also discovered at an early age that she had a special voice, a clear, rich soprano that captivated listeners and has drawn comparison as an adult to Joni Mitchell. Perhaps a more appropriate comparison, though, might be to the talented Nashville singer-songwriter Matraca Berg, particularly in that, like Berg, Emily Cantrell is also an accomplished songwriter—most of the songs on their two most recent recordings are originals. After moving to Boulder in 1980, she met Tim O'Brien, leader of the legendary neo-traditionalist bluegrass band Hot Rize, and he asked her to sing harmony vocals on "Queen of Hearts," on his solo album Hard Year Blues. She formed the Tractors in 1981, with Al joining two years later. Following the band's breakup, they remained a couple, professionally as well as in private life, and Al took her name, Cantrell—"Little Singer." After hearing them perform at a party, Robert Redford was so taken with their music that he included them on the soundtrack of A River Runs Through It, and Al and Emily themselves appear in the movie, playing their instruments in the church picnic scene. Among the most versatile singers around, Emily Cantrell nearly redefines the word "chanteuse"—listening to her brings the sense that she would be equally at home as the vocalist fronting a band for Bill Monroe, Duke Ellington, or Bob Wills.

what to buy: Dancing with the Miller's Daughter ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sombrero, 1995, prod. Al and Emily Cantrell) is a lean production, with no studio musicians backing Al's fiddle and mandolin and Emily's vocals and guitar, but for this reason it gives a much clearer sense of the power and grace of the music they produce as a duo—what it's like to hear them perform live. Seven of the 10 tracks are Emily Cantrell originals, including standouts like what to buy next: Choosing between their two other recordings is difficult, but to get a full picture of the versatility of the Cantrells, make Under a Southern Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Sombrero, 1988, prod. Al and Emily Cantrell) the next choice. Originally intended as a demo, this became their first album, featuring versions of old country and pop favorites (no original tunes) ranging from "I Heard the Bluebirds Sing" to "Slow Boat to China" to "My Adobe Hacienda." The backup musicians include "Ranger" Doug Green and Fred "Too Slim" LaBour from Riders in the Sky, as well as banjo wizard Béla Fleck.

"Red Sombrero," "Alone at Last," and "Under the Rose." Emily's voice is compelling, but pay attention to Al's fiddle and mandolin work as well. Their version of Cowboy Bob Nolan's "Still Water Pool" is nicely done, too.

the rest:
A New Language ♪♪♪♪ (Turquoise, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ Sons of the Pioneers, Peter, Paul & Mary, Bob Dylan, Hot Rize, Vassar Clements, Johnny Gimble

▶▶ Matraca Berg, Eileen McGann, Robin & Linda Williams

John Lupton

editor's choice
15 singer-songwriter albums

Kate Wolf, Give Yourself to Love (Kaleidoscope)

Tom Rush, The Circle Game (Elektra)

Joni Mitchell, Court and Spark (Asylum)

Paul Siebel, Paul Siebel (Philo/Rounder)

Rosalee Sorrels, Report from Grimes Creek (Green Linnet)

Iris DeMent, Infamous Angel (Rounder/Warner Bros.)

Sandy Denny, Sandy (Island)

Hazel Dickens, A Few Old Memories (Rounder)

Paul Simon, Graceland (Warner Bros.)

Gordon Bok, Fashioned in the Clay (Folk Legacy)

Gillian Welch, Revival (Almo Sounds)

Lyle Lovett, Pontiac (MCA/Curb)

Si Kahn, In My Heart, Live in Holland (Strictly Country)

Greg Brown, Down in There (Red House)

Bill Staines, The First Million Miles (Rounder)

Capercaillie

Formed in 1984, in Oban, Scotland.

The original group was: Karen Matheson, vocals; Donald Shaw, accordion, keyboards; Marc Duff, recorder, whistles; Joan MacLachlan, fiddle, vocals; Shaun Craig, guitar, bouzouki; Martin Macleod, bass, fiddle. Later, all but the first two were replaced with Mánus Lunny, bouzouki; Charlie McKerron, fiddle; John Saich, bass; Fred Morrison, bagpipes, whistles; Wilf Taylor, percussion; David Robertson, percussion.

Capercaillie rose to stardom almost overnight, forming in 1984 and recording their first album, Cascade, in three days. They rapidly developed a local reputation for strong live performances in their home town of Oban, Scotland. By 1988 their members were being courted to compose a soundtrack for a documentary about the history of the Gaelic Scots. This album, The Blood Is Strong, shot to platinum in Scotland, and soon the group was on tour around the world. Continuing this trend, they soon recorded several award-winning albums. In 1995, their members appeared in the film Rob Roy, adding to their claim to fame. Although known as a Scottish band, Capercaillie is truly an ethnic mix. The lineup includes two Scots, one Canadian, one Irishman, and two Englishmen. The Scottish reputation of the band is based largely on the traditional Scottish material from which they draw much of their material. The members take great pleasure in playing traditional tunes, but also develop their own music based on those Scottish roots. The group's sound could be characterized as somewhat traditional in nature, while still incorporating contemporary electronic instruments into the mix. Recent releases are much less traditional, however. The group's strongest asset has to be the supernatural voice of Karen Matheson, who inspired Sean Connery to remark that she had "a throat surely touched by God."

what to buy: Perhaps the best overview of Capercaillie's sound would be Get Out ♪♪♪ (Survival/BMG, 1992, prod. Capercaillie, Iain Morrow, Dónal Lunny), which contains some live tracks and several tracks from previously recorded work. Capturing a bit of the modern sound that causes the group to frequently be compared to the Irish group Clannad, this album also contains the basic Scottish feel that made the group so popular. A beautiful rendition of "Fear a' Bhàta" from The Blood Is Strong and the live recording of their rhythmic rendition of the 400-year-old waulking song that skyrocketed to the U.K.'s Top 40, "Coisich a' Rùin," are highlights of the album.

evan carawan

what to buy next: Having an almost live feel, Sidewaulk ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1989, prod. Donal Lunny) captures the essence of what the group sounds like in performance. Highly traditional in nature, the driving reels and jigs make listeners want to get up and dance. Crosswinds ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1987, prod. Capercaillie) is also filled with traditional material. There are several very moving songs on this album, including "Am Buachaille Ban."

what to avoid: Beautiful Wasteland ♪½ (Survival, 1997) takes a much more modern approach, using a more electric sound and combining African rhythms into the mix. It's an interesting experiment, but the album seems to lose completely the tradition the group originally set out to reclaim.

the rest:
The Blood Is Strong ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1988)
Delirium ♪♪½ (BMG, 1991)
Secret People ♪♪ (Survival/BMG, 1993)
Capercaillie ♪♪ (Survival/BMG, 1994)
To the Moon ♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997)

worth searching for: Cascade ♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1984) displays the raw energy that initially got the group off the ground.

influences:
◀◀ Na h-Oganaich, Christine Primrose, Flora MacNeill ▶▶ Clannad, Silly Wizard, Altan, Poor Clares

Jo Hughey Morrison

Evan Carawan

See: Guy Carawan

Guy Carawan /The Carawan Family

Born July 27, 1927, in Los Angeles, CA.

Folk songs, folklore, and political activism are combined by multi-instrumentalist and baritone singer Guy Carawan. The music director of the Highlander Research and Education Center in Tennessee, Carawan played an active role in the Civil Rights movement of the 1960s. His adaptation of a spiritual-turned-freedom song, "We Shall Overcome," recorded by everyone from Pete Seeger and Joan Baez to the Freedom Singers, helped to make it one of the anthems of the decade. Carawan first came to visit the Highlander Center, a non-profit organization devoted to helping solve the economic and racial problems of the American South, for a short visit in 1953. He returned to stay in 1959. The following year, he and his wife Candie, who had come to the Highlander Center from California on an exchange program with Fisk University, participated in sit-down strikes and protests against racial inequality. Their experiences and the songs that they collected were published in three books—Freedom Is a Constant Struggle, We Shall Overcome!: Songs of the Southern Freedom Movement, and Sing for Freedom: The Story of the Civil Rights Movement through Its Songs. Carawan later helped to promote interest in the music of the Sea Islands off the coast of South Carolina. Folklorist trips that he and Candie made to the islands resulted in the book Ain't You Got a Right to the Tree of Life?: The People of Johns Island, South Carolina—Their Faces, Their Words, and Their Songs and an album of field recordings, Been in the Storm So Long: A Collection of Spirituals, Folk Tales, and Children's Games from John's Island, South Carolina. Together with his son, Evan, Carawan recorded several albums emphasizing the hammered dulcimer. Guy, Candie, and Evan joined together, as the Carawan Family, to record the 1991 album, Home Brew.

what to buy: The diversity of Carawan's repertoire is exemplified on Tree of Life: Arbol de la Vida ♪♪♪ (1990, Flying Fish). Accompanying himself on guitar, banjo, and hammered dulcimer and joined by his wife, Candie (vocals), Rupert Oysler (harmonica), Will Byers (harmonica), and Sonny Houston (mandolin), he offers faithful renditions of Appalachian spirituals, Sea Island chants, freedom songs, and traditional British and Celtic tunes. Carlos Aguirre's musical travelogue of Nicaragua is enhanced by the addition of lead guitarist Enrique Ramirez and guitaron player Miguel Govea.

what to buy next: Recorded at the Carawan's New Market, Tennessee, home in December, 1991, Home Brew ♪♪♪ (1992, Flying Fish, prod. Guy Carawan, Evan Carawan, Doug Dorschug) has all the charm and intimacy of an informal living room session. Songs on the album cover a wide ground. Three tunes—"Honey in the Rock," "That's All Right," and "Run, Mary, Run"—from the Sea Islands are balanced by traditional Appalachian and Celtic instrumentals and songs by Jay Unger, Utah Phillips, John McCutcheon, Brownie McGhee, and Los Lobos. "The Tortoise and the Hare" is a hammered dulcimer instrumental composed by Evan Carawan.

the rest:
This Little Light of Mine and Other Songs ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1959)
Songs by Guy Carawan ♪♪ (Folkways, 1964)
Green Rocky Road: Songs & Hammer Dulcimer Tunes from Appalachia and the British Isles ♪♪♪ (June Appal, 1976)
Jubilee ♪♪♪ (June Appal, 1979)
Songs of Struggle and Celebration ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1982)
Sing Out for Freedom ♪♪♪ (Pacific Radio Archive, 1983)
The Land Knows You're There ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986)
(With Evan Carawan) Appalachian & Irish Tunes of Hammered Dulcimer (Flying Fish, 1989)
Guy Carawan ♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1990)
(With Evan Carawan) Hammer Dulcimer (Flying Fish, 1992)

solo outings:
Lomax/Carawan/Cole:
Texas Folk Songs (Arion, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Pete Seeger, Paul Robeson, Zelphia and Myles Horton
▶▶ Sweet Honey in the Rock, Si Kahn, John McCutcheon

Craig Harris

Bob Carlin

Born March 17, 1953, in New York, NY.

Bob Carlin is one of the most knowledgeable of the younger generation of old-time musicians; in addition to recording several albums of his own, he has produced several anthologies of archival banjo recordings. He's considered one of the leading modern proponents of the clawhammer banjo style on the traditional music scene today.

what to buy: Banging and Sawing ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Bob Carlin) is devoted to traditional fiddle and banjo tunes; first recorded 1982–84, this CD reissue contains nine previously unissued tracks.

what to buy next: Carlin and John Hartford join forces for The Fun of Open Discussion ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Bob Carlin, John Hartford), a whimsical musical dialogue between Carlin and Hartford, who brings his considerable knowledge of old-time banjo and fiddle tunes to bear here.

worth searching for: Melodic Clawhammer Banjo ♪♪♪♪ (Kicking Mule, 1977, prod. Bob Carlin) was Carlin's first album and still counts among his most enjoyable.

influences:
◀◀ Tommy Jarrell, Fred Cockerham
▶▶ Dirk Powell, Walt Koken

Randy Pitts

Bill Carlisle /Cliff Carlisle /The Carlisles

The Carlisles formed 1951.

Bill Carlisle (born December 19, 1908, in Wakefield, KY), guitar, vocals; Cliff Carlisle, steel guitar, vocals (born May 6, 1904 , in Spencer County, KY; died April 2, 1983, in Lexington, KY).

Bill Carlisle is one of the best-known singers of country novelties, if for no other reason than he's sung them longer than just about anybody else. He and his brother Cliff performed as the Carlisle Brothers beginning in 1930. After Cliff retired in 1947, Bill went out and formed his own group, the Carlisles, in 1951. The Carlisle Brothers had but one Top 10 hit, a humorous reworking of "Rainbow at Midnight," but the Carlisles had many, "No Help Wanted," a #1 hit in 1953, among them. The Carlisles joined the Grand Ole Opry in 1954, and Bill Carlisle continues to keep Opry audiences in stitches well into the 1990s, though he now has to use a walker as a prop.

what to buy: If Jimmie Rodgers is too mild-mannered for your tastes, Cliff Carlisle's Blues Yodeling and Steel Guitar Wizard ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie/Folk Lyric, 1996, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz) might be just your style. Along with Jimmie Davis and Gene Autry, Cliff was one of the most popular Rodgers imitators, but his singing was wilder and his steel guitar flat-out rocks. The 24 tracks on this album were recorded between 1930 and 1937; some of the later recordings feature Bill on guitar and vocals. Songs like "Memphis Blues" and "Hobo Blues" show a direct Rodgers influence; another, "You'll Miss Me When I'm Gone (Just Because)" was later covered by Elvis Presley during his rockabilly days.

what to buy next: Bill Carlisle's No Help Wanted ♪♪♪ (King, 1994, prod. Tommy Hill) is a five-song collection of tunes that the Carlisles have performed on the Opry for more than 40 years. The most famous of these—"Iz Zat You, Myrtle," "No Help Wanted," and "Too Old to Cut the Mustard"—were at one time considered mildly bawdy.

worth searching for: Cliff Carlisle has three Jimmie Rodgers–like cuts from 1932 on White Country Blues: 1926–1938, A Lighter Shade of Pale ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1993, prod. Lawrence Cohn, Gary Pacheco). Two of the songs were recorded with guitarist Wilbur Ball; the other was released under the name "Bob Clifford."

influences:

⏪ Uncle Dave Macon, Jimmie Rodgers

⏩ Grandpa Jones, Elvis Presley

Brian Mansfield

Mary Chapin Carpenter

Born February 21, 1958, in Princeton, NJ.

Mary Chapin Carpenter's country sounds a lot like Nick Lowe's high-powered late 1970s rock 'n' roll. Though her voice has a hint of a Southern twang and her lyrics occasionally focus on honky tonks and highways, she studies the Beatles and Joni Mitchell much more than Merle Haggard or Johnny Cash. Either way, she has managed to build a big audience of mainstream country fans and neo-folkies clinging to albums by Carpenter's friends, Shawn Colvin and Rosanne Cash. Her best songs, including "I Feel Lucky" and a slicker version of Lucinda Williams's "Passionate Kisses," have hit the top of the country charts, and she consistently racks up Grammys and Country Music Awards.

what to buy: Come On Come On ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1992, prod. John Jennings, Mary Chapin Carpenter) contains a whopping seven hit singles, including "I Feel Lucky," which uses Lyle Lovett and Dwight Yoakam as hunks, and "Passionate Kisses."

what to buy next: Shootin' Straight in the Dark ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1990, prod. John Jennings, Mary Chapin Carpenter), the beginning of Carpenter's breakthrough, contains the romp "Down at the Twist and Shout." Stones in the Road ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1994, prod. John Jennings, Mary Chapin Carpenter) has generally quieter and more introspective songs.

the rest:

Hometown Girl ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1988)
State of the Heart ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1989)
A Place in the World ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1996) worth searching for: On Location: Conversation and Music by Mary Chapin Carpenter is a one-hour radio special on CD from 1992 that features Carpenter talking about the songs from her first four albums.

influences:

⏪ Carlene Carter, the Beatles, Joni Mitchell, Bob Dylan, Rosanne Cash

⏩ Shawn Colvin, Trisha Yearwood, Patty Loveless, Suzy Boggus, Dar Williams

Steve Knopper

Chubby Carrier /Chubby Carrier and the Bayou Swamp Band

Born J.R. Carrier Jr., July 1, 1967, in Lafayette, LA. Bayou Swamp Band formed 1990, in Lawtell, LA.

Chubby Carrier, one-row accordion, three-row accordion, piano accordion, vocals; John Gaar, guitar; Lance Ellis, saxophone; Tray Landry, drums; Corey Duplechain, bass; Mike Chaisson, frattoir, percussion. Past members include: David Lejeune, guitar; Rodney Dural, bass.

Chubby Carrier is part of an extended family of musicians from the Lawtell/Mallet area of Louisiana. His father, Roy Carrier Sr., is a well-respected zydeco musician and club owner who leads his own band, "The Night Rockers." Chubby got his break filling in for his father at the Offshore Lounge on the nights when his father was out working on an oil rig in the Gulf of Mexico. His father encouraged him to develop his own style and introduced Chubby to the Clifton Chenier and blues performers like Bobby "Blue" Bland and B.B. King. He got his start playing drums with Terrance Simien and the Mallet Playboys. Like Simien, he puts a lot more guitar solos in his music than most other zydeco bands. He also uses a lot more rock 'n' roll rhythms in his music (there is even a tribute to Jerry Garcia!), which does make him more accessible to a mainstream audience, but less appealing to the hardcore zydeco scene. This is not to disparage Carrier, though, he's a fine performer on the one- and three-row accordions right out of the Rockin' Dopsie school of tough zydeco licks; and his experience as a drummer shows in his always tight grooves.

what to buy: On Who Stole the Hot Sauce? ♪♪♪½ (Blind Pig, 1996, prod. Michael Freeman) Carrier shows not just his roots, with a cover of Clifton Chenier's classic version of the traditional "Zydeco Sont Pas Sale," but the more contemporary influence of Beau Jocque, as well, with his own remake of War's "The Cisco Kid." For rock 'n' roll fans, check out the zydeco version of Pete Townshend's "Squeezebox" and hear how a rock song can be turned into a South Louisiana dance number.

Mary Chapin Carpenter (© Stephen A. Ide)

chubby carrier 1/7

what to buy next: No one is denying that Carrier can wail on the three-row, or that the man can sing and lead a band, but Dance All Night ♪♪♪ (Blind Pig, 1993, prod. Chubby Carrier, Edward Chmelewski, Jerry Del Giudice) may not suit those whose tastes run more toward the sounds of South Louisiana. The piquant version of the Texas Playboys' "Stay a Little Longer" is especially fun if you're familiar with Bob Wills's original. He passes the litmus test for zydeco accordionists by soloing over just the drums and rubboard on "Old Time Zydeco" and pays his respects to Clifton Chenier with a high speed cover of "Tout le Temps en Temp."

the rest:
Boogie Woogie Zydeco ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ Roy Carrier, Rockin' Dopsie, Clifton Chenier
▶▶ Keith Frank, Chris Ardoin, Geno Delafose

Jared Snyder

Roy Carrier /Roy Carrier and the Night Rockers

Formed 1961, in Lawtell, LA.

Roy Carrier, one-row and three-row button accordions, vocals; Kevin Carrier, guitar; Troy Dickie Carrier, drums; Paul Newman, bass; Kevin Brousard, frattoir; Gerard St. Julien Jr., drums.

Roy Carrier's Offshore Club is the place for zydeco music in the small town of Lawtell, Louisiana. Carrier comes from a family with a deep tradition in music making in the town. His uncles Bebe and Eraste Carrier were playing dances in the area since almost the turn of the century, and the Lawtell Playboys of Calvin Carrier and Delton Broussard also had played the area for years. Roy grew up in this rich culture; he started to play the rubboard at age 6, and would sneak his father's accordion out to the barn to learn that instrument, as well. Despite the whipping he got when his father found out, he was determined to learn accordion and by age 14 had formed the Night Rockers with his brother. A farm accident took half of Roy's index finger on his right hand, but like musicians such as Django Reinhardt, he used the adversity to his advantage and developed a "cross chord" technique for his accompaniment that is unique to zydeco players. Roy's zydeco sound has the diatonic push-pull and syncopated scratch that hearken back to the rural zydeco of the Lawtell Playboys. This is balanced by his love of blues performers like Bobby "Blue" Bland and B.B. King as well as the influence of zydeco king Clifton Chenier. Roy is the father of the "Jimi Hendrix of the Accordion," Chubby Carrier.

what to buy: It's a truism that zydeco bands are always much better live than on record, and that's certainly true in this case. However, Zydeco Strokin' ♪♪♪½ (Paula, 1995, prod. Lee Lavergne) gives a good taste of what to expect when you go out and get dancing to the Night Rockers. Any good zydeco recording has to have a tune where the accordionist (and leader) solos over just the frattoir and drums so he can prove that he can drive the band without the benefit of guitar and bass. On this CD, Carrier plays a kicking version of Clifton Chenier's "Baby Do Right" over the rhythm section and the overall mix emphasizes the drums, frattoir, and accordion over the guitar and bass. While many of the tunes are slight rewrites of current zydeco riffs and songs, you also get the band riffing off on Clarence Carter's R&B hit "Strokin'," just keeping enough of the original to see where they're coming from. Carrier's strong blues influence shines on "My Baby Wants to Leave Me," and the ubiquitous zydeco novelty cover is, in this case, a rocking version of "Tequila." Not as good as a night at the Offshore, or seeing Carrier at your local dance hall, but it's a nice record. Don't make this your first zydeco purchase.

what to buy next: The same reservations stated above apply to Offshore Blues and Zydeco ♪♪♪½ (Chubby Dragon, 1997, prod. Ray Alden). Carrier ain't gonna win any awards as the poet of his generation, but that's not the point with zydeco music. Lots of Carrier's songs are built around a zydeco riff and call-and-response singing. His "Kansas City Blues" sounds like Wilbert Harrison lost in the fog on Highway 190 somewhere between Lawtell and Swords, and his "Living in the USA/Shake, Rattle and Roll" medley sounds like something he pulls out for LSU frat parties. Still, the man can drive a band with his accordion: check out his "My Baby Don't Wear No Shoes," done in the old house-dance style, and his cover of Clifton's "Blake Snake Moan." This one is only available by mail order, but it has some of Carrier's nicest playing. It's available from Chubby Dragon Productions, 124 Quaker Bridge Rd, Croton-on-Hudson, NY 110520. Phone: (914) 941-8536.

the rest:
At His Best ♪♪♪ (Zane, 1996)
(With Joe Walker) Soulful Side of Zydeco ♪♪ (Zane, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Clifton Chenier, Boozoo Chavis, Rockin' Dopsie
▶▶ Chubby Carrier, Chris Ardoin

Jared Snyder

Liz Carroll

Born September 19, 1956, in Chicago, IL.

We have Sister Francine to thank in part for Liz Carroll's contribution to Irish traditional fiddle music. As Carroll was growing up and becoming involved in Irish dancing and music making in her native Chicago, she first started playing on her father's three-row accordion, only later to be inspired to take up the fiddle by Sister Francine's violin teaching at school. Fortunately for Carroll, the 1960s were a time of cultural reawakening for the Chicago Irish community and, under the aegis of the local Irish Traditional Musicians Association, she was soon playing and learning alongside veteran practitioners like Mayo piper Joe Shannon and Chicago-born fiddler John McGreevy. By 1973, Carroll's playing had become impressive enough for visiting accordionist Paddy Gavin to encourage her to compete in the All-Ireland competitions. Although that year she was second to future De Danann frontman Frankie Gavin in the under-18 category, she won first place in 1974, and went on to a stunning victory in the senior division the very next year, with a title in the duet competition to boot. It wasn't long before Carroll was asked to join in Mick Moloney's Green Fields of America tours of the United States and to record for the New York Irish label Shanachie. Two early LPs, the first being a duet album with Offaly accordion player Tommy Maguire, were followed by a number of guest appearances on recordings by fellow Green Fields performers Mick Moloney and Jimmy Keane as well as by ethnomusicologist and folk-rock artist Lawrence McCullough. Carroll has since made another solo album, consisting mostly of her own compositions, and has been touring and recording since 1991 with the group Trian, with accordionist Billy McComiskey and singer and guitar player Dáithí Sproule. In 1994, Liz Carroll was presented with a prestigious National Heritage Fellowship award.

what's available: On the strength of her All-Ireland success, Liz Carroll recorded her debut album, Kiss Me Kate ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1978, prod. Daniel Michael Collins, Richard Nevins), with accordion player Tommy Maguire, himself an All-Ireland winner in 1964, and Jerry Wallace on piano. The album abounds in impressively tight duet playing of the often-complex tunes which the notoriously tune-hungry Carroll seems to favor. However, her true musical personality really unfolds on her solo album, A Friend Indeed ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1979, prod. Richard Nevins, Daniel Michael Collins), recorded a year later with Marty Fahey on piano. Here, Carroll demonstrates not only her awe-inspiring command of the instrument and of the idiom, sometimes spicing things up with quirky, American-sounding licks, but showcases her talents as a composer as well. It took Carroll almost 10 years before she made her next solo album, but the result was worth the wait. Liz Carroll ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1988, prod. Liz Carroll, Dáithí Sproule) is a dazzling display of her superior musicianship and compositional genius, all but six of the tunes recorded being from her pen. Besides her work with the group Trian, there are a few tracks by Carroll on a number of anthologies worth seeking. She recorded an uncommon setting of "Miss McLeod" followed by a couple of her compositions on Cherish the Ladies: Irish Women Musicians in America ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. Mick Moloney), the original album resulting from Mick Moloney's efforts to promote the playing of Irish women musicians in America. This also featured Eileen Ivers, recently of Riverdance fame. Carroll also appears on the live recording My Love Is in America: The Boston College Irish Fiddle Festival ♪♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Mícheál Ó Súilleabháin), a fabulous collection every Irish fiddle music lover should have on their shelf, as well as on the recently released and equally worthwhile Gaelic Roots ♪♪♪♪♪½ (Kells Music, 1997, prod. Séamus Connolly), also recorded live at Boston College. Finally, she can be heard on two solo tracks, playing more of her own compositions, and one duet with accordionist Billy McComiskey on Dear Old Erin's Isle: Irish Traditional Music from America ♪♪♪♪½ (Nimbus, 1992, prod. Mícheál Ó Súilleabháin, Robin Broadbank), recorded live on the occasion of the 8th annual Éigse na Laoi festival of traditional music at University College, Cork.

worth searching for: Irish Traditional Instrumental Music from Chicago, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1976, prod. Miles Krassen, Larry McCullough) and Ed Reavy ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1979, prod. Mick Moloney), an album devoted to the compositions of the famous County Cavan fiddle player, are two of the LP collections on which Liz Carroll's playing was featured early on. Fathers and Daughters from Cherish the Ladies ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. Mick Moloney) was the follow-up to the original Cherish the Ladies album, but has not been reissued on CD. Liz Carroll appears on a couple of tracks with her father Kevin on accordion.

influences:

Kevin Carroll, Martin Byrne, Joe Shannon, John McGreevy, Eleanor Neary, Terry Teahan

Eileen Ivers, Cherish the Ladies, Kathleen Collins

see also: Trian

Philippe Varlet

The Carter Family /The Carter Sisters /Maybelle Carter

Formed 1927, in VA. Disbanded in 1943.

A.P. Carter, vocals (1927–43); Sara Carter, autoharp, vocals (1927–43); Maybelle Carter, guitar, vocals (1927–78). The original group disbanded in 1943, re-formed as the Carter Sisters & Mother Maybelle: Maybelle Carter; Anita Carter, vocals; Helen Carter, vocals; June Carter, vocals.

The history of modern country music began in 1927 with the Carter Family. New York record executive Ralph Peer discovered the band when it performed at a portable recording studio he had set up in rural Bristol, Tennessee. To the sparse accompaniment of Sara's autoharp and Maybelle's guitar, the group poured out songs of sadness, hard work, and an unwavering commitment to Biblical tenets. Peer was particularly impressed with the Carters' rhythmically sophisticated vocal delivery, punctuated by subtle harmonies, as well as Maybelle's uncanny ability to pick the melody of a tune on the bass strings of her guitar while simultaneously strumming the rhythm on the treble strings. Between 1927 and 1941 the group recorded more than 270 songs, including such chestnuts as "Keep on the Sunny Side," "Wildwood Flower," "My Clinch Mountain Home," "Wabash Cannonball," and "I Never Will Marry." The Carter Family tradition is being carried on today by Maybelle's daughters Helen, Anita, June, and June's daughter, Carlene. That foursome released a wonderful album in 1988 titled Wildwood Flower.

what to buy: Anchored in Love: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1927–1928 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993) covers the first historical recording session the Carters did for Ralph Peer. Among the classics are "Wildwood Flower," "Single Girl," and "Keep on the Sunny Side." When the Roses Bloom in Dixieland: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1929–1930 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995) consists of 10 songs recorded in sessions from the end of 1929 and six songs from May 1930. Among the gems included are "When the Roses Bloom in Dixieland," "Carter's Blues," "Jimmy Brown the Newsboy" (which would become a Flatt & Scruggs mainstay), and "Wabash Cannonball," which the Carters taught to Roy Acuff, who would subsequently popularize the tune as the Grand Ole Opry's theme.

what to buy next: My Clinch Mountain Home: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1928–1929 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993) consists of material recorded at the second Peer recording session, including "I'm Thinking Tonight of My Blue Eyes" and "Foggy Mountain Top." Sunshine in the Shadows: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1931–1932 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996) includes "Lonesome for You" and features A.P. and Sara alternating verses, buoyed by Maybelle's new flattop Gibson guitar. Also included are two comedy skits featuring Jimmie Rodgers. Give Me the Roses While I Live: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1932–1933 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997) was recorded under tense conditions to say the least, as A.P.'s and Sara's marriage continued to crumble. Nevertheless, they managed to put their differences aside and bang out 11 of this collection's 15 tracks in one marathon session in Camden, New Jersey, on October 12, 1932. Standout cuts include "My Little Home in Tennessee" and "The Spirit of Love Watches over Me," a rare duet between Sara and Maybelle.

the rest:
20 of the Best of the Carter Family ♪♪♪♪♪ (RCA International, 1984)
Wildwood Flower ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1988)
Diamonds in the Rough ♪♪♪ (Copper Creek, 1989)
Country Music Hall of Fame Series ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1991)
Clinch Mountain Treasures ♪♪♪♪ (County, 1991)
Worried Man Blues: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1930 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995)
On Border Radio, Vol. I ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1995)
Country by the Carter Family ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1997)
On Border Radio, Vol. II (Arhoolie, 1998) worth searching for: The Carter Sisters' Wildwood Flower ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1988, prod. Jack Clement) features Helen, Anita, June, and Carlene performing such Carter Family classics as "Worried Man Blues," "Dixie Darlin'," and "Church in the Wildwood."

solo outings:
Maybelle Carter:
Wildwood Pickin' ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1997)

influences:
Johnny Cash, June Carter, Carlene Carter, Rosanne Cash

Rick Petreycik

Jason Carter

Born in KY.

Jason Carter is the 1997 IBMA Fiddle Player of the year. He is also a member of the Del McCoury Band. Jason shares his home state, Kentucky, with many other influential fiddlers such as Ed Haley, Kenny Baker, and Art Stamper. He's definitely a bluegrass fiddler, though his solo work shows him to be versatile enough to take a few shots at some of the older styles.

what's available: On the Move ♪♪♪♪½ (1997, Rounder, prod. Ronnie McCoury, Jason Carter, David Grier) is an amazing debut solo album for this young fiddler. It is nearly all instrumental and will keep you riveted to the CD player from start to finish. From the old-timey sounding "Carter Country" (an original tune, by the way) to the blazing take on the Benny Martin tune "Back Up and Push," this CD is a gem.

worth searching for: Check out more of Jason's fiddling on these other fine discs: The Del McCoury Band's The Cold Hard Facts ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Jerry Douglas, Ronnie McCoury); Del McCoury's A Deeper Shade of Blue ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Jerry Douglas, Ronnie McCoury); Ronnie & Rob McCoury's Ronnie & Rob McCoury ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Ronnie McCoury); Paul Williams's Ain't God Good ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Ken Irwin); and Union Springs' Help Me, Lord ♪♪♪ (Vetco, 1994, prod. Union Springs).

influences:

◀◀ Benny Martin, "Chubby" Wise, Bobby Hicks, Art Stamper

▶▶ Stuart Duncan, David Crow

see also: The Del McCoury Band, Union Springs

Steve Gardner

Maybelle Carter

See: The Carter Family

Sara Carter

See: The Carter Family

Wilf Carter /Montana Slim

Born December 18, 1904, in Gaysboro, Nova Scotia. Died December 5, 1996.

Wilf Carter was Canada's first country star and a cowboy singer who was a legitimate cowboy. He was raised on a ranch in Alberta and took the stage name Montana Slim for his first U.S. recordings in 1937. He continued to record until his retirement in 1980, and he took Jimmie Rodgers's country yodeling style and expanded it in the Swiss style. Carter wrote more than 500 songs and recorded primarily for RCA Canada, Decca, and Starday.

what to buy: Montana Slim—Wilf Carter ♪♪ (Starday, 1967) was recorded well after Carter's heyday, but it's a good example of his prodigious yodeling capabilities on songs like "Frankie & Johnny," "On Top of Old Smokey," and the then-topical "A Mother's Son in Vietnam."

what to avoid: If you want Carter's yodeling, don't look for it in Montana Slim ♪♪ (Hollywood/IMG, 1988). There's only a couple of good examples. Instead, Carter leans more toward melodramatic story songs like "Two Little Girls in Blue" and "The Little Shirt My Mother Made for Me." It does, however, contain "Hey Hey Mr. D.J.," a clever plea for airplay that originally appeared as a B-side.

influences:

◀◀ Jimmie Rodgers

▶▶ Patsy Montana, Hank Snow

Brian Mansfield

Eliza Carthy /Eliza Carthy and Nancy Kerr /Kings of Calicutt

Kings of Calicutt: Andi Wells, drums; Barnaby Stradling, bass; Saul Rose, melodeon, vocals; Maclaine Colston, hammered dulcimer, vocals; Eliza Carthy, fiddle, viola, mandolin, vocals.

Eliza Carthy was born into one of the most musically gifted families in England. Her father is the noted guitarist and singer Martin Carthy; her mother is Norma Waterson of the Watersons. Perhaps it was a deliberate decision on the family's part that she learn fiddle, or perhaps it was a fortuitous accident; at any rate, her fiddle skills have stood her in good stead with Waterson:Carthy as well as her other projects. She worked for a time in a duo with Nancy Kerr, another fiddler and sometime member of the Kings of Calicutt.

what to buy: Heat Light & Sound ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1996, prod. Eliza Carthy, Ray Williams, Tony Engle) boasts exciting arrangements of traditional tunes and songs. Carthy's voice is charmingly untutored and sweet. The plaintive "Ten Thousand Miles/Bacca Pipes" is a sample of the best of what the English music tradition has to offer.

the rest:

(With Nancy Kerr) Eliza Carthy & Nancy Kerr ♪♪♪½ (Mrs. Casey Records, 1993)

shape of scrape ♪♪♪½ (Mrs. Casey Records, 1995)

(With the Kings of Calicutt) Eliza Carthy & the Kings of Calicutt ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1997)

martin carthy

celtic music

Celtic music encompasses a wide geography, including Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Nova Scotia, Brittany, Galicia, Cornwall, and the Isle of Man. The one thing these territories all have in common is their historical roots. The ancient Celts or their ancestors settled these lands, making their heritage and home in each. This one historical link has led to the musical connection now associated with these areas. It is perhaps unfortunate that the strong musical traditions of these areas are lumped into one great melting pot. Each area's music has its own distinctive flavor, and its own traditional music. For example, the Welsh music is characterized by strong vocal harmony and the love of theme and variation in their music. This style is distinctly different from the Irish tradition, which includes a strong melodic line and a tendency to ornament the melody heavily. Due to these differences, it is hard to describe what makes Celtic music "Celtic." Perhaps part of it is the rich heritage of these people, who all have a strong sense of history and a deep-rooted love of their countries. A deeply emotional connection to their heritage shines through in their music. Also, there is a common pool of musical instruments that characterizes this music, including bagpipes, harp, and fiddle. Although the types of bagpipes and harps differ between the areas, the sounds remain enough alike to tie the music together.

Jo Hughey Morrison

influences:

Watersons, Martin Carthy

see also: Waterson:Carthy

Pamela Murray Winters

Martin Carthy

Born May 21, 1940, Hatfield, Hertfordshire, England.

Singer-guitarist Martin Carthy has been involved in most of the significant developments in British folk music for the past 30 years. A sampling: he taught "Scarborough Fair" to Paul Simon; he belonged to Steeleye Span; he influenced guitarists like Richard Thompson, Martin Simpson, and Stephen Fearing; he married into the singing family the Watersons. Carthy's first recording came out in 1963. His groups have included Three City Four (with Leon Rosselson) and Brass Monkey (with John Kirkpatrick and Sue Harris), and he's toured and recorded extensively with fiddler Dave Swarbrick. Carthy is an understated singer, a superbly sensitive guitarist, and a scholar of folk music who is noted for his respect for the original material.

what to buy: The Martin Carthy Collection ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1993) is an obvious starting point for learning about Carthy. With traditional songs, a Carthy composition ("Company Policy," about the Falklands conflict), and "Palaces of Gold" by Leon Rosselson, one of Britain's best-known political songwriters, it highlights Carthy's socially conscious side, as well as his fondness for reworking old songs.

what to buy next: Martin Carthy and Dave Swarbrick's CD Life and Limb ♪♪♪♪♪ (Topic/Green Linnet, 1991, prod. John Chelew) includes the beautifully creepy "Bows of London" and one of many versions of "The Begging Song." Dave Swarbrick fiddles beautifully on "Carthy's March/The Lemon Tree," tunes he wrote for Carthy and Trevor Lucas, respectively.

best of the rest:

Crown of Horn ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1976)
Out of the Cut ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982)
(With Dave Swarbrick) Skin and Bone ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992)

influences:

A.L. Lloyd, Davey Graham, Ravi Shankar, the Watersons

Simon and Garfunkel, Bob Dylan, Martin Simpson, Eliza Carthy

see also: Dave Swarbrick, Steeleye Span, Waterson:Carthy, the Watersons

Pamela Murray Winters

Ann and Phil Case

Formed in Dayton, OH.

Ann and Phil Case are at their best when they sing duet style old-time music with guitar, mandolin, and clawhammer banjo accompaniment. Ann has an amazingly strong voice reminiscent of Hazel Dickens, and Phil's accompaniment is tasteful and enjoyable.

what's available: The Springtime of Life ♪♪♪½ (Dry Run Recordings, 1996, prod. Ann Case, Phil Case, Paul Nienhaus) is the duo's debut self-produced CD. It should appeal to anyone who likes old-time country duet singing.

influences:

◀◀ The Carter Family, Hazel Dickens and Alice Gerrard, Ola Belle Reed

▶▶ Dick Harrington and Victoria Young

Steve Gardner

Karan Casey

See: Solas

Mike Casey

Born January 22, 1958, in Columbus, OH.

Mike Casey grew up in northeastern Ohio and started playing classical guitar at age 17. He began playing lap dulcimer in 1980 and the flute the next year. In 1986, he received an apprenticeship grant from the National Endowment for the Arts to learn Irish flute from Jack Coen. A native of County Galway, Coen's stories of legendary musicians, house dances, and mummers' sprees led Casey to travel to Ireland, where he was able to combine musical and academic interests by conducting fieldwork in Ireland's rural west. In East Galway, he encountered a distinct musical style and a musical community far richer than either Coen's stories or his own imagination had led him to expect. He was able to learn from dozens of musicians who were still active. One result of his travels was that he began adapting techniques from flute, fiddle, and other fretted instruments to the dulcimer. He added a lower bass string (tuned to an A below the normal D) which enables him to play all the notes in the dance tunes and harp pieces that he had been hearing, and this served as the basis for what has since become a distinctive style. Casey's sojourn in Ireland also resulted in a thesis on the East Galway flute tradition and earned him a Master's Degree in Folklore from the University of North Carolina. For six years he headed the Southern Folklife Collection at the University, leaving recently to devote more time to performing and touring.

what to buy: The Pleasures of Hope ♪♪♪♪ (Wizmak Productions, 1996, prod. Pete Sutherland) is an inspired musical journey through the instrumental dance and harp music of the Celtic lands. Casey plays (and plays well) the flute, wire-strung harp-zither (commonly known as a MacArthur harp after Margaret MacArthur, who is credited with its renaissance in this country), dulcimette (a half-size octave dulcimer), whistle, and his five-string dulcimer. With the able assistance of a number of very musical cohorts on fiddle, accordion, guitar, cittern, piano, keyboards, bodhrán, and cello, Casey delivers a varied and somewhat unusual cross-section of music from the Shetland Islands, Ireland, Scotland, and Brittany. Those tunes that are familiar are not usually heard on dulcimer and there are several less common tunes taken from the Scottish harp tradition and from Casey's primary flute influences, Jack Coen, Sean Moloney, and Jean-Michel Veillon. This is wonderful music.

what to buy next: The Hourglass ♪♪♪♪ (Wizmak Productions, 1995, prod. Mike Casey, David DiGiuseppe) is Casey's first recording and is also exceptional. It also features pieces from the Irish, Scottish, and Breton traditions and again focuses on the lyrical and smooth playing style of East Galway. Casey, according to one reviewer, "really makes the dulcimer sound at home with these tunes . . . danceable, listenable, singable, and fluid." The pace is relaxed but intensely musical.

influences:

◀◀ Jack Coen, Sean Moloney, Jean-Michel Veillon, Neal Hellman

▶▶ Jerry Rockwell, Chris Norman

Neal Walters

Johnny Cash

Born February 26, 1932, in Kingsland, AR.

A larger-than-life figure that looms over the history of country music, and rock 'n' roll as well, Johnny Cash scarcely needs an introduction to anyone whose ears have been open during the past 40 years. Yet for someone who is as recognizable as Mount Rushmore, Cash has always been a surprisingly mercurial artist; he was the most country-leaning of the Sun rockabilly crowd, yet his pill-popping, hell-raising lifestyle would likely make any of today's "alternarockers" blanch. Soon after he embraced country he threw over Nashville, moving instead to California, where he remained, for better and worse, his own man. He later moved back, but was always considered an outsider in Music City. Amid the politically conservative world of country music, Cash has always been a firebrand, championing minority rights, especially for Native Americans, and condemning the Vietnam war. And he traded songs with the rock world, notably with Bob Dylan, and in later years, with Bruce Springsteen and U2. Yet for all that, he is a passionately evangelical Christian whose best friends are the Rev. Billy Graham on the one hand, and fellow hellraiser Waylon Jennings on the other. Not for nothing did Kris Kristofferson celebrate him as "a walking contradiction." A member of the Country Music Hall of Fame, the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and Nashville's Songwriter's Hall of Fame—the only person to be so honored—Cash casts as long a shadow as anyone over almost the whole of American popular music.

johnny cash

what to buy: Might as well begin at the beginning. Cash started out with the rest of the rockabillies at Sun Records, where he developed his trademark boom-chicka-boom sound on such classics as "Folsom Prison Blues," "Hey Porter," "Get Rhythm," and "I Walk the Line." The Sun Years ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sun/Rhino, 1990, prod. Jack Clement) collects all of those tunes plus many more. The fruits of Cash's labors at his second label are amply covered on The Essential Johnny Cash, 1955–1983 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1992, prod. various), a three-disc set that belongs in every serious collection of country music. For the budget-minded, there's Columbia Records, 1958–1986 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1987, prod. various), a single-disc collection that will suffice but also whet your appetite for the larger set. Cash's roots are in folk music as much as in country, and American Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (American, 1994, prod. Rick Rubin) returns him to the form he had not explored extensively since the early part of his Columbia era. Featuring songs by younger rockers, the album and its attendant hoopla introduced Cash to a new generation of fans who likely had never heard him before.

what to buy next: At Folsom Prison/At San Quentin ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1975, prod. Bob Johnston) compiles Cash's two legendary prison recordings from the late 1960s on one disc, and it constitutes some of the bravest recordings ever made. Before the very definition of a captive audience, Cash's "Folsom Prison Blues," "Wanted Man," "Cocaine Blues," and "San Quentin" tell it like it is to such a degree that you expect a riot to bust out any minute. Classic Cash ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1988, prod. Johnny Cash) is one of those rare occasions when an album featuring re-recordings doesn't merely avert the expected disaster; it actually offers a few new insights into such well-known favorites as "Get Rhythm" and "Sunday Morning Coming Down." Another exception to the rule, Water from the Wells of Home ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1988, prod. Jack Clement) transcends the usual empty hype that attends most duet albums—this one with vocalists Emmylou Harris, Tom T. Hall, Hank Williams Jr., the Everly Brothers, and Paul McCartney, among others.

what to avoid: Most of Cash's unworthy albums have fallen out of print. In assessing those that remain, take as a general rule of thumb the old saw that you get what you pay for. Steer clear of the many budget releases of Cash's work that exist, such as Super Hits ♪♪½ (Columbia Special Products, 1994), The Ultimate Johnny Cash ♪♪½ (Bransounds, 1994), and The Many Sides of Johnny Cash ♪♪½ (Columbia Special Products, 1993). They may contain several hits apiece, but for the most part they have too few tracks to make them truly worthwhile.

the rest:

Now There Was a Song! Memories from the Past ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1960)
Ring of Fire: The Best of Johnny Cash ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1963)
Blood, Sweat and Tears ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1963)
Bitter Tears: Ballads of the American Indian ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1964)
Greatest Hits Volume 1 ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1967)
Greatest Hits Volume 2 ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1971)
Biggest Hits ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1982)
(With Waylon Jennings) Heroes ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1986/Razor & Tie, 1995)
Boom Chicka Boom ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1990)
Patriot ♪♪ (Columbia, 1990)
The Mystery of Life ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1991)
Best Of ♪♪♪½ (Curb, 1991)
The Gospel Collection ♪♪½ (Columbia/Legacy, 1992)
Ride This Train ♪♪½ (Collector's Series, 1993)
Wanted Man ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1994)
Hello I'm Johnny Cash ♪♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)
Ring of Fire: Best of Johnny Cash ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1995)
Gospel Glory ♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)
Giant Hits ♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)
Christmas Spirit ♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)
Sings His 20 Best ♪ (TeeVee, 1995)
Unchained ♪♪♪♪½ (American Recordings, 1996)
The Hits ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1997)
Country Christmas ♪ (Laserlight, 1997)
Personal Christmas Collection ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1997)

worth searching for: Hardcore Cash fans with truly deep pockets will want the comprehensive multi-disc sets released in Europe by the Bear Family label. They include The Man in Black (1951–58) ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1990); The Man in Black ♪♪♪♪ (1959–62) (Bear Family); The Man in Black 1963–69 ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1995); and Come Along and Ride this Train ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family). They're great, but be prepared to mortgage the house. Also, the definitive Cash cameo appearance is on U2's Zooropa ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1993), where he sings "The Wanderer," a song Bono wrote for him. It finds the Man in Black in a futuristic setting of synthesizer bleeps and burbles, yet the song fits his legend perfectly, and his performance is perfect.

Johnny Cash (© Ken Settle)

johnny cash

1
3 5

solo outings:

Johnny Cash, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Carl Perkins:

The Survivors ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1982/Razor & Tie, 1995)

The Highwaymen:

Highwayman ♪♪ (Columbia, 1985)
Highwayman 2 ♪ (Columbia, 1990)
The Road Goes On Forever ♪♪♪ (Liberty, 1995)

influences:

- The Louvin Brothers, the Carter Family, Jimmie Rodgers
- Bob Dylan, Waylon Jennings, Kris Kristofferson, Marty Stuart, Bruce Springsteen, Rosanne Cash, Carlene Carter, Nick Lowe, Mekons

Daniel Durchholz

Rosanne Cash

Born May 24, 1956, in Memphis, TN.

Rosanne Cash survived her Nashville Royalty pedigree (her dad is Johnny Cash) to carve out an identity during the 1980s as an innovative and remarkably successful country artist. On a string of records starting in 1979, Cash and producer/husband Rodney Crowell progressively expanded the boundaries of what a female performer could accomplish in Nashville, and her emphatic fusion of hard-hitting rock and classic country scored big on the hidebound Nashville radio charts. Cash's sound on those records can be considered maverick for its time, and for originality and gutsiness compares favorably even now to such latter-day country queens as Shania Twain. But Cash's critically acclaimed balancing act crashed in 1990. With her marriage to Crowell dissolving and her affinity for the country establishment plummeting, Cash released the somber, commercially disastrous Interiors and packed it in for life in a Greenwich Village brownstone. She has concentrated since on raising her three daughters, writing fiction (her first collection, Bodies of Water, appeared in 1996), and recording spare, ironic songs with a lyric confessionalism that's about as far from conventional Nashville tunesmithing as you can get. It's also awfully good.

what to buy: King's Record Shop ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1988, prod. Rodney Crowell) is unquestionably the summation of Cash's Nashville work. It arcs smoothly from wistful pop ("If You Change Your Mind") to playful nostalgia ("Tennessee Flat Top Box") to edgy social balladry ("Rosie Strike Back," a call to arms for battered wives). Cash authoritatively demonstrates that she could take everything Nashville threw at her and throw it right back. Her first major effort, Right or Wrong ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1979, prod. Rodney Crowell) still sounds surprisingly fresh, with the title tune's ironic exploration of adultery and the first of Cash's sassy take-that-guys anthems, "Man Smart, Woman Smarter." Cash's current incarnation is best represented by Ten Song Demo ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1996, prod. John Leventhal, Rosanne Cash), a stripped-down collection redolent of her frank, biting wit. After listening to "Take This Body," just try looking at a cosmetic-surgery ad without wincing.

what to buy next: Seven Year Ache ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1981, prod. Rodney Crowell) features some of the trenchant songwriting (the title track and "Blue Moon with Heartache") that would blossom more fully for Cash once she began to leave the country-heartbreak constraints behind. She also has gender-bending fun with "My Baby Thinks He's a Train" and "What Kinda Girl?"

what to avoid: On Interiors ♪ (Columbia, 1990, prod. Rosanne Cash), as the analysts say, Cash had some issues to work through. And by God she did—with a frankness that teeters into the maudlin. The album is significant in that it marks Cash's definitive break with Nashville power pop, but it's not a pretty sight—or sound.

the rest:

Somewhere in the Stars ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1982)
Rhythm and Romance ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1985)
Hits 1979–1989 ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1989)
The Wheel ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1993)
Retrospective ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1995)
Country Side ♪♪♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1996)

worth searching for: Live at the Bottom Line (RSM) is a clean-sounding bootleg of a hot 1988 performance in New York.

influences:

- Roy Orbison, the Everly Brothers, Emmylou Harris, Joni Mitchell, Johnny Cash, Rodney Crowell
- Mary Chapin Carpenter, Shawn Colvin

Elizabeth Lynch

Ceolbeg

Formed 1988, in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Peter Boond, vocals, flute, whistle, cittern; Davy Steele (1988–95), lead vocals, guitar, bouzouki; Katie Harrigan (1988–91), vocals, clarsach, electroharp; Andy Thorburn (1988–91), vocals, keyboards; Gary West (1988–92), vocals, Highland pipes; Wendy Stewart (1991–present), vocals, electroharp, concertina; Colin Matheson

ceolbeg

1
3
7

Rosanne Cash (© Jack Vartoogian)

(1991–95), vocals, keyboards; Mike Katz (1994–97), Highland pipes; Rod Paterson, lead vocals, guitar (1995–present); Adie Bolton, sound engineering.

In the Gaelic language of the Scots, "Ceol Beag" (KALE-beg) translates literally to "small music" and refers to the jigs, reels, and strathspeys of traditional Scottish music, while "Ceol Mor" ("big music") describes the booming classical sound of the Highland bagpipe. Over the last 20 years and more, a number of such Scottish bands as the Battlefield Band, the Tannahill Weavers, and Wolfstone have combined traditional music, modern acoustic and electric instrumentation, and the "Ceol Mor" to produce what many have called "bagpipe rock," drawing large numbers of new fans into the world of folk music in the process. Missing from these bands in many instances, though, was the delicacy and variety of the "Ceol Beag." From their formation during the late 1980s (Peter Boond is the sole remaining original member), Ceolbeg set out to prove that the harp and Highland pipes could be brought together in a format both traditional and contemporary to produce music that is anything but "small," and as many critics and reviewers have commented throughout the history of Ceolbeg, the band's name is a misnomer—they're big. Part of Ceolbeg's secret has been the uncommon ability of pipers Gary West, and later Mike Katz, to moderate the sound of the Highland pipes and achieve a sound that one publication described as "fluency with firepower." When combined with the electroharp or clarsach, particularly when played in Wendy Stewart's distinctive percussive style, along with keyboards and Boond's flute and cittern work, the effect has been described as "an atmospheric mist of swirling instrumentation." Yet Ceolbeg is much more than an instrumental phenomenon, much of their appeal can be traced to the powerful, emotional lead vocals of Davy Steele, a singer regarded as being an interpreter of modern and traditional Scottish music in the same league with his close friends Andy M. Stewart and Dick Gaughan. Steele left the band in 1995, replaced by Rod Paterson, and as of September 1997 had joined the Battlefield Band; to replace the departing Alistair Russell. Mike Katz has also signed on with the Battlefield Band; his replacement in Ceolbeg is unknown at this time. In more recent years, Ceolbeg has added a drummer and percussionist in the person of Jim Walker, who appears on their most recent album. Their recorded output is of uniformly high quality, but from their earliest days Ceolbeg has believed themselves to be their best when performing live—they regard their longtime sound man Adie Bolton as a full-fledged band member. In 1991, the Scottish Folk Gazette hit the mark in saying, "Ceolbeg bring to their audiences not only musical virtuosity and dynamic performances, but also a great deal of humour and repartee."

what to buy: All three of Ceolbeg's generally available releases on the Greentrax label are of consistently good quality. The one to start with is probably their most recent, An Unfair Dance ♪♪♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1993, prod. Roy Ashby), if for no other reason than it contains the most music—60 full minutes. Their trademark treatments of the reels and strathspeys is satisfying, and Steele's vocals are powerful, whether delivering a Burns ballad ("My Love Is Like a Red, Red Rose") or one of his own songs, such as the emotion-packed "The Collier's Way," which deals with his father's experiences as a miner. It's a gripping song that deserves mention in the same breath as American mining classics like Merle Travis's "Dark As a Dungeon" and Jean Ritchie's "Blue Diamond Mine." While Steele's voice is reminiscent of pop-rock icon Sting, his singing is much richer and more expressive, and totally absent of the pretension that weighs down Sting's music. The unusual instrumental combination of Highland war pipes with Wendy Stewart's harp style (described by some as "bubbling") brings to mind the "bull in a china shop" metaphor, but Gary West's piping is well-modulated to allow each band member's contributions to be clearly heard and appreciated.

what to buy next: Both their debut album, Not the Bunnyhop ♪♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1990, prod. Phil Cunningham), and their second release, Seeds to the Wind ♪♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1992, prod. Dick Gaughan), feature the same entertaining mix of instrumental and vocal accomplishment. Highlights on Not the Bunnyhop include Andy M. Stewart's "Queen of Argyll" and Steele's "The High and Mighty." On Seeds to the Wind, Steele shines on material like "Johnnie Cope" and Robert Burns's "A' the Airts," while the interplay between Stewart's harp and West's piping makes both recordings worthwhile additions.

solo outings:

Wendy Stewart:

About Time ♪♪♪½ (Greentrax, 1992)

About Time, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1997)

Davy Steele:

Chasing Shadows ♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Capercaillie, Silly Wizard, Clan Alba, Dick Gaughan, Andy M. Stewart

▶▶ Battlefield Band, Tannahill Weavers, Old Blind Dogs

John Lupton

Ceoltoiri

Formed as a duo in 1983, in the Washington, DC, area.

Karen Ashbrook, hammered dulcimer, pennywhistle, boxwood flute; Sue Richards, Celtic harp; Connie McKenna, vocals, guitar (1987–present).

Ceoltoiri, the Irish Gaelic word for musicians, is the perfect name for this band. Ceoltoiri was originally formed as a Celtic harp and hammered dulcimer duo, combining two traditional sounds that were obviously made to go together. Karen Ashbrook's virtuoso melodies combine with Sue Richards's haunting harp lines to create a rich texture of sounds, and then they switch roles, keeping the tunes fresh and interesting. It is sometimes hard to believe they can create such lush sounds with so few instruments. Amazing musicians, indeed! Sometimes described as "chamber folk," Ceoltoiri selects traditional tunes with great soul and then arranges them in a theme and variations format. The result is dynamic. The group was joined by Connie McKenna in 1987, who had guested on their first recording. Following Irish tradition, Connie studied sean nos singing, a particular style of unaccompanied, highly ornamented vocal work. She brought an elegant classical guitar background and a rich sense of Irish vocals to the group, adding spice to an already flavorful mix.

what to buy: Silver Apples of the Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1992, prod. Charlie Pilzer) combines the best these musicians have to offer, all on one recording. From delightful duets by Karen and Sue, such as "Flowing Tide/New Claret," to Connie's evocative a cappella sean nos singing in "The Plain Girl's Lament," the tracks offer something different at every turn. The darkly beautiful song "Death of Queen Jane" alone is worth whatever price you pay for the CD.

what to buy next: The original duo shows their stuff on Celtic Lace ♪♪♪ (Foolscap Pub., 1989/Maggie's Music, 1992). This recording amply demonstrates the perfect blend a Celtic harp and hammered dulcimer can create. Women of Ireland ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1998, prod. Charlie Pilzer) features some heartwrenching ballads, beautifully delivered. This album is well worth the price for their rendition of Dougie MacLean's "Caledonia" alone. Guests on this album include Billy McComiskey on accordion and Kieran O'Hare on uilleann pipes. Harper and pianist Carol Rose Duane, a regular performing guest with the group, also joins them on this album.

influences:

⏪ Maggie Sansone, Magical Strings

⏩ Ironweed, Jody Marshall

see also: Karen Ashbrook, Sue Richards

Jo Hughey Morrison

Cephas & Wiggins

Formed 1976, in Washington, DC.

John Cephas (born September 4, 1930, in Washington, DC), guitar, vocals; Phil Wiggins (born May 8, 1954, in Washington, DC), harmonica.

This acoustic duo lovingly preserves the "Piedmont Blues" tradition—which basically means the heavily rhythmic, almost playful, East Coast style of legends Sonny Terry, Blind Boy Fuller, the Rev. Gary Davis, and Blind Blake. "Bowling Green" Cephas met the much younger Wiggins at the Smithsonian Folklife Festival in 1976. (Cephas had made his name in the 1960s when he lured pianist Big Chief Ellis out of retirement and established him as a solid festival performer and recording artist.) Like John Hammond Jr. and Taj Mahal, these historians and blues fanatics put out an album of traditional standards every couple of years and go into great depth about the material's origins in accompanying liner notes. They mimic the style and instrumentation of the great Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee, and they're distinctive in their own way. But despite the occasional fun, driving blues song—such as "Action Man"—they tend to put out the same album over and over.

what to buy: The duo won a W.C. Handy award for Dog Days of August ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986), which established their reverential, sometimes playful, sometimes soulful take on traditional country-blues standards.

what to buy next: One of their best songs, the snappy "Action Man," opens Cool Down ♪♪½ (Alligator, 1995, prod. Joe Wilson), which then reverts to the usual solemnly-remake-the-classics style.

the rest:

Sweet Bitter Blues ♪♪½ (L&R Music, 1984/Evidence, 1994)
Let It Roll: Bowling Green ♪♪ (Marimac, 1985)
Guitar Man ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1987)
Walking Blues ♪♪♪ (Marimac, 1988)
Flip, Flop & Fly ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1992)
Bluesmen ♪♪ (Chesky, 1993)

influences:

⏪ Sonny Terry, Brownie McGhee, Blind Boy Fuller, Blind Blake, Taj Mahal, John Hammond Jr., Big Chief Ellis

⏩ Rory Block, Keb' Mo'

Steve Knopper

Chad & Jeremy

Formed 1963, in London, England.

Chad Stuart (born December 10, 1943, in Durham, England), vocals, guitar, piano; Jeremy Clyde (born March 22, 1944, in Buckinghamshire, England), vocals, guitar.

In the quest to be the most popular Everly Brothers clone of the original British Invasion, Chad & Jeremy were second only to fellow London folk-rockers Peter & Gordon. Although probably more talented and certainly more qualified to reinterpret the Odetta songbook, Merseybeat-style than P&G, C&J had an undeniable disadvantage in the quest for new material—neither had a sister, like Peter did, who was dating Paul McCartney at the time. So, immediately following their first appearance on the American charts with "Yesterday's Gone" in 1964, Chad & Jeremy relocated to the U.S., where they quickly became fixtures on the small screen (Hullabaloo, Shindig, even The Dick Van Dyke Show). Their biggest hit, "A Summer Song," came soon afterwards, before Jeremy returned to England to take a role in a London musical. That left Chad to form a duet with wife Jill until his partner returned in '67. What followed were their two heavy-handed but well-meaning stabs at the post-Sgt. Pepper sweepstakes, Of Cabbages and Kings and The Ark, after which Jeremy again returned to the world of musical-comedy. Chad briefly served as musical director on the Smothers Brothers' television show and, like Jeremy, began dabbling in the theater. The two still reunite occasionally on stage and on record, and they can still sing the Everlys better than Peter & Gordon ever could.

what to buy: The 20-track Best of Chad & Jeremy ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1996, prod. John Barry) features amongst its sampling of early hits the delightful "My How the Time Goes By" with which, as the Redcoats, they serenaded Rob and Laura Petrie. Likewise, the cream of their Columbia crop is colorfully compiled on Painted Dayglow Smile ♪♪♪½ (Legacy, 1992, compilation prod. Bob Irwin), wherein C&J bravely begin applying their Simon & Garfunkel–Lite approach to the material of Van McCoy and Rogers and Hammerstein.

what to avoid: Chad Stuart and Jeremy Clyde ♪♪ (Rocshire, 1983, prod. Chad Stuart) is yet another misguided reunion album which proves, as so many such projects do, that you simply cannot re-heat a soufflé.

the rest:
Yesterday's Gone ♪♪♪ (Collectables, 1993)
Yesterday's Gone ♪♪♪ (Drive Archive, 1994)
Best Of ♪♪½ (Quicksilver, 1997)
I Don't Want to Lose You Baby ♪♪♪ (SPM, 1997)

worth searching for: Fans of the dreaded Concept Album must, without a doubt, grab Of Cabbages and Kings ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1967, prod. Gary Usher), if only for the 17-minute-plus "Progress Suite," which bravely mixes nuclear explosions with the first-ever appearance on record by the Firesign Theatre. Bones are also awarded for this record's ultra-cheesy, sub-Satanic Majesties cover shot, which brings all new meanings to the phrase "Why do you think they call it dope?"

influences:
◀◀ Peter, Paul & Mary, the Everly Brothers, Flanders & Swann
▶▶ Boyce & Hart, Wham!, the Proclaimers

Gary Pig Gold

The Chambers Brothers

Formed early 1960s, in MS.

George Chambers, bass; Willie Chambers, guitar; Lester Chambers, harmonica; Joe Chambers, guitar; Brian Keenan, drums.

With their roots in gospel, the Chambers Brothers would seem unlikely funk-psychedelic crossover pioneers, providing a reference point for other crossover groups beginning to hit their stride at the same time, including Parliament/Funkadelic and Sly and the Family Stone. The acoustic gospel band made its first amplified appearance at the 1965 Newport Folk Festival to great acclaim. White drummer Brian Keenan had joined and the band hit the rock club circuit, where a typical set would include any number of lengthy jams that would have made another young Southern brother act, the Allmans, proud. In 1968, the Brothers had a hit single with "The Time Has Come Today," an edited version of the powerful 12-minute psychedelic epic on their Columbia debut, the first of six releases to chart. The band pulled from equal parts Otis Redding, Wilson Pickett, and Haight Ashbury, always with a nod back to their beginning at the Mount Calvary Baptist Church near Carthage in Lee County, Mississippi.

what to buy: A terrific sampling of the band is available on The Chambers Brothers' Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1971, prod. David Rubinson, the Chambers Brothers, Tim O'Brien), with the complete version of "The Time Has Come Today" plus the blistering "I Can't Turn You Loose" and the more traditional gospel crooning of "People Get Ready."

the rest:
People Get Ready ♪♪½ (Vault, 1965)
Chambers Brothers Now ♪♪♪ (Vault, 1966)
Time Has Come ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1967)
Shout! ♪♪♪ (Vault, 1968)
Love, Peace and Happiness ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1969)
Feelin' the Blues ♪♪½ (Vault, 1970)
Chambers Brothers Live at Fillmore East ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1970)
Unbonded ♪♪♪ (Avco, 1974)
Right Move ♪♪½ (Avco, 1975)

influences:
◀◀ Wilson Pickett, Otis Redding, James Brown, the Animals
▶▶ George Clinton, Sly and the Family Stone, Run-DMC, War

Martin Connors

Harry Chapin

Born December 7, 1942, in New York City. Died July 16, 1981.

One of folk music's most underrated heroes, Harry Chapin carried the flag for compassion during the pre–Live Aid era when it just wasn't cool to care. He invested much of his time and energy into raising awareness of world hunger: more than half of his annual concerts were benefits for the cause and in 1978, prodded by Chapin's relentless badgering on Capitol Hill, President Jimmy Carter appointed him to the presidential commission on world hunger. His humanitarian passion mixed with his irreverent sense of humor to transform his live shows into intimate, moving experiences that were never captured on his uneven studio albums. Chapin scored Top 40 hits with the touching "Taxi," the parentally challenged "Cat's in the Cradle," and the behind-the-mike DJ tale "W.O.L.D.," despite his penchant for lengthy narratives that unfolded more like short stories than songs. Such tenacious but taxing melodramas as "Sniper," "What Made America Famous," and "The Mayor of Candor Lied" became his trademarks but they also branded him a heavy-handed overachiever. Indeed, Chapin was at his most affecting when he scaled back his dramatic ambitions and simply tapped into the everyday doubts and dreams that fuel such heartfelt ballads as "Any Old Kind of Day," "If My Mary Were Here," "I Wonder What Happened to Him," "Tangled Up Puppet," "Last Stand," and his stirring ode to '60s idealism, "Remember When the Music."

what to buy: Although its ragged sound quality confirms it was recorded chiefly for archival purposes, the two-disc The Bottom Line Encore Collection ♪♪♪½ (Bottom Line, 1998, prod. Peter Fornatale, Hank Medress) stands as the most affecting testament to Chapin's appeal. Marking his 2,000th-concert milestone, this January 1981 show captures the manic energy, raucous humor, and unapologetic passion that were barely hinted at on 1976's best-selling but heavily overdubbed Greatest Stories Live. His spirited performances of such favorites as "A Better Place to Be," "W.O.L.D.," "Mr. Tanner," and "I Miss America" are so loose they almost wobble. But then, Chapin never tried to be perfect: he was too busy being human.

what to buy next: Musically diverse and emotionally charged, Dance Band on the Titanic ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1977, prod. Stephen Chapin) is the closest Chapin ever got to making a solid studio album. The rollicking title track raises a convincing political ruckus; "One Light in a Dark Valley" and the achingly vulnerable "I Wonder What Happened to Him" rank among his most touching performances; and the 14-minute "There Only Was One Choice"—an autobiographical art-rock collage—eerily foreshadows his early death.

what to avoid: Commemorating his posthumous awarding of the Congressional Gold Medal, the two-CD Gold Medal Collection ♪½ (Elektra, 1988, prod. various) slaps together singles, album tracks, live performances, and interview/speech snippets with no regard for context or content. Chapin's legacy deserves better.

the rest:
Heads and Tales ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1972)
Sniper and Other Love Songs ♪♪ (Elektra, 1972)
Short Stories ♪♪ (Elektra, 1973)
Verities and Balderdash ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1974)
Portrait Gallery ♪♪ (Elektra, 1975)
Greatest Stories Live ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1976)
On the Road to Kingdom Come ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1976)
Living Room Suite ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1978)
Legends of the Lost and Found ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1979)
Sequel ♪♪½ (Boardwalk, 1980)
Anthology of Harry Chapin ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1985)
The Last Protest Singer ♪♪ (DCC, 1988)

worth searching for: Pat Benatar, the Hooters, Judy Collins, Richie Havens, and others perform Chapin's tunes on Harry Chapin Tribute ♪♪♪ (Relativity, 1990, prod. Stephen Chapin), recorded live at Carnegie Hall. But the most inspired match is Bruce Springsteen's touching rendition of "Remember When the Music," complete with a monologue about Chapin's commitment to keeping "a good clear eye on the dirty ways of the world" that stands as his finest epitaph. Remember When the Music ♪♪½ (DCC, 1987, prod. Howard and Ron Albert) is a resequenced reissue of 1980's Sequel with two previously unreleased bonus tracks, including a throwaway ditty built around "The Hokey Pokey."

influences:
◀◀ Phil Ochs, Pete Seeger
▶▶ James McMurtry, John Mellencamp, Mary Chapin Carpenter

David Okamoto

Tom Chapin

Born 1940s, in NY.

Tom Chapin is one of the pioneers of modern children's music. His family-oriented albums, including Family Tree, Mother Earth, and Billy the Squid, have received numerous awards from Parents Magazine and the American Library Association. A live-in-concert video, This Pretty Planet, includes several of his environmentally conscious songs. Chapin's repertoire, however, is aimed as much at his grown-up listeners and he continues to alternate adult-oriented albums with his recordings for the younger set. On a 1994 adult album, So Nice to Be Home, he wrote three songs and collaborated on others with Si Kahn, John Forster, and Michael Mark. Chapin's greatest exposure with children's music came in the early 1970s when he hosted a national television show called Make a Wish. Most of the show's songs, including "All My Life's a Circle," were composed by Chapin's older brother, Harry. Chapin inherited much of his love of music and art; one grandfather was an acclaimed critic, author, and philosopher while the other was a painter. His father is a jazz drummer who still plays with a trio and conducts drum workshops. Together with his brothers, Chapin was heavily influenced by the folk music of the Weavers and the Kingston Trio and formed a group, the Chapin Brothers. Staples of the Greenwich Village folk scene of the early 1960s, the Chapins recorded their debut album in 1966. Switching to folk-rock (after the electrifying of Bob Dylan) proved to be a mistake, and Chapin left the group to attend the State University College of New York at Plattsburg where he excelled at basketball and was named small college All-American honorable mention. Invited to try out for the St. Louis Hawks, he declined the invitation and attended graduate school. Despite teaching at an academy in White Plains, New York, Chapin remained drawn to entertainment. In 1969, he worked on a documentary film about sharks, Blue Water, White Death.

owen "snake" chapman

Harry Chapin's debut 1971 single, "Taxi," became a staple of hit-oriented AM radio and placed him among the upper echelon of folk-pop singer-songwriters. Although Tom continued to perform in folk music coffeehouses as a soloist, he remained in his older brother's shadow. In 1975 the two brothers reunited to create a Broadway show, The Night That Made America Famous, and to perform together on an eight-month tour of the United States that resulted in the album, Greatest Stories Live. Tom grew increasingly uneasy being known as "Harry's younger brother," however, and left his brothers' band to seek his own fortune. He later returned to Broadway with two productions—Cotton Patch Gospel and Lies and Legends: The Musical Stories of Harry Chapin—that were based on his brother's songs. As an actor, he appeared in the lead role of Neil Simon's comic play, Pump Boys and Dinettes. Chapin has continued to be involved with World Hunger Year, the organization founded by his older brother in 1975.

what to buy: Chapin's best work has been the product of musical collaborations. On Doing Our Job ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, prod. John McCutcheon, Tom Chapin, Joe DiGiorgi), he joins forces with multi-instrumentalist and vocalist John McCutcheon. Recorded during December 1996 concerts in Missouri and Kansas, the two musicians combine for a high-spirited, musical celebration. Chapin's six- and 12-string acoustic guitars and McCutcheon's hammer dulcimer, banjo, and guitar are enhanced by Bobby Read (keyboards, clarinet, and saxophone) and Michael Mark (bass and concertina). While they offer memorable renditions of Pete Seeger's "Well May the World Go" and Woody Guthrie's "Pastures of Plenty," the duo make their greatest impact with their songwriting. Chapin's songs range from an autobiographical ode to folk traditions ("Pass the Music On," co-written with topical songwriter Si Kahn) to a witty children's song, "Make It Right," written on his own. Chapin and McCutcheon pool their songwriting talents on three songs—"Hard Cider," "Heaven Help," and "The Older I Get."

what to avoid: Chapin has not fared well with his adult albums. Although he's periodically shown promise as a songwriter, his arrangements remain firmly entrenched in the innocuous sounds of folk-pop.

the rest:

Children's Recordings:

Billy the Squid ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1992)
Family Tree ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1992)
Moonboat ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1993)
Mother Earth ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1994)
Zag Zig ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1994)
Around the World and Back Again ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1996)

Adult Recordings:

Let Me Back into Your Life ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1989)
Join the Jubilee ♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1996)

solo outings:

The Tom Chapin Trio:

Insomnia ♪♪½ (Knitting Factory Works, 1993)

influences:

◀◀ Pete Seeger, Tom Paley, Bob Dylan

▶▶ John McCutcheon, Jon Gailmor, Raffi

Craig Harris

Owen "Snake" Chapman

Born 1919, in Canada, KY.

Fiddler Owen "Snake" Chapman has lived in the same area—known as Chapman's Hollow—of Kentucky that his family has inhabited for more than 150 years. Chapman started playing the five-string banjo when he was 8 years old and continued until he was 15. At that point he picked up the fiddle and never looked back. After a few more years on his own he joined up with some local groups, including Molly O'Day's band. It was then that he met fiddler Ed Haley, who was influential in his development. His career was put on hold, however, when he took a job in the mines. It wasn't until he retired in 1966 that Snake picked up the fiddle again. Now he's been playing for the past thirty years and has become an influence on many young old-time fiddlers.

what's available: John Hartford arranged to record Snake Chapman in 1995. These recordings, 26 tunes in all, were released the following year as Up in Chapman's Hollow ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996, prod. John Hartford, Mark Wilson). The tunes

Tom Chapin (© Linda Vartoogian)

owen "snake" chapman 1/4/3

1/4/4 tracy chapman

Tracy Chapman (© Ken Settle)

trace back through Snake's fiddling history with Doc Chapman, Ed Haley, and Molly O'Day. For an exciting recording of Chapman's reintroduction into the world of old-time fiddling, check out the cassette-only Fiddle Ditty ♪♪♪ (June Appal, 1990, prod. D. Gregory White). This album teams up Chapman with Paul Smith on Scruggs-style banjo for a marrying of old-time and bluegrass.

influences:

⏪ George "Doc" Chapman, Arthur Smith, Ed Haley

⏩ John Hartford

Steve Gardner

Tracy Chapman

Born 1964, in Cleveland, OH.

On the heels of Suzanne Vega's breakthrough with "Luka," Boston coffeehouse singer Tracy Chapman snared the attention of Elektra Records in 1988 and scored an unlikely Top 10 hit with "Fast Car," a gently rendered treatise on soured dreams driven by a captivating depth rarely heard on radio. The momentum of that small, short-lived, pre–Alanis Morissette women's movement, coupled with Chapman's skills at examining without preaching such emotionally charged topics as domestic violence and racial injustice, made her an instant star: the alternative band Thelonious Monster covered her "For My Lover," Neil Diamond recorded "Baby Can I Hold You," and she joined a high-profile Amnesty International tour with Sting, Peter Gabriel, and Bruce Springsteen. Despite her lyrical strengths and good intentions, Chapman still hasn't made another album as riveting as her self-titled 1988 debut. But then, few artists have.

what to buy: Tracy Chapman ♪♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1988, prod. David Kershenbaum) is an impressive calling card, detailing the frustrations of inner-city life while championing inner strength. There's a quiet, compelling sense of dignity bubbling under the fear and futility of "Fast Car," "Behind the Wall," and "Across the Lines."

what to buy next: New Beginning ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1996, prod. Don Gehman) finds Chapman on the artistic rebound thanks to Gehman's mostly acoustic production and the singer's ability to rally attention for her causes without railing.

what to avoid: Matters of the Heart ♪♪ (Elektra, 1992, prod. Tracy Chapman, Jimmy Iovine) settles for easy targets like yuppie materialism and grumpy sketches instead of her usually thoughtful portraits.

the rest:
Crossroads ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1989)

worth searching for: On Rubaiyat (Elektra), a double-CD commemorating Elektra's legacy, Chapman performs an upbeat "Fever"-like cover of "House of the Rising Sun" with help from E-Street Band pianist Roy Bittan.

influences:

◀◀ Joan Armatrading, Joan Baez, Joni Mitchell

▶▶ Jewel, Ani DiFranco, Poe, Patty Griffin, Dionne Farris

David Okamoto

The Charles River Valley Boys

Formed late 1950s, in Cambridge, MA. Disbanded 1970.

Jim Field, guitar, vocals; Bob Siggins, banjo, vocals; Joe Val, mandolin, vocals; Everett A. Lilly, bass. Earlier members include: John Cooke, guitar; Fritz Richmond, tenor, bass kazoo; Ethan Signer, mandolin, fiddle.

The Charles River Valley Boys had a profound influence on the burgeoning bluegrass scene around Boston during the early 1960s. Playing a mixture of old-time and bluegrass music at a number of clubs and coffeehouses in the area, they came to the attention of producer Paul Rothchild, whose later credits as producer included the Doors, Janis Joplin, and Bonnie Raitt. Rothchild, working at Elektra, heard a tape of the group doing bluegrass versions of Beatles songs and pitched the idea of an entire album to the label. Although the marketing of the record proved disastrous and it was a commercial failure, the music today remains a fitting tribute to the impact and versatility of the Fab Four and is, sadly, the only recorded work on CD by the CRVB. A major turning point for the group had been the addition of staunch traditionalist Joe Val on vocals and mandolin, who remained with the group from 1963 to 1967. In 1970, with the group disbanded, Val formed the New England Blue Grass Boys and recorded several successful (and easier to find) albums.

what's available: If the marketing department at Elektra hadn't gotten scared it would have titled Beatle Country ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1966/1995, prod. Paul Rothchild, Peter K. Siegel) the more accurately descriptive Beatle Bluegrass. Perhaps it works because it was done at the height of Beatlemania, and not as a revisionist afterthought. These songs lend themselves well to bluegrass arrangements. The Homer & Jethro–type send up of "Yellow Submarine" is a real hoot, but this is hardly a novelty record.

worth searching for: Charles River Valley Boys ♪♪♪♪ (Prestige/Folklore, 1962, prod. Paul Rothchild), a long out-of-print LP, features brilliant bluegrass music and hilarious liner notes.

influences:

◀◀ Charlie Poole & the North Carolina Ramblers, Flatt & Scruggs

▶▶ Joe Val & the New England Blue Grass Boys, Del McCoury Band

Stephen L. Betts

Boozoo Chavis

Born Wilson Anthony Chavis on October 23, 1930, in Lake Charles, LA.

Born and raised in Lake Charles, Louisiana, the son of a tenant farmer, Boozoo Chavis began playing the accordion in his teens. His father played the accordion, as did a cousin, the legendary Sidney Babineaux. Chavis regularly played at his mother's dance hall where he would sit in with Clifton Chenier. In 1954, he recorded "Paper in My Shoe" for Goldband Records, which despite its very raw sound was a major regional hit and certainly the first zydeco hit record. Chavis left music to pursue a more lucrative career as a horse trainer, but began a real comeback in 1984. His sound is raw, funky, and loose. His one- and three-row button accordion playing gets to the heart of a groove, and the band and the dancers lock in. It is the intense response that Chavis's music gets from dancers that has influenced younger performers like Beau Jocque and Keith Frank.

what to buy: Zydeco Trail Ride ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1989, prod. Floyd Soileau) brings together the best of Boozoo's 45s from the Maison de Soul label. Each of these songs is in its way a classic that almost every zydeco band has in its repertoire, whether they give credit to Chavis or not. This stuff is mother's milk to players like Keith Frank and Beau Jocque. Check the classics like "Motor Dude Special," "Dog Hill," and "Leona Had a Party"—the band locks into a kicking groove and Chavis's nononsense accordion and singing charges along on top. There is a cleaned up version of his "Deacon Jones," which was released in an X-rated version on 45. There's also a remake of Smokey Robinson's "Harlem Shuffle" that is still really popular as a line dance in Southwest Louisiana. This stuff only hints at what Chavis is like live in a dance hall, but these are all classics.

1
4
6 boozoo chavis

what to buy next: The Lake Charles Atomic Bomb (Original Goldband Recordings) ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1990, prod. Eddie Shuler) contains Chavis's early recordings, and there is little music out there as wild or as raw. Imagine Ornette Coleman's uncle playing zydeco or Captain Beefheart backing up Amédée Ardoin. Chavis had the first zydeco hit in 1954 with "Paper in My Shoe," and a version of it is included here. Legends abound about the band not knowing the tunes and that everyone had too much to drink; nevertheless, the music has a raw power all its own. Between the strange merging of the band and Chavis and Shuler's strange production practices, you have something that sounds very primitive and very modern simultaneously. "Hamburgers and Popcorn" is one of those records that just has to be heard to be appreciated.

the rest:
Louisiana Zydeco Music ♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1986)
Boozoo Zydeco ♪♪♪½ (Maison de Soul, 1987)
Live at Richard's ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988)
Zydeco Homebrew ♪♪♪ (Maison De Soul, 1988)
Boozoo, That's Who! ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993)
Live! at the Habibi Temple ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)
Hey Do Right ♪♪♪½ (Discovery, 1997)

worth searching for: Boozoo Chavis ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1990, prod. Terry Adams) was part of the inauguration of the Nonesuch/Explorer series. NRBQ's Terry Adams got Chavis to play a bunch of his classic songs and three pieces solo, including a magnificent version of the Creole classic "Bernedette." One thing becomes clear listening to this music: Chavis can swing, and this is one thing most of his young imitators have failed to cop from him. You can feel it on hard-core Chavis tunes like "Gilton," where the band crushes a beat and Boozoo's accordion just glides on top.

influences:
⏪ Amédée Ardoin, Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin
⏩ Keith Frank, Beau Jocque, Geno Delafose

Jared Snyder

Boozoo Chavis (© Linda Vartoogian)

The Cheap Suit Serenaders

Formed in the early 1970s.

Robert Crumb, banjo, vocals; Allan Dodge, mandolin, violin, ukulele, vocals; Robert Armstrong, guitar, accordion, banjo, saw, vocals; Terry Zwigoff, cello, saw, fiddle; Bob Brozman, ukulele, Hawaiian guitar, slide guitar, vocals.

The Cheap Suit Serenaders are an old-timey, acoustic string-band started by underground cartoonists Robert Crumb (Mr. Natural, Flaky Foont, Fritz the Cat) and Robert Armstrong (Mickey Rat, The Tuber's Voice), with their friend Allan Dodge. Terry Zwigoff (known for his 1995 documentary Crumb) and noted historian Bob Brozman became official members after their first LP. The group was formed in part with sincere appreciation for music from the '20s and '30s, and as a form of satirical rebellion against the amplified acid-rock sounds of the late '60s/early '70s. After signing with the Blue Goose label in 1974, the band began recording a mix of pleasingly anachronistic double-entendre novelties, old-time standards, and lengthy waltz-time instrumentals that sounded like back-porch jam sessions from another era. Their first single, "Get a Load of This" (a tribute to the laxative properties of junk food), was issued on a 78 rpm record. True to form, mainstream radio wouldn't touch it, but the disc has been on the playlist of The Dr. Demento Show ever since. On subsequent LPs the Serenaders enlisted the aid of several guest musicians on brass and wind instruments, which gave their overall production style more punch and polish but slightly diminished the intimate, subversive feel of their music. Crumb moved to France during the late '80s, but he occasionally plays with various non-recording line-ups of the Cheap Suit Serenaders at folk festivals and college venues, where fans line up backstage, hoping he'll sign some of his artwork.

what's available: The band's second and third Blue Goose LPs have been neatly reissued on Singin' in the Bathtub ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993, prod. various) and Chasin' Rainbows ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993, prod. various), and offer some wonderful home-grown sounds supplemented by a few superior musicians.

worth searching for: The group's first disc, R. Crumb and his Cheap Suit Serenaders ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Goose, 1974. prod. Nick Perls), features their best known song, "Get a Load of This," and has yet to be reissued. Harder to find are the 78 rpm singles "Get a Load of This" b/w "Duck's Yas Yas" ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Goose, 1974, prod. Nick Perls) and Party Record: "Christopher Columbus" b/w "My Girl's Pussy" ♪♪♪½ (Red Goose, 1976). As you would expect, the cover art on all of these is excellent.

c.j. chenier

influences:

Jim Kweskin's Jug Band, Ukulele Ike, Uncle Dave Macon, Ry Cooder

Tom Marion, Ghost Rockets, Les Primitifs del Futur

see also: Bob Brozman

Ken Burke

C.J. Chenier

Born September 28, 1957, in Port Arthur, TX.

C.J. Chenier's father, the legendary Clifton Chenier, was based in Lafayette, Louisiana, and toured constantly. The younger Chenier was able to see his father only a couple times a year. Growing up in Texas, he rarely heard zydeco or his father's music. Instead, he studied piano and alto saxophone and took an interest in jazz and R&B. His favorites at this time included Miles Davis, John Coltrane, James Brown, and the Commodores. He eventually earned a musical scholarship to Texas Southern University. In 1978 his father called him to play saxophone. The experience was a jolt: he wasn't familiar with the beat and didn't know any of the songs. By the early 1980s, C.J. began to learn accordion from his then-ailing father. By then, it was clear Clifton could not continue to tour much longer. He had to sit down to perform and often could not finish the show, leaving it to C.J. to finish. When the senior Chenier died in 1987, C.J. took over the band and has come into his own as an accordionist and singer and all-round performer. He continues to carry on the legacy of Creole music that his father established.

what to buy: The version of the Red Hot Zydeco band on My Baby Don't Wear No Shoes ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1988, prod. Chris Strachwitz, C.J. Chenier) still featured Clifton's brother Cleveland on rubboard, and there is a feel throughout the record of the torch being passed to the next generation. That doesn't get in the way of excellent zydeco music, though, for there's a moving reading of Clifton Chenier's "I'm Comin' Home" here, a song he often performed at the end of his life with tears in his eyes.

what to buy next: Slash Records was the home of the Blasters and Los Lobos, and Hot Rod ♪♪♪♪ (Slash, 1990, prod. C.J. Chenier) was their effort to branch out into zydeco music. An excellent recording that just failed to cross into the mainstream market. Roy Carrier replaces Cleveland Chenier on frattoir, but the band doesn't miss a beat, and C.J.'s accordion playing continues to blossom.

the rest:

I Ain't No Playboy ♪♪♪½ (Slash, 1992)
Too Much Fun ♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1995)
Big Squeeze ♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1996)

influences:

Rockin' Dopsie, Clifton Chenier, Buckwheat Zydeco

Nathan Williams, John Delafose, Lynn August

see also: Roy Carrier

Jared Snyder

Clifton Chenier

Born June 25, 1925, in Opelousas, LA. Died December 12, 1987.

Clifton Chenier took a backwoods form of Cajun folk music called zodico, hyped it up with elements of jump blues, R&B, and early rock 'n' roll, and created what we know today as zydeco. A versatile musician as well as gifted interpreter, Chenier was proficient on guitar and harmonica, but his lasting fame came via the accordion, an instrument he rescued from perpetual ridicule and made cool once again. Besides being a prolific writer of his own music, Chenier was the ultimate stylist who could take a song from any genre, recast it with French patois, Creole, or English lyrics and transform it into a foot stomping, Mardis Gras party jam. Chenier cut his first sides for the Elko label in 1954 (which were also leased by Imperial and Post), but his first burst of national fame came at Specialty Records the following year. "Ay-Te Te Fee" and "Boppin' the Rock" featured Chenier's stinging guitar work and achieved respectable chart positions, but Specialty was putting all its efforts into the burgeoning rock 'n' roll scene. As a result, Chenier's work was lost in the shuffle. He label-hopped for a few years, cutting excellent tracks for Argo, Checker, Zynn, and Crazy Cajun among others. In 1960, Chenier signed with Arhoolie (which later leased his material to the Bayou, Home Cooking, Blue Star, GNP/Crescendo, and Caillier labels), where he recorded his greatest, most influential body of work and established a base for his growing cult appeal. Along with "Louisiana Stomp" and "Squeeze Box Boogie," he scored dozens of regional hits with his danceable hybrid music, and toured constantly, playing folk festivals and R&B revues, and opening for rock acts both at home and abroad. In later years, diabetes forced the partial amputation of his right foot and sapped his energies. But de-

C.J. Chenier (© Jack Vartoogian)

clifton chenier

spite his illness, he is said to have never given a bad show. In his last years, Chenier recorded quality sides for Maison De Soul and Alligator. He died just as the music he pioneered achieved true national prominence. Clifton Chenier was the King of Zydeco Music.

what to buy: The cream of Chenier's Arhoolie work is deftly compiled on 60 Minutes with the King of Zydeco ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1988, prod. Chris Strachwitz), a great intro to this genre. Mon Dieu!

what to buy next: Chenier's best sides for Specialty and Arhoolie have been combined on Zydeco Dynamite: The Clifton Chenier Anthology ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1993, compilation prod. James Austin), an amazing 40-track, 2-disc set.

what to avoid: Chenier does not sing with Rockin' Dopsie on Clifton Chenier & Rockin' Dopsie ♪♪♪ (Paula, 1992, prod. various), so for the price of this two-disc set, you could easily purchase fuller, more satisfying packages by either artist.

the rest:
Zydeco Sont Pas Sale ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1964/1997)
Louisiana Blues & Zydeco ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1965/1991)
Black Snake Boogie ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1966/1994)
King of the Bayous ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1970/1993)
Live at Saint Marks ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1971/1988)
Out West ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1974/1991)
Bogalusa Boogie ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1975/1993)
The King of Zydeco Live at Montreux ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1975/1991)
And His Red Hot Louisiana Band in New Orleans ♪♪♪ (GNP/Crescendo, 1979/1990)
Frenchin' the Boogie ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1979/1994)
Classic Clifton ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1980/1993)
Bon Ton Roulet ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1981/1991)
I'm Here ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1982/1993)
Country Boy Now Grammy Award Winner ♪♪♪ (Maison De Soul, 1984/1989)
Live ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1985/1993)
Live at the Long Beach & San Francisco Blues Festivals ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1985/1993)
Boogie & Zydeco ♪♪♪ (Maison De Soul, 1987/1994)
On Tour ♪♪ (EPM, 1989/1996)
Zydeco Legend ♪♪½ (Maison De Soul, 1989/1993)
Singin' the Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1992)
Zodico Blues & Boogie ♪♪♪♪½ (Specialty, 1993)
We're Gonna Party ♪♪♪ (Collectables, 1994)
I'm Coming Home ♪♪♪ (Magnum America, 1996)

worth searching for: Chenier can be seen performing live on King of Zydeco ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie Video, 1995, prod. various), a videotaping of a concert from late in his career.

influences:

◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Izeb Laza, Professor Longhair, Louis Jordan, Lowell Fulson

▶▶ C.J. Chenier, Buckwheat Zydeco, Rockin' Sydney

Ken Burke

The Chenille Sisters

Formed 1984, in Ann Arbor, MI.

Connie Huber, vocals; Cheryl Dawdy, vocals; Grace Morand, vocals.

The high-spirited vocal harmonies of the sister singing groups of the swing era are resurrected by Ann Arbor, Michigan-based trio, the Chenille Sisters. Set to Connie Huber's acoustic guitar, Cheryl Dawdy, Grace Morand, and Huber harmonize with heartwarming sensitivity and good-natured wit. The trio's roots go back to a band that featured University of Michigan students Huber and Morand. Shortly after Huber met Dawdy while performing in a community theater musical, she invited her to join the group. When she agreed, however, Huber and Morand fired the rest of the band and, with Dawdy, formed the Chenille Sisters. The decision proved to be fortuitous. At one of their first performances, at the Old Town, the crowd's enthusiasm was so strong that the trio was booked to perform during happy hour every Thursday. The gig lasted a year. A pair of sold-out concerts as opening act for the Persuasions at the Ark and a showcase performance at the Ann Arbor Folk Festival were even more eventful. Their exposure continued to expand. Their second year was marked with important appearances on National Public Radio, A Prairie Home Companion, and Lonesome Pine Special. The Chenille Sisters have applied their delectable vocals to a variety of formats. In addition to harmonious albums for adults, they've produced two award-winning children's albums, At the Cod Fish Ball and Yabba Dabba Honeymoon. Whatcha Gonna Swing Tonight was recorded with swing jazz pianist James Dapogny and his eight-piece Chicago Jazz Band. The Chenille Sisters take their name from the bedspread and bathrobe fabric and is a take-off on girl groups, like the Chiffons and the Raynettes, who were named after more glamorous material.

what to buy: True to Life ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1994, prod. Darleen Wilson) combines harmony-rich love songs ("Love of Your Life," "I'd Be Lost without You," and "Co-Dependent with You") and a hard-hitting condemnation of alcoholism and child abuse ("I Lie in the Dark") with much-funnier ditties, including a witty look at aging, "Help! I'm Turning into My Parents," and a hilarious ballad about seeing the face of the Virgin Mary in the middle of a pizza, "Pizza Deliverance."

what to buy next: The Chenille Sisters joined with jazz pianist James Dapogny and his Chicago Jazz Band for a swinging album, Whatcha Gonna Swing Tonight? ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1992, prod. the Chenille Sisters, James Dapogny), dedicated to the music of the 1920s, '30s, and '40s.

the rest:

The Chenille Sisters ♪♪ (Frou-Frou, 1986)
At Home with the Chenille Sisters ♪♪½ (Red House, 1988)
1, 2, 3, for Kids ♪♪½ (Red House, 1990)
Mama, I Wanna Make Rhythm ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1991)
The Big Picture and Other Songs for Kids ♪♪½ (Red House, 1992)
Haute Chenille: A Retrospective ♪♪½ (Red House, 1995)
Teaching Hippopotami to Fly ♪♪½ (Can-Too Music, 1996)

worth searching for: The Chenille Sisters' performance on an edition of PBS-TV show A Lonesome Pine Special continues to be aired.

influences:

- The Boswell Sisters, the Andrew Sisters, the Roches, Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks
- Christine Lavin, the Roches, the Burns Sisters

Craig Harris

editor's choice
11 blues albums

Muddy Waters, His Best: 1947–55 (MCA/Chess)
Keb' Mo', Keb' Mo' (OKeh/Epic)
B.B. King, The Best of B.B. King, Vol. One (Flair/Virgin)
Memphis Minnie, Hoodoo Lady (1933–37) (Columbia/Roots 'n' Blues)
Memphis Jug Band, Memphis Jug Band (Yazoo)
Sister Rosetta Tharpe, Sister Rosetta Tharpe (Frémeaux & Associates)
Henry Thomas, Texas Worried Blues (Yazoo)
Blind Blake, The Master of Ragtime Guitar: Essential Recordings (Indigo)
John Cephas & Phil Wiggins, Dog Days of August (Flying Fish)
Buddy Guy, Damn Right, I've Got the Blues (Silvertone)
John Hammond, Big City Blues (Vanguard)

Cherish the Ladies

Formed 1983, in New York City, NY.

Joannie Madden, flute, whistle, vocals; Cathie Ryan, vocals, bodhrán; Aoife Clancy, vocals, guitar; Siobhan Egan, fiddle, whistle, bodhrán; Maureen Doherty Macken, button accordion, flute, whistle; Mary Coogan, guitar, tenor banjo, mandolin; Mary Rafferty, button accordion, flute, whistle; Donna Long, piano, fiddle, vocals.

The original idea behind Cherish the Ladies was simple: a series of concerts highlighting the contributions of women to Irish music in America. In 1983, folklorist and musician Mick Moloney had a brainstorming session with the directors of New York's Ethnic Folk Arts Center, Martin Koenig and Ethel Raim. Moloney drew their attention to the extraordinary number of young American women involved in Irish traditional music, and the three organizers created a concert series featuring some of these women. The resulting concerts left audiences and critics roaring their approval. In 1985, Moloney convinced the National Endowment for the Arts to fund an album, Cherish the Ladies. Like the concerts, it featured instrumental soloists with a few duos and trios, plus singing in the Irish language. Like the concerts, it included more than a dozen women, two of whom (flute player Joannie Madden and guitarist Mary Coogan) are still a part of Cherish the Ladies today. Like the concerts, it was a tremendous success; it was chosen by the Library of Congress as one of the best folk albums of 1985. The NEA knew a good thing when they saw it and decided to sponsor a tour for Cherish the Ladies. The paring down of dozens of musicians and singers to a manageably sized touring ensemble was a big step in the group's evolution. Madden, already the group's unofficial leader, was consulted. "Mick called me up, and we went through a few names, and threw a group together," she explains. This line-up of the group included Madden, Coogan, and Maureen Doherty Macken, as well as singer Cathie Ryan and fiddlers Siobhan Egan and Eileen Ivers. The group has been through a few line-up changes down the years. First, Ivers was replaced by Winifred Horan. Eventually, Horan, too, left the band, as did Doherty Macken and Ryan; the three were replaced by Donna Long, Mary Rafferty, and Aoife Clancy, respectively. Despite the changes, though, their commitment to high-quality music and high-energy fun has never wavered.

what to buy: Cherish the Ladies' sound has never been more confident than it is on New Day Dawning ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Johnny Cunningham). The lineup changes that ensued between their second disc and this one resulted in no missteps, just a new repertoire of material and a renewed sense of direction. Strong playing from all the lead instrumentalists is matched by a newfound power in the accompaniments; Donna Long's piano fills out the sound beautifully, and Aoife Clancy's guitar playing leaves Mary Coogan freer to play banjo and mandolin without hurting the bottom end. She rises to the occasion marvelously on a set of polkas learned from her father. Clancy's polished voice interprets several lovely traditional songs and a few by such songwriters as Dougie MacLean, Pete St. John, and even Robert Burns. The result is as fresh and appealing a set as you're likely to find in Irish music.

what to buy next: The Back Door ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Mick Moloney) demonstrated the new group ethic and established the band as a major presence on the American Irish music scene. It features an excellent selection of tunes and songs played with finesse on flute, fiddle, and accordion, with the occasional whistle or banjo, accompanied always by Mary Coogan's expert guitar and often by Cathie Ryan's bodhrán. The sources Cathie Ryan looked to for the songs she sings—Jimmy Crowley, Joe Heaney, Frank Harte—indicate her impeccable taste. The one song she wrote herself—the title track—indicates her songwriting talent. Her lovely, clear voice indicates that the listener's in for a real treat; her singing is sincere and expressive, and the spirit of the song always comes through. The second album, Out and About ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Johnny Cunningham), contains material near and dear to the group's heart: a polka and several waltzes written in a French style commemorate a trip to Brittany. Ryan's second song about Irish emigration, "Missing Pieces," shows that the sincerity and depth of feeling in her songwriting has continued to grow. This was the last album before the major lineup change. Finally, if solos and duets, rather than a full band sound, appeal to you, you'd appreciate Cherish the Ladies ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. Mick Moloney), featuring Joannie Madden, Maureen Doherty, Mary Coogan, Eileen Ivers, Liz Carroll, and others. Nicely played tunes, plus a few songs; note that only a few of these artists wound up in the band version of Cherish the Ladies.

the rest:
The Best of . . . N/A (Green Linnet, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Mick Moloney, Liz Carroll
▶▶ Solas

see also: Eileen Ivers, Joanie Madden, Cathie Ryan

Steve Winick

Chesapeake

Formed 1992, in Silver Spring, MD.

Mike Auldridge, pedal steel, dobro, lap steel, vocals; Jimmy Gaudreau, mandolin, vocals; T. Michael Coleman, bass, vocals; Moondi Klein, vocals, guitar, piano.

If there were such a thing as a bluegrass supergroup, Chesapeake would be the first. Consisting of three former members of the influential Seldom Scene ensemble and one ex-player of the Tony Rice Unit, the group has forged a respectable reputation in the acoustic music world. But some bluegrass purists might call what this quartet does blasphemy. While maintaining its high-lonesome bluegrass foundation, Chesapeake experiments with country instrumentation, bluesy arrangements, and pop harmonies to create a sound less rural than traditional bluegrass. Call it urban grass. Essentially, this fresh approach makes Chesapeake more diverse than, say, a band that steadfastly follows Bill Monroe's muse. Group members can easily put their own stamp on a familiar English ballad like "Blackjack Davey" or such modern-day rock cuts as Van Morrison's "Moondance" and Little Feat's "Let It Roll." Chesapeake's adventurous spirit has not gone unnoticed. Bluegrass and rockabilly great Doc Watson has said that "Chesapeake is one of the best bands I've listened to in a long time. They can take a tune like 'Shady Grove' and make it sound thoroughly contemporary without losing all the original flavor." You can't buy that kind of endorsement.

what to buy: Chesapeake's second album, Full Sail ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Chesapeake, Bill Wolf), best represents the band's philosophy. The care and innovation that goes into each song makes it a cinch to accept the Carter Family's classic "Are You Tired of Me My Darling" in the same disc with second-generation bluegrass (Ricky Skaggs's "One Way Track") and a bluesy rock tune like Little Feat's "Let It Roll."

the rest:
Rising Tide ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1994)

Pier Pressure N/A (Sugar Hill, 1998)

worth searching for: Three out of four members of Chesapeake guest on Doc Watson's jubilant Docabilly ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. T. Michael Coleman), an album that finds the veteran covering a slew of 1950s songs, from "Walking after Midnight" to "Heartbreak Hotel" to "Train of Love." The record also features supporting performances by Marty Stuart, Junior Brown, and Duane Eddy.

influences:

◀◀ The Seldom Scene, Tony Rice Unit, Ricky Skaggs

▶▶ Front Range, Bad Livers

Mario Tarradell

Vic Chesnutt

Born November 12, 1964, in Jacksonville, FL.

Championed early on by R.E.M.'s Michael Stipe, Vic Chesnutt rose from wholly inauspicious beginnings during the late-1980s Athens, Georgia, scene to gradually become one of the most respected and admired songwriters of his generation. Confined to a wheelchair since an early 1980s car accident, Chesnutt was quite content to play the occasional local gig until Stipe goaded him into the studio in 1988 to record his debut album, Little. Chesnutt's minimalist musical tendencies, acute singing drawl, and highly personal lyrical portraits invited comparisons to such Southern Gothic literary figures as William Faulkner and Flannery O'Connor. Subsequent albums found him working in more intricate backing instrumentation and crafting music that ranged from folk to country to feedback-buzzed rock 'n' roll. In 1996, Chesnutt made the move from tiny Texas Hotel to Capitol, which issued his major-label debut, About to Choke, at the same time Columbia Records released a tribute album, Sweet Relief II: Gravity of the Situation. Sweet Relief II featured artists from Smashing Pumpkins to Hootie & the Blowfish to Joe Henry and sister-in-law Madonna covering Chesnutt's songs.

what to buy: Like a classic Polaroid snapshot capturing a special moment in time, Little ♪♪♪♪½ (Texas Hotel, 1990) remains Chesnutt's most endearing album, recorded almost entirely solo acoustic and full of such singularly engaging character sketches as "Isadora Duncan" and "Danny Carlisle." For those who prefer a bit more musical accompaniment, Is the Actor Happy? ♪♪♪½ (Texas Hotel, 1995, prod. John Keane) is the best of the rest, balancing such beautifully lilting ballads as "Sad Peter Pan" and "Guilty by Association" with a few more upbeat yet quirky pop numbers.

what to buy next: West of Rome ♪♪♪½ (Texas Hotel, 1992, prod. Michael Stipe) is slightly less consistent but includes some of Chesnutt's finest songs, including "Sponge" and "Stupid Preoccupations." About to Choke ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1996, prod. various) showed the move to a major label didn't mean a refining of Chesnutt's approach; it's just as gloriously skewed as his other records. Drunk ♪♪♪ (Texas Hotel, 1993) is a scattered but occasionally brilliant effort, with Syd Straw guesting on one track.

what to avoid: Chesnutt teamed up with fellow Georgians Widespread Panic for an album under the band-name Brute, titled Nine High a Pallet ♪♪½ (Capricorn, 1995); though the full-band backing is a nice change of pace, the material isn't up to Chesnutt's usual standards.

worth searching for: Sweet Relief II: Gravity of the Situation ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1996) showed Chesnutt's songs to be remarkably adaptable to mainstream acts; among the highlights are Garbage's instantly catchy take on "Kick My Ass" and Soul Asylum's emotionally draining rendition of "When I Ran Off and Left Her."

influences:

◀◀ Jack Logan, R.E.M., Nick Drake, Jimmy Webb

▶▶ Live, Mark Eitzel

Peter Blackstock

The Chestnut Grove Quartet

Formed during the mid-1940s, in Moccasin Gap, VA.

Bill Nunley, vocals; Jim Nunley, vocals; Archie Reynolds, vocals; Gale Webb, vocals; Ray Roe, vocals.

Although the Chestnut Grove Quartet was officially formed during the mid-'40s, the original members had been singing together since childhood. After WWII, Bill, Jim, Gale, and Archie regrouped and sang at Chestnut Grove Church in Washington County, Virginia, and sang there on a weekly basis. The church was old, built in 1890 with a wood frame structure and no organ or piano. All singing done there was a capella. The Quartet continued to sing unaccompanied even when modern times began turning its back on the old singing style. Nevertheless, their popularity grew as their intense singing brought out the power in the old religious songs. In the mid-'50s they started performing on WBBI out of Abingdon, Virginia. They remained there for over 30 years. The reaction was, obviously, overwhelmingly positive. During this time, the Chestnut Grove Quartet sold quite a few LPs. One of the group's great admirers during the late '60s was Ralph Stanley, who had just lost his brother, Carter. When Ralph started singing and playing with his own group, Ralph Stanley and the Clinch Mountain Boys, he incorporated a number of a capella mountain gospel numbers into their repertoire in the style of the Chestnut Grove Quartet. In fact, the Quartet was such a huge influence upon Ralph's life that he continues to record in this old style.

what's available: The Legendary Chestnut Grove Quartet ♪♪♪♪♪ (County, 1994, prod. Gary B. Reid) is perhaps one of the best recordings you will find of unaccompanied Appalachian gospel singing. The singing and harmonies are very intense.

worth searching for: The Chestnut Grove Quartet recorded and sold a great number of LPs in their times. All of their recordings are now out of print, except for the CD reissue by County, but would be worth picking up if you had the luck of finding one.

influences:

◀◀ Blue Sky Boys, Wade Mainer and Zeke Morris, Shape Note Singing

▶▶ Ralph Stanley, Doyle Lawson, Ricky Skaggs

Steve Gardner

Kathy Chiavola

Born March 7, 1952, in Chicago, IL.

Formerly a professional opera singer, Chiavola (pronounced: key ah' vo lah) has sung on albums by Vince Gill, Garth Brooks, Emmylou Harris, Kathy Mattea, and Ricky Skaggs. She's released two self-produced albums in the acoustic country and bluegrass vein.

what to buy: Kathy Chiavola ♪♪♪♪ (Demon/My Label, 1995, prod. Kathy Chiavola) contains a much harder bluegrass sound than on her debut recording, but with plenty of twists, like covering John Hiatt's "Thirty Years of Tears" and "Won't Be Long," which kicked off Aretha Franklin's debut album. The album boasts an all-star list of guests, including Bill Monroe, Emmylou Harris, Vince Gill, Béla Fleck, Chet Atkins, and others.

the rest:

Labor of Love ♪♪♪ (My Label, 1990)

influences:

◀◀ Doug Dillard Band, Emmylou Harris, Linda Ronstadt

▶▶ Cluster Pluckers, Claire Lynch, Kate McKenzie

Douglas Fulmer

The Chicken Chokers

Formed 1979, in Cambridge, MA. Disbanded 1989.

Chip Taylor Smith, guitar, Hawaiian steel guitar (1979–89); Chad Crumm, fiddle, synthesizer (1979–89); Paul Strother, bass (1980–89); Jim Reidy, banjo-uke, tenor banjo, baritone ukulele, banjo-mandolin (1979–89); Stefan Senders, banjo (1982–88). Other members have included: Mark Graham, harmonica (1984–86); Sandy Stark, fiddle (1981–82, 1984); Joe Fallon, banjo (1979); Mike Donoghue, banjo (1980–81).

The Chicken Chokers' groove-laden mix of driving old-time dance tunes and moody original songs placed them in the vanguard of what has come to be known as progressive old-time music: a fusion of traditional Southern old-time music and contemporary pop styles, including reggae and punk. The Chokers emphasized the percussive qualities of the banjo, employing not only the frailed five-string banjo, but adding other instruments from the banjo family: banjo-uke, tenor banjo, and banjo-mandolin. In 1979, the Chicken Chokers began playing open mikes in exchange for free beer, under a different name each night. They finally settled on the Chicken Chokers, offering a variety of innocent explanations of the name (for example, someone who is driving too slow). Fiddler Chad Crumm and guitarist Chip Taylor Smith had grown up playing music together on Martha's Vineyard, and found themselves both living in the Boston area by the late 1970s. They joined up with banjo-uke maestro Jim Reidy and Joe Fallon on five-string banjo, forming the first version of the Chicken Chokers. Shortly thereafter, the band enlisted bassist Paul Strother, while banjo frailer Fallon was replaced by Mike Donoghue, who was replaced two years later by Stefan Senders. The amazing fiddler Sandy Stark cycled in and out of the Chicken Chokers for several years, but unfortunately never recorded with them. For a few years, harmonica whiz Mark Graham (now with Open House) was a Chicken Choker; he appears on Chokers and Flies, recorded in 1985. The Chicken Chokers disbanded in 1989; Crumm now fronts the Hix, while the rest of the Chokers have reunited with fiddler Stark to form the Primitive Characters.

what's available: The Chokers only full album is Shoot Your Radio ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987, prod. Chicken Chokers, Karen Kane). It's a short one, with only eleven cuts; the material is divided between obscure traditional tunes ("Blackberry Blossom" is not the usual G major tune at all, but a wonderfully spooky modal meditation), and original songs, including the title cut. The instrumentals roll along like a steamroller, sounding like they came straight out of a moonshiner's hoedown, while the songs are more in the alternative rock vein, reflecting contemporary feelings of alienation and attitude, rather than the more old-fashioned topics of goodtime carousing, home, church, and family. Shoot Your Radio's progressive feel is reinforced by the use of synthesizer and Dagomba bass drum on several cuts. The band's debut came on the album Chokers and Flies ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1986, prod. Chicken Chokers, Karen Kane, George Lewis), which they shared with the Tompkins County Horseflies (later just plain Horseflies), with each band contributing one side of the original LP. The six tunes by the Chicken Chokers are considerably more traditional-sounding than those on Shoot Your Radio. Mark Graham's harmonica wizardry stays right in the pocket with the fiddle, around every turn and curve. Breakneck tempos on tunes like "Polecat Blues" are interspersed with very slow, draggy tempos (further emphasized by the use of bowed bass) on "Morning Blues" and "Cumberland Blues." The singing on Chokers and Flies is rather jolly, whereas the sometimes heavily-processed vocals of Shoot Your Radio tend more towards the morose.

influences:

◀◀ Benton Flippen, Tommy Jarrell, Uncle Dave Macon, Doc Roberts, Highwoods String Band, Plank Road, Fat Meat Boys

▶▶ The Hix, Primitive Characters, Horseflies, Open House, Hurricane Ridgerunners, Wildcats, Heartbeats, Bruce Molsky, Freighthoppers

see also: Primitive Characters

Suzy Rothfield Thompson

The Chieftains

Formed 1963, in Dublin, Ireland.

Paddy Moloney, uilleann pipes; Martin Fay, fiddle; Sean Keane, fiddle; Derek Bell, harp; Kevin Conneff, bodhrán; Matt Molloy, flute.

Often dismissed as a quaint bunch of old Irish folk musicians, the Chieftains are one of the most remarkably versatile groups around. For a bunch of scholarly looking, middle-aged Irish musicians, they've sure covered a lot of musical ground during their more than three decades together. Formed by Paddy Moloney as a vehicle to preserve Ireland's Celtic music roots, the Chieftains eventually moved away from their traditionalism, finding links past and present and often in such unlikely places as Spain.

what to buy: The Long Black Veil ♪♪♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1995, prod. Paddy Moloney), the group's best-selling record, blends country and blues with heavyweight guest shots from the Rolling Stones, Sting, Van Morrison, Ry Cooder, and others.

what to buy next: The Grammy-winning Another Country ♪♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1992, prod. Paddy Moloney) fully explores the country-Celtic connection. With help from Emmylou Harris, Willie Nelson, Chet Atkins, and Don Williams, the group tackles "The Wabash Cannonball," "I Can't Stop Lovin' You," "Goodnight, Irene," and even "Cotton-Eyed Joe" with its usual battery of flutes, whistles, harps, fiddles, and pipes.

best of the rest:

Chieftains 1 ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1964)
Chieftains 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1969)
Chieftains 3 ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1971)
Chieftains 4 ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1973)
Chieftains 5 ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1975/1987)
Bonaparte's Retreat ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1976)
Chieftains Live! ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1977)
Chieftains 7 ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1977)
Chieftains 8 ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1978/1987)
Boil the Breakfast Early ♪♪ (Columbia, 1980/1987)
The Chieftains 10: Cotton-Eyed Joe ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1981)
Year of the French ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1982/1987)
Ballad of the Irish Horse ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985)
The Chieftains in China ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985)
Celtic Wedding ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1987)
A Chieftains Celebration ♪♪ (RCA, 1989)
The Bells of Dublin ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1991)
The Best of the Chieftains ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1992)
An Irish Evening: Live at the Grand Opera House ♪♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1992)
The Celtic Harp ♪♪♪½ (RCA Victor, 1993)
Film Cuts ♪♪♪½ (RCA Victor, 1996)
Santiago ♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ The Clancy Brothers, Carolan, Ceoltori Chuolann

▶▶ Maura O'Connell, Nanci Griffith, Altan, Clannad

Doug Pullen

Sonny Chillingworth

Born Edward Bradfield Chillingworth, July 14, 1932, in Oahu, HI. Died August 24, 1994.

Along with Gabby Pahinui, Sonny Chillingworth is considered one of the greats of Hawaiian slack-key guitar, a style named for its retuning (or "slacking") of the guitar's strings. Fittingly for multicultural Hawaii, the slack-key style is influenced by the music of many different cultures, most importantly that of Mexico and Portugal. Chillingworth, who counted the English, Irish, and Hawaiian among his ancestors, fits easily into this melting-pot tradition. Chillingworth was also part of the Purdys, one of the great paniolo (Hawaiian cowboy) families, and his music drew strongly on that tradition during his four-decade career. He made his first recordings around 1954, and performed with such artists as Gabby Pahinui and the Sons of Hawaii during his career. Chillingworth was so highly regarded in Hawaii that he was awarded the Bank of Hawai'i Na Hoku Lifetime Award for Slack Key Guitar in 1992. He played on more than 30 albums but made his only solo-guitar recordings shortly before his death in 1994.

what's available: Sonny Solo ♪♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1994, prod. George Winston), released just months before Chillingworth's death, was many people's introduction to his music and to slack-key guitar. Chillingworth's voice imbues the love ballads and paniolo songs with all his 60-plus years of experience, and his smoothly flowing picking is both beautiful and deceptively complex. The poor sound quality on Sonny ♪♪½ (Mahalo, 1995, compilation prod. John Aeto) sometimes gives Chilllingworth's voice an otherworldly tone that's not unpleasant, but the posthumously released compilation hardly gives Chillingworth's talent its due.

influences:

◀◀ Aunty Vickie I'i Rodrigues, Gabby Pahinui

▶▶ Ozzie Kotani, the Kahumoku Brothers, Rev. Dennis Kamakahi

Brian Mansfield

Harry Choates

Born December 26, 1922, in Rayne, LA. Died July 17, 1951, in Austin, TX.

Cajun music during the 1920s and early 1930s was dominated by the sounds of the diatonic accordion. However, the sounds of hillbilly, swing, and Western swing that were coming in over the airwaves began changing that. Fiddler Harry Choates rode the crest of that changing taste right out of the bayous to the Grand Ole Opry. His light swinging fiddle-based sound slowly evolved away from traditional Cajun tunes to a sound that became indistinguishable from Western swing. The move away from Cajun music meant the increased use of English lyrics and a much wider audience than any prior Cajun musician had found. He was a ground breaker who prepared the way for later Cajun crossover artists like Jimmy C. Newman and Doug Kershaw.

what to buy: Fiddle King of Cajun Swing ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1993, prod. Chris Strachwitz) contains the classic recordings of Cajun and Western swing Choates made for Goldband records. It does not include his 1946 hit "Jolie Blon," but it has just about every other hit record he had. His band features the wonderful steel work of Julius "Papa Cairo" Lamperez, a true Cajun original.

the rest:

His Original 1946–1949 Recordings (Arhoolie, 1982)
Five-Time Lobster ♪♪♪ (Krazy Kat, 1990)

influences:

◀◀ Dennis McGee, Bob Wills, Hackberry Ramblers, Wallace Cheese Read

▶▶ Jimmy C. Newman, Doug Kershaw

Jared Snyder

Frank Christian

Born late 1940s, in Newark, NJ.

Urban imagery and poetic sensitivity place Frank Christian firmly in the modern folk music scene of Greenwich Village. But it is his imaginative guitar playing that sets him apart. Although he's made marks as a songwriter, especially when Nanci Griffith recorded his song "Three Flights Up" on her Grammy award-winning album, Other Voices Other Rooms, his greatest success has come as a supporting musician. One of acoustic music's busiest session players, Christian has recorded and/or toured with Griffith, Christine Lavin, Suzanne Vega, John Gorka, and the Smithereens. Beginning his study of guitar with jazz guitarist Roosevelt Spann at age 13, Christian learned his lessons well. By the time he came to the Village to study literature and music at New York University, his playing was attracting considerable attention. Although he recorded an impressive debut album, Where Were You Last Night, in 1982, Christian didn't come into his own until recently. His 1995 album, From My Hands, features guest appearances by Griffith, Garth Hudson, and Lee Saterfield, while his 1997 recording, Mister So and So, showcases his abilities to turn traditional folk, blues, and ragtime songs into personal statements.

what's available: Christian's first solo album in a dozen years, From My Hands ♪♪♪♪ (Palmetto, 1995, prod. Matt Balitsaris, Jeff Berman), shows how far he'd grown since his debut recording. Accompanying himself on acoustic six-string and electric 12-string guitars, and accompanied by top-notch New York musicians and guest performers Nanci Griffith, Garth Hudson, and Lee Saterfield, Christian emerges as an insightful original songwriter as well as an imaginative interpreter of other people's work, notably Yip Harburg's "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" (the only non-original here). Highlights include the original version of Christian's "Three Flights Up," which Griffith later covered. Mister So and So ♪♪♪♪ (Palmetto, 1997, prod. Frank Christian) is a virtuoso examination of traditional music. Many of the songs have been staples of Christian's live performances for years. In addition to seven tradition-rooted originals, the collection includes unique interpretations of John Duffey's "Make Me a Pallet on the Floor," Blind Willie McTell's "Statesboro Blues," and Gordon Lightfoot's "Did She Mention My Name."

worth searching for: Christian's debut recording, Somebody's Got to Do It ♪♪♪ (Great Divide, 1982, prod. Matt Balitsaris, Jeff Berman), may have been produced on a very low budget. Behind the rawness, though, is a highly literate songwriter and a virtuoso musician. Accompanied by Fast Folk Musical Magazine regulars Jeff Berman (drums, vibes, washboard), Jeff Hardy (acoustic bass), and Bill Ferns (harmonica), Christian stakes an early claim in the evolution of acoustic music.

influences:

◀◀ Bob Dylan, Erik Frandsen, Jack Hardy

▶▶ Nanci Griffith, Pete and Maura Kennedy, Five Chinese Brothers, Richard Meyer

Craig Harris

The Chuck Wagon Gang

Formed 1935, in Texas.

David "Dad" Carter, tenor vocals (1935–55); Jim Carter, guitar, bass vocals (1935–53); Rose Carter, soprano vocals (1935–late 1970s); Anna Carter, alto vocals (1935–late 1970s); various other family members including Ruth Ellen Carter; Roy Carter; Jim Carter; Eddie Carter; and others.

Active intermittently from 1935 to the present, the Chuck Wagon Gang is one of the best-loved and best-selling gospel groups of all time. Although they first formed in Texas, their endearing and enduring sound harks back to the singing schools of the Southeastern U.S. Their sound is simple, melodic, and hauntingly plaintive. The earliest and best recordings feature only guitar accompaniment to their beautiful four-part harmonies. For many years the sound remained substantially the same; in fact, it still does, although there is no longer any family connection between the Carters and the group who uses the name. Recording first for ARC (which became Columbia), they recorded over 400 songs between 1936 and 1975, when the Gang severed ties with Columbia. They were active only intermittently until 1987, when remnants of the group, led by Ruth Ellen Carter Yates and her brother, Roy Carter, began to record for Copperfield Records, hewing substantially to the old family sound. Since the early 1990s the group has recorded for the Arrival label.

what to buy: The Chuck Wagon Gang Columbia Historic Edition ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1984) is the real stuff, reissued from recordings made between 1936 and 1957, featuring mostly the original group. It has 16 tracks, including such Chuck Wagon Gang classics as "We Are Climbing," "The Church in the Wildwood," "After the Sunrise," "A Beautiful Life," and "Get a Touch of Heaven in Your Soul." It is presently available only on cassette, but it's well worth having in any form.

what to buy next: Many of the Copperfield recordings have been reissued by MCA, including Family Tradition ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1979) and Keep on Keepin' On ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1983).

the rest:

A Golden Legacy ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1983)
16 Country Gospel Favorites ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1984)
Homecoming ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1986)
An American Tradition ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1988)
Greatest Hits, Volume 1 ♪♪ (Arrival, 1991)
Old-Time Hymns, Volume 2 ♪♪ (Arrival, 1991)
16 Golden Country Gospel Favorites ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1992)
Golden Gospel Greats, Volume 1 ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1994)
Golden Gospel Greats, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ The Carter Family

▶▶ The Chestnut Grove Gospel Quartet

Randy Pitts

Cindy Church

Born June 11, in Bible Hill, Nova Scotia, Canada.

Cindy Church began her career as a backup singer for fellow Canadian Ian Tyson. She formed the Great Western Orchestra with another Tyson musician, Nathan Tinkham, when they left the band. As a solo performer she has stayed close to the folk/Western roots of the Tyson fold, and she has also performed with Sylvia Tyson's Quartette group.

what's available: Love on the Range ♪♪♪ (Stony Plain, 1994, prod. Nathan Tinkham, Dave Hamilton) is an acoustic-based

1/5/8 rudy cipolla

cape breton music

Cape Breton music is characterized by an almost frenetic urgency, an ornate and driving beat, and strong emotionalism. There is a distinct awareness of the roots of the people that comes across in the music, pulling on their Scottish heritage. Characterized by strong bowing of the fiddlers and emotional deliveries by the singers, Cape Breton music stands alone in its musical "guts." This is perhaps strongly influenced by Cape Breton step dancing, which is also believed to have Scottish roots. This tradition is so alive and well in Cape Breton today that no musician in the area would dream of learning to play without also learning to dance. The beats of the dance and the pulse of the music go hand-in-hand.

Why does Cape Breton get lumped into the Celtic cultures? The answer is based on the roots of this people in the northwest of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia ("New Scotland") was so named because the Scottish immigrants that settled there found the landscape so hauntingly familiar. These settlers were highly secluded from the influences of outsiders, and this background has created a geographical time-capsule, presenting a glimpse of what Scotland might be today had it not been constantly invaded and influenced by the English, the Scandinavians, and others. Some scholars believe that Cape Breton music is much closer to that of the original Scottish culture than what you find in Scotland today.

Jo Hughey Morrison

country album that gets into some low-key Western swing at times. In addition to her own songs and the ones by producer Tinkham, Church covers "My Wishing Room," an obscure Lefty Frizzell song. Love on the Range generated four hit singles in Canada, one of which, "This October Day," had a video that received some airplay on CMT in the States. Church stretches out a bit on the follow-up, Just a Little Rain ♪♪♪ (Stony Plain, 1995, prod. Nathan Tinkham, Cindy Church), but keeps the cowboy and Western themes. This time the country chestnut comes from Floyd Tillman, who wrote "I Gotta Have My Baby Back," which Church turns into a torchy acoustic-blues number.

influences:

◀◀ Ian & Sylvia, Emmylou Harris

▶▶ Lisa Brokop

Brian Mansfield

Rudy Cipolla

Born September 21, 1900, in Calabria, Italy.

Rudy Cipolla and his family moved from Italy to Portland, Oregon, when he was 8. As a child he played mandolin, violin, and trombone, eventually settling on the first as his instrument of choice. He joined a mandolin ensemble called the Rybka's Orchestra during the '20s and later formed the Argentine Trio, in which he played the mandocello. The group (with a new guitarist) moved from the Northwest to San Francisco in 1931 and continued to play in the city's North Beach district until 1940, when the trio disbanded. Cipolla and his brother opened a San Francisco book store in 1941. The Book Nook occupied much of his interest in the following decades, though Cipolla continued to play music, guesting with the San Francisco Symphony during the '50s and the Berkeley Mandolin Ensemble during the '70s. His debut album, The World of Rudy Cipolla, was produced by David Grisman for Rounder Records when he was 83.

what to buy: Portrait of an American Original ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1997, prod. David Grisman) provides a lovingly compiled overview of Cipolla's lengthy (if sporadic) career. Most of the selections were recorded during the '90s with the likes of the David Grisman Quintet, the Modern Mandolin Quartet, and Cipolla's own ensemble providing support on original compositions. Historical works from the '30s by the Argentine Trio anchor the collection.

what to buy next: The World of Rudy Cipolla ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1983, prod. David Grisman) features 11 Cipolla compositions.

influences:

◀◀ Jacob do Bandolim

▶▶ David Grisman, Radim Zenkl, Modern Mandolin Quartet

Steven Stolder

Carolyn Cirimele

See: The All Girl Boys

The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem /Tommy Makem and Liam Clancy

Formed March 17, 1956, in New York, NY.

Pat Clancy, vocals; Tom Clancy (died 1990), vocals (1956–90); Liam Clancy, vocals, guitar, concertinas (1956–75); Tommy Makem, vocals, banjo, guitar, whistle (1956–69); Bobby Clancy, vocals (1975–present); Robbie O'Connell, guitar, vocals (1975–90).

The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, along with Sean O'Riada and the Chieftains, are the most important figures in the renaissance of Irish folk music over the last half century. They have spawned thousands of imitative groups, sold millions of recordings, and sparked a renewed interest in Anglo-Irish folk song both in America and in Ireland. Tom and Pat Clancy, from Carrick-On-Suir, in Tipperary, were out-of-work actors during the early 1950s, living in Cleveland and looking for a new start somewhere else. After deciding their old car wouldn't make the trip to California, they headed for New York instead. There they hooked up with younger brother Liam and with Tommy Makem, a fine singer from Armagh, and the son of legendary singer Sarah Makem. They formed a group and began performing at late-night coffee houses in Greenwich Village (their first gig was on St. Patrick's Day, 1956), and were soon making a name for themselves in New York's nascent folk scene. With a style firmly based on the Weavers' lusty sing-along arrangements and a natural stage presence from their time in the theater, the musicians became favorites at concert appearances and released two albums on their own Tradition label. Following a now legendary appearance on The Ed Sullivan Show in 1961 (they played for 16 minutes when a scheduled guest took ill), they were signed to Columbia Records and soon became legends among the Irish in both the U.S. and Ireland. Their natural warmth and easy, singable versions of Irish folk songs made them favorites everywhere they performed. They were soon touring all over the world and recording constantly, becoming the best-known exponents of Irish traditional music in the world. Their early recordings consisted almost entirely of Irish folk songs, presented in a lusty style with simple accompaniment. Later, the group began to feature new songs from their own pens, and a more produced sound which didn't always work, but also resulted in some of their best music. After 10 years of records and tours, Makem left the group in 1970 to pursue a solo career. Liam left the group in 1975, replaced by youngest brother Bobby, and the group sank to the level of an oldies group, recording for smaller labels, and returning to the Irish pubs which they had left behind 15 years before. Although the original group reunited for occasional tours and a reunion album during the 1980s, their days at the forefront of Irish music were long since over. The death of oldest brother Tom in 1990 signaled the final end of the original group, though occasional versions of the Clancy Brothers still record and tour today.

Tommy Makem and Liam Clancy formed a duet during the mid-'70s, releasing several albums together. The duo performed fewer of the traditional Irish songs that had made the Clancy Brothers famous, instead concentrating on the work of young lesser-known songwriters. These tasteful albums were very popular with fans of the older group and introduced such then-unknown songwriters as David Mallett, Eric Bogle, and Gordon Bok, among others, to a new generation of folk fans.

The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem reintroduced traditional Irish music, sung honestly, to Irish-American audiences. Before their Ed Sullivan appearance, Irish music in the U.S. was for the most part a syrupy idealized view of "dear ould Ireland" written by Tin Pan Alley hacks and bearing little relation to real Irish folk music, which bore somewhat painful associations for Irish Americans looking to appear more American. The Clancys and their success made true Irish culture acceptable to Irish Americans, and led the way for the great revival of Irish music in the U.S. during the 1970s and 1980s. The group's great commercial success in the U.S. carried weight in Ireland, where people inspired by the Clancys began to look more closely at their own musical heritage. The later explorations of deeply traditional Irish music by Sean O'Riada, the Chieftains, and those that followed them was made easier by the Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem's ground-breaking success in the U.S. and Ireland. There are many things the group did poorly or didn't do at all. They were mediocre musicians, at best, and they largely ignored the great traditions of Irish-Gaelic song and traditional dance music. In spite of these criticisms, they have done more to raise the profile of traditional Irish music than any other group during the last 50 years and for that, they deserve praise.

what to buy: The Clancys' live recordings from the early 1960s found them in full flower. Relaxed and comfortable in front of audiences and brimming with good songs, the group recorded a number of great concert albums during their classic early period. In Person at Carnegie Hall ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1964/1991, prod. Robert Morgan) is as good a starting point as any. Featuring Dominic Behan's moving "Patriot Game," a great children's medley, and plenty of up-tempo favorites like "Reilly's Daughter" and "Johnson's Motor Car," the album captures the group at their accessible best. The recording is available as an individual CD and in a package with In Concert ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1991) and Luck of the Irish ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1992, prod. various), two other great early 1960s albums. The Makem and Clancy Collection ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1980/1992, prod. Archie Fisher) is a well-chosen collection of Tommy Makem and Liam Clancy's post-Clancy Brothers recordings. Featuring the two Eric Bogle songs "No Man's Land" (called "Willie McBride" on the album) and "The Band Played Waltzing Matilda," as well as a haunting version of "Ar Eirinn ne Neosainn Ce Hi" sung by Liam, this is a good introduction to the duo's 1970s folk albums.

what to buy next: A Spontaneous Concert Performance ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1961, prod. Robert Morgan) was the Clancys' Columbia debut and is currently available only on cassette. A solid performance, featuring accompaniment by Bruce Langhorne and Pete Seeger on guitar and banjo respectively, the album introduced a number of songs that would be longtime favorites for the Clancy Brothers and their fans. "Finnegan's Wake," "Reilly's Daughter," and "Jug of Punch," all Clancy standards, made their first appearance on this record. The atmosphere is relaxed, the audience in fine voice, and the performers comfortable performing in front of an audience made up largely of their friends. This is a very fine album and would be in the "what to buy" section were it currently available on compact disc.

what to avoid: Irish Drinking Songs ♪ (Columbia, 1993, prod. Lawrence Cohn) is a compilation that manages to reduce both the Clancys and the Dubliners to a bunch of drunken buffoons. Yes, both groups sang drinking songs, and both groups are closely identified with the juice of the barley, but to present solely that side of their music is to resurrect a stereotype that has haunted the Irish for centuries and has been used to dehumanize them both here and abroad in the not-so-distant past. Folklorist Mick Moloney, to his credit, deals somewhat with the ambivalence of many Irish towards drink in his liner notes, but by and large the compilation is a celebration of boozing that seems more than a little heavy handed in the 1990s. Columbia Records, one would guess, whipped up this package to take advantage of some dormant back catalog in a spirit of lowest common denominator fun. That's their right, but that doesn't mean you have to buy it. Finally, this recording was penalized one bone for the harsh, abrasive sound quality on about half the tracks.

the rest:

Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem ♪♪♪½ (Tradition, 1958/1996)
Lark in the Morning ♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1960/1996)
(With Lou Killen) Greatest Hits ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1973)
(With Robbie O'Connell) Clancy Brothers with Robbie O'Connell ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1982/1991)
Reunion ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1984)
Greatest Hits (Vanguard, 1987)
Live! (Vanguard, 1987)
(With David Hammond) Irish Traditional Folk Songs (Legacy, 1993)
Irish Songs ♪♪♪½ (Laserlight, 1993)
Irish Songs of Rebellion ♪♪♪½ (Laserlight, 1993)
(With Tommy Makem) Irish Songs of Drinking and Rebellion (Legacy, 1994)
Tunes 'n Tales of Ireland ♪♪ (Folk Era, 1994)
(With Tommy Makem) Best of the Clancy Brothers (Legacy, 1994)
Wrap the Green Flag ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1994)
Ain't It Grand Boys: Unissued Gems ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1995)
(With Tommy Makem) Greatest Irish Hits (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)
Older but No Wiser ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1995)
(With Tommy Makem) Home to Ireland: 28 Irish Favorites (Madacy, 1996)
(With Tommy Makem) 28 Irish Pub Songs (Madacy, 1996)
(With David Hammond) The Clancy Brothers and David Hammond (K-Tel, 1996)
(With David Hammond) Irish Folk Song Favorites (Madacy, 1996)
Christmas with the Clancy Brothers ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1997)
(With Tommy Makem) Songs of Ireland and Beyond (Columbia, 1997)

worth searching for: Home Boys Home ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1968, prod. Teo Macero) matched the boys with Columbia's great producer Teo Macero (who also produced Miles Davis's Kind of Blue among many other albums), finally allowing their songs to be framed in less rudimentary settings. This is a great collection of Clancy material, featuring the first appearance of Tommy Makem's classic "Four Green Fields," as well as his beautiful version of "The Bard of Armagh." Macero's use of harp, concertina, and fiddle framed these songs beautifully, providing a subtlety that the Clancy Brothers never had again. It's out of print, regrettably, but used copies are available.

solo outings:

Liam Clancy:

Liam Clancy ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1989)
The Dutchman ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993)

Tommy Makem and Liam Clancy:

Tommy Makem and Liam Clancy ♪♪♪½ (Blackbird, 1976/Shanachie 1992)
We've Come a Long Way ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1989)
Live at the National Concert Hall ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991)
Two for the Early Dew ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992)
In Concert ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993)

influences:

The Weavers, Sarah Makem

Dubliners, Wolfe Tones, Fureys, the Pogues

see also: Tommy Makem

Tony Ziselberger

Clannad

Formed late 1960s, in County Donegal, Ireland.

Máire Brennan, vocals, harp, keyboards; Ciaran Brennan, vocals, basses, guitar, piano-synth; Paul Brennan, vocals, flute, whistles (1970–89); Padraig Duggan, mandolin, harmonica, guitar, vocals; Noel Duggan, guitar, vocals; Enya Brennan, keyboards, vocals (1980–82).

Clannad took its act to Ireland, and later the U.S., in a totally unconventional way. Siblings Máire, Ciaran, and Paul Brennan teamed up with their twin uncles Padraig and Noel Duggan to form a band. They wanted to play music that echoed the sounds they had grown up hearing in their corner of Ireland. The Brennans' father owned a tavern where he performed, and would send them on to give him a break between acts. They sang in Gaelic, which was not at all popular with the locals there. They took traditional tunes and arranged them for an entire band. This was not the "thing to do" at that time. Their big break came when they won first place (and a contract with Philips Records) at the local Letterkenny Folk Festival in 1970. It took several years to complete the album, however, because of a disagreement over the use of Gaelic lyrics on the record. The group won out in the end, and thus a legend in contemporary traditional music was born.

Clannad's music has gone through substantial changes over the group's lifetime. Even though the group's early work was controversial to the traditional crowd, today it is considered quite traditional. As the members of the band worked together, they experimented, learning what would work for the group, and trying new instrumentations and new sounds. Thus the group has evolved from what we would today term as traditional to a more New Age sort of sound, visiting various pop and rock stops in between. Its best-known song in the U.S. is "Theme from Harry's Game," which first appeared on a British TV show during the early '80s, later won Billboard magazine's World Music Song of the Year award, and was picked up for the movie Patriot Games. Clannad's popularity soared with this publicity, and its ghostly songs and lyrical voices are now well known to many American audiences. Despite the evolution of the group over the years, one can still hear the rugged hills and warring political factions of their original roots in Ireland through the dark tone and spiritual melodies.

what to buy: For those unfamiliar with Clannad's music, the best place to start would be Magical Ring ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1983, prod. Richard Dodd). This is where the group makes the biggest transition from the traditional to the contemporary, largely with their original song "Theme from Harry's Game." Combining voices and synthesizers, the band's members developed a modern new sound for themselves. The immediate positive response by British audiences convinced them to continue this trend. If you find you like this style, continue with Macalla ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1985, prod. Steve Nye), a lush musical offering that is mostly original work. If you prefer the more traditional material, the place to start is Dulaman ♪♪♪♪♪ (Blackbird, 1976/Shanachie, 1988, prod. Nicky Ryan), a recording with rich Gaelic songs and delightful Irish rhythms. Follow this with Clannad 2 ♪♪♪♪½ (Blackbird, 1974/Shanachie 1988, prod. Donal Lunny), steeped in wonderful Irish tradition.

what to buy next: For those interested in more of an overview, Clannad also has a plethora of compilation recordings, all of which, of course, include "Harry's Game." The best of these is Celtic Collections: Clannad ♪♪♪½ (K-Tel, 1996), which shows Clannad's wide scope, from the classic traditional "Nil Sen La" to the highly synthesized "In a Lifetime." The main problem with this album is the lack of liner notes or information about the group, leaving new fans to find their own way to more of Clannad's music. A better presentation can be found on Rogha: The Best of Clannad ♪♪½ (RCA/BMG, 1997, prod. Ian Kimmer), which is a nice retrospective, but covers material only from Magical Ring to the present. Clannad in Concert ♪♪♪♪½ (Blackbird, 1979/Shanachie, 1982, prod. Nicky Ryan) is an excellent live recording from the early era.

what to avoid: Whether you are a fan of Clannad's earlier or more contemporary style, Sirius ♪½ (RCA/BMG, 1988, prod. Greg Ladanyi, Russ Kunkel) is an Americanized rock departure for Clannad. Only folk fans with heavy rock leanings are likely to appreciate this one. Unless you are interested in only sampling Clannad's music, or in collecting everything in print, the other compilations aren't worth the money: PastPresent ♪♪ (RCA/BMG, 1989, prod. various) spans the time from their modern venture with Magical Ring to the rock album Sirius; Themes woof! (Celtic Heartbeat, 1995, prod. various) combines a large assortment of movie and TV music Clannad has recorded over the years, including a very sappy version of Joni Mitchell's "Both Sides Now" and the overly dramatic love song from Last of the Mohicans called "I Will Find You."

the rest:
Crann Ull ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1980)
Fuaim ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1982)
Legend ♪♪½ (RCA, 1984)
Atlantic Realm ♪½ (BBC, 1989)
Anam ♪♪ (RCA, 1991)
Banba ♪♪ (BMG, 1993)
Lore ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1996)
Landmarks N/A (Atlantic, 1998)

worth searching for: Lovers of Clannad's more traditional work will enjoy the live album, Ring of Gold ♪♪♪♪ (Celtic Music, 1986). If anyone finds the out-of-print recording Clannad ♪♪♪♪ (Philips, 1973), buy it even if you don't want it! It is a collector's item, as the original master tapes reportedly have been lost.

solo outings:
Máire Brennan:
Máire ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1992)
Misty Eyed Adventures ♪♪ (Mesa, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Pentangle, the Bothy Band
▶▶ Enya, Loreena McKennit, Sarah McLachlan, Capercaillie

see also: Enya

Jo Hughey Morrison

Eric Clapton

Born March 30, 1945, in Surrey, England.

Eric Clapton's reputation as a guitarist and his stature in popular music have made it very difficult to assess his music dispassionately. This may explain why he has remained consistantly revered for the last 20 years, even though his output has been exceptionally mediocre—with occasional forays into outright wretchedness. Clear thinking is also lacking when it comes to Clapton's prowess as a blues guitarist. Although his work on Bluesbreakers—John Mayall with Eric Clapton is certainly impressive, it is so, in this writer's opinion, more because it revealed that a young white man could master the past (in the form of Freddie King, for Clapton) than because it broke much new ground. It is Clapton's subsequent work with Cream and Blind Faith that is truly brilliant and groundbreaking, and his sole studio album with Derek & the Dominoes, Layla and Other Assorted Love Songs, is a clear masterpiece. His first few solo albums range from very good to pretty good, as he seemed to be settling into a laid-back, singer-songwriter groove, something which he did pretty well, even if it displeased old fans waiting to hear fiery, innovative guitar soloing. In retrospect, these early and mid-1970s albums, most of which were largely dismissed at the time, sound like high points. Since then, he has made some truly disappointing records. In 1989, Clapton seemed content with the comfortable plateau he had reached, actually titling one album Journeyman. His next release, however, Unplugged, catapulted him to international stardom greater than any he had previously known. Clapton can still play, and he continues to sparkle sporadically, largely on guest appearances, like Chuck Berry's Hail, Hail Rock and Roll, Gatemouth Brown's Long Way Home, and Jimmie Vaughan's Tribute to Stevie Ray Vaughan, but he seems to have long since stalled creatively.

what to buy: Clapton's work on John Mayall's Bluesbreakers ♪♪♪♪ (Deram, 1966, prod. Mike Vernon) is explosive. Check it out if you want to hear why British fans at the time claimed—in graffiti all over London—"Clapton Is God." By the mid-1960s young white guitar players on both sides of the Atlantic had discovered the blues; Clapton in England, like Michael Bloomfield in the U.S., represented the best of this movement. On Derek & the Dominoes' Layla and Other Assorted Love Songs ♪♪♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1970, prod. Tom Dowd), Clapton was spurred to perhaps the greatest playing of his career by the presence of Duane Allman and a host of top-flight musicians. The results speak for themselves—a blues-rock classic. 461 Ocean Boulevard ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1974, prod. Tom Dowd) and Slowhand ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1977, prod. Glyn Johns) are the best of Clapton's mellow-period albums.

what to buy next: As a career overview, Crossroads ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1988, prod. Bill Levenson) is pretty much a model boxed set. The fourth CD, however, is filled with padding, illustrating Clapton's decline. Clapton's debut album, Eric Clapton ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1970, prod. Delaney Bramlett), is loose and filled with great playing, though in many ways it sounds more like a Delaney Bramlett album than a Clapton recording.

what to avoid: Behind the Sun ♪ (Duck/Warner Bros., 1985, prod. Phil Collins) and August ♪ (Duck/Warner Bros., 1986, prod. Phil Collins) are vile albums: soulless, pandering, overdone, and inexcusable. From the Cradle ♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1994, prod. Russ Titelman, Eric Clapton) was hailed as Clapton's return to his blues roots and includes lots of great guitar playing. Unfortunately, his all-English backing band can't tell a groove from a hole in the ground, and Clapton's singing is overemotive—patronizing the blues tradition he wants to celebrate. For lessons on how to effectively cover blues classics, he should take another listen to his own versions of Robert Johnson's "Steady Rollin' Man" (on 461 Ocean Boulevard), Elmore James's "The Sky Is Crying" (on There's One in Every Crowd), and Arthur Crudup's "Mean Old Frisco" (on Slowhand). These he took at his own speed and made his own, rather than slavishly trying to mimic the originals.

the rest:
The Rainbow Concert ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1973/1995)
There's One in Every Crowd ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1974)
E.C. Was Here ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1975)
No Reason to Cry ♪♪½ (Polydor, 1976)
Backless ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1978)
Just One Night ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1980)
Another Ticket ♪♪½ (Polydor, 1981)
Timepieces (The Best of Eric Clapton) ♪♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1982)
Money and Cigarettes ♪♪ (Duck/Warner Bros., 1983)
Timepieces Vol. II: Live in the Seventies ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1983)
Journeyman ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1989)
24 Nights: Live From Albert Hall ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1991)
Rush ♪♪½ (Reprise, 1992)
Unplugged ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1992)
Hits Of: Volume 1 (Sound Choice, 1993)
The Cream of Clapton (Polydor, 1995)
Crossroads 2 (Live in the Seventies) ♪♪½ (Polydor, 1996)
Early Stages ♪½ (Beacon, 1997)
Pilgrim ♪♪½ (Reprise, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Albert King, Freddie King, Jimi Hendrix, the Band, J.J. Cale ▶▶ Stevie Ray Vaughan, the Allman Brothers Band

Alan Paul

Gene Clark

Born November 17, 1941, in Tipton, MO. Died May 24, 1991.

Best known for his work as singer/songwriter for the original line-up of seminal folk-rock band the Byrds, Gene Clark grew up in the Ozarks playing folk, bluegrass, and surf music. As a member of the New Christy Minstrels, he played on a couple of their albums before moving to Los Angeles and meeting Roger McGuinn. After playing as a duo, Clark and McGuinn were soon joined by David Crosby and the nucleus of the Byrds was formed. Smartly melding the 12-string folky intensity of Bob Dylan with the infectious melodies of the Beatles and the British Invasion, the Byrds pretty much invented the jangly folk-rock sound that continues to thrive today. Clark wrote many of the key tracks on the Byrds' classic first three Columbia albums, including "I Feel a Whole Lot Better," "Set You Free This Time," and "Eight Miles High." The pressures of success were instrumental in Clark's leaving the band in 1966, just as its popularity was peaking, and he went on to record with the Gosdin Brothers (Vern and Rex) in 1967 and for a variety of labels (including A&M, Asylum, and RSO) under his own name during the 1970s. Clark was part of the reunion of the original five Byrds (Clark, McGuinn, Crosby, Chris Hillman, and Michael Clarke) in 1973 and of the short-lived McGuinn, Clark & Hillman in 1979. He continued to record sporadically before dying of natural causes in 1991. Over the years his songs have been recorded by Willie Nelson, the Eagles, Tom Petty, and Dinosaur Jr., to name a few.

what to buy: As part of its ambitious series of Byrds reissues, Columbia/Legacy has released the first eight Columbia Byrds albums, with bonus tracks. The first two, Mr. Tambourine Man ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1965/1996, prod. Terry Melcher, reissue prod. Bob Irwin) and Turn! Turn! Turn! ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1965/1996, prod. Terry Melcher, reissue prod. Bob Irwin), are full of Clark compositions and his pensive, slightly mysterious vocals.

what to buy next: Echoes ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1991, Digital producer Bob Irwin) collects the Gene Clark with the Gosdin Brothers release with six Clark-penned Byrds songs and three unreleased nuggets and gives a pretty good idea of Clark's considerable contribution to the burgeoning folk-rock movement.

the rest:
Firebyrd ♪♪♪ (Making Waves, 1984)
(With Carla Olson) So Rebellious a Lover ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1987/1992)
This Byrd Has Flown ♪♪♪½ (Monster Music, 1996)

worth searching for: No Other ♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1974, prod. Thomas Jefferson Kaye), originally released by Asylum during that label's hit runs with Linda Ronstadt and Jackson Browne, is a brooding L.A. blend of country, folk, and rock with instrumental accompaniment from Richard Greene, Chris Hillman, Russ Kunkel, Michael Utley, and Stephen Bruton, among others. After topping the best-seller lists with the Byrds, it is the only Clark solo album to even dent the charts. The German label Line reissued the album in 1994.

influences:
◀◀ The Beatles, Bob Dylan
▶▶ R.E.M., Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers

see also: The Byrds

David Sokol

Guy Clark

Born November 6, 1941, in Monahans, TX.

With a soft, Southern voice and terrific storytelling details that artfully give the right impression at the right time, Clark has quietly become a hero for a generation of young country-folk songwriters. The key influence for Lyle Lovett, Robert Earl Keen Jr., Nanci Griffith, and many others has never been flashy, but he can knock you over with a rickety four-second lyrical observation. "I Don't Love You Much Do I"—the love song at the heart of Boats to Build—is as simple and refreshingly unclichéd as the Beatles' "I Wanna Hold Your Hand." There's a reason he's nicknamed "The Craftsman"; it's easy to picture Clark sanding down a piece of wood in the back yard and humming new songs as he builds a deck or a boat. After a career detour recording for Asylum, Clark has returned to his original label, Sugar Hill.

what to buy: Boats to Build ♪♪♪♪ (Asylum/Elektra, 1992, prod. Guy Clark, Miles Wilkinson) contains wonderful stories about love, romance, and the folk singer Ramblin' Jack Elliot (a friend and occasional musical guest on Clark's albums). The soft, short songs express a wide range of emotions without much effort or instrumentation. His best-known album remains his debut, Old No. 1 ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1975, recorded by Al Pachucki, Tom Pick, Ray Butts), which features Clark's classic "Desperados Waiting for a Train" and fawning liner notes by pal Jerry Jeff Walker.

what to buy next: On Dublin Blues ♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1994, prod. Miles Wilkinson, Guy Clark) lines like "I have seen the David, seen the Mona Lisa, too/And I have heard Doc Watson play 'Columbus Stockade Blues'" show that Clark's knack for detail is just getting more potent as he gets older.

what to avoid: Old Friends ♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1988, prod. Miles Wilkinson, Guy Clark) is overly cluttered with star cameos and, despite a few good songs, constrains Clark's natural voice and lyrics.

the rest:
Texas Cookin' ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1976)
The Essential Guy Clark ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1997)
Keepers: A Live Recording ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1997)

worth searching for: Several of Clark's best albums, including Guy Clark, The South Coast of Texas, and Better Days, are long out of print. The two-disc set Craftsman ♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1995, prod. various) brings them back, even if the experience isn't as rewarding as the concise, cohesive Boats to Build.

influences:
◀◀ Jerry Jeff Walker, Johnny Cash, Willie Nelson, Townes Van Zandt

▶▶ Lyle Lovett, Robert Earl Keen Jr., Emmylou Harris, Nanci Griffith, Rodney Crowell

Steve Knopper

Clawgrass

See: Mark Johnson & Clawgrass

Vassar Clements

Born April 28, 1928, in Kincaid, SC.

Fiddler extraordinaire Vassar Clements started out as a session player and, at age 14, got a steady gig with Bill Monroe's Blue Grass Boys. He honed his craft and soon developed a reputation not only for his blazing speed but also for his uncanny ability to make the instrument cry and sing. Other top bluegrass and country artists also enlisted his services, including Jim & Jesse, Faron Young, and the Earl Scruggs Revue. During the early 1970s he turned a newer, younger audience on to bluegrass music when he was featured on the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band's Will the Circle Be Unbroken and as part of Old & In the Way, a bluegrass outfit formed by the Grateful Dead's Jerry Garcia. What's unique about Clements is he's never allowed himself to be pigeonholed into performing strictly bluegrass and country. He is equally the master of blues, rock, and jazz and has graced the recordings of such diverse artists as John Hartford, Stephane Grappelli, the Allman Brothers, Paul McCartney, and Woody Herman.

what to buy: Crossing the Catskills ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1972, prod. Vassar Clements, Mike Melford), The Bluegrass Sessions ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1977/1992), and Grass Routes ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Bil VornDick) all feature excellent musicianship. In addition, check out Old & In the Way's Breakdown ♪♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1997, prod. David Grisman). Especially noteworthy on this release is Clements's fiddle masterpiece "Kissimee Kid" and Peter Rowan's "Midnight Moonlight," which features an extended jam in which Clements does some breathtaking things with the other musicians on a two-chord structure.

what to buy next: Vassar's Jazz ♪♪♪ (Winter Harvest, 1996, prod. Vassar Clements) teams Clements with the Dixie Dregs' Stephen Davidowski for some interesting fusion-style jazz. Old & In the Way's That High Lonesome Sound ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1996, prod. David Grisman) also showcases Clements's genre-bending fiddling antics as he shifts gears from simple folk accompaniment to breakneck bluegrass in a heartbeat.

the rest:
Hillbilly Jazz ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1974/1986)

(With Old & In the Way) Old & In the Way ♪♪♪♪ (Grateful Dead Records, 1975)
Hillbilly Jazz Rides Again ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986)
(With Stephane Grappelli) Together at Last ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1987)
Once in a While ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1992) worth searching for: Superbow ♪♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1975, prod. Buddy Killen) features some good, 1970-ish country boogie a la Lynyrd Skynyrd.

influences:
◀◀ Bill Monroe, Scotty Stoneman
▶▶ Mark O'Connor, Kenny Kosek

Rick Petreycik

Bill Clifton

Born William August Marburg, April 5, 1931, in Riverwood, MD.

Vocalist, guitarist, and autoharpist Bill Clifton is an atypical bluegrass pioneer in that he didn't grow up with the music and he holds an M.B.A. from the University of Virginia. He brought many traditional country songs and tunes into the bluegrass repertoire via his recordings for Starday and Mercury during the late 1950s and early 1960s. Clifton's inclusion of Carter Family material and other traditional fare and his fondness for autoharp, clawhammer banjo, and other traditional influences appealed to folkboomers of the time. Clifton has lived overseas intermittently for long stretches since 1963, when he moved to England; he also lived in the Philippines as a Peace Corps administrator during the late 1960s. He's always served as an ambassador for bluegrass in his travels. He recorded three albums for County Records during the 1970s.

what to buy: The Early Years, 1957–1958 ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Bill Clifton, Don Pierce) compiles many of Clifton's highly influential Mercury/Starday recordings, featuring all-star bands of both bluegrass pioneers (Ralph Stanley, Benny Martin, Curly Lambert) and prominent revivalists (Mike Seeger, John Duffey), as well as a decidedly folk-oriented repertoire that includes "Dixie Darlin'," "Darlin' Corey," and "I'll Be There, Mary Dear."

what to buy next: River of Memories ♪♪♪ (Mendota Music, 1994, prod. Bill Clifton) teams Clifton with mandolinist Jimmy Guidreau in an all-gospel effort. The songs are standards and the performances are nicely done. "Brighten the Corner Where You Are" is particularly nice.

the rest:
Where the Rainbow Finds Its End ♪♪½ (Elf Records, 1991)

worth searching for: Any and all of Clifton's LPs would be worth having if you could find them. His Carter Family Memorial Album released on Starday in the early '60s is still one of the best in that genre.

influences:
◀◀ The Carter Family, the Stanley Brothers
▶▶ The Country Gentlemen

Randy Pitts

Bruce Cockburn

Born May 27, 1945, in Ottawa, Ontario, Canada.

Bruce Cockburn has had a fascinating musical development, starting as a folk singer during the early '70s but eventually incorporating rock and world music elements to create a more complex style. His maturation came on 1979's Dancing in the Dragon's Jaws, when he was being influenced by reggae, jazz, and African pop while also discovering world politics (the album also featured his only American Top 40 hit, "Wondering Where the Lions Are"). He fully realized that sound with 1984's Stealing Fire and would eventually turn his music inward again to American folk and blues. Cockburn is limited as a vocalist, but his spiritual convictions shine through his music, making him an incredibly emotional singer at times.

what to buy: Stealing Fire ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1984, prod. Jon Goldsmith, Kerry Crawford), which came out of Cockburn's visits to Central American refugee camps, is one of the most moving works of politically motivated rock ever created. Instead of launching into polemics, Cockburn personalizes the songs, singing about love during wartime in "Lovers in a Dangerous Time" and dreaming visions of vengeance in the shattering "If I Had a Rocket Launcher." Incorporating worldbeat rhythms into his own folk experience, Cockburn makes powerfully emotional melodies, even turning the line "Who put the bullet hole in Peggy's kitchen wall?" into an unforgettable hook.

what to buy next: Working with a band that included Booker T. Jones and Nashville fiddle virtuoso Mark O'Connor, Cockburn did for inner spiritual turmoil what he had done for Latin American politics in Nothing but a Burning Light ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1991, prod. T-Bone Burnett), weaving original songs and old gospel blues into a phosphorescent statement of faith.

what to avoid: Though the albums aren't bad, Cockburn's two earliest releases—Bruce Cockburn ♪♪½ (True North, 1970, prod. Eugene Martynec) and High Winds, White Sky ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1971)—are folk singer/songwriter albums that exhibit little of the eclecticism that would make some of Cockburn's later work so involving.

16 bruce cockburn

the rest:
Sunwheel Dance ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1972)
Night Vision ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1973)
Salt, Sun & Time ♪♪½ (True North, 1974)
Joy Will Find a Way ♪♪♪½ (True North, 1975)
In the Falling Dark ♪♪½ (True North, 1977)
Circles in the Stream ♪♪½ (True North, 1977)
Further Adventures Of ♪♪½ (True North, 1978)
Dancing in the Dragon's Jaws ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1979)
Humans ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1980)
Inner City Front ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1981)
The Trouble with Normal ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1983)
World of Wonders ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1986)
Big Circumstance ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1989)
Bruce Cockburn Live ♪♪♪ (True North, 1990)
Christmas ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1993)
Dart to the Heart ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1994)
The Charity of Night ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1997)
You Pay Your Money and You Take Your Chance: Live ♪♪♪ (True North/Rykodisc, 1997)

worth searching for: Mummy Dust ♪♪♪½ (True North, 1981), and Waiting for a Miracle ♪♪♪½ (True North, 1987), two best-ofs from Cockburn's Canadian label, collect the singer's most popular works from different periods in his career.

influences:
◀◀ Gordon Lightfoot, Bob Dylan, the Weavers
▶▶ Mark Heard, Tragically Hip, Ian Tamblyn

Brian Mansfield

Leonard Cohen

Born September 21, 1934, in Montreal, Quebec, Canada.

Leonard Cohen was a published poet and novelist in his native Canada well before Judy Collins first recorded his songs in 1966. He was 34 years old when his debut album appeared in 1968, and though he was often grouped with songwriters like Joni Mitchell, he seemed more like the wiser, worldlier uncle than one of the gang. His most popular early songs—"Suzanne" and "Bird on the Wire"—stamped him as the ultimate long-suffering romantic and erotic victim of countless beautiful women. Cohen made his great 1960s records largely in Nashville, using the same producer (Bob Johnston) and many of the same musicians as Johnny Cash and Bob Dylan. Although his songs haven't exactly slipped into the easy repertoires of Nashville, Cohen evidently sees himself as working in the great songwriting tradition of the field. As his lyrics grew darker and more obsessive through the '70s, his fans dwindled; he simply was too depressing, many complained. Yet Cohen continues to be rediscovered by younger listeners who are drawn to his poetic artistry as much as his romanticized gloom. And, in fact, his work over the past decade is some of his strongest. Two tribute albums—1991's I'm Your Fan and 1995's Tower of Song (with Cohen tunes done by R.E.M., Nick Cave, and the Pixies, among others)—revealed his influences on a new generation of songwriters.

what to buy: The best place to start is with two albums that span nearly 30 years of Cohen's output. His debut, Songs of Leonard Cohen ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1968, prod. John Simon) immediately established his credentials as an utterly original lyricist, while producer Simon's arrangements gave a romantic shimmer (which Cohen, at the time, detested) to the music's deep melancholia. On The Future ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1992, prod. various) Cohen casts an unsparing eye toward the state of the world and the hopeless politicians, priests, and lovers who inhabit it. Musically, it's his most adventurous album ever—and it shows his wit is definitely improving in middle age. Best of Leonard Cohen ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1975, prod. various) is a fine introduction to his work, though it covers only his first five albums.

what to buy next: Both of his Nashville albums, Songs from a Room ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1969, prod. Bob Johnston) and Songs of Love and Hate ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1971, prod. Bob Johnston), sympathetically capture Cohen's unique sensibilities in a spare, almost stark framework that underlines the basic bleak landscape of the songs.

the rest:
New Skin for the Old Ceremony ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1975/1995)
Death of a Ladies' Man ♪♪ (Columbia, 1977)
Recent Songs ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1979/1990)
Various Positions ♪♪ (Columbia, 1985/1995)
I'm Your Man ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1988)
Cohen Live ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1994)
More Best of Leonard Cohen ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Hank Williams, Leadbelly, Jacques Brel, Bob Dylan

Bruce Cockburn (© Stephen A. Ide)

Nick Cave, Sisters of Mercy, R.E.M., Morrissey

Joel Selvin and Doug Pippin

Paula Cole

Born c. 1968, in Rockport, MA.

Singer-songwriter Paula Cole was raised in the kind of family that sang three-part harmony in the car. The daughter of artistic parents who lived in a trailer park, she studied jazz singing at the Berklee College of Music. After leaving Berklee, she pursued music as a livelihood. It didn't take long for her to get a break; in 1992–93, Peter Gabriel featured her on his "Secret World" tour. She released her debut album, Harbinger, in 1994. Its follow-up, This Fire, was anything but a sophomore slump; the single "Where Have All the Cowboys Gone" was a major hit and helped win Cole the 1998 Grammy for Best New Artist. Many musicians would envy Cole her steady upward path.

Perhaps because of her jazz training, Cole's sound is gutsier than that of fellow Lilith Fair participants Sarah McLachlan and Suzanne Vega, though her compositions are similarly grounded in love and introspection.

what's available: Harbinger ♪♪♪♪ (Imago, 1994, prod. Kevin Killen) contains some of Cole's most wrenching compositions, notably "I Am So Ordinary." It's much folkier than its follow-up: Cole puts on the stilettos for This Fire ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996, prod. Paula Cole), which focuses on the protagonist's darker passions.

influences:

Tori Amos, Chet Baker, Peter Gabriel

Pamela Murray Winters

Michael Coleman

Born January 31, 1891, in Knockgrania, County Sligo, Ireland. Died January 4, 1945, in New York, NY.

Fiddle player Michael Coleman has been called Ireland's most influential traditional musician of this century. Born in an area of southeast County Sligo known for its extraordinary wealth of traditional music, Coleman learned his art from the many local fiddle players whose music was passed down through the generations since the early 1700s. When Coleman followed so many of his compatriots and emigrated to America in the early part of this century, he happened to arrive in New York at the very time when the nascent American record industry was looking to break into the ethnic market by offering recordings of music from the immigrants' native traditions. Along with other recently arrived Irish musicians, Coleman first recorded for small independent labels during the early 1920s, then for the major companies of the day—Columbia, Victor—after 1925, and finally for Decca during the late '30s and early '40s. When his 78-rpm records started to arrive in Ireland, often brought as presents with record players by emigrants returning home, the news of the fiddle player's uncommon abilities and superb artistry spread like wildfire. Reactions to them were varied, ranging from admiration and emulation to discouragement and disgust, as some of the country fiddlers, sensing they could not compete, put their fiddles away forever. However, the news of that success did not escape the attention of British record companies, which soon started recording and distributing "genuine Irish music" on their own labels, thus often rescuing from oblivion some of the regional styles that were threatened by the sudden appetite for Sligo fiddle music. Still, the influence exerted by Coleman and fellow Sligo fiddle players James Morrison and Paddy Killoran through their recordings can be felt to this day in how Irish traditional music is learned, performed, and appreciated.

what's available: Although a few LP and cassette reissues of Michael Coleman's recordings were made available in the United States during the 1960s and 1970s, only selected sides can now be found on a few CD anthologies. An early, acoustical recording of "The Monaghan Jig" was included on From Galway to Dublin ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Dick Spottswood, Philippe Varlet), while Coleman's fiery 1925 version of "Jackson's Reel" can be found on Milestone at the Garden ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Philippe Varlet, Dick Spottswood). Other great Coleman sides, like "Lord McDonald/Ballinasloe Fair" and the "Tarbolton" medley, are among a slew of other classic recordings of Irish American music from the 1920s and '30s on the wonderful two-CD set The Wheels of the World ♪♪♪♪ (Yazoo, 1996, prod. Richard Nevins).

worth searching for: The most complete CD reissue of Coleman's recordings currently available is a two-CD set produced in Ireland and carried by some specialized American stores. Michael Coleman ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn/Viva Voce, 1992, prod. Harry Bradshaw) contains no less than 48 of Coleman's influential instrumental sides. It is packaged with a 113-page booklet, the product of many years of research by RTE producer Harry Bradshaw, on the life and times of the master fiddle player. The detailed biography contains excerpts from interviews of relatives and musical colleagues, a wealth of illustrations, and a complete discography of Coleman's original recordings.

influences:

Philip O'Beirne, P.J. McDermott, James Gannon, Paddy Curley, Johnny Gorman

Kevin Burke, Dervish

Philippe Varlet

Albert Collins

Born October 3, 1932, in Leona, TX. Died November 24, 1993, in Las Vegas, NV.

It's cool to like Texas now, but not long ago much of the U.S. regarded it as a boondock too full of trailer trash and chainsaw murderers to warrant visiting. This, in spite of its being turf to a bluesman the caliber of Albert Collins, who first came to light with "Frosty" (Kangaroo, 1958), a regional hit that established the "cool sound" he got from his Telecaster. He did some more obscure 45s and cut LPs for Imperial and Blue Thumb but didn't really hit his stride until he signed with Alligator in 1978. Collins got most of his press for his shrill, icy guitar tactics, but he also sang well, was a tremendous showman, and wrote some brilliant (and often brilliantly witty) material. Collins and his Icebreakers (who at various times included A.C. Reed, Aron Burton, and Debbie Davies) toured relentlessly, bowling over nation after nation and developing a rep as a bitch to have to play after on a show. Few artists as prolific as Collins have anywhere near his consistency of high quality on their recordings; he simply never recorded a dud. Even on the inevitable live CDs on which his band members were all Euros he'd probably never rehearsed with, he sounded great. His death (from cancer) was shockingly premature—but toast his life in the time-honored Texas way: pound down a couple cold ones, give the volume knob an injudicious crank, and groove to his indomitable music.

what to buy: Frostbite ♪♪♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1980, prod. Bruce Iglauer, Dick Shurman, Casey Jones) has tons of all the elements that made Collins great: heaps of his vaunted guitar intensity, cool covers (Johnnie Taylor's "If You Love Me Like You Say," which he often performed live, and a killing rendition of Johnny Morissette's "Brick"), and humor ("Don't Go Reaching across My Plate"). There's also an absolute masterpiece called "Snowed In," wherein the Texan describes trying to start his car in an icy Chicago winter. He creates guitar sound effects with jaw-dropping accuracy, particularly that suspenseful grinding you hear when you crank your engine and it sounds like it'll be a no-go. This goes on for 9 minutes and 12 seconds. When Collins finally gets "the car" started, it's an almost orgiastic liftoff—and one of the best items in the Alligator catalog. Blues pundits of yore "dissed" Collins's Imperial output, which is now universally respected for its concise but magnificent instrumentals and sly vocal performances. Beginning in 1969 he cut three LPs for the label, and Complete Imperial Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1991, prod. Bill Hall), a 100-minute, two-disc set with extensive liner notes and photos, comprises them all. Quintessential Collins in concert is Frozen Alive! ♪♪♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1981, prod. Bruce Iglauer, Dick Shurman), on which he is backed by a kick-butt fivesome that includes wallpaper-peeling saxophonist A.C. Reed.

what to buy next: Three of the same Icebreakers present on Frozen Alive!—Reed, drummer Casey Jones, bassist J.B. Gayten—were on board when Collins cut the torrid Tokyo outing Live in Japan ♪♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1984, prod. Bruce Iglauer). "Tired Man" is a standout, and there's a 9-minute version of "Stormy Monday" that's so forceful you forget how shop-worn the song is.

the rest:

Truckin' with Albert Collins ♪♪♪½ (Blue Thumb, 1969/MCA, 1991)
Ice Pickin' ♪♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1978)
Don't Lose Your Cool ♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1983)
Cold Snap ♪♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1986)
(With Robert Cray and Johnny Copeland) Showdown ♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1986)
Molten Ice ♪♪♪ (Red Lightnin', 1992)
Collins Mix (The Best of Albert Collins) ♪♪♪½ (Point Blank, 1993)
Albert Collins & Barrelhouse Live ♪♪♪½ (Munich, 1995) Live '92–93 ♪♪♪♪½ (Pointblank, 1996)

influences:

Willow Brown, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, T-Bone Walker

Mark May, Anson Funderburgh

Tim Schuller

Judy Collins

Born May 1, 1939, in Seattle, WA.

Judy Collins seemed to be the great earth mother of folk—yet her roots were in classical music. Collins grew up in Denver and studied piano with the pianist and conductor Antonia Brico. At age 13, Collins gave her debut piano performance with the Denver Businessmen's Symphony. However, at age 16, she gave up classical for folk music. She married Peter Taylor in 1957, and they had a son, Clark. (They divorced in 1962, and Clark Taylor died in 1992.) Soon afterward, she began performing professionally in Boulder. By 1960 the family had moved to Chicago, where she broke into the big time. Later, after she moved to New York and became a part of the Greenwich Village scene, she was signed by Elektra, when it was still the house that Jac Holzman built. Collins always had a good ear for tunes, picking traditional folk songs that she could make her own. By her third album, she was more politically involved and recording protest tunes by the likes of Bob Dylan and Tom Paxton. She quickly became even more stylistically adventurous, opening up her repertoire with theater music and art songs. She championed such then-unknown songwriters as Leonard Cohen and Joni Mitchell. She made charming albums with classically oriented arrangements, and eventually tried electric back-ups as well. In 1972, she took a year off her musical career to produce and co-direct a documentary on Brico called Antonia: A Portrait of a Woman, which was nominated for an Academy Award in 1975. Collins's voice has suffered a bit as the years have gone by, but she continues to exhibit a good ear for songs.

judy collins

what to buy: Forever . . . The Judy Collins Anthology ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1997, prod. Judy Collins, others), a two-CD set, sums up Collins's move from folk chanteuse to art-song diva. It's not in chronological order, so there are stylistic shifts from piece to piece, but the song sequences make sense. Although it includes many of Collins's hits and signature tunes, it's not a greatest-hits anthology—"Amazing Grace" and "Hard Times for Lovers" are among the conspicuously absent titles. Wildflowers ♪♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1967, prod. Mark Abramson) boasts the most interesting song sequence of any Collins album—including "Both Sides Now," "Michael from Mountains," and "La Chanson des Vieux Amants"—bolstered by Joshua Rifkin's rich, baroque-influenced arrangements, which set off Collins's soprano well. In My Life ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1966, prod. Jac Holzman, Mark Abramson) is the album on which Collins first experimented with bigger arrangements and theater music ("Marat/Sade"). The shift from acoustic folk proved perfectly suited to her voice.

what to buy next: With such tasty numbers as Richard Fariña's "Pack Up Your Sorrows," Eric Andersen's "Thirsty Boots," and Gordon Lightfoot's "Early Morning Rain" (as well as a slew of Dylan), Fifth Album ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1965, prod. Jac Holzman, Mark Abramson) stands among Collins's best. Who Knows Where the Time Goes ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1968, prod. David Anderle) is another great collection that includes Cohen's "Bird on the Wire" and Ian Tyson's "Someday Soon." Whales & Nightingales ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1970, prod. Mark Abramson) is a bit startling in its diversity, containing her hit version of "Amazing Grace" and "Farewell to Tarwathie," a Scottish whaling song that is "backed up" by humpback whale "singing."

what to avoid: On Hard Times for Lovers ♪ (Elektra, 1979, prod. Gary Klein), the arrangement for the title song just follows the late '70s crowd, the album reeks of the smug "El Lay" atmosphere, Collins isn't singing well, and the collection seems phoned in.

the rest:
Recollections ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1969)
Living ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1971)
Colors of the Day: The Best of Judy Collins ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1972)
True Stories and Other Dreams ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1973)
Judith ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1975)
Times of Our Lives ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1982)
Home Again ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1984)
So Early in the Spring: The First 15 Years ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1987)
Sanity and Grace ♪♪♪ (Delta, 1989)
Fires of Eden ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1990)
Wind beneath My Wings ♪♪½ (Laserlight, 1992)
Judy Sings Dylan . . . Just Like a Woman ♪♪♪½ (Geffen, 1994)
Shameless ♪♪♪ (Mesa/Bluemoon, 1994)
Come Rejoice! Judy Collins Christmas ♪♪♪ (Mesa/Bluemoon, 1994)
Live at Newport ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1995)
Christmas at Biltmore Estate ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1997)

worth searching for: Maid of Constant Sorrow ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1961, prod. Jac Holzman), Golden Apples of the Sun ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1962, prod. Jac Holzman), and Judy Collins #3 ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1963, prod. Jac Holzman, Mark Abramson) are out of print and available only on vinyl. We can hear Collins at her bare essence in the simplest of settings, a woman and her guitar, on her first two albums. On the third album, she uses arrangements by Jim McGuinn (he who became Roger and the master of the Byrds) and begins her experimentation with more contemporary material.

influences:
◀◀ Mimi and Richard Fariña, Joan Baez
▶▶ Joni Mitchell

Salvatore Caputo

Judy Collins (© Jack Vartoogian)

Lui Collins

Born 1950, in Barre, VT.

The changing seasons of New England are musically captured by Vermont-born and Connecticut-based songstress Lui Collins. Collins's unique poetic vision, emotional soprano vocals, and tradition-rooted arrangements enable her to make a very personal musical statement. Although she initially sang covers of Joni Mitchell and Joan Baez songs, Collins has continued to expand her sources. Her albums and performances have included memorable versions of songs by Jack Hardy, Greg Brown, Bob Franke, the Incredible String Band, and the late Stan Rogers. Collins, whose own compositions include "Distance," "I'll Know the Time," "Born and Bred," "January Thaw," and "Awaiting the Snow," began performing in Connecticut, where she attended the state's university. In the mid-1970s she appeared frequently on the folk coffeehouse circuit in a duo with Horace Williams Jr. Collins has found her most natural format as a soloist. Her 1978 debut album, Made in New England, established her as a major voice in contemporary folk music. Her second album, Baptism of Fire, was recorded shortly after marrying stone mason and then-cabinet maker, Rod Zandler, moving to Goshen, Connecticut, and giving birth to the first of three children. There's a Light, Collins's third effort, was produced by ex–Silly Wizard fiddler Johnny Cunningham and included a thrilling ballad, "Ballad of the White Seal Maid," which she wrote with fantasy/children's book author Jane Yolen. Collins was at the height of her popularity in 1986 when she announced her retirement from music to help raise her children, including her youngest son, Tim, who was born with a club foot. During her eight-year hiatus, she studied various forms of bodywork and healing techniques at the Centre of Light, a spiritual retreat in western Massachusetts. By 1993, however, she had written enough new songs to record a new album. The result, Moondancer, subtitled "The Journey of the Child Within," was a masterpiece of self-exploration and discovery. Collins's first album of children's songs, North of Mars, was sparked by her involvement with the Grumbling Gryphons Children's Theater Arts Camp, for whom she had composed two songs—"Peace on Earth" and "Sedna," based on an Inuit myth. The album received a Parent's Choice honor award and several tunes were featured on the Fall 1995 issue of Shoofly, a children's cassette magazine. With her 1997 album, Stone by Stone, Collins again successfully aimed her songs at adults.

what to buy: Collins's return after an eight-year retreat from music, Moondancer ♪♪♪♪♪ (Molly Gamblin, 1993, prod. Darleen Wilson) remains her most effective outing. Reflecting on her long absence, Collins takes the listener on a deeply psychological journey through memories of child abuse ("God Bless the Children"), anger ("Invocation"), and spirituality ("Holy Child" and "Move to the Now"). The lightest moments on the album come during "Mermaid's Lullaby," Collins's second collaboration with Yolen.

what to buy next: Stone by Stone ♪♪♪½ (Molly Gamblin, 1997, prod. Doug Kupper) continues Collins's multi-ethnic musical exploration. Accompanying herself on acoustic guitar and joined by Jeff Pevar (electric guitar, mandolin, dobro, lap steel), Frank Gravis (fretless bass, 6-string and electric bass), Rob Gottfreid (drums), and guest musicians including David Darling (cello), and Billy Novick (pennywhistle, soprano sax), Collins sets her earth-rooted soprano to a warm, supportive, setting. In addition to a chilling interpretation of Fred Small's ballad, "Guinevere and the Fire," the album includes eleven original compositions and a song based on a Swahili greeting ("Maisha Ni Safi") as well as a song inspired by the plight of the Native Americans.

the rest:
Made in New England ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1978/Green Linnet, 1985)
Baptism of Fire ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1981/Green Linnet, 1985)
There's a Light ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1985)
North of Mars ♪♪♪ (Molly Gamblin, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Joni Mitchell, Judy Collins, Malvina Reynolds
▶▶ Patty Larkin, Lorraine Lee Hammond, Sally Rogers, Claudia Schmidt, Bob Franke

Craig Harris

Mitzie Collins

Born August 29, 1941, in Dallas, TX.

This New York recording artist is known for her presentations of traditional songs and tunes on the hammered dulcimer, mountain dulcimer, and banjo. Involved in music since she was five years old, Collins grew up in Dallas, Texas, then attended one year at Southern Methodist University followed by Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, where she completed her degree with a major in piano. She also learned to play the organ and took a job as a church organist, which is where she eventually wandered from her classical training into folk music, as the church was taking part in a new trend of offering a "folk mass." Collins saw an advertisement for a mountain dulcimer and promptly ordered one from Jean Ritchie. In 1969 Collins went to the Fox Hollow Folk Festival to see Jean Ritchie perform, and it was there she was introduced to the hammered dulcimer in a performance by Bill Spence and Howie Mitchell.

Since then she has become a nationally recognized performer on the dulcimer, traveling to many festivals. She is also known for her extensive programs for children, which resulted in a 1985 United Way Award for Direct Service in Arts and Culture. Collins's early playing focused on fiddle tunes, but over the years has included many favorite hymns and most recently, a recording of Scottish tunes. In 1976 Collins and her husband, Tom Bohrer, founded Sampler Records Ltd., an independent record label specializing in acoustic folk music. As excellent entrepreneurs who are willing to take chances, the founders of Sampler were among the first label owners to offer folk music on compact disc, in 1985. These days, Sampler Records offers an impressive catalog of recordings representative of a variety of cultures, including the British Isles, Shaker music, and traditional music indigenous to New York state. Their catalog can be orderd by calling 1-800-537-2755, or by writing to P. O. Box 19270, Rochester, NY 14619.

what to buy: Scotland the Brave ♪♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1997, prod. Thomas M. Bohrer) is Collins's newest solo hammered dulcimer recording and is a "musical celebration of Scottish history and the indomitable Scottish spirit." Selections include a beautiful rendition of "Amazing Graze" and a spirited medley of jigs, "A Hundred Pipers/My Wife's a Wanton Wee Thing/Cock o' the North." The clarity of this hammered dulcimer recording is exceptional, with Collins occasionally overlaying a second or third hammered dulcimer part. This CD (as well as most Sampler recordings) has comprehensive liner notes about each tune.

what to buy next: Drawing on Collins's love for hymns, Be Thou My Vision ♪♪♪½ (Sampler Records, 1991, prod. Sampler Records) is a collection of 23 favorites, played instrumentally with fellow hammered dulcimer recording artist, Esther Kreek, who is from Kansas City, Missouri. In addition to the hammered dulcimer, Collins adds piano and pump organ. Talented musicians Kinlock Nelson (guitar) and Glennda Dove (flute) add accompaniment to a variety of selections, including "O for a Thousand Tongues to Sing" and a closing medley of "Now the Day Is Over," "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and "God Be with You Till We Meet Again," all arranged tastefully and played with reverence. Sackett's Harbor ♪♪♪½ (Sampler Records, 1988, prod. Jim Kimball, Mitzie Collins) is the result of the work of music historian Jim Kimball, who plays fiddle, pump organ, Jew's harp, and dulcimer on this recording along with Mitzie Collins (dulcimer), Betsy Gamble (fiddle), Glenn McClure (dulcimer), Karen Park (cello), and Eric Rounds (fiddle). Kimball has spent years interviewing traditional performers and studying early tune books, local manuscripts, dance cards, and diaries, and his scholarship gives this recording an authenticity of sound that cannot be found elsewhere. There is a companion tune book available, complete with historic information on each tune.

editor's choice
13 english folk-rock albums

Fairport Convention, Liege and Lief (A&M)
Richard & Linda Thompson, I Want to See the Bright Lights Tonight (Hannibal/Carthage)
Albion Band, Rise Up Like the Sun (Hannibal)
Various Artists, Morris On (Hannibal)
Linda Thompson, Dreams Fly Away (Rykodisc)
Sandy Denny, The Best of Sandy Denny (Hannibal)
Fairport Convention, Fairport Chronicles (A&M)
The Strawbs, Hero and Heroine (A&M)
Steeleye Span, Commoners Crown (Chrysalis)
Paul Brady, Hard Station (21 Records)
Richard & Linda Thompson, Shoot Out the Lights (Hannibal)
Steeleye Span, Please to See the King (Shanachie) Home Service, Alright Jack (Fledg'ling)

the rest:
Sounds Like Fun ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1982) (cassette only) Ornaments ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1985)
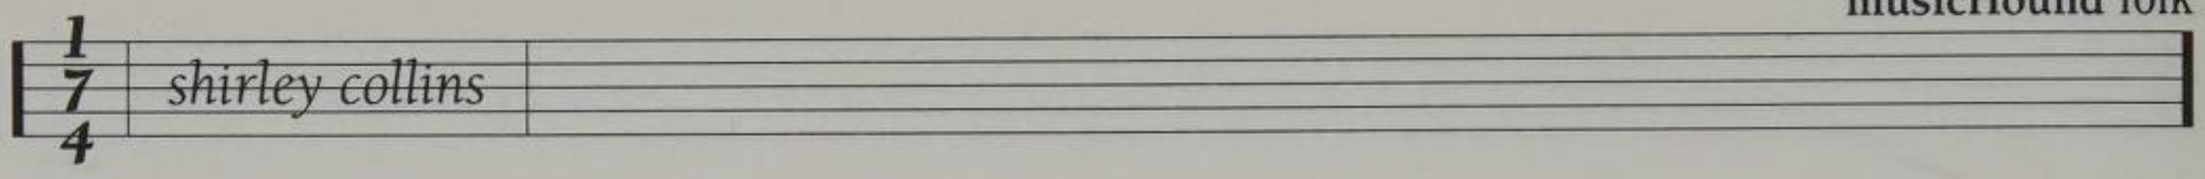
Nowell ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1986)
St. Patrick's Day in the Morning ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1989)
Reach to the Sky ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1989) (cassette only)
Rejoice ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1990)
Mark Hamilton, Songs and Tunes from Wolf Run ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1992)
Love Is Little ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1992)
Joy of Angels ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1995)
White Dulcimer Christmas ♪♪♪ (Sampler Records, 1996)



influences:

Jean Ritchie, Bill Spence, Paul Van Arsdale, Roxanne Ziegler

Kendra Ward, Rick Thum, Maggie Sansone

Heidi Cerrigione

Shirley Collins /Shirley and Dolly Collins /Etchingham Steam Band

Shirley Collins born July 5, 1935, in Hastings, Sussex, England. Dorothy (Dolly) Collins born March 6, 1933, in Hastings, Sussex, England; died September 22, 1995, in Balcombe, West Sussex, England. Etchingham Steam Band formed c. 1974, in Etchingham, Sussex, England; disbanded c. 1975.

Etchingham Steam Band: Shirley Collins, vocals, hobby horse; Vic Gammon, vocals, concertina, melodeon, banjo; Ian Holder, accordion; Ashley Hutchings, acoustic bass guitar, vocals, tambourine; Terry Potter, mouth organ.

Shirley Collins is one of Britain's greatest folk singers. Her lilting, wavering soprano epitomizes the spirit of British folk music: unpolished but full of magic and grace. Collins first gained attention as a singer when she worked with Alan Lomax on his collection of southern American ballads (many of which have antecedents in Great Britain and Ireland). Her first album, False True Lovers (now out of print), was released in 1959. Sister Dolly joined her as accompanist and arranger for The Sweet Primeroses, released in 1967. Her work on Harvest, a label known for progressive rock, indicated the growing fusion of traditional and contemporary elements in British music. Collins contributed directly to this fusion by recording with (and marrying) Ashley Hutchings. After their divorce, she retired from music, only to reappear during the late 1980s. Collins both reinforced and pushed the bounds of tradition throughout her career: singing parodies with Les Barker's Mrs. Ackroyd Band, introducing early instruments in work with David Munrow and Phil Pickett, and contributing to the major folk fusion album with Davey Graham, Folk Roots, New Routes.

what to buy: Shirley Collins and the Albion Band's No Roses ♪♪♪♪♪ (BBC, 1971/Mooncrest, 1991) is unquestionably a folk-rock album, thanks largely to the presence of such Fairporters and Steeleyes as Richard Thompson, Simon Nicol, Maddy Prior, and Dave Mattacks. In fact, 25 of Britain's best musicians of the time worked on the album, making it an essential for any fan of the genre. The most chilling selection is "Murder of Maria Marten," based on the same nineteenth-century murder case that inspired Tom Waits's "Murder in the Red Barn." For an unplugged experience, try the Etchingham Steam Band ♪♪♪♪♪ (Fledg'ling, 1995). In the liner notes to the Etchingham Steam Band's only album, Collins recounts how she simulated the sound of morris dancers onstage by sewing bells to her children's hobby horses and shaking them (losing many bells per performance). The band was formed during the power cuts of the mid-1970s as a low-tech performing outfit; this album brings together recordings from various concerts and is a lighthearted ramble through Britain's thicket of dance music, ballads, and wassails.

what to buy next: Phil Pickett, sending liner-note readers to the unabridged dictionary, plays recorders, shawns, curtal, cornett, and gittern on Shirley and Dolly Collins's For As Many As Will ♪♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1978/Hokey Pokey, 1993, prod. Tony Engle), but one of the best tracks is a moving cover of Richard Thompson's "Never Again" with Shirley on vocals and Dolly on piano. This was the last of the Collins sisters' three albums together, and it's a fitting tribute to Dolly's sensitive keyboard work and arrangements.

the rest:

(With Dolly Collins) Love, Death and the Lady ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1974)
The Sweet Primeroses ♪♪♪♪

worth searching for: Collins, then recording as Shirley Hutchings, is an important part of the group effort Morris On ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1972/Hannibal, prod. John Wood). She sings on two tracks: "The Willow Tree" and "Staines Morris," adding class and delicacy to an otherwise rollicking, testosterone-fueled collection.

influences:

Jean Ritchie, Young Tradition

Kate Rusby, Eliza Carthy

see also: Ashley Hutchings, Young Tradition

Pamela Murray Winters

Christine Collister

Born December 28, 1961, in Douglas, Isle of Man, United Kingdom.

Best known for her duo work with Clive Gregson, Christine Collister is one of England's best contemporary vocalists. While singing in bars during the early 1980s, she was discovered by Gregson; the two subsequently joined Richard Thompson's band for several powerful tours of the United States and Europe. Gregson and Collister released five albums and were consistently popular live performers until their professional relationship ended in 1992. Besides her work with Gregson, Collister has sung with other duos and trios, including the Jailbirds with Barb Jungr and Heather Joyce. She has sung on film and television soundtracks (including BBC's Life and Loves of a She Devil and Hard Cash) and provided lead and backup vocals on albums by Lee Collinson, Loudon Wainwright III, and Bert Jansch.

what to buy: Blue Aconite ♪♪♪♪ (Fledg'ling, 1996, prod. Christine Collister) is a superb selection of songs, excellently arranged, that perfectly suit Collister's big, smoked-glass voice. Collister co-wrote two of the tracks, suggesting more original songs to come. Live ♪♪♪½ (Fledg'ling/Green Linnet, 1994) is less consistent; Collister seems to be testing her mettle as a soloist. Her tendency to go over the top (but if you had that voice, wouldn't you do the same?) crushes Rickie Lee Jones's "Last Chance Texaco." Her version of "Love Me Like a Man" is spot-on, and "The Bird That I Held in My Hand" and "Warm Love Gone Cold" redeem the rest of the album.

the rest:
Horizon ♪♪♪♪ (Fledg'ling, 1997)

worth searching for: The World Is a Wonderful Place: The Songs of Richard Thompson ♪♪♪♪½ (Hokey Pokey/Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Mr. Hokey, Mr. Pokey) includes Collister's marvelous version of Thompson's "How Will I Ever Be Simple Again."

influences:
◀◀ Sandy Denny, Maura O'Connell
▶▶ Sally Barker

see also: Clive Gregson

Pamela Murray Winters

Shawn Colvin

Born Shanna Colvin, January 10, 1958, in Vermillion, SD.

Shawn Colvin picked up her first guitar when she was 10, and after high school she chose to pursue music full-time. During the '70s she moved to Texas to join a swing band, the Dixie Diesels, then spent a few years in San Francisco before settling in New York. There she played in the Buddy Miller Band before deciding to start working on her own. Influenced by the likes of Joni Mitchell, and later, Suzanne Vega—a patron of sorts who used Colvin for backup vocals on the hit "Luka" and as an opening act on tour—Colvin's poetic lyrics, flawless finger-picking, and unusual guitar tunings gave her songs a distinctive character; and her voice, breathy and gentle, is capable of swelling with strength and emotion when necessary. An independently released live album in 1988 attracted attention from the record industry, as did persistent gigging on the East Coast club circuit. Though she tends to take her time between albums, Colvin remains a writer and performer of rare and special abilities.

what to buy: Colvin's debut, Steady On ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia 1989, prod. Shawn Colvin, John Leventhal, Steve Addabbo), offers an excellent balance of Colvin's crystal clear vocals, poetic lyrics, and folk influences, along with the accompaniment of a full band and the contributions of guests David Sanborn, Bruce Hornsby, and Vega. Although nearly every song is a gem, the album closes on a yawn with the string-laden "The Dead of Night"—which was, unfortunately, a sign of things to come.

what to avoid: Cover Girl ♪ (Columbia 1994, prod. Shawn Colvin, Steuart Smith, David Kahne) seemed promising on paper, with Colvin covering songs by others, including personal favorites from Bob Dylan, the Police, Talking Heads, and Tom Waits. But she doesn't deliver. The same over-production that burdened "The Dead of Night" hampers Colvin's renditions on this album. Take "Every Little Thing (He) Does Is Magic," in which lush strings divert the ears from her beautiful guitar picking. In concert she has done these songs with just her acoustic guitar, and that's been fine. Sometimes more isn't better.

the rest:
Fat City ♪♪ (Columbia, 1992)
A Few Small Repairs ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1996)

worth searching for: Live '88 ♪♪♪♪ (Plump Records, 1988/1995, prod. Carol Young) is Colvin's live independent album, which has been reissued on CD. Many of the songs wound up on Steady On, and while we miss some of the arrangements from that album, Colvin still carries the songs with the purity of her guitar and vocals.

influences:
◀◀ Tom Waits, Joni Mitchell, Suzanne Vega
▶▶ Jewel, Amanda Marshall, Natalie Merchant

Joshua Zarov

Commander Cody & His Lost Planet Airmen

Formed 1967, in Ann Arbor, MI.

Commander Cody (George Frayne), piano, vocals; John Tichy, guitar; West Virginia Creeper, steel guitar (1967–70); Billy C. Farlow, harmonica, vocals (1968–76); Bill Kirchen, guitar (1968–76); Bruce Barlow, bass (1968–76); Lance Dickerson, drums (1968–76); Andy Stein, fiddles, saxophone (1968–76); Bobby Black, steel guitar (1970–76); others.

17 commander cody & his lost planet airmen

A band before its time, Commander Cody & His Lost Planet Airmen can be seen as the precursor to the Austin music scene of the 1980s. In fact, Austin kingpins first moved to San Francisco under the influence of the Cody outfit and worked clubs there as a kind of satellite of the pioneering rockabilly/Western swing revivalists. The band's first four classic albums laid the groundwork for a whole wing of retro-revisionists in country-rock, as far away stylistically as possible from the slick Los Angeles hybrid practiced by the Byrds, Poco, and others. Cody's crew specialized in a loose-jointed, rollicking brand of barroom boogie that sounded like it had been steeped in beer fumes in front of rowdy crowds as ready to fight as dance. Despite scoring a Top 10 hit ("Hot Rod Lincoln") off its debut album, Cody's band was never accorded appropriate acclaim, and the original players splintered in disarray in 1976—though the Commander continues to record and tour with an always changing squadron of Airmen.

what to buy: The first three albums have been cannibalized by an inconsistent collection, Too Much Fun: The Best of Commander Cody & His Lost Planet Airmen ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1990, prod. various).

what to buy next: The fourth album, a jaunty concert recording originally titled Live from Deep in the Heart of Texas has been reissued as Sleazy Roadside Stories ♪♪♪ (Relix, 1995, prod. S. Jarvis), hard evidence of the original lineup's swinging brand of country and rock 'n' roll.

what to avoid: Without the balance of the Lost Planet Airmen personalities, Cody's solo albums have suffered from contrivance and the unmitigated dominance of his personality, none more so than Let's Rock ♪♪ (Blind Pig, 1987), despite the presence of Airmen Barlow and Kirchen.

the rest:
We Got a Live One Here ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1976)
Lost in Space ♪♪ (Relix, 1995)
Best of Commander Cody ♪♪½ (Relix, 1995)

worth searching for: The first two long-deleted albums, Lost in the Ozone ♪♪♪½ (Paramount, 1971) and Hot Licks, Cold Steel and Trucker's Favorites (Paramount, 1972), qualify as certified classics in the field. During that period, the band cut a spectacular Christmas song, "Daddy's Drinking Up All Our Christmas," which has been rescued from obscurity by Hillbilly Holiday ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1988, prod. various).

solo outings:
Commander Cody:
Ace's High ♪♪♪½ (Relix 1990)

Bill Kirchen:
Tombstone Every Mile ♪♪♪ (Black Top, 1994)
Have Love, Will Travel ♪♪♪ (Black Top, 1996)
Hot Rod Lincoln ♪♪♪ (Black Top, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Bob Wills, Moon Mullican, Dave Dudley ▶▶ Asleep at the Wheel, Nick Lowe

Joel Selvin

Shawn Colvin (© Ken Settle)

Connemara

See: Grace Griffith

Rita Connolly

Born in Dublin, Ireland.

Perhaps best described as a dynamic singer avoiding a niche, Rita Connolly has failed to gain the popular acclaim she deserves due to her wide-ranging interests in music and her refusal to settle down in one specific genre. The Irish singer seemed to many to appear out of nowhere in 1985, when she earned critical acclaim for her work with husband Shaun Davey in Granuaile, a showcase of talent tailored around the story of Grace O'Malley, seventeenth-century pirate queen. In actuality, however, she had already been working in low-profile positions, from her start with Midnight Well (unfortunately, after they recorded their only album), to her work with Davey on his musical tour of the Celtic lands, The Pilgrim, to her voice-for-hire work in commercials. Rita's true talent lies mostly in her amazing voice and her ability to be highly expressive without overwrought emotional overtones to her vocals. Her repertoire ranges from pop to jazz to traditional folk, with all manner of things in between. This variety may both make and break her career, since no one knows how to market her work. Despite this, combining her clear, lilting voice with her natural feel for folk music, Rita Connolly has been winning the hearts of listeners across the world.

what's available: Rita Connolly ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1992, prod. Shaun Davey, Rita Connolly) starts off strong with "Venezuela," a wonderful rendition of a sea chantey. A couple of traditional work songs highlight the album, with bold harmonies: "Factory Girl" and "Same Old Man." The traditional material on the album is only a small portion of the offering, however, with the others bordering a bit on '70s pop. The exceptions are "Alice in Jericho," a Middle-Eastern style ballad, and a beautiful closing lullaby called "Close Your Eyes." There are also a couple of nice jazz numbers. Valparaiso ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1995, prod. Shaun Davey) is not as strong in musical content as the first, following more of the rock/pop style, with fewer jazz and folk selections. The album does contain Rita's beautifully reworked "The Quiet Land of Erin." Especially nice on this album is an upbeat remake of Irving Berlin's "Shakin' the Blues Away," and the haunting title song, "Valparaiso," an original by Connolly. Not much else stands out on this recording, but these three songs alone make the album worth the price.

worth searching for: Shaun Davey's Granuaile ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1985) showcases Rita's vocal talents, along with the excellent piping of Liam O'Flynn.

influences:

⏪ Joni Mitchell, Shaun Davey

⏩ The Fallen Angels, Loreena McKennitt

Jo Hughey Morrison

Stompin' Tom Connors

Born Charles Thomas Connors, February 9, 1936, in Saint John, New Brunswick, Canada.

The man has written more than 300 songs, his 40 albums have sold more than 3 million copies, and his autobiography recently soared high up the best-seller lists. He has been the subject of at least one master's thesis, been awarded an honorary Doctorate of Laws degree, received a citation from Queen Elizabeth as well as the prestigious Order of Canada . . . he even got married live on national television. But chances are you have never heard of, much less heard, Stompin' Tom Connors. For the man has never performed outside of Canada and never had a single record released outside of Canada in his 30-some-odd-year career. You see, after winning an unprecedented six consecutive "Canadian Grammys" as Male Country Singer of the Year, Stompin' Tom defiantly returned all these Juno Awards in 1978 as a protest against "border jumpers": Canadian artists who no longer live and rarely perform in their home and native land. Soon afterwards, at the peak of his initial stardom, he enacted—by himself—a one-year live performance boycott to further draw attention to Canada's mistreatment of its native artists. Interestingly, this fervent, stubborn nationalism didn't help Connors's own career at home, as he inexplicably has yet to place a solitary song on a Canadian country music chart ("They told me in 1964 I didn't fit the format. They told me that in 1974. In 1984, they told me that again," Tom says. "I guess the format hasn't changed that much.") That Stompin' Tom has not only survived but actually thrived under such adverse conditions (by the way, that one-year boycott? It lasted 10) is a testament not only to the man's abundance of talent, but his self-described "to-it-and-at-it-iveness." Born to an unwed teenager, raised in an orphanage, he began writing songs at 11 and spent his teen years on the run—and on the high seas (illegally working as an underage merchant seaman). Once back on dry land, he indulged his Woody Guthrie fantasies and hitchhiked the length and breadth of Canada, guitar in hand, and in 1964 found himself at the Maple Leaf Hotel in Timmins, Ontario . . . a nickel short of a 40-cent beer. Agreeing to sing for his supper, he ended up on stage at the Maple Leaf for the next 14 months straight (where a bartender nicknamed him "Stompin' Tom" after his penchant for keeping time pounding his boot on the stage floor). He cut his first single the following year, signed to the tiny Dominion label in 1969, and formed his own label, Boot, two years after that. Between '68 and '73 he released six albums, which are today rightly considered the Holy Grail of Canadian Country. Rich in character studies as vivid as those of Hank Williams, but etched as always with Connors's fierce sense of Canadiana, the classic tone poems that fill these records ("Bud the Spud," "Big Joe Mufferaw," "Sudbury Saturday Night," and "The Hockey Song," to name only four) stand today as nothing less than national totems, part of the Canadian cultural lexicon, yet still perversely receive little if any radio airplay. Finally ending his decade-long exile in 1989 (singing a tribute to his most high-profile prodigy, "Lady k.d. lang"), Connors continues to tour and record proud and unbowed, continues to remain stubbornly loyal to his beliefs and ideals, and still hasn't had an album released outside of Canada. This should not for one second deter you from seeking out any of his two dozen releases newly available on CD from Capitol/EMI Canada, and all produced by—who else?—Stompin' Tom Himself.

what to buy: The 20-song "hits" compilation A Proud Canadian ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1990, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors) is the place to start, though with a legacy—and catalog—as vast as Tom's, this will only serve to scratch the surface and, hopefully, whet your appetite.

what to buy next: On Tragedy Trail ♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1968, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), Bud the Spud ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1969, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), Stompin' Tom Connors Meets Big Joe Mufferaw ♪♪♪½ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1970, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), My Stompin' Grounds ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1971, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), Stompin' Tom and the Hockey Song ♪♪♪½ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1972, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), and To It and At It ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1973, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors) is an astounding six-LP cycle-in-song which remains an unparalleled achievement in Canadian music. His "comeback" album, Fiddle and Song ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1989, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors) shows an artist refreshed, vibrant, yet still as joyously cantankerous as ever. And More of the Stompin' Tom Phenomenon ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1991, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), Believe in Your Country ♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1992, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), Dr. Stompin' Tom . . . Eh? ♪♪♪½ (Capitol/EMI Canada, 1993, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors), and Long Gone to the Yukon ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol/ EMI Canada, 1995, prod. Stompin' Tom Connors) (the latter co-written by an old friend from the Maple Leaf Hotel by the way) demonstrate conclusively that the phenomenon known as Stompin' Tom thankfully shows no sign of abating any time soon.

the rest:
Northland's Zone ♪♪♪ (1967)
Merry Christmas Everybody ♪♪½ (1970)
Live at the Horseshoe ♪♪♪♪ (1971)
Stompin' Tom and the Moon-Man Newfie ♪♪♪½ (1973)
Stompin' Tom Meets Muk Tuk Annie ♪♪♪ (1974)
The North Atlantic Squadron and Other Favourites ♪♪♪ (1975)
The Unpopular Stompin' Tom ♪♪♪½ (1976)
At the Gumboot Cloggeroo ♪♪♪ (1977)
Once Upon a Stompin' Tom ♪♪♪♪½ (1991)
Kic Along with Stompin' Tom* ♪♪♪♪ (1993)
The Confederation Bridge ♪♪♪♪½ (1997)

influences:
⏪ Wilf Carter, Hank Snow, Sir John A. MacDonald
⏩ Steve Earle, k.d. lang, Tylin Whaler

Gary Pig Gold

Ry Cooder

Born Ryland Peter Cooder, March 15, 1947, in Los Angeles, CA.

Like so many of his guitar-playing contemporaries—Jimmy Page, Jeff Beck, and Eric Clapton among them—Cooder started his career playing blues and folk songs in the early 1960s. Instead of becoming a rock 'n' roll superstar, though, he slowly developed his skills and built his reputation as a thorough musicologist and reputable session musician. He was in a few bands early in his career, including one with soul singer Jackie DeShannon, another—the short-lived-but-influential Rising Sons—with fellow blues fanatic Taj Mahal, and one with the musically complex lunatic Captain Beefheart (around 1967). Cooder's many solo albums, particularly 1976's Chicken Skin Music and 1974's Paradise and Lunch, have a raw, refreshing sense of humor, and they're almost always rooted in 1950s rockabilly and harder-than-they-sound guitar licks. Cooder has never been willing to stick to one style for very long, even his beloved blues and rockabilly, and he has stretched out considerably on the movie soundtracks he has written. Master of slide guitar, mandolin, banjo, and plenty of other more exotic instruments, Cooder's interests lurched from American rockabilly to Tex-Mex to Hawaiian slack-key guitar music, and he expanded his breadth with each new style. Beginning with the Rolling Stones's landmark Let It Bleed album—Cooder claims to have come up with the "Honky Tonk Women" riff—he became a prolific sideman, working on albums by Little Feat, Randy Newman, John Hiatt, Arlo Guthrie, and Van Dyke Parks. He delved into soundtrack albums, most notably Paris, Texas, The Long Riders, and Trespass (in which he plays behind Ice Cube and Ice-T in what could be the first example of rap-blues fusion). He served dutifully in Little Village, a quick-lived supergroup featuring fellow session musician extraordinaire Jim Keltner, bassist Nick Lowe, and Hiatt, and he collaborated with West African guitarist Ali Farka Toure on 1993's superb A Meeting by the River. The Rising Sons never led to superstardom like the Yardbirds and Led Zeppelin did for Jimmy Page and the Rolling Stones did for Keith Richards, but Cooder nevertheless has managed to build a long career with great respect from his peers.

what to buy: Paradise and Lunch ♪♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1974, prod. Lenny Waronker, Russ Titelman) includes the heart warming "Mexican Divorce" and a fun, definitive version of "Ditty Wa Ditty." Chicken Skin Music ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1976, prod. Ry Cooder) predated Paul Simon's Graceland by incorporating Tex-Mex accordion hero Flaco Jimenez (who helps with a killer "Stand by Me") and Hawaiian slack-key guitarist Gabby Pahinui into Cooder's more American-sounding rock 'n' roll. Both Into the Purple Valley ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1972, prod. Lenny Waronker, Jim Dickinson), with its Johnny Cash, Woody Guthrie, and Jackie Wilson songs, and Bop Till You Drop ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1979, prod. Ry Cooder), with "Down in Hollywood," showcase Cooder's fun-loving history-of-rock side. Finally, his collaborations with world-music heavies V.M. Bhatt on A Meet- ing by the River ♪♪♪♪ (Water Lily Acoustics, 1993, prod. Kavichandran Alexander) and with Ali Farka Toure on Talking Timbuktu ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1994), round out any full Cooder collection.

what to buy next: The two-disc Music by Ry Cooder ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1995, prod. Ry Cooder, Joachim Cooder) is such a thorough collection of Cooder's movie music it saves you the trouble of combing through his uneven soundtrack albums. Individually, his better soundtracks are Paris, Texas ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1984, prod. Ry Cooder), Johnny Handsome ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1989, prod. Ry Cooder), The Long Riders ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1980, prod. Ry Cooder), The Border ♪♪♪½ (Backstreet, 1981), with interesting collaborations with Hiatt, Freddie Fender, and the long-lost Sam Samudio, and the much-maligned Crossroads ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1986, prod. Ry Cooder), a terrible movie which features great Cooder pure-blues slide work with fellow string enthusiast David Lindley.

what to avoid: Cooder's experiments and ambitions occasionally backfire, especially on the tedious Jazz ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1978, prod. Ry Cooder, Joseph Byrd), which has interesting ideas, like a cover of the 1880 folk song "The Dream," but nothing else to recommend it. He sounds plain bored on Get Rhythm ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1987, prod. Ry Cooder), despite the presence of old friend Jimenez and the always-unusual Van Dyke Parks. Also not up to snuff is his solo debut, Ry Cooder ♪ (Reprise, 1970, prod. Van Dyke Parks, Ry Cooder).

the rest:
Boomer's Story ♪♪½ (Reprise, 1972)
Show Time ♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1977)
Borderline ♪½ (Warner Bros., 1980)
The Slide Area ♪½ (Warner Bros., 1982)
Alamo Bay ♪♪ (Slash, 1985)
Blue City ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1986)
Geronimo: An American Legend ♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1993)
Trespass ♪♪½ (Sire, 1994)
Buena Vista Social Club ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1997)

worth searching for: The Little Village debut, Little Village ♪♪½ (Reprise, 1992, prod. Little Village), contained a few funny, rocking moments, including the nice "Solar Sex Panel" and the John Hiatt vehicle, "She Runs Hot," but it didn't come close to matching the Hiatt-Cooder-Nick Lowe-Jim Keltner inspiration on Hiatt's Bring the Family album. And the long-collected rarity, Rising Sons ♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1992, prod. Terry Melcher), puts Cooder's legendary band with Taj Mahal in a nice historical light, with some great blues-rock cuts like "Statesboro Blues"; but there's also a lot of unfocused messy stuff.

influences:
- Elmore James, Charlie Christian, Mississippi Fred McDowell, Tampa Red, the Rolling Stones, Jimi Hendrix, Buddy Guy, Taj Mahal
- Sonny Landreth, Bonnie Raitt, Rory Block, Daniel Lanois, Robbie Robertson

Steve Knopper

Spade Cooley

Born Donnell Clyde Cooley, February 22, 1910, in Grand, OK. Died November 23, 1969, in Oakland, CA.

Cooley's tragic personal life—he was convicted in 1961 for the first-degree murder of his second wife, largely on the testimony of his 14-year-old daughter whom Cooley had forced to witness her mother's fatal beating—tends to overshadow the "King of Western Swing"'s abundant musical achievements. Of Scottish-Irish and Cherokee descent, Cooley came from a musical line—both his father and grandfather were fiddlers of renown, and young Donnell's first musical instrument, not surprisingly, was the cello. As so many did during the Depression, the Cooleys headed west in 1931, and Hollywood beckoned Spade like the proverbial moth to the flame: soon he was hired by Republic Pictures as a stand-in for the latest Singing Cowboy sensation, Roy Rogers. So impressed was Rogers by Cooley's fiddling ability that he quickly hired the would-be thespian to tour with his band between pictures. Later, Spade joined Cal Shrum's combo, and made his first-ever trip to the recording studio with them in 1941. It was really only a matter of time, though, before Cooley formed his own band: a monstrous (up to 22 members at times) aggregation that brought its own unique blend of country, jazz, and pure wartime dance music to the booming Southern California ballroom circuit, drawing crowds of 5,000 a night at their regular Santa Monica residency. His first session for Columbia Records in December 1944 produced his biggest-ever hit, "Shame on You," and Cooley also found time to appear in several motion pictures and even hosted his own highly rated local television series well into the '50s. A long-time investor in California real estate, his plan to develop a mammoth recreational park called Water Wonderland in the middle of the Mojave Desert (go figure) was derailed when he discovered his wife bragging of an affair with old pal Roy Rogers. Roy survived this incident relatively unscathed; Spade, however, didn't let his wife off so easy. On August 22, 1961, the King of Western Swing was sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of young Ella Mae Cooley. Due to be paroled for good behavior from Vacaville Prison in 1970, he died several weeks prior to his release of a massive heart attack following a benefit performance he'd just given for the Alameda Deputy Sheriff's Association.

what's available: Although he later recorded for RCA and Decca, Spade's legend rests with his OKeh and Columbia recordings from the mid-'40s, the best of which are lovingly restored, annotated, and compiled on Spadella!: The Essential Spade Cooley ♪♪♪ (Legacy, 1994, prod. various). Although the biggest hits, crooned for the most part by vocalist Tex Williams, are somewhat lackluster, the instrumentals jump and cook as few others of their ilk did, or could, in their day.

influences:

◀◀ The Cass County Boys, Riders of the Purple Sage, Jimmy Wakely

▶▶ Western Caravan, Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks, Ray Condo and his Rickochets

Gary Pig Gold

Dana Cooper

Born in Independence, MO.

Dana Cooper's varied career has taken him from Missouri to California, from Texas to Tennessee. Cooper grew up in Kansas City, Missouri, but sought his fortune in California, where he recorded his debut album for Elektra Records during the '70s. When his solo career didn't pan out, he moved to Texas and joined forces with fellow singer-songwriter Shake Russell. Their folk-rock band became a huge regional attraction, recording albums during the late '70s and early '80s and even sneaking one of them onto the Billboard sales chart. He then recorded two independent albums with another rock band, Dana Cooper's DC3, before returning to the solo route. He released his first CD, Stone by Stone, in 1992; it's now unavailable, except from Cooper himself.

Cooper's reputation is once again on the rise following the 1997 release of Miracle Mile on the Nashville-based Compass Records. Cooper has had songs recorded by Russell, Maura O'Connell, Trout Fishing in America, Rex Foster, and Christine Albert.

what's available: Roughly Speaking ♪♪♪ (Skram, 1994, prod. Dana Cooper, Nick Carlton) is a modest album consisting mostly of Cooper accompanying himself on guitar. It contains some good tunes ("Walkin' Waste of Time," "I Had That Comin'") but in this form, nothing matches the magic of his second album. Working with a full band and one of Nashville's more pop-influenced producers brought the best out in Cooper's material. Miracle Mile ♪♪♪♪ (Compass, 1997, prod. Josh Leo) features many of the same songs as Roughly Speaking, but the arrangements make all the difference. Josh Leo brings out the most imaginative parts of Cooper's lyrics and melodies—it's the kind of sympathetic production solo singer-songwriters get all too rarely. "In My Living Room" is the musical defining point, as Cooper imagines the Beatles in a private showcase with Magical Mystery Tour–era accompaniment. Maura O'Connell contributes vocals to the title tracks; Lyle Lovett sings on "Too Deep a Sorrow."

influences:

◀◀ The Beatles, Don Dixon, Marti Jones

▶▶ Richard Buckner

Brian Mansfield

Roger Cooper

Born in Kentucky.

Roger Cooper is a Kentucky fiddler in the tradition of such regional legends as Buddy Thomas, Morris Allen, and Jimmy Wheeler. He has won numerous fiddling contests in Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee, and he is also an accomplished guitarist and banjo player.

what's available: Going Back to Old Kentucky ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. John Harrod, Mark Wilson) is a fine collection of 25 fiddle tunes, many of them traditional, in the old-time Lewis County fiddling style. Cooper is accompanied by guitarist Mike Hall.

influences:

◀◀ Bob Prater, Buddy Thomas, Jimmy Wheeler

▶▶ Charlie Walden, Chirps Smith, Jeff Goehring

Brian Mansfield

Wilma Lee & Stoney Cooper

Formed 1940s, in WV.

Wilma Lee Cooper (born Wilma Lee Leary, February 7, 1921, in Valley Head, WV), vocals, guitar, banjo, piano; Dale T. "Stoney" Cooper (born October 16, 1918, in Harmon, WV; died March 22, 1977), vocals, fiddle.

This West Virginia husband-and-wife duo and their band, the Clinch Mountain Clan, helped keep alive the raw, acoustic hard-country sound popular in the Southeast during the 1930s for

182 the copper family

bagpipes

A bagpipe is known for one basic thing—continuous sound. In order to achieve this, a bag is inflated and squeezed, supplying the pipes with the air required to let them sound. There are two basic types of bagpipes: mouth-blown and bellows-blown. With mouth-blown pipes, the instrumentalist provides the air; while in the bellows-blown, air is pumped from a bellows, held under an arm. Bellows-blown pipers like to claim that given a table and a straw, they can drink beer while playing their pipes. Ancient shepherds are credited with independently inventing the instrument in a variety of areas, from India to Ireland to Hungary, creating the bag from an animal's hide or stomach and connecting hollow sticks or bones to the bag. The best-known bagpipes in the United States are Celtic in origin: the Scottish Great Highland bagpipes, commonly seen at parades and funerals, and the Irish uilleann pipes, as played by the Chieftains. Bagpipes vary in sound based on the type of reeded pipes attached to the bag. Most bagpipes have some form of a drone; the number of drones varies. Drones may all have the same pitch or be tuned at varying intervals. The other pipe attached to the bag is a chanter, similar to a reeded recorder, which is used to play the tune.

Jo Hughey Morrison

worth searching for: Wilma Lee and Stoney Cooper and the Clinch Mountain Clan—Early Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (County, 1979), a reissue of Columbia recordings from 1949–53, is their prime stuff, including the classics "Thirty Pieces of Silver," "Sunny Side of the Mountain," "You Tried to Ruin My Name," and nine more.

solo outings:

Wilma Lee Cooper:

Wilma Lee Cooper ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982)

Classic Country Favorites ♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ Molly O'Day, Roy Acuff

▶▶ Carl & Pearl Butler, Delia Bell

Randy Pitts

The Copper Family

Formed c. 1951, in Rottingdean, Sussex, England.

The Copper Family, often called a "living museum of music," has been singing for centuries. The first member to come to prominence was James "Brasser" Copper, born in 1845, who had learned songs from his father. The English Folk Song Society was formed in 1889 after Kate Lee copied down the songs of Brasser and his brother Tom and brought her discovery to London. The songs were passed down to Copper's son Jim and grandson Bob. In the 1950s, Jim and Bob presented their unaccompanied songs on the BBC. Some credit the Coppers with thus beginning the folk revival in Britain. The best-known version of the group included Bob Copper, his cousin Ron (who died in 1978), and Bob's son and daughter John and Jill. The group now includes Jill's husband Jon. Bob's grandchildren are continuing the singing tradition, a century after their great-great-grandfather sang his songs to Kate Lee. Before a recent concert, John Copper reflected: "These songs came from an era when music wasn't performed, it was enjoyed." The songs are mostly about farm work, hunting, and other aspects of rural life.

what to buy: Coppersongs 2 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Coppersongs, 1995, prod. Piers Bishop) is not polished and prettified; instead, it's a sterling collection of the "living museum" at work. Songs include "Twanky Dillo" and "Banks of the Sweet Primroses."

the rest:

(Bob and Ron Copper) English Shepherd and Farming Songs ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1964)

what's available: The gospel set Walking My Lord up Calvary Hill ♪♪♪ (Hollywood, 1974?), the only Wilma Lee & Stoney readily available on CD, is a fair indicator of what they sounded like. Their style never changed much, but this isn't their best material.

influences:

- Jim Copper (Bob's father)
- Watersons, Young Tradition, Shirley Collins

Pamela Murray Winters

Cordelia's Dad

Formed c. 1989, in Northampton, MA.

Tim Eriksen, guitar, banjo, bass, vocals; Peter Irvine, drums, vocals; Tom King, guitar (1989–93); Cath Oss, vocals, mountain dulcimer, accordion (1995–present).

Cordelia's Dad started as a loud rock band that played only traditional material, thus introducing many college rock fanatics of the early '90s to the world of folk and traditional music. Over the years they started to pick up acoustic instruments more and more and play them in a traditional style. They never did put down their electric instruments, however. The fascinating thing about this group is that they can do everything well: rock and traditional. Today the band has taken on some more influences, such as Appalachian fiddle, clawhammer banjo, and shape note singing to create an interesting cocktail of new-traditional music. In 1996 the band also separated their electric side from the acoustic band and formed a second band; the rock band Io. Both bands have new recordings in the works with production from Steve Albini.

what to buy: Comet ♪♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1995, prod. Cordelia's Dad, Mark Alan Miller), the band's third full length CD, is the highlight of the band's career. Its combination of shape note singing, banjo playing, Tim Eriksen's fabulous unaccompanied singing, and the band's unique arrangements of old traditional songs rescued from junk shops and university archives presents to the listener one of the most powerful and exciting contemporary takes on traditional music. Cordelia's Dad has rescued these songs from the history books without sacrificing them to contemporary music of the 1990s.

what to buy next: How Can I Sleep? ♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1992, prod. Dave Schramm) is a snapshot from the time when Cordelia's Dad played and recorded both acoustic and electric material. Their acoustic take on "Sweet William," "Little Margaret," and Tim's unaccompanied "Farewell to Old Bedford" from Lee Monroe Presnell make this an album not to miss. Cordelia's Dad ♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1990, prod. Cordelia's Dad), their debut CD, is essential for the people who want to view the band in its full electric regalia. This is the album to buy your rock and roll friends that you hope to drag into the world of folk music someday.

the rest:
Roadkill ♪♪♪ (Scenescof, 1996)

worth searching for: The Joy Fun Garden ♪♪♪♪½ (Return to Sender, 1993, prod. Cordelia's Dad) is a nine-song EP that was released in a limited edition in Germany only. If you see this one, snatch it up. It contains a few songs not found anywhere else, such as Tim Eriksen's take on the unaccompanied "Johnny Oh Johnny" and "Drowsy Sleeper" by Lee Monroe Presnell. For a deeper look into their shape note singing check out the CD by Northampton Harmony, The Hookes' Regular Sing ♪♪♪ (Hazmat, 1996, prod. Northampton Harmony). Half of this shape note quartet is made up of Cordelia's Dad members Tim Eriksen and Cath Oss.

influences:

- Dwight Diller, Lee Monroe Presnell, Sacred Harp Hymnal, the Ramones
- Salamander Crossing

Steve Gardner

Larry Cordle

See: Lonesome Standard Time

Sheryl Cormier

Born March 15, 1945, in Grand Coteau, LA.

Although Cleoma Breaux Falcon had recorded back in the 1920s, there have been no female Cajun band leaders. While it was not uncommon for women to play music at home or to know the old, traditional ballads, it is only recently that a woman could both play accordion and lead a popular band. The woman who epitomizes this change is Sheryl Cormier. She was the oldest of four children and started playing the Cajun accordion at age 7. Her father, Andrew Guilbeau, was the leader of the Sunset Playboys and her mother was the drummer. Sheryl occasionally played with the group, but gave it up when she was married to Russell Cormier. Even after her son was born she continued to sit in and play a little on weekends with different bands. Her initial band included her husband on vocals and her son Russell Jr. on drums. This is the band that is heard on her first album, La Reine de Musique Cadjine (The Queen of Cajun Music). Not satisfied with leading a group of male musicians, she also put together the first all-female Cajun band. Regardless of gender, her sound is the classic Cajun dance band and her popularity continues unabated.

what to buy: La Reine de Musique Cadjine (Queen of Cajun Music) ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1990, prod. Lee Lavergne) was her first LP with additional cuts added to the CD. It has a solid dance sound and a strong influence of Aldus Roger, which you can hear particularly on Roger's "Louisiana Waltz." "Laccasine Special" and "Valse de Pont D'Amour" demonstrate that Sheryl has the chops to handle tunes associated with Iry Lejeune. Her husband Russell shares the vocal duties with Ivy Dugas.

what to buy next: Sheryl Cormier and Cajun Sounds ♪♪♪ (1992, Swallow, prod. Lee Lavergne) exhibits more of the real Cajun dance sound that Sheryl can get out of a band. There are standards like "Bosco Stomp" and tunes with a more country sound, which are not uncommon in the repertoires of modern Cajun groups. A solid record to dance around the living room to.

influences:

◀◀ Aldus Roger, Sundown Playboys, Paul Daigle

▶▶ Kristi Guillory, Magnolia Sisters

Jared Snyder

Scott Cossu

Born 1951, in WV.

Pianist and composer Scott Cossu was at the peak of his career on September 5, 1989. His album Switchback had reached the fourth spot on the New Age music charts, and he was preparing for a 40-city world tour, after which he was to be married. Just as it looked as though he was destined for a great future, he was struck by a car while crossing a southern California street. The accident resulted in a traumatic brain injury; his doctors predicted there was only a 40 percent chance that he would survive. Cossu was, however, not ready to give up. While the injury required four operations, two months of hospitalization, and four months of intensive rehabilitation, he was ready to resume his musical career within 18 months. Although the injury cost him his right eye as well as significant portions of memory, Cossu's comeback recording, Stained Glass Memories, picked up where he had left off. Recorded with previous collaborators Van Manakas (guitar), Dave Valentin (flute), Mark Egan (bass), and Robbie Ameen (drums), the album sparkles with the emotional jazz-funk-blues-folk intensity of his previous work. Cossu, who grew up in Ohio and now lives in Olympia, Washington, studied classical piano as a youngster. His love of rock and roll, however, was equally strong and his early influences ranged from Bach and Beethoven to Pink Floyd and the Beatles. After studying classical piano, music theory, and composition at the University of Ohio, he transferred to the University of Washington to study ethnomusicology. Besides studying the musical traditions of China, Rumania, Thailand, and India in college, he explored the music of the Andes during a 1977 trip to South America. After settling in Washington, he met traveling guitarists Will Ackerman (founder and then-CEO of Windham Hill) and Alex de Grassi and was invited to record for the Windham Hill label. His debut album, Wind Dance, was produced by George Winston. Cossu has composed several pieces for movies, documentaries, and industrial films and has hosted a weekly syndicated radio show, Wind Dance.

what to buy: Reprising cuts from Cossu's first six albums, A Windham Hill Retrospective ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1992, prod. Robert Duskis, Dawn Atkinson, Will Ackerman) features his atmospheric piano melodies set to arrangements ranging from duets—played with guitarist Alex de Grassi ("Purple Mountain") and cellist Eugene Friesen ("Gwenlaise")—and trios played with such expressive instrumentalists as electric guitarist Van Manacas, flautist Dave Valentin, and cellist Friesen to full-blown sextets featuring Valentin, Mark Egan (bass), Danny Gottleib (drums), and Robert Squitero (percussion).

what to buy next: Although he had explored large band arrangements on his 1984 album Islands, Cossu's return to small ensemble playing, Reunion ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1986, prod. Alex de Grassi), is a masterpiece of melodic intimacy. While arrangements focus on Cossu's piano and Friesen's cello, additional tonal colors are provided by Alex de Grassi on acoustic guitar and Shadowfax violinist Charles Bisharat.

the rest:

Still Moments ♪♪½ (Lost Lake Arts, 1980)
Spirals ♪♪ (Music Is Medicine, 1983) Islands ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1984)
Wind Dance ♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1984)
Switchback ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1989)
She Describes Infinity ♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1992) Stained Glass Memories ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1992)

influences:

◀◀ Paul Winter, Oregon, Bob Dylan, the Beatles, Johann Sebastian Bach, Ludwig van Beethoven

▶▶ George Winston, Alex de Grassi, Eugene Friesen, Will Ackerman

Craig Harris

Elizabeth Cotten

Born January, 1893, in Chapel Hill, NC. Died June 29, 1987, in Syracuse, NY.

Elizabeth Cotten was just 12 years old when she wrote one of the most enduring folk-like songs, "Freight Train," in 1905. Although it took another four decades before her music was widely heard, her melodic Piedmont blues-style fingerpicking (on a standard right-handed guitar or banjo turned upside-down and played left-handed), influenced everyone from Odetta and Taj Mahal to the Grateful Dead and Tracy Chapman. For most of Cotten's life, music remained a childhood memory. Married at the age of 15, she traded her guitar for the church and didn't play for a quarter of a century. Her return to music was sparked by a chance meeting with influential folk musicologists Charles and Ruth Crawford Seeger and their young children, Peggy and Mike. An employee of a department store in Washington, D.C., where she had moved in the early 1940s, Cotten found and helped to calm a "lost" Peggy. When she returned the young girl to her mother, she was offered a job as a domestic in the Seeger home. Her songs and stories became an influential presence in the lives of the Seeger children, who later encouraged her to perform and produced her early albums. Cotten continued to work as a domestic until 1970 when Traditional Arts Service began to book her performances. Buying a house in Syracuse, New York, in 1978, she continued to perform until shortly before her death in 1987.

what to buy: Freight Train and Other North Carolina Folk Songs and Tunes ♪♪♪½ (Folkways, 1958/Smithsonian Folkways, 1989, prod. Mike Seeger) features intimate solo versions of Cotten's best known songs, including "Ain't Got No Honey Babe Now," "Here Old Rattler Here," "Oh Babe It Ain't No Lie," "Spanish Flang Dang," and the title track.

what to buy next: Although she was in her late 80s when she recorded Live ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1983, prod. John Overton), Cotten's irresistible charm and musical sensitivity are as effective as ever. Cotten's first album in more than two decades, Live remains her only live-in-concert recording.

the rest:

Folksongs and Instrumentals with Guitar ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1958/Smithsonian Folkways, 1989)

influences:

◀◀ Piedmont Blues, African American folk songs

▶▶ Peter, Paul & Mary, Mike Seeger, Peggy Seeger, the Grateful Dead, Odetta, Tracy Chapman

Craig Harris

James Cotton

Born July 1, 1935, in Tunica, MS.

Chicago-style harmonica player James Cotton's mentors were two titans of the blues, Muddy Waters and Sonny Boy Williamson. He tracked down Williamson (Rice Miller, not John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson) after listening to his Helena, Arkansas-based King Biscuit Time radio show in the 1940s; he traveled with the harp master and proved a quick learner. He recorded a few singles around 1953, but his most significant work was with other people; he and Junior Parker were Howlin' Wolf's main harmonicists, and those are Cotton's precise tones in the background of Wolf's Sun singles. Waters invited Cotton to replace George "Harmonica" Smith in his band in 1955, and the partnership lasted through 1966, when Cotton left to form his own band. He frequently worked with young white blues-rock performers like Steve Miller, Paul Butterfield, Johnny Winter, Elvin Bishop, and many others, often opening for them at San Francisco's Fillmore auditorium. A master showman who pranced around the stage and worked his harps to the limit, he built a minor audience in the 1970s, but his rough voice (especially after severe throat problems) was never a match for his fantastic harmonica playing. But as the blues cult audience began to grow into a significant fraction of the music industry, Cotton became one of the club circuit's shining lights. Of all the living bluesmen who served in Muddy Waters's bands, Cotton summons his former boss's spirit with the most reverence and credibility.

what to buy: Though Cotton has been recording for almost three decades, his best work came after the blues labels started picking him up again in the mid-1980s. High Compression ♪♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1984, prod. Bruce Iglauer, James Cotton) includes two backup combos, the best of which features Pinetop Perkins on piano and Magic Slim on guitar. Harp Attack! ♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1990, prod. Bruce Iglauer) unites Cotton with fellow blues harp greats Junior Wells, Billy Branch, and Carey Bell. Mighty Long Time ♪♪♪ (Antone's, 1991, prod. Clifford Antone) spotlights the bandleader on "Baby Please" and "Call It Stormy Monday" despite the presence of Perkins, guitarist Matt Murphy, and (on one track) ex–Fabulous Thunderbird Jimmie Vaughan.

what to buy next: The early solo material is uneven, but the best is clearly the rock 'n' roll–heavy 100% Cotton ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1974), with explosive versions of "Boogie Thing" and "Rocket 88."

what to avoid: Sadly, Cotton's voice has deteriorated, and it shows on Living the Blues ♪♪ (Verve, 1994, prod. John Snyder), which is overloaded with guests.

the country gentlemen

best of the rest:
Chicago/the Blues/Today!, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1964)
Live & on the Move ♪♪♪½ (One Way, 1966)
Cut You Loose! ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1967)
The James Cotton Blues Band ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1967)
Cotton in Your Ears ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1968)
Take Me Back ♪♪♪½ (Blind Pig, 1980)
Live from Chicago Mr. Superharp Himself ♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1987)
Two Sides of the Blues ♪♪♪ (Quicksilver, 1992)
Dealing with the Devil ♪♪♪½ (Quicksilver, 1992/Aim, 1997)
Live at Electric Lady ♪♪♪ (Sequel, 1993)
3 Harp Boogie ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1994)
Best of the Verve Years ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1995) Deep in the Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1997)

influences:

- Muddy Waters, John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson, Little Walter, Sonny Boy Williamson (Rice Miller)
- Junior Wells, Billy Branch, Charlie Musselwhite, Paul Butterfield, Sugar Blue, the Rolling Stones

Steve Knopper

The Country Gentlemen

Formed 1957, in the Washington, DC area.

Charlie Waller, guitar; John Duffey, mandolin, dobro (1957–69); Bill Emerson, banjo (1957–58, 1969–72); Larry Leahy, bass (1957); Tom Morgan, bass (1957); Jimmy Gaudreau, mandolin (1969–72, 1981); Doyle Lawson, mandolin (1972–79); Rick Allred, mandolin (1979–81); Pete Kuykendall, banjo, guitar, bass, fiddle (1958–59); Tom Morgan, bass (1957–59); Jim Cox, bass (1959–60); Tom Gray, bass (1960–64); Ed Ferris, bass (1964–69); Bill Yates (1969–80); Eddie Adcock, banjo (1959–70). Other members have included: Ricky Skaggs; Jerry Douglas; Mike Lilly; Walt Hensley; Kevin Church; Jimmy Bowen; Keith Little; Norman Wright.

The first really influential urban bluegrass band, the early Country Gentlemen featured John Duffey's tart tenor voice and amazing range (his father was an opera singer), guitarist Charlie Waller's pleasantly light baritone lead vocals, Eddie Adcock's banjo virtuosity, fine three- and four-part harmonies, innovative choices of material, imaginative arrangements, and humorous, friendly stage banter. They made bluegrass more immediate and more accessible to a large, young, urban audience, and their presence is felt today. Waller, the only remaining original member, leads the band into its fourth decade in 1997.

what to buy: Country Songs Old and New ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1960, prod. Mike Seeger) provides a full dose of tough, progressive bluegrass by this highly influential group early in their careers. Folk Songs and Bluegrass ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1961, prod. Pete Kuykendall, John Duffey) was the first album for Folkways by what came to be known as the "Classic Country Gentlemen," as bassist Tom Gray joins Duffey, Waller, and Adcock; it features extremely tight harmonies and innovative vocal arrangements of traditional songs. 25 Years ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1982, prod. Dave Freeman) is a good overview of the band in various groupings and includes many favorites and a fair number of obscurities.

what to buy next: Calling My Children Home ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1977, prod. Charles Freeland) is wonderful gospel from a group that included Doyle Lawson and features several a cappella gospel quartets.

the rest:
Nashville Jail: Classic Country Gentlemen ♪♪♪♪½ (Copper Creek, 1964/1990)
The Award-Winning Country Gentlemen ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1971)
Live in Japan ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1972)
Featuring Ricky Skaggs on Fiddle ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1987)
Return Engagement ♪♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1988)
Classic Country Gents Reunion ♪♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1989)
New Horizons ♪♪ (Rebel, 1992)
Souvenirs ♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1995)
Sugar Hill Collection ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1995)

worth searching for: Folk Session Inside ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1963, prod. Pete Kuykendall), an outstanding and very popular album in its time, features the "Classic" configuration of the band and great versions of "This Morning at Nine," "I Am Weary, Let Me Rest," and "Can't You Hear Me Calling." This is a big favorite of urban folkniks. Bluegrass at Carnegie Hall ♪♪♪♪ (Hollywood, 1962) is a great album by the early group recorded for Starday. (The title is a bit confusing, though, because it isn't a live album.)

solo outings:
Eddie Adcock:
Eddie Adcock & His Guitar ♪♪♪ (CMH, 1988)
(With Talk of the Town) The Acoustic Connection ♪♪♪½ (CMH, 1988)
Dixie Fried ♪♪♪ (CMH, 1991)
(With the Eddie Adcock Band) Talk to Your Heart ♪♪♪½ (CMH, 1994)

influences:

- The Stanley Brothers, Bill Monroe
- The Seldom Scene, Laurel Canyon Ramblers

Randy Pitts

Country Ham

Formed 1975, in Washington, DC.

Carl Pagter, banjo, lead and harmony vocals; Judie Cox Pagter, guitar, autoharp, lead and harmony vocals; Jerry Tuckett, fiddle, mandolin, harmony vocals (1975–90); Paul Reed Berkstresser, rhythm guitar, bass, bass vocals, (1975–90); Jim Sayles, acoustic bass (1975–79); Bob White, acoustic bass (1979–present); M.D. Mallory, rhythm guitar, (1990–present); Joe Meadows, fiddle (1990–present); Jerry Lundy, fiddle (1980s); Jeff Wisor, fiddle; Jake Quesenberry, guitar, lead and harmony vocals; James Bailey, guitar, mandolin, fiddle, harmony vocals.

Country Ham is a bluegrass and old-time string band with some 13 recordings on both Vetco and their own Country Ham label. The group has always revolved around the clawhammer banjo, autoharp, and singing of husband-wife team Carl and Judie Pagter, who are the only original members still with the group. Carl Pagter works as a lawyer and business executive in Walnut Creek, California, while Judie resides on the Pagter farm in Barboursville, Virginia. Joe Meadows, the band's fiddler, lives in Silver Spring, Maryland, and works on the staff of Senator Robert Byrd. Bob White plays bass and lives in Frederick, Maryland, where he is a legislative advocate for the National Electrical Contractors Association in Washington. M.D. Mallory plays guitar and works for an air conditioning manufacturer in Dyke, Virginia. Somehow, the group soldiers on despite the geographic separation of its members and has not had a personnel change for the past six years or so. Perhaps the fact that they rarely see each other explains it. Regardless, after a recording hiatus, they now have two new albums in the works. Look for The Old Cane Press and Carpenter's Mill in 1998.

what to buy: Either I'll Be Leaving ♪♪♪½ (Vetco, 1991, prod. Country Ham) or Where the Mountain Laurel Blooms ♪♪♪½ (Vetco, 1979, prod. Country Ham) would be excellent introductions to the band's winning combination of up-tempo mountain and bluegrass standards and heartfelt ballads from the tradition. Judie Pagter's voice is reminiscent of Molly O'Day, Rose Maddox, and Wilma Lee Cooper. It's a signature sound of the band. The instrumental mix is solid, if not spectacular, and Carl Pagter's banjo playing drives things nicely. His playing is in the clawhammer or frailing style of Grandpa Jones, so the group usually sounds more like Wade Mainer than Bill Monroe. Their vocal harmonies and tune selection, complemented by Joe Meadows's bluegrass-style fiddle, makes them welcome at any bluegrass festival. Judie Pagter's autoharp playing stands out on the slower numbers, when the band takes on more of a Carter Family feel.

what to buy next: Sounds of Yesterday ♪♪♪ (Vetco, 1983, prod. Country Ham), My Old Paint Mare ♪♪♪ (Vetco, 1980, prod. Country Ham), and Songs of Mother and Home ♪♪♪ (Vetco, 1984, prod. Country Ham) are all excellent albums with fine singing and competent picking. You can't go wrong with any of them. Joe Meadows's solo fiddle album, Fiddle Instrumentals Featuring Joe Meadows ♪♪♪ (Vetco, 1992, prod. Country Ham) is excellent as well.

what to avoid: Music for Clogging ♪♪ (Vetco, 1982, prod. Country Ham) is somewhat atypical of the band's approach to recording, and, while not bad in any sense, you'd have to be a clogger to really appreciate it.

the rest:

Old Time Mountain Music ♪♪♪½ (Vetco, 1976)
Country Ham ♪♪♪½ (Vetco, 1977)
The Old Country Church ♪♪♪½ (Vetco, 1980)
Anchored in Love ♪♪♪½ (Vetco, 1989)

solo outings:

Joe Meadows:

Portrait of a Fiddler ♪♪♪½ (Old Homestead, 1974)
West Virginia Fiddler ♪♪♪½ (Old Homestead, 1977)
Two O'Clock in the Morning ♪♪♪½ (Old Homestead, 1977)
Super Fiddler ♪♪♪½ (Old Dominion, 1978)

Judie Pagter and Joe Boucher:

Fifty Miles of Elbow Room ♪♪♪ (WEBCO, 1987)

influences:

- The Carter Family, Rose Maddox, Wilma Lee Cooper, New Lost City Ramblers
- Dry Branch Fire Squad, Piney Creek Weasels

Neal Walters

Country Joe and the Fish

Formed 1966, in Berkeley, CA. Disbanded 1970. Re-formed 1977.

Country Joe McDonald, vocals, guitar; Barry Melton, guitar; David Cohen, keyboards, guitar (1965–69); Bruce Barthol, bass (1965–68); John Francis Gunning, drums (1965–66); Paul Armstrong, washboard (1965–1966); Chicken Hirsh, drums (1965–69); Mark Ryan, bass (1968–69).

Largely forgotten as one of the giants of psychedelic rock, Country Joe and the Fish towered over their contemporaries and left behind one masterpiece album, their first—Electric Music for the Mind and Body—one of the definitive albums of American acid rock. Like the psychedelic scene itself, the album mixed the trippy and bizarre with the jocular and whimsical, and crafted folk-pop with adventuresome experimentation, electric blues with political satire. Both McDonald and Melton, who grew up next door to Woody Guthrie in Brooklyn, brought decided folk backgrounds with them to the free-wheeling band they founded. The Berkeley-based group qualified as one of the original five Fillmore headliners, although these days the Fish are not regarded in the same breath as the Grateful Dead and Jefferson Airplane. The original, high-spirited group of hippies began to dissolve after its third album; by the time the group made its famous appearance at the 1969 Woodstock Festival, only McDonald and Melton remained. The group disappeared altogether the following year, although McDonald continued a fruitful and active musical career. Melton was recently appointed a public defender attorney in Mendocino County, California.

what to buy: Even the official greatest-hits collection includes seven of the 11 tracks from the band's 1967 debut, Electric Music for the Mind and Body ♪♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1967, prod. Sam Charters), one of the first albums to carry the sound of the San Francisco ballrooms across the country.

what to buy next: The band's second album was recorded so quickly after the debut that the group made do with less potent pieces from its existing repertoire. At least it saved the Vietnam era's #1 anthem, "I-Feel-Like-I'm-Fixin'-to-Die Rag," for this album. Coupled with McDonald's elegant elegy to his romance with the girl singer from Big Brother and the Holding Company, "Janis," the two side-openers lifted I-Feel-Like-I'm-Fixin'-To-Die Rag ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1967, prod. Sam Charters) above the ordinary.

what to avoid: By the time the original group started to fall apart, the band had recorded three albums, and nothing on the subsequent two albums, Here We Are Again ♪½ (Vanguard, 1968) and C.J. Fish ♪ (Vanguard, 1970, prod. Tom Wilson), added anything to the band's repertoire.

the rest:
Together ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1968)
The Life and Times of Country Joe and the Fish ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1971)
The Collected Country Joe and the Fish ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1987)

worth searching for: Two authentic Country Joe and the Fish psychedelic artifacts have been brought into the digital domain. Collectors Items: The First Three EPs ♪♪♪½ (One Way, 1994) captures the early Berkeley records that launched the band in the Bay Area, while Live! At the Fillmore West ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1996, prod. Bill Belmont) may want for superb sonics but contains the rare sound of a genuine ballroom jam—a free-for-all celebrating the original group's final performance with such guests as Steve Miller, Jerry Garcia, Jorma Kaukonen, Jack Casady, and Mickey Hart joining the fray.

solo outings:
Country Joe McDonald:
Thinking of Woody Guthrie ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1970)
Tonight I'm Singing Just for You ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1970/One Way, 1995)
Paradise with an Ocean View ♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1975)
Into the Fray ♪♪½ (Rag Baby, 1981)
Peace on Earth: The Vietnam Experience (Rag Baby 1985/One Way 1995) ♪♪½
Country Joe Classics ♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1989)
The Best of Country Joe 1969–1975 ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1990)
Superstitious Blues ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1991)
Carry On ♪♪♪ (Line, 1994/Shanachie, 1996)
Vietnam Experience ♪♪½ (Line, 1994/One Way, 1995)
War War War ♪♪ (One Way, 1995)
Hold On—It's Coming ♪♪½ (One Way, 1995)
Country Joe ♪♪½ (One Way, 1996)
Paris Sessions ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1996)
On My Own ♪♪½ (One Way, 1997)
Child's Play ♪♪½ (One Way, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Reverend Gary Davis, Big Brother and the Holding Company

▶▶ B-52's, Boomtown Rats, Tom Robinson Band

Joel Selvin

County Down

See: Anne Dodson

Cowboy Junkies

Formed 1979, in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Margo Timmins, vocals; Michael Timmins, guitar; Peter Timmins, drums; Alan Anton, bass.

Folk singer Luka Bloom once said he'd never opened for so many people making so little noise on stage. The Cowboy Junkies are usually stamped with such labels as "Valium-enhanced" and "narcoleptic," which is true on their most boring songs. They're slow, of course, but when they're good, you barely notice the tempo. The band merges songwriting styles culled from country (most notably Townes Van Zandt and Hank Williams), blues, and punk (their cover of the Velvet Underground's "Sweet Jane" is what first got the group on college radio), and at best the results are charming and hypnotic. At worst, when the Junkies start to rely on their sound and let their considerable songwriting qualities play a lesser role, you really can't get through an album or concert without developing a yawn addiction.

cowboy junkies

1 8 9

The Cox Family (© Jack Vartoogian)

what to buy: The Trinity Session ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1988, prod. Peter Moore) is the perfect starting place, mostly because its cover songs ("Sweet Jane," Patsy Cline's "Walking after Midnight," and Hank Williams's "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry") ease you gradually into the Junkies' slow-motion world. Black Eyed Man ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1992, prod. Michael Timmins), their best and most underrated album, succeeds because of its reverence for true country music; John Prine makes a terrific duet appearance on the romantic ballad "If You Were the Woman and I Was the Man," and Van Zandt's influence is obvious in both the style and name of "Townes' Blues."

what to buy next: Whites Off Earth Now ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1990) is full of slow and tortured versions of familiar songs, including Bruce Springsteen's "State Trooper" and Robert Johnson's "Crossroads" and "Me and the Devil." The Junkies, perhaps overly aware of their reputation for leisure, accelerated to rock speed on Lay It Down ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1996, prod. Michael Timmins, John Keane).

what to avoid: Caution Horses ♪♪ (RCA, 1990, prod. Peter Moore, Michael Timmins) was supposed to be the band's triumphant leap from college cult heroes to mainstream country-rock hitmakers, but it was so blandly written and overproduced it sent the Junkies reeling commercially for most of the 1990s.

the rest:

Pale Sun, Crescent Moon ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1993)
200 More Miles: Live Performances 1985–1994 ♪♪ (RCA, 1995)

worth searching for: A haunting treatment of another sacred country-rock cow, the Rolling Stones's "Dead Flowers," turns up on the 12-inch promotional single for "'Cause Cheap Is How I Feel" (RCA, 1990).

influences:

◀◀ John Prine, Townes Van Zandt, Bruce Springsteen, Lou Reed, Patsy Cline, Hank Williams

▶▶ Mazzy Star, Lisa Germano

Steve Knopper

The Cox Family

Formed 1976, in Cotton Valley, LA.

Willard Cox, fiddle, vocals; Evelyn Cox, guitar, vocals; Suzanne Cox, mandolin, vocals; Evelyn Cox Hobbs, guitar, vocals; Sidney Cox, guitar, dobro, banjo; Lynn Cox Thurman, bass, vocals.

Cotton Valley is an oil town about 40 miles north of Shreveport—not exactly a hotbed of bluegrass music. But for Willard Cox and the rest of his musical family, it was as good a place as any to carry the torch while adding a few touches of their own, such as Western swing. Though they've worked the festival circuit for years, the Coxes manage to make their shimmering harmonies and traditional sound fresh, attracting the attention of Alison Krauss, who has recorded some of Sidney's songs. She, in turn, has produced some of their albums.

what to buy: Just When You're Thinking It's Over ♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1996, prod. Alison Krauss) is a rarity that manages to update traditional bluegrass in a way that should not disturb purists. Grammy-winning buddy Krauss steers them on a course that keeps one foot rooted firmly in the past, the other charging into the future.

the rest:

Everybody's Reaching Out for Someone ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993)
(With Alison Krauss) I Know Who Holds Tomorrow ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)
(With Krauss) Beyond the City ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ Chuck Wagon Gang, Mac Wiseman, Bill Monroe

▶▶ Alison Krauss

Doug Pullen

Dan Crary

Born 1940, in Kansas City, MO.

Dan Crary began playing guitar at age 12. In 1970, he released perhaps the first bluegrass album to feature the flatpicked guitar as the lead instrument. Bluegrass Guitar was a landmark album and firmly established Crary as one of the most skilled and innovative guitarists in bluegrass. Although he credits Doc Watson and Clarence White as primary influences, his move from Kansas City to Louisville, Kentucky, in 1968 and his subsequent teaming with fiddler Lonnie Peerce in Bluegrass Alliance may have been the real catalyst behind his interest in playing fiddle tunes on the guitar. Bluegrass Alliance was also home to Tony Rice and to Sam Bush subsequent to Crary's tour with the band. He left the Bluegrass Alliance in 1970 to move back to Kansas City and pursue a graduate degree, dropping out of sight for nearly seven years. Following graduation, he accepted a job teaching speech communications at Cal State University in Fullerton, California, and re-surfaced with fiddler Byron Berline as part of the country rock band, Sundance, which also featured John Hickman on banjo. The group remained together until 1978, cutting an eponymous album in 1976 and a live album in 1977. Subsequently, Crary teamed again with Berline and banjo player John Hickman as a trio specifically formed to play a tour of Japan. The group sounded so good that they stayed together and recorded three albums as the trio Berline-Crary-Hickman, later adding bass player Steve Spurgin (also an alumnus of Sundance) and calling themselves simply BCH and then changing again to California. Over the years, Crary has managed a good number of solo albums, recording for Sugar Hill and other labels, and has certainly carved a niche for himself as a distinctive interpreter of traditional material for both six-string and 12-string guitar. He also has composed a fair number of original compositions that add spice to his recordings.

what to buy: Guitar ♪♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1983, prod. Dan Crary) teams Crary with a crew of second-generation bluegrass immortals who have since become household words in their own right. Sam Bush, Mark O'Connor, Béla Fleck, and T. Michael Coleman help Crary blow the lid off in a sparkling session that delivers a tribute to Carter Stanley's banjo playing, a Mozart piano sonata adapted for guitar, an eight-minute Bill Monroe medley, and a marvelous Irish medley played bluegrass style.

what to buy next: Lady's Fancy ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1977/1994, prod. Dan Crary) is a delightful combination of traditional tunes done in the unique Crary style coupled with two original compositions for his daughters, Julie and Jenny. Byron Berline, Sam Bush, Skip Conover, John Cowan, Herb Pedersen, and Béla Fleck are among the guests.

the rest:

Bluegrass Guitar ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1970)
Thunderation ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1981)
(With John Hickman) Double Trouble ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1986/1995)
Sweet Southern Girl ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1989)
(With California) Traveler ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1992)
Lady's Fancy ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)
Jammed If I Do ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1994)
Holiday Guitar ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1997)

worth searching for: Take a Step Over ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1989, prod. Dan Crary, Jim Emrich) has yet to be re-released on CD, but it's another great set of tunes that you don't ordinarily hear played on the guitar.

solo outings:
Berline-Crary-Hickman:
Night Run ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1984)
B-C-H ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1987)
Now They Are Four ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1989)

influences:
◀◀ Doc Watson, Clarence White
▶▶ Steve Kaufman

see also: Byron Berline

Neal Walters

Crash Test Dummies

Formed late '80s, in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada.

Brad Roberts, vocals, guitar, piano; Benjamin Darvill, mandolin, harmonica; Ellen Reid, piano, keyboards, accordion, vocals; Dan Roberts, bass; Michel Dorge, drums.

Although the band hails from Winnipeg, which spawned the Guess Who and Bachman-Turner Overdrive, it owes more stylistically to XTC, Leonard Cohen, and Talking Heads. Songwriter-leader-singer Brad Roberts possesses a lush baritone with remarkable range and sounds a bit like Bauhaus vocalist Peter Murphy.

what to buy: With the release of the second album, God Shuffled His Feet ♪♪♪♪ (Arista, 1993, prod. Jerry Harrison, Crash Test Dummies), the group scored a pair of international hits—"MMM MMM MMM MMM" and "Afternoons & Coffee Spoons"—that boosted its stature beyond its homeland.

what to buy next: This folk-influenced pop outfit took Canada by storm in 1991 with its debut album, The Ghosts That Haunt Me ♪♪♪ (Arista, 1991, prod. Steve Berlin), which featured the Canadian smash hit "Superman's Song."

the rest:
A Worm's Life ♪♪♪ (Arista, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ XTC, Leonard Cohen, R.E.M., Talking Heads
▶▶ Talking Heads, Camper Van Beethoven

William Hanson

Kevin Crawford /The Moving Cloud /Grianan /Raise the Rafters

Born in Birmingham, England.

Kevin Crawford is one of Ireland's most outstanding young traditional flute players. Born in England to Irish parents steeped in the traditional music of their native west Clare, Crawford grew up surrounded by traditional Irish music and learned to play the flute as a teenager. After moving to Ireland during the late 1980s he settled in Ennis, County Clare, a longtime center of traditional Irish music. There he joined up with the great but short-lived band Grianan, and later with the dance band the Moving Cloud, with whom he continues to perform. Crawford's style is solid, rhythmic, fast-paced, and a little showy, a perfect reflection of this friendly, gregarious man's personality. Crawford has made few appearances in the U.S. and as a result has a somewhat lower profile than he deserves. He is one of the bright lights in contemporary Irish music and fans are urged to seek out his recordings and hear him in concert.

what to buy: D Flute ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Kevin Crawford), Crawford's first solo album, is a stunning debut. By turns lyrical and fiery, Crawford explores a range of traditional reels, jigs, and hornpipes, as well as a fine slow air of his own composition. The accompaniment provided by pianist Carl Hession and guitarist Donal Clancy is tasteful and spare, allowing the listener to focus on the mighty flute playing. Crawford is indeed an exciting player, strong in rhythm and not afraid to show off his awesome technique. His power is, however, wedded to a fine sense of taste, and he never shows off at the expense of the music. Like Matt Molloy, whom he slightly resembles stylistically, Crawford is an aggressive player who makes the listener sit up and take notice. This is a strong debut album, auguring well for Crawford's future.

what to buy next: The Moving Cloud ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. the Moving Cloud) is the first album from the Clare-based Ceili band of the same name. Drawing heavily on a repertoire from the "golden age" of recorded Irish music during the 1920s, the Moving Cloud plays solid dance music and features repertoire not commonly found in modern Irish music (flings, clogs, and barn dances, for example). The band has a stellar membership including Crawford, mighty box player Paul Brock, pianist Carl Hession, and fiddlers Maeve Donnelly and Manus McGuire. In concert or at a dance this collection of musicians can be breathtaking, producing some of the most elegant yet driving Irish dance music ever heard. Sadly, the album fails to capture that intensity, sounding flat and listless. One of these days, someone will record this awesome band in a live setting and produce the great record they deserve.

worth searching for: During the early 1990s a group of young County Clare musicians seemed set to take the Irish music world by storm. The group Grianan grew out of a vibrant session scene in Ennis and featured some of the best young players to be found in Ireland at the time, including Kevin Crawford, fiddler Siobhan Peoples (daughter of the legendary Tommy Peoples), and box player P.J. King. The group recorded one album, The Maid of Eirin ♪♪♪♪ (West Winds, 1993, prod. Grianan, Martin Murray), which captured their driving, solid playing in fine form. Unfortunately, the incompetence of the record company and the Byzantine recordings distribution system in the British Isles combined to ensure that very few people would hear, or even know about, the recording. Soured by the experience, and with no tours, reviews, or gigs to show for the album, the group broke up. Following Grianan's demise, Crawford and box player P.J. King teamed with guitarist and singer Martin O'Malley to form a new group. Raise the Rafters ♪♪♪½ (Celtic Prime Leisure, 1995, prod. Martin Murray), their eponymous debut, is a nice collection of tunes and songs played on flute, accordion, and guitar. As with D Flute, the playing is showy yet tasteful and Crawford and King have a nice rapport on a pair of instruments rarely heard together. Two albums featuring Crawford that show off the legendary session scene around Ennis in County Clare are The Sanctuary Sessions ♪♪♪½ (CCD, 1994, prod. P.J. Curtis) and Maiden Voyage ♪♪♪♪ (Celtic Music, 1991, prod. Paraic MacDonnchadha, Kevin Crawford). The first features a number of the younger musicians, including the wonderful box player Josephine Marsh and concertina player Dympna O'Sullivan. Maiden Voyage features many of the same musicians as The Sanctuary Sessions plus a few wonderful appearances from older musicians Tommy Peoples, Joe Bane, and the great sean-nos singer Sean MacDonnchada.

influences:

◀◀ Matt Molloy, Joe Bane, Martin Rochford

▶▶ Josephine Marsh, Martin Hayes

Tony Ziselberger

Critton Hollow String Band

Formed 1974, in WV.

Joe Herrmann, fiddle, guitar, banjo, accordion, vocals; Sam Herrmann, hammered dulcimer, mandolin, vocals; Joe Fallon, banjo, bass, guitar, vocals (1981–present); Paul Kovac, guitar, banjo, vocals (1981–present).

Critton Hollow took its name from the local West Virginia geography near its members' homes. The original band consisted of Joe Herrmann, Sam Herrmann, and guitarist Michael Kline. In 1977, Kline moved away and the band took on Sam's brother Arnold Kempton and his wife Patti Galatis Kempton. The Kemptons retired in 1981 and were replaced by Joe Fallon and Pete Gordon. Subsequently, in 1994, Pete Gordon left the band and was replaced by Paul Kovac. Throughout these personnel changes, the band has retained its old-time string-band sound and orientation. Most of their material is traditional, frequently arranged by them to accommodate the hammered dulcimer, with a fair number of contemporary folk pieces thrown in. Their concert appearances have ranged from coast to coast in the U.S. and into Canada. A favorite of many square and contra dancers, they play at dance camps throughout the Mid-Atlantic States, and the individual members teach frequently at various music camps.

what to buy: The band's only CD to date is Cowboys and Indians ♪♪♪½ (Yodel-ay-Hee Records, 1995, prod. Joe Herrmann, Mark Schatz). Nearly all of the 18 tracks on this disc have a Western theme, or at least a Western title. Half are traditional old-time tunes, the other half come from sources ranging from Woody Guthrie ("The Ranger's Command") to Dolly Parton ("Coat of Many Colors"). Instruments get passed around quite a bit, but the basic core consists of the fiddle, hammered dulcimer, banjo, and guitar. When you want to discuss the things that this band does well, it's hard to decide where to start. One of their strengths is the mix of Joe and Sam Herrmann's voices. Individually, each has a vocal style that is straightforward and refreshingly unaffected; they fit together seamlessly and the combination melds effortlessly with the other members. The instrumentation is just as coherent. Not many old-time bands have used the hammered dulcimer, but they didn't have Sam Herrmann. Whether it's a slower piece like Mark Schatz's "Samolynn Waltz," or a hard-driving fiddle tune like "Indian Nation," she plays with a precision and tastefulness that shares the stage with the fiddle without competing with it. Joe Fallon provides rock solid backup on banjo, guitar, and bass. Paul Kovac is equally solid on guitar and banjo and, on this disc, bass virtuoso Mark Schatz makes a guest appearance on two tracks. Everybody in this band is a multi-instrumentalist, and there are no weaknesses. There's a variety of material on the disc, including a song by Earl Montgomery called "Where Grass Won't Grow" that sounds so good with the Critton Hollow stamp on it that you wonder if it was written with them in mind. All in all, it's a great recording from one of the most popular bands on the traditional music scene today. Their recordings might be hard to find in a record store, but can be obtained from the band at Route 1, Box 167, Paw Paw, WV 25434.

what to buy next: By and By ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish Records, 1985, prod. Cathy Fink, Critton Hollow String Band) is available on LP or cassette and is also a mix of traditional and contemporary pieces. Pete Gordon (guitar, vocal) was in the band when this recording was made and Paul Kovac was not. The sound of the band is much the same as on Cowboys and Indians. Utah Phillips's "Room for the Poor" is a standout, and it's worth the price of the album just for the Critton Hollow version of "A Mother's Parting Words to Her Daughter."

the rest:

Poor Boy ♪♪♪½ (Yodel-ay-Hee Records, 1979)
Sweet Home ♪♪♪½ (Yodel-ay-Hee Records, 1983) Great Dreams ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish Records, 1988)

influences:

◀◀ Highwoods String Band, Hotmud Family
▶▶ Karen Ashbrook, Walt Michael

Dave Shombert

Jim Croce

Born January 10, 1943, in Philadelphia, PA. Died September 20, 1973, in Natchitoches, LA.

Unlike many of his singer-songwriter contemporaries who got their starts on the coffeehouse circuit, Croce didn't pride himself on earnestness, and social change wasn't at the top of his lyrical agenda. He showed a sense of humor and knack for storytelling that Will Rogers would have appreciated. The stogie-chomping, mustachioed artist populated his unforgettable story songs with rugged characters, and infused his conventional yet poignant love songs with sincerity. That combination landed him several Top 40 hits, which were recorded in between 1971 and 1973. Many of his songs became posthumous hits after his death in a plane crash.

what to buy: Photographs & Memories: His Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1974, prod. Terry Cashman, Tommy West) is the essential Croce hits collection, including the chart-topping "Bad, Bad Leroy Brown" and "Time in a Bottle."

what to buy next: You Don't Mess Around with Jim ♪♪♪½ (ABC, 1972, prod. Terry Cashman, Tommy West) offers the sage wisdom of the title track, along with "Operator (That's Not the Way It Feels)."

what to avoid: Faces I've Been ♪♪ (Lifesong, 1975, prod. Jim Croce) comprises material from Croce's pre-major-label signing. He hasn't found his niche, sounding too similar to that oh-so-serious folk crowd he had yet to distinguish himself from.

the rest:

I Got a Name ♪♪♪ (ABC, 1973)
Time in a Bottle: Greatest Love Songs ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1976)
Live: Final Tour ♪♪♪ (Saja, 1980)
50th Anniversary Collection ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1992)
Gold in a Bottle ♪♪♪♪ (DGC Gold, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ Paul Simon, Gordon Lightfoot, Cat Stevens, James Taylor
▶▶ Dan Fogelberg, Suzanne Vega, Lyle Lovett

Jay Dedrick

Carrie Crompton

Born October 30, 1952, in Northampton, MA.

Carrie Crompton has enchanted audiences all over the country with her "Barolk Folk" style of hammered dulcimer playing, blending the elegance of Baroque music with the energy of the folk dance. Her recordings with Barolk Folk have won awards from the National Association of Independent Record Distributors (now known as Association for Independent Music) and from Parents Choice. The inspiration for her repertoire comes from playing the treble viol, an early bowed string instrument, as well as from English country and contra dancing. This Connecticut artist, who plays both fretted and hammered dulcimer, has published several books of her dulcimer arrangements through Mel Bay.

what's available: On Bach Dances ♪♪♪♪ (Barolk Folk, 1996, prod. Seth Austen), Carrie Crompton is joined by Sue Cryan on violin, Celia Wyckoff on recorder, Michael Rose on piano, Seth Austen on steel-string guitar, and Dana Mayo on classical guitar. This group of Barolk Folk has skillfully taken Bach's solo dance movements and added wonderful counter melodies and chordal harmonies for a complete chamber folk ensemble sound. These Bach dances are pared with complementary dance tunes such as "Shawbury Park" and "Sun Assembly." Crompton's hammered dulcimer playing is precise, sounding much like a harpsichord, as she takes inspiration from recordings by the likes of Andres Segovia, Henryk Szeryng, Pierre Fournier, and Pablo Casals. Come Let Us Be Merry ♪♪♪♪ (Barolk Folk, 1989, prod. Seth Austen) is a collection of traditional Christmas carols and dances from Scotland, Ireland, England, Brittany, and France that are played in an elegant Baroque style. Some of the carols are paired with such traditional dances as "The First Nowell/Hewlett," a traditional English carol combined with a Turlough O'Carolan piece. Barolk Folk musicians on this recording are Carrie Crompton (hammered dulcimer, fretted dulcimer, treble viol), Michael Rose (guitar, piano), and Celia Wyckoff (recorders). These recordings are available from Barolk Folk Music, 11 Center Street, Andover, CT 06232.

worth searching for: Girls and Boys, Come Out to Play ♪♪♪♪ (Barolk Folk, 1991, prod. Seth Austen), though out of print, is worth going out of your way to find. In addition to the Barolk Folk, it includes Madeline MacNeil and Barbara Hess in a collection of familiar nursery songs.

influences:

◀◀ John Renbourn, Andres Segovia, the Chieftains, Bare Necessities

▶▶ Steve Schneider, Walt Michael, Madeline MacNeil

Heidi Cerrigione

David Crosby

See: Crosby, Stills & Nash

Crosby, Stills and Nash /Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young /David Crosby /Crosby & Nash /Graham Nash /Stephen Stills

Formed 1968, in Los Angeles, CA.

David Crosby (born August 14, 1941, in Los Angeles, CA), guitar, vocals; Stephen Stills (born January 3, 1945, in Dallas, TX), guitar, bass, keyboards, vocals; Graham Nash (born February 2, 1942, in Blackpool, England), guitar, keyboards, vocals; Neil Young (born November 12, 1945, in Toronto, Ontario, Canada), guitar, vocals.

One of the most celebrated and enduring of the late '60s supergroups, Crosby, Stills and Nash—with and without Neil Young—continued and built on musical foundations initiated with their previous bands. Crosby was in the Byrds, Stills and Young formed Buffalo Springfield, and Nash was a signature voice in the Hollies. The decision to use their last names, in fact, stemmed from the desire not to be thought of as just another band but as a group of individuals who worked together when it felt right. Formed as a trio to record their first album, the blend of CSN's voices combined with the songwriting skills of each—as well as Stills's musical proficiency—became a cornerstone of the Southern California folk-rock movement. With the addition of Young and his darker, more contemplative songs, CSNY became a powerful voice of the times, infusing desperate love songs and political theory with the same emotional harmonies. Though dogged by periodic personality conflicts and assorted substance abuse addictions (which necessitated Crosby's liver transplant in 1994), the original trio seems inextricably drawn together, though their last work with Young was in 1988. In 1997, feeling neglected by their record company, the group broke off their longtime relationship with Atlantic Records in search of a new home for future recordings.

what to buy: Crosby, Stills & Nash ♪♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1969, prod. CSN) is an impressive blend of voice and guitar, beginning with Stills's complex and timeless "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes" and continuing through Nash's bouncy "Marrakesh Express," Crosby's paean to Robert Kennedy, "Long Time Gone," and the apocalyptic fairy tale, "Wooden Ships." The first album with Young, Deja Vu ♪♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1970, prod. CSNY), solidified the quartet's status as the superstar American band of the Woodstock generation. With a hippie anthem by Crosby ("Almost Cut My Hair"), Stills's guitar heroics ("Carry On"), Nash's sing-along tunes ("Our House," "Teach Your Children"), and Young's introspective "Helpless," they still found room for another songwriter's work (Joni Mitchell's "Woodstock"). So Far ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1974, prod. CSNY, Bill Halverson), a greatest-hits package after only two albums, contains the high points of the first two releases as well as the scathing single that came out in the wake of the Kent State shootings, "Ohio/Find the Cost of Freedom."

what to buy next: The four-CD box set CSN ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1991, prod. Graham Nash, Gerry Tolman) is filled with strong material from all of the musicians' incarnations—solo and apart—but may be for serious fans only. The first two discs are essential; it's the final one, comprised of latter-day solo and CSN recordings, that's hard to listen to all the way through. The live 4 Way Street ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1971, prod. CSNY) became more attractive after it was expanded with four more songs on the 1992 CD reissue, but it may put off casual listeners who prefer the polish of the group's studio work. Crosby, Stills and Nash's solo albums have seldom been as satisfying as the group efforts, but a few are worthwhile, notably: Crosby's If I Could Only Remember My Name ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1971, prod. David Crosby); Stills's Stephen Stills ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1972, prod. Stephen Stills, Bill Halverson) and Manassas ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1972, prod. Chris Hillman, Dallas Taylor, Stephen Stills); and the short-lived Stills-Young Band's Long May You Run ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1976, prod. Stephen Stills).

what to avoid: Live It Up ♪ (Atlantic, 1990, prod. CSN, Joe Vitale, Stanley Johnston), a phone-in effort where the voices sound as synthetic as the layered keyboards backing them up. The exception: Stills's "Haven't We Lost Enough?"

the rest:
CSN ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1977)
Replay ♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1980)
Daylight Again ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1982)
Allies ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1983)
(With Neil Young) American Dream ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1988)
After the Storm ♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1994) worth searching for: The promotional CD single for Chippin' Away ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1989, prod. CSN, Stanley Johnston, Craig Doerge) is a song the trio—with guest James Taylor—recorded in reaction to the fall of the Berlin Wall. It was rush-released to radio but never made it on a CSN album.

solo outings:
David Crosby:
Oh Yes I Can ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1989)
Thousand Roads ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1993)
It's All Coming Back to Me Now ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1995)
King Biscuit Flower Hour Presents David Crosby ♪♪ (King Biscuit Flower Hour, 1996)

Crosby & Nash:
Graham Nash/David Crosby ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1972)
Wind on the Water ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1973)
Crosby-Nash Live ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1975)
Whistling Down the Wire ♪♪ (ABC, 1976)
Best of Crosby & Nash ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1978)
Another Stoney Evening ♪♪♪½ (Grateful Dead Records/Arista/BMG, 1997)

Graham Nash:
Songs for Beginners ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1972)
Wild Tales ♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1974)
Earth and Sky ♪♪ (Capitol, 1980)
Innocent Eyes ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1986)

editor's choice
5 celtic folk-rock albums

Moving Hearts, The Storm (Son, Ireland)
Silly Wizard, So Many Partings (Shanachie)
Van Morrison & The Chieftains, Irish Heartbeat (Mercury)
The Bothy Band, Old Hag You Have Killed Me (Green Linnet)
Dick Gaughan, Handful of Earth (Green Linnet)

Stephen Stills:
Stephen Stills 2 ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1971)
Down the Road ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1973)
Stills ♪♪ (Columbia, 1975)
Illegal Stills ♪♪ (Columbia, 1976)
The Best of Stephen Stills ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1977)
Thoroughfare Gap ♪♪ (Columbia, 1978)
Live ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1979)
Right by You ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1984)
Stills Alone ♪♪♪ (Vision, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ The Beatles, Bob Dylan, the Everly Brothers, Fred Neil ▶▶ America, the Eagles, Poco, Michael Hedges

see also: Neil Young

Brian Escamilla

Mike Cross

Born 1946, in Maryville, TN.

Mike Cross came to music at a late age, not playing guitar until he was a student at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. But in the years since, he's more than made up for lost time. Accompanying his Southern-tinged vocals on acoustic guitar and fiddle, Cross has drawn from traditional folk music, Delta blues, and the fiddle tunes of Appalachia and the Celtic Isles. His turbo-paced performances have made him a favorite at folk festivals throughout the United States. Cross has successfully written a number of serious songs including the romantic tune, "Not for the Love I Can Take," and the down-and-out anthem, "Hard Times (Trouble and Strife)." But his ability to write funny songs has been his true calling card. Many of his funniest songs, including "Mountain Mean," "Liquor in the Well," "Rocky Top Bar-B-Que," and "Elma Turl" take a Lil' Abner-esque view of the southern Appalachian region and address such issues as in-breeding and moonshining. "The Great Strip Polka Massacre" tells of an ill-fated card game. "The Scotsman," which was a novelty hit for Bryan Bowers, answers the question of what's beneath a Scottish kilt. Cross's ballad, "Leon McDuff," was used by the Dirt Band as their theme song at Farm Aid. His spiritual hymn, "The Twelve Disciples," is used by Sunday school teachers to teach the names of the Apostles. Cross's future releases include a collection of children's music and an album, Somewhere at Large in This World, which includes "Graveyard of the Atlantic," which he wrote for a recent public TV documentary about the North Carolina coast.

1976 j.d. crowe

what to buy: Creme De La Cross: Best of the Funny Stuff ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1994) reprises 14 humorous tunes from Cross's first eight albums and includes hillbilly classics—"Liquor in the Well," "Mountain Mean," "Elma Turl," and "Granny's Milk Cartons"—and the original version of "The Scotsman."

what to buy next: Live & Kickin ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1981, prod. Mike Cross, David McGinley) and Solo at Midnight ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1985, prod. Mike Cross) capture the excitement of Cross's concert performances. Both albums show the range of his material with the centerpieces being a lightning-fast rendition of the classic train song, "The Panama Limited," on Solo at Midnight, that blends earlier versions by Bukka White, Mississippi John Hurt, and Tom Rush, and "Good Night Medley," a foot-tapping olio of Celtic fiddle tunes on Live & Kickin.

what to avoid: Carolina Sky woof! (Sugar Hill, 1983, prod. Mike Cross, David McGinley) is devoid of humor and finds Cross at his weakest. Although "Not for the Love I Can Take" is a heartfelt romantic ballad, the remainder of the album is marked by darkness and sorrow.

the rest:
Child Prodigy ♪♪½ (Ghe, 1978)
The Bounty Hunter ♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1979)
Born in the Country ♪♪½ (Ghe, 1980)
Rock 'n' Rye ♪♪½ (Ghe, 1980)
Prodigal Son ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1989)
Irregular Guy ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1990)
High Powered, Low Flying ♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Bukka White, Mississippi John Hurt, Tom Rush, Doc Watson, the Chieftains
▶▶ Bryan Bowers

Craig Harris

J.D. Crowe /J.D. Crowe and the New South

Born August 27, 1937, in GA.

J.D. Crowe, banjo, vocals; Tony Rice, guitar, vocals; Ricky Skaggs, fiddle, mandolin; Keith Whitley, guitar, lead vocals; Doyle Lawson, mandolin, vocals; Jerry Douglas, dobro; Phil Leadbetter, dobro; Curt Chapman, bass; Greg Luck, guitar, lead vocals; Darrell Webb, mandolin, lead vocals; others.

Incorporating songs from country and rock sources and employing sidemen the likes of Ricky Skaggs, Tony Rice, Keith Whitley, Doyle Lawson, and Jerry Douglas, J.D. Crowe & the New South became major trend-setters in contemporary bluegrass. Their self-titled 1975 album is rightly considered an all-time classic. Crowe himself came from a traditional background, appearing with Mac Wiseman and Jimmy Martin during the 1950s. Crowe all but retired from the music business during the late 1980s but returned to touring with a new version of the New South in 1994 (earning the International Bluegrass Music Association's "Banjo Player of the Year" award despite not releasing an album) and released Flashback the following year. Crowe has also played with the Bluegrass Album Band.

what to buy: The classic J.D. Crowe & the New South ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1975) features one of the best line-ups of musicians ever assembled on a bluegrass album: Ricky Skaggs on mandolin and fiddle; Tony Rice on lead vocals and guitar; and Jerry Douglas on dobro. There is some fabulous instrumental work here, and Rice's lead vocals never sounded better.

what to buy next: Flashback ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995, prod. J.D. Crowe), Crowe's comeback album, is a backward glance at his developmental years with Jimmy Martin and the Osborne Brothers and the early days of the New South.

the rest:
Blackjack ♪♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1978)
Model Church ♪♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1978) Straight Ahead ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1986)

influences:
◀◀ Country Gentlemen, Jimmy Martin
▶▶ Ricky Skaggs, Boone Creek, Tony Rice, Jerry Douglas

Douglas Fulmer

Josh Crowe and David McLaughlin

Formed 1992, in Cherokee, NC.

Josh Crowe, vocals, guitar; David McLaughlin (born February 13, 1958, in Virginia), vocals, mandolin, guitar.

Josh Crowe left Raymond Fairchild to strike out on his own in 1992. He invited David McLaughlin, the mandolin player for the Johnson Mountain Boys, to appear with him in a two-guitar and voices arrangement at a North Carolina bluegrass festival. They sounded like they had been singing together for years and decided to turn the one-time appearance into a regular arrangement.

what's available: On Going Back ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Nancy McLaughlin), close harmonies and intricate acoustic guitar work characterize the 14 songs, including the Louvin Brothers' "Are You Wasting My Time," the Everly Brothers' "All I Have to Do Is Dream," and McLaughlin's fine original "Going Back to Old Virginia."

influences:

- The Everly Brothers, the Louvin Brothers, the Delmore Brothers
- The Gibson Brothers, the Whitstein Brothers

Douglas Fulmer

R. Crumb

See: Cheap Suit Serenaders

Johnny Cunningham

Born August 27, 1957, in Portobello, Scotland.

Johnny Cunningham is among the most talented and exciting musicians in contemporary Scottish music. He has, over the past 25 years, infused this somewhat hidebound style with a much-needed burst of energy and creativity. After a brief childhood in a musical family where he was surrounded by accordionists and pipers, Cunningham left home at age 14 to seek a life as a professional musician. Moving from one squalid Edinburgh flat to another, he met up with musicians Gordon Jones and Bob Thomas and the trio eventually formed Silly Wizard. After several personnel changes and years of destitution, the band took off, becoming a mainstay of the Scottish folk revival and performing all over the world. Their driving dance tunes and sweet songs helped to shake the cobwebs off of Scottish music during the 1970s and '80s, and led to years of tours and albums. Since leaving Silly Wizard, Cunningham has performed with Relativity, Nightnoise, and the rock band Raindogs. He has toured as a solo artist and as a member of the Celtic Fiddle Festival, and has produced numerous albums. Cunningham is a largely self-taught musician, who drew inspiration from the musicians he grew up around and avoided the Scottish fiddle scene with its restrictive emphasis on written collections and classical techniques. When pressed to choose a musical influence, Cunningham has named Tommy Potts, the Irish fiddler who, on his album The Liffey Banks, pulled, pushed, and stretched traditional Irish music as far as it would go without breaking. Cunningham is the same type of musician, well schooled in the traditional roots, carrying the music forward to new places.

what to buy: Peter and Wendy ♪♪♪♪½ (Alula Records, 1997, prod. Johnny Cunningham) is by far the most important, serious, and developed work of Cunningham's career. Written as the music for the Mabou Mines Theater Company's production of the 1911 J.M. Barrie novel Peter and Wendy, Cunningham's music successfully weds the sound of traditional Scottish music to the theater stage. Although all of the music for the show was written by Cunningham, it is built on a strong foundation of traditional Scottish music, liberally borrowing forms, progressions, and even whole sections of tunes from the repertoire. In order to bring his musical ideas to their fullest fruition, Cunningham surrounded himself with the cream of Irish-America's musicians including Seamus Egan, Solas's accordionist Mick McAuley, harpist Jay Ansill, and heavenly singer Susan McKeown. The result is a masterful soundtrack at once contemporary and rooted in tradition, full of beautiful playing and heartfelt singing. Sold in an attractive box with a beautiful full-color book inside, the packaging reflects the awesome care and effort that went into this production.

what to buy next: Kevin Burke, Johnny Cunningham, and Christian LeMaître's The Celtic Fiddle Festival ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. John Cunningham) features Cunningham alongside Irish master Kevin Burke and Breton fiddler Christian LeMaître. In a program split between solos and group playing, the three push each other forward, each showing off their awesome technique and mastery of their related yet different styles. Highlights include Burke's set of three reels from County Clare, Cunningham's sweet "Mist Covered Mountains of Home," and the trio's ferocious attack on two French-Canadian reels, "The Dionne" and "The Mouth of the Tobique." The tasteful accompaniment by guitarist John McGann allows each of the fiddlers to shine to the fullest. This is a great album for any fan of fiddle music, and could serve as an excellent introduction to these related musical styles. Fair Warning ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1983, prod. Johnny Cunningham, Vincent Moos) is a solid Scottish fiddle album, featuring some nice reel sets and a few beautiful slow airs. Accompanied by uilleann piper Tim Britton and guitarist Zan McLeod, among others, the playing is always solid but lacks a little of the fire of his Silly Wizard days. The highlights are the slow air "Logan Water," and the closing set of reels.

198 johnny cunningham

what to avoid: The Soul of Christmas: A Celtic Music Celebration with Thomas Moore ♪♪ (Upaya, 1997, prod. Johnny Cunningham) is a two-disc set containing one disc of New Age guru Thomas Moore discussing the nature of Christmas and one disc of performances of some well-known carols in a Celtic/New Age style. The musical performances feature Cunningham and many of the same musicians from the Peter and Wendy album as well as Kathy Mattea, Cathie Ryan, and vocalist Liam Tiernan. The songs are warm and comfortable but lacking in fire, especially those from Tiernan whose languid delivery slows everything it touches to an uncomfortable, glacial crawl. The instrumental settings are also slow and New-Agey for the most part, allowing only rare flashes of brilliance from these awesome performers (the one exception being a somewhat rousing "In Exelcis Deo" featuring Cunningham on fiddle). The most noticeable performances come from Cunningham who sings(!) the carol "I Saw Three Ships" and recites a couple of poems. The set is attractively packaged in a thick book containing Moore's discussion in essay form with some attractive, homey illustrations.

worth searching for: Cunningham's first solo album, Thoughts from Another World ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1982), is now out of print. It's a slightly surreal recording, but indicative of Cunningham's musical restlessness and willingness to experiment.

influences:

◀◀ Aly Bain, Chuck Fleming, Tommy Potts

▶▶ Old Blind Dogs, Shooglenifty, Alisdair Fraser

see also: Silly Wizard, Nightnoise, Phil Cunningham

Tony Ziselberger

Phil Cunningham

Born January 27, 1960, in Portobello, Scotland.

Phil Cunningham is a tremendous musician, composer, arranger, and producer who has been at the very center of Scottish music for close to thirty years. An outstanding accordionist, whistle player, and keyboardist, Phil got his start with the mighty Silly Wizard, whose high-energy recordings of traditional jigs, reels, and songs jump-started Scottish music in the 1970s and '80s. After that group's demise, Phil and his brother John joined with Micheal and Triona O'Dhomhnaill to form Relativity, whose sedate, somewhat experimental sound was a precursor to many of the more ethereal Celtic bands of the 1990s. Since Relativity's disbanding, Phil has recorded and toured as a solo artist and with Shetland fiddler Aly Bain, written his first classical composition, The Highlands and Islands Suite, and produced countless albums for artists ranging from folk-rockers Wolfestone to singer Connie Dover to Altan. He currently lives on the Isle of Skye where he and his wife Donna run a recording studio.

what to buy: Cunningham's second solo project, The Palomino Waltz ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1989, prod. Phil Cunningham), is a wonderful display of his writing and recording skills. He claims composer's credits on six of the album's nine tracks and writes variations for another. Among his outstanding compositions are the beautiful "Donna's Waltz," now a standard at sessions everywhere, and the sad slow air "The Ross Memorial Hospital." A lyrical album with four slow airs and a set of waltzes among the recording's nine tracks, the CD showcases Phil's outstanding, underrated whistle playing alongside his justly admired accordion work. For those of us who like Phil's killer accordion playing on dance tunes, there are a few sets of reels and some tricky strathspeys in which we can admire his outstanding technique. This is a well-produced album, with tasteful electric keyboards (also played by Mr. Cunningham) augmenting but not upstaging the tunes, and some nice guest appearances from fiddler Aly Bain and piper Finlay MacRae.

what to buy next: Airs and Graces ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1984, prod. Phil Cunningham, Neil Ross) was Cunningham's first solo recording, and shows off his awesome accordion playing to great effect. Another showcase for Cunningham's own tunes, this one includes his famous air "Miss Rowan Davies" and a whole bunch of great reels, including "Andy Stewart's" and "Hogtie's Reel." In addition to the accordion, instruments played by the multitalented Cunningham on this recording include, whistle, keyboards, guitar, and cittern. The accompaniment is a little more traditional than on his second recording, with the synthesizer used more selectively and sparingly, and the piano and guitar filling the gaps.

what to avoid: In the world of Scotch whiskey, a blend can be pleasant, solid, tasty, even charming, but the true treasures are

Johnny Cunningham (© Jack Vartoogian)

2000

catie curtis

to be found among the single malts where the individual character of the whiskey stands out. So it is with this duet between Aly Bain and Phil Cunningham. When this awesome duo recorded The Pearl ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Phil Cunningham) expectations ran high. After all, here were two of the great kings of Scottish music working together, pushing each other to greater and greater musical heights. Shetland-born Aly Bain is a great fiddler with a host of rare tunes who can alternately rev it up on the reels or make you cry with the airs. Phil Cunningham can also stir it up or tone it down with the best of 'em, plays everything, and writes all those beautiful tunes. So how come this record never gets going? The reels are all solid, the slow pieces are pretty, but outside of a reprise of "The Pearl," which Phil wrote and recorded back in his Silly Wizard days, nothing stands out. These guys are both masters, but they seem to hold each other back, settling for a pleasant middle ground, when they could have done so much more. As is the case with fine Scotch whiskey, stick with the solos and leave this disappointing blend alone.

worth searching for: Against the Storm (Shanachie, 1984) is a now out-of-print album featuring Phil and his brother John. It featured some tasty playing, and Shanachie's reluctance to reissue it is a mystery. Phil also has a tunebook, The Phil Cunningham Collection, Vol. 1, which includes many of his fine compositions.

influences:

⏪ Jimmy Shand

⏩ Shooglenifty, Wolfestone, Old Blind Dogs, Karen Tweed

see also: Silly Wizard

Tony Ziselberger

Catie Curtis

Born in Maine.

Catie Curtis began playing drums in her teens but soon picked up a guitar and began playing in her hometown of Saco, Maine, moving on to coffeehouses during her years in college at Brown University. She moved to San Francisco after graduating and worked as a waitress while working on her playing and songwriting. She toured nationally for several years, playing folk clubs, theaters, and bars before being signed by Guardian in 1995. Curtis's early experience with drums is evident in her rhythmic, often percussive style. Curtis has been described as a story collector and her songs gather poignant slices of life and make them universal and accessible. Her often soaring, always warm vocal style is the perfect vehicle to channel songs of social justice, family, friendship, and love. She values truth and dignity both in her own life and in the music she creates, a music that is intensely personal and vulnerable.

what to buy: Truth from Lies ♪♪♪♪ (Guardian, 1995, prod. Darleen Wilson, David Kershenbaum) represents Curtis's major label debut and is a fine collection of stories and personal vignettes. "Troubled Mind" is a sensitive plea for closeness as Curtis opens up to reveal her feelings. "I'm tired from all the weight/I'm tired from being strong/So won't you come and stay and let me lay down in your arms/Down in your arms." "Dad's Yard," an eloquent, moving tribute to her father, brings goosebumps to the skin and tears to the eye. "So if you need something when times get hard/You can probably find it in my dad's yard/And if you need hope/If you're coming apart/You can surely find it in my dad's heart." Making a powerful and affirming statement on alternative relationships, "Radical" is a strong statement that love will win out over prejudice.

what to buy next: On From Years to Hours ♪♪♪♪ (Mongoose Music, 1991, prod. Darleen Wilson) Curtis mixes the personal and the political, the local and the global, and brings the sensibility of someone who has been in the trenches (she was a former social worker) with people with colorful and sometimes desperate stories. On the personal side, the songs are mainly of relationships that didn't make it and the title song, "Mine Fields (From Years to Hours)," is a perfect vehicle for Curtis's soaring, expansive vocals. "It don't matter how I walk/I could get blown away/Underneath the soil and the flowers/I can hear a ticking down/from years to hours." Another, "Got Me Wondering," takes a dissolving relationship and defiantly tells it like it was. Liz Hamill's bluesy, in-your-face harmonica defines the mood of this no-apologies song. "You'd think I'd miss the letters and the conversation/You'd think I'd miss a good friend but I don't know if you were one/Still I liked your style and the way you looked at me/Got me wondering if the love was all that deep." "Hole in the Bucket," inspired by Curtis's observations, is a universal theme for folks that depend on a system that doesn't always work the way it should. "There's a hole in the bucket and the people fall out/There's money underground but you can't get it out." The production of Darleen Wilson is also notable on From Years to Hours. Wilson has brought in a fine group of musicians and mixed drums, sax, bass, piano, and others together in arrangements that never overpower Curtis's jazz influenced vocals. This is the sort of production that can take simple folk songs and, without diminishing them, make them much more accessible and interesting.

the rest:
Catie Curtis ♪♪♪ (Guardian, 1997)

worth searching for: Dandelion ♪♪♪ (1989) is an early self-produced cassette that contains a couple of gems that Curtis still performs occasionally in concert, including the title cut and "Backbone."

influences:
◀◀ Melanie, Bonnie Raitt, James Taylor, Greg Brown, John Gorka

▶▶ Cheryl Wheeler, Anne Hills

Denise Sofranko

Cusan Tan

See: Robin Huw Bowen

Paul Daigle

Born April 2, 1958, in Church Point, LA.

Paul Daigle is a uniquely Cajun performer. He was a solid traditional Cajun accordionist by age 14, but refused to form a band or record for 11 years. Not a singer, Daigle found Robert Elkins to handle vocal chores in 1984. Even more important has been Paul's long collaboration with Pierre Daigle (no relation). Pierre is a school teacher and the author of Tears, Love, and Laughter: The Story of the Cajuns and Their Music, a self-published history of Cajun music and musicians. Additionally, though he is not a musician, Pierre is a songwriter, and his songs—as performed by Paul Daigle and his group Cajun Gold—simply dominated the local Cajun music scene for much of the 1980s. The combination of new songs sung in Cajun French, with a strong traditional quality to them, and Paul Daigle's wonderful accordion playing proved overwhelmingly popular. These records broke ground that would be followed by younger songwriters like Christine Balfa and Kristi Guillory.

what to buy: Paul Daigle—Robert Elkins & Cajun Gold ♪♪♪♪½ (Swallow, 1996, prod. Pierre Daigle) mixes together the elements of Paul Daigle's music that has made it so popular in Louisiana. There are his superb accordion chops, highlighted on "Two-Step a Paul Daigle (Paul Daigle Two-Step)," and the songs of Pierre Daigle that have become standards, including "Valse De La Vie (The Waltz of Life)," "Lumiere Dans Ton Chassis (The Light in Your Window)," and "Georgia Lou." The record also features two of the best fiddlers anywhere, Michael Doucet and Ken Smith.

what to buy next: Est-Ce Que Tu Pleur ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1990, prod. Pierre Daigle) has more of Pierre Daigle's songs, notably the popular "Heritage Waltz." It is hard to ignore the way that Paul Daigle can rip through a Cajun classic like the "Perridon Two Step" or squeeze every last soulful note out of the "Evangeline Waltz."

worth searching for: Pierre Daigle's Tears, Love, and Laughter: The Story of the Cajuns and Their Music ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow Publications, 1987) was the first readily available book in English on Cajun music. The first part of the book is a history of the Cajuns, ending with a list of Revolutionary War soldiers. The second half of the book is devoted to short biographical sketches with photos of Cajun musicians. Some are fairly well known in Cajun music; others are extremely obscure.

influences:
◀◀ Aldus Roger, Lawrence Walker, Nathan Abshire

▶▶ Sheryl Cormier, Kristi Guillory

Jared Snyder

Bruce Daigrepont

Born July 11, 1958, in New Orleans, LA.

Born and raised in New Orleans, Bruce Daigrepont was first drawn to the sounds of bluegrass and learned to play Scruggs-style banjo. He became interested in Cajun music while attending the Festival Acadien in Lafayette. The festival included young performers like Michael Doucet and Zachary Richard, who were updating traditional styles and singing in Cajun French. Daigrepont learned the language as a child during summers spent with his grandparents in rural Avoyelles Parish. He taught himself to play accordion and began playing around New Orleans. Interestingly, until Daigrepont came along, New Orleans was not particularly appreciative of Cajun music or Cajun dancing. Daigrepont is a good songwriter and his albums are packed with original songs, which stick close to Cajun tradition. You can hear the history in some of his best songs, like "Disco et Fais Do-Do" and "Acadie a la Louisiane," which broke ground for the "Jeune" generation of songwriters (Kristi Guillory, Christine Balfa, Horace Trahan).

2002 malcolm dalglish

what to buy: On Stir Up the Roux ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Bruce Daigrepont), the sound fidelity of the recording is so good it's shocking. Perhaps Daigrepont's perspective as a New Orleans Cajun helped him develop a sound that could compete with the sonic quality of the rock and country records that Cajuns were listening to. Think of Daigrepont as the John Fogerty of Cajun music. There is drive and authenticity in his songs, as well as a modern sensibility clearly aware of other music.

what to buy next: Coeur Des Cajuns ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Bruce Daigrepont) features "Acadie a la Louisiane," which has turned out to be a hit for Daigrepont in New Brunswick amongst the Acadian people. Daigrepont's production flourishes are meant to bring non-French speakers into the music in as comfortable a way as he can create.

the rest:
Petit Cadeau ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Aldus Roger, Iry Lejeune
▶▶ Horace Trahan, Steve Riley, Kristi Guillory

Jared Snyder

Malcolm Dalglish

Born August 14, 1952.

Malcolm Dalglish is a hammer dulcimer player and composer from Bloomington, Indiana, whose work draws on his diverse background in choir, theater, and folk music. A soprano during the early 1960s, Dalglish toured the U.S. and Europe as a vocal soloist with the Columbus Boychoir (now the American Boychoir). Acting became the focus of his secondary education and he took on numerous leading roles in both school and community productions. Dalglish heard his first hammer dulcimer in Tennessee in 1972, and an infatuation snowballed into a music career. During his college years he designed, built, and sold more than 60 different hammer dulcimers, some of them experimental in construction. This enabled Dalglish to support himself while studying at the Cincinnati College Conservatory of Music. Starting in the summer of 1975, he staged 10 street dance festivals in Appalachian neighborhoods throughout the city with his Cincinnati Country Dance Orchestra, founded the Cincinnati Folklife Center, and successfully completed a year-long project entitled Traditional Ethnic Music and the Elderly, resulting in numerous concerts and a recording by elderly masters in the region. Throughout this time he amassed a large collection of vocal folk music from around the world. It is this repertoire of songs from the aural tradition that provides the context for all of his compositions. He formed a folk duo that became the trio, Metamora, with multi-instrumentalists Grey Larsen and Pete Sutherland. This collaboration produced six albums, including the musical score for the Disney feature film Tuck Everlasting. Metamora enjoyed frequent appearances on National Public Radio's All Things Considered and Garrison Keillor's A Prairie Home Companion. Dalglish also contributed to albums by Claudia Schmidt, John McCutcheon, and Debby McClatchy. During the late '80s he wrote numerous innovative dulcimer works, many of which were released as his contributions to the various Windham Hill seasonal samplers. He also won the Frets Magazine Instrumentalist of the Year award, which led to commissions from George Winston, the Pilobolus Dance Theater, the Mary Blackburn Dance company, and others. Beginning in the '90s, realizing the power of the voice and the word from his earlier work in choir and theater, Dalglish started to write material that would be more accessible to young singers and family audiences. He is presently a contributing composer for the American Boychoir, the St. Olaf Choir, Henry Leck's Choral Series with Plymouth Music, and Mary Goetze's Choral Series with Boosey & Hawkes. His theatrical, folk-oriented approach to music learning and choral composition has made him a featured guest at numerous music educator conventions around the country.

what to buy: Hymnody of Earth ♪♪♪♪ (Ooolitic Music, 1997, prod. Malcolm Dalglish, David Weber) is a ceremony of songs for choir, hammer dulcimer, and percussion, composed and arranged by Dalglish, featuring the poetry of Kentucky farmer and writer Wendell Berry. He is joined by the Ooolites, young singers ranging in age from 14 to 20, whose extraordinarily fresh and engaging voices are underscored by frame-drum virtuoso Glen Velez. According to Dalglish, "an oolite with two 'o's is a small egg-like fossil formation found here in southern Indiana limestone. Ooolite with three 'o's is a mouth and sound formation that begins with an exciting discovery and ends with a grin." Selections on this recording include "Over the River," about the flight of a few swallows over a flooded river, and "For the Future," a five-part round connecting trees, birds, singing, and the future. The second recording featuring Dalglish with the Ooolites is Pleasure ♪♪♪♪ (Ooolitic Music, 1997, prod. Malcolm Dalglish, David Weber). This album features songs of birds and critters, story ballads, mouth music, lullabies, laments, spirituals, and dance songs. Outstanding selections include "A Psalm of Life," with words by Henry W. Longfellow, setting and arrangement by Dalglish, and "Woody Knows Nothin'," an American folk song arranged by Dalglish, commissioned by the Indiana University Children's Choir. These two recordings are available directly from the artist at Ooolitic Music, 1111 East Wylie Street, Bloomington, IN 47401; and from Alcazar at (800)541-9904.

what to buy next: Jogging the Memory ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill Records, 1985, prod. Elliott Mazer, William Ackerman, Malcolm Dalglish) is Dalglish's only other solo recording and is more typical of his earlier work with both Grey Larsen and with Metamora.

solo outings:

Malcolm Dalglish & Grey Larsen:

Banish Misfortune ♪♪♪½ (June Appal Recordings, 1977)
The First Autumn ♪♪♪ (June Appal Recordings, 1978) (cassette only) Thunderhead ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1982)

Metamora:

Root Crops and Ground Cover ♪♪♪ (Tarquel Music, 1984) (cassette only)
Metamora ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill Records, 1985)
The Great Road ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill Records, 1987) Morning Walk ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill Records, 1988)

influences:

◀◀ Eric Leinsdorf, Bill Irwin, Julie Taymour

▶▶ Dan Duggan, Joemy Wilson

see also: Pete Sutherland

Heidi Cerrigione

Jackie Daly

Born June 22, 1945, in Kanturck, County Cork, Ireland.

Accordionist Jackie Daly is among the most widely known performers of the distinctive Sliabh Luachra style of Irish music. Closely associated with the wild, hilly region between counties Kerry and Cork, the Sliabh Luachra style is music for set dancing, marked by strongly rhythmic fiddle and box playing and a reliance on polkas and slides, as opposed to the reels and jigs more common in the rest of Ireland. Daly grew up in this region, learning music from his father and from local masters Jim Keefe and Sean Lynch. He developed a rhythmic style of box playing well-suited to the Sliabh Luachra style and won the All-Ireland title in 1974. After a short stint playing with fiddler Seamus Creagh, he was asked to join the supergroup De Dannan in 1975. He toured with De Dannan for close to 10 years, appearing on some of that storied band's finest recordings. In 1986, he joined Kevin Burke, Andy Irvine, and Arty McGlynn to form Patrick Street, with whom he continues to tour and record. Daly has also been a member of Arcady and has toured widely with fiddle player Maire O'Keefe.

what to buy: Although the music of Kerry is by now well known to Irish music fans, this was by no means the case in 1977, the year Music from Sliabh Luachra ♪♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1977/Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Tony Engle) was originally issued. Here was a revelation, a powerful young box player with a collection of tunes largely unknown outside of his hometown playing with verve and drive in a style different from every other accordion player of the time. Featuring a great collection of slides and polkas from his native Sliabh Luachra, along with some fine slow airs, the album has lost none of its appeal in the intervening 20 years and was rightly among the first four titles issued by Green Linnet in its Celtic Classics series. For serious fans of Irish music this album is required listening.

what to buy next: Eavesdropper ♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1981/Green Linnet, 1981, prod. Kevin Burke, Jackie Daly), a duet album made in 1979, features some of the closest duet playing one is likely to hear, with sparse guitar or piano accompaniment (or none at all), and an eclectic repertoire of lesser-known tunes. Among the latter, a beautiful arrangement with guitar of an uncommon version of "The Blackbird" stands out. Cork flute player Conal Ó Gráda guests on a few tracks, and so does Paul Brady on piano.

worth searching for: Jackie Daly Agus Seamus Creagh ♪♪♪♪ (Gael Linn, 1977, prod. Jackie Daly, Seamus Creagh) is another outstanding album from Daly, this time playing duets with fiddler Seamus Creagh. Ably accompanied by bodhrán player Colm Murphy, the boys tear through another fine collection of dance tunes and one song. This is a great collection of music, and for fans of the Sliabh Luachra style, it, too, is essential. When you've recorded a classic in your first attempt in the studio, then go join De Dannan for The Mist Covered Mountain and Star Spangled Molly—arguably the two finest albums that group has made—then go and form Patrick Street, and finally join Arcady, what happens if you make an album that's just okay? Well, Many's a Wild Night ♪♪♪ (Gael Linn, 1995, prod. Jackie Daly) is the answer. It's not a bad collection of tunes, the playing is good, though a little lacking in fire, and the production is the best of any of his solo albums. It's a solid album but pales a little in comparison with the recordings discussed above. Both of these albums are imports but can occasionally be found on this side of the Atlantic.

influences:

◀◀ Dennis Murphy & Julia Clifford, Padraig O'Keefe, Johnny O'Leary

▶▶ The Smoky Chimney, Sliabh Notes, Maire O'Keefe

see also: De Dannan, Patrick Street, Arcady

Tony Ziselberger

Darby and Tarlton

Formed c. 1927, in Columbus, GA.

Tom Darby (born 1890?, in Columbus, GA; died 1971, in Columbus, GA); Jimmie Tarlton (born May 8, 1892, in Chesterfield County, SC; died November 29, 1979, in Phenix City, AL).

In 1924, Vernon Dalhart's hit Victor recording of "Wreck of the Old 97"/"The Prisoner's Song" convinced the young recording industry that there was money to be made in producing "hillbilly" material, and within a few years the hunt was on in earnest throughout the South for new talent, with makeshift studios springing up in hotels and warehouses, and posters announcing auditions plastered on every telephone pole in town. The most famous of these sessions took place during the summer of 1927 in Bristol, on the Tennessee/Virginia border, where Victor's Ralph Peer first recorded both Jimmie Rodgers and the Carter Family. During April of that year, however, an earlier session in Atlanta marked the recording debut of Tom Darby and Jimmie Tarlton, and although they faded during the Depression years and were nearly forgotten, they still stand as one of the most important and distinctive of the early country music acts. Both were raised in musical families, and Tom Darby claimed himself a second cousin of Riley Puckett, the legendary blind guitarist with the Skillet Lickers. He also maintained over his life that he had written "Columbus Stockade Blues" (one of their early hits), a song that has been done countless times over the years by many, notably Doc Watson. While Darby had spent most of his life in Georgia, Tarlton was the son of an itinerant sharecropper and spent much of his youth traveling from farm to farm, continuing to wander as a young man. Originally a banjo player, he eventually picked up the slide guitar, and while in California met Frank Ferera, a noted Hawaiian and steel guitar player, who broadened his perspective on the art of slide guitar. Newly married around 1927, Tarlton came to Columbus, Georgia, to look for work in the textile mills and met Tom Darby through a mutual friend who suggested they play music together. Darby played guitar, but with an unusual fingerpicking style played in an open tuning that emphasized a prominent, strong rhythm with the thumb. Combined with Tarlton's lap-style Hawaiian guitar, they formed one of the more remarkable instrumental duets of the day. While the advent of the dobro, the resonator guitar that grew out of the Hawaiian guitar, was still several years in the future, it's fair to say that Tarlton's playing, along with that of Ellsworth Cozzens of Jimmie Rodgers's band, was the prototype for the dobro sound of players like Pete "Bashful Brother Oswald" Kirby and Cliff Carlisle that became such an important facet of country music. Yet even more remarkable than their playing were the vocals. Where the Carter Family, for example, strove for close-knit, tight harmony, Darby and Tarlton were much more free-form in their approach to their singing. Both had strong, solid voices, and sang in a style that echoed Vernon Dalhart's, yet at times when one would be diving down to a lower octave, the other would be passing him on the way up, occasionally breaking into a falsetto wail. While far from the "blue yodels" of Jimmie Rodgers, the effect is startling. Even though the Depression put an end to their careers as recording artists, Darby and Tarlton are still one of the prime examples of the links between the blues and what we've come to know as "country music."

what's available: On the Banks of a Lonely River ♪♪♪♪ (County, 1994, prod. Gary B. Reid) is an excellent introductory collection of early Darby & Tarlton material and many of the tracks on the CD were transcribed directly from rare 78 rpm discs recorded between 1927 and 1930. Although "Columbus Stockade Blues" is not among the 17 recordings on this CD, several of their best-known hits do appear: "Lonesome Railroad," "Captain Won't You Let Me Go Home," "New Birmingham Jail," "Lonesome in the Pines," and the collection's title cut, "On the Banks of a Lonely River." Robert Nobley's liner notes add valuable history and perspective on this seminal country music duo. For the shopper with deeper pockets and a clear desire to thoroughly investigate their music, Complete Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1995) is relatively expensive—in the $70 range—but is certainly the definitive three-CD collection of all the duo's Columbia and Victor recordings made during the late '20s and early '30s. As is the case with most Bear Family collections, the mastering is excellent and the enclosed booklet tells you everything you could ever possibly need to know about this distinctive Southern duo. If you can afford it, this is definitely the one to buy.

worth searching for: There are undoubtedly a number of "early country" anthologies that include one or more Darby & Tarlton selections, but one to especially keep an eye out for is the two-

CD set White Country Blues: 1926–1938, A Lighter Shade of Blue ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1993), which features Darby & Tarlton on two of the 48 cuts, "Sweet Sarah Blues" and "Frankie Dean" (which also appears on the County CD). Taken as a whole, the Columbia set does a good job of putting Tom and Jimmie into the context of their musical times, with such contemporaries as Charlie Poole and Cliff Carlisle. For the listener interested in the cross-pollination going on between black and white musicians during the first half of the twentieth century, this collection is a real eye-opener.

influences:

◀◀ Clayton "Pappy" McMichen, Riley Puckett, Gid Tanner, Ernest V. "Pop" Stoneman

▶▶ Roy Acuff, the Delmore Brothers, Doc Watson

John Lupton

Mason Daring /Jeanie Stahl and Mason Daring

Born September 26, 1949, in Ithaca, NY.

Mason Daring's virtuoso acoustic guitar playing, warm vocal harmonies, and craftsman-like songwriting first attracted attention when he performed as a duo with vocalist and acoustic guitarist Jeanie Stahl. Since then, his greatest impact has come as a record producer and composer of film soundtracks, which include the John Sayles–produced films Lianna, The Brother from Another Planet, Matewan, and Passion Fish. Daring and Stahl first played together shortly after meeting in a folk music coffeehouse in Marblehead, Massachusetts, in 1974. In addition to performing together as a duo for more than a decade, they performed, along with Bill Staines, Guy Van Duser, and Billy Novick, in a folk supergroup, the Passim All-Stars.

what to buy: The Early Years ♪♪♪♪ (Daring, 1992, prod. Mason Daring, Jeanie Stahl, Robin Batteau) assembles cuts from Daring and Stahl's first decade of recordings and includes harmonious interpretations of Bill Staines's "River" and "The Boats They Come and the Boats They Go" and Batteau's "Take This Heart" and "The Eyes of the Beholder." Daring shows his songwriting skills with three original tunes—"Cinderella," "Shiloh," and "Marblehead Morning."

what to buy next: Daring's film soundtrack Matewan ♪♪♪½ (Daring, 1982, prod. Mason Daring) combines country blues, union songs, and ethnic material and features songs by John Hammond and Hazel Dickens. It is available on cassette only.

the rest:

(With Jeanie Stahl) Sweet Melodies in the Night ♪♪♪ (Daring, 1978)
(With Jeanie Stahl) Heartbreak ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1980)

influences:

◀◀ Bill Staines, Tom Rush, Paul Simon

▶▶ Jeanie Stahl, Guy Van Duser and Billy Novick

see also: Jeanie Stahl

Craig Harris

Erik Darling

See: Rooftop Singers

Shaun Davey

See: Rita Connolly

The Rev. Gary Davis

Born April 30, 1896, in Laurens, SC. Died May 5, 1972, in Hammonton, NJ.

When it comes to virtuoso blues guitarists of the first generation whose influence is still felt today, the Reverend Gary Davis is at the top of the list. His inventiveness on 6- and 12-string guitars, complex picking patterns, lightning-fast runs, and use of different keys influenced not only his contemporaries like Blind Boy Fuller but informs the work of Taj Mahal, Dave Van Ronk, Jackson Browne, Bob Dylan, Jorma Kaukonen, David Bromberg, and Ry Cooder—the latter four actually studied guitar with him. One of the best Piedmont blues stylists, Davis launched his career playing the streets of Durham, North Carolina, in the 1920s. Prior to that, as a teenager, he came under the tutelage of Willie Walker in Greenville, South Carolina, playing in a string band and developing his guitar playing. Although sources differ as to when his blindness occurred, it appears that he was in his teens, and he became a prototype for blind street singers. Businessman J.B. Long recorded Davis in 1935, but after a couple blues numbers, Davis became adamant about playing religious songs. He was ordained in 1937 and added "Reverend" before his name. He moved to New York in 1944, where he preached and sang on the streets of Harlem. His recording career picked up in the 1960s when appearances at Newport and other folk festivals revived interest in his work; two documentary films have been made on his life. He continued to perform until his death in 1972, leaving behind a legacy that still resonates.

guy davis

what to buy: Of the early recordings that are available, The Complete Early Recordings of the Reverend Gary Davis ♪♪♪♪♪ (Yazoo, 1994) best captures Davis from those J.B. Long sessions and a couple of cuts from 1949. Songs such as "I'm Throwin' up My Hand" demonstrate guitar playing that sounds like an end run on a piano. His religious fervor is captured in cuts such as "The Great Change in Me," where he sounds like he is preaching to the flock, "I Saw the Light," convincing proof that God and religious faith have transformed him, and the slow country blues of "O Lord, Search My Heart," which has a country/western feel. This remastered set has eliminated some of the tape hiss from those early sessions without compromising the rest of the sound. Pure Religion and Bad Company ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1991) features material recorded in 1957. Still strongly religious and fervid as ever, Davis's fiery guitar skills are highlighted on instrumental tracks like "Mountain Jack," the deliberate "Cocaine Blues," "Evening Sun," and "Hesitation Blues." His proselytizing is forceful in "Right Now," just as his voice is on "Crucifixion."

what to buy next: Say No to the Devil ♪♪♪♪½ (Bluesville, 1961, prod. Kenneth Goldstein) highlights Davis's religious fervor, but what makes it more interesting for collectors is the haunting harmonica work. On "No One Can Do Me Like Jesus," his voice echoes the sound of his harp. But it is still the combination of finger picking and scorching vocals on the title cut, as well as on "Lord, I Looked Down the Road" and "Tryin' to Get to Heaven in Due Time," that remind us how masterfully Davis blended blues and gospel. Blues & Ragtime ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993, prod. Stefan Grossman) is the most interesting disc of his later work (between 1962–66), because of the inclusion of longer tracks such as the almost rambling "Hesitation Blues," which clocks in at nearly 12 minutes. It best captures how Davis abandoned some of his religious fervor in the 1960s and returned to some of his early roots with ragtime pieces such as "Cincinnati Flow Rag" (which he learned back in the Willie Walker days) and "Cocaine Blues," and it even displays his sense of humor on a seven-minute "She's Funny That Way." Live at Newport ♪♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1967) is a must for anyone who wants the live Davis experience, with a short but effective and fast-fingered turn on "Buck Dance" and great vocals that demonstrate his range on the gospel-tinged "You Got to Move," "I've Done All My Singing for My Lord," and the country blues of "Lovin' Spoonful."

what to avoid: At the Sign of the Sun ♪♪♪ (Gospel/Heritage, 1962) is not particularly bad, but the recording quality for this period is better represented on other discs.

the rest:

Gospel Blues & Street Songs ♪♪♪♪½ (Original Blues Classics, 1961)
From Blues to Gospel ♪♪♪½ (Biograph, 1992)
Harlem Street Singer ♪♪♪♪ (Prestige/Bluesville, 1992)
Complete Recorded Works 1935–49 ♪♪♪♪½ (Document, 1994)
I Am a True Vine (Gospel Heritage, 1994)
Sign of the Sun 1962 (Gospel Heritage, 1994)
O Glory—The Apolostic Studio Sessions ♪♪♪ (Genes, 1995)
Live & Kicking ♪♪♪½ (Just a Memory, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Willie Walker, Blind Boy Fuller, Blind Lemon Jefferson

▶▶ Bob Dylan, Ry Cooder, Taj Mahal, Jorma Kaukonen, Dave Van Ronk, Peter, Paul and Mary

John Koetzner

Guy Davis

Born May 12, 1952, in New York, NY.

Guitarist/songwriter/singer Guy Davis has exploded onto the blues scene as one of the most captivating performers of pre-World War II blues. His recordings are infused with his personal and deeply-felt connection to his African American cultural heritage. His commitment to the acoustic tradition, realized via 6- and 12-string guitar, slide guitar, harmonica, and washboard, creates a "time-capsule" feel to his recordings, even on his original material.

what's available: Davis, son of actor Ossie Davis, has recorded two albums. Call Down the Thunder ♪♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1996, prod. Joe Ferry, Guy Davis) blends classic Piedmont hokum stomp, old-time gospel, deft fingerpicking, and straight-up blues for a unique, original recording. Stomp Down Rider ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1995, prod. Thom Wolke), a live recording, is enjoyable but less intriguing than Call Down the Thunder, relying too heavily on the familiar legacy of Robert Johnson.

influences:

◀◀ Big Bill Broonzy, Rev. Gary Davis, Robert Johnson, Mance Lipscomb, Blind Willie McTell

▶▶ Keb' Mo'

Bryan Powell

Jimmie Davis

Born September 11, 1900(?), in Quitman, LA.

Born the oldest of 11 children to sharecroppers in northern Louisiana, Jimmie Davis began singing as a youngster in church. His subsequent interest in politics resulted in his twice being elected governor of Louisiana. Although he failed in his bid for a third term in 1971, he was elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame the following year. With a repertoire that included gospel standards, weepy ballads, and sexually suggestive blues numbers, Davis's appeal was certainly broad.

what to buy: Country Music Hall of Fame Series ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1991, prod. Country Music Foundation) is the only worthwhile collection of Davis's most familiar material currently available on CD. Compiled by the Country Music Foundation, the single disc mixes such classics as "You Are My Sunshine" and "Nobody's Darling but Mine" with a good cross-section of other chart toppers, plus a few of the racier records from his early Decca days.

what to buy next: Greatest Hits—Finest Performances ♪♪♪♪ (Sun Entertainment, 1995) contains re-recordings of many of his classics, with Davis in fine voice, and is a lively production that attempts to stay fairly close to the original versions.

influences:

◀◀ Jimmie Rodgers

▶▶ Ernest Tubb

Stephen L. Betts

Julie Davis

Born September 29, 1946, in Wray, CO.

Julie Davis is a Colorado multi-instrumentalist known for her storytelling and her musicianship. She teaches and performs with the autoharp, guitar, bowed psaltery, and folk flutes such as panpipes and gemshorn. Davis's academic background in early music contributes to her style, and she often performs her music for children with disabilities, patients in hospice care, and people with head trauma or Alzheimer's disease. She was honored to be part of the Outstanding Colorado Artists concert series in the early '90s.

what's available: Traveling Light ♪♪♪♪ (Winter Wind Music, 1994, prod. Julie Davis) is a pleasant folk collection of vocal and instrumental selections, from "Howl at the Moon" by Jim Ratts and John McEuen, to "Music Box Waltz" by Ron Wall and Mike Howard. Davis's consistently clear vocals are complemented by 16 talented musicians, including Harry Tuft (harmony vocals, guitar), Susan Hess (electric bass), Doug Berch (hammered dulcimer), Eric Levine (violin), Mary Stribling (harmony vocals, bass), and Daniel Jones (pedal steel). Davis's autoharp is featured throughout in well-planned arrangements, interacting superbly with the other instruments in interesting combinations. Traveling Light is available from Winter Wind Music, P. O. Box 1302, Nederland, CO 80466.

worth searching for: Heart Full of Song ♪♪♪ (Winter Wind Music, 1991, prod. Julie Davis) is the artist's debut recording of her favorite songs. Journey to the Fluted Mountain ♪♪♪ (Winter Wind Music, 1997, prod. Julie Davis) is an enchanting narration of the artist's journey on the Colorado Trail, with an occasional instrumental highlight. These two recordings are available from Winter Wind Music on cassette tape.

influences:

◀◀ Maybelle Carter, Sylvia Fricker, Alice Stewart

▶▶ Harvey Reid, June Maugery

Heidi Cerrigione

Julian Dawson

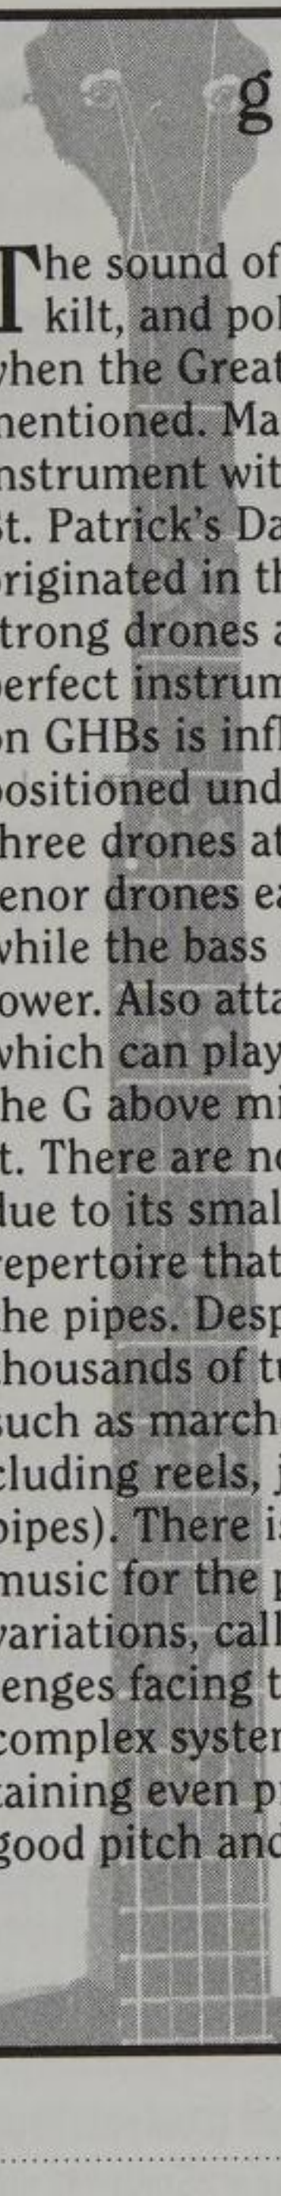
Born July 4, 1954, in London, England.

Julian Dawson makes pop music for smart people. Exquisitely produced and heartfully sung, it's singer-songwriter music gone uptown. Dawson was born to be influenced by American music; his birthday is Independence Day. He toured Germany in his youth before returning to England. His first three LPs (now out of print) were on Rough Trade and Polydor, but in 1990 he released his first American-based album, Live on the Radio, on Watermelon Records in Austin, Texas. He later joined Compass Records in Nashville, Tennessee. He was a founding member of Plainsong with Iain Matthews.

what to buy: Travel On ♪♪♪♪ (Watermelon, 1995, prod. Stewart Lerman, Steuart Smith, Garry Tallent) is a masterful pop album reminiscent of early Squeeze. Highlights include "Sigh Heart Don't Break" and "New Columbus," the latter an acid-tinged look at America.

what to buy next: Move Over, Darling ♪♪♪♪ (Compass, 1997, prod. Julian Dawson, Stewart Lerman, Steuart Smith) is more acoustically oriented, mellower, and more introspective, the title track notwithstanding. It highlights Dawson's adeptness at rendering tongue-in-cheek songs like the title track, a Doris Day chestnut, with earnest affection. (Similarly inclined artists the Roches and Richard Thompson guest on this track.) A tribute to Elvis Presley, "It Came from Memphis," draws on a bit of Dawson trivia: Elvis was rehearsing his Sun Sessions the day Dawson was born. "Locked out of Paradise," reminiscent of the Eagles' "New Kid in Town," has a wistful charm.

2008 de danann



great highland bagpipe

The sound of the drone, the sway of the kilt, and police funerals all come to mind when the Great Highland Bagpipe (GHB) is mentioned. Many mistakenly associate this instrument with the Irish, due to its use in St. Patrick's Day parades, but it actually originated in the highlands of Scotland. The strong drones and piercing sound make it a perfect instrument for use outdoors. The bag on GHBs is inflated by mouth and generally positioned under the left arm. There are three drones attached to the bag; the two tenor drones each play an A below middle C, while the bass drone plays the A an octave lower. Also attached to the bag is a chanter, which can play nine different notes, from the G above middle C to the second A above it. There are no accidentals available, and due to its small range there is a limited repertoire that can be converted for play on the pipes. Despite this limitation, there are thousands of tunes available to the piper, such as marches, airs, and dance tunes (including reels, jigs, strathspeys, and hornpipes). There is also a form of classical music for the pipes, based on a theme and variations, called the piobaireachd. Challenges facing the piper include learning a complex system of grace notes and maintaining even pressure on the bag to keep good pitch and tone.

Jo Hughey Morrison

De Danann /De Dannan

Formed 1974, in Spiddal, County Galway, Ireland.

Frankie Gavin, fiddle, viola, flute, tin whistle, piano, vocals (1974–present); Alec Finn, bouzouki, guitar, keyboards (1974–present); Charlie Piggot, banjo, melodeon, tin whistle (1974–82); Johnny "Ringo" McDonagh, bodhrán, bones (1974–present); Dolores Keane, vocals, flute (1974–75, 1985–88); Johnny Moynihan, vocals, bouzouki, mandolin, tin whistle (1976–79); Jackie Daly, accordion (1980–82); Maura O'Connell, vocals (1981–82); Mary Black, vocals (1983–87); Martin O'Connor, accordion (1983–88); Caroline Lavelle, cello (1987–88); Eleanor Shanley, vocals (1988–92); Aidan Coffey, accordion (1988–94); Colm Murphy, bodhrán, bones (1988–present); Adele O'Dwyer, cello (1988–90); Tommy Flemming, vocals (1994–present); Derek Hickey, accordion (1996–present).

If Planxty and the Bothy Band could be called the Beatles of Irish traditional music, then De Danann would have to be its Rolling Stones. For not only has this Galway-based band been extremely prolific and adventurous in its choice of repertoire and its arrangements, it has also shown remarkable longevity for a folk band, rivaling the Chieftains as an Irish musical institution. Over the 24 years of its existence, De Danann (they now spell their name De Dannan) has gone through numerous changes in its lineup, in the process launching the careers of several of today's best known Irish folk vocalists. Yet the band has kept the driving, straight-ahead, session-like sound of its beginnings. All along, fiddle player extraordinaire Frankie Gavin and subtle bouzouki accompanist Alec Finn have remained the driving force behind that sound. Raised in a musical family, Gavin was a precocious fiddle and flute virtuoso who was still in school when the band came together at Galway-area sessions. Yorkshire-born Finn was involved in the Dublin blues scene in the 1960s before he moved to Spiddal, County Galway, and was given a bouzouki with which he started to frequent local Irish music sessions. There he met Gavin, Kerry banjo and melodeon player Charlie Piggot, and master of the bodhrán and bones Johnny "Ringo" McDonagh. When a few professional engagements came their way, the lads became a band. They recorded their first album in 1975 with the help of singer Dolores Keane, a neighbor of Gavin. However, Keane left soon after the album came out to perform with her husband John Faulkner. Former Sweeney's Men and Planxty member Johnny Moynihan became the band's singer for a time, appearing on its second LP, Selected Jigs, Reels and Songs, in 1978. By the time The Mist Covered Mountain came out two years later, the band had again lost its vocalist—the album's vocal tracks were

the rest:
Live on the Radio ♪♪♪ (Watermelon, 1990)

influences:
◀◀ The Beatles, Don Dixon, Gerry Rafferty, Otis Redding

▶▶ Lee Collinson

see also: Iain Matthews

Pamela Murray Winters

of traditional Connemara singers—but gained a great instrumentalist in the person of Kerry accordion player Jackie Daly. It wasn't long before the band members were able to talk singer Maura O'Connell into joining, just in time to record The Star Spangled Molly, the band's first truly successful album. True to form, however, the band soon lost half of its lineup when Piggot, O'Connell, and Daly left in rapid succession. Piggot was disabled in a freak accident and could no longer play, O'Connell was more interested in pursuing a career in country music, and Daly needed a change. Gavin and Finn found accordion wizard Martin O'Connor and singer Mary Black to replace them, and the new lineup produced the memorable Song for Ireland in 1983. When the band recorded Anthem two years later, its members asked Dolores Keane if she would sing "Let It Be" on it. Somehow she ended up recording a duet with Black and was back in the band in no time at all. This may well have been De Danann's finest lineup, yet it proved to be an embarrassment of riches. There was too much talent to go around, both instrumentally and vocally, and not enough time in concert sets to accommodate it all. Black left the band in 1987. At about the same time, Gavin recruited cellist Caroline Lavelle after a chance encounter on the streets of London, and the band went on to release the nostalgic Ballroom, using the new spelling, De Dannan, for its name. Another major change in the lineup occurred the very next year, as the band recorded A Jacket of Batteries in 1988 with Leitrim singer Eleanor Shanley, Aidan Coffey on accordion, Colm Murphy on bodhrán and bones, and cellist Adele O'Dwyer replacing Lavelle. Minus O'Dwyer, the same band recorded 1/2 Set in Harlem in 1991, continuing their experimentation with contemporary songwriters' material, and adding gospel and klezmer musicians to their unlikely stew. Although De Dannan's fate has seemed uncertain since, as various members dropped out or pursued solo projects, the band toured extensively in 1994 with a new singer, Tommy Flemming, and a new cassette entitled World Tour 1994—Studio & Live Recordings. In 1996, accordionist Derek Hickey having replaced Aidan Coffey, De Dannan put out Hibernian Rhapsody, named after the band's intricate instrumental arrangement of Queen's rock anthem "Bohemian Rhapsody."

what to buy: As De Danann were without a designated singer when they recorded The Mist Covered Mountain ♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1980/Shanachie, 1980, prod. De Danann), the band opted to include vocal tracks by two prominent exponents of Connemara seán-nos singing, Seán Ó Conaire and Tom Pháidín Tom, the latter just months before his death at age 85. Despite good intentions, the juxtaposition of their essentially unaccompanied, rhythmically free style of singing with the band's bouzouki and whistle accompaniments often sounds at odds. However, the strength of the album is in the exciting instrumentals spun by Gavin, Piggot, and newly recruited Kerry accordionist Jackie Daly. The spectacular opening and closing sets of jigs into reels and the arrangement of O'Carolan's "Mr. O'Connor" are among the best instrumental tracks of the band's recorded output. The Star Spangled Molly ♪♪♪♪½ (Ogham, 1981/Shanachie, 1981, prod. De Danann, Nicky Ryan) is De Danann's salute to Irish-American music of the 1920s and 1930s and to Gavin's favorite performers of the period, the Flanagan Brothers and Sligo fiddler James Morrison. Despite Maura O'Connell's reservations about performing Irish songs, this album established her as a powerful singer and her name is forever associated with the delightful Irish-American stage songs "Maggie" and "My Irish Molly-O." Frankie Gavin also sings, on "I'm Leaving Tipperary," one of the more joyous Irish emigration songs, borrowed from a 78 by the Boston-based Dan Sullivan's Shamrock Band. The instrumental tracks, featuring once again the tight playing of Gavin and Daly, are as energetic as ever. In the Flanagan Brothers' "New Irish Barn Dance," the instrumentation, adding piano accompaniment and hammered dulcimer touches, brilliantly captures the tune's music-hall character, while other medleys of reels and jigs echo performers of long ago: John McKenna, P.J. Conlon, John Kimmel. Oddly enough, probably the best known track on the album, even if totally irrelevant to its theme, would have to be De Danann's famous arrangement of the Beatles' "Hey Jude," in which the melody gets transformed into a hornpipe. The die-hard De Danann fan may want to acquire the CD version recently put out by K-Tel Music as De Danann (K-Tel, 1996), as it includes two additional tracks, one instrumental and one vocal, which were originally released on a single. The stunning voice of Mary Black is one reason for which Song for Ireland ♪♪♪♪½ (Cara, 1983/Sugar Hill, 1983, prod. Nick Bicât, De Danann) remains one of the band's most memorable albums. Black shines on the much-copied title song, "Song for Ireland"; the classic song by Stephen Foster, "Hard Times"; and "Live Not Where I Love," while Gavin is the vocalist on the Irish-American stage song, "Barney from Killarney." There are gems as well among the instrumentals, most of which were recorded while Daly was still in the band. Of the ones to which Daly's successor, Martin O'Connor, contributed, the opening "Arrival of the Queen of Sheba (In Galway)," based on Handel's sinfonia from his oratorio Solomon, is such a rollicking tour-de-force that one may start thinking the composer would have enjoyed it that way. The Best of De Danann (Shanachie, 1987) ♪♪♪♪½ is an excellent anthology based on the band's first four albums. In particular, it includes some tracks from De Danann's first two LPs, De Danann and Selected Jigs, Reels and Songs, both no longer available.

what to buy next: On Anthem ♪♪♪½ (Dara, 1985, prod. John Dunford, Alec Finn, Frankie Gavin), Mary Black and Dolores Keane share vocal duties and, not surprisingly, this is the first De Danann album to give equal time to vocal and instrumental tracks. Black's voice is perfectly suited for the emotionally charged "Johnny I Hardly Knew Ye" and "Paddy's Lamentation." On the strength of their earlier success of "Hey Jude," the band asked Keane to sing on another Beatles classic, "Let It Be." Gavin and O'Connor continue to work their instrumental magic on medleys of traditional dance tunes. Noteworthy exceptions (although in traditional style) are Gavin's own three-part jig, "The Wren's Nest," and "Ríl an Spidéal," a set of reels by Leitrim fiddle and piano player Charlie Lennon. A sequel of sorts to The Star Spangled Molly, Ballroom ♪♪♪½ (WEA/Green Linnet, 1987, prod. De Dannan) celebrates the music of the Irish and Irish-American dance halls of earlier decades. Pioneer musicians like John Kimmel and Eleanor Neary are remembered through dance tunes they recorded or composed, while Dolores Keane invites us to the waltz with her renditions of classics like "Teddy O'Neill," "The Sweet Forget-Me-Not," and the closing medley starting with "The Stone Outside Dan Murphy's Door." A touch of exoticism is provided by a medley of "Jewish Reels," learned from New York klezmer musician Andy Statman. A Jacket of Batteries ♪♪♪ (Harmac, 1988/Green Linnet, 1988, prod. Alec Finn, Frankie Gavin, Jimmy McCarthy, Dan Fitzgerald) introduced us to a new group of talented musicians, accordionist Aidan Coffey, who proves a worthy successor to Daly and O'Connor, singer Eleanor Shanley, and drummer Colm Murphy. For better of for worse, it also gave a definite impression that the band settled on a formula: throw in a few jigs and reels, a piece of classical music ("The Rambles of Bach"), a Beatles song ("Eleanor Rigby"), and a mixture of traditional and contemporary songs. Still, there are good moments, for instance the reel medley of "Sailing In" (Charlie Lennon) and "Alice's Reel" (Frankie Gavin), or Shanley's passionate rendition of the classic "Carrickfergus." De Dannan's latest, Hibernian Rhapsody ♪♪♪ (The Bee's Knees, 1995/Shanachie, 1996, prod. De Dannan), shows that despite the years Finn and Gavin can still find talented musicians—this time accordionist Derek Hickey and singer Tommy Flemming—willing to join the band. Hickey proves up to the task as Gavin's new "straight man," although the band's virtuoso but pointless instrumental arrangement of Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody" is among the least interesting tracks. The intense singing style of Tommy Flemming suggests a comparison with that of Mary Black, but recent live appearances by the band show that the new combination works better there than on record. It's worth noting that the Bees Knees release and the Shanachie release are slightly different in that the former contains the songs "The Water Is Wide" and "Fios Na Siochanna" and the instrumental "Do It in Jig Time," but does not have the song "Captain Jack" (composed by Meg Davis but not credited) and the instrumental "Sean McGuire's" which are on the U.S. version. So the Irish version has 16 tracks, the U.S. 15.

what to avoid: 1/2 Set in Harlem ♪♪½ (The Bee's Knees, 1991/Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Arty McGlynn, Frankie Gavin, Alec Finn), which follows to some extent the formula of A Jacket of Batteries, is De Dannan's most adventurous album to date. However, the inclusion of gospel singers on songs like "Operator," and of klezmer-style clarinet and horn on a set of Irish hornpipes, ends up sounding more incongruous than successful.

worth searching for: The first two De Danann albums, De Danann ♪♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1975, prod. Dónal Lunny) and Selected Jigs, Reels and Songs ♪♪♪♪½ (Decca, 1978, prod. Carsten Linde, Nicky Ryan, De Danann), are not currently available. They remain among the band's very best and are well worth searching for. On De Danann, which was available on CD from Polydor for a short while, classic instrumental tracks like the jig medley "Tripping up the Stairs," featuring Finn's fine bouzouki harmonies, or Gavin's fiddle solo on "The Gold Ring" are almost eclipsed by Dolores Keane's sean-nos (old style) singing on songs like "The Rambling Irishman" or "The Shores of Lough Bran." Selected Jigs, Reels and Songs had a similar effect as the Bothy Band's 1975 album in that musicians would learn each and every tune on it to play at sessions. The opening set of jigs into reels, "Tom Billy's," the medley of Wren tunes played on three whistles, and the beautifully crafted counterpoint of bouzoukis and mandolins on "Carolan's Draught" are among the most memorable instrumental moments of that album. Johnny Moynihan's contribution will be remembered for his wonderful renditions of songs like "The Flower of Sweet Strabane" and "Barbara Allen." A few live tracks recorded in Germany in 1989 by the Jacket of Batteries lineup can be found on Ireland ♪♪♪♪ (WDR, 1993, prod. Christian Scholze, Jean Trouillet, Jan Reichow), perhaps more interesting for its recordings of Frankie Gavin with piper Liam O'Flynn and of the band Altan.

solo outings:
Alec Finn:

Blue Shamrock ♪♪♪½ (Cross Border Media, 1994/Celtic Heartbeat, 1994)

Jackie Daly:
Jackie Daly and Séamus Creagh ♪♪♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1977)
Music From Sliabh Luachra ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1977/Green Linnet 1992)
(With Kevin Burke) Eavesdropper ♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1981/Green Linnet, 1981)
Many's a Wild Night ♪♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1995)

Martin O'Connor:
The Connachtman's Rambles ♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1979)
Perpetual Motion ♪♪♪½ (Claddagh, 1990)
Chatterbox ♪♪♪½ (Dara, 1993)

Colm Murphy:
An Bodhrán ♪♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1996)

influences:

The Flanagan Brothers, James Morrison, John McKenna, Dan Sullivan's Shamrock Band, Planxty

Arcady, Altan, Dervish, Patrick Street, Four Men and a Dog, Skylark see also: Frankie Gavin, Dolores Keane, Maura O'Connell, Mary Black

Philippe Varlet

Dead Can Dance

Formed 1983, in London, England.

Brendan Perry, vocals, instruments; Lisa Gerrard, vocals, instruments; Peter Ulrich, percussion.

Easily one of the most influential and recognizable bands of the modern gothic scene, Dead Can Dance (DCD) has built a significant career based on French depressive poetry (Charles Baudelaire), Eastern European field chants, baroque instrumentation, and religious symbolism. Listeners who coddled artists such as Enya and Enigma might find DCD a bit challenging, but if those artists leave you flat or longing for something along the same lines with a little more substance, DCD would likely fill the bill. As one of the earliest members of the elite 4AD record label, the band served to bolster the company's image of releasing arty, if pretentious, material. DCD's following is small but fervent, and it wasn't until 1994 that the group's catalog was available domestically in the U.S.

what to buy: The Baudelaire-inspired Spleen and Ideal ♪♪♪♪♪ (4AD, 1985, prod. Dead Can Dance, John Rivers) represents the band's style at its best—brooding music in a minor key with beautifully atmospheric male and female vocals. Dead Can Dance ♪♪♪♪ (4AD, 1984, prod. Dead Can Dance, John Rivers), while more stylized than Spleen—it's almost pop-Gregorian music—is less lush and more synthesizer-driven than the band's later efforts. It's still a brilliant piece of work, however. The CD includes the band's first EP, In the Garden of Arcane Delights, as a bonus—the only way to get these songs domestically.

what to buy next: DCD's progression from its early goth/baroque influences into the fully cohesive two-piece unit of Perry and Gerrard is realized on Aion ♪♪♪♪½ (4AD, 1990, prod. Dead Can Dance). This album showcases their organic instrumentation, strong medieval ties, and the use of field chants, may pole dances, flutes, and stunning vocal arrangements.

what to avoid: The Serpent's Egg ♪♪ (4AD, 1988, prod. Dead Can Dance, John Rivers) is a muddled album by a band at a turning point.

the rest:
Within the Realm of a Dying Sun ♪♪♪½ (4AD, 1987)
Into the Labyrinth ♪♪♪ (4AD, 1993)
A Passage in Time ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1994)
Toward the Within ♪♪♪♪ (4AD, 1994)
Spiritchaser ♪♪♪♪ (4AD, 1996)

worth searching for: Dead Can Dance ♪♪♪ (4AD, 1994) is a promotional-only 13-track sampler recapping the band's history up to 1994; it was issued to introduce the previously import-only material to radio programmers upon the release of Into the Labyrinth.

solo outings:
Lisa Gerrard:
The Mirror Pool ♪♪♪½ (4AD, 1995)

Peter Ulrich:
Talaquaha's Leaving ♪♪♪♪½ (Corner Stone, 1990) (12" single)

influences:

Gregorian chants, Bauhaus, medieval minstrels, chamber orchestras, Sisters of Mercy, Johann Sebastian Bach

Enigma, Enya, Deep Forest, Cocteau Twins, This Mortal Coil (features DCD), SPK, Cindytalk, Le Mystere De Voix Bulgare

Tim Davis

Déanta

Formed 1987, in Portglenone, County Antrim, Northern Ireland. Disbanded 1998.

Kate O'Brien, fiddle, viola (1987–98); Eoghan O'Brien, guitar, harp (1987–98); Mary Dillon, vocals, harp, keyboards, guitar (1987–98);

geno delafose

Clódagh Warnock, bouzouki, fiddle, bodhrán, percussion (1987–98); Paul Mullan, flute, tin whistle (1987–94); Deirdre Havlin, flute, tin whistle (1994–98); Rosie Mulholland, keyboards, fiddle (1994–98).

Déanta (meaning "done" or "complete" in Gaelic) is one of a handful of bands from Northern Ireland to have gained some recognition in the Irish traditional music scene. The band came together in the early 1980s, when the O'Briens, Clódagh Warnock, and a few others entered the Gael-Linn Slógadh competitions—also a launching board for the famous Donegal band Clannad some years before. As Déanta, they began to attract attention during a tour of the United States shortly after the release of their first album, Déanta, in 1990. At the core of the band were siblings Kate and Eoghan O'Brien, who anchored the instrumental sound, and lead singer Mary Dillon, whose stunning voice won her two All-Ireland titles. Warnock contributed to the texture of the accompaniments with bouzouki and percussion, while flute players, Paul Mullan on the first album and Deirdre Havlin on the next two, joined in with fiddler Kate O'Brien for the instrumentals. An unusual aspect of the band is that its members all held day jobs and remained part-time musicians, touring very little and playing instead at large festivals now and then. Unfortunately, the unavoidable pressure seems to have finally taken its toll, as the band announced its breakup early in 1998. Even more unexpected, perhaps, is that, despite their part-time status, Déanta became one of Green Linnet's best-selling bands. The reason is the delightful music the musicians of Déanta made together. The material was carefully chosen and brilliantly arranged, often composed by band members, as in the case of most dance tunes on their latest album, Whisper of a Secret. And even when they played such dance tunes, the musicians of Déanta seemed more interested in bringing out beauty and refinement than going for speed and drive. A most pleasing change of pace, literally.

what's available: Déanta ♪♪♪♪ (Spring, 1990/Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Steven Cooney, Déanta) is a short CD with only nine tracks, but most of them are gems. Dillon sings beautifully on "The Green Fields of Canada" and "Dark Iniseoghain," but it is the band's arrangement as well as her performance which make "Willie Taylor" the essential track on this album. Instrumental tracks like the energetic "Flight of the Termite," featuring Kate O'Brien's own "Katie's Reel," or the elegant "Harp Airs," composed by Dillon and Eoghan O'Brien, are especially enjoyable. Ready for the Storm ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Neil Martin) is Déanta's first album recorded for Green Linnet and features the two new members—Deirdre Havlin, a most worthy successor to Paul Mullan on flute and whistle, and Rosie Mulholland on keyboards and fiddle. This gives a great boost to the instrumentals by increasing the possibilities for timbral and textural shadings. Once again, the emphasis is on new compositions, by band members and other respected musicians like Chicago fiddler Liz Carroll or Sligo/Roscommon flute player Josie McDermott. Although Dillon does well on Dougie MacLean's "Ready for the Storm" and on "The Lakes of Pontchartrain," a courageous choice considering the song was previously recorded by no other than Planxty and Paul Brady, her singing of Alastair McDonald's "Culloden's Harvest" and the traditional "The Benedy Glen" are the showstoppers on the album. Déanta's latest, Whisper of a Secret ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Neil Martin), continues very much in the same vein but takes it up a notch. Deirdre Havlin's flute playing has become most impressive and her duets with Kate O'Brien are all the stronger for it. The two continue to produce superb new tunes, for instance "Beaujolais in Boston" and "Jimmy's Trip to Clonmel" from the opening track, and perform them at an appropriately relaxed pace for melodies that deserve savoring. Mary Dillon's singing is as exquisite as ever, particularly on "Willie and Mary" and on Andy Stewart's "Where Are You," and is well served by the band's sparse but intensely musical arrangements.

influences:

- Ann O'Brien, the Chieftains, Planxty, the Bothy Band, Clannad
- Altan, Dervish

Philippe Varlet

Geno Delafose

Born February 6, 1971, in Eunice, LA.

Geno Delafose started playing the frattoir in the Eunice Playboys at age seven. His father, John Delafose, was already playing with older brothers Tony and John Jr. in the band. As time went by Geno graduated to drums and then to warming up the crowd on accordion before his father came on. By 1992 he was sharing much of the time on stage with his father playing accordion. When the eldest Delafose died in 1994, Geno was ready to take over leadership of the band. Geno plays a more tuneful and traditional style than almost any of his peers. There is definitely less of a rock influence and more of a Cajun influence in his music. Having been both the drummer and frattoir player for the Eunice Playboys, he knows what constitutes a great beat—as does his cousin, Jermaine Jack, whose excellent drum work always provides propulsion.

what to buy: Although it is rare for a studio recording of zydeco music to capture the passion and feeling of the live band experience, That's What I'm Talking About! ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Scott Billington) comes very close. This may not be the hottest zydeco in terms of sales, but it is about as good as unadulterated Creole zydeco music gets. From the opening of "Geno's Two Step," this band just kicks. They acknowledge the popularity of the newer sounds, like Beau Jocque's, but they stay very much in the Eunice Playboys tradition that Geno grew up in; their sound does have, though, some of the Creole swing that Boozoo Chavis seems to pull off so effortlessly. This CD covers several of John Delafose's tunes and all are excellent; even Geno's obligatory soulful ballad, "Teardrops" (complete with B3 organ), fits right in. There are no frills and no wasted notes here—just the pure sound of this band doing what they do best.

what to buy next: French Rockin' Boogie ♪♪♪½ (Rounder 1994, prod. Scott Billington) tries too hard to be more than it needs to be. Maybe it's the horns in the Delafose sound, or maybe it's just Geno trying to find his way out of the large shadow cast by his father. This is still a very good zydeco record, maybe just not a great Delafose record.

worth searching for: Pere Et Garcon Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Scott Billington) is a John Delafose CD recorded in 1991 and it shows off the talents of Geno. The record rocks and bounces in the way that good rural zydeco bands should, with an excellent tune selection that updates old Creole tunes like "Midland Two Step" and integrates non-traditional material like Ray Charles's "I Can't Stop Loving You."

influences:

◀◀ Clifton Chenier, Amédée Ardoin, Marc Savoy

▶▶ Keith Frank

see also: John Delafose

Jared Snyder

John Delafose

Born April 16, 1939, in Duralde, LA. Died September 17, 1994, in Lawtell, LA.

John Delafose led one of the best rural zydeco bands from 1980 to the time of his death in 1994. Delafose played single-row, triple-row, and piano accordion, all in his own style. A solid singer, there was always something—an "X" factor, a certain soulful quality—that separated his music from others. Part of that came from the family oriented nature of the Eunice Playboys, which included sons Tony, John Jr., and Geno, cousin Jermaine Jack, and the guitar and bass combination of brothers Charles and Joseph Prudhomme. There was more of a confluence of Cajun music and old Creole songs in Delafose's music and less R&B and blues. You could still hear the influence of Clifton Chenier in his music, but more of the French part of Chenier's repertoire.

what to buy: Blues Stay Away from Me ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Scott Billington) is worthwhile just for the Linda Barry cover art. The Eunice Playboys swing across this record. Great Creole music is about subtle syncopation and moving the beat around—not the bone-crunching double-clutching that dominates now. This record features John Delafose on fiddle on a couple of tunes, with the accordion duties shared between himself and his son Geno.

what to buy next: Joe Pete Got Two Women ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1988, prod. Chris Strachwitz) features an earlier version of the Eunice Playboys, when John's sons Geno and Tony enthusiastically drove the music on drums and frattoir, the always solid Prudhomme brothers locked into tight grooves, and John Delafose laid out the accordion and vocal lines on top. It might slip and sway a little, but the music always grooves.

the rest:

Zydeco Man ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1980)
Uncle Bud Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1982)
Heartaches & Hot Steps ♪♪♪½ (Maison de Soul, 1984)
Zydeco Excitement! ♪♪♪½ (Maison de Soul, 1984)
Pere Et Garcon Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992)

worth searching for: Tribute to John Delafose (Deep South Records, 1995, prod. Tony Delafose) is a recording directed by John's son Tony honoring his father's music. A number of zydeco stars take their turn interpreting the music of John Delafose, including C.J. Chenier, Buckwheat Zydeco, and Terrance Simien.

influences:

◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin, Canray Fontenot

▶▶ Chris Ardoin, Geno Delafose, Keith Frank

see also: Geno Delafose

Jared Snyder

2/4 the delmore brothers

The Delmore Brothers

Formed in Elkmont, AL.

Alton Delmore (born December 25, 1908, in Elkmont, AL; died June 8, 1964), vocals, guitar; Rabon Delmore (born December 3, 1916, in Elkmont, AL; died December 4, 1952), vocals, guitar.

This very important duo melded the close harmonies common to brother acts with intricate, syncopated guitar and tenor guitar instrumental accompaniment to create a new and highly influential duet sound. Their 1930s-era Bluebird recordings featured such timeless numbers as "Brown's Ferry Blues," "Gonna Lay down My Old Guitar," and "Weary Lonesome Blues." On their later records for King, they featured blues-influenced rhythms and lyrics, electric guitar, and Wayne Raney's harmonica accompaniment, creating many classics, including "Freight Train Boogie," "Hillbilly Boogie," and "Pan American Boogie," along with many other standards, including "Blues Stay Away from Me." They also recorded as members of the Brown's Ferry Four, a gospel quartet, along with Grandpa Jones and Merle Travis or Red Foley. The Delmore Brothers were early members of the Grand Ole Opry and remain an important influence in the music to this day.

what to buy: Brown's Ferry Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (County, 1995, reissue prod. Gary B. Reid) is chock full of classic Bluebird material from 1933 to 1940, including "Blue Railroad Train," "Gonna Lay down My Old Guitar," "The Weary Lonesome Blues," and "Brown's Ferry Blues." On Sand Mountain Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (County, 1986, reissue prod. Dave Freeman), early King recordings find the Delmores in a transitional mode between the pristine brother harmony duets they'd cut for Bluebird and the later, more raucous King boogies. Twenty classic blues and boogies are included on Freight Train Boogie ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ace, 1993), an English reissue of the Delmore's King material. This disc features top-notch instrumentalists of the day, including Wayne Raney, Homer & Jethro, Merle Travis, and others.

what to buy next: When They Let the Hammer Down ♪♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1984, prod. Richard Weize), a German reissue, features 18 tracks performed by the great country harmonica player Wayne Raney alongside the Delmores—classic stuff. There is some duplication with the Ace King compilation, but they're both well worth having.

influences:

◀◀ The Blue Sky Boys, Jimmie Rodgers

▶▶ Louvin Brothers, the O'Kanes

Randy Pitts

Iris DeMent

Born 1961, in Paragould, AR.

A songwriter with an unerring ability to tell moving and believable stories, and a singer who possesses a distinctive voice that seems to embody the entire tradition of American folk music, Iris DeMent is an anomaly in the music business. She was born the youngest of eight children in Arkansas and raised in California in a strict Pentecostal family. She never thought of being a musician until she was in her late 20s. She has become something of a folk singer's folk singer—among her illustrious fans are John Prine (who wrote the liner notes for her debut album), Emmylou Harris, and Nanci Griffith.

what to buy: DeMent's songs on her debut, Infamous Angel ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992/Warner Bros., 1993, prod. Jim Rooney), including "Let the Mystery Be" and "Our Town" (later used over the credits for the final episode of the TV show Northern Exposure), already sound like Smoky Mountain traditionals. Her follow-up album, My Life ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1994, prod. Jim Rooney), is a thoughtful though implacably sad and deeply moving collection of autobiographical songs and fictional sketches.

what to buy next: DeMent's third album, The Way I Should Be ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996, prod. Randy Scruggs), finds the vocalist broadening her stylistic base and adding frank political broadsides to her repertoire of self-observations and narrative vignettes. The sound is a bit more commercial, but the substance of the songs is not.

influences:

◀◀ Kitty Wells, Joni Mitchell, Emmylou Harris, Nanci Griffith, Bruce Springsteen

▶▶ Kate Campbell

Gil Asakawa

Sandy Denny /Fotheringay

Born January 6, 1947, in London, England. Died April 21, 1978, in London, England. Fotheringay formed 1970; disbanded 1970.

Sandy Denny, vocals, piano, guitar; Trevor Lucas, vocals, guitar; Jerry Donahue, lead guitar, backing vocals; Gerry Conway, drums, backing vocals; Pat Donaldson, bass, backing vocals.

Sandy Denny may have been the greatest female pop vocalist England ever produced. It's especially sad, then, that her career path was uneven and cut short by death. Denny began singing in London folk clubs during the mid-1960s during the "folk revival" that also spawned Simon and Garfunkel, the various Steeleyes and Fairports, and many others. Her clear, bold voice brought her gigs as a member of the Strawbs (formerly the Strawberry Hill Boys) and later Fairport Convention. She may be best remembered for her work with Fairport, though she was in the group for fewer than four years (1968–69, 1974–75). Her work alongside Trevor Lucas (later her husband) with the group Fotheringay produced one excellent album and swelled her following to the point that Melody Maker's readers twice voted her Britain's top "girl singer." She was a gifted composer with a keen ear for poetry; like Joni Mitchell, she undoubtedly influenced many singer-songwriters of the confessional/cryptic school, for better or worse. Her best-known and most often covered composition is "Who Knows Where the Time Goes?"—recorded by Judy Collins, among others. Pulled between the quiet joys of home and the love of performing, between solo and group work, and between the gusts of her own moody spirit, Denny never received the acclaim she deserved in her lifetime. Her death at 31, from a fall down the stairs, perpetuated her legend. Still, her music at its best transcends the clichés of her era and the limits of her iconic status.

what to buy: At press time, Denny's finest album, Sandy ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1972, prod. Trevor Lucas), was out of print in the United States. An alternative is The North Star Grassman and the Ravens ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1971, prod. Sandy Denny, Richard Thompson, John Wood), which includes her antiwar song "John the Gun"; the stirring, strange "Late November"; and the eerie "Next Time Around," which may have been written about ex-lover Jackson Frank. It also shows Denny having fun: duetting with Richard Thompson on Dylan's "Down in the Flood" and taking a rockabilly turn on "Let's Jump the Broomstick."

what to buy next: Fotheringay ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1970, prod. Joe Boyd) is a fitting souvenir of a band with a very short life and a surfeit of talented members. Some of Denny's best-known songs are here, including "The Pond and the Stream" and the somber "The Sea," but the album's greatest charms are in the songs led by Trevor Lucas, including Bob Dylan's "Too Much of Nothing." Many have said that Denny's version of "Banks of the Nile" is the best thing she ever recorded. Jerry Donahue's guitar work is consistently elegant and fiery.

what to avoid: One Last Sad Refrain ♪♪½ (Nixed), documenting Denny's last recorded concert in 1977, shows the dangers in buying unauthorized recordings; the dismal technical quality saps all of the nuances from what should be a rich, intriguing listening experience. Someone was out to make bucks; don't waste yours.

the rest:

Sandy Denny and the Strawbs ♪♪♪½ (Sonet Dansk Grammofon A/S, 1973/Hannibal, 1991)
Like An Old Fashioned Waltz ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1973)
Rendezvous ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1977)
The Original Sandy Denny ♪♪♪½ (Mooncrest, 1978/1991)
Who Knows Where the Time Goes? ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1985)
The Best of Sandy Denny ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1987)
The Attic Tracks 1972–1984 ♪♪♪♪½ (Raven, 1995)

worth searching for: The BBC Sessions 1971–73 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Strange Fruit, 1997) was available for four months by mail order before being pulled. It's Denny at the peak of her powers and in stripped-down settings that showcase her songwriting and singing without any distracting production touches. It's flawed; it's uneven; it's brilliant.

influences:

◀◀ Anne Briggs, Dave Swarbrick, Bob Dylan, Joni Mitchell

▶▶ Linda Thompson, Mary Black, Dolores Keane, Vikki Clayton, Susan McKeown, Lisa Moscatiello

see also: Fairport Convention

Pamela Murray Winters

John Denver

Born Henry John Deutschendorf, December 31, 1943. Died October 12, 1997, in Monterey, CA.

Rock 'n' roll hipsters always had a football-field day making fun of John Denver for writing sunny, heartfelt songs about his unconditional love for trees, flowers, mountains, and his wife. His early albums veered toward cheesy, middle-of-the-road balladry—we can even remember tuning into a Chicago Top 40 station in 1974 and hearing "Annie's Song" playing while the DJ imitated a cow mooing in the background. But Denver also built a sturdy career out of three impressive country-folk albums—1971's Poems, Prayers and Promises (which featured his career-making hit, "Take Me Home, Country Roads"), 1972's Rocky Mountain High, and 1974's Back Home Again—that deftly captured the aw-shucks charm and jaded innocence that eventually elevated him to superstardom. Odd obsessions like his desire to fly in space and do TV specials with the Muppets aside, Denver possessed an unwavering commitment to humanitarian causes: he stood up for what he believed in, no matter how "far-out" or square it made him look. In 1985, he bravely stood beside Frank Zappa and Dee Snider of Twisted Sister at a Senate hearing to argue against mandatory labeling of sexually explicit rock albums. Still active in the Windstar Foundation, an environmental education and research center that he co-founded, and a reforestation project called Plant-It 2000, Denver was even regaining some of his artistic stature when the single-engine airplane he was piloting crashed into Monterey Bay, California. The enjoyable Wildlife Concert, a 1995 two-CD set benefiting the Wildlife Conservation Society, marked one of the rare perfect marriages of his social consciousness and his art; and a 1997 one-disc distillation of that album called The Best of John Denver Live put his name back on the country charts for the first time in a decade.

john denver

what to buy: Of his early works still in print, Rocky Mountain High ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1972, prod. Milton Okun) sounds the least dated, with fine musicianship, genuinely gorgeous ballads in "For Baby (For Bobbie)" and "Goodbye Again," and cool John Prine ("Paradise") and Beatles ("Mother Nature's Son") covers. An Evening with John Denver ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1975, prod. Milton Okun) captures him at the height of his fame, when all he had to do was utter "far out" to get applause. The between-song patter and notorious cover of New Christy Minstrels leader Randy Sparks's "Saturday Night in Toledo, Ohio" complement the faithful renderings of the hits. Even before his death, RCA shoehorned his hits into a plethora of oddly conceived compilations. If you're not one of the 10 million who already own 1973's Greatest Hits, then the two-disc Rocky Mountain Collection ♪♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1996, prod. various) is the best primer, with 39 tracks spanning his career and his three greatest-hits collections. It's a better bargain than the sprawling four-CD Country Roads Collection and makes more chronological sense than Reader's Digest's His Greatest Hits and Finest Performances.

what to buy next: The songs are familiar, but the rustic feel, acoustic band instrumentation, and laid-back, Western-flavored arrangements on The Wildlife Concert ♪♪♪♪½ (Sony/Legacy, 1995, prod. Bob Irwin) lend an infectious vitality to this two-disc set. We could do without the flutes, but former Elvis Presley guitarist James Burton adds some tasteful fuel to "Wild Montana Skies," "Back Home Again," and an Appalachian-style "Take Me Home, Country Roads." A one-CD version inexplicably titled The Best of John Denver Live ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1997, prod. Bob Irwin) takes 15 of the original 28 performances and adds previously unreleased live versions of "I Think I'd Rather Be a Cowboy" and "I'm Sorry."

what to avoid: In a weak attempt at a concept album about the environment, Earth Songs ♪ (Windstar, 1990, prod. Lee Holdridge) gathers lackluster re-recordings of such '70s favorites as "Rocky Mountain Suite," "Rocky Mountain High," "Sunshine on My Shoulders," "Eagle and the Hawk," and "Calypso" around new compositions like "Earth Day, Every Day."

the rest:

Poems, Prayers and Promises ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1971)
Farewell Andromeda ♪♪ (RCA, 1973)
Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1973)
Back Home Again ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1974)
Rocky Mountain Christmas ♪♪ (RCA, 1975)
Spirit ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1976)
Windsong ♪♪ (RCA, 1976)
I Want to Live ♪♪ (RCA, 1977)
Greatest Hits, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1977)
Some Days Are Diamonds ♪♪ (RCA, 1981)
Seasons of the Heart ♪♪ (RCA, 1982)
It's About Time ♪♪ (RCA, 1983)
Greatest Hits, Vol. 3 ♪♪ (RCA, 1984)
Dreamland Express ♪½ (RCA, 1985)
One World ♪♪ (RCA, 1986)
The Flower That Shattered the Stone ♪½ (Windstar, 1990)
Christmas Like a Lullaby ♪♪ (Windstar, 1990)
Different Directions ♪♪ (Windstar, 1991)
Higher Ground ♪♪ (Windstar, 1991)
Take Me Home ♪ (Laserlight/Delta Music, 1995) ♪
Reflections: Songs of Love and Life ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1996)
Country Roads Collection ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1997)
His Greatest Hits and Finest Performances ♪♪♪½ (Reader's Digest Music, 1997)
Annie's Song ♪ (Laserlight/Delta Music, 1997)
Calypso ♪ (Laserlight/Delta Music, 1997)
Sunshine on My Shoulder ♪ (Laserlight/Delta Music, 1997)
Take Me Home, Country Roads ♪ (Laserlight/Delta Music, 1997)
All Aboard ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1997)
A Celebration of Life (1943–1997) ♪♪♪ (River North, 1997)

worth searching for: Minneapolis Does Denver ♪♪♪½ (October, 1995, prod. John Strawberry Fields) features such Minneapolis rock acts as the Honeydogs, Steeplejack, Tina and the B-Side Movement, and the Delilahs paying surprisingly faithful tribute to Denver's '70s material. If there's any doubt that he always knew how to write a memorable melody, check out Marlee McLeod and Kristin Mooney's duet on a jangly, uptempo rendition of "Follow Me."

influences:

◀◀ New Christy Minstrels, Tom Paxton, James Taylor, Bread

▶▶ Dan Fogelberg

David Okamoto

Joe Derrane

Born March 16, 1930, in Boston, MA.

Thought by many to be dead, legendary Irish accordion player Joe Derrane made an explosive return to public performance with an appearance at the Washington Irish Festival in May 1994, and the subsequent release of his first new recording in more than 40 years. Derrane plays an exciting, fast paced, and virtuosic style of Irish music on an old-style D/C# accordion. His playing is unrelenting, filled with wild melodic runs and ornamentation, and marked by a driving, staccato rhythm. His first recordings, made for Copley Records during the late 1940s, were legendary among Irish musicians and dancers; and they are highly prized today by French-Canadian musicians who still play the push-draw style accordion and include Joe's settings and tunes in their repertoires. Due to changing styles and tastes in Irish-American communities, Derrane gave up box playing in the 1950s. He lived quietly in Massachusetts, occasionally performing in a Top 40 band with his son, until Philippe Varlet's reissue of his early recordings brought him renewed attention. Convinced by New York journalist Earl Hitchner to resume playing, Derrane has enjoyed a wonderful comeback in recent years. He has toured the U.S. and Ireland and recorded two albums. For anyone interested in Irish music, Derrane is a must-hear. Not only is he one of the last remaining players of a nearly extinct style of Irish music, he is one of the most talented musicians ever to perform in that style.

what to buy: Irish Accordion ♪♪♪♪♪ (Copley Records, 1993, prod. Paddy Noonan, Philippe Varlet) is a reissue of the solo sides Derrane cut for Copley Records during the late 1940s. He was just 19, a boy genius, when he made these incredible recordings. Driving, rhythmic music with incredible lift and fire and an unselfconscious sense of fun, these recordings pushed the D/C# accordion as far as it could go. These are rivaled only by John Kimmel's recordings from the 1910s for great old-style Irish accordion playing.

what to buy next: Return to Inis Mor ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Joe Derrane, Carl Hession) is Derrane's second album since his return to performing, and finds the old fire and virtuosity returning to his fingers. Sensitively backed by pianist Carl Hession, and on four tracks by a string quartet, Derrane is a comfortable, assured musician who has lost none of his incredible chops. A very good recording. Joe Derrane and Jerry O' Brien: Accordion Duets ♪♪♪♪ (Copley, 1995, prod. Philippe Varlet, Paddy Noonan) is a compilation of recordings Derrane made with his friend and teacher Jerry O'Brien, as well as some of O'Brien's own solo and group recordings. O'Brien's playing style is similar to Joe's and their duets show a nice musical rapport.

what to avoid: Give Us Another ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet 1995, prod. Joe Derrane) collects Derrane's first sessions after returning to performing—they seem a little more tentative than his earlier ones or his most recent. It's not a bad recording, just not incredibly great. He is, however, backed by New York piano genius Felix Dolan, giving him the best accompaniment he has ever had.

the rest:

The Tie That Binds N/A (Shanachie, 1998)

influences:

◀◀ John Kimmel, Frank Quinn, P.J. Conlon, Mike Flanagan (of the Flanagan Brothers)

▶▶ Stephane Landry, Martin O'Connor

Tony Ziselberger

Dervish

Formed 1988, in Sligo, Ireland.

Liam Kelly, flute, tin whistle (1989–present); Shane Mitchell, accordion (1989–present); Martin McGinley, fiddle, viola (1989–90); Brian McDonagh, mandolin, mandola, bouzouki, guitar (1989–present); Michael Holmes, bouzouki, guitar (1989–present); Cathy Jordan, vocals, bodhrán (1990–present); Shane McAleer, fiddle, viola (1990–present).

With an unlikely name that conjures Middle Eastern images rather than rollicking Irish jigs and reels, Dervish is one of the most exciting traditional bands to have come out of Ireland this decade. It combines amazing instrumental virtuosity, common to precursors like the Bothy Band, De Danann, or Altan, with tastefully arranged and beautifully sung songs in Irish and English, in a style reminiscent of Planxty. One particularly appealing aspect of the Dervish sound is the remarkable tightness of its members energetic instrumental playing, the result of years of playing together at informal pub sessions around their home base of Sligo. Flute player Liam Kelly and accordionist Shane Mitchell have been playing music together since they were nine and seven, respectively. When they were in high school, they formed a band called Poitín and had their moment of fame when the band won first place at a festival and subsequently appeared on the popular Irish TV show, The Late Late Show. While the two were in college, they linked up with bouzouki player Michael Holmes and later met Brian McDonagh, a former member of the band Oisín during the late 1970s. At the request of the Sligo-based label Sound Records, the foursome agreed to record an album, for which they secured the services of fiddle player Martin McGinley. Dervish's The Boys of Sligo, released in 1989, started getting attention, and what was supposed to be a one-time deal began to look more promising. The band decided to add a singer to the lineup and contacted Roscommon-born Cathy Jordan, whom they knew to be terrific, even though she hadn't had much exposure to traditional music. Jordan has proven up to the task and has become one of the most respected singers on the Irish traditional music scene. Not too long afterwards, County Tyrone fiddle player Shane McAleer replaced McGinley who was working with another band as well as for the BBC. The new band's first release, Harmony Hill, won critical acclaim and quickly made Dervish one of the most sought-after bands in Ireland. Despite an intensive touring schedule, the band managed to bring out a second album, Playing with Fire, which stayed on top of the Irish Folk Music Charts for several months. The release of Dervish's two albums in the United States in 1995 was followed by several American tours with appearances at major festivals. A third album, At the End of the Day, released the following year, was named the Hot Press Trad/Folk Album of the Year. Dervish's latest, a fantastic double-CD recorded live in Palma, Majorca, attests to the band's superior musicianship and performing abilities.

what to buy: Harmony Hill ♪♪♪♪½ (Whirling Discs, 1993/Kells Music, 1995, prod. Brian McDonagh) is puzzling in an unusual way: it is difficult to believe that a band's first album can be so good. But it is dazzlingly so, from the first set of jigs "Apples in Winter" to the great reel set "The Green Mountain," through Jordan's brilliant renditions of songs as diverse as the lilting "The Ploughman" or the heartbreaking "A Stór Mo Chroí." On the very aptly titled Playing with Fire ♪♪♪♪½ (Whirling Discs, 1995/Kells Music, 1995, prod. Brian McDonagh), Dervish continues its superlative brand of traditional music, to such a degree that it would be difficult to recommend some tracks over others. Jordan is once again astonishingly good, and equally comfortable on songs in Gaelic like "Maire Mhor" or "Pheigin Mo Chroi," the band's designated sing-along at concert, sad tales of love and loss like "Johnny and Molly," or the amusingly grandiloquent poetry of "Cailin Rua." Each instrumental track is as exciting as the next, played with all the fire one could ever ask for.

what to buy next: The cover artwork of At the End of the Day ♪♪♪♪½ (Whirling Discs, 1996/Kells Music, 1996, prod. Brian McDonagh), a striking panoramic photograph of a pub with the musicians having a session in the corner, pulls you in irresistibly for yet another magnificent album. The instrumental work is as good as ever, with Swedish band Väsen appearing as guests on one track featuring one of their compositions. This time around, Jordan's selection of songs leans more towards the slower, melancholic ones like "For Ireland I Won't Tell Her Name," and even the tragic with the famine song "Lone Shanakyle," all performed from the heart. Dervish's latest, Live in Palma ♪♪♪♪½ (Whirling Discs, 1997/Kells Music, 1998, prod. Brian McDonagh), is an outstanding collection of 22 tracks (plus introductions) on two CDs, featuring the band's best songs and tune medleys from its first three studio albums performed live at a concert that took place in Palma, Majorca.

worth searching for: Dervish's all-instrumental first album, The Boys of Sligo ♪♪♪½ (Sound, 1989, prod. Jim Lockhart), is well worth looking for. McGinley's fiddle playing, more straightforward than McAleer's in some ways, has that same Northern energy and crispness to it. And while there are still rough edges, one can hear the pieces falling into place, particularly the band's ideas about varying the texture by changing the combinations of lead and accompaniment instruments.

influences:

◀◀ Planxty, the Bothy Band, Oisín

▶▶ De Danann, Altan

Philippe Varlet

The Deseret String Band /The Bunkhouse Orchestra

Formed 1972, in Salt Lake City, UT.

Hal Cannon, accordion, concertina, harmonica, guitar, vocals; Tom Carter, pitchfork, cello-banjo, mandolin, guitar, guitar-banjo; Leonard Coulson, banjo, tin whistle, pitchfork, vocals; Ron Kane, fiddle, vocals; Meghan Merker, fiddle, guitar, guitar-banjo, feet, vocals.

This group also goes by the name "The Bunkhouse Orchestra." In its 25 years of playing together, the group has always placed its emphasis on the music of the West, particularly Utah. This includes many songs, both serious and light-hearted, about the Mormon culture. They've toured in the U.S. and internationally.

what to buy: The band's latest offering is UTAH: Songs of Statehood ♪♪♪½ (Okehdokee, 1996, prod. Deseret String Band). This CD logically belongs in the old-time music bin, but it requires giving up the notion that "old-time" means fiddle and banjo music from the South. There's some of that here, but there's a lot more, too. The instrumentation includes all the usual things you expect in an old-time string band—fiddle, banjo, guitar, mandolin—and a few things you might not expect, such as accordion and concertina, cello-banjo, tin whistle, and the pitchfork. Almost everybody in the group sings on at least one number, and it all combines into a tasty mix of lively dance tunes, stately instrumentals, songs both amusing and poignant, and even a recited poem. Most are Utah songs, many having to do with the Mormon faith and way of life. The Mormon hymn "Poor Wayfaring Man of Grief," played as an instrumental, has a compelling beauty that makes you want to learn the words. A haunting composition by Hal Cannon, "Oh, Sisters," deserves special mention, both for its content and its presentation. A few pieces have a decidedly Southern feel, possibly due to Tom Carter's influence; he once played banjo with the Fuzzy Mountain String Band, one of the first young bands to revive traditional Appalachian music. This disc is more than just a bunch of tunes: it's an interesting peek at one slice of American folk culture. And in case you were wondering, the pitchfork is a percussion instrument.

the rest:
Red Steer ♪♪♪½ (Okehdokee Records, 1990) (cassette only) worth searching for: Deseret String Band ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie Records, 1984), only available on cassette, is another outstanding collection of traditional tunes and songs focused on the state of Utah and its Mormon pioneer roots. Interestingly, the back of the old LP reveals that "Deseret" is a word found in the Book of Mormon that is thought to mean honeybee; of course, both Deseret and the beehive have come to symbolize Utah.

influences:
◀◀ Numerous Utah musicians documented in the Fife Folklore Archive, Utah State University

▶▶ Piney Creek Weasels, Double Decker String Band

Dave Shombert

The Devlins

Formed 1989, in Dublin, Ireland.

Colin Devlin, vocals, guitar, keyboards; Peter Devlin, bass, guitar, mandolin, vocals; Sean Devitt, drums, percussion, vocals; Niall Macken, keyboards.

The Devlins' fresh, dreamy folk-rock made its debut, Drift, a critical favorite. But the Irish group, centered around the Devlin brothers, hasn't been able to turn its acclaim into significant record sales, at least not in the U.S. Drift was sent adrift after its completion in 1992, delayed until April of the next year while Capitol's front-office played musical chairs. Good reviews and persistent touring with the likes of Sheryl Crow and Sarah McLachlan built a small U.S. following—the band's a bit bigger in Ireland—but it hasn't been heard from much since. That should change with the band's latest release, Waiting. The group's recorded output also includes the Live Bait, Dead Bait EP, released on Lime Records in the U.K. prior to Drift, and an edgy, synth-heavy track ("Crossing the River") on the Batman Forever soundtrack.

what to buy: Waiting ♪♪♪½ (Universal, 1997, prod. Pierre Marchand) starts with a sudden, swooping resonance, continues on through a guitar's quiet hum, and then is graciously carried by the gentle, warm tones of a grand piano. "Silence is very powerful," muses vocalist/guitarist Colin Devlin. "Music that I grew up listening to . . . Talk Talk, David Sylvian, Blue Nile. . . . I love those albums: not just the sounds, but the pauses! Those pauses are amazing! 'When in doubt, leave it out' . . . that can apply to a lot of things in life, most certainly in music."

what to buy next: The Devlins first full-length album, Drift ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1993, prod. Malcolm Burn, Robert Bell), hastened the group out of obscurity. Rolling Stone deemed them "stunning," the New Yorker "superb," and Q, quite simply, "outstanding." It was a magical ride that afforded the group an 18-month concert tour 'round the world. Semi-permanent stops in a number of atmospheric cities (New Orleans, Vancouver, Montreal, and New York City included among them) allowed the group's music to become, in a word, borderless. "We're very proud to be Irish," explains bassist/vocalist Peter Devlin, "and I hope that comes across, but it's also wonderful for us to go around the world and meet people who bring whatever it is they do into the sound."

influences:
◀◀ Kraftwerk, U2

Neal Walters and Doug Pullen

Hazel Dickens

See: Hazel and Alice

Bo Diddley

Born Ellas McDaniel, December 30, 1928, in Macomb, MS.

Bo Diddley certainly belongs in books about popular music, blues, rock 'n' roll—and surrealism. He didn't just do songs; he performed mini-operas of urban weirdness set to a primal beat. While Mud and Wolf and B.B. haunted the outskirts of white America, Bo kicked open the door to Dagwood-land and stormed on in, backed by thundering tom-toms and custom-made guitars. His first band was called the Hipsters. By the 1950s he, drummer Clifton James, harp blower Billy Boy Arnold, and maracas-shakin' Jerome Green were working the clubs. In 1955 he cut a double-sided hit, "Bo Diddley"/"I'm a Man," that ranks as a landmark in American music history. The "shave-and-a-haircut—two-bits" beat of the former stirred loins throughout the land and filled squares with woe as they saw their peers succumbing to its carnality. Other Chess 45s followed as Bo bloomed as a songwriter, guitarist, and personality. One year he'd be in cowboy garb, chanting "Bo Diddley's a gunslinger," then his axe would be suckin' wind as he proclaimed, "Bo's a lumberjack." He would tromp on his amplifier's vibrato button and flail away, his ululating chords melding with drubbing drums on tunes that'll symbolize the sound of revelry as long as revelry exists. Certainly it existed in the 1960s, when Quicksilver Messenger Service did a version of his "Who Do You Love" that filled a whole LP side and was ranked as one of the era's best works to groove to while plowed on LSD. The Stones did "Mona," the Yardbirds did "I'm a Man," and the sinister crow in Fritz the Cat finger-popped to the tune of "Bo Diddley." Later, the image of a "rock 'n' roll nurse" cramming drugs into beleaguered Bo in the hospital proved irresistible to the New York Dolls, who credibly did Bo's "Pills." Lester Davenport, Little Walter, Lafayette Leake, and other Chess mainstays played on Bo's myriad Chess outings. (Even the Moonglows got into the act, singing background on 1955's "Diddley Daddy.") During the late 1970s he opened shows on a Clash tour, and has since recorded for Triple X and Code Blue/Atlantic. He has never neared the popularity he had in the 1950s and, surprisingly, has not loomed large on the bluesfest circuit. But his legacy is unshakable: every single, solitary night in America, bands play and people dance to the Bo Diddley beat.

what to buy: Even Bo loyalists would admit that while most of his LPs had one great song (or two), a cool novelty song (or two), the rest was filler. Hence for years the Bo LP to have was Bo Diddley's 16 All Time Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪½. The 20-cut Bo Diddley: His Best ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA/Chess, 1997, prod. Len Chess, Phil Chess, Bo Diddley) has 12 of said hits, plus the hilarious "Pills," the mantric "Mona," the bio-epic "Story of Bo Diddley," and other items missing from the former LP. The terminally weird "Who Do You Love" is there, as is "Road Runner," on which Bo pioneered the scraping of one's guitar pick lengthwise against round-wound strings, creating a sonic whoosh Jeff Beck would popularize years later. "Say Man," his biggest hit (on which he and Jerome Green trade such insults as "you look like you been whupped wid a ugly stick!"), is there, as is "You Can't Judge a Book by Its Cover," one of Willie Dixon's greatest compositions. All in all, this is a great collection, and it won't be unseemly if you do what it says on all those rock albums—play it loud!

what to buy next: His Best doesn't include the immortal "Bo Diddley's a Gunslinger," but the way-cheap Bo Knows Bo ♪♪♪ (MCA Special Products, 1995) does, along with the skanky, rarely heard "Diddy Wah Diddy," as well as more well-known selections. Ideal for the CD stash you keep in your car.

what to avoid: Avoid just about anything Diddley did for the small, well-meaning Triple X Records label—most of them well-intentioned but poorly executed attempts to make Diddley relevant. Among them: This Should Not Be ♪ (Triple X, 1993); Live ♪♪ (Triple X, 1994); Promises ♪ (Triple X, 1994) (EP); and The Mighty Bo Diddley ♪♪½ (Triple X, 1995).

the rest:

His Greatest Sides, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1987)
London Sessions ♪♪½ (MCA/Chess, 1989)
Bo Diddley Is a Gunslinger ♪♪♪♪ (MCA/Chess, 1990)
The Chess Box ♪♪♪♪ (MCA/Chess, 1990)
The EP Collection ♪♪♪♪♪ (See for Miles, 1991)
Rare & Well Done ♪♪♪♪½ (MCA/Chess, 1991)
(With Chuck Berry) Two Great Guitars ♪♪♪ (MCA/Chess, 1993)
Bo Diddley/Go Bo Diddley ♪♪♪♪♪ (Chess/MCA, 1996)
A Man Amongst Men ♪♪♪ (Code Blue/Atlantic, 1996)

influences:

- Cab Calloway, Louis Jordan

influenced:

- The Rolling Stones, the Yardbirds, the Animals, George Thorogood

Tim Schuller

Different Shoes

See: Anne Dodson

Ani DiFranco

Born September 23, 1970, in Buffalo, NY.

In an industry ruled by pigeonholes and demographics, Ani DiFranco has built a rabid cult following of old folkies and young punks, men and women, and gays and straights by recording fiercely personal music on her own label, Righteous Babe, at a staggering rate. In between tackling abortion, sexuality, stereotypes, and decaying relationships in striking, stream-of-consciousness detail, DiFranco has also emerged as an underground heroine with such savage salvos at the corporate music industry as "Egos Like Hairdos," "The Next Big Thing," and "The Million You Never Made," which baits the major record companies sniffing at her backstage door ("I don't prefer obscurity/but I'm an idealistic girl"). DiFranco's visibility has been boosted by three mighty forces: the World Wide Web, where you can find more than 10 home pages dedicated to her; the "angry woman" movement spearheaded by Alanis Morissette; and torrents of accolades from the mainstream press, which is always eager to rally around a young rebel with a cause. Since appearing on the covers of Ms. and Spin and having her business savvy championed by Forbes and The New York Times, DiFranco has certainly raised her profile: in 1996 she made her first network talk-show appearance; a year later, she accepted Bob Dylan's invitation to be his opening act and had one of her songs ("32 Flavors") turned into a modest hit by Alana Davis. But artistic integrity is more than just a stance to DiFranco, and such challenging albums as 1996's deliberately noisy Dilate and her enthralling live performances confirm her status as that rare artist who walks it like she talks it.

what to buy: DiFranco has been fleshing out her aggressive solo acoustic sound with other instruments since her third album. But Out of Range ♪♪♪♪ (Righteous Babe, 1994) marks a pivotal move toward a "band" feel without overwhelming the bite of her voice, especially on "The Diner" and the electric version of the title track, about mustering the courage to walk out on an abusive relationship. Not a Pretty Girl ♪♪♪♪ (Righteous Babe, 1995), her mainstream breakthrough, is a hard-nosed hybrid of jagged confessionals, poetic imagery, and punkish diatribes ranging from sexual aggressiveness ("Shy") and social inadequacy ("This Bouquet") to capital punishment ("Crime for Crime"). The two-CD Living in Clip ♪♪♪½ (Righteous Babe, 1997, prod. Ani DiFranco) is marred slightly by choppy editing but boasts ferocious live versions of her most popular tunes—including "Letter to a John," "Untouchable Face," "Anticipate," and the relentlessly funky "Shameless."

what to buy next: From the days when she was more folksinger than acoustic punk, the solo Ani DiFranco ♪♪♪½ (Righteous Babe, 1990, prod. Ani DiFranco, Dale Anderson) displays the influence of everyone from Rickie Lee Jones to Phoebe Snow and exudes a faint sense of innocence bubbling under the already-callused skin. The harrowing highlight is "Lost Woman Song," which captures her contempt for protesters blocking her way into an abortion clinic, her revulsion of the lover who insists on staying with her, and her heartfelt respect for the nurse who helps her get through it.

what to avoid: Like I Said ♪♪½ (Righteous Babe, 1993, prod. Ani DiFranco, Ed Stone) is a compilation of re-recorded versions of songs from her first two albums. These are faster, but not necessarily better, than the originals.

the rest:
Not So Soft ♪♪♪ (Righteous Babe, 1991)
Imperfectly ♪♪♪ (Righteous Babe, 1992)
Puddle Dive ♪♪♪ (Righteous Babe, 1993)
Dilate ♪♪♪½ (Righteous Babe, 1996)
More Joy, Less Shame ♪♪½ (Righteous Babe, 1996) (EP)
(With Utah Phillips) The Past Didn't Go Anywhere ♪♪½ (Righteous Babe, 1996)
Little Plastic Castle ♪♪♪½ (Righteous Babe, 1998) worth searching for: Women in (E)motion ♪♪♪ (T&M, 1997, prod. Ani DiFranco) is a German radio broadcast from the 1994 Out of Range tour. Available only as a European import, it includes three previously unrecorded songs.

influences:
◀◀ Joni Mitchell, Woody Guthrie, Rickie Lee Jones, Fugazi
▶▶ Dar Williams, Lisa Loeb, Alanis Morissette

see also: Bruce U. "Utah" Phillips

David Okamoto

editor's choice
10 tin whistle albums

Mary Bergin, Feadoga Stain (Gael Linn/Shanachie)
Mary Bergin, Feadoga Stain 2 (Gael Linn)
Joanie Madden, Song of the Irish Whistle (Hearts of Space)
Cathal McConnell, On Lough Erne's Shore (Flying Fish)
Paddy Moloney/Sean Potts, Tin Whistles (Shanachie)
Donncha O'Brien, Donncha O'Brien (Gael Linn)
Various Artists, Light through the Leaves (Rounder)
Sean Ryan, Take the Air (Gael Linn)
Micho Russell, The Man from Clare (Trad)
Joanie Madden, Whistle on the Wind (Green Linnet)

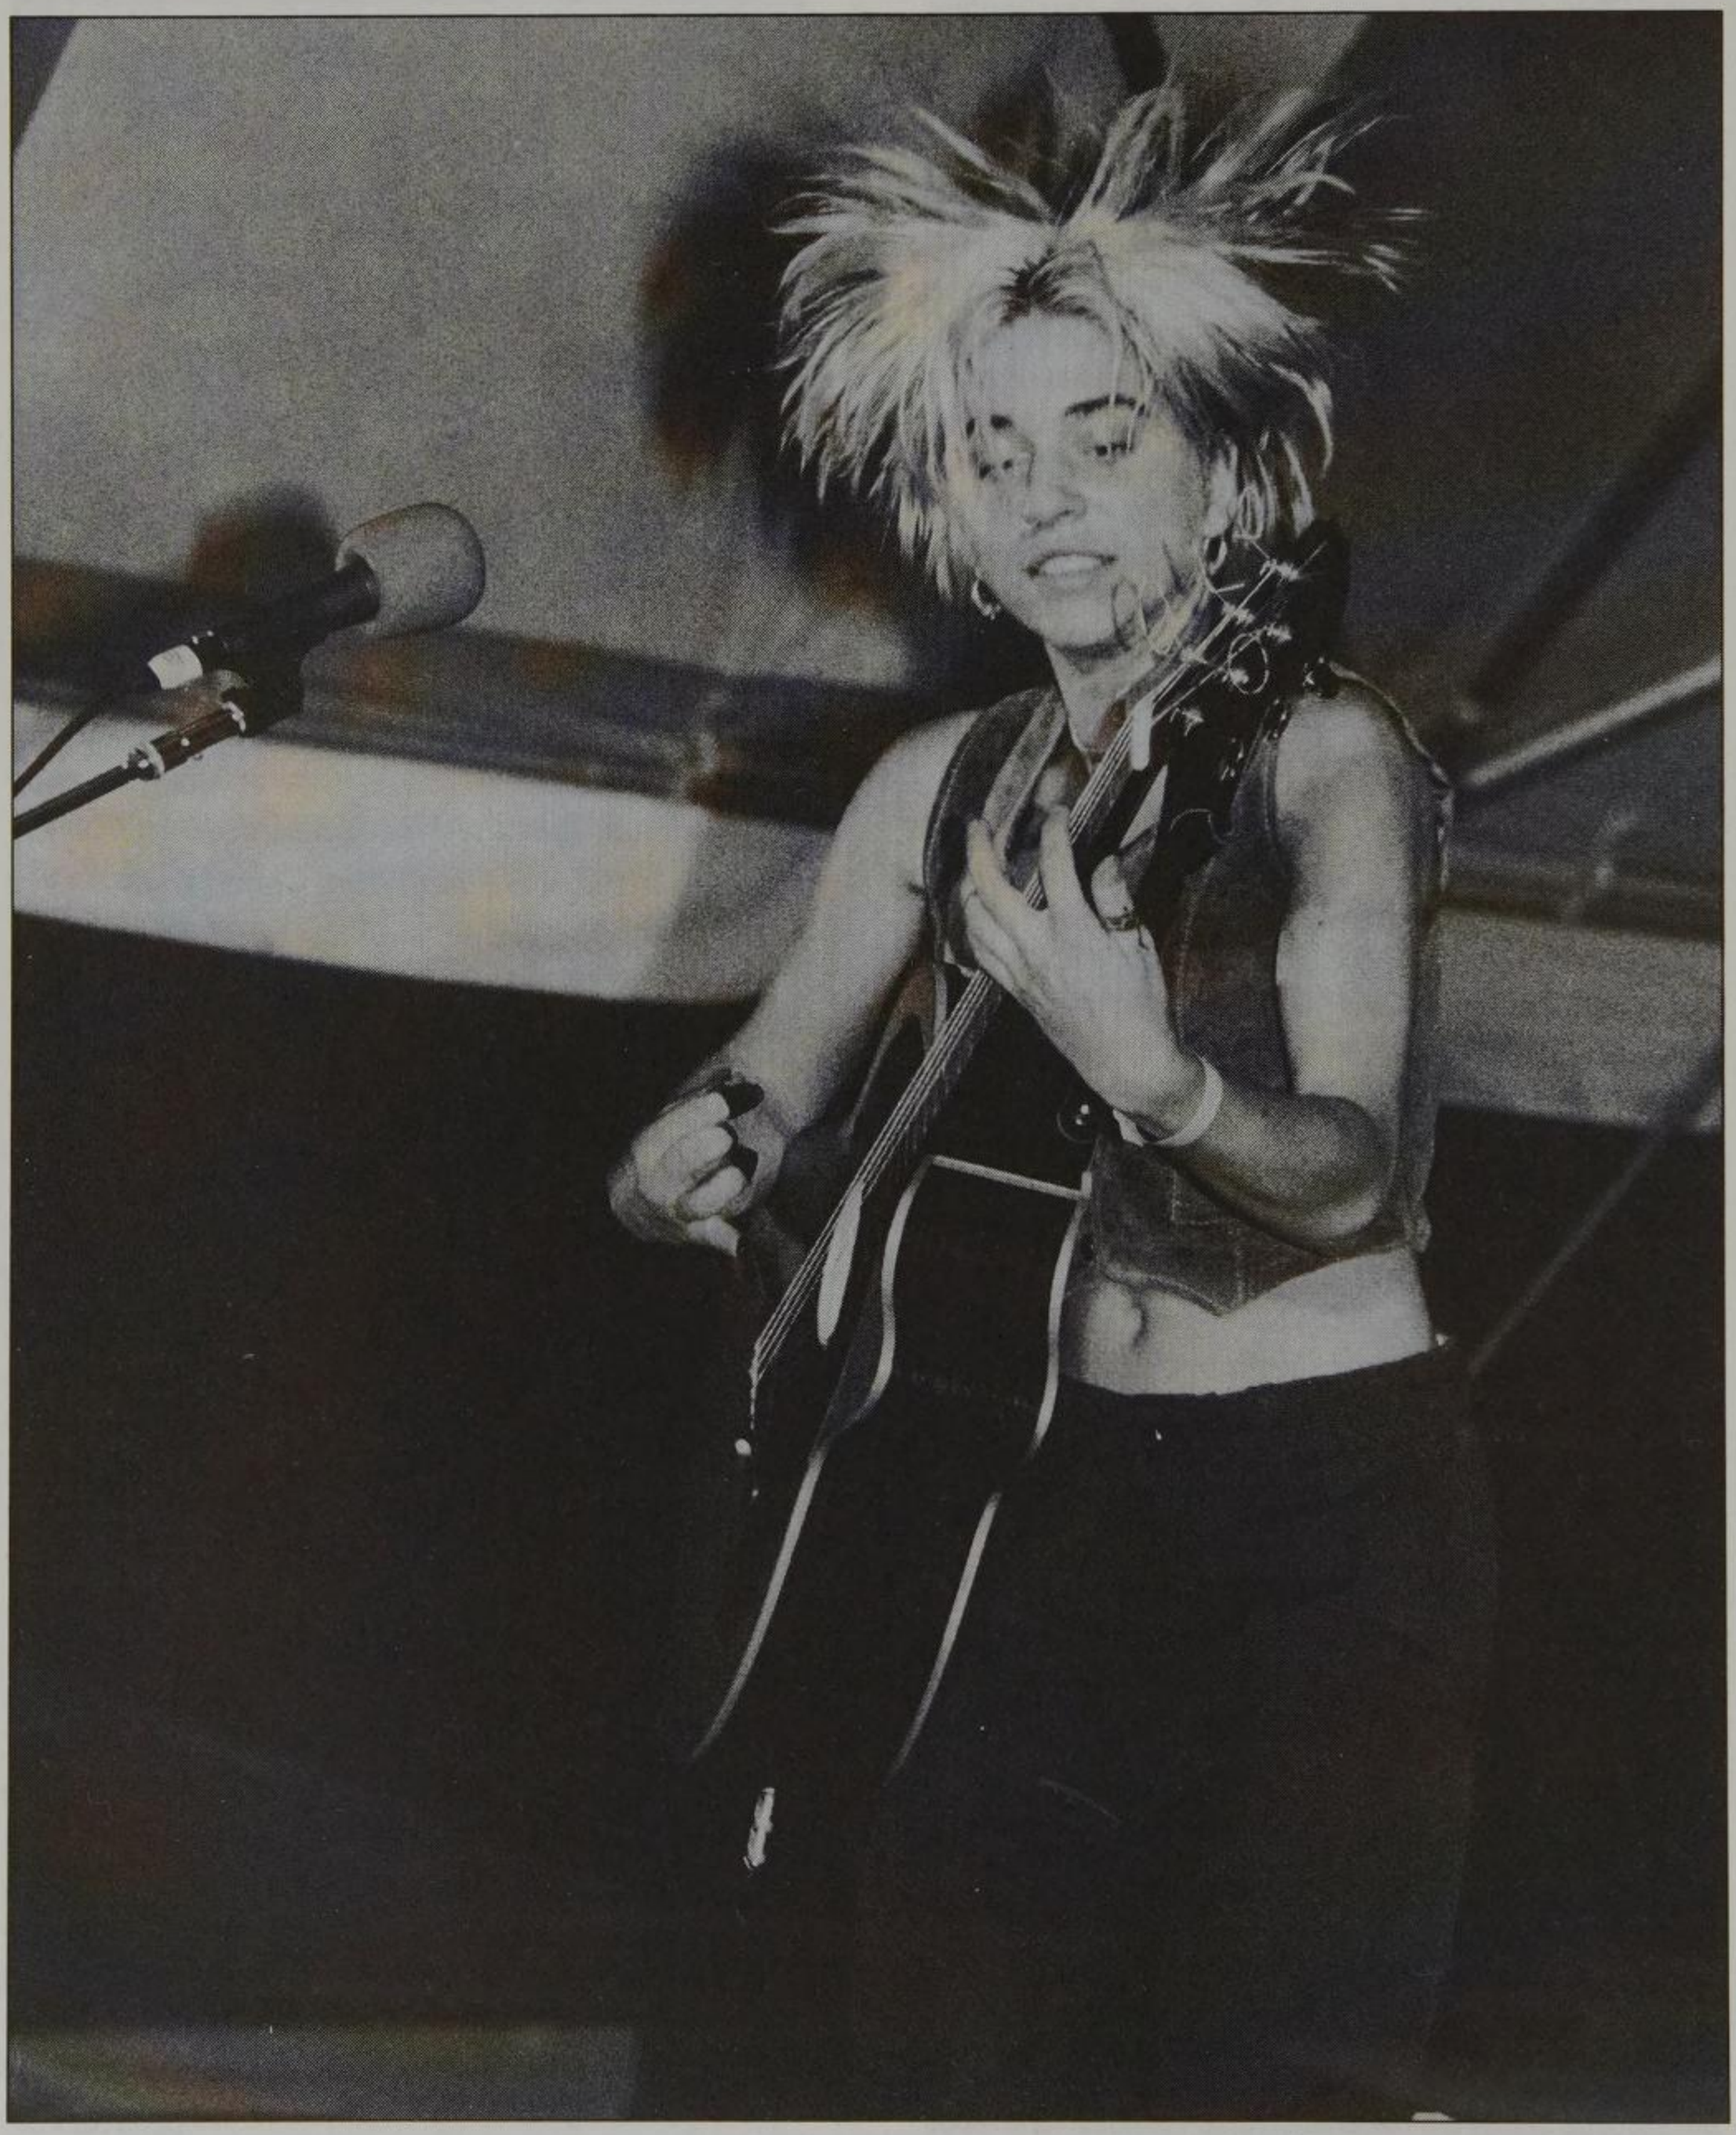
the dillards



dwight diller

The Dillards

Formed c. 1962, in Salem, MO.

Doug Dillard, banjo, vocals (1963–68); Rodney Dillard, guitar, vocals; Dean Webb, mandolin, vocals; Mitch Jayne, bass, vocals; Herb Pedersen, banjo, vocals (1969–72); Billy Ray Lathum, banjo, vocals (1972–79); Steve Cooley, banjo.

Formed by two Illinois-born brothers, Doug and Rodney Dillard, the Dillards were a bona fide bluegrass band that borrowed the best of the folk-rock sound of the mid-1960s. The result was an ear-pleasing amalgam of corn-pone humor, greased-lightning soloing, and pristine, country harmonizing (and a stint as the fictitious Darling Family on The Andy Griffith Show). In 1963 the group signed with Elektra and released Back Porch Bluegrass, which included a smokin' version of "Duelin' Banjos" 10 years before Deliverance. That release was followed by Live—Almost in 1964 and Pickin' and Fiddlin' in 1965. Doug left the band in 1968 to start a group with former-Byrd Gene Clark and was replaced by banjoist Herb Pedersen. The band then cut Wheatstraw Suite—a landmark country-rock album that displayed some fiery playing and stunning vocal harmonies, especially on the Beatles' acoustic gem "I've Just Seen a Face" and the original composition "Nobody Knows." The band continued to push the bluegrass-country-rock envelope even further with its next release, Copperfields. Two mediocre albums appeared during the early 1970s—Roots and Branches and Tribute to the American Duck—before the band packed it in. But only for a while. In 1979 the Dillards regrouped in Salem, Missouri, for a reunion concert that was captured on tape and released by Flying Fish two years later.

what to buy: There Is a Time: The Best of the Dillards 1963–1970 ♪♪♪♪½ (Sierra, 1995, prod. Herb Pedersen, Rodney Dillard) contains the best of the Elektra years, from Back Porch Bluegrass to Copperfields. This is a must for any serious bluegrass and country-rock history buff.

what to buy next: Homecoming and Family Reunion ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1981, prod. Herb Pedersen) features highlights from the historic August 1979 concert in Salem, Missouri, including "Old Joe Clark," "Ebo Walker," and "Tennessee Breakdown."

the rest:
Let It Fly ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1990)
Take Me Along for the Ride ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1992) worth searching for: The Fantastic Expedition of Dillard and Clark ♪♪♪♪ (Edsel, 1990, prod. Henry Lewy) was originally released by A&M Records in 1969 and is a groundbreaking country-rock record that features Doug's sophisticated banjo playing and former-Byrd Gene Clark's wonderfully warm singing.

solo outings:

Doug Dillard:
(With Bernie Leadon, John Hartford, and Gene Clark) The Banjo Album ♪♪♪½ (Sierra, 1980)
What's That ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986)
Heartbreak Hotel ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1989)
(With Rodney Dillard and John Hartford) Glitter-Grass/Permanent Wave ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1994)

Rodney Dillard:
Rodney Dillard at Silver Dollar City ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1985)
Let the Rough Side Drag ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1992)

influences:
◀◀ Flatt & Scruggs, Bill Monroe & the Blue Grass Boys
▶▶ The Byrds, the Flying Burrito Brothers, the Eagles, Poco

Rick Petreycik

Dwight Diller

Born in WV.

Dwight is a clawhammer banjo player from Pocohontas County, West Virginia. Dwight has been playing the banjo for 30 years. He learned from the Hammons family when he was young and they are obviously the biggest influence on his playing. His recordings more often than not feature tunes that come out of the tradition of this West Virginia family. His live shows and workshops also present the tunes and stories of the Hammons. Dwight also helped bring the Hammons into the spotlight by calling them to the attention of the Library of Congress, who recorded them and made the recordings available to the public. Don't think of Dwight just as an evangelist for the Hammons, however. He is also an amazing musician. In 1995 he was voted one of the top five clawhammer banjoists alive by the readers of Banjo Newsletter. Every note this man plays is packed with feeling. Nothing is wasted.

what's available: Harvest: West Virginia Mountain Music ♪♪♪♪ (Yew Pine Mountain, 1997, prod. Dwight Diller) is the only CD recording that Dwight has out. He's had quite a few cassette-only releases out previously and many of the best

Ani DiFranco (© Stephen A. Ide)

2/2/4 john "seven foot dilly" dilleshaw

folk harp

The harp is commonly thought to have been originated by a bow hunter, who, upon hearing the "twang" of his bowstring, realized he had a musical instrument in his hands. The instrument has evolved, with harps now ranging from eight to 47 strings, and from a foot and a half to seven feet tall. These harps quickly grew in popularity in Celtic lands, South America, and Africa. So, what makes it a folk harp? Folk harps, basically, are harps without pedals. The pedals make sharps and flats available to the harpist. Many folk harps have another method of playing accidentals; levers can be installed on each string, and the harper must flip the lever on or off as the accidental is needed. With this system, only sharps or flats are available, rather than both. Cross-strung harps allow the full scope of accidentals, for all of the notes available on a keyboard are available on this type of harp. Most harps have a single row of strings, but there are also double- and triple-strung harps. Harp strings are commonly made from three different types of materials: wire, nylon, or gut. The type of string determines not only the nature of the sound (warm for nylon or gut, bell-like for wire) but also the technique used. Wire strings are typically played with the harper's fingernails, while nylon and gut strings are played with the pads of the fingers.

Jo Hughey Morrison

songs from these were redone for this CD. For that reason Harvest is the best place to start for an introduction to Dwight's music. An added treat is that the CD features the fiddling of Jimmy Triplett, a young fiddle player originally from North Carolina who now lives in West Virginia. He won top honors at the Appalachian String Band Festival in Clifftop, West Virginia, in 1996.

worth searching for: The remainder of Dwight's recordings are only available on cassette and can be ordered through him directly. Contact Dwight at Box 148, Hillsboro, WV 24946 to get the following: Papa! ♪♪♪♪ (self-released), Red Rooster ♪♪♪♪ (self-released), Hold On! ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1989), O Death ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1992), and Just Banjo ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1996).

influences:

◀◀ The Hammons Family, Wilson Douglas

▶▶ Cordelia's Dad, Sheila Adams, Chris Coole

Steve Gardner

John "Seven Foot Dilly" Dilleshaw /Dilly & the Dill Pickles

Born c. 1896, near New Hope, GA. Died 1941.

Dilly & the Dill Pickles: John Dilleshaw, guitar; Harry "Bill" Kiker, fiddle; Raymond "Shorty" Lindsey, tenor banjo; Pink Lindsey, string bass.

John Dilleshaw was a sort of bluegrass performance artist. His entire recorded work fits on a single CD, but it only hints at what must have been fascinating stage shows. Dilleshaw grew up in the wilds north of Atlanta and learned guitar picking from a "colored gentleman" named Bill Turner while recovering from a hunting accident. Later, in his 20s, he moved to Atlanta and began playing on station WSB in various bands. Between 1929 and 1930 he recorded with Dilly & the Dill Pickles as well as with various combinations of other musicians. Usually they'd play breakdowns, but sometimes Dilly sang humorous songs like "Where the Shannon River Flows," which parodied contemporary popular songs. Late in his career he experimented with talking blues.

By far Dilly's most significant contribution to music was his sketch comedy, notably the comic epic "Square Dance Fight on Ball Top Mountain," in which the music is broken up by a tussle with a heckler. It's like Flatt and Scruggs doing "The Spike Jones Story" directed by Quentin Tarantino. By the way, Seven Foot Dilly probably topped out at 6 feet, 7 inches, but who needs veracity in this kind of entertainment?

what's available: There's one collection available, John Dilleshaw (Seven Foot Dilly) Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order, 1929–1930 ♪♪♪♪ (Document, 1997, prod. Johnny Parth). It's got "The Square Dance Fight," "Spanish Fandango," "Bust Down Stomp"—and it's as much fun as the titles suggest.

influences:

◀◀ Bill Turner, Riley Puckett

Pamela Murray Winters

disappear fear

Formed 1987, in Baltimore, MD.

Sonia Rutstein, guitar, vocals; Cindy Frank, vocals.

Lush harmonies and hard-edged, feminist, and socially conscious lyrics are sung by sisters Sonia Rutstein and Cindy Frank. As disappear fear, the sisters have risen to the upper echelon of women's music. While harmony singer Frank retired from touring in 1996 to become a full-time mother, Ani DiFranco–like singer-songwriter Rutstein, an openly gay Jewish woman, has continued to perform solo and with a band, disappear fear. Although Frank has remained off the road, she's continued to sing harmony on the group's albums. disappear fear released their first three albums—Echo My Call, Deep Soul Diver, and Live at the Bottom Line—on their own independent label. After signing with the Rounder-distributed Philo label in 1994, they released a self-titled studio album and reissued their earlier recordings. disappear fear has inspired comparisons with the Indigo Girls, for whom they toured as opening act in 1993. The Indigo Girls repaid the favor by singing background vocals, along with Janis Ian, on disappear fear. disappear fear's performances include appearances at Woodstock '94 and the National Now conference in Washington, D.C., in 1995, which was televised nationally by C-SPAN. Sonia Rutstein released her first solo album, Almost Chocolate, in 1998.

what to buy: Sonia Rutstein and Cindy Frank moved into the national spotlight with disappear fear ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1994, prod. Craig Krampf). With Rutstein's lyrics and acoustic guitar and both sisters' vocal harmonies backed by a wide array of session players, the album remains a modern politically conscious folk-rock near-classic. While a gutsy interpretation of Phil Ochs's "Is There Anybody Here" pays tribute to the sisters' roots, the album's focus remains on Rutstein's sharp-edged songwriting, with 10 original songs, including the powerful folk-rocker "Washington Work Song."

what to buy next: Seed In the Sahara ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Roy Bittan) was disappear fear's first album after Frank's retirement from touring with the group. Although she returned to sing harmonies, the album, produced by E Street Band keyboardist Roy Bittan, remained focused on Rutstein's harder-rocking approach. Songs include the anthemic "B.Y.O.G. (Bring Your Own God)" and the political funk-rocker "Skin." One tune, "Michelangelo," was included on a compilation CD, Out Loud, to benefit the International Gay and Lesbian Human Rights Commission.

the rest:
Echo My Call ♪♪ (Refined, 1988)
Deep Soul Diver ♪♪♪ (disappear fear, 1989/Philo, 1995) worth searching for: The excitement of the two sisters' early performances is showcased on Live at the Bottom Line ♪♪♪ (disappear fear, 1989/Philo, 1995, prod. Tom Durack, John Grant, disappear fear, Steve Tveit). In addition to eight tracks recorded during a November 1991 show in New York, the album includes studio versions of two of the songs—"Sink the Censorship" and "Box of Tissues"—that were recorded in 1990 and originally released on a four song EP, Box of Heaven, and a previously unreleased studio track, "Long Long Way to Go."

solo outings:
Sonia Rutstein:
Almost Chocolate ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Phil Ochs, Joni Mitchell, Bob Dylan
▶▶ The Indigo Girls, Ani DiFranco, Dar Williams

Craig Harris

Dr. John

Born Malcolm John "Mac" Rebennack Jr., November 21, 1940, in New Orleans, LA.

With his spooky, voodoo-drenched debut as the Night Tripper in 1967 and his guided tour of New Orleans roots music on Gumbo in 1972, Dr. John paved the way for America's rediscovery of the Crescent City's rich musical heritage. It was Dr. John who led listeners to legendary New Orleans artists such as Professor Longhair and Huey (Piano) Smith. And his 1973 hits "Right Place, Wrong Time" and "Such a Night" helped bring national attention to regional stars such as the Meters and Allen Toussaint. Born and raised in New Orleans, Rebennack already was performing and recording in his teens, mainly as a guitarist. But it was his funky piano and distinctive, gravelly drawl that made him a star with the release of the In the Right Place album in 1973. Financial and drug problems plagued him well into the 1980s, but the growing popularity of New Orleans music helped him regain his stride. He reigns as the acknowledged master of the New Orleans sound; no one has done more to popularize it.

what to buy: Mos' Scocious ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1993, prod. various) is the definitive Dr. John anthology—a two-CD set that begins with rare early sides cut with local bands such as Ronnie and the Delinquents, then marches on through more than 30 years of the doctor's finest remedies. A virtual encyclopedia of the New Orleans sound. The one-disc The Very Best of Dr. John ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1995, prod. various) skims the cream of Mos' Scocious. Dr. John's Gumbo ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1972, prod. Jerry Wexler, Harold Battiste) is Rebennack's landmark tribute to the Crescent City's R&B roots—while, a year later, In the Right Place ♪♪♪♪ (Atco, 1973, prod. Allen Toussaint) gave him a hit. (Both Gumbo and In the Right Place are combined on a Mobile Fidelity Sound Lab 24K disc.)

dr. john

what to buy next: Goin' Back to New Orleans ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1992, prod. Stewart Levine) is another fine reflection of his early influences, with lots of stellar guest artists. In a Sentimental Mood ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1989, prod. Tommy LiPuma) is Rebennack's career-reviving take on standards such as "Makin' Whoopee" (a Grammy-winning duet with Rickie Lee Jones) and "Accentuate the Positive." And have your mojo hand ready should you fall under the hoodoo incantations of the Night Tripper on Gris Gris ♪♪♪ (Atco, 1968, prod. Harold Battiste). His first in-concert set, Trippin' Live ♪♪♪♪ (Surefire, 1997, prod. Mac Rebennack), is worth the wait, especially for the long-anticipated "Renegade," a staple of his stage shows.

what to avoid: At His Best ♪♪½ (Special Music Company, 1989) has been rendered redundant by the several more complete best-ofs.

best of the rest:
Gumbo ♪♪♪♪½ (Atco, 1972/1990)
Hollywood Be Thy Name ♪♪♪ (United Artists, 1975/One Way, 1997)
Dr. John Plays Mac Rebbenack ♪♪♪♪ (Clean Cuts, 1981)
The Brightest Smile in Town ♪♪♪ (Clean Cuts, 1983)
The Ultimate Dr. John ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1987)
Such a Night ♪♪♪ (Makin' Waves, 1988/1992)
Gumbo/In the Right Place ♪♪♪♪½ (Mobile Fidelity Sound Lab, 1994)
Television ♪♪♪½ (GRP, 1994)
Afterglow ♪♪♪ (Blue Thumb, 1995)
Crawfish Soiree ♪♪♪½ (Aim, 1996)

worth searching for: Listen for that famous voice on any number of television commercials. And if you're in a used store, an import CD of formative, loose-limbed 1960s sessions, Cut Me While I'm Hot ♪♪♪♪ (Magnum America, 1995), would make a nice collector's trophy.

Dr. John (© Jack Vartoogian)

influences:

◀◀ Professor Longhair, James Booker, Isidore "Tuts" Washington, Joe Liggins, Huey (Piano) Smith

▶▶ The Neville Brothers, Marcia Ball, the Radiators

Doug Pippin and Leland Rucker

Anne Dodson

Born May 18, 1952, in Hanover, NH.

Born to parents homesteading in a small valley in Vermont, Anne Dodson and her family moved to southwest New Hampshire, where she was raised, in 1954. Weary of the long New England winters, Dodson ended up graduating from high school in Naples, Florida. Dodson's father, Fred, was a noted watercolor artist and craftsman who made pewter hollow ware (tea pots, etc.) as well as gold and silver jewelry. Her mother, Phyllis, is a naturalist and writer and still lives in Florida. Dodson has an older brother, David, who is a singer/songwriter currently living in Camden, Maine; the two grew up singing at local New England events. As kids they performed as a duo and, with two cousins from Vermont, as the "Four Cousins"; they got as far as an Ed Sullivan Show audition in New York City. After taking weaving classes at the Penland School of Crafts in North Carolina, she settled briefly in Cambridge, Massachusetts, but eventually ended up in Deer Isle, Maine; there she married a high school friend, took up weaving, built a house, and raised huge gardens. The loom sits in her attic these days, but her love of fiber is now expressed through knitting needles. Gradually the performing bug and an addiction to traditional and other forms of folk music brought her slowly back to music as a means of supporting herself. She began to work with the already established trio County Down, who had lost a member the year before. That partnership lasted for 10 years and survived Dodson's divorce and move to Camden. When her run with County Down ended, Dodson moved on to the four- (eventually to be five-) piece band Different Shoes. Over the years Dodson continued to work with Different Shoes, occasionally reuniting with County Down; she now works with both groups in addition to her solo career. In 1990 she met Matt Szostak with whom she now lives and plays music. Szostak is a builder of traditional French style hurdy-gurdys; he adds vocals, guitar, and cittern, as well as hurdy-gurdy, to Dodson's musical mix. Dodson has become increasingly interested in working with children, seeking to expose the next generation to folk music; much of her solo work is in school residency programs. She tours primarily along the eastern seaboard of the

lonnie donegan

U.S., but makes every-other-year treks to the midwest. Over the years, Dodson has performed and recorded with Gordon Bok, Noel Paul Stookey (of Peter, Paul & Mary), and others. She is the recipient of a 1996–97 individual fellowship composer's grant, awarded through the Maine Arts Commission. Dodson plays guitar, mountain dulcimer, pennywhistle, and, with Different Shoes, cello (it replaced the wash tub bass). All of Dodson's material is available from Beech Hill Music, PO Box 14, Camden, ME 04843.

what to buy: Almost Grown ♪♪♪♪ (Beech Hill Music, 1995, prod. Anne Dodson, Matt Szostak) is Dodson's most recent release and is targeted at "kids and their adults." Dodson's sense of humor shines as she sings of the bear that met "Benji"—"the bear was bulgy and the bulge was Benji"—and of "A Proper Coffee Pot," a song that has since become a staple of the Voices of Winter tour for Cindy Mangsen, Anne Hills, and Priscilla Herdman. Dodson can also get serious with songs like "Waiting for the Lark." She gets lots of help from a large supporting cast, including husband Matt Szostak, Gordon Bok, Cindy Kallet, Lisa Redfern, and others. Szostak's hurdy-gurdy playing is especially nice on "Lady Jane Medley."

what to buy next: Virtually the same crew gathered to cut From Where I Sit ♪♪♪½ (Beech Hill Music, 1993, prod. Anne Dodson, Matt Szostak), which finds Dodson in a somewhat more serious mood. She mixes original material with a great Larry Kaplan song, "Connecticut Twister," and one written specifically for her by Dave Goulder. She also takes the opportunity to show off her guitar skills.

the rest:
Tranquility Grange ♪♪½ (Fretless, 1986) (cassette only)
In Its Own Sweet Time ♪♪♪ (Beech Hill Music, 1990)

worth searching for: Christmas in Maine ♪♪♪ (Timberhead, 1992) is a compilation of Maine artists that includes one song with Dodson and Noel Paul Stookey. So Bravely Dream ♪♪♪ (Timberhead, 1995), an album celebrating the songs of Jan Harmon, has Dodson doing some solo work, along with other artists, including the Quasimodal Chorus (to which Dodson belongs). The assemblage sings choral works of the late Jan Harmon. During the 1980s Dodson helped make The February Tapes ♪♪ (Timberhead, various dates) with Gordon Bok and friends. These are described as "silly, never meant to be published tapes made to cheer up friends with the winter doldrums." All of these are available through Timberhead, PO Box 840, Camden, ME 04843.

solo outings:
County Down:
County Down ♪♪½ (Fretless, 1981) (cassette only)
Living in the Country ♪♪♪ (Fretless, 1983) (cassette only)

Different Shoes:
One Size Feets All ♪♪♪ (Fretless, 1985) (cassette only) Tie One On ♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1988) (cassette only)

influences:
◀◀ Tom Paxton, Phil Ochs, Gordon Bok
▶▶ Anne Hills, Cindy Mangsen, Priscilla Herdman

Neal Walters

Lonnie Donegan

Born Anthony James Donegan, 1931, in Glasgow, Scotland.

Scottish guitarist Donegan plundered the catalogs of American folk singers (such as Leadbelly and Woody Guthrie) and in turn inspired a generation of British rock heroes (like Cliff Richard and John Lennon). A regular performer on Britain's jazz circuit—he supposedly took his stage name from blues guitarist Lonnie Johnson—Donegan was England's undisputed leader of skiffle, a down-and-dirty brand of uptempo folk played on acoustic guitars, washboards, and tea-chest bass. His version of "Rock Island Line" became an instant U.K. hit in 1955, and skiffle groups appeared practically overnight throughout the country thanks to the music's simplicity and the high availability of common instruments. The craze lasted through 1959, when Donegan was knocked out of the charts by the very rock 'n' roll acts he helped to inspire. Following a lengthy absence due to a heart attack, he returned in 1978 with "Putting on the Style," an all-star skiffle record featuring Ringo Starr, Brian May, Elton John, and other musicians inspired by his music.

what's available: For a solid introduction to Donegan, check out Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Castle Communications, 1989), a single-disc sampler of essential Donegan tracks. If that whets your appetite—in a big way only—move on up to the import, More Than Pie in the Sky ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1993), a massive eight-CD box set stuffed to the gills with 209 tracks. Given the strengths of these two packages, the three-CD set Putting on the Styles ♪♪ (Sequel) seems unnecessary, with too many novelty tunes and no "Rock Island Line."

influences:
◀◀ Leadbelly, Woody Guthrie
▶▶ The Kingston Trio, Sweeney's Men, the Beatles

Christopher Scapelliti

Donovan

Born Donovan Leitch, February 10, 1946, in Glasgow, Scotland.

An early British folkie turned pop star, Donovan incorporated rock and psychedelic elements during the mid- and late-'60s. From such tender ditties as "Catch the Wind" in 1965 to the grinding buzz of 1968's "Hurdy Gurdy Man" (with guitarist Jeff Beck), Donovan was all over the stylistic map. His credibility suffered from an early and much-hyped comparison to Bob Dylan, but producer Mickie Most molded Donovan from a reformed folkie to a pop singer with clever lyrics and wit—which started the "e-lect-ri-cal banana" craze of "Mellow Yellow." From pop star, Donovan changed colors again and turned himself into an early New Ager. And all of these transitions took place in a span of only four or five years. From 1965 to 1969 he released 14 albums, making him something of a one-man British Invasion with hits like "Universal Soldier," "Colours," "Wear Your Love Like Heaven," "Season of the Witch," "Atlantis," and "Barabajagal." But after that his career declined rapidly, as if so much work so soon had sapped Donovan of his creative strength. His work from the late '70s into the '80s was imminently forgettable. In 1996 he plotted a comeback with modern rock and rap producer Rick Rubin and a new album, Sutras.

what to buy: Troubadour: The Definitive Collection 1964–1976 ♪♪♪♪½ (Legacy, 1992, prod. various) is the one stop to hear his best. This comprehensive collection—handpicked by Donovan—includes 44 songs and all of his hits.

what to avoid: The Classics Live woof! (Great Northern Arts Ltd., 1991) is an unfortunate concert recording, best left unheard.

the rest:
Catch the Wind ♪♪♪ (Hickory, 1965/Sandstone, 1992)
Sunshine Superman ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1966/1990)
Hurdy Gurdy Man ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1968/1986)
Barabajagal ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1969/1987)
Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1987)
A Gift from a Flower to a Garden ♪♪♪ (Beat Goes On, 1993)
In Concert ♪♪ (Beat Goes On, 1994)
Peace & Love Songs ♪♪½ (Sony Music Special Products, 1996)
Golden Hits ♪♪♪ (Masters, 1996)
Sunshine Superman: 20 Songs Of ♪♪½ (Remember, 1996)
Sutras ♪♪ (American, 1996)
Donovan ♪♪½ (WMO, 1996)
Fairytale ♪♪♪ (Castle, 1996)
Performance ♪♪½ (Beacon, 1997)
Mellow ♪♪♪ (Recall, 1997)

worth searching for: Mellow Yellow ♪♪♪½ (Epic, 1967), one of his more consistent '60s albums, has yet to see the laser light of CD reissue. Its title track is a defining piece of '60s pop counterculture.

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, the Beatles
▶▶ David Crosby, XTC/Dukes of Stratosphear, the Housemartins

Patrick McCarty

Rockin' Dopsie

Born Alton Rubin, February 10, 1932, in Carencro, LA. Died August 26, 1993, in Lafayette, LA.

Most people will know Rockin' Dopsie for "That Was Your Mother" on Paul Simon's Graceland, but that was just a footnote to a long and successful career playing zydeco. He was born in Carencro, Louisiana, and spent much of his childhood working the land, either picking cotton or cutting cane. He started playing the accordion at 14, encouraged by his father, who was an accordionist himself. Being a lefty, Rubin had to flip over the accordion and play it upside down—the same way Jimi Hendrix played the guitar. He taught himself to play by learning tunes heard over the radio. His local reputation soon surpassed that of his father, but his career took off when he moved to Lafayette and began to play the clubs with his cousin Chester Zeno on washboard. Dopsie moved up to the three-row button accordion and got the moniker Dopsie from an out-of-town dancer that performed in Lafayette. The Rockin' was for the drive in his playing and his bands throughout the '60s and '70s cooked. His sons Alton Jr. and David joined him on drums and frattoir respectively. There is always a respect for Creole music in his records.

what to buy: Louisiana Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1991, prod. Shane Keister, Ahmet Ertegun) was the major label debut of Rockin' Dopsie and he got to keep it gritty while getting the production values of a major label recording. This record does what a good zydeco record should do—sizzle and then cool into an occasional Ivory Joe Hunter tune like "Since I Lost My Baby" to let you catch your breath.

what to buy next: Big Bad Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Sonet, 1988, prod. Sam Charters) is worth buying just to hear how a zydeco band reshapes "Jambalaya" (a tune Hank Williams reshaped from the Cajun two-step "Grand Texas") and brings it home into cooking zydeco. Dopsie could drive a dance floor all night with his accordion alone, but this band likes being driven. The production is sparse, but it suits the sound well.

the rest:
Crowned Prince of Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1987)
Saturday Night Zydeco ♪♪♪½ (Maison de Soul, 1988)
Good Rockin' ♪♪♪♪ (GNP, 1988)
Zy-De-Co-In' ♪♪♪½ (Gazell, 1989)
Feets Don't Fail Me Now ♪♪♪♪ (Aim, 1994)

worth searching for: French Style (Sonet, 1982, prod. Sam Charters) brings Dopsie together with Cajun fiddler Dewey Balfa with mixed results. Sometimes it works very well, sometimes it's a little odd—sometimes even in the same tune. Still, two legends playing together is worth finding.

influences:
⏮ Boozoo Chavis, Clifton Chenier, Amédée Ardoin
⏭ John Delafose, Roy Carrier, Chubby Carrier

Jared Snyder

Dordan

See: Mary Bergin

Double Clutchin'

See: Chris Ardoin

The Double Decker String Band

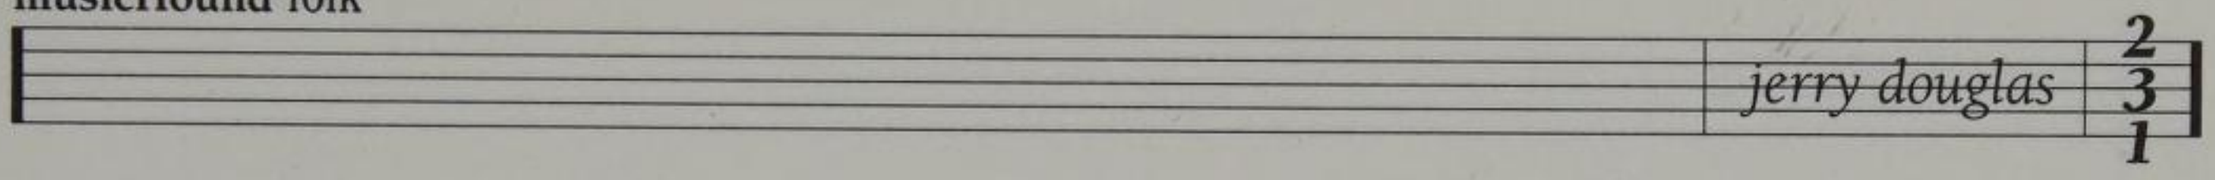
Formed 1977, in Takoma Park, MD.

Craig Johnson, banjo, fiddle, vocals (1980–present); Bruce Hutton, mandolin, banjo, vocals; John Beam, guitar, vocals; Bill Schmidt, fiddle, vocals (1977–93).

Much of the revival of old-time music during the 1970s centered on the driving, rhythmic, and heavily fiddle-oriented "Round Peak" style of the southern Virginia/western North Carolina region. Drawing on then-active legendary musicians like Tommy Jarrell, Kyle Creed, and Fred Cockerham for their repertoires, young bands of revivalists like the Highwoods String Band helped immeasurably in preserving much of the popular fiddle, banjo, and dance music of the Appalachians as the older generation passed from the scene. In counterpoint to this movement, the Double Decker String Band went in another direction, seeking out old sheet music, broadsides, and rare, forgotten cylinder and 78 rpm recordings, as well as oral transmission to find the old songs and tunes that had been sung and played in the parlors and music halls of turn-of-the-century America. In seeking out these songs—and the more obscure and forgotten, the better—this quartet of musicians from the Baltimore/Washington area sought also to perform and record them using the obscure and forgotten instruments of that bygone era. In addition to the standard instrumentation of fiddle, banjo, guitar, and mandolin, a performance by the Double Decker String Band is likely to include such oddities as the banjo ukulele, banjo guitar, tenor banjo, and tiple. When not performing or searching through musty attics and trunks for old records and sheet music, Baltimore-area natives John Beam and Bill Schmidt both carry on artistic careers, John as a graphic designer, and Bill as a noted painter. Both teach art as well. Social worker Craig Johnson, who lends his distinctive keen, high lead vocals to the band, is originally from Ann Arbor, Michigan. He now lives in Morgantown, West Virginia, and teaches part time at West Virginia University. Bruce Hutton, from the Washington suburb of Takoma Park, Maryland, is a full-time musician and music historian who performs solo outside the band. Around 1993, Bill Schmidt left the band and currently performs as a member of the Hoover Uprights, although he occasionally sits in with Double Decker, or with one or more of the other band members on an informal basis. Over the 20 years of its existence, the members of the Double Decker String Band not only have taken on the vital task of preserving, performing, and recording much of the music that entertained Americans between the Gay '90s and the Roaring '20s, but they have done it with an eclectic and eccentric style that makes them one of the most unusual and enjoyable bands in the realm of old-time music.

what's available: Chasing Rainbows ♪♪♪♪½ (Marimac, 1996, prod. Paul Brown, Pete Reiniger) is Double Decker's debut on CD after a hiatus of several years. Now a trio, they nonetheless demonstrate that they haven't missed a beat on their recordings of vintage material like "Keno the Rent Man," "Mary, Don't You Weep," "Saro," "Down the River I Go," and "Jake Limber Leg Blues." Their version of "The House of the Rising Sun" is unlike any you might have heard before. From beginning to end on these 20 tracks, they're as on-target in '97 as they were in '77.

worth searching for: Their two early LP releases on the Fretless label, Giddyap Napoleon ♪♪♪♪ (Fretless, 1980, prod. Double Decker String Band) and Sentimental Songs & Old Time Melodies ♪♪♪½ (Fretless, 1981, prod. Double Decker String Band), are both good examples of the off-beat ethic the band is noted for. While they include such relatively familiar fare as "John Henry," "Ragged but Right," and "Wild Bill Jones," they are among the very few record sources for obscure gems like



"Riley the Furniture Man," "Jay Bird Died with the Whooping Cough," and "Tittabawassee Jane."

influences:

◀◀ Uncle Dave Macon, Riley Puckett, Charlie Poole, New Lost City Ramblers

▶▶ Volo Bogtrotters, Piney Creek Weasels

John Lupton

David Doucet

Born July 6, 1957, in Lafayette, LA.

David Doucet has been the backbone of Beausoleil for more than 20 years. Through long years of long nights on the bandstand he has created a guitar style that synthesizes equal parts Rodney Balfa and Clarence White. His bluegrass inflected bass runs and shifting chordal passages are the foundation around which his brother Michael builds his fiddle breaks. He also occasionally sings lead in a voice equal in strength and clarity to that of his brother and lends the brother style harmony that the two of them occasionally employ.

what to buy: Quand J'ai Parti ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1990, prod. David Doucet, Al Tharp) is David's only solo effort so far. He plays through a set of carefully picked Cajun tunes and augments his Beausoleil band mates with bluegrass dobro legend Josh Graves and bassist Josh Stewart. The acoustic bass adds a lighter bottom to the Beausoleil sound that hearkens back to the days of Parle Nous A Boire, while Graves's superb picking seems to push Doucet's guitar playing to new heights. If nothing else, this record makes you realize how much Doucet and his guitar are responsible for the Beausoleil sound.

what to buy next: Master of the Folk Violin ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1989, prod. Chris Strachwitz) documents a concert tour that brought together six premier American fiddlers: Alison Krauss, Seamus Connolly, Michael Doucet, Kenny Baker, Claude Williams, and Joe Cormier. Graves and Stewart got acquainted with the Doucet brothers here. The five numbers performed by Michael and David give a rare chance to hear the interplay between the two of them in the absence of a rhythm section.

worth searching for: Half of Beau Solo ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1989, prod. Michael Doucet, Chris Strachwitz) finds Michael Doucet at home alone in his living room, playing accordion or singing ancient unaccompanied ballads. The other half of the record features Michael and David playing a set of waltzes, one-steps, two-steps, and blues in what sounds like the same living room.

influences:

◀◀ D.L. Menard, the Balfa Brothers, Cleoma Breaux Falcon

▶▶ Steve Riley, Tasso, Beausoleil, the Basin Brothers

Jared Snyder

Michael Doucet

See: Beausoleil

Jerry Douglas /Douglas, Barenberg & Meyer

Born May 28, 1956, in Warren, OH.

The undisputed master of the dobro resophonic guitar, Jerry Douglas first established his reputation in bluegrass, joining the Country Gentlemen in 1974 and later playing with both J.D. Crowe & the New South and Boone Creek, a band Douglas formed with Ricky Skaggs. Douglas became an in-demand session musician after moving to Nashville in 1979 to work with the Whites. Since leaving that band in 1986, he has worked in an astonishing array of formats and contexts, performing and recording with bands (the Bluegrass Album Band, Strength in Numbers, and Douglas, Barenberg & Meyer), in duets with artists ranging from Peter Rowan to Vishwa Mohan Bhatt, on his own recordings, and as a guest artist on literally hundreds (if not thousands) of albums by such artists as Paul Simon, James Taylor, the Nashville Bluegrass Band, and Red Knuckles & the Trailblazers. Among Douglas's other career highlights are a stint in the house band on TNN's acclaimed American Music Shop series, several Grammy awards as an artist and producer (Alison Krauss, the Nashville Bluegrass Band), five International Bluegrass Music Association Dobro Player of the Year awards, and enough other industry awards to stock a trophy shop.

what to buy: The Great Dobro Sessions ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1994, prod. Jerry Douglas, Tut Taylor), which won the Grammy for Best Bluegrass Recording in 1994, gathers 10 top dobro players for the most ambitious recorded survey of a single instrument in bluegrass history. Among the dobroists joining Douglas are Josh Graves, Mike Auldridge, Sally Van Meter, and Rob Ickes. Douglas is featured on two cuts, the modern jazz standard "Birdland" and a solo "Abilene Gal." Douglas, Barenberg & Meyer's Skip, Hop & Wobble ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1993, prod. Russ Barenberg, Jerry Douglas, Edgar Meyer) combines Douglas with guitarist Russ Barenberg and renowned bassist Edgar Meyer for an all-instrumental album of virtuoso music that's as accessible and enjoyable as it is challenging. Guest Sam Bush takes "Big Sciota" pretty close to bluegrass, but other highlights

wilson douglas

("Big Bug Shuffle," "From Ankara to Izmir," "The Years Between") straddle genres with abandon and fiery aplomb. Slide Rule ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1992, prod. Jerry Douglas), described by Douglas as his return to "entertaining" music, made a big splash thanks to heavy airplay for cuts featuring guest vocalists Krauss ("I Don't Believe You've Met My Baby"), Tim O'Brien ("Hey Joe"), and the Brother Boys ("Pearlie Mae"). The solo "A New Day Medley" is Douglas at his best, though full-band cuts on "Ride the Wild Turkey," "Shenandoah Breakdown," and "Shoulder to Shoulder" aren't far behind.

what to buy next: Under the Wire ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Jerry Douglas), the first of a series of self-described non-entertaining (i.e., "art") albums Douglas recorded for MCA, is actually a very entertaining collection of tunes, most of them Douglas originals. "Two Friends," a duet with Béla Fleck, is a highlight, as are the tunes "Grant's Corner," "Redhill," and "T.O.B." Everything Is Gonna Work out Fine ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Jerry Douglas), a 19-track reissue drawn from his two Rounder albums (Fluxology and Fluxedo), presents Douglas in a more bluegrass-oriented setting than many of his later recordings. Such guests as Ricky Skaggs and Tony Rice add strong support on standout cuts like "Randy Lynn Rag," "Dixie Hoedown," and "Wheel Hoss." Dreadful Snakes' Snakes Alive ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1984) is a one-time supergroup project featuring Douglas, Béla Fleck, Pat Enright, Blaine Sprouse, Roland White, and Mark Hambree.

the rest:

Fluxology ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1979)
Fluxedo ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982)
(With Vishwa Mohan Bhatt) Bourbon & Rosewater ♪♪♪♪ (Water Lily Acoustics, 1995)
(With the Bluegrass Album Band) V. 6, The Bluegrass Album Band (Rounder, 1996)
(With Peter Rowan) Yonder ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1996)

influences:

Josh Graves, Mike Auldridge
Rob Ickes, Kim Gardner

see also: Strength in Numbers

Jon Hartley Fox

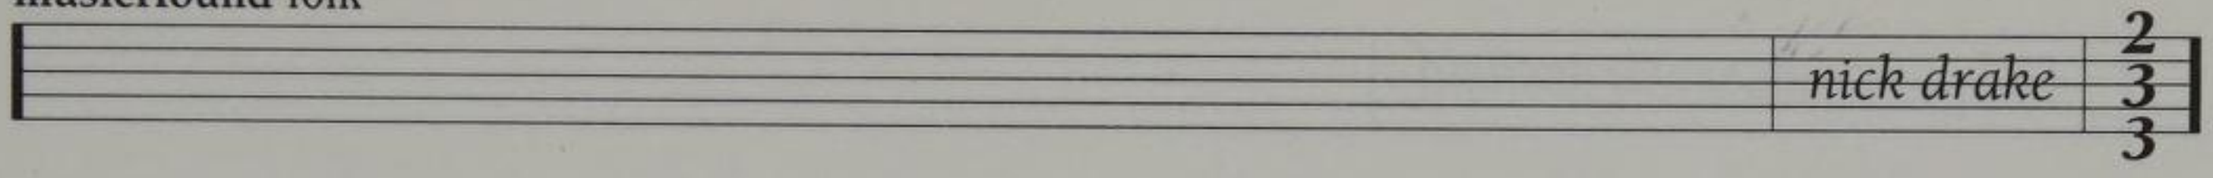
Wilson Douglas

Born 1922, in Clay County, WV.

Wilson Douglas has lived most of his life within a few miles of his Clay County birthplace. Born to a family of musicians in an area rich with traditional music, his first instrument was the guitar. At age 8, Douglas made nightly treks to his grandmother's house to accompany her fiddling and learn her tunes. Eventually he switched to the fiddle himself. Around that time, the legendary fiddler Ed Haley came to Clay County and became Douglas's greatest inspiration. After Haley's death, Douglas was further influenced by the playing of West Virginia fiddler French Carpenter. These days, Douglas has assumed the role played by Haley and Carpenter, passing his tunes, his style, and his love of mountain music along to the many younger musicians who come to learn.

what's available: In 1973, a series of field recordings were made around West Virginia by musician/collector Tom Brown. These recordings are now in the care of the West Virginia Regional History Collection at West Virginia University. They include Douglas, accompanied by his uncle, Gruder Morris, on guitar. The CD Hot from the Kitchen ♪♪♪♪♪ (Roane Records, 1996, prod. David O'Dell) consists of 21 tunes from this collection. Douglas's style is different from many other old-time fiddlers, and this disc presents a cross-section of his playing, showcasing all the grace and dignity that he brings to his music. Many of these tunes are well known in old-time circles, but Wilson's versions almost always include an interesting twist or two. Even the ubiquitous "Forked Deer," which has been sanitized and sterilized by a countless number of lesser fiddlers, takes on a new life in Wilson's capable hands. There are also a few relatively uncommon tunes, one of which—"Goin' Downtown"—is a pure delight. These are field recordings, and there are a few reminders of that in the form of bumped microphones, tapping feet, etc. Morris's guitar is also louder on some cuts than others. However, these things are not distracting, and the fiddle is always clean and clear. This is no imitation, it's the real stuff—Appalachian fiddle music, the kind that was a part of everyday life in the old days, played by one of the masters. If anything, the evidence of field recording adds to the enjoyment. This disc is available from Roane Records, Route 3, Box 293, Spencer, WV 25276.

worth searching for: Douglas was also recorded by Gus Meade during the 1970s, and much of this was issued on The Right Hand Fork of Rush's Creek ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1975, prod. Guthrie Meade, Mark Wilson). This LP is out of print but worth looking for. All of the tunes were learned from French Carpenter. There is some overlap between this and the Hot from the Kitchen CD, but not much, and there are several unusual and beautiful tunes that are hard to find elsewhere.



influences:

Ed Haley, French Carpenter

Jim Triplett

Dave Shombert

Connie Dover /Scartaglen

Scartaglen formed 1982, in Kansas City, MO. Disbanded 1994.

Connie Dover, vocals, keyboard, harmonium; Roger Landes, bouzouki, mandolin, guitar; Kirk Lynch, uilleann pipes, guitar; Michael Dugger, bouzouki, fiddle, guitar, vocals.

Scartaglan was an acoustically-oriented American band that performed ballads and tunes from Ireland, Scotland, and England, as well as original compositions that were heavily inspired by Anglo-Celtic traditions. They released three albums, all of which are now out of print. During an off period for Scartaglen in 1991, Connie Dover traveled to Scotland and recorded her first solo album with a cast of great Scottish and Irish musicians. Subsequent to Scartaglen's demise, Dover has continued to develop her solo career. She recorded two more solo albums with Phil Cunningham (ex–Silly Wizard) producing, and she performs live in a duo setting with Roger Landes. Dover and Landes had a guest spot on the famed National Public Radio program, A Prairie Home Companion.

what's available: Since all three of the Scartaglen albums are out of print, all that's available presently are Connie Dover's solo albums and solo efforts by Landes and Dugger. Dover's three solo recordings—Somebody ♪♪♪♪½ (Taylor Park Music, 1991, prod. Phil Cunningham), The Wishing Well ♪♪♪♪ (Taylor Park Music, 1994, prod. Phil Cunningham), and If Ever I Return ♪♪♪♪ (Taylor Park Music, 1997, prod. Phil Cunningham)—are all fairly similar in tone. Cunningham surrounded Dover with a fine cast of sympathetic musicians, including himself on keyboard and pennywhistles, Aly Bain (Boys of the Lough) on fiddle, Christy O'Leary (uilleann pipes), and Manus Lunny (guitar, bouzouki, bodhrán). Most of the selections are traditional ballads from Scotland or Ireland, with the occasional surprise such as the lovely French song "La Fontaine," which also appears on If Ever I Return.

worth searching for: Scartaglen ♪♪♪ (Kicking Mule, 1984, prod. Scartaglen), The Middle Path ♪♪♪½ (Castle Island, 1987, prod. Scartaglen), and Last Night's Fun ♪♪♪½ (City Spark Records, 1992, prod. Tom Mardikes) are all nice recordings and worth searching out.

solo outings:

Michael Dugger:

At Early Dawn (Lopitha, 1996)

Roger Landes:

Dragon Reels ♪♪♪♪ (Ranger Music, 1997)

influences:

Maddy Prior, Phil Cunningham, Silly Wizard, Planxty, Boys of the Lough, Dwight Yoakam

Loreena McKennitt, Dervish, Seelyhoo, Altan

Ken Roseman

Nick Drake

Born June 19, 1948, in Rangoon, Burma. Died November 25, 1974, in Tanworth-in-Arden, England.

Of all the names to come out of the English folk movement of the late '60s, only Drake had to wait some 20 years after his death to be recognized for his achievements and impact. During his brief life, Drake released three touching, heartfelt albums that met critical adulation and public dismissal. This lack of commercial acceptance sent the already melancholy Drake into an even deeper state of depression. Through his pain, or perhaps because of it, Drake was able to write songs that were at times personal, often mystical, sometimes tragic, and always enchanting. Behind the English lilt of his hush-be-quiet voice was Drake's radiant and hypnotic guitar playing, a lyrical triad of alternate tunings, complex chord progressions, and intricate finger picking. But, his chronic shyness and aversion to performing live did little to get his name in front of those who could have appreciated him while he was alive. A few months after beginning to record his fourth album, Drake overdosed on Tryptizol, an anti-depressant medication. The coroner declared it a suicide, though friends and family disagree. Today, interest in Drake is far greater than it ever was while he was alive, with his CDs reaching a new audience and generating talk about tribute albums and a feature film about his life.

what to buy: Even with the lush background of Robert Kirby's string arrangements, the delicate power of Drake's acoustic guitar rings through Bryter Layter ♪♪♪♪½ (Island/Hannibal, 1970, prod. Joe Boyd). The jazzy "One of These Things First" and "At the Chime of the City Clock" share space with haunting instrumentals and emotionally intense love songs such as "Northern Sky." Drake reportedly recorded the songs on Pink Moon ♪♪♪♪½ (Island/Hannibal, 1972, prod. Nick Drake) in two days, just with his voice and a guitar, then without a word

robin and barry dransfield

dropped the tape off at the Island Records reception desk and disappeared. After several days someone opened the package and realized they had the new Nick Drake album. After a few listens, this scenario makes perfect sense; he said all he needed to with one voice, six strings, and 11 songs.

what to buy next: Drake's first album, Five Leaves Left ♪♪♪♪ (Island/Hannibal, 1969, prod. Joe Boyd), was recorded when he was just 20 years old. But he belies his youth with skillful playing, and the production blends his guitar, voice, and string arrangements magnificently. "Cello Song" is as close to perfection as it gets. Time of No Reply ♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1986, prod. Joe Boyd, Frank Kornelussen) consists of unreleased songs recorded during the Five Leaves Left sessions, as well as home recordings and four songs recorded in 1974 which were to be included on Drake's fourth album. All are solo acoustic performances except for an alternate version of "The Thoughts of Mary Jane," which features Richard Thompson on electric guitar. Once you're hooked, splurge for Fruit Tree ♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1986, prod. Joe Boyd), a four-CD box set that contains all three original releases and Time of No Reply, along with a 16-page booklet.

the rest:
Way to Blue: An Introduction to Nick Drake ♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1994)

worth searching for: Tanworth-in-Arden 1967/68 ♪♪♪½ is an Italian bootleg that features 18 tracks, mostly cover songs, from a homemade tape. The Complete Home Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (Boyds Music) is a German bootleg featuring 24 tracks.

influences:

◀◀ The Beatles, Tim Buckley, Bob Dylan, Tim Hardin, John Renbourn, Joni Mitchell

▶▶ Jeff Buckley, the Cure, Mark Eitzel, J Mascis, R.E.M., the Smiths, Paul Weller

Brian Escamilla

Robin and Barry Dransfield

Formed 1969, in Yorkshire, England. Disbanded 1971.

Robin Dransfield, vocals, guitar; Barry Dransfield, vocals, fiddle.

Robin and Barry Dransfield have been involved with the English folk scene in some fashion for almost thirty years. As a duo, they made their initial splash in 1969 at the Loughborough Festival, where they met legendary producer Bill Leader, for whom they subsequently recorded two albums, Rout of the Blues and Lord of All I Behold. During 1970 and 1971, the duo toured extensively, even supporting acts such as Ralph McTell. Stardom beckoned, but they declined to participate and split up; Barry stated that "joining the establishment just didn't appeal to me." After that Barry recorded a solo album, Barry Dransfield, and participated in recording the seminal Morris On album with an all-star band including Ashley Hutchings, Richard Thompson, John Kirkpatrick, and Dave Mattacks. The Dransfields came back together in 1976 for The Fiddler's Dream, an ambitious project described as a "thematic album based around the idea of a true folk musician's role in the community" (Colin Irwin, in his liner notes for the CD compilation Up to Now). This was a thoroughly contemporary set, featuring original material and folk-rock arrangements using electric bassist Brian Harrison (also on piano and organ) and drummer Charlie White. As "Dransfield" (with a different drummer—Bob Critchley), they formed a live touring unit that didn't receive the type of support it needed. For their next project, Robin and Barry returned to their acoustic roots. Credited again to Robin and Barry Dransfield, Popular to Contrary Belief was released in 1977. After that, the brothers went their separate ways. Barry released another solo album, Bowin' and Scrapin', in 1978 and Robin's solo effort, Tidewave, appeared in 1980. Since then, both Dransfield brothers have had careers as violin repairers. Barry, however, has continued to perform. In 1984, he even a won a part as a blind Irish fiddler in the film The Bounty. The next the public heard from Barry was when Be Your Own Man was released in 1994. This collection of traditional and contemporary songs was well received and gave Barry the opportunity to record Wings of the Sphinx with producer Kenny Craddock. The Dransfield story came full circle in 1997 when the reactivated Free Reed label released Up to Now, a comprehensive history of the Dransfields' careers.

what to buy: Since most of Barry and Robin's albums are now out of print, to get a good sampling of what they've done, you must get Up to Now ♪♪♪♪♪ (Free Reed, 1997, prod. various). Not only does this two-CD anthology include tracks from the duo, solo, and "Dransfield" albums, there is also quite a bit of previously unreleased material taken from BBC radio programs, including several John Peel Show broadcasts. The Dransfield band tracks culled from those radio shows are a great treat for folk-rock fans in that they show what a dynamic live unit they were. Barry's a capella rendition of "The Werewolf," taken from Barry Dransfield, is stunning. The Up to Now package includes a booklet featuring a thorough Dransfield history written by journalist Colin Irwin, as well as complete source documentation for each track.

what to buy next: Since The Fiddler's Dream ♪♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1976/Essential/Transatlantic, 1997, prod. Brian Harrison) is once again generally available, listeners can rediscover the potential of the Dransfields' variation on the folk rock theme. Barry Dransfield's recent solo albums, Be Your Own Man ♪♪♪♪½ (Rhiannon, 1994, prod. Paul Dengate) and Wings of the Sphinx ♪♪♪♪½ (Rhiannon, 1996, prod. Kenny Craddock), show the power of acoustic-based English roots music. Also, Dransfield's current status as an ace multi-instrumentalist is revealed, since he played cello and guitar on these albums, in addition to fiddle.

worth searching for: Barry Dransfield's Bowin' and Scrapin' ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1978) and Robin Dransfield's Tidewave ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1980) are both long out of print, but if you find them at a good price (and still own a turntable), buy 'em! Popular to Contrary Belief ♪♪♪♪½ (Free Reed, 1977) is also out of print, but may be reissued as a limited edition vinyl collector's item.

influences:

◀◀ The Copper Family, the Watersons, Flatt & Scruggs, Fairport Convention, Steeleye Span, Martin Carthy & Dave Swarbrick

▶▶ Eliza Carthy, Kate Rusby, Kathryn Tickell, Pete Morton

Ken Roseman

Pete Droge

Born March 11, 1969, in Eugene, OR.

With a lyrical gift that says "folkie," and a band that answers "rock 'n' roll," Droge can have it both ways. But he mostly plays it down the middle, creating solid, acoustic-based rockers that are literate, soulful, and earnest to a fault. Considering he began his career in Seattle and later moved to Portland, it's surprising that he chose not to hide his lyrics in a sea of sonic sludge or adorn them with coy love-rock. But Droge has the air of an iconoclast about him, and, backed by his simple guitar-bass-drums-keyboard arrangements, his laconic delivery makes him sound like Tom Petty backed by the Band.

what's available: On Necktie Second ♪♪♪♪ (American, 1994, prod. Brendan O'Brien), Droge indulges in a fair amount of self-pity, but at least some of the time, as on the rocking opening cut, "If You Don't Love Me (I'll Kill Myself)," he plays it as if for yuks. Elsewhere, he engages in a bit of Dylanesque wordplay ("Sunspot Stopwatch") and proves himself a capable storyteller ("Fourth of July"). The album is suffused with regret and longing, yet there is just enough humor to keep things moving. Find a Door ♪♪♪♪ (American, 1996, prod. Brendan O'Brien), has his backing outfit solidifying into a band he calls the Sinners, but the sound is no less than heavenly, particularly on the rocking single "Wolfgang," which coasts along on a George Harrison–style slide guitar. The horn-augmented "Mr. Jade" rants at a clueless yuppie, and is perhaps Droge's own "Ballad of a Thin Man." And on "Dear Diane," Droge regresses to the wise-ass moroseness of his debut, instructing "Dear Diane/Today was worse/Call the Reverend and a hearse." This kid's gonna go places. Droge puts the rock back in folk-rock on Spacey and Shakin ♪♪♪½ (57/Epic, 1998, prod. Brendan O'Brien), rocking with abandon on the neopsychedelic title track and "Please the Ghost."

influences:

◀◀ Bob Dylan, Tom Petty, Neil Young

▶▶ Elaine Summers

Daniel Durchholz

Dry Branch Fire Squad

Formed 1976, in Springfield, OH.

Current line-up features: Ron Thomason, mandolin, guitar, vocals; Suzanne Thomas, guitar, clawhammer banjo, vocals; Mary Jo Leet, guitar, vocals; Charlie Leet, bass, vocals; Bobby Maynard, banjo, fiddle, vocals. Past members have included: Bill Evans, banjo, vocals; Dave Edmundson, guitar, fiddle, vocals; Dick Ervin, bass, vocals; John Hisey, banjo, vocals; Dan Russell, banjo, vocals; John Lee Baker, guitar, vocals.

A favorite attraction at bluegrass festivals for 20 years, Dry Branch Fire Squad is perhaps best known for the extemporaneous ramblings of their leader Ron Thomason during live shows. Not to be ignored as highly skilled musicians, however, their recorded output has included some mighty fine bluegrass. Thomason, the only remaining original member of the band, was mandolin player for Ralph Stanley for roughly a year in 1971, then joined Lee Allen and the Dew Mountain Boys for four years before forming DBFS. Their most recent album captures the band at its best.

what to buy: Live! At Last ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Ken Irwin, Dry Branch Fire Squad) includes Ron Thomason's amusing (if mostly pointless!) introductions of band members and of the songs fans have enjoyed for years. His duets with Thomas, including "We Believe in Happy Endings," are particularly good.

what to buy next: Long Journey ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Ken Irwin) is the best studio record (of those available on CD) that the band has recorded; the others lack the cohesiveness and style displayed here.

the rest:
Tried & True ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1987)
Fertile Ground ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
Just for the Record ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1993)
Antiques & Inventions ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995) (cassette only)
Born to Be Lonesome ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995) (cassette only) Golgotha ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995) (cassette only) Good Neighbors & Friends ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995) (cassette only)

influences:
◀◀ Ralph Stanley, Molly O'Day

Stephen L. Betts

The Dubliners

Formed 1962, in Dublin, Ireland.

Ronnie Drew, voice, guitar; Luke Kelly, voice, guitar, banjo; Barney McKenna, tenor banjo, mandolin, voice; Ciaran Bourke, voice, guitar, tin whistle; John Sheahan, fiddle, tin whistle, concertina; Eamonn Campbell, guitars, mandolin, voice; Sean Cannon, voice, guitar; Jim McCann, voice, guitar; Bobby Lynch, voice, guitar; Paddy Reilly, voice, guitar.

In the history of Irish music, no group has created and maintained its niche as effectively as the Dubliners. At the beginning of "the ballad boom," that heady time during the early '60s when the Clancy Brothers made "folk songs" a meaningful category that ordinary people could relate to and take pride in, the Dubliners began their own career. While the Clancys were well-scrubbed returned Yanks from rural Tipperary, decked out in matching white Aran sweaters, the Dubliners were hard drinking backstreet Dublin scrappers with unkempt hair and bushy beards, whose gigs seemed to happen by accident in between fist fights. But their street credibility, their undeniable talent, and their honest love of the music has kept them going and made them some of the most famous Irishmen in the world.

The Dubliners started in 1962 as the Ronnie Drew Group. Drew had recently returned to Ireland from Spain, where he had been teaching English and learning to play the guitar. He brought this new musical talent to bear on the Irish song tradition, and gathered around himself a core of terrific entertainers and musicians. Barney McKenna, a great tenor banjo picker, provided instrumental firepower. All-around showman Ciaran Bourke added second guitar, sweet creaky vocals, and tin whistle. And Luke Kelly, an intense singer and five-string banjo player who had served his time on the English folk club scene, was the band's most impressive vocalist. Kelly suggested the band's name be changed to the Dubliners. After a single Dubliners album for the Transatlantic label, Kelly departed for England. He was replaced by Bobby Lynch, who also brought along his musical partner, fiddler John Sheahan. When Kelly returned to replace Lynch in 1966, Sheahan stayed on as the group's most impressive traditional instrumentalist. This five-piece lineup of Drew, Kelly, Bourke, McKenna, and Sheahan became famous in 1967 through a song called "Seven Drunken Nights," originally recorded for an album called A Drop of the Hard Stuff, which was later re-titled The New Dubliners, and later still re-christened Seven Drunken Nights. It first appeared on the Major Minor label. "Seven Drunken Nights" was released as a single, but when the official media banned it for bawdiness it looked like it would languish in obscurity for good. Luckily for the Dubliners, it was picked up by the pirate station Radio Caroline and given saturation airplay. As a result, it shot to Number Five on the British Pop charts, launching the Dubliners to stardom and making them a household word in Ireland, Britain, and all over the world.

The Seven Drunken Nights line-up lasted eight years, and despite always being on the verge of breaking up (Drew, Kelly, and McKenna fell out every other night or so), it was only split up by a major tragedy: in 1974, Bourke suffered a brain hemorrhage on stage that left him unable to perform. Bourke's condition, and a doctor's warning, caused Drew to examine his lifestyle and decide to leave the Dubliners as well. Drew was replaced by Jim McCann, and the band continued to perform all over the world. Drew did eventually return to the group (in 1979), and all went smoothly until tragedy struck again in 1984. Luke Kelly, whose soaring vocals defined the Dubliners' sound as surely as anything, died that year of a brain tumor. He was replaced by Galway singer Sean Cannon, who had been filling in off and on during Kelly's illness. A few years later, Eamonn Campbell signed on, playing guitars and mandolin. In 1987, this lineup of the Dubliners teamed up with the Pogues to record "The Irish Rover," which became their biggest hit ever and added them to the consciousness of a whole new generation.

The latest lineup change in the Dubliners was the departure (once again) of Ronnie Drew, in 1996. He was replaced by the great entertainer Paddy Reilly. One thing to take note of regarding this important band: the Dubliners have recorded many studio albums and many live albums, and they repeated the same "greatest hits" with some frequency in their recordings. Because of international licensing arrangements, many of their albums have been released more than once, by different labels, under different titles, and bearing different covers. In addition, an enormous number of Dubliners compilation albums have been released, drawing on most of the original material. The result is that, especially where CD reissues are concerned, there are a lot of different albums with a relatively narrow selection of songs, and it's often difficult to tell the origin of any given track. Always compare any Dubliners album you contemplate buying with ones that are already in your collection, or you will quite likely wind up buying the same songs over and over.

what to buy: Original Dubliners 1966–1969 ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1993) captures the excitement of the best-known Dubliners lineup. It collects four albums from the Dubliners' early days onto two CDs. Typically, the four original LPs were released at various times with various titles, but their best-known monikers were Seven Drunken Nights, Seven Deadly Sins, More of the Hard Stuff, and Whiskey on a Sunday. It should be said that, contrary to what the sleeve notes claim, these were not the first albums the Dubliners recorded, but it was these albums that established the Dubliners as an enduring presence and not a one-hit wonder. The EMI set includes memorable and influential interpretations of many great songs, including Kelly's renditions of traditional songs like "Whiskey in the Jar," "The Rising of the Moon," "Black Velvet Band," "Poor Paddy on the Railway," "A Nation Once Again," and "Gentleman Soldier." Kelly also sings three songs by his friend and mentor Ewan MacColl, "The Traveling People," "Shoals of Herring," and "Net Hauling Song," as well as many Scottish songs that he picked up during his years in Britain. For his part, Drew contributes some of the racier, bawdier, boozier material: "Seven Drunken Nights," "Poor Old Dicey Riley," "Quare Bungle Rye," "Whiskey on a Sunday," "The Parting Glass," and "A Pub with No Beer" are all supplied by him. Bourke sings a few as well, though his voice was weaker and creakier than those of his bandmates. "Darby O'Leary," "All for Me Grog," "Drink it up, Men," "Mrs. McGrath" (a parody of the traditional song based on his own life), and "The Limerick Rake" are all sung by Bourke. Many sets of tunes, including a memorable version of "O'Carolan's Concerto," are led by McKenna and/or Sheahan. All of these are classic tracks that would irrevocably change the way the world saw Irish music. In every Irish music lover's collection, there will always be room for these albums, albums that in many ways started it all.

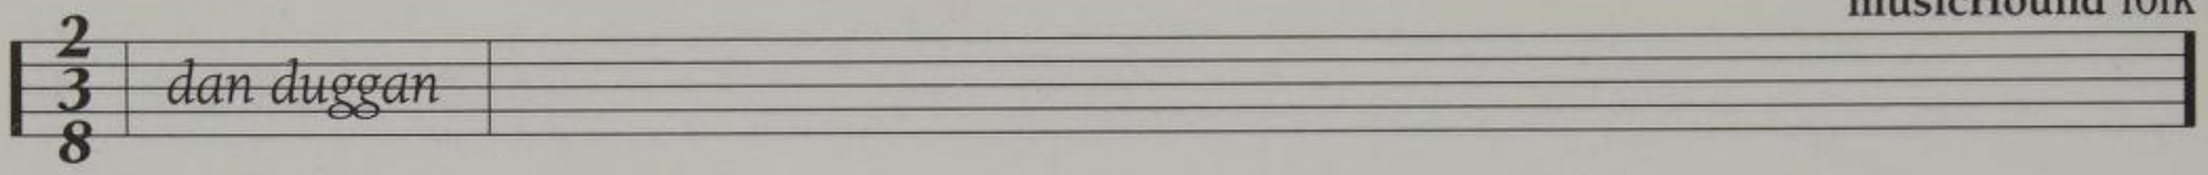
what to buy next: The Dubliners' 1992 anniversary double CD, 30 Years a-Greying ♪♪♪♪ (RTE 1992, prod. Eamonn Campbell, Phil Coulter), features the then-current lineup of Drew, McKenna, Sheahan, Cannon, and Campbell, along with guest musicians ranging from Rory Gallagher to the Hothouse Flowers. Even the famous Scottish comedian Billy Connolly, who got his start as a banjo-wielding folkie, does a lead vocal on the album, singing his own ironic and effective song "I'm Asking You Sergeant, Where's Mine?" A similar release from 1987, Celebration ♪♪♪½ (Baycourt 1987, prod. Eamonn Campbell), teams the Dubliners up with the Pogues, Paddy Reilly, Christy Moore, and others. It contains the hit single "The Irish Rovers" by the Dubliners and the Pogues. One of the best LPs from the Jim McCann years, A Parcel of Rogues ♪♪♪½ (ARC, 1976, prod. Earl Gill), is available on CD. It's quite short but features some beautiful songs, including McCann's rendition of "Kellyburn Brae," a humorous (if misogynistic) ballad. Luke Kelly brings in a lot of his Scottish-influenced folk club material, and shows his debt to Ewan MacColl on the title track. One curious note: although most sources suggest that Ciaran Bourke did not perform on this album, he is pictured on the front cover. Since the CD reissue contains no list of the musicians or notes of any kind, the question is open to interpretation. If you want to hear a good live Dubliners show, Live in Carre, Amsterdam ♪♪♪½ (Spectrum, 1985, prod. Reinoud Weidema, Rob Smaling, Tom Steenbergen) captures a lovely concert during Luke Kelly's final tours with the group. An unusual touch is that this disc features both Kelly and Sean Cannon, who filled in for Kelly during his illnesses and replaced him permanently after he died. Some of the nicest songs on this disc, like "The Waterford Boys," come from Cannon. Kelly, while his fatigue and illness are perceptible, still sings strongly and communicates beautifully with the audience. Castle Communications recently released a compilation made from Transatlantic's very early Dubliners material (these were the Dubliners' very first albums) entitled The Definitive Transatlantic Collection ♪♪♪ (Castle 1997, prod. Nathan Joseph). These tracks, most of which were recorded live, sound a little tentative compared to their EMI recordings, but they're very much worth having. Many of the songs did not appear on the band's later EMI outings or their live LPs, so this is some of the more unusual material out there. For completists, a compilation called Complete Dubliners ♪♪♪♪ (Earache, 1997, prod. Nathan Joseph) collects all the tracks from their Transatlantic recordings onto two CDs.

what to avoid: Two budget-priced CDs are available from K-Tel Records, The Dubliners ♪♪ (K-Tel, 1996) and The Best of the Dubliners ♪♪ (K-Tel, 1996). These are decent collections, but you get what you pay for; they're so short that both together would have fit on a single CD.

influences:

- The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, Ewan MacColl
- The Johnstons, Planxty, the Pogues, Christy Moore

Steve Winick



Dan Duggan

Born August 21, 1956, in Syracuse, NY.

Dan Duggan is rapidly being acknowledged as one of the finest hammered dulcimer players and composers in the country. He recently placed first in the prestigious National Hammered Dulcimer Championships, displaying both his technical mastery of the instrument and his compositional skills—he was the first winner ever to play all original material in the competition. As if this wasn't enough, he is also a superb dance musician and caller, often calling intricate squares while simultaneously playing lead on the dulcimer. Whether in concert or on the dance floor, Duggan's renditions of traditional Irish and American tunes reflect his study and understanding of their original context. He can faithfully recreate eighteenth-century harp pieces or bowl you over with vibrant nineteenth-century dance tunes. His performances are always an interesting excursion into a variety of musical styles and moods fueled primarily by his virtuoso dulcimer playing, but complemented by his skill on other instruments, including yang quin, guitar, and banjo. He mixes these talents with interactive storytelling in his school program performances to stimulate individual expression and group participation. Duggan is also a member of the Susquehanna String Band, a trio with John Kirk and Rick Bunting. The band has performed in concert with several symphony orchestras throughout the country. Not content just to play the instrument, he has designed and marketed a hammered dulcimer with partner John O'Hara, under the name of Blackhawk Dulcimers. Several times a year, Duggan hosts an "Esperance Masterclass Dulcimer Weekend" as well as an "In the Hayloft" concert series. His recordings and more information are available through Esperance Productions, RD 1, Box 208, Red Creek, NY 13143.

what to buy: Between the Seasons ♪♪♪♪ (Esperance Productions, 1984/1996, prod. Dan Duggan, Larry Serafini) is an excellent recording of original instrumental compositions on hammered dulcimer and guitar, and combines two earlier releases, First Frost and Last of May. This generous 75-minute CD features Duggan's hammered dulcimer and guitar playing with the help of Henry Jankiewicz (fiddle), Roberta Wackett (tenor recorder), Marc Facci (bass), Dorian Bunting (cello), and Chris Lee (banjo). The selections vary from the energetic dulcimer medley of "Lonely Again Rag" and "New Wave Rag" to a pleasing guitar picking number, "Bringing in the Hay."

what to buy next: Trillium Lane ♪♪♪½ (Esperance Productions, 1993, prod. Dan Duggan) contains more examples of Duggan's compositional skills, ranging from the happy "Old Zeb," a hammered dulcimer tune about his favorite old black Lab, to "Blue Monday," a reflective guitar piece. Duggan gets some superb help from Chris Norman playing flute on the title cut.

the rest:

Christmas Morn ♪♪♪ (Esperance Productions, 1986)
Winters Eve ♪♪♪ (Esperance Productions, 1988)
Seasons of Change ♪♪♪ (Esperance Productions, 1990) (cassette only)
All through the Night ♪♪♪ (Esperance Productions, 1995)

solo outings:

Susquehanna String Band:

The Cloths of Heaven ♪♪♪½ (Susquehanna String Band, 1987) (cassette only) North Country ♪♪♪½ (Esperance Productions, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ Sterl Van Arsdale, Paul Van Arsdale, Malcolm Dalglish

▶▶ Helicon, Walt Michael, No Strings Attached

Heidi Cerrigione

Lorraine Duisit

See: Tom Espinola and Lorraine Duisit

Stuart Duncan

Born April 14, 1964, in Quantico, VA.

Stuart Duncan is the fiddle player in the much-honored Nashville Bluegrass Band; he is also virtually everyone's favorite bluegrass fiddler these days, and is consequently the first-call-guy for most bluegrass and a lot of mainstream country sessions. He first gained widespread attention playing and recording in southern California with a fellow-prodigy, banjo player Alison Brown, as a pre-teen. He also logged time with the popular southern California bluegrass band Lost Highway before taking Nashville by storm.

what's available: Stuart Duncan ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Béla Fleck) is this fabulous fiddler's sole available effort as a leader, and it shows off his beautiful tone, control, articulation, and imagination to great effect on a mixture of traditional fiddle tunes and Duncan originals.

influences:

◀◀ Chubby Wise, Byron Berline, Mark O'Connor

▶▶ Chris Thile, Jason Carter

see also: Nashville Bluegrass Band

Randy Pitts

Stanley Dural Jr.

See: Buckwheat Zydeco

Bob Dylan

Born Robert Allen Zimmerman, May 24, 1941, in Duluth, MN.

Bob Dylan has been almost deified as one of the most important artists of his generation, yet he is an artist who defies classification. He established his reputation first as a protesting folk artist and, later, as a rock superstar, with a stop-off to revolutionize the Nashville country scene as well. Decades from now, when all the dust has settled and the various musical revolutions are viewed with historical hindsight, Dylan will stand out as one of the three most important people to ever pick up a guitar. Lest you think that smacks of hyperbole, none other than George Harrison has been quoted as saying that 500 years from now, Dylan will be the most remembered and revered name from this era, eclipsing even the Beatles. Unlike the Fab Four and Elvis Presley, Dylan's profound influence on the music world—and society in general—was never matched by his sales. Nonetheless, his key material truly serves as the soundtrack for a generation and is deeply ingrained in our daily lives. Phrases like "The Times They Are A-Changin'" have worked their way into everyday journalistic vernacular; his song "Like a Rolling Stone" even helped give a moniker to our biggest music magazine. Dylan's most important contribution was giving the voice of social consciousness to contemporary music lyrics, starting with folk music and then evolving into rock. When girl groups and teenage idols were topping the charts in 1962 and '63, Dylan woke up a sleeping public with songs about racial injustice and the ravages of war. All of this has earned Dylan a continuing level of respect that is on a par with greats like Duke Ellington, Leonard Bernstein, and Miles Davis. His influence may be best illustrated by the fact that one scholarly study concluded that he was the one person, from all walks of life, most responsible for stopping the Vietnam war.

On the country front, no single songwriter since Hank Williams—save perhaps Harlan Howard—revolutionized Nashville more than Bob Dylan. He isn't usually the first artist that comes to mind when people think about the dismantling of the Nashville establishment. But he struck a nerve in country songwriters that continues to this day. Of course, the country roots in Dylan's own music have long been ignored in favor of the Woody Guthrie connection that comfortably keeps his work within a stricter context. But the strains of early bluegrass harmonies, not to mention some of the Elizabethan lyricism, suffuse Dylan's early recordings, and he continues to toss off country standards during his live performances to this day. But even more, Dylan's casually sculpted lyrical touch, his phrase-twisting command of the vernacular, infected an entire generation of country songwriters, including Kris Kristofferson, who at least served an honest apprenticeship as janitor during the Blonde on Blonde recording sessions. Dylan's own songs continue to thrive in the repertoires of countless country singers. His association with country music's then-reigning star, Johnny Cash, signified the approval of Nashville. The pair recorded an album's worth of duets, although only "Girl from the North Country" surfaced on Nashville Skyline, and Dylan made a crucial guest appearance on Cash's popular TV program. Dylan won three Grammy Awards in 1998, including Album of the Year and Best Contemporary Folk Album honors for the critically acclaimed Time out of Mind.

what to buy: Regardless of his well-deserved reputation in both rock and country, to this day Dylan's legacy is still very much that of a folk artist, and his key work is The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1963, prod. John Hammond). This album single-handedly launched the mid-60s protest movement with such venerable songs as "Blowin' in the Wind" and "A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall." Once Dylan started rocking full-time, he made Highway 61 Revisited ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1965, prod. Bob Johnston, Tom Wilson), which many pundits feel is one of the greatest albums ever released, perhaps even tying the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band for the all-time crown. It is hard to overpraise an album that opens with "Like a Rolling Stone" and closes with "Desolation Row," and doesn't have an ounce of fat in between. Directly following that was Blonde on Blonde ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1966, prod. Bob Johnston), another highly regarded album that always winds up in the top 10 of any greatest albums of all-time poll. Probably Dylan's most popular record among his legions of hard-core fans, the album is a folk-rock masterpiece featuring "Rainy Day Women #12 & 35," "I Want You," and "Just Like a Woman." Although Dylan's creative output peaked with that record, nine years later he shocked everyone with the brilliance of Blood on the Tracks ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1975, prod. Bob Dylan). As his marriage started to crumble, Dylan wrote and sang songs like "Tangled up in Blue" and "Idiot Wind" from the soul, causing critics everywhere to pull out and dust off the "masterpiece" moniker once again.

what to buy next: Bringing It All Back Home ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1965, prod. Tom Wilson) is many fans' favorite Dylan album and literally kick-started the folk-rock movement with "Mr. Tambourine Man" and "It's Alright, Ma (I'm Only Bleeding)." Before that, however, The Times They Are A-Changin' ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1964, prod. Tom Wilson) set the music world on fire with its title song and "With God on Our Side," and Another Side of Bob Dylan ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1964, prod. Tom Wilson) showed his softer—though no less ingenious—side with "It Ain't Me Babe" and "Chimes of Freedom." The double-disc Basement Tapes ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1975, prod. Bob Dylan, the Band) was recorded in 1967 with the Band and has achieved legendary status with off-the-wall, yet compelling, songs like "Please, Mrs. Henry" and "Nothing Was Delivered" (plus the brilliant "Tears of Rage"). If it's an overview of Dylan's career that you need, however, nothing beats the box set Biograph ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1985, prod. various), featuring three CDs full of his most compelling material, spanning all of his most important phases.

bob dylan

what to avoid: Without Dylan's consent, his former record label released the unfortunately titled Dylan woof! (Columbia, 1973, prod. Bob Johnston) only after he had jumped ship to David Geffen's Asylum label. It was a dirty trick that now stands alone as a black eye in Dylan's canon. The album is so insignificant that, to this day, Columbia still hasn't reissued it on CD in America. Similarly, Dylan and the Dead ♪ (Columbia, 1989) is perhaps the weakest entry among the scattershot plethora of live albums Dylan has released over the years.

the rest:
Bob Dylan ♪♪ (Columbia, 1962)
Bob Dylan's Greatest Hits ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1967)
John Wesley Harding ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1968)
Nashville Skyline ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1969)
Self Portrait ♪♪ (Columbia, 1970)
New Morning ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1970)
Greatest Hits Vol. II ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1971)
Pat Garrett & Billy the Kid Soundtrack ♪ (Columbia, 1973)
Planet Waves ♪♪♪½ (Asylum, 1974)
Before the Flood ♪♪ ((Asylum, 1974)
Desire ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1976)
Hard Rain ♪ (Columbia, 1976)
Street Legal ♪♪ (Columbia, 1978)
Bob Dylan at Budokan ♪½ (Columbia, 1979)
Slow Train Coming ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1979)
Saved ♪ (Columbia, 1980)
Shot of Love ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1981)
Infidels ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1983)
Real Live ½ (Columbia, 1985)
Empire Burlesque ♪♪ (Columbia, 1985)
Knocked out Loaded ♪½ (Columbia, 1986)
Down in the Groove ♪½ (Columbia, 1988)
Oh Mercy ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1989)
Under the Red Sky ½ (Columbia, 1990)
The Bootleg Series Vols. 1–3: 1961–1991 ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1991)
Good As I Been to You ♪♪ (Columbia, 1992)
World Gone Wrong ♪♪ (Columbia, 1993)
Greatest Hits Vol. 3 ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1994)
MTV Unplugged ♪♪ (Columbia, 1995)
Time out of Mind ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Sony, 1997)

worth searching for: DCC Compact Classics' gold-disc version of Highway 61 Revisited, remastered in the early '90s with sparkling sound, is well worth its $25–$30 price tag. Also worth pursuing is The Concert for Bangladesh ♪♪♪♪½ (Apple/Capitol, 1971), with its five-song, highly charged Dylan acoustic set that features his greatest-ever live reading of "Just Like a Woman." Forever Young ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1988, prod. various), an 18-song collection distributed to radio stations to promote the incidental "Silvio," the single from his indifferent Down in the Groove album, contains 17 other certified classics.

influences:
◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Hank Williams, Leadbelly, Little Richard, Elvis Presley, the Weavers, Joan Baez

▶▶ The Byrds, Sonny & Cher, Joan Baez, Tom Petty & the Heartbreakers, Bruce Springsteen, John Mellencamp, Garth Brooks, Joe Henry, Bob Seger, Joan Osborne

Pete Howard, Joel Selvin, and Neal Walters

Bob Dylan (© Ken Settle)

The Eagles

Formed 1971, in Los Angeles, CA. Disbanded 1981. Reunited 1994.

Glenn Frey, vocals, guitars, keyboards; Don Henley, vocals, drums; Randy Meisner, bass, vocals (1971–77); Bernie Leadon, guitar, banjo, mandolin, vocals (1971–76); Joe Walsh, guitar, vocals (1976–present); Don Felder, guitar, vocals (1974–present); Timothy B. Schmit, bass, vocals (1977–present).

Building their musical prowess in Los Angeles' fertile country-rock community during the late 1960s, the Eagles first came together in 1970 as the backing band for Linda Ronstadt's Silk Purse album; individually, the musicians had already played with the Flying Burrito Brothers, Poco, Rick Nelson's Stone Canyon

Band, and Bob Seger. But the Eagles' sound—smooth harmonies and polished, twangy arrangements—would define southern California rock during the coming decade. As time went on, the sound became progressively more rock-oriented, and by the time they rolled out the groundbreaking Hotel California album in 1976, Henley and Frey had become astute social commentators—despite a bit of cynicism that lent a nasty edge to some of their songs. Always too serious, the Eagles succumbed to the pressures of success and called it quits in 1981. But the 1993 release of Common Thread, a tribute album featuring country stars doing Eagles songs, spurred the group to soar again—particularly after Travis Tritt reunited them to appear in the video for his version of "Take It Easy." Since then the Eagles have made a zillion dollars (or thereabouts) on the road, though the reunion has yet to produce any new material of note. The group was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in January 1998.

what to buy: A little inconsistent during their early years, the Eagles are best served by Their Greatest Hits, 1971–1975 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1975, prod. Glyn Johns, Bill Szymczyk), an awesome collection of singles—from the hot picking of "Take It Easy" to the smooth pop polish of "One of These Nights"—that established the band as one of the top groups of the time.

what to buy next: One of These Nights ♪♪♪½ (Asylum, 1975, prod. Bill Szymczyk) is the apex of the Eagles' twang time with some truly gorgeous moments in "Lyin' Eyes" and "Take It to the Limit."

what to avoid: Desperado ♪♪ (Asylum, 1973, prod. Glyn Johns) is a misbegotten concept album about the Southwest whose best songs can be found on Their Greatest Hits.

the rest:
Eagles ♪♪½ (Asylum, 1972)
On the Border ♪♪½ (Asylum, 1974)
Hotel California ♪♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1976)
The Long Run ♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1979)
Live ♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1980)
Greatest Hits, Volume 2 ♪♪♪½ (Asylum, 1982) Hell Freezes Over ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1994)

worth searching for: Peaceful Easy Feeling (Cuttlefish) is one of many bootleg recordings of a landmark 1974 show at New York's Bottom Line, at which Ronstadt and Jackson Browne joined the Eagles for a rendition of "Take It Easy." Recommended.

solo outings:
Glenn Frey:
No Fun Aloud ♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1982)
Best Of ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1995)
Don Henley:
I Can't Stand Still ♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1982)
Building the Perfect Beast ♪♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1984)
The End of the Innocence ♪♪♪♪½ (Geffen, 1989)
Actual Miles: Don Henley's Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪½ (Geffen, 1995)
Joe Walsh:
(With Barnstorm) The Smoker You Drink, the Player You Get ♪♪♪ (ABC/Dunhill, 1973)
Look What I Did: The Joe Walsh Anthology ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1995)
Little Did He Know . . . Joe Walsh's Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ The Byrds, Gram Parsons, the Beatles, the Everly Brothers, Hank Williams, the Louvin Brothers

▶▶ Travis Tritt, Restless Heart, Garth Brooks, the Mavericks, the Gin Blossoms, Uncle Tupelo, the Jayhawks, Vince Gill, the Judds

see also: Flying Burrito Brothers, Linda Ronstadt

Gary Graff

Fred Eaglesmith

Born in Ontario, Canada.

One of nine children, Fred Eaglesmith grew up driving tractors and trucks on a southern Ontario farm. His music smartly marries the dusty town and far-off train whistle imagery of classic country music to his chilly, farm country north-of-the-border roots. The musical results are captivating, cinematic songs with a touch of humor and a folky edge.

what's available: Drive-In Movie ♪♪♪♪ (Vertical, 1996, prod. Scott Merritt, Fred Eaglesmith) is a beautifully coherent set of songs evoking more innocent times and happier days. But that's not to say that there isn't a fair share of humor and optimism in these sublimely catchy songs. Eaglesmith's voice can be mournful or uplifting, but it's never less than thoroughly convincing and totally inviting. Even more consistent is Lipstick Lies & Gasoline ♪♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1997, prod. Scott Merritt), where he bridges the gap between the true-blooded young traditionalists haunting Nashville's famed lower Broadway and the raw electricity of Neil Young and J.J. Cale. Whether the singer and his partner are sadly waking up to the mess they've made of their lives in "Drinking Too Much" or he's just reflecting on the circumstances that led to the end for Hank, Gram, Jimi, and Janis in "Alcohol & Pills," Eaglesmith brings his stories to life with excruciating clarity.

worth searching for: Fred J. Eaglesmith & the Flying Squirrels' Things Is Changin' ♪♪♪ (Sweetwater, 1993, prod. Scott Merritt) and From the Paradise Motel ♪♪♪♪ (Barbed Wire, 1994, prod. Dave Brogren), both recorded live at the La Casa Music Series in Birmingham, Michigan, are two smartly crafted Canadian releases with living-room warmth.

influences:

⏪ Bob Dylan, Neil Young

⏩ Mary Chapin Carpenter, Robert Earl Keen Jr.

David Sokol

Jim Eanes

Born December 6, 1923, in Mountain Valley, VA. Died 1995.

Smilin' Jim Eanes celebrated 50 years in the music business in 1990; he was a prominent figure in both bluegrass and country circles, known for his smooth baritone vocal delivery and his songwriting prowess. He wrote several songs that became standards in country and bluegrass music, most notably "Missing in Action," "Your Old Standby," "Baby Blue Eyes," and "I Wouldn't Change You If I Could." He recorded prolifically for several labels from the late 1940s into the 1950s, including Capitol, Decca, and Starday. Although his smooth vocal delivery was more country than bluegrass (he was a member of Bill Monroe's Blue Grass Boys briefly, but his baritone was an ill-fitting duet partner for Monroe's high tenor) and his major label recordings tended to be aimed at more mainstream audiences, Eanes did appear at many bluegrass festivals and made mostly bluegrass recordings during the later years of his career.

what to buy: Classic Bluegrass ♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1992, prod. Gary B. Reid) is culled from several 1970s and 1980s Rebel sessions, and includes material from Eanes's excellent LP 50th Anniversary, first released in 1990. Eanes teamed with banjo player and singer Bobby Atkins on Heart of the South ♪♪♪ (Rural Rhythm, 1991, prod. Mike Swinson), an enjoyable collaboration that also features contributions from fiddler extraordinaire Vassar Clements and such outstanding pickers as dobro player Frank Poindexter and guitar flash Clay Jones.

worth searching for: Jim Eanes & the Shenandoah Valley Boys' The Early Days of Bluegrass, Volume 4 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1978, prod. Jack Tottle) hails from two 1950s sessions, featuring fine bands and outstanding Eanes vocals.

influences:

⏪ Clyde Moody, Roy Hall

⏩ Tony Rice, John Starling

Randy Pitts

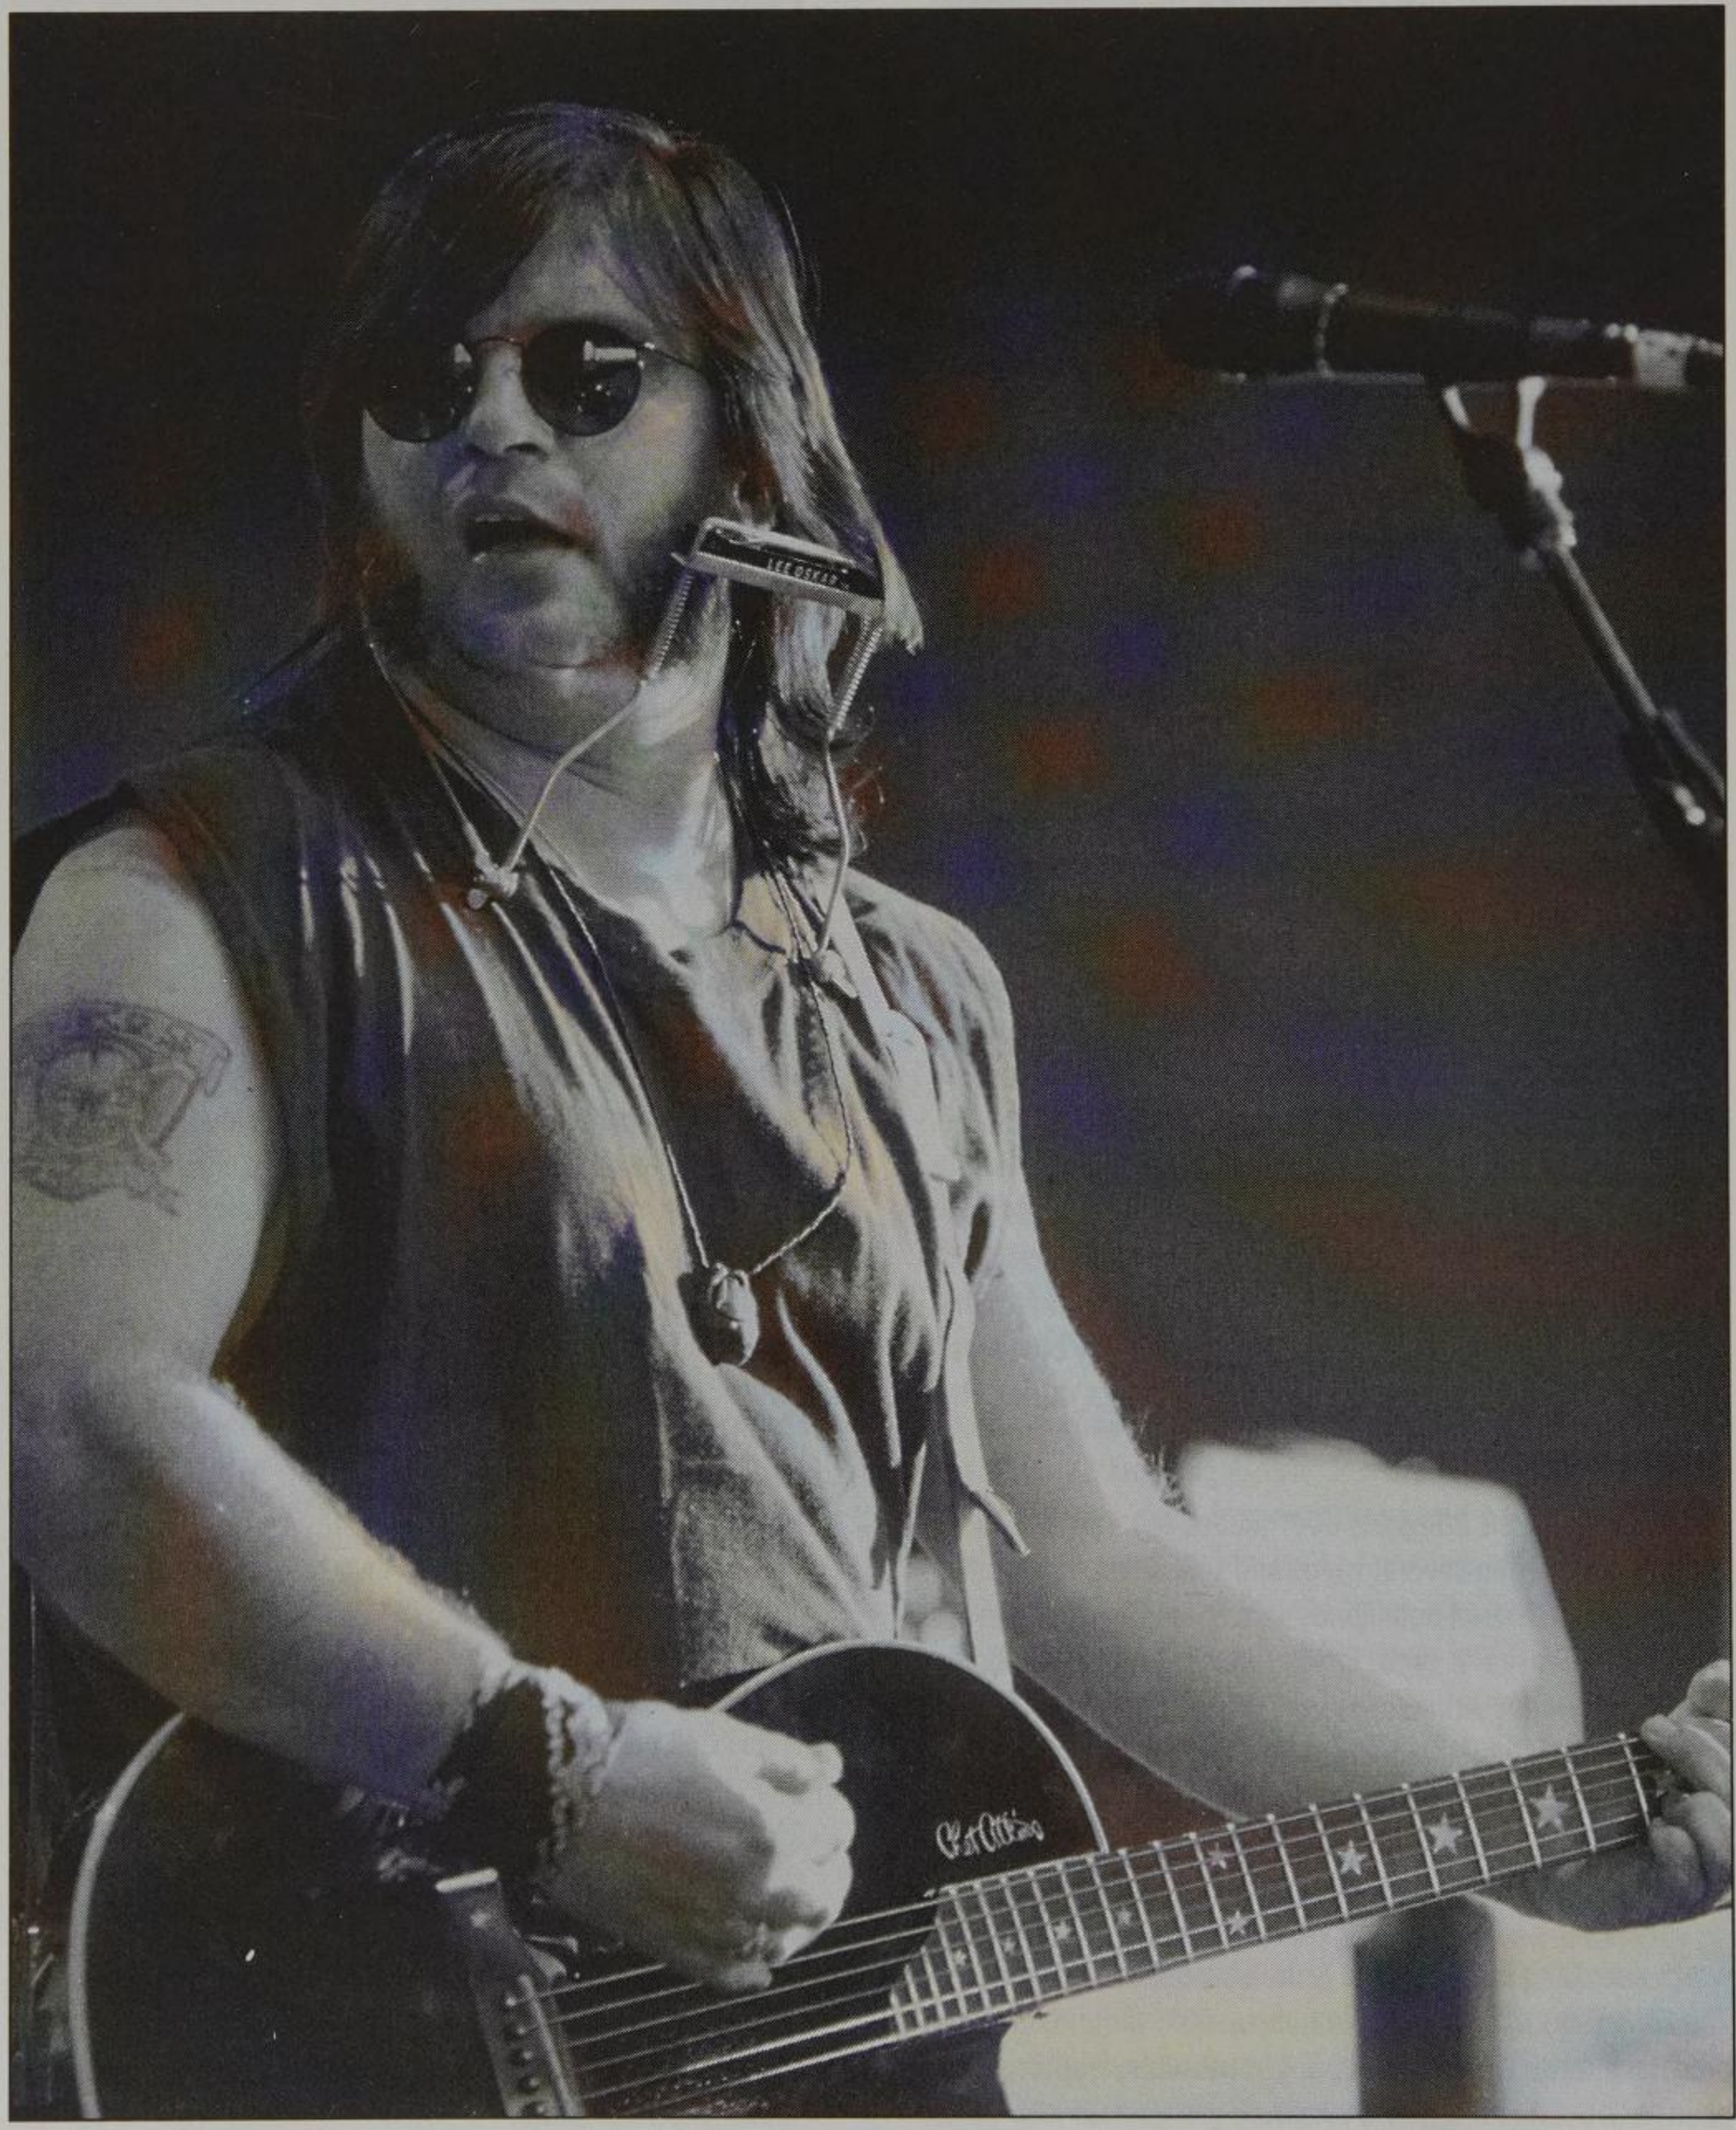
Steve Earle

Born January 17, 1955, in Fort Monroe, VA.

The son of an air traffic controller, Steve Earle infiltrated Nashville in 1986 with a twangy, hard-core-hillbilly sound filtered through the heartland rock 'n' roll of John Mellencamp and Nebraska-era folk of Bruce Springsteen. Although signed to mainstream MCA Records, Earle quickly established himself as a rebel without a pause by worshipping Townes Van Zandt, covering the Rolling Stones, opening shows for such alternative bands as the Replacements, and eventually battling cocaine and heroin addictions. Despite a string of powerful albums—capped by 1990's underrated The Hard Way—radio resisted the big, bad, good ol' boy and the back-to-back releases of a live album and a greatest-hits collection confirmed that even MCA had lost patience with him. But Earle has confronted and conquered his demons: now clean and sober, he released a 1996 comeback album called I Feel Alright that confirms the title with a hearty, hard-rocking relish. More important, his own E-Squared imprint is developing into an exalted outpost for young, like-minded acts like the V-Roys, Cheri Knight, and Six String Drag, who recognize that country music is an essential ingredient of, not an alternative to, rock 'n' roll.

what to buy: Guitar Town ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1986, prod. Tony Brown, Emory Gordy Jr.) is an auspicious debut of small-town frustration ("Someday") and romantic yearning ("Fearless Heart"). I Feel Alright ♪♪♪½ (E-Squared/Warner Bros., 1996, prod. Richard Dodd, Ray Kennedy, Richard Bennett) finds him defiantly addressing his past in "Cocaine Can't Kill My Pain" and "The Unrepentant," but the brightest signs are the brash but breezy twang-pop confections "Hard-core Troubadour," "More Than I Can Do," and "You're Still Standin' There." The equally unapologetic follow-up, El Corazon ♪♪♪½ (E-Squared/Warner Bros., 1997, prod. Steve Earle, Ray Kennedy), finds him spitting, spewing, and sparkling against backdrops ranging from the Crazy Horse–like caterwaul of "Taneytown" to the protest-folk music of "Christmas in Washington" to the full-frontal garage-band assault of "Here I Am." The latter is a pummeling declaration of independence that sounds like a throwaway but strikes like a manifesto.

steve earle



cliff eberhardt 2/4/5

what to buy next: For new fans who've just discovered him, the two-CD Ain't Ever Satisfied: The Steve Earle Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Hip-O/MCA, 1996, prod. various) renders obsolete 1993's The Essential Steve Earle by adding such album tracks as "Fearless Heart" and "Nothing but a Child" and his promo-only live version of Springsteen's "State Trooper."

what to avoid: Early Tracks ♪ (Columbia, 1987, prod. Roy Dea, Pat Carter) is a hurriedly compiled collection of tepid unreleased material designed to cash-in on his Guitar Town accolades. Koch reissued the album in early 1998 with four additional tracks that previously had appeared only on 45s.

the rest:
Exit O ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1987)
Copperhead Road ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1988)
BBC Live ♪♪♪ (Windsong, 1988)
The Hard Way ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1990)
Shut Up and Die Like an Aviator ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1991)
Essential Steve Earle ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1993)
Train a Comin' ♪♪♪ (E-Squared/Warner Bros., 1995)
Johnny Too Bad ♪♪♪ EP (E-Squared, 1996)

worth searching for: Jill Sobule's Happy Town (Atlantic, 1997) boasts "Love Is Never Equal," a wicked duet with Earle that showcases the snarling clout of his voice.

influences:
- Townes Van Zandt, Bruce Springsteen, Bob Dylan, Woody Guthrie
- Todd Snider, Jack Ingram, Reckless Kelly

David Okamoto

editor's choice
5 zydeco albums

Clifton Chenier, Zydeco Sont Pas Sale—King of the Real Creole French Zydeco (Arhoolie)

Various Artists, Zydeco: Early Years, Vol. One (Arhoolie)

Boozoo Chavis, Zydeco Trail Ride (Maison de Soul)

Geno Delafose, That's What I'm Talking About! (Rounder)

Beau Jocque, Pick up on This! (Rounder)

Cliff Eberhardt

Born January 7, 1954, in Berwyn, PA.

The poetry of the city echoes through the songs of Greenwich Village–based singer-songwriter Cliff Eberhardt. Singing in a gutsy, streetwise baritone and playing acoustic guitar with emotional mastery, Eberhardt injects an infectious hard edge to his music. The son of amateur musicians, Eberhardt was raised in the suburbs of Philadelphia. As a youngster, he sang satirical Tom Lehrer tunes in a band that he shared with his brothers. After working in a masking tape factory in Carbondale, Illinois, he settled in New York in 1978. One of Greenwich Village's "new" breed of songwriters, Eberhardt had many early songs included on albums issued by the Fast Folk Musical Magazine. Eberhardt's first breaks as a musician came as a sideman for Richie Havens, Rick Danko, Melanie, and Shawn Colvin. Havens repaid the compliment by singing duet vocals on the title track of Eberhardt's debut album, The Long Road. Havens recorded his own version of the song for his 1994 album, Cut to the Chase. In addition to touring as a soloist, Eberhardt has performed with a larger acoustic-electric band. He's also toured as part of a revue, "A Winter's Night," with Patty Larkin, John Gorka, and Cheryl Wheeler. Their rendition of the Smokey Robinson–penned tune "You've Really Got a Hold on Me" was included on Eberhardt's 1993 Now You Are My Home album.

what to buy: The Long Road ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1990, prod. Peter Gallway) was one of the first albums released when the former all–New Age instrumental label turned to singer-songwriters. A classic of modern urban folk music, the album remains Eberhardt's apex. With accompaniment by Kevin Jenkins (piano), Jeff Pevar (electric guitar), Seth Farber (keyboards), Jake Ehrenreich (drums, background vocals), and guests including Shawn Colvin and David Buskin, Eberhardt sings with an emotional conviction that inspires comparisons with Bruce Springsteen and mid-1960's Bob Dylan. The high point of the album is the title track, a duet sung with Richie Havens.

what to buy next: Eberhardt's songs on his second album, Now You Are My Home ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993, prod. Peter Gallway), are more concise and cut-to-the-bone, and reflect the dreams and heartbreaks of a romantic. In addition to a harmonious cover of Smokey Robinson's "You've Really Got a Hold on Me,"

Steve Earle (© Ken Settle)

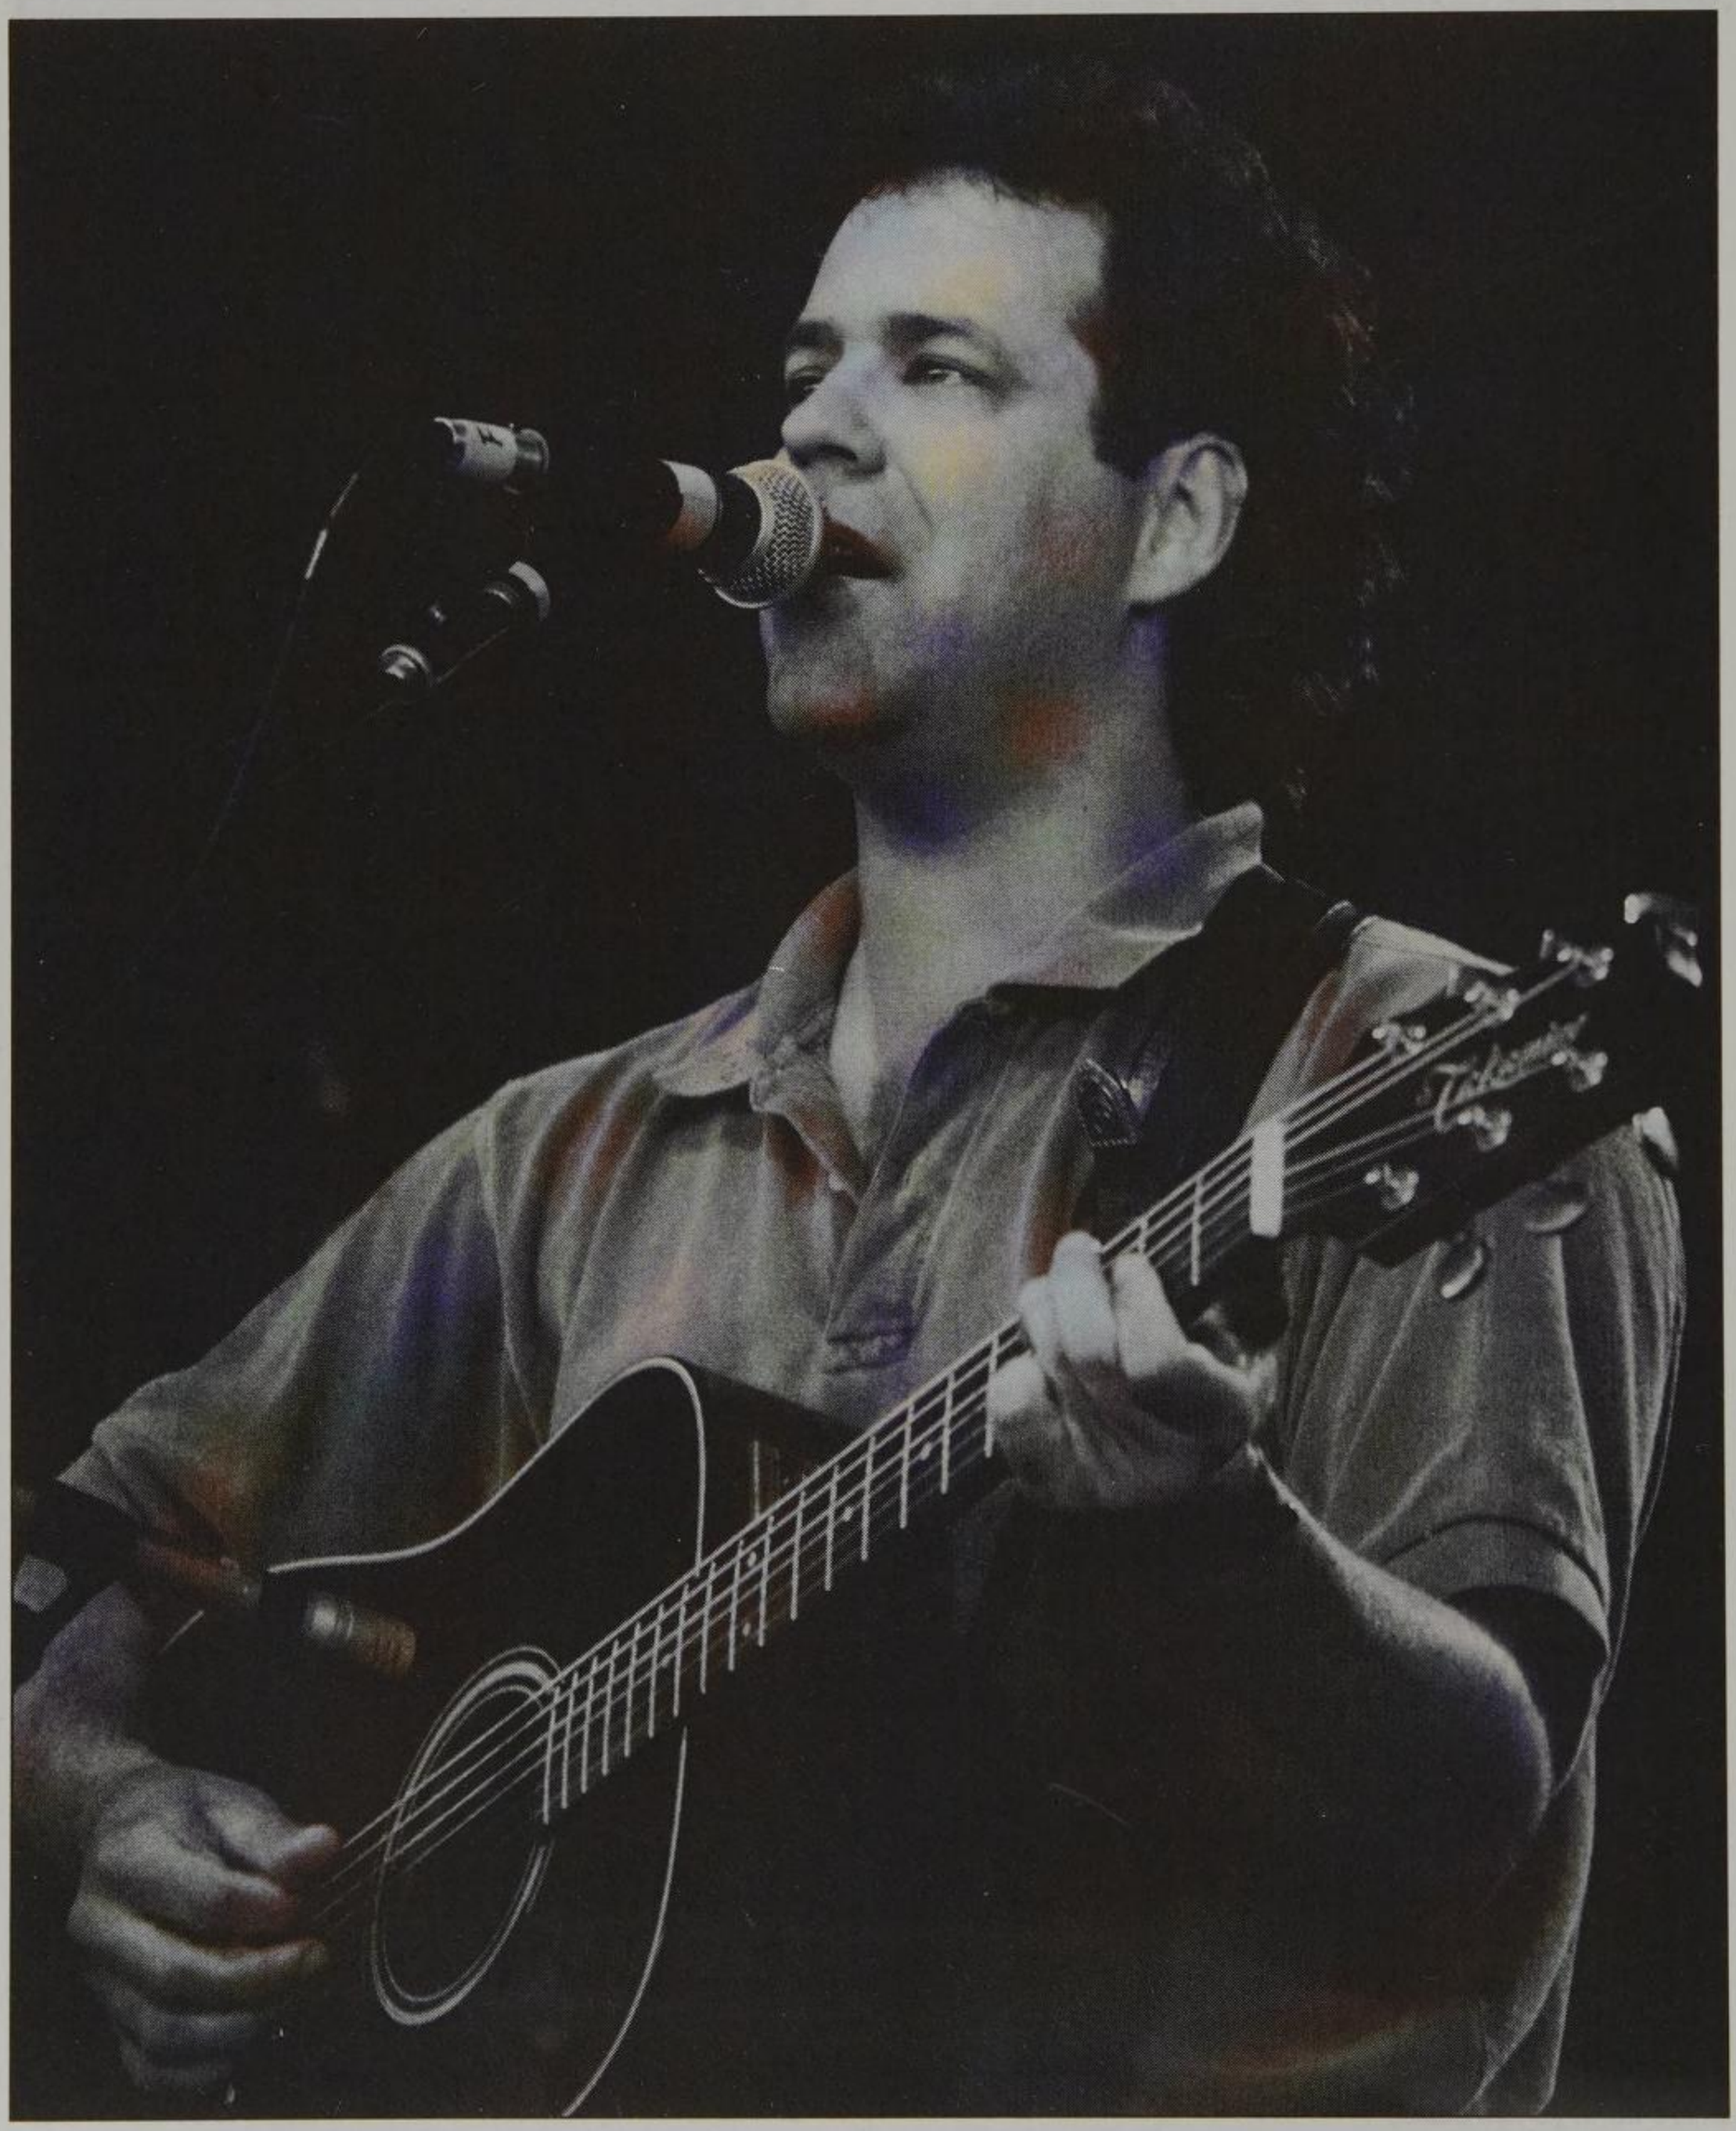
cliff eberhardt



recorded with Patty Larkin and John Gorka during the "Winter's Night" tour, the album showcases Eberhardt's songwriting with such well-crafted tunes as "Ever Since I Lost Your Love," "Not Alone In This World," and "Every Time I See Your Face."

the rest:
Mona Lisa Cafe ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1995)
12 Songs of Good and Evil ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1997)

worth searching for: Many of Eberhardt's early songs were featured on issues of the Fast Folk Musical Magazine. A rare live version of Eberhardt's "When the Circus Comes to Town" is included on The Greenwich Village Folk Festival: 1989–1990 ♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1991, prod. Mitch Cantor).

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, Bruce Springsteen, Jack Hardy, Richie Havens, Sam Cooke

▶▶ Shawn Colvin, John Gorka

Craig Harris

Ebin-Rose

Formed March 1992, in Guilford, CT.

Ebin Parker (born April 7, 1952, in New Haven, CT), vocals, guitar; Rose Bengtson (born May 19, 1960, in Middletown, CT), vocals.

Ebin-Rose is a contemporary acoustic folk duo with a wide following of fans throughout New England. With their dazzling original songs, Parker's masterfully played guitar, and Bengtson's unique stage presence, the duo has garnered positive regional press ("Rose's voice and Ebin's guitar work as a flowing musical mosaic . . . the sum being greater than the parts," Ken Bastura wrote in Frogbelly Folk News) and shared the stage with the Nields, Dar Williams, Harvey Reid, Greg Brown, and Iain Matthews. They have performed at numerous folk venues and events, including the Hartland Folk Festival, Falcon Ridge Festival, the Speakeasy, and Cafe Lena. Parker, who has studied the guitar playing of Nick Drake and Richard Thompson, uses a variety of traditional and opening folk tunings that feature his singular fingerpicking style. Ebin Parker says, "We try and write songs that take you to the edge of life's experiences and then float you back to your normal existence." A quick snippet from "Turn to Stone" illustrates just that: "Tell me I'm your favorite liar, just once before I turn to stone."

Cliff Eberhardt (© Stephen A. Ide)

what's available: Through the Wires ♪♪ (Ivoryton Music, 1997, prod. Trip Wyeth) features some of the songs that best demonstrate Parker's dexterity on the six-string and Bengtson's haunting vocals. Song selection includes favorites "Turn to Stone," "Peace Abides," and "Tell You." You can order it from Ivoryton Music, PO Box 421, Ivoryton, CT 06442.

worth searching for: Mr. Boot ♪ (Ivoryton Music, 1995, prod. Tryp Wyeth), Down to Tryp's ♪♪ (Ivoryton Music, 1994, prod. Tryp Wyeth), and Seems So Childlike ♪ (Ivoryton Music, 1992, prod. Tryp Wyeth) are cassettes of mostly hard-to-find studio and live recordings of Ebin-Rose. If interested, contact Ivoryton Music to see if they still stock these cassettes.

influences:
◀◀ Richard Thompson, Leonard Cohen, Joni Mitchell, Nick Drake, Iain Matthews, Bert Jansch

▶▶ Jessica and Martin Simpson, Clive Gregson and Christine Collister, Kate MacDonnell

TJ McGrath

Eddie from Ohio

Formed 1991, in VA.

Eddie Harness, percussion, vocals; Mike Clem, guitar, bass, harp, vocals; Robbie Schaefer, guitar, vocals; Julie Murphy, vocals, piano.

Eddie from Ohio was actually born in Virginia in 1991. It's a folk-pop band with a strong local following (the band's "Folkin' Excellent!" bumper stickers adorn seemingly every Toyota inside the Beltway) and a growing national reputation. The band's sound is a sparkling blend of lead female vocals, backing harmonies, light percussion, and the usual strummed strings.

what's available: Big Noise ♪♪♪♪ (Virginia Soul, 1997, prod. Billy Wolf) shows off the band's growing confidence with a fine collection of songs written by Clem and Schaefer. I Rode Fido Home ♪♪♪♪ (Virginia Soul, 1995, prod. Billy Wolf) includes more percussion, more fiddles, and more nostalgia and pathos. Actually Not ♪♪♪♪ (Virginia Soul, 1993, prod. Billy Wolf) opens with the CSN-like "North Pacific Rain," as vocal harmonies turn into rich fingerpicking instrumentals.

influences:
◀◀ The Grateful Dead, Peter, Paul, and Mary, the Electric Bonsai Band

▶▶ The Dave Matthews Band, Frenté

Pamela Murray Winters

judith edelman

Don Edwards (© Jack Vartoogian)

Judith Edelman

Born November 11, 1964, in New York, NY.

For years, music was Judith Edelman's side project. Though she started piano lessons at age 5 and continued for years, she always had something else going: college, a job in third-world development, whatever. She kept up the music end, though, later adding voice and guitar to her studies. She joined the Bay Area bluegrass band Ryestraw before going solo and releasing her first album for Nashville-based Compass Records in 1996.

what's available: The irony of Perfect World ♪♪♪♪ (Compass Records, 1996, prod. Bil VornDick) is that Edelman knows the world isn't perfect and never can be, and she weaves that philosophical thread into nearly every song on this exceptional debut. Working with a band that includes Clive Gregson, banjo player Alison Brown, dobro player Jerry Douglas, and drummer Pat McInerney, Edelman and producer Bill VornDick craft a fresh statement that incorporates elements of Celtic music and folk into Edelman's bluegrass vision.

influences:

◀◀ Richard Thompson, Tim O'Brien, the Stanley Brothers

▶▶ Matt Flinner

Brian Mansfield

Ed's Redeeming Qualities

Formed 1988, in Durham, NH. Disbanded 1996.

Dan Leone, baritone ukulele, banjo ukulele (1988–96); Dom Leone, guitar (1988–89); Carrie Bradley, violin, guitar (1988–96); Neno Perrotta, bongos, clarinet, rice in a coffee can (1988–91); Jonah Winter, clarinet, mandolin, accordion, concertina, tin whistle, drum (1991–96).

Ed's Redeeming Qualities formed when Carrie Bradley and Dan Leone, who were attending graduate school at the University of New Hampshire, teamed up with Dan's cousin Dom and Neno Perrotta. The band started out playing calypso covers but soon switched to writing its own material, although calypso-inspired songs would show up on most of the band's recordings. Despite musical roots in the folk world, Ed's quickly crossed the line into the world of pop and rock by playing a series of gigs at the Rathskellar, a now-defunct Boston rock club that traditionally hosted much harder fare. Through these Sunday night gigs, Ed's became a staple on the Boston music scene, and it didn't take long for Ed's to become known as a Boston band. Early critics dismissed the band as quirky or eccentric. With "rice in a coffee can" listed as a key instrument, how could you blame them? But Ed's had a sly, minimalist charm that blended pathos and sly humor and touched a nerve in audiences around the country. There was a childlike simplicity to most of the band's lyrics that was often reminiscent of e.e. cummings or A.A. Milne. Bradley's violin added a melancholy flavor to the jauntiest of songs, and the band delighted in spinning tales about people and places—real or imagined—that took sudden elliptical turns, usually for the worst: "She was pegged in the head with a lawn dart/Her dad didn't see her/That's the worst part . . . " In 1989, Dom Leone died of cancer. This had a profound effect on the band, and all subsequent Ed's releases drew heavily on his songs, words, music, and illustrations. Despite the personal tragedy, or perhaps because of it, the formula Ed's had perfected on early demo tapes—tapes that produced such Ed's classics as "Lawn Dart" and "Drivin' on 9"—remained with the band until its breakup in San Francisco in 1996.

what to buy: More Bad Times ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1990, prod. ERQ) was ERQ's first full-length CD, and critics and fans alike pick the album as the band's best. The CD contains 17 songs, re-recordings of songs culled from two years of demo tapes and an EP. It lacks some of the spontaneity of the live recordings, but is a solid showcase for the band's music. The band's most well-known single, "Lawn Dart," and one of Carrie's better vocal turns, "The Boy I Work With," appear on this CD.

what to buy next: Big Grapefruit Clean-Up Job ♪♪♪ (Slow River, 1995, prod. ERQ) is a 21-song live CD recorded during shows the band played as part of a 1994 tour, and it is the only time "Drivin' on 9" appears on an Ed's CD. However, a version does appear on the Breeders' Last Splash CD, on which Carrie also played violin, and the newer version stays remarkably true to country roots of the original. This album has a few weak moments but is notable for the way it captures the band's onstage rapport and sincerity. At the Fish & Game Club ♪♪♪ (Slow River, 1996, prod. ERQ) turned out to be the band's swan song. The CD blends old and new material ("My Friend Bob" resurfaces after appearing on the band's first demo tape, released in 1988), and while it is the most technically proficient of all the Ed's releases, it lacks the open, free feeling of earlier CDs, back before anyone knew better.

the rest:
Ed's Day ♪♪♪½ EP (Aurora, 1989)
It's All Good News ♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)
Safe World Record ♪♪♪ EP (Ed's Quality Music, 1992) Static and Weak Tea ♪♪½ (Ed's Quality Music, 1993) (cassette only) worth searching for: ERQ contributed four songs to the soundtrack of Ed's Next Move ♪♪½ (BMG/Milan, 1996). Everyone involved in the 1996 movie claims the name similarity was just a happy coincidence. The band also appears in the film.

solo outings:
Carrie Bradley:
(With the Breeders) Pod ♪♪♪♪ (4AD/Elektra, 1990)
(With the Breeders) The Last Splash ♪♪♪♪ (WEA/Elektra, 1993)
(With the Buckets) The Buckets ♪♪♪ (Slow River, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Jimmie Rogers, Jonathan Richman, Laurie Anderson, Robyn Hitchcock

▶▶ Barbara Manning/SF Seals, Ben Folds Five

Lisa M. Moore

Don Edwards

Born March 30, 1939, in Boonton, NJ.

One of the most popular of the modern cowboy singers, Don Edwards became enamored with the black-and-white images of early film cowboy Tom Mix while a young child. He taught himself guitar at age 10, then kicked around folk and country music scenes in various parts of the country as a young adult. He backed yodeler Elton Britt, released his first single on a small Dallas label in 1964, and recorded in Nashville during the late 1960s. Edwards hooked up with Michael Martin Murphey at a 1990 cowboy poetry gathering and later signed to Warner Western, which has released his four most recent albums.

what to buy: On Songs of the Trail ♪♪♪½ (Warner Western, 1992, prod. Joey Miskulin, Michael Martin Murphey), Edwards's smooth cowboy crooning evokes Marty Robbins's gunfighter ballads. The album is a collection of such new and old Western tunes as "I'd Like to Be in Texas When They Roundup in the Spring" and "Springtime in the Rockies" what to buy next: West of Yesterday ♪♪♪½ (Warner Western, 1996) won a Western Heritage "Wrangler" award for Edwards's performance of "The Freedom Song." Edwards pares his sound down to just his voice and his guitar (or banjo) on the two-disc, 32-song Saddle Songs ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Don Edwards). The material ranges from "The Old Chisholm Trail," which Edwards calls in his liner notes "probably the oldest and most authentic of all cowboy songs," to Marty Robbins's "The Master's Call."

the rest:
Goin' Back to Texas ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Western, 1993)
(With Waddie Mitchell) The Bard and the Balladeer: Live from Cowtown ♪♪♪ (Warner Western, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Red Steagall, Rex Allen, Michael Martin Murphey ▶▶ Waddie Mitchell

Brian Mansfield

Jonathan Edwards

Born July 28, 1946, in Minneapolis, MN.

Jonathan Edwards was one of a bevy of folkie songwriters who hit paydirt during the winter of 1972—the tune was "Sunshine," a Top Five single that became a coffeehouse standard. Edwards never did better commercially than on his self-titled debut, but maintained a decent following well into the 1980s, when he dug deep into his country/bluegrass roots and resurrected himself as a Nashville songwriter and performer.

what to buy: Jonathan Edwards ♪♪♪ (Atco, 1971, prod. Peter Casperson) contains most of the songs that would become radio and concert staples for the singer through the years, including the hit "Sunshine," "Emma," "Everybody Knows Her," and "Athens County," as well as the Edwards doper anthem, "Shanty."

the rest:
Lucky Day ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1974)
One Day Closer ♪♪♪ (Rising, 1994)
Man in the Moon ♪♪♪ (Rising, 1997)
Natural Thing ♪♪♪ (Rising, 1997)

worth searching for: Rockin' Chair ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1976) and Sailboat ♪♪ (Atlantic, 1977) are notable for the musical contributions of Emmylou Harris and Rodney Crowell.

influences:
◀◀ Jerry Jeff Walker
▶▶ Michael Martin Murphey

David Simons

Seamus Egan

See: Solas

Kat Eggleston

Born mid-1950s, in Vashon Island, WA.

Affairs of the heart and personal growth are the lyrical themes of singer-songwriter-acoustic guitarist-fiddler Kat Eggleston. Raised on the harmony singing that she inherited from her mother and the music theory that she learned during 11 years of classical piano lessons, Eggleston allows her balladry to serve as the background for her emotional explorations. Although she earned a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in acting from Interplayers Ensemble in Spokane, Washington, music has continued to be Eggleston's natural medium. Since returning from a trip to the South Pacific following her graduation in 1983, she's performed as a soloist and with such obscure groups as the Ferrybat Musicians, Four Women at Play, Fool Moon, the Otters, and Trio Basho. In addition to performing with the David Bromberg Band, Eggleston, who moved to Chicago in 1990, has toured the U.S. several times with her longtime partner, Andrew Calhoun.

what to buy: On Outside Eden ♪♪♪ (Waterbug, 1997, prod. Kat Eggleston, Steve Rashid) Eggleston accompanies her alto vocals and poetic lyrics with acoustic guitar and hammer dulcimer and is joined by Gary Krolak (fretless bass), John Rice (guitar, mandolin), Andrew Bird (violin), and Dave Rush (drums, percussion, and garbage-can lid). The album reflects the diversity of Eggleston's music and balances sensitive original songs—including Eggleston's witty look at the contents of her purse, "Shit"—with an expressive rendition of the traditional Child ballad "Flower of Northumberland," a lively string band instrumental interpretation of Woody Guthrie's "Pastures of Plenty," and the traditional fiddle tune "Kitchen Girl."

what to buy next: Eggleston's debut CD, Second Nature ♪♪ (Waterbug, 1994, prod. Kat Eggleston, Steve Rashid), includes several songs—"Paper Boats," "Darling Wake Up," and "The Stranger"—that had been released on earlier compilations.

the rest:
First Comes Love ♪♪ (Waterbug, 1993)

influences:
◀◀ Judy Collins, Joan Baez, Kate Wolf
▶▶ Andrew Calhoun, Priscilla Herdman, Barbara Kessler

see also: Andrew Calhoun

Craig Harris

The Egyptians

See: Robyn Hitchcock

Jason Eklund

Born late 1950s, in IL.

A modern-day wandering minstrel, Jason Eklund is the product of countless miles that he's driven in his 1977 Chevy Nova. While most songwriters are associated with a geographical region, Eklund creates his folk-like songs wherever the traveling takes him. Although he's been called "Townes Van Zandt in training" and his songs have been compared with those of Woody Guthrie and a young Bob Dylan, Eklund's compositions are a personal chronicle of his journeys. Many of Eklund's songs deal with the romantic lure of the open road and incorporate a wide range of settings.

what to buy: Eklund's self-titled debut album, Jason Eklund ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1993, prod. Jason Eklund), combines rich imagery, gutsy vocals, and heartfelt arrangements while introducing a road-experienced chronicler. Recorded in Boulder, Colorado, it contains songs about hard traveling ("Lonesome out There," "I Am the Road," and "Walk One More Mile") and odes to visited locations ("Loves in Oklahoma" and "Borneo").

what to buy next: A Streamliner's Duet ♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1997, prod. Jason Eklund, Roger Johnson), recorded in late 1995 with guitarist Roger Johnson, is the result of two mutually respected musicians coming together for a few days and includes folk songs, acoustic blues, and ragtime instrumentals.

the rest:
Lost Causeway ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Bob Dylan, Townes Van Zandt, Guy Clark
▶▶ Roger Johnson

Craig Harris

Betty Elders

Born in Greensboro, NC.

Poetic lyricism set to a natural blend of traditional folk, rock, jazz, and country music influences has made North Carolina–born and Texas-based Betty Elders one of modern acoustic music's most promising singer-songwriters. In addition to being featured on her own albums, Elders's songs have been covered by such artists as Beth and April Stevens, who recorded "Bed of Roses/Bed of Thorns," and Joan Baez, who included her interpretation of "Crack in the Mirror" on her 1997 album Gone from Danger. As Baez's guest, Elders performed several shows at venues ranging from Ben and Jerry's Newport Folk Festival in Newport, Rhode Island, to the Bottom Line in New York City, to Toad's Place in New Haven, Connecticut. At these shows Baez and Elders sang "Crack in the Mirror" and "Long Bed from Kenya." Joined by Richard Shindell, Elders and Baez performed a 27-date tour of Europe in late 1997.

Music and poetry were Elders's passions early on. Beginning piano lessons at age four, she was writing her own tunes two years later. Influenced by the poetry of Robert Frost, Carl Sandburg, and Robert Louis Stevenson that she studied in school, she was writing poems by age 10. Settling in Austin, Texas, with her family in 1984, Elders was inspired by the thriving acoustic music scene and began performing. Her self-produced debut album, Daddy's Coal, was issued on her own Whistling Pig record label in 1989. At the awards ceremony for Austin's Music City Texas Insiders' Poll, she received awards for Best Independent Tape, Song of the Year (shared by two songs on the album), Best Female Songwriter, and Best Female Vocalist. With her second album, 1990's Peaceful Existence, Elders's acclaim reached beyond regional borders. The album was reviewed favorably as far away as Italy and the United Kingdom. The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette named the album one of the five best releases of the decade. Elders's first internationally distributed album, Crayons, continued to spread her musical message.

what to buy: Elders's songwriting talents remained a well-kept secret before her albums were readily available outside of Texas. But with the release of Crayons ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish,1995, prod. Betty Elders), the secret was out. Her first international release, the album successfully showcased her poetic songwriting and emotion-tinged delivery.

what to buy next: Despite limited distribution and publicity, Elders's albums Daddy's Coal ♪♪♪ (Whistling Pig, 1989, prod. Betty Elders) and Peaceful Existence ♪♪♪ (Whistling Pig, 1990, prod. Betty Elders) were hard to keep hidden. In addition to receiving a crop of local music awards, they served to introduce Elders as an artist worthy of further attention.

worth searching for: Elders's long-out-of-print debut cassette album, After the Curtain ♪♪ (Whistling Pig, 1981, prod. Betty Elders), was released five years before her ground-breaking recordings, but it showed hints of where she was headed. Baez and Elders's Newport performance of "Long Bed from Kenya" was added as a bonus CD track on copies of Gone from Danger ♪♪, sold by Borders Books.

influences:

◀◀ Carolyn Hester, Nanci Griffith, Emmylou Harris

▶▶ Iris DeMent, Carolyn Aiken, Joan Baez

Craig Harris

Electric Bonsai Band /Uncle Bonsai

Formed 1981, in Seattle, WA.

Andrew Ratshin, guitar, vocals; Arni Adler, vocals (1981–89); Ashley Kristen, vocals (1981–89).

Since public radio stations embraced such hilarious battle cries of the sexes as "Penis Envy" and "Boys Want Sex in the Morning," folk trio Uncle Bonsai was mistakenly heralded as a feminist novelty act. This was an odd pigeonhole, especially since the band's brainchild was Andrew Ratshin, a gifted songwriter with a remarkably high voice and an equally remarkable understanding of the frustrating fallout from the sexual revolution. Their funniest songs mocked cheerleaders, suburban families, rednecks, and Julie Andrews. But Uncle Bonsai's most memorable tunes were the serious ones that examined the fertile gray area between humor and pain, love and rejection, hope and fear. Their acrobatic, sometimes atonal harmonies emphasized Ratshin's rapid-fire, eerily insightful lyrics—he could write about a parent's death from a child's point of view ("Silent Night") as easily as the death of a marriage from the viewpoint of bitter parents staying together for the sake of their kids ("In It for the Children"). The group was on the brink of major-label stardom in 1987, but a deal with Island Records fell through when their A&R champion died; they broke up amicably two years later. Ratshin continues performing solo acoustic under the confusing moniker of the Electric Bonsai Band ("It's not electric . . . it's not a band"), where his self-deprecating humor and brooding ruminations on middle-age and middle America combine to make him one of folk's most thought-provoking singer-songwriters.

what to buy: Recorded live in 1987, Myn and Wymyn ♪♪♪♪ (Yellow Tail, 1992, prod. Uncle Bonsai) was Uncle Bonsai's swan song and boasts some of their most moving material, from the sexual politics of "Men and Women" and "Bedroom Eyes" to "Doug at His Mom's," the first in a series of songs about a fictional loser named Doug. Even better were "Another Fat Song," which chronicles liposuction in stomach-churning detail, and "Womb for Rent," a touching tune about surrogate motherhood. Lounging in the Belly of the Beast ♪♪♪½ (Yellow Tail, 1995, prod. Andrew Ratshin) is Ratshin's third album as the Electric Bonsai Band and his most consistent, thanks to improved production and alternately chilling and disarmingly chirpy compositions about facing mortality and looking in the mirror—and not liking either view.

what to buy next: The Inessential Uncle Bonsai ♪♪♪½ (Yellow Tail, 1992, prod. Uncle Bonsai, Andrew Ratshin) collects live radio-broadcast renditions of most of the tunes found on Uncle Bonsai's first two albums, the out-of-print A Lonely Grain of Corn and Boys Want Sex in the Morning, including "Penis Envy," "Suzy," "Silent Night," and "In It for the Children."

what to avoid: Ratshin's second EBB effort, the ironically titled But I'm Happy Now ♪♪½ (Yellow Tail, 1993, prod. Andrew Ratshin), boasts the concert favorite "I Am My Dad," but too many of the songs meander where they usually bite.

the rest:

Electric Bonsai Band:

I Am Joe's Eyes ♪♪♪ (Yellow Tail, 1990)

Uncle Bonsai:

Boys Want Sex in the Morning ♪♪♪½ (Freckle, 1986) worth searching for: 20 Seconds of Pleasure ♪♪♪ (Yellow Tail, 1993, prod. Andrew Ratshin) is a cassette-only collection of short, hilarious tunes, like "The Weatherman" and "The Airplane," that Ratshin uses to spice his solo sets. The longer odes to David Wilcox and Rosanna Arquette are as edgy and funny as anything Uncle Bonsai did.

influences:

◀◀ The Roches, Christine Lavin

▶▶ The Chenille Sisters, Clive Gregson

David Okamoto

Ramblin' Jack Elliott

Born Elliott Adnopoz, August 1, 1931, in Brooklyn, NY.

In February 1951, folk music icon Woody Guthrie was hospitalized for an acutely ruptured appendix at Coney Island Hospital in New York. One of his visitors was a 20-year-old former rodeo hand, dressed like a cowboy and carrying a guitar. His name was Buck Elliott and he told the recovering patient how much he admired his music. Upon Guthrie's release, Elliott even started hanging around Guthrie's home in Howard Beach, New York, and eventually moved in. Guthrie, who saw a lot of promise in

ramblin' jack elliott

Ramblin' Jack Elliott (© Jack Vartoogian)

the eager musician, took him under his wing and taught him everything he knew about folk music and songwriting. The young buck changed his name to Ramblin' Jack Elliott and, between 1951 and 1954, the two musical soul mates traveled throughout the country, playing and collecting stories. Among the many kindred spirits Elliott met along the way were actor James Dean and beat writers Allen Ginsberg and Jack Kerouac, who actually read Elliott the manuscript for his then unpublished On the Road. When Guthrie was hospitalized in 1954 for Huntington's chorea, Elliott continued spreading the folk legend's gospel, taking off for Europe with singer Derroll Adams. In addition to introducing Guthrie's songs to a new audience, he also expanded his own repertoire extensively. When Elliott returned to the States in 1961, folk music was experiencing a tremendous boom and Ramblin' Jack was being heralded as one of the genre's leading practitioners. While visiting Guthrie in the hospital, he met another young musician who was also heavily influenced by Guthrie. His name was Bob Dylan, and they became friends and started playing together. In fact, in addition to borrowing Elliott's songs, Dylan began adopting his mannerisms and knack for telling a story, as well as his guitar- and harmonica-playing techniques. Throughout the 1960s, Elliott recorded regularly and became a mesmerizing fixture on the Greenwich Village folk circuit, playing the Bitter End, Gerde's Folk City, and the Gaslight. In the mid-1970s, he toured as a member of Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue, playing small concert halls across the U.S. and Canada. Throughout the late 1970s, 1980s, and 1990s, Elliott continued recording, and in 1996 his South Coast won a Grammy for Best Traditional Folk Album. He was also awarded the prestigious Bill Graham Lifetime Achievement Award at the Bay Area Music Awards in San Francisco.

what to buy: Friends of Mine ♪♪♪♪½ (HighTone, 1998, prod. Roy Rogers) is an outstanding album on which the folk legend teams up to play with the likes of Arlo Guthrie, Peter Rowan, Rosalie Sorrels, Tom Waits, Emmylou Harris, Nanci Griffith, John Prine, Jerry Jeff Walker, and Bob Weir. Check out Elliott's and Guy Clark's gut-wrenching vocal deliveries on Merle Travis's chestnut, "Dark As a Dungeon." The easy-rolling "Bleeker Street Blues," which Elliott penned after hearing about Bob Dylan's recent bout with a life-threatening heart ailment, showcases the singer's natural gift for storytelling that's engaging and cleverly crafted. The Essential Ramblin' Jack Elliott ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1976/1993) features Elliott performing spirited renditions of tunes by Leadbelly and Jimmy Driftwood.

what to buy next: Hard Travelin': Songs by Woody Guthrie and Others ♪♪♪½ (Fantasy, 1989) is a tour de force that combines two great releases from the 1960s—Jack Elliott Sings the Songs of Woody Guthrie and Ramblin' Jack Elliott.

the rest:

Ramblin' Jack Elliott Sings Woody Guthrie and Jimmie Rodgers ♪♪♪ (Monitor, 1962)
Kerouac's Last Dream ♪♪♪ (Appleseed, 1980/1997)
Me & Bobby McGee ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995)
South Coast ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ Woody Guthrie
▶▶ Bob Dylan, Kevin Welch, Steve Earle, Jimmie Dale Gilmore

Rick Petreycik

Tony Ellis

Born in NC.

On the face of it, Tony Ellis seems to have roughly the same biography as many first-generation bluegrass artists: he's a Southerner (from the mountains of western North Carolina), he's from a big family of native musicians, and he was a distinguished alumnus of Bill Monroe's Blue Grass Boys. It's not until you actually hear him play—especially his own music—that you get a glimpse of how unique he is. As a youngster, Ellis first learned the banjo from his grandmother, an old-time, two-finger style he immediately abandoned after he first heard Earl Scruggs play. Committed to bluegrass music from then on, he traded in the trumpet he played in high school for a resonator banjo and learned from everywhere he could—after his family moved to Lynchburg he took lessons from bluegrass great Don Reno. Ellis went pro after a successful audition with Bill Monroe, touring with his band for two-and-a-half years, including a show at Carnegie Hall with Mac Wiseman and 25 sides with Decca Records. After leaving the Blue Grass Boys to devote his time to raising a family, Ellis played music around the Bristol, Tennessee, area with noted old-time music artists George Pegram and Tommy Jarrell. In time he migrated to south central Ohio and played with many bluegrass bands and old-time aggregations, including fiddler Lonnie Seymour. Ellis still lives, plays, and runs a small bed-and-breakfast in Chillicothe, Ohio. Among banjo players there seems to be a vast gulf between the stylistic worlds of old-time music and bluegrass; but it's precisely there that Ellis makes his musical home. In his experienced hands, rendering a version of an old tune like "Sally Ann" in an antiquated mountain tuning, but with a Scruggs-style right hand, seems as natural as a mountain spring—yet it's essentially unheard of among other banjo pickers. But the real treasures come not from rehashing the old tunes, but from his own compositions.

what to buy: The exquisite Farewell My Home ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1993, prod. Stephen Wade) should be enough to banish banjo jokes from the earth forever. This is Ellis's second full program of his own jewel-like compositions, conceived as a set of duets with his son, Bill, who proves to be a tasty and intuitive guitarist here. Banjo visionary Stephen Wade is on hand also, and it was recorded at the studios of the late Larry MacBride of Marimac Records. Ellis's tunes are understated but powerfully built, like a church foundation—and it's that very deceptive simplicity that makes these tunes all but impossible to distinguish from traditional ones. Furthermore, the music seems so natural and comfortable to the ear, one easily forgets that this is uncharted territory: neither old-time music nor bluegrass, it's something entirely new.

what to buy next: You wouldn't want to miss Dixie Banner ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1994, prod. Stephen Wade), Ellis's first album of his own unique banjo music. Originally recorded and issued on vinyl in 1986, this one benefits from the guiding hand of Stephen Wade as well, not to mention the presence of Red Clay Ramblers Mike Craver and Jack Herrick, and Ellis's son, Bill. If the record-biz marketing buzzword "Americana" wasn't invented for this album, it could have been: it's as honest and sprouted-from-the-roots sounding as it is unclassifiable.

influences:

◀◀ Earl Scruggs, Don Reno, Tommy Jarrell
▶▶ Stephen Wade, Michael J. Miles, Bill Keith

Chris Rietz

Tony Elman

Hammer dulcimer player Tony Elman has taken his distinctive instrument places where it had never gone before. Recording on his own label, Elman has worked with the cream of Bay Area acoustic musicians to create several albums blending traditional tunes and atmospheric original instrumentals.

Joe Ely (© Jack Vartoogian)

what to buy: Earth Tones ♪♪♪½ (Acorn, 1995, prod. Mike Marshall), a collection of original songs that recall specific geographical locations, is Elman's most ambitious and lush recording to date. The sessions feature splendid playing from, among others, producer Marshall, Elman's keyboardist sibling Peter, flutist Matt Eakle, bassist Todd Phillips, and percussionist/fiddler Joe Craven.

what to buy next: The seasonal Winter Creek ♪♪♪ (Acorn, 1991, prod. Tony Elman) blends familiar carols with traditional winter pieces.

the rest:
Shakin' Down the Acorns ♪♪♪½ (Acorn, 1982)
Shakin' Down the Acorns, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪½ (Acorn, 1984)
Swinging on a Gate ♪♪♪ (Acorn, 1986)

influences:
David Grisman Quintet, Madeline MacNeil, Trapezoid
Malcolm Dalglish

Michael Parrish

Joe Ely

Born February 9, 1947, in Amarillo, TX.

Joe Ely blew out of the hot, windy, brown plains of Lubbock, Texas—where Buddy Holly grew up—during the late 1970s. His new wave honky-tonk baffled the country music establishment, which seemed more concerned with rhinestone suits and string arrangements, and fringe rockers alike. Ely was too rock for country, too country for rock, and he's never turned his critical acclaim into gold. A prolific songwriter who wandered the wilds of the Southwest as a teenager, Ely sang stories about drifters, not-so-star-crossed lovers, and some of life's more colorful characters. His voice bad boy gritty, his bands always an overly

british folk rock

The Byrds may have inadvertently invented folk-rock and subsequently introduced the work of Bob Dylan and Pete Seeger to millions, but in their elegant way, the British created some of the best, most durable music of the genre. Spooky traditional lyrics, jangly melodies, shimmering harmonies, and cunningly reworked versions of Dylan songs fill the late '60s/early '70s albums by Fairport Convention, and early members Richard Thompson, Sandy Denny (both first-class songwriters, as well), and Iain Matthews have all become British folk-rock royalty. Though Fairport never enjoyed the popularity of the Byrds, the band never gave up its quest to meld rootsy tales and instrumentation with a contemporary sparkle. After leaving the group, Matthews had his biggest hit with an archetypal slice of folk-rock—an electric version of Joni Mitchell's "Woodstock." And Thompson—both with Fairport and after leaving the band—has written some of the prettiest, most aching, and loudest music to bridge folk and rock. But Fairport's unconventional crew were hardly the only folk-rock players on the other side of the pond. A year before Fairport's classic Unhalfbricking album, Denny recorded an album (that included her first recording of "Who Knows Where the Time Goes") with the Strawbs, themselves a bunch of budding rockers with tons of respect for traditional melodies. The sounds of dulcimers and 12-string guitars abound on their early albums. Denny's haunting voice also graces "The Battle of Evermore," the track that precedes "Stairway to Heaven" on Led Zeppelin's fourth album. If you think that mentioning the Z word in a discussion of British folk-rock is a stretch, remember that side two of the group's third album is full of folky, acoustic material (with Jimmy Page wailing on banjo, mandolin, and steel guitar), and that the traditional "Babe I'm Gonna Leave You" on their breakthrough debut was once a Joan Baez song.

David Sokol

aggressive mix of punkish roots rockers and straight-ahead country musicians, Ely turned his soulful but raucous blend of honky-tonk, rock 'n' blues, and Tex-Mex into vivid songs about life. He lists Merle Haggard and the Clash's Joe Strummer among his biggest fans.

what to buy: Love and Danger ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1992, prod. Joe Ely, Tony Brown) was a return to form for the Texas singer, who'd ventured a little too far from his honky-tonk roots to a rootsy blues-rock sound during a stretch with HighTone Records. That stuff was good, but a little too one-dimensional. Ely's at his best when he's writing compelling narratives, interpreting songs by wonderful but overlooked Texas writers like Robert Earl Keen Jr. (and buddy Butch Hancock) and using all of his musical tools.

what to buy next: Smoky, sweaty bars, hot summer nights, and romantic desperadoes drip from Honky Tonk Masquerade ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1978, prod. Chip Young), the product of Ely's restless spirit and his tenure as the king of the west Texas honky-tonks during the late 1970s. Ely classics "West Texas Waltz" and "Fingernails" (opening line: "I keep my fingernails long so they click when I play the piano") are among its most colorful inclusions.

what to avoid: The raucous rockabilly of Musta Notta Gotta Lotta ♪♪ (MCA/Southcoast, 1981, prod. Joe Ely, Michael Brovsky) is fun, but not as memorable as his best work.

the rest:
Joe Ely ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1977)
Down on the Drag ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1979)
Live Shots ♪♪♪ (MCA/Southcoast, 1980)
Lord of the Highway ♪♪♪ (HighTone, 1987)
Dig All Night ♪♪ (HighTone, 1988)
Live at Liberty Lunch ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1990)
Letter to Laredo ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1995)

worth searching for: All but one of Ely's albums are available on CD. The exception: the experimental Hi-Res ♪♪ (MCA, 1984, prod. Joe Ely, Michael Brovsky), issued on vinyl and cassette. It was Ely's one and only plunge into the world of computers and synthesizers, which, like many of his musical moves, was ahead of its time and hardly in character for a roots country-rocker. It was a clunker, but there are some superb songs under the layers of electronics, including "Cool Rockin' Loretta" and "Letter to Laredo," later recast as the title song of his newest, flamenco-inflected album. There are also two best-of collections available from the U.K.: No Bad Talk or Loud Talk, 1977–81 ♪♪♪♪ (Edsel, 1995) and Time for Travelin': The Best of Joe Ely, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Edsel, 1996).

influences:

Buddy Holly, Hank Williams

Alejando Escovedo, Son Volt

see also: Flatlanders

Doug Pullen

Lyman Enloe

Born 1906, in Cole Country, MO.

Lyman Enloe was surrounded by traditional music as a boy. Both his father, Elijah, and his older half-brother, Wade, played the fiddle. Tony Gilmore of Jefferson City, Missouri, was Enloe's most important influence. A railroad man by occupation, Gilmore played over radio station WOS, which broadcast from the dome of the Capitol in Jefferson City from 1923 to 1933. Enloe started out playing backup guitar for Gilmore but soon became interested in fiddling. He recalls that he "already had all the tunes in his head." He just had to learn to play them on the fiddle. Enloe moved to Kansas City in 1940 and worked as a painter. He put his music aside for over two decades but started playing again in the 1960s with a group called the Bluegrass Association. The group played together for 13 years and cut four LPs, disbanding in 1981. David Freeman of County Records, on the partial recommendation of Kenny Baker, brought Enloe to national attention in 1978 with the rerelease of Fiddle Tunes I Recall. That album became an instant classic. Enloe was a National Heritage Fellowship recipient in 1995 for his life as an old-time fiddler. He played at festivals and toured occasionally later in life showing off his Midwestern style of fiddle playing.

what to buy: Fiddle Tunes I Recall ♪♪♪♪ (County, 1978/1993, prod. Lyman Enloe, the Bluegrass Association) was originally released in 1973 on a small independent label in Missouri. Reissued on vinyl in 1978 and on CD in 1993, this album is special in that it brought out a lot of tunes that Enloe had heard from old fiddlers in his region who were long gone in the 1970s. Reading the liner notes, and of course listening to the music, is akin to looking through a history book for the first time. The tunes recorded here were drawn out of the memory banks of Lyman Enloe and given a new life in the able hands of this master fiddler.

worth searching for: Rugged Road ♪♪♪½ (Missouri Old Time Fiddler's Association, 1989, prod. Missouri Old Time Fiddler's Association) is a worthwhile cassette-only release.

influences:

Arthur Smith, Casey Jones, Tony Gilmore

Lynn "Chirps" Smith, Kenny Baker

Steve Gardner

Séamus Ennis

Born May 5, 1919, in Jamestown, County Dublin, Ireland. Died October 5, 1982, in Naul, County Dublin, Ireland.

A colorful and charismatic personality, as well as a masterful performer on the Irish uilleann pipes, a singer, storyteller, and collector, Séamus Ennis was a father figure to a generation of Irish pipers and, indeed, a giant of Irish traditional music. Like other traditional players, Ennis was raised into the music. His father, James, was a piper who made radio broadcasts and records with the Fingal Trio in the early 1930s, and the Ennis house in Jamestown was often visited by musician friends. Although not through formal training, Séamus learned his piping from his father. After a few years with Colm Ó Lochlainn's Three Candles Press, Ennis was hired by the Irish Folklore Commission in the early 1940s to collect songs in the west of Ireland. In 1947, he went on to work for Radio Éireann, then for the BBC in London in 1951, traveling all over Britain and Ireland to record traditional music for his show As I Roved Out. By all accounts, Ennis was very successful in establishing a strong rapport with traditional players and singers who saw him as one of their own. While in London, Ennis recorded his first album, The Bonny Bunch of Roses, for the American label Tradition. Also from that period, a couple of recordings of Ennis's piping are included on the 1965 Folkways album Irish Music in London Pubs. By 1958, his work with the BBC having ended, Ennis returned to Ireland and resumed his collecting for Radio Éireann. He continued to travel and perform throughout the 1960s, appearing at the Newport Folk Festival in 1964. In the early 1970s, as the Irish folk music revival was in full swing, Ennis was sharing an apartment in Dublin with fellow piper Liam O'Flynn, soon to become famous as a member of the group Planxty. He was visited there by American folksinger Patrick Sky, who had become enamored with the pipes and who would later produce Forty Years of Irish Piping, an album containing recordings Ennis made at that time. During that period, Ennis's piping was also featured on the Topic LP The Wandering Minstrel and on two LPs produced for Tara, The Pure Drop and The Fox Chase. By the late 1970s, Ennis returned "home" to North County Dublin. Despite health problems, he continued to make regular appearances to the end, even playing at the Willie Clancy Summer School a few months before his death.

what to buy: On the pioneering The Bonny Bunch of Roses ♪♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1959/Rykodisc, 1996, prod. Robin Roberts), recently reissued on CD by Rykodisc, Ennis presents an excellent selection of airs and dance tunes—played on pipes or whistle—and songs learned during his collecting trips. Ennis's instrumental Tara LPs, reissued as the two-CD set The Best of Irish Piping ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1995, prod. Séamus Ennis), are a monument to the art of Irish piping. Of particular interest is Ennis's 13-minute rendition of "The Fox Chase," a descriptive piece complete with galloping horses and barking hounds. From the same period, The Wandering Minstrel ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1974/Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Tony Engle) is also entirely devoted to the pipes.

worth searching for: Irish Music in London Pubs ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1965, prod. Ralph Rinzler, Barry Murphy), recorded live in the London pubs frequented by Irish musicians, is still availble on tape from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. Although Séamus Ennis only appears on two tracks and the sound quality is less than optimal, the album is interesting for the presence of Sligo fiddle player Michael Gorman and street singer Margaret Barry. The first album released on the Green Linnet label, Forty Years of Irish Piping ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1977, prod. Patrick Sky) is a poorly documented collection of disparate recordings from various times and sources, yet remains a classic well worth searching for. Available from Radio Telefis Éireann in Dublin, The Séamus Ennis Story ♪♪♪ (RTE, 1988, prod. Julian Vignoles) assembles on two cassettes four radio broadcasts featuring interviews of Ennis's friends and relatives, as well as music from the master. From the same source, the recent The Return from Fingal ♪♪♪♪ (RTE, 1997, prod. Peter Browne) is an outstanding collection of recordings made by Radio Éireann and RTE over a 40-year period. Especially interesting are several renditions of sean-nós melodies, both sung and played on the pipes.

influences:

◀◀ James Ennis (Séamus Mac Aonghusa), Mary McCabe, Patsy Touhey, Nicholas Markey, Patrick Ward

▶▶ Liam O'Flynn, Willie Clancy

Philippe Varlet

Ensemble Galilei

Formed 1990, in Annapolis, MD.

Carolyn Anderson Surrick, viola da gamba; Sue Richards, Celtic harp (1991–present); Marcia Diehl, recorders, psaltery, pennywhistle (1990–97); Jim Brooks, recorders, concertina, percussion (1990–93); Nancy Karpeles, percussion (1995–present); Sarah Weiner, oboe (1995–present); Erin Shrader, guitar, fiddle (1996–97); Liz Knowles, fiddle (1997–present); Deborah Nuse, Scottish smallpipes, fiddle (1997–present).

Diversity is the key to both the voice and the success of Ensemble Galilei. The brainchild of viola da gambist Carolyn Surrick, this group deftly melds the traditions of Celtic and early music. The all-instrumental format is particularly refreshing. Combining the varied backgrounds of an eclectic group of talented musicians, this ensemble creates a whole new sound to add to the usually limited range found in early music. Carolyn Surrick brings abundant knowledge about early music to the group, coming from a background of musicology. Sue Richards brings the passion and fire of Celtic music. Add the fine musicianship and creativity of a collection of excellent musicians, and you come out with a rich, exciting repertoire—from Hildegard von Bingen, to traditional Celtic, to originals by members of the group. The arrangements vary from a singing counterpoint, to haunting melodies with little accompaniment, to thick, rich harmonies. This variety is truly the spice of life.

what to buy: A true showcase of the fusion of folk and early classical, Following the Moon ♪♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1994, prod. Charlie Pilzer) presents a perfect blending of instrumentation. This remarkable recording sparkles with a number of fine jewels, including John Kirkpatrick's haunting "Jamieson's Farewell" and the lively "English Dance/Estampie." The Mystic and the Muse ♪♪♪♪½ (Dorian, 1997, prod. Charlie Pilzer) is a study of music for, by, and about women. This recording follows women around the world, kicking up its heels with lively Irish dance tunes, declaring its undying love with Bach's "Bist du bei mir," and coming to America for "Black Is the Color of My True Love's Hair." There are delightful original works by several members of the group included as well.

what to buy next: On Ancient Noels ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1993, prod. Charlie Pilzer), the ensemble teams up with hammer dulcimerist Maggie Sansone, fiddler Bonnie Rideout, percussionist Ben Harms, and guitarist and citternist Zan McLeod to deliver an unusual and special holiday recording. Filled with lesser-known carols, medieval cantigas, and sprightly dance tunes from Europe, this isn't the sort of recording you put away on the holiday shelf, but rather keep out to play during all seasons. Music in the Great Hall ♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1992, prod. Maggie Sansone, Carolyn Surrick) is an excellent live recording of the group, but lacks the vision the group later established for themselves. This recording has more of an early music feel, although it does include a fair number of Celtic tunes. The group is joined again by the amazing fiddler Bonnie Rideout, and the musicians work together beautifully to create a peaceful picture of the early music world.

influences:

◀◀ Vincenzo Galilei, Anner Bylsma, Stan Getz, Sileas

▶▶ Baltimore Consort, Hesperus

see also: Maggie Sansone

Jo Hughey Morrison

Enya

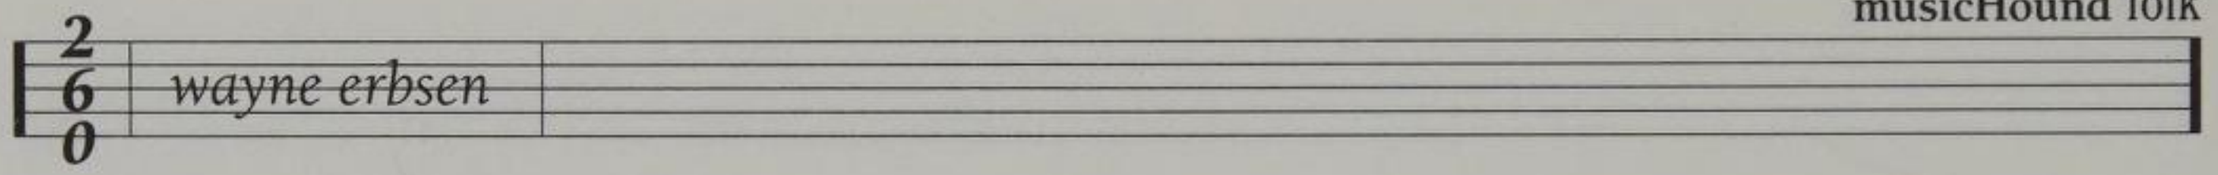
Born Eithne Ni Bhraonain, May 17, 1961, in Gweedore, County Donegal, Ireland.

"Heavenly" is the best way to describe Enya's ethereal voice. The Irish singer-songwriter-instrumentalist paints wide open soundscapes reminiscent of the New Age genre, but more melodic, heavily based in the Celtic folk music that formed much of her early singing career. After her start in the Irish band Clannad—which featured her older brothers and sisters—Enya hooked up with producer Nicky Ryan and lyricist Roma Ryan to write several film and television scores for the BBC. This trio reached the pinnacle of pop success in 1988 with the CD Watermark, selling more than 4 million copies worldwide. On the four successful CDs that followed, Enya's dreamy arrangements float alongside musical imagery, lyrical poetry, and mesmerizing vocals. Enya has veritably made a new instrument of her voice—and, appropriately, her fans have made her one of the most successful recording artists of all time.

what to buy: Watermark ♪♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1989, prod. Nicky Ryan) presents a superb collection of tone poems interwoven with ethereal vocal lines sung in Gaelic, Latin, and English. The dreamy instrumental title piece overdubs piano with lush orchestration. "Storms in Africa" carries the listener to a far away country, while the Gaelic "Na Laetha Geal Moige" exudes the warmth of home. In "Exile," Enya defines a spiritual journey: "My light shall be the moon, my path/the ocean, my guide the morning star." This is high quality music by a distinctive artist, compellingly requesting countless replays. The Celts ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1992, prod. Nicky Ryan) draws on Enya's twin Catholic and Celtic heritages to present an instrumental soundtrack that lingers with historical and spiritual overtones. "The Sun in the Stream" is inspired by the legend of the Salmon of Knowledge, in the grove of nine wise hazel trees where the sacred River Boyne flowed. The gentle nuances of "Fairytale" tell the story of the fairy king Midir and his love for the beautiful princess Etain: a dreamy ambiance reflects the characters' great love, jealousy, and endurance. "Boadicea," meaning Victorious, portrays the queen of the Iceni tribe who lead a successful rebellion against the Romans, but eventually poisoned herself following a military defeat. Enya's use of her voice as a musical instrument is particularly strong in this collection, and the historical liner notes direct the listener's impressionistic response. Paint the Sky with Stars: The Best of Enya ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1997, prod. Nicky Ryan) showcases the artist's greatest hits along with two new tracks: "Only If" and the title track. Most notably, "Caribbean Blue" assimilates yet another cultural paradigm into Enya's style, the exuberance of the tropics—a pleasant change of venue in an already eclectic artistic palate. This worthwhile collection provides a good opportunity to sample Enya's portfolio.

what to buy next: Shepherd Moon ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1991, prod. Nicky Ryan) utilizes the same basic formula of trance and mysticism as Watermark, but somehow seems less engaging. Nonetheless the tranquillity of "Angeles," "Evacuee," and "Marble Halls" will soothe the seasoned listener. Awash in synth strings, "Caribbean Blue" is this album's gigantic worldwide pop hit, while "How Can I Keep from Singing?" is Irish folk music at its best. Numerous songs in Gaelic provide additional mystery to this worthy collection. The Memory of Trees ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1995, prod. Nicky Ryan) engages Enya's trademark style, but again lacks the spark of Watermark. Perhaps her existing popularity explains this CD's 1997 Grammy Award for Best New Age Album. Notably, "Anywhere Is" is a joyous, spiritual anthem to confusion and indecision. And Enya's lyrics, in English, Spanish, Latin, and Gaelic, leave much room for personal interpretation by her mono-lingual American followers.

worth searching for: Although the Canadian import Enya Collection ♪♪♪½ (MSI/WEAC, 1986, prod. Nicky Ryan) is a three-CD set repackaging previous recordings, its 64-page booklet will entice the avid follower. Frog Prince Soundtrack ♪♪♪ (Karussell, 1989, prod. Nicky Ryan) is a British import reminiscent of Enya's professional roots in television and movie scores. Oiche Chiun (Silent Night) ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1992, prod. Nicky Ryan) features three tracks (10 minutes total): "Silent Night" sung in Gaelic, "Oriel Window," a characteristically ethereal piano instrumental, and "S Fagaim Mo Bhaile," a Gaelic song. If the holiday season finds you dreaming of a dreamy Christmas, check out the Canadian import Christmas EP ♪♪♪ (MSI/WEA, 1986, prod. Nicky Ryan). Finally, Interview (BAKTABAK, 1986, prod. Nicky Ryan) is another British import—but without the distraction of melody and harmony—for those seriously interested in Irish Catholicism, Celtic mysticism, and pop idolatry.



influences:

◀◀ Claude Debussy, Erik Satie, Clannad

▶▶ Mary Black, Loreena McKennitt, Dee Carstensen, Björk, Brian Eno, the Cranberries

see also: Clannad

Art Wojtowicz

Wayne Erbsen

Born in CA.

Wayne Erbsen is an evangelist for the traditional music of the U.S. (especially the southern Appalachian mountains). He currently has 12 recordings out on his own Native Ground Music label. All of his recordings are presented in an educational way, focusing more on the instruments and types of songs than on the performer himself. So, in that aspect, these recordings are great for the uninitiated. All of his albums are arranged around a certain theme (e.g. Ballads and Songs of the Civil War, Railroadin' Classics) and they usually contain the "hits" instead of obscure tunes that have not previously been recorded. On the other hand, Wayne is a talented musician and would most likely please someone who has already gotten their feet wet in traditional music. If that weren't enough, he also has some fine people guesting on his albums, including Dirk Powell, David Holt, John Herrmann, and Phil Jameson. Along with these recordings Wayne also offers many instructional books so you can get started making some music yourself. The only area where Wayne's talents run thin is with his vocals. For that reason, his instrumental recordings are preferred.

what to buy: Since Wayne's releases all seem to revolve around the music of the South, start with Southern Mountain Classics ♪♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1992, prod. Wayne Erbsen), which features Wayne Erbsen with Dirk Powell, John Herrmann, Meredith McIntosh, Don Pedi, and Phil Jameson. Songs featured include "Soldier's Joy," "Shady Grove," "Mississippi Sawyer," "Cluck Old Hen," and other old-time "hits." All of Erbsen's recordings are of good quality and each has a theme, so choose the one that best matches your own interests.

the rest:

Native Ground ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1988)
Old-Time Gospel Instrumentals ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1989)
Ballads & Songs of the Civil War ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1994)
Cowboy Songs of the Wild Frontier ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1995)
Front Porch Favorites: 19th Century American Classics ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1995)
Southern Soldier Boy: 16 Authentic Tunes of the Civil War ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1996)
The Home Front: 17 Authentic Tunes of the Civil War ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1996)
Authentic Outlaw Ballads ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1996)
Old-Time Gospel Favorites ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1997)
Singing Rails: 14 Railroadin' Songs ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1997)
Railroadin' Classics: 16 Great Instrumentals ♪♪♪ (Native Ground, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ The Carter Family, Tommy Jarrell, John Lomax

▶▶ Laura Boosinger

Steve Gardner

Tom Espinola and Lorraine Duisit

Formed 1985, in Little Washington, VA.

Tom Espinola (born January 26, 1953, in Newport News, VA), guitars, mandolin, mandola, octave mandolin; Lorraine Duisit (born June 26, 1955, in New Haven, CT), harp, mandolin, mandola.

Tom Espinola and Lorraine Duisit live in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains in Washington, Virginia. They perform original and traditional music on harp, mandolin, guitar, voice, and percussion. Their music reflects an enthusiasm for traditional folk and string band music, as well as classical training and involvement with chamber, orchestral, and jazz music. Drawing freely from the music of Europe, North and South America, the British Isles, and Africa, Espinola and Duisit extend traditions through their own work to form a unique and vital music. Espinola has taught guitar, mandolin, and music theory and is experienced in bluegrass, jazz, classical, avant-garde, and traditional music. He was formerly in the New Morning String Band and Nothin' Doin'. He has written for chamber, orchestral, theater, and dance groups, and one of his multimedia pieces was featured in the New Music America festival in Washington, D.C. He was commissioned to arrange music for the Paul Winter Consort and for Trapezoid, who recorded his arrangements on three of their albums. Duisit was a member of Trapezoid for over eight years, touring the U.S., Canada, and Japan and appearing on a number of television and radio shows, including Fire on the Mountain and A Prairie Home Companion. She recorded three albums with Trapezoid and also appears on albums by John McCutcheon and Holly Near. Her solo album, Hawks and Herons, was selected by the Washington Post as one of the finest folk records of 1983. Her music has been featured on Voice of America and All Things Considered.

what to buy: Which Way Waltz ♪♪♪♪ (CLR, 1997, prod. Tom Espinola) features new music modeled on traditional dance music and pays a debt of gratitude to Espinola's native Southern upbringing. "My youthful winters were spent studying classical, jazz, and rock music in a southern Virginia town," he confides, "but my summers were spent in a sultry tobacco fields region of eastern North Carolina 'studying' what was referred to by the locals as 'country music.' Friday and Saturday nights were spent under a massive ancient oak tree with instruments in hand and libation at foot. The memory of the faces of those gentlemen has lit the creative path for me." A mandolin trio performs a playful dance in "Beulah and Hildred," imitates the baying of hounds in "Red Fox Run," and frolics through a few keys in "Wagner in the Woodpile." "Creekfinder" is a rock just right for delivering a satisfying "plunk" when tossed fifty yards, and "Iron Horse Dream" is a reflection on changes brought about by the coming of the steel rail. The haunting "Open Field," performed on mandola, was based on a recurring dream by one of Tom's mandolin students, where he has given his life in the Southern cause on a Civil War battlefield. The recording includes two of Lorraine Duisit's pieces previously recorded by her former group Trapezoid, the crooked and whimsical "Old Road to Maryland" and "Silverplume Waltz," which also appears on Windham Hill Guitar Sampler ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1988, prod. Will Ackerman, Dawn Atkinson).

what to buy next: Feather River ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1988, prod. Tom Espinola) is a bit dated chronologically, but is still very fresh musically. Not quite "New Age," it was exceptionally forward looking for its time, with the "spaciness or amorphous good vibes of so much 'New Age' music." Geoffrey Himes, in his liner notes to the album, termed it "chamber folk" as a means of suggesting both "the informal rural character of the music as well as it's high technical standards and thoughtful architecture." The one overriding impression that remains after listening to this album is not what to call the music, but rather that these people ought to do this more often.

solo outings:

Lorraine Duisit:

Hawks and Herons ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1983)

Collected Hymns: From the 16th to the 20th Century ♪♪♪♪ (Creative Live Records, 1991) (cassette only)

influences:

◀◀ Norman Blake, Trapezoid, Andy Statman, Andy Irvine, David Grisman, Sam Bush

▶▶ Darol Anger, Todd Phillips, Butch Baldassari

see also: Trapezoid

Neal Walters

Sleepy John Estes

Born John Adam Estes, January 25, 1899, in Ripley, TN. Died June 5, 1977, in Brownsville, TN.

Some blues artists earned repute for hooking up with the right people, or recording in the right studio, at the right time. A select few—Robert Johnson, Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Buddy Guy—became famous because they're just drop-dead talented. You can hear from the first notes of Estes's classic "The Girl I Love, She Got Long, Curly Hair" a natural high-pitch tremolo, an instinctive yodel that communicates heartbreak without much effort. Estes's father was a guitar picker, and John—who later earned the nickname "Sleepy" because he could supposedly sleep standing up—fashioned his own guitar from a cigar box. He led a work gang for a railroad maintenance crew, singing to keep everybody else alert. Through his travels he met musicians like Jab Jones and James "Yank" Rachell, and they wound up auditioning for the Victor company in 1929. Though he never made enough money to exist above the poverty line, he sustained an amazingly prolific career, recording for almost a dozen record companies until his death.

what to buy: Estes's songwriting talent—on the detail-rich "Broken-Hearted, Ragged and Dirty Too" and "Fire Department Blues (Martha Hardin)"—comes across just as well as his teary singing style and excellent small-combo arrangements on the almost-definitive I Ain't Gonna Be Worried No More, 1929–41 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Yazoo, 1992, prod. Richard Nevins, Don Kent, Stefan Grossman). It's all traditional blues, but Estes takes the lyrics a step further than most performers; "Floating Bridge" describes in astounding detail a near-drowning incident Estes endured in Kentucky, and the frustrated "Who's Been Telling You Buddy Brown" asks, "Have you ever tried lovin', when you can't get it in your mind?"

what to buy next: In the 1960s Estes was a prime subject for revivalists and historians, not to mention admiring musicians. Electric Sleep ♪♪♪♪ (Delmark, 1964/1991, prod. Robert Koester) matches the singer with an electric Chicago blues combo, including pianist Sunnyland Slim, harpist Carey Bell, and bassist Earl Hooker. Broke and Hungry ♪♪♪½ (Delmark, 1964/1995, prod. Robert Koester) is a collaboration with blues upstart Michael Bloomfield and Estes's old stomping partner Yank Rachell.

the rest:

The Legend of Sleepy John Estes ♪♪♪½ (Delmark, 1962)

Brownsville Blues ♪♪♪ (Delmark, 1965)
In Europe ♪♪ (Delmark, 1966)
1929–40 ♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1967)
Complete Works, Vols. 1–2 ♪♪♪ (Document, 1991) worth searching for: First Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (JSP, 1930) collects Estes's first recordings, his 1929 sessions with troubled harpist Noah Lewis and guitarist Yank Rachell.

influences:

◀◀ Robert Johnson, Son House, Tommy Johnson, Willie Brown, Blind Boy Fuller

▶▶ Jackie Wilson, Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Eric Clapton, Paul Butterfield Blues Band, Otis Redding, Sam Cooke

Steve Knopper

Etchingham Steam Band

See: Shirley Collins, Albion Band

Everly Brothers

Formed 1954.

Don Everly (born February 1, 1937, in Brownie, KY), vocals, guitar; Phil Everly (born January 19, 1939, in Brownie, KY), vocals, guitar.

Having begun their singing careers as children on their parents' radio program, brothers Don and Phil Everly qualified as country music veterans by the time their first rock 'n' roll records hit the charts eight years later, their deeply entwined high-mountain harmonies practically instinctual. The blood harmonies of the Everly Brothers may be the main tributary feeding all rock vocal styles; the Beatles, among many others, styled their harmony sound after the Everlys. But the Everly Brothers were not only the children of long-standing members of the country music community. They were also an officially sanctioned Nashville project. Guitarist Chet Atkins conducted the recording sessions and Acuff-Rose frontliners Boudleaux and Felice Bryant supplied the material. Though they may have slipped off the charts during the 1960s, the brothers never stopped making heart-stoppingly beautiful records. When matched with the right piece of material and sympathetic production, the Everlys cut records that matched the finest work of their early years, right up to the modest 1984 comeback with Paul McCartney's "On the Wings of a Nightingale" (produced by Dave Edmunds) and beyond. And the Everlys never strayed far from the country field; one of their best-loved albums of their wilderness years was, in fact, the country-oriented Roots, not unlike the Songs Our Daddy Taught Us album of many years earlier. The duo split—bitterly—in 1973, breaking up literally in front of a Knott's Berry Farm audience when Don splintered a guitar across his brother's back and walked offstage, only to discover nobody wanted to hear one Everly brother singing alone. They rejoined forces for a sentimental 1983 Royal Albert Hall concert, recorded and filmed, and apparently found an uneasy truce that allowed them to continue to perform and record together.

what to buy: Cadence Classics: Their 20 Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1985, prod. Archie Bleyer) contains the basic fundamentals of the Everlys' repertoire, from the acoustic guitar–accented rockabilly of "Wake Up Little Susie" and "Claudette" to almost ethereal ballads such as "Let It Be Me."

what to buy next: Walk Right Back: The Everly Brothers on Warner Bros., 1960–1969 ♪♪♪½ (Warner Archives 1993, prod. various) is a 50-song survey that begins where the Cadence era left off and takes the Everlys through the flowering of Los Angeles country-rock that their early work did so much to inspire. The four-disc box set Heartaches and Harmonies ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1994, prod. various)offers a detailed retrospective that smoothly covers nearly 40 years of Everlys recordings.

what to avoid: During the mid-1960s, the brothers re-recorded a set of their Cadence hits for Warners, released as The Very Best of the Everly Brothers ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1964, prod. various), which pales vastly in comparison to the original versions.

the rest:

Songs Our Daddy Taught Us ♪♪♪♪ (Cadence, 1958/Rhino, 1988)
The Fabulous Style of the Everly Brothers ♪♪♪♪ (Cadence, 1960/Rhino, 1988)
Roots ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1968)
Reunion Concert ♪♪ (Mercury, 1984)
EB 84 ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1984/Razor & Tie, 1994)
The Mercury Years ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1993)

worth searching for: In assembling the label's Everlys reissues of the Cadence material, Rhino Records researchers unearthed a set of unreleased demo tapes—All They Had to Do Was Dream ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1985, prod. Archie Bleyer)—that showcase the pure vocal sound of the brothers. Perhaps some of rock's first "unplugged" sessions, this material glistens with the maturity and depth of artists far beyond their years when it was actually recorded.

influences:

◀◀ The Stanley Brothers, the Louvin Brothers

▶▶ Foster & Lloyd, the O'Kanes, Marty Brown

Joel Selvin

John Fahey

Born February 28, 1939, in Takoma Park, MD.

A folk/blues guitarist, producer, scholar, and founder of the Takoma label, Fahey's first interest was in traditional country music. He traveled extensively through the South, searching for obscure country and blues recordings. As much a historian of early blues guitarists as he is a proficient practitioner of the art, he wrote a definitive biography of blues musician Charley Patton. From blues, country, folk, and spirituals, Fahey turned his attention to Brazilian music during the '80s. His open-tuned acoustic guitar work was the progenitor for such guitarists as Leo Kottke (who first recorded on the Takoma label) and William Ackerman.

what to buy: The Essential John Fahey ♪♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1974/1993, prod. John Fahey, Barry Hansen, Sam Charters) is a 13-track overview of Fahey's career that hits most of his high points. Combining such disparate elements as hymns, blues, and trippy accents, Fahey's methodical approach is transcended by his elegant vision. On two tracks, supporting musicians include members of Spirit, adding to the diverse styles.

what to buy next: The John Fahey Christmas Album ♪♪♪♪ (Burnside, 1991, prod. Terry Robb, Don MacLeod) collects 24 tracks of Christmas hymns and secular music, finely polished to a warm sheen. Refined with an effortless melding of blues and spirituals, The Transfiguration of Blind Joe Death ♪♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1967) is Fahey's most ambitious work.

what to avoid: Old Girlfriends & Other Horrible Memories ♪½ (Varrick, 1993), though accomplished, is an odd bit of stream of consciousness without the meat of his voluminous and better work.

the rest:

The Yellow Princess ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1968)
The Voice of the Turtle ♪♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1968/1996)
Christmas Guitar ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1974/1989)
Fare Forward Voyagers ♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1974)
Let's Go ♪♪♪ (Varrick, 1984/1997)
Rain Forests, Oceans, and Other Themes (Varrick, 1987)
I Remember Blind Joe Death ♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
Popular Songs of Christmas & New Year's (Varrick, 1988/1996)
God, Time and Casualty ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1990)
The Return of the Repressed: The John Fahey Anthology ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1994)
The Legend of Blind Joe Death ♪♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1996)
City of Refuge (PolyGram, 1997)
Requia & Other Compositions For . . . (Vanguard, 1997)
Womblife ♪♪♪ (Table of the Elements, 1997) worth searching for: Fahey contributed to the highly atmospheric and moody soundtrack to Country ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1984) with memorable results.

influences:

Lightnin' Hopkins, Robert Johnson, Leadbelly, Julian Bream

Leo Kottke, William Ackerman, Richard Thompson, Jorma Kaukonen

Patrick McCarty

The Fairfield Four

Formed early 1920s, in Nashville, TN.

Original members: Rev. J.R. Carrethers, vocals; Rufus Carrethers, vocals; Harold Carrethers, vocals; John Battle, vocals. Current members: James Hill, vocals; Isaac Freeman, vocals; Wilson Waters, vocals; Robert Hamlett, vocals; Joseph Rice, vocals. Other members have included: Sam McCrary, vocals; "Preacher" Jones, vocals; James Hill, vocals; and Walter Settles, vocals.

The Fairfield Four is one of the most influential gospel singing groups of the twentieth century. Despite numerous personnel changes, the group continues to extol the power of spirituality and the soulfulness of harmony singing. Organized in the Sunday school of Nashville's Fairfield Baptist Church, the Fairfield Four's most successful period came during the 1940s. Their stirring rendition of "Don't Let Nobody Turn You Around," was recorded during a church service in October 1941. The following year, they won a promotional contest held by the Colonial Coffee Company and landed a spot on a nationally broadcast radio show on WLAC, with hookups over the CBS network. Their appearance was so well received that they remained a regular feature of the station for more than a decade. Between 1946, when the quartet released its first commercial recording, and 1961, the Fairfield Four recorded more than 100 tunes that were released on the Bullet, Delta, Dot, Champion, and Old Town labels. After original member John Battle was stricken with tuberculosis and died in 1946, the Fairfield Four split into two different groups. The quartet led by vocalist Sam McCrary, who joined in the mid-'30s, retained the radio show and ultimately prevailed. A major part of the group's early earnings were channeled into a funeral parlor, the Fairfield Four Funeral Home in Nashville. When the business failed during the winter of

the fairfield four

The Fairfield Four (from left): Walter Settles, Wilson Waters, James Hill, Isaac Freeman (© Jack Vartoogian)

1949–1950, several members left to form a new quartet, the Skylarks. A reorganized Fairfield Four maintained a busy pace of touring, radio work, and recordings until 1954, when McCrary received a call to the ministry and the group slowed its activities. Although he attempted to revive the group again in 1958, hiring members of the Indiana-based Silver Quintet, the popularity of a capella gospel music was in decline and the group disbanded two years later. They didn't perform together again for more than two decades. A "Quartet Reunion" program in Birmingham, Alabama, in 1980 included a re-formed Fairfield Four that featured McCrary, James Hill, Isaac Freeman, Willie Love, and guitarist Joe Whitaker. Although Love and Whitaker left to rejoin the Voices of Nashville, their slots were ably filled by tenor vocalist Wilson Waters and lead singer Elder Richardson. Harmony singer Robert Hamlett was added in 1984 with Joseph Rice replacing Elder Richardson, who passed away in 1996. The vocal harmonies of the Fairfield Four have been featured on albums by the Nashville Bluegrass Band, John Fogerty, and Steve Earle and in concert with Charlie Daniels, Lyle Lovett, and Elvis Costello. They were designated National Heritage Fellows by the National Endowment of the Arts in 1989.

what to buy: I Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1997, prod. Mark Prentice, Lee Olson) is a memorable tribute to a cappella gospel singing. Highlights include guest appearances by Pam Tillis on "Get Away Jordan," Garrison Keillor's moving scripture recitation for the medley "Amazing Grace/The Prodigal Son" and Elvis Costello's lead vocals on the Paul McCartney/Elvis Costello–penned tune "That Day Is Done."

what to buy next: Standing in the Safety Zone ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1992, prod. Lee Olson), recorded in Nashville between December 1991 and February 1992, is a soulful, harmony-filled celebration of the religious spirit. In addition to harmonizing on traditional gospel tunes, including "Children Go Where I Send Thee," "Keep Me Near the Cross (Servant's Prayer)," and "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," the Fairfield Four join with the Nashville Bluegrass Band for an uplifting rendition of "Roll Jordan Roll."

the rest:
Angels Watching Over Me ♪♪♪ (P Vine, 1991)
Standing on the Rock ♪♪♪ (AVI, 1997) worth searching for: The Fairfield Four's influential early '50s recordings for the Dot label are sampled on the out-of-print album One Religion ♪♪♪.

influences:
◀◀ The Dixie Hummingbirds, Fisk Jubilee Singers, Five Blind Boys of Alabama, Thomas A. Dorsey
▶▶ Amy Grant, Take 6, Staples Singers

see also: Nashville Bluegrass Band

Craig Harris

Fairport Convention

Formed 1967, in London, England. Disbanded 1979. Re-formed 1985.

Primary but not complete list includes: Simon Nicol, guitar, vocals; Ashley Hutchings, bass, vocals (1967–69); Judy Dyble, recorder, autoharp, vocals (1967–68); Richard Thompson, guitar, vocals (1967–71); Iain Matthews, guitar, vocals (1967–68); Martin Lamble, drums (1967–69); Sandy Denny, piano, vocals (1968–69, 1974–75); Dave Swarbrick, fiddle, vocals (1969–79); Dave Mattacks, drums, keyboards (1969–74, 1985–98); Dave Pegg, bass, mandolin, vocals (1970–present); Jerry Donahue, guitar, vocals (1972–75); Trevor Lucas, guitar, vocals (1972–75); Bruce Rowland, drums (1974–75); Martin Allcock, guitar, bouzouki, keyboards, vocals (1985–97); Ric Sanders, fiddle (1985–present); Chris Leslie, guitar, fiddle, vocals (1997–present).

One of Fairport Convention's traditional songs, "Sir Patrick Spens," tells of a man who gets reluctantly pressed into service as a seaman and drowns. The story of Fairport Convention is the story of a group of misfits, geniuses, and drinking buddies who manage to become a band—and stay afloat for 30 years and counting. The saga began when some London schoolboys got together at Simon Nicol's parents' house, which was called Fairport, and decided to start a band. They invited a couple of other local characters to join, including librarian Judy Dyble. The band was "discovered" when Joe Boyd, an American impresario who ran the UFO Club in London, heard them and was staggered by the skill of the teenage guitarist, Richard Thompson, on an extended solo during "East West." After the band made its first album, Dyble left and Ashley Hutchings brought in another girl singer, the folk circuit's Sandy Denny. It was Denny who brought the first folk influences to the band; she had many arrangements into which the boys were able to work themselves, and such songs as "A Sailor's Life" began making electrified appearances on Fairport set lists. The band enjoyed modest success until a 1969 van crash killed the drummer, Martin Lamble, and left the remaining members physically and emotionally wounded. They found a new drummer—Dave Mattacks, who played jazz and knew nothing about folk music—brought in traditional fiddler Dave Swarbrick, and retired to a country house, where in a few months Liege and Lief was born. The resultant concerts were a massive success; the sound Fairport achieved on that album, strongly grounded in English traditional music, was radical and highly intriguing. Liege and Lief split the band. Hutchings left to delve more deeply into traditional sources, while Denny left to concentrate on songwriting. The remaining members continued on the satisfying, if highly uncommercial, folk-rock path, through various personnel changes (including Thompson's departure and Denny's return). By the end of the 1970s, Swarbrick, the only remaining early member, was nearly deaf from his electric violin. The band (which was then, and briefly, called simply "Fairport") was laid to rest. When the reunions started, a strange thing happened: the returning members found that they really enjoyed their own music. By 1985, Fairport Convention was back. The band still holds a yearly reunion at Cropredy, Oxfordshire, near the homes of many members. Many other bands, including Fairport contemporaries Steeleye Span, Pentangle, and the Incredible String Band, have combined rock and folk elements with great success. (In the United States, Bob Dylan and the Band have followed similar muses.) Few, if any, have been able to generate the long-term affection and spirit that Fairport created and sustains.

what to buy: What We Did on Our Holidays ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1968, prod. Joe Boyd) brings together the band's past and future. It's a microcosm of the band's interests, with compositions by Denny ("Fotheringay") and Thompson ("Tale in Hard Time" and "No Man's Land"), covers of Bob Dylan ("I'll Keep It with Mine") and Joni Mitchell ("Eastern Rain"), electric arrangements of traditional songs ("Nottamun Town" and "She Moves through the Fair"), middle-of-the-road pop ("Book Song"), an instrumental (Simon Nicol's coda "End of a Holiday"), and best of all an anthem (the Thompson-penned "Meet on the Ledge") that's sung at nearly every Fairport concert. Every member of the band is in top form, and Denny is dazzling. Liege and Lief ♪♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1969, prod. Joe Boyd) is perhaps Fairport's most significant album, for it most fully developed the electric folk format for which the band is best known. Thompson and Swarbrick's "Crazy Man Michael" caps off the album brilliantly; it's a song for the ages. Jewel in the Crown ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Fairport Convention) is the best offering from Fairport's longest-lived lineup (Nicol/Pegg/Mattacks/Allcock/Sanders).

what to buy next: House Full ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1986, prod. Joe Boyd, Frank Kornelussen) documents Fairport's first all-male lineup on its American tour, where the band allegedly drank so much they ended up owing money to the venues rather than being paid. Thompson's timid vocals are touching in light of the powerhouse he's become. Swarbrick is front and center with deft fiddling and charming singing. Expletive Delighted! ♪♪♪ (Varrick, 1986) showcases the instrumental wizardry of the Nicol/Pegg/Mattacks/Sanders/Allcock lineup.

best of the rest:
Fairport Convention ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1968)
Unhalfbricking ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1969)
Full House ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1970)
Rising for the Moon ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1975)
Encore Encore ♪♪♪♪ (Folkprint, 1979/1997)
Gladys' Leap ♪♪♪½ (Varrick, 1985)
Heyday ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1987)
Five Seasons ♪♪♪♪ (Rough Trade, 1990)
Old-New-Borrowed-Blue ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1996)
Who Knows Where the Time Goes N/A (Green Linnet, 1998) worth searching for: The video documentary It All Comes 'Round Again (1987, prod. Paul Kovit) tells the band's story through the late 1980s. Wonderful historical footage shows the early lineup on "Top of the Pops," the highly hirsute Full House boys with "Now Be Thankful," and the Trevor Lucas–fronted band singing "Polly on the Shore." Interview sequences deftly reveal the personalities associated with the band: diffident, introspective Thompson; imperious, eloquent Hutchings; former fan Sanders; and droll Pegg, cigarette always at the ready. The documentary also includes the only video footage of Sandy Denny that is commercially available.

influences:
⏮ The Byrds, Jefferson Airplane, the Band, Bob Dylan, the Watersons
⏭ New St. George, Mad Pudding

see also: Sandy Denny, Iain Matthews, Ashley Hutchings, Dave Swarbrick, Richard and Linda Thompson

Pamela Murray Winters

Marianne Faithfull

Born December 29, 1946, in London, England.

The daughter of a British college lecturer and an Austrian baroness, Faithfull was a beautiful young model with no real singing aspirations until she fell in love with Mick Jagger. He wrote her first hit, 1964's "As Tears Go By," with fellow Rolling Stone Keith Richards. She helped write their "Sister Morphine," but went uncredited until a few years ago. Faithfull's various descents into drug addiction hell are now legendary, including a nearly fatal bout with heroin at the time she broke up with Jagger. But she's always managed to land on her feet, and her ragged, haggard, Dietrich-like voice powerfully reflects her painful experiences. The infamous lady in the rug—Faithfull was found clad in nothing but a floor covering during a drug bust at Richards's home—became a singer in her own right during the late '70s but succumbed to chemical temptations several times during the '80s. She emerged clean, clear-headed, and candid in her 1994 autobiography, which was accompanied by a greatest hits album. Faithfull followed it a year later with her most ambitious and conceptual album, A Secret Life, on which she collaborated with director David Lynch's musical collaborator, Angelo Badalamenti (Twin Peaks, Blue Velvet).

what to buy: Faithfull: A Collection of Her Best ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1994, prod. various) is a surprisingly cohesive 11-song collection that draws from the various and varied aspects of Faithfull's 32-year recording career. Selections range from that first innocent blush of "As Tears Go By" to the bitterly vulgar "Why'd Ya Do It" (from Broken English), the moody "Trouble in Mind" theme song, torch numbers from the Hal Willner–produced "Strange Weather," and a sample from the then-upcoming album A Secret Life.

what to buy next: Broken English ♪♪♪ (Island, 1979, prod. Mark Miller Mundy) couldn't possibly have the dramatic impact today that it did when it was released 17 years ago. There was no way then to be prepared for the stark deterioration of Faithfull's formerly breathy voice, a withered but powerful emotive tool ravaged by drugs and a beautiful life turned hard. Producer Mundy and guitarist Barry Reynolds showcased that voice without obstructing it. Blazing Away ♪♪♪ (Island, 1990) is a powerful live album that showcases Faithfull at her dramatic best, backed by people such as Dr. John, former Tom Waits and Elvis Costello guitarist Mark Ribot, and the Band's Garth Hudson. Powerful stuff.

what to avoid: Faithfull's collaboration with Twin Peaks and Blue Velvet composer Angelo Badalamenti, A Secret Life ♪♪ (Island, 1995), is an interesting idea that doesn't work. Both make haunting music on their own, but this is just a little too dull.

the rest:
Marianne Faithfull's Greatest Hits ♪ (Abkco, 1969)
Dangerous Acquaintances ♪♪♪ (Island, 1981)
A Child's Adventure ♪♪♪ (Island, 1983)
Strange Weather ♪♪ (Island, 1987)
20th Century Blues ♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1997)

worth searching for: High-quality sound (at a high price) is the lure of Mobile Fidelity's Ultradisc combination of Broken English and Strange Weather (Mobile Fidelity, 1995). Real collectors might have a tough time hunting down three rarities—the import-only Faithless ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1978), which broke an 11-year recording gap, and her long out-of-print '60s albums Come My Way ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1965) and Faithfull Forever ♪♪ (London, 1966).

influences:
◀◀ Joan Baez, Buddy Holly, the Everly Brothers, Charlie Parker
▶▶ Björk, Rickie Lee Jones

Doug Pullen

Joseph Falcon and Cleoma Breaux Falcon

Formed in LA.

Joseph Falcon (born September 28, 1900, in Rayne, LA; died November 29, 1965, in Crowley, LA), 1 row diationic accordion, drums; Cleoma Breaux Falcon (born May 27, 1906, in Crowley, LA; died April 9, 1941, in Crowley, LA), resonator guitar.

Joe Falcon and Cleoma Breaux went into the temporary recording studio that Columbia had set up in a downtown New Orleans hotel on April 27, 1928, and made the first commercial recordings of Cajun music. His "Allons a Lafayette" was played on Victrolas in the streets of the small prairie towns of southwest Louisiana. Cleoma is the only Cajun woman musician who recorded in the 1920s and early 1930s. The combination of her resonator guitar and his solid button accordion created a sensation, and both were excellent singers as well. Cleoma is reported to have been the creator of the most famous Cajun song, "Jolie Blonde," having taught it to her brother Amédée Breaux for his recording session.

what to buy: A compilation of re-mastered recordings of early Cajun music, Abbeville Breakdown ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1990, prod. Lawrence Cohn) was released as part of Columbia Records' Roots and Blues series. This recording includes two great performances by Cleoma Breaux: "Prenez Courage," which is a rewrite of the Hawaiian standard "Aloha Oe," and the bluesy "Quand Je Suit Partis pour Texas." Joe Falcon is represented by "Poche Town" and the great unaccompanied "Aimer et Perdre." There are also excellent recordings of Cleoma's brothers, the Breaux Freres.

what to buy next: Cajun Dance Party: Fais Do Do ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1994, prod. Lawrence Cohn) is the second release of old Cajun material in the Roots and Blues series. It has four excellent sides of Cleoma Falcon, including the extremely influential "Mon Coeur T'Appelle," which may be the best-known song among Cajuns after "Jolie Blonde." "Le Vieux Soulard et Sa Femme" was the first recording of an ancient French song about a drunk and his wife that has continued to be recast and recorded by everyone from Dewey Balfa to Boozoo Chavis.

the rest:
Live at a Cajun Dance ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1997)

worth searching for: The LP Cleoma B. Falcon: A Cajun Music Classic ♪♪♪♪♪ (Jadfel, 1983, prod. Johnnie Allen) brings together many of the important records that Cleoma Falcon recorded with Joe Falcon. Listen to her growl through "Leve Tes Fenetreas Haut" sounding like a Cajun Bessie Smith, or her own "Crowley Waltz," written after almost drowning in the Hudson River. Powerful music from a pioneer woman musician.

influences:
◀◀ Dennis McGee, Leo Soileau
▶▶ Michael Doucet, Iry LeJeune, Mark and Ann Savoy, the Magnolia Sisters

Jared Snyder

Richard and Mimi Fariña /Mimi Fariña

Formed 1963, in Greenwich Village, NY. Disbanded 1966, in California.

Richard Fariña (born 1937, in New York; died April 30, 1966, in Carmel Heights, CA), dulcimer, vocals; Mimi Fariña (born Mimi Baez, April 30, 1945, in Boston, MA), guitar, autoharp, vocals.

A beat-inspired novelist, songwriter, and dulcimer player, Richard Fariña produced three memorable albums in a duo that he shared with his second wife, Mimi Fariña, the younger sister of Joan Baez. One of the most promising performers of early 1960s folk music, Fariña became one of its most tragic characters when a motorcycle accident, following a party for the release of his first novel, Been Down So Long It Looks Like up to Me, prematurely ended his life. The son of Irish Cuban parents who emigrated to the United States in the 1920s, Fariña divided his childhood between Cuba, Brooklyn, and northern Ireland, where he became a member of the IRA before being deported by the British government. After moving to Greenwich Village, he took an active role in the community's folk music scene. An early friend of Bob Dylan, he recorded an album with Dylan (who used the pseudonym "Blind Boy Grunt") and Eric Von Schmidt in 1963. He married singer-songwriter Caroline Hester in 1960, and they were divorced shortly after he fell in love with Mimi Baez, who he met and married in Paris in 1963. Moving to California, near Big Sur, and forming a folk duo with Mimi, Fariña continued to attract acclaim for his songwriting. His song "Pack up Your Sorrows" was covered by Johnny Cash and June Carter, Peter, Paul and Mary, Judy Collins, and Joan Baez. "Reno Nevada" has been re-recorded by Iain Matthews and Fairport Convention, who also recorded his song "The Quiet Joys of Brotherhood." Fariña was also hailed for his prose writing. He wrote several plays and magazine articles. His novel, Been Down So Long It Looks Like up to Me, was published in 1966 and reissued in 1983. Mimi, who continued to carry Fariña's name, worked with an improvisational acting troupe in the late 1960s. Although she recorded an album with Tom Jans, Take Heart, in 1971 and a solo album, Solo, in 1985, much of her attention has focused on a non-profit organization, Bread and Roses, that she founded to provide musical performances in hospitals and prisons.

what to buy: Best Of ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1971/1988, prod. Maynard Solomon) assembles 26 tracks from Richard and Mimi Fariña's albums Celebration for a Grey Day and Reflections in a Crystal Wind, and includes the original recordings of "Pack up Your Sorrows" and "Reno, Nevada" and the memorable, politically tinged songs "Sell-out Agitation Waltz" and "House Un-American Blues Activity Dream."

what to buy next: Released two years after Fariña's death, Memories ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1971, prod. Maynard Solomon) includes studio outtakes, live cuts recorded at the Newport Folk Festival in 1965, and several songs that the Fariñas recorded with Joan Baez.

the rest:
Celebrations for a Grey Day ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1965)
Reflections in a Crystal Wind ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1966) worth searching for: A live version of Celebration for a Grey Day is included on the multi-artist CD Folk Music at Newport, Part 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1995, prod. Mary Katherine Aldin).

solo outings:
Mimi Fariña:
(With Tom Jans) Take Heart ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1971)
Solo ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1985)

influences:
◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Cisco Houston, Jack Kerouac
▶▶ Bob Dylan, Eric Von Schmdt, Tom Rush

Craig Harris

Farmer's Daughters

Formed in Fries, VA.

Becky Barlow, bass, hammered dulcimer, vocals; Susan Gleason, guitar, vocals; Trish Kilby, clawhammer banjo; Helen White, fiddle, guitar, vocals.

This all-female group plays old-time fiddle tunes as well as classic country songs. Their strength is in the lyrical quality of Helen White's fiddle and the rhythmic clawhammer banjo of Trish Kilby.

what to buy: Farmer's Daughters ♪♪♪ (Heritage, 1997, prod. Farmer's Daughters) combines old-time rave-ups such as "June Apple" and "Sugar in the Gourd" with old country standards such as the Carter Family's "Bring Back My Blue-Eyed Boy to Me" and Hank Williams's "Alabama Waltz." A medley of "Little Sadie" and "Sail Away Ladies" is the highlight of this recording while the lowlight happens to be when the instrumentals are set aside for a song. If the strength of this band is their instrumental abilities, the weakness is their voices, which detract more than they add to the song.

influences:
◀◀ J.P. Fraley, the Carter Family
▶▶ Primitive Characters

Steve Gardner

Stephen Fearing

Born January 12, 1963, in Horseshoe Bay, British Columbia, Canada.

Stephen Fearing's a stealth performer, lurking between the waves of singer-songwriters that sputter across North America. He's been recording for the last decade and performing for longer than that, garnering admiring fans but no major following—yet. Fearing, a Canadian, spent much of his youth in Ireland and the United States, and his music has been touched by the styles of each country. If anything, he's less Celtic than his years in the Emerald Isle would suggest; there's a funky underpinning to his music that sounds very American. He shares with the Irish an undeniable romantic spirit and a love of the sound of words. The model for his acoustic guitar style was John Martyn, whom he heard while living in Ireland. Perhaps his greatest inspiration is the Canadian singer Willie P. Bennett, who's become a friend as well as a hero. (Bennett tours as part of Fred Eaglesmith's band.) Fearing's lyrics are elaborate patterns of imagery and sound; he's been moving toward streamlining his writing, but it's still a feast for the literate listener. His melodies are simple but sophisticated, and his voice is friendly, broad-ranging, and rich with nuance. He sometimes has performed with Tom Wilson and Colin Linden as Blackie and the Rodeo Kings.

what to buy: Fearing's Industrial Lullaby ♪♪♪♪½ (True North, 1997, prod. Colin Linden) has been termed a "breakthrough" album; publicityspeak, yeah, but this time it's true. The classic Fearing themes of innocents seeking justice, lovers seeking solace, and loners seeking connection are carried through from the songs to the production and instrumental arrangements. Recorded mostly live (with very few overdubs) with personnel from earlier albums in minimalist, industrial studio spaces, it's an exquisite package that marks the depth of the relationship between Fearing and producer Linden.

what to buy next: Fearing's previous album, The Assassin's Apprentice ♪♪♪♪ (True North/Cooking Vinyl, 1993, prod. Steve Berlin), boasting guest appearances by Sarah McLachlan and Richard Thompson, is the only one of his albums released in the United States at press time, though Industrial Lullaby may soon be available stateside.

the rest:
Out to Sea ♪♪♪½ (self-released, 1988/True North, 1991)
Blue Line ♪♪♪½ (True North, 1991)

solo outings:
Blackie and the Rodeo Kings:
High or Hurtin': The Songs of Willie P. Bennett ♪♪♪♪ (True North, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ John Martyn, Neil Young, Willie P. Bennett, Richard Thompson, Bruce Cockburn, Ferron
▶▶ Fred Eaglesmith

Pamela Murray Winters

Mike Fenton

Born July 10, 1948, in Sheffield, England.

Mike Fenton, a premier autoharp performer residing in Worcestershire, England, has devoted the last 12 years to presenting school programs, appearing at festivals, and teaching autoharp workshops in the British Isles and in the United States. Fenton has been the Galax Autoharp Champion three times and was inducted into the Autoharp Hall of Fame in July 1997. He is known for having one of the fastest and cleanest techniques for playing fiddle tunes on the autoharp, note for note, by using a thumb lead style. Another defining characteristic of his playing is his wonderful open chording on a diatonic autoharp, weaving a magical web with rich chords. Fenton's repertoire includes many well-loved traditional pieces, from beautiful Turlough O'Carolan melodies on his diatonic autoharps to old-timey tunes played on his clawtoharp (an autoharp tuned to include drone strings). Fenton has a nice singing voice and offers some sacred songs, some mountain music, a touch of bluegrass, and a bit of country, which he accompanies in a Carter Family style.

what to buy: The Best of Mike Fenton 1984–1996 ♪♪♪♪ (Heritage Records, 1996, prod. Mike Fenton, Heritage Records) is a compilation of previous Heritage Record releases and a good mixture of instrumentals and vocal numbers. The autoharp playing reigns supreme throughout, especially highlighted on an autoharp duet with Carole Outwater on "Seamus O'Brien" and his signature fiddle tune, "Rock the Cradle Joe." Fenton is joined on a few selections by Willard Gayheart, Marvin Cockram, Jesse Lovell, Bobby Patterson, and the Mountain Ramblers. Fenton's daughter Natalie adds a nice flute to "Endearing Young Charms." No Fenton compilation would be complete without a sample of his work with the schoolchildren of the English countryside. "Bread and Fishes" is a wonderful example of the eager participation that Fenton is able to encourage in his young audiences. A heartwarming example of Fenton's songwriting talent is "My Privilege," a tribute to the Carter Family that describes how fortunate he feels having known both Maybelle and Sara Carter. This is Fenton's only recording on CD, but any of his recordings are available from Heritage Records, Box 290, Galax, VA 24333.

the rest:
My Privilege ♪♪♪ (Heritage Records, 1985)
Accent on Autoharp ♪♪♪½ (Heritage Records, 1992)
Live at the Downs ♪♪♪½ (Heritage Records, 1993)
Frolicsome! ♪♪♪ (Heritage Records, 1994)
Move over with Mike ♪♪♪ (Heritage Records, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ The Everly Brothers, Doc Watson, Bill Clifton, Eddie Cochran, the Carter Family
▶▶ Bryan Bowers, Les Gustafson-Zook

Heidi Cerrigione

Ferron

Born Ferron Foissy, June 2, 1952, in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Emotional lyricism is set to highly syncopated, acoustic guitar–rooted arrangements by singer-songwriter Ferron, who was raised in Toronto and British Columbia and is based in Seattle. Although her early 1980s albums, Testimony and Shadow on a Dime, were released on her own label (Lucy Records) and distributed by Holly Near's label, Redwood made her a favorite of women's music audiences. Ferron's highly enthusiastic performances and recordings on Warner Bros. and Capitol-distributed Chameleon have enabled her songs to transcend borders—geographical or gender-based. Ferron first attracted attention in Canadian folk music coffeehouses in the early 1970s. Her first two albums, Ferron and Ferron Backed Up, were self-produced and available, until recently, only in Canada. After meeting and befriending Gayle Scott, an American photographer working on a Canadian film project, Ferron agreed to have Scott take over Ferron's management and help her to form her own label, Lucy Records/Penknife Productions, Ltd., in 1980. Raising $27,000 to record and release her first real studio album, Testimony, Ferron spearheaded contemporary folk music. Her follow-up recording, Shadows on a Dime, helped solidify her reputation. In 1985, Ferron received a Canadian Arts Council grant to write songs and take piano lessons for a year. When the grant ran out, she continued to work as a carpenter's assistant and bartender, and at a day care center. Phantom Center marked Ferron's return to music in 1990. Her subsequent albums—Resting with the Question, Not a Still Life, Driver, and Still Riot—continue to showcase her well-conceived compositions.

what to buy: Ferron's albums since 1990 incorporate an array of session players, texturally coloring her songs with instrumental innovation and soulful vocal harmonies. Not a Still Life ♪♪♪♪ (Cherrywood Station, 1992) was recorded live at the Great American Music Hall and offers a representative sampling of Ferron's early work.

what to buy next: Testimony ♪♪♪½ (Redwood, 1982) and Shadows on a Dime ♪♪♪½ (Redwood, 1989) are Ferron at her studio best. With scaled-down arrangements centered around her acoustic guitar and husky alto, songs take a musical exploration of the heart.

what to avoid: Ferron's first two albums, Ferron and Ferron Backed Up, were self-produced with very limited budgets and a sound quality that leaves much to be desired. Although they went out of print as quickly as they were released, Redwood rereleased them in the late 1980s. While songs on the two albums show hints of her future talents, Ferron's vocals have not yet developed and leave the listener disappointed.

the rest:
Phantom Center ♪♪♪ (Earthbeat, 1990)
Resting with the Question ♪♪♪ (Cherrywood Station, 1992)
Driver ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1994)
Polvo ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1995)
Still Riot ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Joan Baez, Karla Bonoff, Cris Williamson, Holly Near ▶▶ Ani DiFranco, the Indigo Girls

Craig Harris

Fiddle Fever

Formed 1980, in New York, NY. Disbanded 1984.

Matt Glaser, fiddle; Evan Stover, mandolin-fiddle; Jay Ungar, mandolin-fiddle; Russ Barenberg, acoustic guitar; Molly Mason, acoustic bass.

With a repertoire that included bluegrass, folk, Cajun, and swing jazz, Fiddle Fever bridged the traditional sounds of America's hill country and the modern strains of progressive new-grass. An outgrowth of the jazz-influenced string band community that sprung up in New York's Greenwich Village during the mid-1970s, Fiddle Fever was marked by its distinctive three-fiddle arrangements. Mandolin and fiddle players Jay Ungar and Evan Stover had previously worked with David Bromberg's band. Fiddler Matt Glaser, a former member of the Central Park Sheiks, and acoustic guitarist Russ Barenberg, formerly of Country Cooking, first played together in the bluegrass bands the New York All Stars and Breakfast Special. In 1977, they joined with banjo player Tony Trischka in Heartlands. Although that group failed to release an album, they performed on Barenberg's solo debut, Cowboy Calypso. Despite its impact on the evolution of bluegrass, Fiddle Fever was only together for a few years and disbanded shortly after the release of the group's second album, Waltz of the Wind, in 1984. Its recording of Jay Ungar's instrumental, "Ashokan Farewell," was used as a theme of Ken Burns's PBS documentary on the Civil War in 1991.

what to buy: The Best of Fiddle Fever ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1988, prod. Fiddle Fever, Glenn Berger) is a sampler of the band's two albums. Original instrumentals, including Glaser's "Poto and Cabengo," Stover's "Calling Jesse," and Ungar's "Ashokan Farewell" and "Melt Down at Indian Point," are balanced by innovative arrangements of traditional fiddle tunes and Bob Wills songs.

what to buy next: Fiddle Fever ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1981, prod. Fiddle Fever) captures the group in its earliest formation. In addition to performing two Bob Wills songs—"Stay All Night" and "Party for the Old Folks"—the quintet showcases their compositional skills. Stover shows his eccentric musical vision with "Calling Jesse," while Ungar displays his versatility with two instrumentals—"Ashokan Farewell" and "Melt Down at Indian Point"—and a Cajun-ized ditty, "You Low Down Dirty Dog."

the rest:
Waltz of the Wind ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1984)

influences:

- Bob Wills & His Texas Playboys, Bill Monroe & His Bluegrass Boys, Gid Tanner & His Skillet Lickers, the Woodstock Mountain Revue
- Nashville Bluegrass Band, Tim O'Brien, Chesapeake

see also: Jay Ungar & Molly Mason, Russ Barenberg

Craig Harris

editor's choice
9 dobro albums

Jerry Douglas, Slide Rule (Sugar Hill)

Various Artists, The Great Dobro Sessions (Sugar Hill)

Jerry Douglas & Peter Rowan, Yonder (Sugar Hill)

Josh Graves, King of the Dobro (CMH)

Flatt & Scruggs, Foggy Mountain Banjo (Columbia)

Norman Blake (and Tut Taylor), Back Home in Sulphur Springs (Rounder)

Rob Ickes, Hard Times (Sugar Hill)

Mike Auldridge, Mike Auldridge (Flying Fish)

Sally van Meter, All in Good Time (Sugar Hill)

Figgy Duff /Pamela Morgan

Formed 1974, in Newfoundland, Canada. Disbanded 1993.

Pamela Morgan, vocals, acoustic guitar, tin whistle, piano, synth; Noel Dinn, drums, percussion, bodhrán, piano, backing vocals; Dave Panting, bass, mandolin, backing vocals; Geoff Butler, accordion, flute; Rob Laidlaw, bass; Art Stoyles, button accordion.

Figgy Duff was a Newfoundland equivalent to the pioneering British folk rock bands Fairport Convention, Steeleye Span, and the Albion Country Band. In the 1970s and early 1980s, the group's repertoire emphasized new arrangements of traditional ballads and tunes they learned from rural Newfoundlanders. Later in the 1980s, however, the group began to perform original songs written by Dinn and Morgan. This change was reflected on Figgy Duff's third album, Weather out the Storm, which featured a 50-50 split between original and traditional material. What also marked Weather out the Storm as a significant stage in Figgy Duff's evolution was the change from a semi-acoustic sound to dense textures where electronic keyboards were more prominent. Downstream, Figgy Duff's last full-length studio effort, moved even further in that contemporary direction. All of the songs were original, and the band had essentially become Morgan, Dinn, and others brought in for recording sessions. Figgy Duff basically stopped on July 26, 1993, when Noel Dinn passed away. Subsequently, Pamela Morgan compiled Figgy Duff: A Retrospective, 1974–1993 and began developing a solo career. Morgan's first solo album, On a Wing and a Prayer, was released in 1996 and featured two songs co-written by Dinn and Morgan that were previously unrecorded—"One Heart" and "Streets of the Night." Also included was Dinn's eloquent solo composition "Heart of Darkness." The rest of the album was taken up by Morgan's originals and a moving interpretation of the traditional ballad "Blackwater Side." Morgan produced Anita Best's Crosshanded, a completely a capella collection of Newfoundland folk songs, and late in 1997 she brought out Amber Christmas, a fantastic seasonal set starring Morgan herself along with many other Newfoundland performers, including Anita Best, Dave Panting, Rick Hollett, George Morgan, and Serguei Tchepournov.

what to buy: Figgy Duff: A Retrospective, 1974–1993 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Amber Music, 1995, prod. Pamela Morgan) is an excellent overview of Figgy Duff's career, since the tracks document the group's evolution from its beginning years as an acoustic-based band focusing on traditional ballads and tunes to its later years as a folk-rooted but very contemporary Celtic pop group. As added bonuses, this CD includes two previously unreleased tracks and the accompanying booklet has a great photo gallery with shots from all periods of the band's history.

what to buy next: Any of the group's albums are excellent, but they're all different from one another. The first album, Figgy Duff ♪♪♪♪ (Hagdown, 1988/Amber Music, 1997, prod. Gary Furniss, Tom Treumuth), features fairly simple (but no less dramatic) arrangements of traditional songs and dance tunes. Their second release, After the Tempest ♪♪♪♪ (Hypnotic/A&M, 1982/Amber Music, 1997, prod. Tom Treumuth), also focuses on traditional material, but the arrangements are more sophisticated with the use of electronic keyboards to fill out the sound. Weather out the Storm ♪♪♪♪ (Hypnotic/A&M, 1990/Amber Music, 1997, prod. Tom Treumuth, Gary Furniss) didn't come out until eight years later, and marked even more changes. Half of the album consists of original songs, and keyboards are a larger part of the dense textures. Figgy Duff's final effort was an even more radical departure. There are no traditional pieces on the moody Downstream ♪♪♪♪ (Hypnotic/A&M, 1993/Amber Music, 1997, prod. Noel Dinn, Pamela Morgan, Daryn Barry, Gary Furniss) and the accordions and fiddles are just a small part of the lush instrumental textures. Try 'em all or pick the one that appeals to your taste.

worth searching for: Pamela Morgan and Noel Dinn were deeply inspired by fiddler Emile Benoit and co-produced and co-arranged his Vive La Rose ♪♪♪♪ (Amber Music, 1992). Also in a traditional vein was The Colour of Amber ♪♪♪♪½ (Amber Music, 1992), for which Morgan teamed up with fellow Newfoundland folk singer Anita Best.

solo outings:

Pamela Morgan:

On a Wing and a Prayer ♪♪♪♪ (Amber Music, 1998)

influences:

◀◀ Emile Benoit, Rufus Guinchard, Fairport Convention, Steeleye Span

▶▶ Rawlins Cross, the Great Big Sea, Anita Best, Loreena McKennitt

Ken Roseman

Filé

Formed 1983, in LA.

Members include: Ward Lormand, accordion, vocals; David Egan, piano, vocals; D'Jalma Garnier, fiddle, guitar, banjo, vocals; Kevin Shearin, bass; Peter Stevens, drums.

Combining elements of zydeco, blues, and swing, Filé is one of the most progressive bands playing any form of Cajun music.

what to buy: La Vie Marron (The Runaway Life) ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Filé, David Rachou) boasts a new lineup, and finds Filé leaning more heavily on its blues roots without sacrificing any of its Cajun boisterousness.

the rest:

Cajun Dance Band ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1987)

2 Left Feet ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1990)

influences:

◀◀ Beausoleil, the Hackberry Ramblers, Zachary Richard

▶▶ Beau Jocque & the Zydeco Hi-Rollers, Evangeline

Bob Cannon

Sally Fingerett

See: Four Bitchin' Babes

Cathy Fink and Marcy Marxer

Formed 1983, in Takoma Park, MD.

Cathy Fink (born August 9, 1953, in Baltimore, MD) guitar, banjo, vocals; Marcy Marxer (born February 26, 1956, in MI), guitar, hammered dulcimer, accordion, vocals.

Cathy Fink and Marcy Marxer have made their greatest impact with acoustic-based children's music. Their albums have received numerous awards from Parent's Choice Magazine and the American Library Association. Fink and Marxer first worked together on Fink's 1982 solo album, Doggone My Time, a bluegrass and string band–influenced album that also included Mike Auldridge on dobro and Michael Stein on fiddle. Although they recorded an adult-oriented album, Fink and Marxer, in 1989, they've focused since on children's music. A folk-rooted banjo and guitar player and yodeler, Fink launched her musical career in Montreal in 1973. While she was initially a soloist, she soon joined up with Canadian singer-songwriter Duck Donald. During the six years that they worked as a duo, Fink and Donald released three albums, including Fink's first children's album, I'm Gonna Tell, in 1980. The duo's success, however, was short-lived. By 1981, they had disbanded, with Fink relocating to Takoma Park, Maryland, where she still lives. Fink recorded several memorable solo albums. Grandma Slid down the Mountain, a children's album, was co-produced by Ken Whitley, the producer of Raffi's early albums. The Leading Role is a heartfelt tribute to the women of country music and includes songs by Ola Belle, Ferron, Hazel Dickens, and Alice Gerrard.

Marxer, who plays guitar, mandolin, and percussion, cut her musical teeth in a Michigan-based group, the Bosom Buddies

String Band. Although she first played with Fink as a session player, their partnership has continued to grow and their albums, since 1989, have all been collaborative efforts. Fink and Marxer have worked extensively with topical singer-songwriter Si Kahn. In addition to producing and performing on Kahn's albums, I Have Seen Freedom and Goodtimes and Bedtimes, they joined Kahn on a cassette tape version of the popular children's books The Runaway Bunny and Goodnight Moon that was produced by Harper-Row.

what to buy: A Cathy and Marcy Collection for Kids ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Cathy Fink, Marcy Marxer) brings together 15 tracks from their albums of children's music. While several songs, including "Brush Your Teeth" and "January, February, March," make educational lessons amusing, other tunes aim straight for the funny bone. "Jump Children" is a dance-inspiring anthem, while "Peanut Butter and Jelly" is a celebration of a child's favorite foods.

what to buy next: Blanket Full of Dreams ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996) offers a musical setting for nap time and moments of quiet reflection. An all-original outing, the collection focuses on lullabies and tender tunes, including Fink's "Goodnight, Goodnight," "All in a Night" and "Cowgirl's Lullaby" and Marxer's "Time to Sleep," "Swingtime Lullaby," and "It's Nighttime." "Grasshopper Sittin' on a Sweet Potato Vine" is a traditional fiddle tune with new humorous lyrics by Fink.

the rest:
Fink & Marxer ♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1989)
Doggone My Time ♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1990)
Help Yourself! ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990)
A Parents' Home Companion ♪♪ (Rounder, 1995)

solo outings:
Cathy Fink:
Grandma Slid down the Mountain ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1984)
The Leading Role ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1985)
When the Rain Comes Down ♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)

Marcy Marxer:
Jump Children ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1986)

influences:
◀◀ Patsy Montana, the Coon Creek Girls
▶▶ Si Kahn, John McCutcheon, Lou and Peter Berryman

Craig Harris

Alec Finn

See: De Danann

Archie Fisher

Born in Glasgow, Scotland.

The product of a musical household, Archie Fisher has become one of the seminal figures of the Scottish folk revival. He was born in Glasgow, to a Gaelic-speaking island mother and a police inspector father, both of whom sang all the time. He has seven sisters, who acted, he says, as "a catchment area for fellow musicians," but also as an audience and as singing partners. During the early 1960s, Archie and his sister Ray spent some time in a skiffle band before recording their first sides of Scottish music in 1963. They were joined by their parents and sisters on a 1965 release credited to "The Fisher Family." When Ray married and moved away, Archie began to establish himself as a top songwriter, guitarist, and vocalist. By the late 1960s, he had made many appearances on television shows, including the popular Here and Now, and many on BBC Schools Radio, where his original songs were used as illustrations of themes of industrialization. Many of his original songs became part of the Scottish folk repertoire through these appearances. During the 1970s he toured with Irish performers Tommy Makem and Liam Clancy, and arranged and produced several of their albums. During the 1980s, he toured and recorded as a duo with Canadian singer and instrumentalist Garnet Rogers.

In addition to his career as a performer, Fisher has also been an important organizer and presenter of traditional music. From 1988 to 1992 he directed the Edinburgh Folk Festival. He produced radio features and documentaries for BBC Radio Tweed in southern Scotland and eventually launched the BBC show Traveling Folk, which he has hosted for more than a decade.

what to buy: Sunsets I've Galloped Into ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1988, prod. Garnet Rogers) is a collection of recently written songs, some from Fisher's pen and some from others'. Fisher's own pieces include "The Shipyard Apprentice," a song he wrote back during the 1970s, and "The Black Horse," a recitation, or, as he puts it, a "song without a melody." Songs by others include Graham Miles's "Yonder Banks," Kieran Goss's "All That You Ask Me," and Stewart MacGregor's "The Presence," all fine songs that sound great in Fisher's smooth baritone. A few traditional songs round out the package. The sound is fuller and more produced than on Fisher's previous albums, owing to the presence of piano, bass, and synthesizers as well as guitars, flute, and fiddle, played by accompanists Garnet Rogers and David Woodhead.

what to buy next: Archie Fisher's classic LP The Man with a Rhyme ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1977/1997, prod. Sandy Paton) has recently been reissued on CD. It features mostly traditional songs and a few new ones written in the traditional mold. It contains Fisher's classic songs "The Witch of the West-Mer-Lands" and "Dark-Eyed Molly," which were made famous in folk circles by Stan Rogers. Among the traditional songs, "The Wounded Whale," which Fisher put together from versions noted in whalers' log-books, is particularly interesting, as are the two Jacobite songs "Twa Bonnie Maidens" and "Welcome Royal Charlie." The love song "Helen of Kirkconnell Lea" was recorded at the original sessions but did not fit on the LP version; it is included here as a bonus track. In addition to his own guitar, Fisher is accompanied by the Ladies of the Lake: Wendy Grossman (concertina, banjo, dulcimer), Kathy Westra (cello), Lani Herrmann (fiddle), Ann Mayo Muir (flute), and Lorraine Lee (dulcimer). Fisher's Topic LP from 1976, Will Ye Gang, Love ♪♪♪½ (Topic, 1976/Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Tony Engle, Tony Russell), has been reissued in the Green Linnet Celtic Classics series. It contains Fisher's gentle voice and guitar performing traditional songs of various types as well as songs he wrote himself. Among the former, one song was learned from Jeannie Robertson, but most seem to have drawn on the great collections of Gavin Greig and Dean Christie. A particularly interesting one is a work song sung by oyster-dredgers, whose lyrics are obtuse but beautiful. Among the original songs, "Lindsay" is one of Fisher's best-known "traditionalesque" numbers, while "Men O' Worth" deals with the contemporary problems of the shift from a farming and fishing economy to an industrial one in northeast Scotland. In addition to Fisher's guitar, Allan Barty plays fiddle and mandola, and John Tams adds melodeons.

the rest:
Archie Fisher ♪♪♪ (Celtic Music, 1968)

worth searching for: The Fisher Family ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1965) is a collector's item, an LP featuring Archie and his sisters Ray, Cilla, and Audrey, as well as his parents. Off the Map ♪♪♪♪ (Snow Goose Songs, 1986) is a live album of Archie with Garnet Rogers, and it's one of his best collections of traditional and original songs.

influences:

- Ewan MacColl

If you like Steve Fisher, you might also like:

- Stan Rogers, Garnet Rogers, Ray Fisher, Cilla Fisher

Steve Winick

Steve Fisher

Born November 24, 1954, in Tulsa, OK.

Steve Fisher is a rousing Texas singer-songwriter who specializes in original songs that tell stories from the bottom of the heart. He writes about gambling old spinsters ("Aunt Martha"), innocence lost in a whisper ("Childhood Days"), and keeping the faith ("The Unbeliever"). Playing his old sunburst Martin guitar, Fisher has toured extensively in America ("There isn't a coffeehouse I don't know") and has enjoyed major success as a winner at the Kerrville Folk Festival. He started playing piano and guitar at age 14, influenced primarily by Elton John and Neil Young. While attending Texas A&M, he brought the family piano with him so that he could practice his songs. He found work selling oil field equipment in Houston after college, but kept up his singing and songwriting in area clubs. In 1984 he joined a Southern-rock band playing mandolin and keyboards, and learned how to entertain rowdy audiences with his between-songs storytelling. In 1987, Fisher settled in Longview, Texas, and began playing McCann's Street Bar and Grill as its chief performing musician. He recorded the now out-of-print, self-produced cassette That's My Toy in 1989. After releasing another cassette collection of his songs, Nobody Home, in 1991, the cassette and its title track were brought to the attention of Waterbug Records. In 1995 Fisher compiled songs from both his previous cassettes and some new originals into one compact disc, A Boy's Life in Texas. The beckoning open road, strangers intent on unlocking mysteries, and love entanglements are some of Fisher's broader themes, which get plenty of airplay at his concerts.

what's available: A Boy's Life in Texas ♪♪♪ (Waterbug Music, 1995, prod. Steve Fisher) is a selection of 15 country/folk tunes that capture Fisher's particular brand of Southern storytelling at its best. Zassafras Music News says: "Fisher's art is like light hitting the surface of a river . . . this is music that takes its time."

worth searching for: The Waterbug Sampler ♪♪ (Waterbug Music, 1997, prod. various) is a collection of songs by Waterbug artists and has one new song by Fisher entitled "The Time Is Now."

influences:

- James Taylor, B.W. Stevenson, Van Morrison, John Prine, Guy Clark

If you like Steve Fisher, you might also like:

- Chuck Brodsky, Loudon Wainwright, Bill Morrissey, John Gorka, Dar Williams

TJ McGrath

Five Chinese Brothers

Formed 1987, in New York, NY.

Tom Meltzer, vocals, rhythm guitar, mandolin; Paul Foglino, bass, vocals, banjo; Neil Thomas, piano, organ, accordion, vocals; Kevin Trainor, lead guitar, vocals, ocarina (1987–94); Stephen B. Antonakos, guitars, vocals (1994–present); Dave Helberg, drums (1987–91); Charlie Shaw, drums (1991–95); Pete DeMeo, drums (1996–present).

The core of this urban country band met at Columbia University during the early 1980s, when Meltzer and Foglino played in the Special Guests (not a country group). Trainor and Thomas at that time were in Elmo & the Doobers, mixing country classics, humorous originals, jazzy jams, and "Amazing Grace." Meltzer does the majority of the Brothers' singing and songwriting, specializing in a convincing astonishment at the passage of time and a general bemusement regarding the opposite gender. The music looks back to classic 1950s models without sounding self-consciously retro, with bluesy slide guitar and lots of accordion for variety.

what to buy: After the quintet released a number of singles on the Diesel Only label (in earlier versions than appeared on album), it released its debut album, Singer Songwriter Beggarman Thief ♪♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME-CD, 1994, prod. Five Chinese Brothers), which contains many songwriting gems, including "Paul Cezanne," perhaps the only country song about Cubism. (The label's name is also its toll-free number).

what to buy next: Let's Kill Saturday Night ♪♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME-CD, 1997, prod. Five Chinese Brothers) returns to the strong level of songwriting found on the debut, while sounding more energetic than ever.

the rest:
Stone Soup ♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME-CD, 1995)
A Window Shopper's Christmas ♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME-CD, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Merle Haggard, George Jones, Gram Parsons, the Rolling Stones

Steve Holtje

The Flatlanders

Formed 1970, in Lubbock, TX.

Jimmie Dale Gilmore, vocals, guitar; Joe Ely, vocals, harmonica, dobro, guitar; Butch Hancock, vocals, guitar; Tommy Hancock, fiddle; Syl Rice, string bass; Tony Pearson, mandolin; Steve Wesson, musical saw.

Spawned during roughly the same era as the Sweetheart of the Rodeo–era Byrds and the Flying Burrito Brothers, the Flatlanders represented that period's clash between traditional and radical values: the attempt to build on the legacies of Jimmie Rodgers and Hank Williams while gaining a higher consciousness and rejecting the outdated symbols of a bygone era. Perhaps the group's fatal error was to attempt this in Nashville, which didn't want to hear about such nonsense, rather than L.A., which likely would have taken to the band's lonesome west Texas warblings like it took to the Eagles and the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band.

what's available: More a Legend Than a Band ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1990, prod. Royce Clark), is a reissue of the Flatlanders' original album, which, in 1972, only saw the light of day on 8-track tape. It's one of the great lost albums and contains the seeds of a generation of west Texas talent that has since gone on to fame, if not fortune. Gilmore's tremulous voice hovers above the proceedings on most of the tracks, which include two of his finest songs, "Dallas" and "Tonight I'm Gonna Go Downtown." Wesson's musical saw may as well be a sitar amidst these country & Eastern musings. Butch Hancock contributes a handful of tunes, including the mournful "She Had Everything," while Ely settles mostly for being the session's hot-shot guitarist. Prompted by the growing reputation of these three as solo artists, Charly reissued the album in 1980, and Rounder a decade later in a slightly different configuration. Shelby S. Singleton Jr., who owned the original sessions, got into the act in 1995, re-releasing the album under the moniker Jimmie Dale Gilmore and the Flatlanders, with the then-trendy title Unplugged ♪♪♪♪ (Sun, 1995, comp. prod. Jim Wilson, Shelby S. Singleton Jr.). It includes two fewer tracks than the Rounder disc and substitutes for two others. The Rounder disc is the better reissue.

influences:
◀◀ Jimmie Rodgers, Hank Williams, Eastern Religion 101
▶▶ Joe Ely, Butch Hancock, Jimmie Dale Gilmore

see also: Joe Ely, Butch Hancock, Jimmie Dale Gilmore

Daniel Durchholz

Flatt & Scruggs

Formed 1948. Disbanded 1969.

Lester Flatt (born Lester Raymond Flatt, June 19, 1914, in Overton County, TN; died May 11, 1979), guitar, mandolin; Earl Scruggs (born January 6, 1924, in Flintville, NC), banjo.

Does there exist a country music lover who hasn't heard "Foggy Mountain Breakdown" by Lester Flatt & Earl Scruggs? Their in-

flatt & scruggs

Béla Fleck (l) with Tony Trischka (© Stephen A. Ide)

strumental virtuosity still has everyone else playing catch-up. Flatt got his start with Charlie Monroe's band before joining younger brother Bill Monroe's band in 1944. Earl Scruggs played banjo and guitar on radio, jamming with the Morris Brothers as a teenager and with John Miller and His Allied Kentuckians as an adult before joining Monroe's Blue Grass Boys in late 1944. Flatt & Scruggs heightened the quality of Monroe's sound considerably: Lester's steady, subtle guitar work and mandolin trilling perfectly supported and offset Earl's arpeggiated three-fingered banjo work, an "overdrive" technique now known as "Scruggs"-style picking. When the duo left to form the Foggy Mountain Boys in 1948, Monroe became so embittered that he didn't speak to either of them for decades.

Flatt & Scruggs signed with Mercury records and made their first solo recordings, "Rollin' in My Sweet Baby's Arms" and "Salty Dog Blues" among them. They joined Columbia Records in 1951 and increased their exposure when they began their regular show for Martha White Flour on WSM in 1953. "'Tis Sweet to Be Remembered," "Cabin in the Hills," "Cryin' My Heart out over You," and "Goin' Home" were solid hits, but by the late 1950s, bluegrass was a novelty on country radio playlists. Flatt & Scruggs had to build their career upon the flashy innovation of their music and the unusually high quality of their band (which through the years featured Mac Wiseman, Curly Seckler, Cedric Rainwater, Jim Shumate, Josh Graves, and Paul Warren). Flatt & Scruggs achieved snob appeal when they were "discovered" by the college folk crowd of the early 1960s, and their concerts at Vanderbilt University and Carnegie Hall were mainstream career highlights. In 1962 their version of The Beverly Hillbillies theme, "The Ballad of Jed Clampett," became the first bluegrass song to hit #1. A song written for Bea Benederet's character, "Pearl, Pearl, Pearl," also charted highly. Though the CBS sitcom demeaned country people with its ironic tone, Flatt & Scruggs made several good-natured appearances on the program, which did more for their career than all their years on the road or the radio. In 1967 the soundtrack of the film Bonnie & Clyde featured Flatt &

Scruggs's 1948 recording of "Foggy Mountain Breakdown"; the recording was an enormous hit and sparked a new bluegrass boom in the United States. Ironically, it was also the last career peak for the duo. While Scruggs wanted to extend traditional bluegrass music into pop, rock, and jazz, Flatt resisted, as did many of the group's hard-core fans. Lester left, taking the Foggy Mountain Boys—renamed the Nashville Grass, the band would be the training ground for the young Marty Stuart—with him. Though they became friendly again shortly before Flatt's death in 1979, the duo never worked together again. Flatt cemented his position as a traditionalist and publicly made up with Monroe (Scruggs would do so in 1994). Scruggs grew his hair long and (with his sons Gary and Randy) started the Earl Scruggs Revue. Though both musicians recorded many critically acclaimed LPs through the years, the music they created together remains a precious part of our American heritage.

what to buy: An immensely satisfying introduction to this influential and irreplaceable team can be found on The Essential Flatt & Scruggs: 'Tis Sweet to Be Remembered ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia Legacy, 1997, compilation prod. Bob Irwin). This two-disc set features their biggest hits and most memorable work for Columbia.

what to buy next: Their first years as a groundbreaking solo act are smartly documented on The Complete Mercury Sessions ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1992, compilation prod. Greg Geller). This hot 28-song collection features everything they recorded for Mercury, including previously unreleased material.

what to avoid: Don't let the title fool you. Golden Hits ♪ (Hollywood/IMG, 1987) is a poorly made, low-budget collection.

the rest:
Foggy Mountain Banjo ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1961)
Songs of the Famous Carter Family ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1961)
At Carnegie Hall ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1962)
Live at Vanderbilt University ♪♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1964/1996)
(With Doc Watson) Strictly Instrumental ♪♪♪ (County, 1967)
Columbia Historic Edition ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1982)
20 All-Time Great Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1983)
You Can Feel It in Your Soul ♪♪♪½ (County, 1988)
(With the Johnson Mountain Boys) Blue Ridge Cabin Home ♪♪♪♪ (County, 1990)
Don't Get above Your Raisin' ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992)
Golden Era ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992)
20 Greatest Hits ♪♪ (Deluxe, 1994)
On Foggy Mountain ♪♪½ (Sony Music Special Products, 1996)
Foggy Mountain Jamboree ♪♪♪ (County, 1996)

worth searching for: If you've just got to have everything, hit the import shops and catalog services for Flatt & Scruggs 1948–1956 ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1994) (a 4-disc set), Flatt & Scruggs 1959–1963 ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1992) (a 6-disc set), and Flatt & Scruggs 1964–1969 ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1994) (a 7-disc set). These sets have everything they recorded in those years, with dozens of previously unreleased studio tracks and material from live shows to boot. Pick an era and dig in.

solo outings:
Lester Flatt:
Live—Bluegrass Festival ♪♪♪ (CMH, 1986/1995)
Lester Raymond Flatt ♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1992)
At His Best ♪♪ (Hollywood/IMG, 1994)
Living Legend ♪♪♪½ (CMH, 1995)
Greatest Performance ♪♪♪½ (CMH, 1996)
Heaven's Bluegrass ♪♪ (CMH, 1996)
Pickin' Time ♪♪♪½ (CMH, 1996)

Lester Flatt & Nashville Grass:
Fantastic Pickin' ♪♪♪ (CMH, 1976/1996)
Greatest Bluegrass Hits, Volume 1 ♪♪♪½ (CMH, 1995)

Earl Scruggs:
Dueling Banjos ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1973/1984)

influences:
◀◀ Bill Monroe, Mac Wiseman, Ralph Stanley

▶▶ The Osborne Brothers, Reno & Smiley, Ricky Skaggs, the Ghost Rockets, Steve Martin, Marty Stuart, Béla Fleck

Ken Burke

Béla Fleck /Béla Fleck and the Flecktones

Born July 10, 1958, in New York, NY. Flecktones formed 1990, in Nashville, TN.

Béla Fleck, banjo; Howard Levy, keyboards, harmonica (1990–92); Victor Lemonte Wooten, bass guitar; Roy "Future Man" Wooten, Synth-axe Drumitar.

Banjo player Béla Fleck is widely regarded as one of the most innovative and influential musicians to ever pick up the five-string. Beginning in bluegrass, Fleck was a key member of the influential New Grass Revival before taking the banjo into jazz fusion with the Flecktones and demonstrating a versatility many thought the instrument didn't possess. Born in New York, Fleck began learning the banjo at 15 and played with Tasty Licks and Spectrum before joining the New Grass Revival in 1982. He formed the Flecktones soon after the Revival disbanded in 1988.

what to buy: Flight of the Cosmic Hippo ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1991, prod. Béla Fleck) contains piano- and harmonica-driven jazz, incorporating influences from Irish waltzes to African drumming. From the ethereal "Star of the County Down" to the soaring "Turtle Rock," this is the best Flecktones album.

what to buy next: In Tales from the Acoustic Planet ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1995, prod. Béla Fleck), Fleck took a break from the Flecktones to record with what he called "some of my all-time favorite guys." Jazzmen Chick Corea and Branford Marsalis and pop pianist Bruce Hornsby are among those joining bluegrassers Tony Rice, Jerry Douglas, and Sam Bush for 14 songs rooted in jazz fusion coupled with infectious grooves.

the rest:

Crossing the Tracks ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1980)

(With Tony Trischka and Tom Adams) Rounder Banjo Extravaganza ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988)

(With the Flecktones) Béla Fleck and the Flecktones ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1990)

(With the Flecktones) UFO Tofu ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1992)

(With the Flecktones) Three Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1993)

(With the Flecktones) Live Art ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996)

influences:

◀◀ Tony Trischka, Earl Scruggs, Charlie Parker

▶▶ Alison Brown, Pete Wernick

Douglas Fulmer

Matt Flinner

Born March 14, 1969, in Pueblo, CO.

Having been born in Colorado and lived in Utah and Idaho, mandolinist Matt Flinner has spent most of his life near the Rocky Mountains, which he sometimes credits as influencing the wide-open sound of his playing. Originally a banjo player, Flinner won the Winfield National Championship on the instrument in 1990, then began concentrating on mandolin and won the same award in that category the following year. Flinner has backed Tim & Mollie O'Brien, Tony Trischka, Sally Van Meter, Tony Furtado, and, more recently, Judith Edelman.

what's available: The fine The View from Here ♪♪♪½ (Compass, 1997, prod. Todd Phillips) makes for an impressive debut, with a core band of Flinner, bassist-producer Todd Phillips, and guitarist David Grier. A jazz-influenced picker, Flinner wrote all 10 of the album's instrumentals and brought in Tim O'Brien, Stuart Duncan, Darol Anger, and Mike Marshall for individual tracks.

influences:

◀◀ Béla Fleck, David Grisman, Miles Davis, the Bothy Band

see also: Judith Edelman

Brian Mansfield

Benton Flippen

Born July 18, 1920, in Surry County, NC.

Not simply an old-time fiddle player, Benton Flippen plays a style all his own that can express the anguish of the blues, the inspiration of gospel, and the joy of a square dance. Benton has played since the late 1940s with a number of bands, including the Green Valley Boys, the Camp Creek Boys, the Smokey Valley Boys, and the Dryhill Draggers.

what's available: Old Time, New Times ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994) features powerful fiddle, banjo, and string band music on 27 songs recorded between 1949–93, including new and old recordings and previously unreleased radio transcriptions.

influences:

◀◀ Fiddlin' Arthur Smith, the Camp Creek Boys, the Smokey Valley Boys

▶▶ Kirk Sutphin, Fred Cockerham & Tommy Jarrell

Douglas Fulmer

Rosie Flores

Born September 10, 1950, in San Antonio, TX.

Dwight Yoakam's Guitars, Cadillacs, Etc., Etc. is often held up as the "alternative" linchpin of the late 1980s new-traditionalist movement, but the real dust was kicked up by Rosie Flores's self-titled 1987 solo debut. A sassy southern California–based Texan who had apprenticed in an all-woman rock band called the Screamin' Sirens, Flores sings with a raspy authority and a fiery grace capable of straddling Tex-Mex, blues, rockabilly, and even girl-group pop. After Warner Bros. dropped her in 1988, Flores moved to Austin, Texas, and eventually signed with Oakland, California–based HighTone. Despite living in a city that helped trigger the current alternative-country boom, Flores has forsaken country-rock in favor of exploring the rawer rockabilly

Rosie Flores (© Jack Vartoogian)

LONE STAR

2
8 0 robin flower

old time music

Old Time Music (a term first coined in the 1920s) is the hillbilly music from the rural American South, which laid the foundation for all subsequent styles of country music (from bluegrass to Hank Williams to Shania Twain). It includes ancient unaccompanied ballads, topical American songs, fiddle and banjo breakdowns for dancing, sacred songs from the Primitive Baptist and Sacred Harp traditions, and a pervasive African American influence, not only from blues music, but also from the banjo (probably of African origin). Old time music began as purely a rural music but, nowadays, it's as likely to be played by software engineers, college professors, and lawyers as by farmers, blacksmiths, or coal miners. The two major instruments used in old time music are fiddle and 5-string banjo, which is played with the fingers rather than with fingerpicks. Both make liberal use of many different tunings. Other instruments used in old time music include the guitar, mandolin, autoharp, harmonica, dulcimer (Appalachian and hammered), and upright bass. Today, old time music is flourishing (after nearly dying out in the 1950s) and continues to be played informally in people's homes, at dances, and at festivals and contests. Many of the most important old time musicians have considered music an avocation rather than a career; it's still more often shared with kinfolk, friends, and neighbors than watched on a TV screen.

Suzy Thompson

roots she flaunted in a late-1970s bar band called Rosie & the Screamers. She collaborated with childhood heroes Wanda Jackson and Janis Martin on 1995's Rockabilly Filly and with Ray Campi on 1997's A Little Bit of Heartache.

what to buy: A Honky Tonk Reprise ♪♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1987/Rounder, 1996, prod. Pete Anderson) is a reissue of her stunning 1987 self-titled Warner Bros. debut, which ranges from such neo-traditional romps as "Crying over You" and "Heartbreak Train" to such sobering ballads as "Somebody Loses, Somebody Wins" and "God May Forgive You (But I Won't)." The latter—a Harlan Howard/Bobby Braddock composition that eclipses Lyle Lovett's similar "God Will"—has been resurrected as a Flores-inspired fixture in Iris DeMent's live show. The Rounder reissue comes with six bonus tracks, including a heart melting cover of Skeeter Davis's "End of the World."

the rest:
After the Farm ♪♪♪½ (HighTone, 1992)
Once More with Feeling ♪♪♪ (HighTone, 1993)
(With Wanda Jackson and Janis Martin) Rockabilly Filly ♪♪♪ (HighTone, 1995)
(With Ray Campi) A Little Bit of Heartache ♪♪♪ (Watermelon, 1997)

worth searching for: Rosie's faithful cover of "My Own Kind of Hat" appears on the Merle Haggard tribute Tulare Dust ♪♪♪♪ (HighTone, 1994, prod. Tom Russell, Dave Alvin).

influences:
◀◀ Wanda Jackson, Brenda Lee, Patsy Cline
▶▶ Iris DeMent, k.d. lang

David Okamoto

Robin Flower

Born 1950, in Cleveland, OH.

Robin Flower has not only the musical chops on mandolin and guitar to win the admiration of such new-acoustic-music peers as Darol Anger and Laurie Lewis, but also the skillful feminist songwriting sensibility to be a hero in the women's music movement. This ability to succeed in two very different scenes at once made her one of the most interesting figures of the early '80s. She grew up in a working-class section of Cleveland. Her mother was from Kentucky and sang Appalachian ballads and both parents played harmonica and were active in the union, civil rights, and anti-war movements. At 22, Flower quit her post-office job, bought a Harley-Davidson, and traveled to the West Coast. She met banjo player Mary Wings in Portland, Oregon, and was so impressed she took up the guitar and mandolin. After playing in an all-female, Latin-rock band, Be Be K'Roche, and an all-female jazz band, Baba Yoga, Flower recorded her first solo album on her own label, then graduated to Flying Fish. After releasing four albums in nine years, she disappeared from the national scene.

what's available: 1st Dibs ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish Records, 1984, prod. Mitch Greenhill) is a splendid showcase for Flower's picking and songwriting. Laurie Lewis and Crystal Reeves provide strong, flashing fiddle lines for Flower to perforate with her spray of prickly mandolin notes. Flower's songs are full of strong, independent women, but she deflates any hint of self-righteousness with a sly wit. Babies with Glasses ♪♪ (Flying Fish Records, 1987, prod. Robin Flower), billed to Robin Flower & the Bleachers, reinforces the emphatic syncopation of her music by employing a rhythm section on every cut. The integration of electric and acoustic instruments isn't always smooth and the writing is uneven, but there are still special moments.

worth searching for: More Than Friends ♪♪½ (Spaniel Records, 1979, prod. Robin Flower, Susan Colson) is Flower's self-released debut and features only five vocal numbers among the 11 cuts. Green Sneakers ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish Records, 1982, prod. Terry Garthwaite) is the best example of Flower's acoustic picking. Accompanied by such West Coast stalwarts as Lewis, Barbara Higbie, Sally Van Meter, and Beth Weil, Flower puts her songs through surprising chord changes and jazzy substitute chords and never loses her joyful momentum.

influences:

◀◀ Mary Wings, Aunt Molly Jackson, Barbara Dane

▶▶ Ferron, Laurie Lewis, Cathy Fink & Marcy Marxer

Geoffrey Himes

Flying Burrito Brothers

Formed 1968, in Los Angeles, CA.

Gram Parsons, vocals, guitar (1968–70); Chris Hillman, vocals, guitar, bass (1968–72); Chris Etheridge, bass (1968–75); "Sneaky" Pete Kleinow, steel guitar (1968–71, 1974–present); Michael Clarke, drums, harmonica (1969–72); Bernie Leadon, guitar, banjo, dobro, vocals (1969–71); Rick Roberts, guitar, vocals (1970–73); Al Perkins, pedal steel (1971–72); Byron Berline, fiddle (1971–73); Roger Bush, bass (1971–73); Kenny Wertz, guitar (1971–73); Al Munde, banjo, guitar (1972–73); Don Beck, pedal steel (1972–73); Erik Dalton, drums (1972–73); John Beland, guitar (1981–present); Joe Scott Hill, bass, vocals (1974–present); Floyd "Gib" Gilbeau, fiddle, guitar, vocals (1974–present); Gene Parsons, drums (1974–present); Skip Battin, bass (1976–present); Ed Ponder, drums; Jim Goodall (1985–88).

Formed by ex-Byrds Chris Hillman and Gram Parsons, the Flying Burrito Brothers are generally considered a transition period for Parsons between the Byrds and his solo work. But the group, arguably the first to play what's now considered country-rock, still performs despite the absence of its two founders. During the early 1980s a version of the group relocated to Nashville and released a series of moderately successful country singles as the Flying Burrito Brothers and, simply, the Burrito Brothers (the biggest of which, "She Belongs to Everyone but Me," reached #16 in 1981). A group including Sneaky Pete, Skip Battin, Greg Harris, and Jim Goodall also recorded as the Flying Brothers.

what to buy: The Gilded Palace of Sin ♪♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1969, prod. Flying Burrito Brothers, Larry Marks, Henry Lewy) was a grand experiment that fused notions of country music, California hippie rock, and Southern soul. Parsons and Hillman were writing some of their best songs—among them "Sin City" (later cut by Dwight Yoakam) and "Hot Burrito #1" (covered by Elvis Costello)—and also covered Muscle Shoals classics "Do Right Woman" and "Dark End of the Street." For a thorough overview, Farther Along: The Best of the Flying Burrito Brothers ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1988, prod. various) contains 21 cuts, including nine from "The Gilded Palace of Sin" and some rare outtakes.

what to buy next: Not quite the groundbreaker that Gilded Palace was, Burrito Deluxe ♪♪♪½ (A&M/Edsel, 1970, prod. Jim Dickson, Henry Lewy) nevertheless offers some fine moments in the same vein. It also contains the Burritos' version of "Wild Horses," which Mick Jagger and Keith Richards allegedly wrote for Parsons (according to the same legend, he re-arranged "Honky Tonk Woman" as "Country Honk" for the Rolling Stones).

what to avoid: The quality of the band's recordings took a sharp drop after Parsons left, so all but the most die-hard fans could live without anything recorded after the group left A&M. Be especially wary of Eye of a Hurricane ♪½ (One Way, 1994), a European-only release that finds the band a shell of its former self.

the rest:

The Flying Burrito Bros ♪♪♪½ (A&M/Mobile Fidelity, 1971)
Last of the Red Hot Burritos ♪♪♪ (A&M/Rebound, 1972)
Close up the Honky Tonks ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1974)
Flying Again ♪♪ (Columbia, 1975)
Airborne ♪♪ (Columbia, 1976)
Sleepless Nights ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1976)
From Another Time ♪♪ (Shiloh, 1976)
Close Encounters to the West Coast ♪♪ (Relix, 1978)
Live from Europe ♪♪ (Relix, 1986)
Back to the Sweethearts of the Rodeo ♪♪ (Appaloosa, 1987)
Cabin Fever ♪♪ (Relix, 1989)
Best of the Flying Burrito Brothers ♪♪½ (Relix, 1995)
California Jukebox ♪♪ (American Harvest, 1997) Sin City ♪♪ (Relix)

worth searching for: Byrd fanatics can seek out the import Dim Lights, Thick Smoke and Loud, Loud Music ♪♪ (Edsel, 1993).

influences:

◀◀ The Byrds, Hank Williams, Memphis/Muscle Shoals soul

dan fogelberg

The Eagles, Gram Parsons, the Desert Rose Band, the Jayhawks, Uncle Tupelo, Wilco, Son Volt

see also: The Byrds, Gram Parsons, Chris Hillman, Alan Munde

Brian Mansfield

Dan Fogelberg

Born August 13, 1951, in Peoria, IL.

Dan Fogelberg was raised in the Midwest, rose to prominence on the West Coast amidst southern California's burgeoning folk-rock singer-songwriter scene of the early 1970s, and ended up in Boulder, Colorado—a fitting final destination for a "quiet man of music," to borrow one of his better-known lyrics. He dropped out of art school at the University of Illinois in 1971 and moved to Los Angeles to try his hand at a music career; he earned a deal with Columbia (eventually settling on the CBS subsidiary Full Moon/Epic). As Fogelberg's career progressed, his music veered away from the West Coast's country-pop stylings and more toward an unlikely mix of sentimental ballads and atmospheric pro-rock. The ballads are what eventually made him famous, likely on the strength of Fogelberg's distinctive high-tenor voice. He became a staple of adult-contemporary radio stations during the late 1970s and early 1980s with such hits as "Longer" and "Leader of the Band." Since the mid-1980s, Fogelberg has shown an increasing and generally healthy willingness to experiment with other styles—sometimes with refreshing results, like 1985's bluegrass-oriented High Country Snows, other times less successfully (1993's world-music-influenced River of Souls).

what to buy: Even after more than a quarter-century and a dozen albums, Fogelberg's debut, Home Free ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1972, prod. Norbert Putnam), still stands as his best work, simply because it's so unaffected by the more commercial considerations of his subsequent efforts. Such songs as "To the Morning" and "Hickory Grove" capture the innocence of his Illinois youth at an early enough stage in his career that he could still feel it pulling on him.

what to buy next: High Country Snows ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1985, prod. Dan Fogelberg, Marty Lewis) was a welcome venture into bluegrass, with guest appearances by the likes of Doc Watson, David Grisman, Chris Hillman, and Herb Pedersen. For a straightforward collection of chart successes, Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1982, prod. various) is a serviceable document despite its revealingly yuppified cover photo. Portrait: The Music of Dan Fogelberg ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1997, prod. various) covers more of Fogelberg's career and spreads the results over four discs. It's more than most will want, but it's not a bad investment for someone switching their collection from vinyl to CD.

what to avoid: Windows and Walls ♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1984, prod. Dan Fogelberg) represents the depths of Fogelberg's shallowness; hardly a song on here is even worth hearing. Love Songs ♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1995, prod. various) isn't so much bad as it is unnecessary, an apparent attempt by the label to rehash Fogelberg's hits one more time after he'd moved on to a different record company.

the rest:

Souvenirs ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1974)
Captured Angel ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1975)
Nether Lands ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1977)
(With Tim Weisberg) Twin Sons of Different Mothers ♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1978)
Phoenix ♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1979)
The Innocent Age ♪♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1981)
Exiles ♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1987)
The Wild Places ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1990)
Greetings from the West ♪♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1991)
River of Souls ♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1993)
(With Tim Weisberg) No Resemblance Whatsoever ♪♪ (Giant, 1995)

worth searching for: Sony packaged three of Fogelberg's '70s albums, Souvenirs/Captured Angel/Netherlands ♪♪♪ (Full Moon/Epic, 1997, prod. various) together as a budget-line box set. Home Free and Captured Angel were paired together on a 1987 cassette that can still be purchased from some retail outlets.

influences:

Cascades, Jackson Browne, James Taylor, Bruce Cockburn

Garth Brooks, Billy Dean, David Wilcox, James McMurtry

Peter Blackstock and Brian Mansfield

Red Foley

Born Clyde Julian Foley, June 17, 1910, in Blue Lick, KY. Died September 19, 1968, in Fort Wayne, IN.

Possessed of a smooth, trained baritone voice and an easy manner, Red Foley is often credited with making country music more palatable to a mainstream audience; he had several country hits that also charted on the pop hit parade, including 1950's "Chattanoogie Shoeshine Boy," which charted #1 both pop and country. Other of his #1 country hits that also were successful as pop fare included "Smoke on the Water," "Birmingham Bounce," and "Goodnight, Irene" (with Ernest Tubb). He was equally at home with country boogies, sentimental traditional fare, pop-styled ballads, and such gospel numbers as "Peace in the Valley." An early country radio star on WLS' National Barn Dance and the Renfro Valley Barn Dance, Foley became host of the Prince Albert segment of the Grand Ole Opry beginning in 1946; he left in 1954 to host ABC's Ozark Jubilee, one of the first nationally televised country music shows. He was elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1967.

what's available: Country Music Hall of Fame ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1991, prod. Country Music Foundation) contains a good sampling of the versatility of this country star, with original versions of such landmark hits as "Old Shep," "Tennessee Saturday Night," "Tennessee Border," "Peace in the Valley," "Alabama Jubilee," "Midnight," and "Sugarfoot Rag."

what to avoid: For years, The Red Foley Story woof! (Decca/MCA, 1964), a two-LP set of treacly remakes, was the only greatest-hits package available of this great and important artist. Avoid it.

influences:

◀◀ Bradley Kincaid, Rev. Thomas Dorsey

▶▶ Jim Reeves, Willie Nelson

Randy Pitts

Sue Foley

Born March 29, 1968, in Ottawa, Ontario, Canada.

Musician magazine made a good call when it cited Sue Foley's "little girl nudge that draws the ear in a crowded genre." Not that she's light on musicianship. She's an engaging singer not afraid to take chances with material, and with her trademark paisley Telecaster she's a whip-snap guitarist. Foley lived a while in Vancouver before moving to Austin, Texas. The toothsome redhead could have quintupled her press by tarting it up even a little, but she stuck to business and always fronted good, no-shuck bands. (Her drummers have been S.P. Leary–influenced Jason Moeller and the undisputed king of the Texas shuffle beat, Freddy "Pharoah" Walden.) Foley has toured France, Holland, Sweden, Norway, and Japan and has done big-time TV shows in her native Canada. Critics who compare her to Bonnie Raitt are blues-clueless; Foley has better material and plays more guitar than Raitt has since the 1970s.

what to buy: Young Girl Blues ♪♪♪½ (Antone's, 1992, prod. Derek O'Brien, George Rains) was a lauded debut that featured a winsome "(Me & My) Chauffeur Blues" that does Memphis Minnie proud and an infectious cover of Betty James's "Little Mixed Up."

what to buy next: The 1990s most upbeat bluesgrrl surprises with two well-done Dylan covers on Big City Blues ♪♪♪ (Antone's, 1995, prod. Stephen Bruton) and doesn't disappoint with straight-on "Howlin' for My Darlin'" and "One Hundred Dollar Bill" (originally by Howlin' Wolf and Buddy Guy, respectively). A guilty pleasure is the instrumental "Girl's Night Out" with the Antone's Fun Girls (Toni Price, Sarah Brown, etc.) whooping and yipping in the background.

the rest:
Without a Warning ♪♪ (Antone's, 1993)

influences:

◀◀ Memphis Minnie, Earl Hooker

▶▶ Debbie Babcock, Cricket Taylor

Tim Schuller

David Folks

Born June 23, 1956, in Lansing, MI.

With a style that encompasses urban and rural images, rich metaphors, spiritual themes, moving ballads, and ambitious fingerstyle guitar work, David Folks is a singer-songwriter with a special ability to reach listeners on an emotional level. Not surprisingly, Folks is gaining a well-deserved national reputation. Both his independently produced debut CD, Roadside Park, and his newest recording, Refusing to View, have earned air play in numerous folk venues, appealing to listeners who enjoy the vocal styles of Bruce Cockburn and John Gorka. A clinical psychologist by day, Folks draws his audience into a warm space of feeling and introspection, which he supports with elegant moral ambition and a touch of Zen.

what to buy: Refusing to View ♪♪♪♪ (Portable Recordings, 1996, prod. Michael Kind, David Folks) showcases the artist's poetic depth and instrumental excellence. "Down from the Cumberland" restates the old adage "no man is an island," or in this case a mountain, as the writer pulls his head down from the clouds and returns home from a retreat. In "The Elegance of Fools," stream-of-consciousness lyrics paint a painful picture of violence in the urban ghetto: "In the church of the NRA they tithe to the gun machine, with the blood of children and bystanders." "Hercules" contrasts a shattered illusion of grandiosity with a soothing cello line. "The Playing Field at Eton" describes seasons of youthful love: "I'll catch the dew, to bring you our holy water sweetened by the days we ran . . . on the playing field at Eton." "Duncan's Gun," an acoustic blues-flavored presentation of the Civil War, is a rude awakening for those with a propensity for romanticizing armed conflict. The closing prayer "Jahwe" imparts hope: "I am a doubting man, but I saw the evergreen glow in the moonlight, and I'm putting my heart in your hand . . . may the love in my heart be the will you impart."

conray fontenot

what to buy next: Folks's debut CD, Roadside Park ♪♪♪ (Portable Recordings, 1994, prod. David Folks), features a worthy collection of original songs, along with a fine fingerstyle-guitar arrangement of the traditional Irish melody "She Moved through the Fair." "His Way" presents an artist's frustrated search for self-direction. "Wounded Man" draws on Folks's experience as a father and son, describing a rift between generations of men. Folks asks an important question in "What Is a Home?" with touching images of a janitor and a homeless woman. "Here and Now," an upbeat tune about living in the present and experiencing the Tao, provides a refreshing contrast to the artist's plaintive poetic tendencies. Roadside Park is a respectable first effort by a capable—although seemingly depressed—musical poet.

influences:

◀◀ The Weavers, Michael Smith, Richard Thompson, Nick Drake, Joni Mitchell, John Cage

▶▶ Jan Krist

Art Wojtowicz

Canray Fontenot

Born October 22, 1922, in L'Anse Rougeau, LA. Died July 29, 1995, in Welch, LA.

With steel blue eyes and a smile that could melt any heart, Canray Fontenot played the finest traditional Creole fiddle in Louisiana. Son of legendary accordionist Adam Fontenot, Canray grew up in a house that was constantly full of the area's musicians coming to visit with his father. His wiry bluesy fiddling deeply influenced the playing styles of Dewey Balfa, Michael Doucet, and Edward Poullard. He began working with the nephew of Amédée Ardoin, accordionist Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin, and during the 1940s and early 1950s he led a string band that shared the stage with a very young Clifton Chenier. Chenier convinced Fontenot to return to music in the mid-'60s when he had given up on music. His songs "Les Barres de la Prison," "Bonsoir Moreau," and "Joe Pitre a Deux Femmes" (amongst others) are still played in updated versions by many young zydeco bands.

what to buy: Louisiana Hot Sauce, Creole Style ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1992, prod. Chris Strachwitz) is a compilation of Fontenot in a variety of settings, including duets with Michael Doucet, the Ardoin Family, the Poullard Brothers, Freeman Fontenot, and Beausoleil.

what to buy next: Fontenot and Bois Sec stopped off in Washington, D.C., after a successful performance at the Newport Folk Festival and recorded Les Blues du Bayou ♪♪♪♪♪ (Melodeon, 1965, prod. Richard Spottswood). It catches them in their prime. The two never played a tune through the same way twice, but there is no lack of authority in their playing.

the rest:

Louisiana Cajun French Music from the Southwest Prairies, Vol. 2: 1964–1967 ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1976)
Cajun Fiddle Styles, Vol. 1: The Creole ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1988)
La Musique Creole ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1997)

worth searching for: Side two of The Cajuns Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Gazell, 1973, prod. Sam Charters) features Ardoin Brothers Orchestra with Fontenot. These are the only recordings of Fontenot playing with Gustave Ardoin (son of "Bois Sec" Ardoin, on accordion) who died in a tragic accident. Fontenot considered his work with Gustave to be some of his finest music.

influences:

◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Dennis McGee

▶▶ Michael Doucet, Clifton Chenier, Balfa Brothers

see also: Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin

Jared Snyder

Steve Forbert

Born 1955, in Meridian, MS.

Already saddled with the "New Dylan" tag because of his raspy voice and guitar-harmonica accompaniment, Forbert debuted in 1978 with Alive on Arrival, a charming concept album celebrating his country-boy-moves-to-the-Big-Apple dreams. His proclamations of peach-fuzzed optimism were so earnest and life-affirming that the scores of critics who adopted him as their folk-rock Peter Pan didn't want him to ever grow up. Forbert managed to score one hit single, 1980's "Romeo's Tune," and send a not-so-subtle declaration of maturity via the snide title of his 1980 album, Little Stevie Orbit, before a six-year feud with Columbia Records kept him out of the record stores. Forbert re-emerged on Geffen Records—older, wiser, and, no surprise, much more cynical. But like John Hiatt's recent work, such albums as Mission of the Crossroad Palms and The American in Me are short on dreams but still full of hope, the work of a battle-scarred veteran who is learning to adapt his idealistic beliefs to the daunting pressures of adulthood.

Canray Fontenot (© Jack Vartoogian)

what to buy: Alive on Arrival ♪♪♪♪½ (Nemperor, 1978, prod. Steve Burgh) remains a joyful testament to youthful idealism, thanks to such timeless songs as "Goin' down to Laurel," "Steve Forbert's Midsummer Night's Toast," and "What Kinda Guy?" Little Stevie Orbit ♪♪♪♪ (Nemperor, 1980, prod. Pete Solley) ushers in the harder-rocking, more-mature Forbert with "Get Well Soon," "If You Gotta Ask, You'll Never Know," and the gorgeous "Song for Katrina." Steve Forbert ♪♪♪½ (Nemperor, 1982, prod. Steve Burgh) is an unjustly forgotten album that features the rousing "Ya Ya (Next to Me)" and his funniest song, "He's Gotta Live up to His Shoes." The American in Me ♪♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1992, prod. Pete Anderson) is the grown-up bookend to Alive on Arrival, using the reflection and self-doubt of "You Cannot Win 'Em All" and "Responsibility" as tools for resilience, not resignation.

what to buy next: Forbert's 1982 tour with his road band, the Flying Squirrels (anchored by future Shawn Colvin/Rosanne Cash producer John Leventhal), produced his most memorable rock 'n' roll-driven shows. King Biscuit Flower Hour Presents ♪♪♪½ (KBFH/BMG, 1996) captures a fiery set at Long Island's My Father's Place, mixing his best-known material with convincing romps through Chuck Berry's "Too Much Monkey Business," the Searchers' "When You Walk in the Room," and a lovely reading of the Troggs' "Love Is All Around."

what to avoid: Jackrabbit Slim ♪♪ (Nemperor, 1979, prod. John Simon) spawned his hit, "Romeo's Tune," but compared to the rest of his catalog, the horn-driven, string-drenched production now sounds more syrupy than soulful.

the rest:
Streets of This Town ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1988)
What Kinda Guy: The Best of Steve Forbert ♪♪♪½ (Epic/Legacy, 1993)
Mission of the Crossroad Palms ♪♪♪ (Giant, 1995)
Rocking Horse Head ♪♪♪ (Paladin, 1996)
Here's Your Pizza ♪♪½ (Paladin, 1997)

worth searching for: Arriving Live (Nemperor, 1978) is a promotional EP with live versions of "You Cannot Win If You Do Not Play," "Steve Forbert's Midsummer Night's Toast," and the unreleased "Steve Forbert's Moon River."

influences:
◀◀ Jimmie Rodgers, Bob Dylan, Chuck Berry
▶▶ Michael McDermott, Joe Henry, Will T. Massey

David Okamoto

The Forbes Family

Formed 1976, in PA.

Homer Forbes, vocals, banjo, fiddle; Lisa Forbes Roberts, vocals; Lori Forbes Slate, vocals, bass; Jay Forbes, vocals, mandolin.

This group of siblings recorded several country/bluegrass albums in its home state until eventually relocating to North Carolina to focus more on bluegrass gospel music. By the late 1980s, after four albums on Rebel Records, family obligations led to the Forbes Family's breakup. In 1994, following the release of a collection of their earlier material, they returned to record two remarkable albums.

what to buy: Best of the Early Forbes Family ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1994, prod. Homer Forbes) is 18 tracks long and includes a couple of standouts written by Claire Lynch among its many treasures. I'll Look to Him ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1995, prod. Ron Rhoads Jr.) is distinguished by the group's gorgeous a cappella rendition of the Molly O'Day gospel number, "I'll Face Nobody's Record but Mine."

what to buy next: In the Shadow of Your Wings ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1996, prod. Ron Block, Forbes Family) is the latest and most polished effort by the group, aided by the members of Alison Krauss's band Union Station (minus Krauss).

the rest:
Farewell ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel, 1994/1997)

influences:
◀◀ The Marshall Family, Claire Lynch
▶▶ Alison Krauss, the Cox Family

Stephen L. Betts

Julia Fordham

Born August 10, 1962, in Portsmouth, Hampshire, England.

Is Fordham a jazz, pop, or folk singer? In truth, she's all three, which makes her one of those artists with considerable talent who fall between the cracks of regimented radio formats. Possessed of a rich contralto voice that at times is reminiscent of jazz diva Nina Simone, Fordham rose through the ranks, singing backup for Mari Wilson and Kim Wilde. She's been a songwriter since her teens, and her experience is plainly in evidence on her four albums, for though her songs tend to focus mostly on lost love, the situations never repeat themselves, and Fordham injects surprising insights and pathos into each of them. Still, it's understandable that some listeners find her a bit of a cold fish, mostly due to the studied, every-hair-in-place production of her first three albums.

what to buy: Porcelain ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1989, prod. Grant Mitchell, Hugh Padgham) was an adult-contemporary and VH-1 favorite thanks to the exquisite title track, the gentle Latin rhythms of "Genius," and the lyrically compelling "Girlfriend."

what to buy next: Falling Forward ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1994, prod. Larry Klein, Julia Fordham) benefits from slightly less restrained performances that show off the extraordinary range and expressiveness of Fordham's voice.

the rest:
Julia Fordham ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1988)
Swept ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1991)
East West ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Nina Simone, Mari Wilson, Lisa Stansfield, Joni Mitchell
▶▶ Jewel

Daniel Durchholz

The Foremen

Formed 1990, in Los Angeles.

Roy Zimmerman, leader, songwriter, arranger (left in 1997); Doug Whitney, guitar, banjo, mandolin, washboard, harmonica, tuba, washtub bass; Andrew Corwin, upright bass; Kenny Rhodes, percussion.

Political satire and folk music were most outrageously combined by the Los Angeles–based quartet the Foremen. Dressed in matching suits and lavender ties, the group spoofs the sounds and down-to-earth approach of late '50s and early '60s collegiate folk groups, including the Chad Mitchell Trio, the Limeliters, and the Kingston Trio. Their tongue-in-jowl songs, written by ex-bandleader Roy Zimmerman, are Zappa-like examinations of contemporary society. The band continues to get the last laugh. Their anthemic tune, "Ain't No Liberal," has been embraced by the New Right while their performance of their hard-hitting indictment "Ollie Ollie off Scot Free" was featured on Oliver North's nationally syndicated talk show in February 1996. Although Zimmerman left the band to seek a still-unlaunched solo career, the Foremen continue to perform his material.

what to buy: Folk Heroes ♪♪♪½ (Metaphor Records, 1993/ Reprise, 1995, prod. Tom Paley) is a delightful fusion of Kingston Trio–like arrangements and the no-holds-barred topical lyrics of Roy Zimmerman. Songs take humorous jabs at President Clinton ("Do the Clinton"), Rush Limbaugh ("Russian Limbaugh"), and Oliver North ("Ollie Ollie off Scot Free"). "Ain't No Liberal" is a tongue-in-jowl anthem for America's conservatives.

what to buy next: With their second major album, What's Left? ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1996, prod. Tom Paley), the Foremen continue their musical assault on American politics while expanding their folk roots to include arrangements reflecting additional West Coast pop and rock influences. The album includes non-partisan lampoons of the presidential conventions—"Chicago (Love Song to a Democrat)" and "San Diego"—and a Tom Paxton–esque look at voting, "What Did You Do on Election Day?"

the rest:
Sing It Loud: Live at Luna Park ♪♪½ (Metaphor, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Frank Zappa, Bonzo Dog Band, Monty Python, Kingston Trio, Chad Mitchell Trio, the Limeliters, the Smothers Brothers, Phil Ochs, Tom Paxton
▶▶ Moxy Früvous, Washington Squares

Craig Harris

John Forster

John Forster wants to be Tom Lehrer real bad, and fortunately he isn't real bad at Lehreresque humor. He's even got the right background: he began singing satirical songs while an undergraduate at Harvard. He's heartily endorsed by fellow New Englander and certifiably funny person Christine Lavin. If you still doubt his sense of humor, ponder this: he produced two albums for Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen.

what's available: The title track of Entering Marion ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1993, prod. John Forster) is an overextended sex joke: it's funny the first couple of times, but it's not worth entering more times than that. The most biting track is "Fusion," which skewers Paul Simon right through the dashiki. A duet with Lavin, "Way Down Deep (You're Shallow)," would make a fine wedding dance for many Hollywood denizens. The subject matter of Helium ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1997, prod. John Forster) may have more staying power. The title track is a marvel, with helium-induced kazooing, among other delights. "In the Closet" is social commentary of the Lehrer kind, as Forster asks and then tells. Other topics that may or may not endure include O.J. Simpson and Prince Charles.

influences:

◀◀ Tom Lehrer, Christine Lavin

▶▶ Moxy Früvous, Trout Fishing in America

Pamela Murray Winters

Fotheringay

See: Sandy Denny, Fairport Convention

Four Bitchin' Babes

Formed 1990.

Christine Lavin, guitar, vocals (1990–97); Patty Larkin, guitar, vocals (1990–92); Julie Gold, piano, vocals (1990–92); Camille West, guitar, vocals (1997–present); Megon McDonough, guitar, vocals; Sally Fingerett, piano, guitar, vocals; Debi Smith, guitar, bodhrán, vocals (1994–present). Temporary Babes have included: Cheryl Wheeler, Kristina Olsen, Janis Ian, and Mary Travers.

Start with 1/3-dozen richly gifted singer-songwriters, add 3/4-cup married life, 5 kids, 4-part harmony vocals, one piano, a dollop of sharp social commentary, and a wardrobe to die for. Put the combination on the road, allow to steep for eight years, and record occasionally—and you've got Four Bitchin' Babes. Multi-talented women of the '90s, the Babes compose their own music, write their own lines, play their own instruments, and do their own hair and makeup.

Sally Fingerett grew up on Chicago's south side and parlayed her musical roots in classical, folk, and blues into a prestigious New Folk Award for songwriting at the Kerrville Folk Festival in Texas. In addition to her three solo CDs on the Amerisound label, and a fourth on the way, Sally, who's now based in Columbus, Ohio, has written and produced music for movies and television. Her song "Home Is Where the Heart Is" has been recorded by Holly Near, Ronnie Gilbert, and Peter, Paul & Mary, and she has appeared with PP&M on their PBS television special, "Lifelines." Megan McDonough, also from Chicago, has 10 recording projects behind her. Her voice has been heard all over television—singing the theme for an HBO Olympic ice skating special (which won her a cable TV ACE Award) and enlivening a Danielle Steele made-for-TV movie—and her face has been seen in commercials. Her musical theater career has really taken flight in recent years, from productions of Pump Boys and Dinettes and Beehive to her triumphant box-office-record-breaking portrayal of Patsy Cline in Always Patsy Cline. Debi Smith, a Washington D.C. native, may be best known as half of the recording and performing sibling duo the Smith Sisters, who have four albums on Flying Fish Records. Debi has a new solo effort as well. A magnet for awards—Washington Area Music Awards (Wammies), American Song Festival, Billboard, ASCAP—a frequent guest on A Prairie Home Companion, and possessor of the longest most lustrous locks in folk music, Debi is also the official capitol city Schmooze Babe: she has supped at the Gores' house. Camille West, of Glens Falls, New York, was introduced to the Babes in 1997 by departing founding Babe Christine Lavin, with whom she shares a keen knack for comic topical music. "She's smart as a whip, cute as a button, and clever to boot," says Lavin. "She puts the gal in galvanizing." Adds Fingerett: "We love her . . . she's under 5'-4", so we can borrow her clothes." Camille has won both the Golden Link Folk Festival Performer competition and the New Jersey Folk Festival New Folk competition. She has also been featured at the annual Boston Festival of Funny Songwriters and at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. "Being a Babe is like belonging to the sorority we were never asked to join in college," say the Babes.

After the first Four Bitchin' Babes tour and recording in 1990, Babe membership underwent several shifts. Original member Patty Larkin left to pursue her solo career. Replacing Patty was Julie Gold, known for her Grammy-winning tune "From a Distance," who settled in for the recording of Buy Me, Bring Me, Take Me . . . Volume 2. When Megon took time off to have her baby, stellar temporary replacements included Kristina Olsen, Cheryl Wheeler, Janis Ian, Mary Travers, and Debi Smith, who became a permanent member after Julie's departure, and was on hand for the recording of the group's Shanachie debut, 1995's Fax It, Charge It, Don't Ask Me What's for Dinner: More Life According to Four Bitchin' Babes. "We're often asked if we like each other as much as it appears on stage," say the Babes. "How could we not? It's a traveling pajama party. We're best friends from childhood who didn't meet until we were in our late thirties. We go on Babe retreat, sleep in and eat out . . . and get paid! The essence of being a Babe is that you juggle your child care, get your clothes out of the closet, gather up your curlers and makeup, and go. Then, when you get home from work, you go back to grocery shopping and monitoring your kids' television viewing."

what to buy: The Babes are at their funniest in live performance, when the audience gets a chance to be part of the pajama party. Buy Me, Bring Me, Take Me: Don't Mess My Hair!!! Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1993, prod. Four Bitchin' Babes, Steve Rosenthal) also offers the opportunity to hear the massively successful ballad "From a Distance" performed by its writer, Julie what to buy next: For a studio sound, try Fax It, Charge It, Don't Ask Me What's for Dinner ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1995, prod. Dan Green). It includes a backup band with horns, strings, and percussion, so the sound is much more produced than the live albums, which seldom feature anything more than the odd guitar or piano backing.

Gold, in a spare setting that doesn't overstate its pieties. Among Lavin's tracks is a charming cover of "Sealed with a Kiss."

the rest:
Buy Me, Bring Me, Take Me: Don't Mess My Hair!!! Volume 1 ♪♪♪ (Philo/ Rounder, 1990)
Gabby Road ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997)

worth searching for: Laugh Tracks ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Christine Lavin) is a compilation album; each Babe has one cut.

solo outings:
Megon McDonough:
My One and Only Love ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996)

Sally Fingerett:
Enclosed ♪♪♪ (Amerisound, 1983)
Unraveled ♪♪♪½ (Amerisound, 1991)
Ghost Town Girl ♪♪♪½ (Amerisound, 1993)

influences:
◀◀ Christine Lavin, Cheryl Wheeler, Fred Koller
▶▶ Try the babes individually

Neal Walters and Steve Holtje

The Four Preps

Formed 1956, in Los Angeles, CA. Disbanded 1968.

Bruce Belland, lead tenor; Ed Cobb, bass (1956–66); David Sommerville, bass (1966–68); Marvin Inabnett, high tenor; Don Clark, high tenor; Glen Larson, baritone.

Capitol signed this vocal group to a long-term contract while the members were 16 and still in high school, and they paid off with several huge hits over the next few years. They honed a carefully rehearsed, low-key stage act founded on their choir-boy harmonies and fine-tuned around the light topical humor favored by contemporaries the Kingston Trio, Peter, Paul and Mary, and the Limeliters. Belland and Larson wrote the group's best-known songs—"26 Miles (Santa Catalina)," "Big Man," "Down by the Station," "More Money for You and Me (Medley)"—and the Preps appeared in films (Gidget) and on television shows (Ozzie and Harriet, The Ed Sullivan Show, American Bandstand, and The Lawrence Welk Show). "More Money for You and Me," a parody of their contemporaries (among them, the Fleetwoods, the Platters, the Four Freshmen, the Kingston Trio, and Dion and the Belmonts), recorded live in 1961, is a snapshot of them at their best. And though their 1964 "Letter to the Beatles" gently parodies the growing commercialism of what would become known as "rock," they couldn't compete with the update. An attempt to use Phil Och's "Draft Dodger Rag" as a comedy song shows how far out of touch they had gotten by the end. Meanwhile, Cobb produced and wrote "Dirty Water" and "Sometimes Good Guys Don't Wear White" for the Standells and "Tainted Love" for Gloria Jones (it was later a worldwide hit for Soft Cell in 1982). Recently, Cobb, Belland, David Sommerville (he was lead singer on the Diamonds' "Little Darlin" before joining the original Preps), and former Association member Jim Yester have somehow found time to perform as the New Four Preps.

what's available: The Four Preps ♪♪♪½ (Capitol Collector's Series, 1989, prod. Ron Furmanek) is about all you really need to capture the Preps' essence, with all the irresistible, syrupy early hits and late misfires, with added B-sides and outtakes. The Best of the Four Preps ♪♪♪ (WEA Special Products, 1993) contains four tracks not included in the Collector's Series disc, but do you really need their version of "Moon River"?

worth searching for: Their straight version of "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" (not the parody on "More Money for You and Me") is on the hard-to-find Capitol Sings Jerome Kern ♪♪½ (Capitol, 1992), alongside tracks by Judy Garland, Peggy Lee, and Nat King Cole. When AM Was King ♪♪½ (Capitol, 1992) includes "26 Miles (Santa Catalina)" and cuts by other Capitol hitmakers of the '60s, including Tennessee Ernie Ford, Bobby Darin, and Grand Funk Railroad.

influences:
◀◀ The Limeliters, the Kingston Trio, the Four Freshmen
▶▶ Peter, Paul and Mary see also: The Limeliters, The Kingston Trio, Peter, Paul and Mary.

Leland Rucker

Michael Fracasso

Born February 10, 1952, in Steubenville, OH.

Through events that shaped his life, Michael Fracasso has been able to draw from three distinct musical landscapes to create his rootsy folk-country sound. A native of mill town–area Ohio, Fracasso was educated in Catholic schools and reared in working class neighborhoods, which explains his songs' frequent subject matters—religious mores and Midwestern life. In 1978

Fracasso relocated to New York City, where he soaked up the folk coffeehouse scene frequented by Steve Forbert, Suzanne Vega, and Cliff Eberhardt. His songwriting reflected the thoughtfulness and the introspective spirit of his folk surroundings. But by 1991 Fracasso was on the move again; this time, he ended up in Austin, Texas, where he lives today. Naturally, the Texas connection provided Fracasso with the country kick that embellishes his compositions. The gorgeous country waltz, "Door #1," a duet with fellow-Austinite Lucinda Williams, makes his first album, Love & Trust, a must. His second set, When I Lived in the Wild, has a folkier feel, although the sneering "How Very Inconvenient" rocks as hard as any Rolling Stones song. His ability to travel through various territories and still maintain his melodic ground, which in turn smoothes his nasal-tinged voice, makes Fracasso an artist on the verge of conquering more than just Lone Star State soil.

what to buy: Love & Trust ♪♪♪♪ (Dejadisc, 1993, prod. Michael Fracasso, Mike Hardwick) offers Fracasso's folk-country hybrid with elegance and depth. Whether he's questioning the effects of religion on "Wise Blood," examining the perils of love on "Door #1," or telling a story about mama's little girl turned high-fashion model in "Apple Pie," Fracasso always has something important to say.

the rest:
When I Lived in the Wild ♪♪♪½ (Bohemia Beat, 1995)

worth searching for: Fracasso joined Austin buddies Iain Matthews and Mark Hallman to form the Hamilton Pool side project, a Buddy-Holly-meets-Beatles-with-harmonica group. The trio recorded an album, Return to Zero ♪♪½ (Watermelon, 1995, prod. Mark Hallman), but if you want a quick taste of their work and a slew of other cool acts like Webb Wilder, Timbuk 3, Alejandro Escovedo, and Don Walser, pick up The Watermelon Sampler, Volume 1 ♪♪♪ (Watermelon, 1995, prod. various).

influences:
◀◀ Steve Forbert, Bob Dylan, Buddy Holly
▶▶ Jimmy LaFave, Iain Matthews, the Silos

Mario Tarradell

Amy Fradon and Leslie Ritter /Amy Fradon

Formed 1987, in NY. Disbanded 1995.

Amy Fradon (born 1960s, in NY), vocals; Leslie Ritter, vocals.

Amy Fradon studied dance and choreography at New York University. But the New York–born daughter of a cartoonist for The New Yorker and an illustrator for the Brenda Starr comic strip has made her greatest impact as an impassioned, folk-rooted vocalist and skillful songwriter. Fradon first attracted acclaim for her songs while still in college. Auditioning for the campus Rathskeller Coffeehouse on a lark, she was booked for her first gig. She continued her involvement with music after moving to Woodstock, New York, during the mid-1970s. In 1979, she learned to sing harmony with a "side line" band that featured Robbie Dupree, Cane Roberts (Alice Cooper Band), Eric Parker (Joe Cocker Band), and Gary Bonner (the Turtles). After making her recording debut with Happy Traum on his Bright Morning Star album, she became a much-in-demand background singer and performed with members of Orleans, the Fabulous Rhinestones, Happy and Artie Traum, Rick Danko, and John Sebastian. Together with her long-time partner, Leslie Ritter, she formed her first original band, Amy and the Shoppers. After becoming absorbed with acoustic music while on the road with the nationally touring company of Pump Boys and Dinettes, she formed an acoustic duo with Ritter that recorded six albums. Since 1995, Fradon has sought her fortune as a solo performer. In addition to her musical career, she maintains a successful private practice as a voice teacher and conducts workshops in Being Vocal: Using Vocal Sound As a Healing Tool.

what to buy: Amy Fradon and Leslie Ritter were preparing to go their separate ways when two fans provided the money to record a final album. The result, Take Me Home ♪♪½ (Shanachie/Cachet, 1993, prod. Scott Petito), remains their most successful effort with more than 20,000 copies sold. A harmony-filled recording, the album includes a memorable interpretation of John Lennon and Paul McCartney's "Rain," as well as a cover of "Your Move," written by Jon Anderson of Yes.

what to buy next: Fradon and Ritter's skills at interpreting the songs of other writers are showcased on Delphys: Ocean Born ♪♪ (Delphys, 1992, prod. Kim Rosen, Cathie Malach), which features the poems and chants of Kim Rosen and Cathie Malach, and Flyin' on the Wings of Heaven ♪♪ (Flyin' on the Wings of Heaven, 1988, prod. Amy Fradon, Judi Bachrach), which features poems and songs written and sung by Judi Bachrach.

the rest:
Crystal Song ♪♪ (Crystal Song, 1987)
Amy & Leslie ♪♪ (Alcazar, 1990)
Requiem Songs: For the Victims of Nationalism ♪♪ (Albany, 1996) worth searching for: Fradon's solo recording debut came with a self-produced cassette, Bootleg: Amy Fradon Live! (self-released, 1996, prod. Amy Fradon), recorded during an intimate house concert performance .

influences:

Joni Mitchell, Elton John, Neil Young, Linda Ronstadt, Diana Ross, the Stylistics, Bonnie Raitt, Emmylou Harris

Happy and Artie Traum, Ilene Weiss, Margo Hennebach

Craig Harris

J.P. and Annadeene Fraley

Formed in KY.

J.P. Fraley (born c. 1922), vocals, fiddle; Annadeene Fraley (born July 15, 1913; died April 12, 1996), vocals, guitar.

Though their two available recordings were made 20 years apart, J.P. and Annadeene Fraley manage to reach far beyond the walls of time with their emotion-filled, deftly delivered fiddle tunes, borne out of the hills surrounding their northeastern Kentucky home. She had been a featured vocalist on numerous radio programs since age 13; he had a local reputation as a skilled fisherman as well as a fine fiddler. The couple married in 1946, but wouldn't begin playing together on a regular basis until the late 1950s. J.P. had beaten famed fiddler Buddy Spicher in a contest he had entered on a whim. More contests followed, and the couple also made numerous appearances at folk festivals as well. The couple made their first recording during 1973, while J.P. was working in brickyards and as a troubleshooting expert on coal-cutting equipment for the National Mine Service. Retired by the early 1990s, they resurfaced in 1995 to record what would be their second—and final—album.

what to buy: Maysville ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Mark Wilson) boasts more than two dozen fiddle tunes, both covers and Fraley originals. It's perfect music for a cool summer evening, relaxing on the front porch.

what to buy next: Wild Rose of the Mountain ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1973, prod. Guthrie T. Meade, Mark Wilson) features fewer tunes than their other collection, but its 18 cuts are still packed with tradition and excellence.

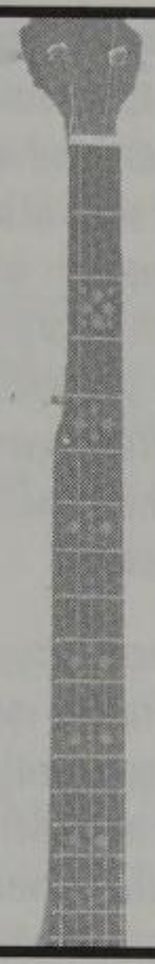
worth searching for: Although it doesn't contain performances by the Fraleys, the collections Traditional Fiddle Music of Kentucky, Volumes One and Two ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997) are indicative of the pervasive music of the Kentucky and Ohio River regions that influenced, and was ultimately influenced by, J.P and Annadeene Fraley. Guthrie "Gus" Meade, who helped compile the Fraley's recordings, gathered more than 70 field recordings for these two indispensable collections.

influences:

Roy Acuff, Ed Haley

Buddy Thomas, J.B. Miller

Stephen L. Betts



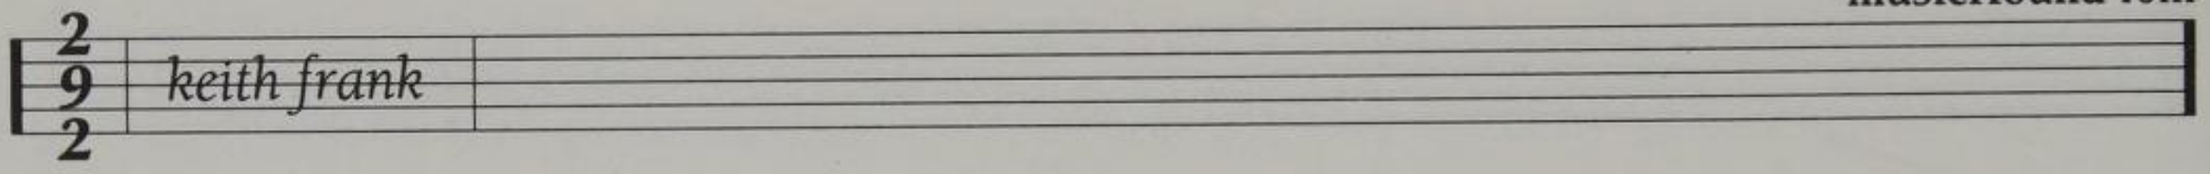
editor's choice
10 acts to watch

Susan McKeown
Mad Pudding
Kate MacLeod
Stephen Fearing
Lisa Moscatiello
Mary Jane Lamond
Toshi Reagon
Kings of Calicutt
Moxy Früvous
Old Blind Dogs

Jackson C. Frank

Born 1943, in Buffalo, NY.

Jackson Frank's story reads like what: a cautionary tale? a dark fantasy? a made-for-TV movie? Not quite any of those, but it's still a sad and fascinating story. As a child, Frank was badly scarred in a school fire that killed half of his classmates. Guitar playing was suggested as therapy, and insurance payments left Frank a wealthy, if damaged, youth. He traveled to London to join the young minstrels there and was soon appearing regularly on the folk circuit and sharing a house with Paul Simon, Art Garfunkel, and Al Stewart. Simon produced Frank's self-titled 1965 album. Sandy Denny was, for a time, his girlfriend, and she helped popularize many of his songs, notably "You Never Wanted Me" and Frank's best-known song, "Blues Run the Game." A lush lifestyle and several trips back and forth across the Atlantic soon depleted Frank's fortune, and he was also beginning to show signs of mental illness. By the end of the decade, he'd begun to fade into poverty and ill health. Frank's



"rediscovery" came in the 1990s. Thanks to his guardian, Jim Abbott (who traced him through a flea-market album autographed to Frank by Al Stewart), he now lives in an assisted-living facility. He bears the visible physical and mental scars of his often nightmarish life, but his gifts are still apparent: wit, charm, and dignity. A guitar stands beside his bed. In his prime, Frank was a fine folk guitarist, and his vocal style suggests a man confiding in himself about his own thoughts. His songwriting is what will be most remembered. "Blues Run the Game" is included in the Simon and Garfunkel box set Old Friends.

what's available: Blues Run the Game ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mooncrest, 1996, prod. Paul Simon, Peter McKeel) is essentially Frank's 1965 album, with several 1975 tracks added. Frank's songwriting gifts are evident in the title song (which alludes to his belief in the universality of human misery, yet carries a wistful upwardness in its melody) and many of the others; he stands comfortably among his housemates and touring-musician buddies of the early 1960s. Everyone who ever loved a Simon and Garfunkel album should own this one as well.

influences:

◀◀ Bob Dylan, Paul Simon, Art Garfunkel

▶▶ Sandy Denny, Stan Rogers, David Wilcox

see also: Simon and Garfunkel

Pamela Murray Winters

Keith Frank

Born 1973, in Oberlin, LA.

Like many of his peers, Keith Frank broke into music playing in his family's band. His father, Preston Frank, led the Swallow Band in the 1980s when it featured Keith's great uncle, Carlton Frank, on fiddle and well-known drummer Leo Thomas. Preston eventually filled the band with his children, including sons Keith and Brad and sister Jennifer on bass, and renamed the group the Preston Frank Family Band. As Keith has moved out on his own he has created a reputation based on a very tight band which can bowl you over with the hypnotic quality of their grooves, like a James Brown or a Fela Kuti, taking the dancers for a ride. Frank has been an enormous success in his local market and has had little reason so far to sign with a label larger than Maison de Soul or to pack up and travel, but it is no reflection on the power of his music.

what to buy: You'd Be Surprised ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maison De Soul, 1997, prod. Floyd Soileau, Fred Charlie) has a sound that is hot—and sells big—in southwest Louisiana, proving that Frank knows his local market well. Nobody is going to win a Pulitzer for the lyrical content of zydeco music, but Frank's grooves are infectious and the band always plays with feeling. His lyrics are better than most and the deadpan backup vocals of his sister Jennifer give his band a unique quality. You hear Frank trying out different sounds, looking for the next beat that will replace double clutching or the minor key grooves that have become so popularized that they have become passé. His flirtations with reggae on "Fred, the Rasta Man," "Who Remembers," and a Sly and Robbie–influenced cover of "Bad Boys" are fascinating and make Frank sound like the prairie's answer to Black Uhuru.

what to buy next: What's His Name? ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1994, prod. Keith Frank, Floyd Soileau) was Frank's first recording as leader. The band is tight and very much in sync with their leader. He covers a couple of classic Boozoo Chavis tunes ("Motor Dude Special" and "Zydeco Hee Haw") and demonstrates that he can play them with all the power and spunk of a 21-year-old.

the rest:

Movin' on Up! ♪♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1995)
Only the Strong Survive ♪♪♪♪ (Maison De Soul, 1996)

worth searching for: On Let's Dance: Preston Frank and His Zydeco Family Band ♪♪♪♪ (Lanor Records, 1991, prod. Lee Lavergne), Keith Frank helps his father out by playing the guitar and contributing vocals.

influences:

◀◀ Beau Jocque, Boozoo Chavis, Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin

▶▶ Zydeco Force, Chris Ardoin, Geno Delafose

Jared Snyder

Bob Franke

Born July 25, 1947, in Hamtramck, MI.

A spiritual thread runs though the songs of singer-songwriter Bob Franke. An influential presence on the Cambridge and Boston folk scene for more than two decades, Franke is one of contemporary acoustic music's most-covered tunesmiths. Garnet Rogers, John McCutcheon, David Wilcox, Lui Collins, June Tabor, Tony Rice, Claudia Schmidt, and Peter, Paul and Mary are among the many artists who have covered such Franke songs as "The Great Storm Is Over," "Hard Love," "For Real," "Thanksgiving Eve," and "Beggars to God." Growing up in the suburbs of Detroit, Franke began playing guitar and writing songs at the age of 14. As an English literature student at the University of Michigan in the mid-1960s, he became absorbed by the folk scene centered around the Ark, a folk club in Ann Arbor. He continued to perform as a street musician after moving to Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1969 to attend the Episcopal Theological School. While he eventually dropped out of the school, his musical career has continued to grow. Although he supported his aspirations with full-time work at a candy company in Salem, Massachusetts, until the late 1980s, Franke continued to spread his musical message. His 1976 debut album, Love Can't Be Bitter All the Time, was followed by a memorable live recording, One Evening In Chicago, in 1983. Franke has subsequently released three albums on Flying Fish and two on the Rounder-distributed Daring Records. In 1978, he helped organize a folk music coffeehouse, Saturday Night in Marblehead, at the Church of St. Andrew in Marblehead, Massachusetts. Twelve years later, he was commissioned by the ODC Dance Company of San Francisco to compose the songs for a ballet, The Velveteen Rabbit .

what to buy: In This Night ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991, prod. Darleen Wilson) is a powerful fusion of spirituality and acoustic folk- and blues-rooted melodies. Franke's expressive acoustic and National steel guitar playing and baritone vocals are enhanced by such Boston-area musicians as Richard Gates (bass), Lorraine Lee (harp), Liz Hammil (harmonica), Martin Grosswendt (lead electric and acoustic guitars and dobro), Billy Conway of Morphine (drums), and background vocalists Rod MacDonald, Geoff Bartley, and Catherine David. In addition to Franke's interpretation of his oft-covered tune "Thanksgiving Eve" and his gutsy sci-fi ballad "Invasion of the Money Snatchers," the album includes "A Velveteen Love Song," one of the songs he wrote for a ballet interpretation of The Velveteen Rabbit. "I'm a Mainframe, Baby" is a computer-aged satire set to an acoustic blues shuffle.

what to buy next: For Real ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986, prod. John Miller) demonstrates the potency of Franke's songwriting. While he shows his skill at writing love songs ("Christine") and humor ("Fuji Blues"), he makes his most lasting impression with his original interpretations of his now-classic tunes "For Real" and "Beggars to God."

the rest:
Love Can't Be Bitter All the Time ♪♪ (Fretless, 1976)
One Evening in Chicago ♪♪½ (Great Divide, 1983)
Brief Histories ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1989)
The Heart of the Flower ♪♪♪ (Daring, 1995)
Long Roads, Short Visits ♪♪♪ (Daring, 1997)

worth searching for: A live recording of Franke's "The Great Storm Is Over," recorded during Christine Lavin's singer/songwriter retreat on Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts, is included on Follow That Road ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1994).

influences:
◀◀ Mississippi John Hurt, Tom Paxton, Bob Gibson, Steve Goodman, Christianity
▶▶ Geoff Bartley, Lorraine Lee, Noel Paul Stookey, Richard Shindell

Craig Harris

Alasdair Fraser

Born May 14, 1955, in Clackmannan, Scotland.

Alasdair Fraser's versatility has made him one of the most well-traveled and sought-after fiddlers Scotland has ever produced. Fraser's fingers soar over the strings with finesse, while his bowing produces a sound so expressive, you could almost swear his fiddle has voice and is singing. His great love of Scotland's traditional music shines through as he plays familiar reels, strathspeys, and airs that delight listeners around the world. Saying Fraser is an award-winning fiddler hardly does him justice. He won the Open competition of the Scottish National Mod Fiddle Championship two years in a row, and has since won similar national Scottish fiddling competitions in other countries, including the U.S. and Canada. He has appeared on television programs such as CBS Sunday Morning, been heard on radio's A Prairie Home Companion, and played on the soundtracks of such movies as The Last of the Mohicans and The Spitfire Grill. Fraser has performed and recorded with a variety of virtuoso performers, including Chris Norman, Tim Gorman, Jean Redpath, Itzhak Perlman, Twila Paris, and Derek Bell. He is not only a fine performer and musician, but also excels at music composition, especially evident on his album Dawn Dance. His teaching skills are displayed through his two summer fiddle programs and his attendance workshops at numerous Scottish Festivals. In order to teach the art of Scottish fiddling, Fraser uses his deeply felt Scottish heritage, his wry sense of humor, and his amazing ability to encourage others.

what to buy: On Dawn Dance ♪♪♪♪ (Culburnie, 1995), Fraser displays his amazing flair for composition. Entirely original work, this album boasts the unusual claim of being new music that unquestionably carries with it the traditional Scottish feel. Fraser is joined by a host of excellent musicians, including Eric Rigler on bagpipes and Chris Norman on flutes, who perform beautifully together. Particularly inspired is "Independence Trail/Galen's Arrival," commemorating the arrival of his son, Galen, into his life. This album won the INDIE Award for "Celtic Album of 1995."

what to buy next: The Driven Bow ♪♪♪♪ (Culburnie, 1988, prod. Alasdair Fraser, Jody Stecher) is a delightful collection of traditional tunes of Scotland and Nova Scotia. Fraser teams up with guitarist Jody Stecher to recreate a portion of Scottish and Cape Breton tradition which invites listeners to get up and dance. Fraser and a cast of excellent musicians, Eric Rigler and Chris Norman included, make up the wonderful ensemble Skyedance. Their album, Way out to Hope Street ♪♪♪♪ (Culburnie, 1997), features a delightful selection of mostly original tunes, beautifully arranged for fiddle, pipes, flutes, keyboards, bass, and percussion.

what to avoid: The North Road ♪♪ (Sona Gaia, 1989, prod. Billy Oskay, Alasdair Fraser, Paul Machlis) has more of a New Age feel than any of Fraser's other work, which leaves it feeling a little hollow, despite some excellent tunes and performances.

the rest:
Portrait of a Scottish Fiddler ♪♪♪ (Brownrigg, 1984/Culburnie, 1996)
Skyedance ♪♪♪ (Culburnie, 1986)

influences:
Iain Fraser, Buddy MacMaster, Willie Fernie, Paul Machlis
Bonnie Rideout, Natalie McMaster, Ashley MacIsaac

Jo Hughey Morrison

Gail Fratar

See: Peter Kessler & Gail Fratar

Free Hot Lunch!

Formed 1985, in Madison, WI. Disbanded 1991.

Jeff Berg, guitars, vocals; John Corning, guitar, mandolin, electric guitar, vocals; Jeff Laramie, guitar, vocals.

Madison, Wisconsin, is more than a thousand miles from an ocean. But that didn't stop harmony-singing trio Free Hot Lunch! from sounding like a Jimmy Buffett ensemble with a sense of humor. Beach Boys–like vocals, surf guitars, and lyrical absurdity gave the group one of the quirkiest approaches to acoustic-based music. Accompanied by such Midwest musicians as Randy Sabien (violin) and Peter Deakman (bass), the trio produced two hilarious recordings. In addition to applying their wit to Buffett-like themes, including the joys of drinking ("Tequila Sheila" and "I Hate to Wake up Sober in Nebraska") and ocean life ("Home of the Whales"), the trio poked harmless fun at sexuality ("Sex in a Volcano" and "Sex by Mail"). "Penguin Love," the title track of their 1986 album, ponders how penguins kiss.

what to buy: The off-the-wall concert antics of Free Hot Lunch! are captured on their wacky album Eat This ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1990, prod. Lee Crooks). Although it opens with an uplifting version of John Sebastian's folk-swing tune "Lovin' You," the album successfully spotlights the group's songwriters. Jeff Berg emerges as a somewhat-serious wordsmith on such songs as "Home of the Whales" and "Barfly" while ditties like "Sidewalks on Parade," "Sex in a Volcano," "Touch Tone Lullaby," and "Hymn #694" help establish John Corning as the trio's comic backbone.

what to buy next: Jimmy Buffett–style surf-folk and comic vision are combined on Penguin Love ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986, prod. Free Hot Lunch!, Lee Crooks), an album that shows the trio at their most absurd. With instrumental support from Jeff Eckels (bass), Randy Sabien (violin), Todd Steward (drums, percussion), John Torrell (drums), Kathy Mueller (keyboards), and Frank Furillo (harmonica), the group pays tongue-in-jowl homage to cookies ("Oreos"), a dividend-paying tree ("The Money Tree"), and the joys of romance ("Make Love Stay") and sex ("Sex by Mail"). Avian life is humorously celebrated during "Be a Duck Tonight" and the title track.

influences:
Jimmy Buffett, the Beach Boys, Bonzo Dog Band, the Lovin' Spoonful Uncle Bonsai, the Foremen, Moxy Früvous, Christine Lavin

Craig Harris

Alan Freeman

Born June 11, 1943, in Brooklyn, NY.

Alan Freeman was born in Brooklyn but made his way to West Virginia in 1974 and never looked back. A year or so after his arrival, he heard Richard Fariña play dulcimer and was hooked. Not willing to settle for the conventional limitations of the instrument, he added a fifth string and developed a tuning that enables him to play a full chromatic scale in several different keys. This makes the dulcimer more versatile and takes it beyond the realm of the modal, mountain sound. Freeman's taste in music runs from traditional Appalachian fiddle tunes to Texas swing to ragtime and beyond. He makes his home in Charleston, where he plays occasional local concerts with fiddler Jenny Allinder.

what's available: Don't let the title fool you—The Mountain Dulcimer ♪♪♪ (JMP Records, 1996, prod. Jim Martin) is not just a collection of scary modal mountain tunes. Freeman is quite capable of those, but this disc includes well-known traditional tunes like "Blackberry Blossom," not-so-well-known ones like "Battle of the Somme," and ragtime tunes like "Dill Pickle Rag." There's an instrumental version of the Carter Family's "Bully of the Town" and even the Peruvian melody "El Condor Pasa" combined in medley with Irving Berlin's "Blue Skies" (it works). Freeman's belief that the mountain dulcimer can play any kind of music with just about any instrument is confirmed on this recording. He's assisted by flat-pick guitarist Robin Kessinger on several pieces, by Mark Payne on banjo, and by Dave Bing on fiddle—West Virginians, all. "Seneca Square Dance," with Bing on fiddle, is especially nice. There's one composition by Freeman. Some of this is high-energy, hard-driving music; some of it is slow and contemplative; all of it is enjoyable. This disc might be hard to find in record stores but is available from JMP Productions, PO Box 152, St. Albans, WV 25711.

influences:

◀◀ Richard Fariña, Glenn Smith, Norman Blake, J.P. Fraley

▶▶ David Schnaufer, Don Pedi

Dave Shombert

Freewill Savages

See: Carol Elizabeth Jones and James Leva

The Freight Hoppers

Formed 1993, in Bryson City, NC.

Frank Lee, banjo, vocals; David Bass, fiddle; Cary Fridley, guitar, vocals; Hanne Jorgensen, bass.

Everything about the Freight Hoppers suggests motion, starting with the group's name and the title of their album, Where'd You Come from, Where'd You Go? But there's a part of them that's more about stasis—preserving old-time music, the pre–World War II style out of which bluegrass and country later grew. Fortunately, they're hardly stuck-in-amber puritans about it, billing themselves as "acoustic music that rocks." Since emerging on Garrison Keillor's Prairie Home Companion in 1996 (after placing second in a national talent contest for people from small towns with fewer than 2,000 residents), the Freight Hoppers have done as much as any contemporary group to keep the old stuff alive.

what's available: Where'd You Come from, Where'd You Go? ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996, prod. John Herrmann) is as scrupulously detailed as a Library of Congress field recording. It includes extensive liner notes and credits on the origins of its 16 songs, and even has fiddle and banjo keys for each song. The Freight Hoppers tend to jack up the tempos quite a bit, rendering "Cotton Eyed Joe" at a frantic pace that will leave you breathless. Other highlights include the Coon Creek Girls' "How Many Biscuits Can You Eat This Morning?" and the album-closing a cappella spiritual "Bright Morning Stars." Though hardly groundbreaking, the Freight Hoppers render everything with abundant energy and skill.

influences:

◀◀ The Carter Family, the Red Clay Ramblers, the Skillet Lickers, Uncle Dave Macon

▶▶ Primitive Characters, Red Mountain White Trash

David Menconi

French, Frith, Kaiser and Thompson

See: Richard Thompson

Gideon Freudmann

Born March 8, 1962, in Saratoga Springs, NY.

The cello has been turned into an expressive folk-pop instrument by Gideon Freudmann. His four solo albums have spanned inventive, Beatle-esque instrumentals and unique interpretations of such classics as "Somewhere over the Rainbow," as well as lyrical songs that recall the 1960s art-rock of Tom Rapp's Pearls Before Swine. The youngest of five children, Freudmann, who grew up in Storrs, Connecticut, studied classical music and cello as a child In his early teens, and became absorbed with songwriting. Temporarily dropping the cello, he began playing piano. He didn't return to the cello until he helped form a high school rock band. He continued to study the instrument as a performance major at the University of Connecticut. Although Freudmann moved to Boston for a year, he relocated to the secluded woods of western Massachusetts, where he still lives. In 1987, he recorded an album, Holiday Clocks, with a cello and guitar duo. As a solo performer, Freudmann recorded several self-produced cassettes and a CD, Fellini's Martini, that were released on his own independent record label, CelloBop. His most recent albums, released by Gadfly, have reflected different sides of his musical persona. Banking Left spotlighted his songwriting with his cello accompanied by guitar, banjo, piano, percussion, and bass. Cellobotomy is an all-instrumental mixture of solo cello pieces and tunes with overdubbed cello, steel drums, guitar, and percussion. Adobe Dog House combines songs and instrumentals.

what to buy: Adobe Dog House ♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1997, prod. Gideon Freudmann) is Freudmann's widest reaching outing. In addition to provocative instrumentals that he performs solo by overdubbing cello, keyboards, guitar, and percussion, he shows the dark side of his emotions with five original tunes. He sings of being in a "state of turmoil, upheaval, and unrest" on "Geography," and of living in a "fantasy world of my own" on "Rhapsody Hill."

what to buy next: For those who have trouble with Freudmann's vocals, Cellobotomy ♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1995, prod. Gideon Freudmann) is an all-instrumental romp that extends the possibilities of the cello.

the rest:
Holiday Clocks ♪♪ (Hopewell, 1987)
Wet Asparagus ♪♪ (CelloBop, 1990) (cassette only)
The Waldo Variations ♪♪ (CelloBop, 1991) (cassette only)
Banking Left ♪♪ (Gadfly, 1995)

worth searching for: Freudmann recorded an instrumental 45 RPM single, "The Raging Peasants," on the obscure Don't Records label in 1992.

influences:
◀◀ Penguin Cafe Orchestra, Pearls Before Swine, Dan Hicks, Mose Allison, the Beatles

▶▶ Deb Pasternak, Peter Mulvey, Dee Carstensen

Craig Harris

Glenn Frey

See: The Eagles

Freyda and Acoustic AttaTude

Formed as Freyda and the Attaboys, 1991. Disbanded c. 1995.

Freyda Epstein, violin, viola, vocals; Ralph Gordon, bass violin; Bob Vasile, guitar, cittern, vocals.

A fanciful fusion of folk, classical, and jazz might be the best description for the music of Freyda and Acoustic AttaTude. Freyda Epstein's earthy voice combines with the sensuous strains of violin, bass violin, and guitar to create compelling and memorable music. With one of the best voices in the business, Epstein has mastered not only the highly expressive use of her voice, but also the ability to write meaningful songs and arrangements to best display that talent. Ralph Gordon's bass violin and Bob Vasile's guitar and backing vocals are the perfect backdrop for Epstein's skills, and the collaboration of the three talents has proven to be an exciting mix. Epstein and Gordon are no strangers to creating beautiful music together, having formerly worked together for a number of years with Trapezoid. Pulling on the folk roots of that experience, they teamed up with Vasile (formerly of the Pratie Heads) and apparently found working together highly inspiring. The resulting work is a creative, imaginative, and thoroughly enjoyable mix of styles of acoustic music. Although the group only made one recording, they attained high critical acclaim for their many performances at such venues as the Winnipeg Folk Festival, the 1992 Folk Alliance Conference, and Summerfolk.

what's available: The group's only album, Midnight at Cabell Hall ♪♪♪♪ (Red House Records, 1993), is special not only because of the inventive music, but also because of the way it was recorded. Using a stereo microphone technique, they attempted to capture the essence of the instruments interacting with each other, rather than just capturing each instrument's individual sound. The result is a bit like being in the concert hall, coming across more alive than most studio recordings. The depth of their work is well displayed on this album, from the rhythmic instrumental music of "Kopanitsa" to the thought-provoking song "Potter's Wheel." The eclectic selection even includes a Telemann sonata in a chamber-music style. Despite its diversity, the album flows together nicely, meant to be heard as a whole.

solo outings:
Freyda Epstein:
Globalullabies ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Lorraine Duisit, Magpie, Vicky Pratt-Keating, Béla Fleck, Trapezoid

▶▶ Paul Reisler, Jem Moore & Ariane Lydon, John McCutcheon

see also: Trapezoid

Jo Hughey Morrison

Kinky Friedman

Born Richard Friedman, October 31, 1944, in Palestine, TX.

Everything about Kinky Friedman is a joke. He's a Jew born on Halloween in Palestine—Texas, that is. His take on country music is both reverent and irreverent. A University of Texas grad with a degree in psychology, Friedman opted to psych out the country music establishment with his band Kinky Friedman and the Texas Jewboys. The band released three albums during the 1970s, filled with Friedman's razor wit and affectionate nod to Texas swing and traditional country. The song titles alone were worth a good laugh—"Ride 'Em Jewboy," "Let Saigons Be Bygones," "They Ain't Making Jews Like Jesus Anymore," and his signatory "Asshole from El Paso," renamed "Lasso from El Paso" to appease delicate sensitivities. Friedman's popularity didn't stretch out much beyond the Texas border, though he was a favorite on college campuses across the country. He incurred the wrath of many a stiff-necked country music exec, but Friedman and the Jewboys were also invited to perform at the venerable Grand Ole Opry in 1975 and later toured as part of Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue. His reign of terror ended with the 1970s as Friedman turned his attentions to writing detective novels in which he's the main character. His first eight books have been translated into 14 languages; his ninth, The Love Song of J. Edgar Hoover, was published in late 1996.

what to buy: Fortunately, a recent revival of interest in Friedman's off-color music has resulted in the reissue of two of his first three albums and two new, mostly live recordings. He was at the peak of his powers and his cultish popularity when Kinky Friedman ♪♪♪ (Varese Vintage, 1974, prod. Kinky Friedman) came out. It features some of his most incisive, smarmy humor, with such songs as "Homo Erectus," "Something's Wrong with the Beaver," and "They Ain't Makin' Jews Like Jesus Anymore," plus guest shots from fellow mavericks Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings, who were only slightly more well-known at the time.

what to buy next: Aficionados might want to track down Old Testaments & New Revelations ♪♪½ (Fruit of the Tune, 1992, prod. Kinky Friedman, Chinga Chavin). The anthology features mostly live recordings and is a fairly uneven career retrospective, stretching from his first recording, "Schwinn 24," in 1964 to an in-studio performance of "They Ain't Makin' Jews Like Jesus Anymore" on the Don Imus radio show.

the rest:
Sold American ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1973)
From One Good American to Another ♪♪ (Fruit of the Tune, 1995)

worth searching for: Arguably his best album, Lasso from El Paso ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1976, prod. Kinky Friedman) is also one of the hardest to find. It's out of print and hasn't been reissued domestically on CD. Since there's not much call for Friedman's offbeat music, it might stay that way.

influences:
- Bob Wills & the Texas Playboys, Raymond Chandler, Doug Sahm
- Austin Lounge Lizards

Doug Pullen

Lefty Frizzell

Born William Orville Frizzell, March 31, 1928, in Corsicana, TX. Died July 19, 1975.

Before George Jones and Merle Haggard, there was Lefty Frizzell, whose famous "blue yodel" and curlicued vocal style has influenced generations of country singers who followed him, including Jones, Haggard, Willie Nelson, Garth Brooks, Alan Jackson, and Randy Travis. Frizzell got his nickname after a schoolyard fight in the Texas oil town where he grew up. Determined to be a country singer, Frizzell cut his teeth on the music of Jimmie Rodgers, Ernest Tubb, and such honky-tonk artists of the 1940s as Ted Daffan. He parlayed a demo session at a Dallas studio into a deal with Columbia Records, which released the first of his many signature songs, "If You've Got the Money, I've Got the Time," to popular acclaim in 1950. It was the beginning of a revolution in country music, as Frizzell's resonant honky-tonk sound replaced the more traditional, unadorned vocal style common at the time. At the height of his popularity during the early 1950s, Frizzell became the first artist to place four songs on Billboard's Top 10 country singles charts. Immensely popular throughout the decade, he made some bad career moves—like leaving the Grand Ole Opry shortly after joining—that derailed his momentum for a few years. But the "Lefty Sound" didn't disappear for long, with such songs as "The Long Black Veil" and "Saginaw, Michigan" reviving his commercial fortunes and returning him to the good graces of Nashville's power elite. After the mid-1960s, Frizzell—whose younger brother David formed a popular 1970s duo with Dottie West's daughter, Shelly—seldom enjoyed the kind of commercial success his legend would suggest. But his name and influence have lived on, thanks to the dozens of singers who've cited him (Willie Nelson cut an album of his music) and recorded his songs.

what to buy: With so few of his records available now, it's best to pick up The Essential Lefty Frizzell: Look What Thoughts Will Do ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1996, prod. various), as comprehensive a collection of the influential singer's work as you'll find on these shores. The 34-track, two-CD set rounds up his biggest hits and a few B-sides, including "If You've Got the Money, I've Got the Time," "Saginaw, Michigan," and "The Long Black Veil."

what to buy next: The archival Rhino label does a nice job of summarizing Frizzell's chart hits on one 18-song disc with The Best of Lefty Frizzell ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1991, compilation prod. James Austin), which features re-mastered versions of 14 hits and four B-sides recorded between 1950 and 1965.

the rest:
Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1987)
American Originals ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1993)
20 Golden Hits ♪♪♪ (TeeVee, 1995)
That's the Way Love Goes: The Final Recordings of Lefty Frizzell ♪♪♪ (Varese Vintage, 1996)

worth searching for: The German label Bear Family, known for its exhaustive collections and reissues, has assembled a dozen CDs' worth of Frizzell's recordings into the sprawling box set Life Like Poetry ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1985, prod. various), which includes just about everything he ever recorded.

influences:
◀◀ Jimmie Rodgers, Ernest Tubb, Ted Daffan
▶▶ Merle Haggard, George Jones, Randy Travis, Garth Brooks, Willie Nelson

Doug Pullen

The Front Porch String Band

See: Claire Lynch

Front Range

Formed late 1980s, in Denver, CO.

Bob Amos, guitar, lead vocals; Mike Lantz, mandolin, vocals; Peter Schwimmer, banjo (left band, 1989); Ron Lynam, banjo, vocals (1989–present); Duane Webster, bass (left band, 1986); Pat Carbone, bass (1986–91); Bob Dick, bass, vocals (1991–present).

One of the more fascinating bluegrass success stories of the early 1990s, Front Range parlayed a pair of self-distributed albums (So Many Pathways and The Road Home), extensive regional touring, radio airplay, and a wealth of distinctive original material into a significant national presence and a high-profile recording deal with Sugar Hill. The Colorado band, noted for its tradition-oriented sound, the powerful banjo picking of Ron Lynam, tight vocal-trio harmonies, and the songwriting of Bob Amos, has since recorded four critically acclaimed albums.

what to buy: Back to Red River ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1993, prod. Charles Sawtelle, Front Range), the most fully realized of the band's albums, seamlessly blends traditional bluegrass power, Western themes and material, and Bob Amos originals into a distinctive package. The title song and "The Hills That I Call Home" received considerable—for a bluegrass band—radio airplay.

what to buy next: The New Frontier ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1992, prod. Charles Sawtelle, Front Range), the band's national debut, showcased original material by Amos, Lynam, and Lantz alongside classics by Charlie Monroe and the Stanley Brothers. One Beautiful Day ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Front Range), which features seven Bob Amos originals, is the band's first all-gospel recording.

the rest:
Ramblin' on My Mind ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Hot Rize, the Stanley Brothers
▶▶ Loose Ties, the Left Hand String Band

Jon Hartley Fox

The Fugs

Formed 1965, in New York, NY. Disbanded 1969. Re-formed 1984 and 1994.

Tuli Kuferberg, vocals, percussion (1965–69); Ed Sanders, guitar, vocals (1965–69, 1984–present); Ken Weaver, drums, vocals (1965–66); John Anderson, bass (1965–67); Vinnie Leary, guitar (1965–67); Pete Stampfel, guitar, fiddle (1965–66); Steve Weber, guitar (1965–66); Lee Crabtree, keyboards (1966–67); Pete Kearney, guitar (1966–67); Charles Larkey, bass (1967–68); Dan Kootch, guitar (1967); Ken Pine, guitar (1967–68); Bill Wolf, bass (1968); Bob Mason, drums (1968); Richard Lee, organ (1968); Howard Johnson, tuba, saxophone (1968); Julius Watkins, french horn (1968).

The Fugs were possibly the first punk band of the rock era. Hardly able to play instruments, the Fugs traded on a raw folk-rock sound that backed neo-beat poets Sanders and Kuferberg, who wrote most of the band's material. The songs went beyond drugs, sex, and anti-war paeans to deliberate filth ("Coca-Cola Douche") that was calculated to shock. Still, there was a method to its madness, grounded in the '50s beat scene. Poet Allen Ginsberg contributed to the Fugs' lyrics, and one of the few songs that received radio play, "How Sweet I Roamed from Field to Field," was an adaptation of a work by romantic poet William Blake.

what to buy: Of what remains available, The Fugs First Album ♪♪♪♪ (ESP, 1965/Fantasy, 1994, prod. Harry Smith) has plenty of antisocial sentiments via "Slum Goddess," "I Couldn't Get High," and more.

what to buy next: The Fugs Second Album ♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1994, prod. Harry Smith) is pretty much the same, though a little less self-concerned with "Kill for Peace" and "Morning, Morning," their most popular ballad.

the rest:
Live from the '60s ♪♪♪ (Big Beat, 1995)
Refuse to Be Burnt Out ♪♪♪½ (Big Beat, 1995)
The Real Woodstock Festival ♪♪♪ (Big Beat, 1995)
No More Slavery ♪♪♪ (Big Beat, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Allen Ginsberg
▶▶ Holy Modal Rounders

Lawrence Gabriel

Jesse Fuller

Born March 12, 1896, in Jonesboro, GA. Died January 29, 1976, in Oakland, CA.

Jesse Fuller, who sang and played such instruments as guitar, harp, kazoo, and "fotdella," a stove-shaped percussive device made of foot pedals and padded hammers, was the living bridge between two eras. He grew up under grim, tough conditions, having been "smoked over a fire in a gunnysack, not even told of his mother's death in 1903 until a month after the event," according to 1958 liner notes. He lived long enough, though, to wander the country, settle in Los Angeles, become a musician in the 1950s, and record several albums. Many of his songs, including "San Francisco Bay Blues" and "Beat It on down the Line," inspired such Bay Area rockers as the Grateful Dead and Janis Joplin. He took advantage of the 1960s folk and blues revival, performing at coffeehouses and festivals throughout Europe and the U.S. until his death.

what to buy: With yodeling and moaning reminiscent of both Leadbelly and country singer Merle Travis, Fuller's classic Jazz, Folk Songs, Spirituals & Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Good Time Jazz, 1958/Original Blues Classics, 1993, prod. Lester Koenig) is full of astounding guitar picking and a rhythmic style that unquestionably influenced rock 'n' roll. The instrumental "Tiger Rag" and Fuller's spooky, lively take on "Stagolee" are among the many highlights.

what to buy next: San Francisco Bay Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Contemporary/Fantasy, 1963, prod. Lester Koenig), a clear influence on country-leaning 1960s rock bands, contains Fuller's happy-but-sad take on the classic "John Henry" and his own title track.

the rest:
The Lone Cat Sings and Plays Jazz, Folk Songs, Spirituals, and Blues ♪♪♪ (Good Time Jazz, 1961)
Favorites ♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1965)
Brother Lowdown (Fantasy, 1992)

worth searching for: Where "Take This Hammer" opens Jazz, Folk Songs . . . on an immediately familiar note, Frisco Bound ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1993), a collection of recordings from 1955 and 1967, focuses on more obscure—but just as wonderful—acoustic blues and country songs. Standouts are the previously unreleased "I'm Going to Sit down at the Welcome Table," and the recollection of wandering the U.S., "Leaving Memphis, 'Frisco Bound."

influences:
◀◀ Merle Travis, Jimmie Rodgers, Leadbelly, Bukka White, Son House, Charley Patton, Emmett Miller, Mississippi Sheiks
▶▶ The Grateful Dead, Janis Joplin, Bob Dylan, Screamin' Jay Hawkins, Hank Williams, Rev. Gary Davis

Steve Knopper

Tret Fure

Born March 18, 1951, in IA.

Tret Fure has collaborated musically with singer-songwriter Cris Williamson as engineer, co-producer, and guitarist on Williamson's recordings and tours since the early 1980s. A dynamic pop-rock performer on her own, Fure has recorded four hard-driving solo albums: Tret Fure, Time Turns the Moon, Edges of the Heart, and Terminal Hold. Raised in Illinois and northern Michigan, Fure attended the University of California in Berkeley. Beginning her musical career at the age of 19, she toured and recorded with British pop-rocker Spencer Davis in the late 1970s. Recording her self-titled debut album in 1973, produced by Lowell George of Little Feat, Fure toured as opening act for Poco, Yes, and the J. Geils Band. Switching over to the production side of recording, in 1981 Fure secured a position as a recording engineer with Olivia Records and began working with Williamson. In addition to collaborating on the albums Postcards from Paradise and Between the Covers, Fure produced, engineered, and played guitar on several of Williamson's solo albums, including Blue Rider, Live At Carnegie Hall, and Prairie Fire.

old time fiddle

Old Time fiddling encompasses an amazingly wide variety of styles! Some (like Earl Johnson or Gid Tanner) are extremely rough and rowdy, while others (like Buddy Thomas or Benton Flippen) are smoother and more melodic. What these disparate fiddlers all have in common is a steamroller rhythm, which is what makes the tunes so danceable. Of course there are even exceptions to that, like the evocative fiddling of Posey Rorer with Charlie Poole, which somehow manages to be both delicate and sturdy at the same time. Not all old time tunes are fast breakdowns, either. There are many other rhythms and tempos, including waltzes, polkas, rags, and airs. Old time fiddlers often like to use open tunings in addition to the standard GDAE; this adds evocative overtones to the sound of the fiddle, and allows adjacent strings to be touched upon by the bow, which adds to the polyrhythmic aspect of old time fiddling. Some old time fiddlers, like Tommy Jarrell, bow with many short strokes, while others, like Ralph Blizzard, favor a long-bow technique. There's also a lot of variation in intonation, especially among older fiddlers who grew up prior to the days of radio and phonograph records, when regional styles were more distinct.

Suzy Thompson

Edges of the Heart ♪♪♪ (Second Wave, 1986)
(With Cris Williamson) Postcards from Paradise ♪♪♪ (Olivia, 1993)

influences:

Spencer Davis, the J. Geils Band, Little Feat, Joan Jett

Laura Love, Ani DiFranco

see also: Cris Williamson

Craig Harris

Tony Furtado

Born October 18, 1967, in Oakland, CA.

Tony Furtado twice (1987 and 1991) won the national Banjo Championship and played with Laurie Lewis & Grant Street from 1987 to 1990. Furtado has been sporadically picking with Sugarbeat since that time. He also spent time with the Rounder Records Banjo Extravaganza tour, beginning in 1990.

what to buy: On Full Circle ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Stuart Duncan), Furtado assembled a first-rate group of musicians—including David Grier, Stuart Duncan, Jerry Douglas, and John Reischman—for 12 songs ranging from traditional to contemporary and relying on a full ensemble sound. Highlights include John Jackson's blues guitar and vocals on "Trouble in Mind" and Furtado's duet with clawhammer banjoist Mark Schatz on "Turned Around."

what to buy next: Within Reach ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Jerry Douglas, Mike Marshall, Tony Furtado) finds Furtado still taking the banjo to new frontiers with a collection of originals, traditional songs, and an inspired cover of the Beatles' "I Will," with Alison Krauss handling the lead vocals.

the rest:

Swamped ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
(With others) Rounder Banjo Extravaganza: Live! ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991) Roll My Blues Away ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997)

influences:

Laurie Lewis & Grant Street, Sugarbeat

Alison Brown, Scott Vestal, Tony Trischka

Douglas Fulmer

what to buy: Fure and Williamson's second full collaboration, Between the Covers ♪♪♪½ (Wolf Moon/Goldenrod, 1997, prod. Cris Williamson, Tret Fure), documents both their love for each other and the brilliance of their harmonious songs. The Williamson-penned tune "Honeymoon" captures the romance of their honeymoon in Taos. Fure's original song "To See the Light" is enhanced by the harmonies of the San Francisco–based choir Voicestra.

what to buy next: Time Turns the Moon ♪♪♪ (Olivia, 1991, prod. Tret Fure) is a powerful sampling of Fure's hard-rocking tunes.

the rest:

Tret Fure ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1973)
Terminal Hold ♪♪½ (Second Wave, 1984)

Fuzzy Mountain String Band

Formed mid-1960s. Disbanded 1973.

Dave Crowder, guitar (until 1969); JoAnn "Claire June" Stokes, guitar (until 1969); Malcolm Owen, fiddle; Dick Zaffron, fiddle, mandolin;

Eric Olson, banjo; Bobbie Thompson, guitar (1969–72); Vickie Owen, mountain dulcimer (1969–73); Blanton Owen, banjo (1969–73); Bill Hicks, fiddle (1970–73).

The Fuzzy Mountain String Band was born out of a scene of informal musical jam sessions that existed in Durham, North Carolina. Eventually these jam sessions turned into bands that proved to be important in the string band revival of the 1970s. The first important group was the Hollow Rock String Band, led by Alan Jabbour who now heads up the Folklife Center of the Library of Congress. In 1967 another band formation came out of these jam sessions when Dave Crowder, Dick Zaffron, Malcolm Owen, Eric Olson, and JoAnn Stokes got together and started calling themselves the Fuzzy Mountain String Band. The lineup of the band changed over the six-year period that the band was together, but the driving twin fiddle sound remained the same over their two-album history with then-upstart Rounder Records. The influence this "big band" string band (and the Highwoods String Band, for that matter) possessed can still be heard in many of the young old-time string bands at fiddlers conventions today. The Fuzzy Mountain String band had an ear for playing the music as it was played before any of us were even around.

what's available: Fuzzy Mountain String Band ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Fuzzy Mountain String Band) was compiled from their two out-of-print Rounder LPs, Fuzzy Mountain String Band and Summer Oaks & Porch. The CD contains 33 living, breathing old-time tunes that are heard often in jam sessions today.

influences:

- Tommy Jarrell, the Hollow Rock String Band, Kyle Creed, Fred Cockerham
- The Red Clay Ramblers, the Highwoods String Band

Steve Gardner

G

Jon Gailmor

Born late 1940s, in PA.

Shunning a career as a Seals and Crofts–like pop-folk performer, Jon Gailmor has built his reputation with environmentally minded children's songs and straight-ahead, acoustic guitar–based arrangements. His songs, including "Dirt!," "Edifice Complex!," and "Gonna Die with a Smile If It Kills Me," present complex subjects in an easy-to-understand format. The politically minded slant of Gailmor's songs comes naturally. The son of an outspoken reporter and radio talk show host of the 1930s and '40s who was blacklisted during the days of Communist Red baiting, Gailmor was raised on the music of Pete Seeger and Woody Guthrie. His sister, Wendy Newton, is the founder of the Green Linnet Record label. Although he recorded a heavily produced duo album, Peaceful Kingdom, during the early 1970s, he became frustrated by the pressures of the commercial record industry and moved to Europe, where he worked as a street musician. Shortly after his return to the United States, he moved to the hills of Vermont.

A radio show of children's music that he hosted served as Gailmor's introduction to the younger members of his audience. Although planned as a one-time event, the show was so successful that it was expanded into a weekly program, Just Kiddin', on a Burlington, Vermont, radio station. The title track of his album Dirt! received an honorary mention as Best Children's Song of 1984 from the National Academy of Independent Record Distributors. Gailmor's 1995 album, Childish Eyes, is an adult-oriented view inspired by his children Cathy, Aaron, and Maya.

what to buy: Gailmor's best work are the songs that he's written for the younger members of his audience. His most successful effort remains his 1984 album, Dirt! ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1982, prod. Doug Jaffe, Jon Gailmor). In addition to an uplifting version of Doris Penn's anthem, "How Can I Keep from Singing?" the collection showcases Gailmor's witty songwriting. "Edifice Complex" satirizes the loss of the natural habitat, while "Letters" voices children's fears of the boom and the Cold War. The title track is an ode to the childhood joys of getting dirty.

what to buy next: Gonna Die with a Smile If It Kills Me ♪♪♪½ (Fretless/Philo, 1980) was Gailmor's first solo album after returning from his self-imposed retreat to Europe. Besides adult-oriented songs like "Long Ago Lady/For the Love of Vermont" and "Last Sun," the album offered the first glimpse at his abilities to write and perform songs for youngsters. In addition to fun-filled interpretations of Leon Rosselson's "Jumbo the Elephant" and Greg Brown's "Rooty Toot Toot for the Moon," Gailmor serves up amusing originals, including "Randy and Ned Go to School," about two canines in search of an education, and the title track, which serves as the theme song for his children's music radio show.

what to avoid: Peaceful Kingdom was a major label attempt to transform folk-minded Gailmor into a pop-folk performer in competition with Seals and Crofts and Loggins and Messina. The result is regrettable with the over-production obscuring his unique talents.

the rest:
Passing Through ♪♪♪ (Green Mountain, 1979) Generations ♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1987)

influences:
◀◀ Arlo Guthrie, Greg Brown, Pete Seeger, Woody Guthrie
▶▶ Si Kahn, John McCutcheon

Craig Harris

Les & Gary Gallier

Formed 1987, in Springfield, MO.

Les Gallier (born March 29, 1951, in Tulsa, OK), mountain dulcimer, guitar, percussion; Gary Gallier (born January 23, 1949, in Tulsa, OK), mountain dulcimer, dulcette.

Les Gallier has been a musician, playing drums then guitar, since he was eight years old. His older brother, Gary, used to drive him to gigs. Gary started playing dulcimer at age 30 and built his first instrument out of 1/4-inch plywood. As his building improved, so did his playing, and he won the National Dulcimer Championship in 1987. He gave Les the third dulcimer he built, which hung on the wall for two to three years. Les finally started exploring the instrument with little or no help from Gary and eventually won the 1990 Winfield title on his own. They hold the distinction of being the only brothers to win the national title on the same instrument. They started playing together in 1987, meshing their quite individual dulcimer styles with Les's guitar prowess. They compose virtually all their own material, blending influences from classical, Irish, rock, jazz, and mountain styles. Despite Les's rock 'n' roll guitar background, his compositions for dulcimer have an almost classical flair while Gary's compositions mix elements of Irish music with jazz and an adventuresome attitude. Despite these individual differences, they have found wide acceptance for their music among traditional dulcimer players and are regularly featured as both a duo and as soloists at festivals and workshops throughout the Midwest and South.

what to buy: On the Wing ♪♪♪ (Dancing Thumb Music, 1993, prod. Les and Gary Gallier) is an album of original "new acoustic music" and features large doses of great dulcimer playing in combination with violin and cello (David Wilson of Kentucky Standard Band), dobro and mandolin (Bo Brown), bass (Mike Lindauer), Heart Drum (Ariane Lydon), Caxixi and Mawapu (Jem Moore), and/or guitar (Tia Kirwin). In this case, "new acoustic music" means a blend of influences from classical to jazz and from Gypsy to new age. This is a very nice album of exceptionally "hot" dulcimer playing.

what to buy next: Race to the Gate ♪♪♪ (Dancing Thumb, 1989, prod. Gary Gallier) is a double CD that combines an earlier cassette release, Crossed Roads ♪♪♪ (Dancing Thumb Music, 1986, prod. Gary Gallier), with a complete album of new material. It also features a large helping of original material by the Gallier brothers but adds several traditional fiddle tunes to the mix. Bo Brown on guitar, mandolin, and dobro and David Wilson on bass, fiddle, mandolin, cello, and piano again provide stellar support. The Gallier brothers' recordings are available from Dancing Thumb Music, P.O. Box 4922 G.S., Springfield, Missouri 65808.

influences:
◀◀ Jerry Rockwell, David Schnaufer
▶▶ Tull Glazener, Hollis Landrum

Neal Walters

Annie Gallup

Born in MI.

Annie Gallup was born in Michigan, lived for a time in Seattle, and now lives in Asheville, North Carolina. If geography teaches the traveler, Gallup has learned from her travels. Her songs can't be pinned down to a particular genre or regional style. An extraordinary lyricist whose songs read like poetry, she sings in a rich alto that carries an undertone of regret. But she's no sob sister; her melodies are often lively and fluid, and her acoustic guitar playing matches them well.

what's available: Cause and Effect ♪♪♪♪♪ (Flyaway Hair, 1994, prod. Bruce Jay Paskow, Barry Gruber) has one of Gallup's best lyrics, the chorus of "Grandma's Best China," in which birds sing "cup-of-tea, cup-of-tea, sugar sugar, cheer-up." Backbone ♪♪♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME CD, 1996, prod. Annie Gallup, David Lange) has even more charming lyrics that link constellations and freckles, love and condom dispensers, and passion and Rapid City. Courage My Love ♪♪♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME CD, 1998, prod. David Seitz) moves Gallup closer to the beat-folk of Rickie Lee Jones, and the style suits her well. You can hear the fun behind "Anything Is Possible"—and for Gallup, the sentiment makes an apt motto.

influences:
◀◀ Dave Van Ronk, Paul Simon, Joni Mitchell, Victoria Williams

marvin gaster 303

Rachel Bissex, Patrice O'Neill

Pamela Murray Winters

Beppe Gambetta

Born in Italy.

Genoa, Italy's Beppe Gambetta has developed a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic as one of today's most distinctive and accomplished acoustic guitarists. His stylistic range is broad, mixing flatpicking, fingerstyle guitar, and a variety of unusual tunings. A fine, if understated, vocalist, Gambetta led noted Italian country band Red Wine before branching out on his solo career.

what to buy: A series of duets, mostly on bluegrass classics, recorded around the country with the likes of David Grier, Alan Munde, Dan Crary, and Norman Blake, Dialogs ♪♪♪½ (Alcazar, 1995, prod. Beppe Gambetta) shows Gambetta more than capable of holding his own in this fast company. Highlights include the duets with Danny Weiss (on Gambetta's "Slow Creek") and a slightly tongue in cheek version of "All You Need Is Love" with Mike Marshall.

what to buy next: Good News from Home ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Mike Marshall, Rob Griffin), a soulful, low-key album, blends Gambetta's continental roots with some hot bluegrass picking seasoned with a nice mixture of traditional and traditional-sounding Mediterranean material. Gambetta sings two tunes in Italian and two in English.

the rest:

(With Tony Trischka) Alone and Together ♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1994)

influences:

Doc Watson, Clarence White, Tony Rice

David Grier, Scott Nygaard

Michael Parrish

Art Garfunkel

Born Arthur Garfunkel, November 5, 1941, in New York, NY.

The masterful harmony singer with Paul Simon in Simon and Garfunkel through the 1960s, Art Garfunkel's solo albums concentrate on his main asset—his choir-boy voice. That worked up to a point. Without Simon as an artistic foil and songwriter, Garfunkel's work reached an artistic dead-end during the '80s.

what to buy: Garfunkel ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1990, prod. various) is a best-of that covers the bases and includes all his Top 40 hits save 1974's "I Shall Sing."

what to buy next: Angel Clare ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1973, prod. Roy Halee, Art Garfunkel) is his most powerful solo recording, with nice versions of Van Morrison's "I Shall Sing" and Randy Newman's "Old Man." Watermark ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1977, prod. Phil Ramone) is a worthy collaboration with writer Jimmy Webb.

what to avoid: Steer clear of Lefty ♪ (Columbia, 1988, prod. various), if for no other reason than his treacly version of "When a Man Loves a Woman."

the rest:

Breakaway ♪♪ (Columbia, 1975)
Fate for Breakfast ♪♪ (Columbia, 1979)
Scissors Cut ♪½ (Columbia, 1981)
Up 'til Now ♪♪ (Sony, 1993)
Across America ♪♪½ (Discovery, 1997)
Songs from a Parent to a Child ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1997)

influences:

Sam Cooke, Judy Garland, Beach Boys

Stephen Bishop, Babyface, Jackson Browne, Bobby Kimball

see also: Simon & Garfunkel

Leland Rucker

Marvin Gaster

Born December 21, 1934, in Sanford, NC.

Marvin Gaster is the last in a line of old-timey two-finger banjo pickers from Lee County, North Carolina. He bought his first banjo when he was about 12 and learned the style from his uncle, the great Henry Gaster. He played at square dances and other events in the area until the 1950s, when he stopped performing to concentrate on being a father, farmer, and teacher. Gaster picked up the banjo and fiddle again during the late 1960s.

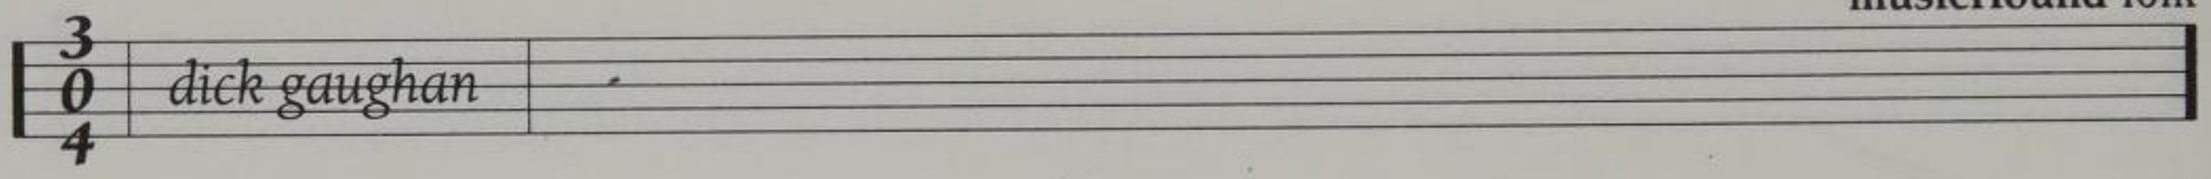
what's available: Backed by some of the best pickers in and around Lee County, the 24 songs on Uncle Henry's Favorites ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Bob Carlin) were recorded informally in the musicians' homes. An important recording documenting the local traditional musical styles of Lee County.

influences:

Skillet Lickers, Bascom Lamar Lunsford

Benton Flippen, Kirk Sutphin

Douglas Fulmer



Dick Gaughan

Born May 17, 1948, in Leith, Scotland.

There are a handful of singers that come to mind who just have "it," that elusive quality that causes the soul to resonate through the sheer sound of their voice. Nusrat Ali Khan, Sarah Carter, Umm Kulthum, Robert Johnson . . . certainly a list of this type must also include Dick Gaughan. Any description of the man's talents must begin with the voice. His fierce passion for his native Scotland and its people must follow a close second. After that, one can list his skills a composer, his devotion to the fight for social justice, his gift for finding and interpreting the songs of others, and his talents as a guitarist. Gaughan grew up in a close-knit community in the town of Leith, which is now part of Edinburgh. His father, an emigrant from Ireland, was a fiddler and speaker of the Irish language; his mother was a Scot with a repertoire of songs from the highlands in both English and Gaelic. It was in this household steeped in song that Gaughan was raised. He began working as a professional musician in 1970. He was an early member of the Boys of the Lough and appears on their first album. A founding member of the Scottish folk rock group Five Hand Reel, Gaughan has more recently founded and produced the group Clan Alba. Gaughan is also interested in formal composition and has composed music for several BBC TV films. A passionate singer who wears his love of land on his sleeve, he is clearly the finest contemporary interpreter of traditional Scottish ballads know as the "Muckle Sangs" ("big songs"). To these he brings a power, warmth, and immediacy that bring life to these songs of great antiquity. He is also a master interpreter of the songs of Scotland's national poet, Robert Burns. His deep commitment to social justice is always present in his music and has deeply influenced younger performers like Billy Bragg.

what to buy: Handful of Earth ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1981/1992, prod. Dick Gaughan) is simply a landmark recording. Gaughan is in perfect voice and the balance between truly superb political commentary and traditional Scottish music is stunning. The incredible beauty Gaughan brings to Burns's "Now Westlin Winds" is enough to make the recording a must have, but listen to the passion in "The Snows They Melt the Soonest" if you need a further example of Gaughan's gift. His versions of Leon Rossellson's "The World Turned Upside Down" and Ed Picket's "Workers Song" are as powerful performances of politically conscious material as you can find.

what to buy next: A Different Kind of Love Song ♪♪♪♪½ (Appleseed, 1997, prod. Dick Gaughan, Carsten Linde) may not be of the magnitude of Handful of Earth simply because it does not contain the traditional Scottish pieces to offset the social commentary, but so what. The passion can be heard throughout, from the amazing "Stand up for Judas" through his introspective interpretation of Joe South's "The Games People Play." The Appleseed people have added a bonus version of "The World Turned Upside Down" and a great Scots love song, "Lassie Lie Near Me," that helps to bring a little balance to those overwhelmed by the overt political material.

the rest:

More Forever ♪♪♪½ (Leader, 1972)
(With Boys of the Lough) The Boys of the Lough ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1973)
Gaughan ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1978/1994)
(With Andy Irvine) Parallel Lines ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1983/Appleseed, 1997)
Live in Edinburgh ♪♪♪♪½ (Celtic Music, 1985)
True and Bold: Songs of the Scottish Miners ♪♪♪ (Struc, 1986)
Call It Freedom ♪♪♪½ (Celtic Music, 1989)
Live in Edinburgh ♪♪♪♪½ (Appleseed, 1994)
Sail On ♪♪♪♪ (Appleseed, 1996)

worth searching for: And now for something completely different—a Dick Gaughan instrumental record. Coppers and Brass ♪♪♪♪½ (Topic, 1977/Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Tony Engle) shows just what a skilled instrumentalist lies beneath that magnificent voice. This record sets his string play in a very traditional context and Gaughan plays through a set of reels, jigs, hornpipes, and marches. If you are a guitar player or are interested in traditional Celtic tunes you'll find plenty of pleasure on this recording.

influences:

◀◀ Bill Broonzy, Bert Jansch, Luke Kelley, Woody Guthrie, Ewan McColl

▶▶ Billy Bragg, Silly Wizard, Mary Black

see also: Boys of the Lough, Andy Irvine

Jared Snyder

Frankie Gavin

Born 1956, in Corrandulla, Co. Galway, Ireland.

Raised in a musical family of North-East County Galway, just across Lough Corrib from the Connemara Gaeltacht (Gaelic-speaking area), Frankie Gavin grew up surrounded by traditional music to become one of Ireland's finest fiddle players. He is a supreme technician and can produce the most complex and intense fiddle music while remaining absolutely at ease on the instrument. One of his main sources of inspiration is the music of emigrant Irish performers who recorded in the United States during the 78 era. In particular, Gavin credits Galway piper Patsy Touhey, Sligo fiddle player James Morrison, Leitrim flute player John McKenna, and the Flanagan Brothers, originally from Waterford, for expanding, through their recordings, his repertoire of techniques and tunes as well as the general flavor of his music. A remarkable solo artist, Gavin is perhaps better known as one of the founders of the long-lived Irish group De Danann (or De Dannan, as they spell it now). Gavin was still of school age when the band came together during the early 1970s in music sessions held around Spiddal, County Galway, then home of Gavin's longtime partner-in-crime, bouzouki player Alec Finn. After coming to the United States for the first time in 1976 to participate in the extraordinary festivities surrounding the bicentennial celebration in the nation's capital, the band toured again the following year and, on that occasion, Gavin recorded his first solo album for the New York label Shanachie. Being an outstanding flute and whistle player as well, Gavin was inspired to make a flute album, Croch Suas É—Up and Away, in 1983. His accompanist this time was Leitrim fiddle and piano player Charlie Lennon, whose excellent compositions in traditional style have become well known through Gavin's performances. In 1985 Gavin participated in the recording of Lennon's The Emigrant Suite. He would again appear on Lennon's second suite, Island Wedding, recorded in 1991 for RTE. In the interval, Gavin produced one of his best albums and a landmark of Irish music when he recorded A Tribute to Joe Cooley in 1986 with accordionist Paul Brock. Gavin and Brock had first met Cooley and each other in 1973, shortly before the legendary accordionist's untimely death. Another outstanding solo album, Frankie Goes to Town, followed in 1991. That same year, Gavin was touring in France with De Dannan accordion player Aidan Coffey and guitarist Arty McGlynn when the trio was recorded during a concert in Paris. This exceptional recording, released in 1994 as Irlande by the French world-music label Ocora, as well as the few 1984 tracks from German festivals made available on Ireland, show the kind of powerhouse performances De Danann audiences have been rewarded with all these years. Although the band released a new album in 1996, it appears Gavin is busy nowadays with all kinds of solo ventures. But as long as Gavin and Finn continue to play music together, no one will be surprised to see De Dannan get on the road once again.

what to buy: Traditional Music of Ireland ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1977, prod. Richard Nevins, Daniel Michael Collins) was Gavin's first solo album, recorded during a De Danann tour in the United States. The recording may show its age in the less than stellar sound quality, but Gavin's fiddle playing is riveting, and Alec Finn's trademark bouzouki accompaniment is just what's needed. Frankie Goes to Town ♪♪♪♪♪ (The Bee's Knees, 1989/Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Frankie Gavin), the first album to be released on Gavin's own label, could not be more aptly titled. Gavin, often performing duets with himself by doubling on second fiddle, viola, or flute, plays up a storm on a variety of old and newer tunes. Among the latter are some of Gavin's own compositions, as well as a good number of tunes by his favorite composer, Charlie Lennon, who happens to be his piano accompanist for most of the album. Irlande ♪♪♪♪½ (Ocora, 1994, prod. Radio France, Association Culture et Musique Irlandaises), available through Harmonia Mundi, is a live recording made in France in 1991 and featuring Gavin with Aidan Coffey (accordion) and Arty McGlynn (guitar). The pace is furious, yet the performance is incredibly tight, and the interplay between the musicians will make your head spin. This is truly superior musicianship at work, of the kind that can be heard whenever De Danann appears in concert. And Gavin's opening remarks on styles of vocal encouragement to the musicians are priceless, even if probably lost on the original French audience.

what to avoid: An Irish Christmas ♪♪ (The Bee's Knees, 1992/Shanachie, 1996, prod. Frankie Gavin, Carl Hession), retitled Shamrocks and Holly—An Irish Christmas Celebration and credited to Frankie Gavin with the Carl Hession Orchestra for its U.S. release, contains very little Irish traditional music, namely Tommy Coen's great reel "Christmas Eve," and a lot of rather cheesy arrangements of Christmas standards.

worth searching for: Although only available in the United States as imports, Gavin's two albums on the Gael-Linn label are "must have" for Irish music devotees. Croch Suas É—Up and Away ♪♪♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1983, prod. Frankie Gavin, Charlie Lennon, Jackie Small) is officially Gavin's "flute album," even though he also plays fiddle, tin whistle, and even accordion on it—he combines all of them on one track credited to "Frankie Gavin's Irish Orchestra"—with Charlie Lennon (piano) and Johnny "Ringo" McDonagh (bodhrán) accompanying. The playing is as good as it gets and the material reflects Gavin's main sources of inspiration: old tunes from the 78 era, and new compositions like those of Charlie Lennon. A Tribute to Joe Cooley ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1986, prod. Frankie Gavin) proves, if needed, that Gavin takes after James Morrison in more ways than one and that, like the great Sligo fiddler of the 1920s, he is an awesome duet player. His partner here is accordion player Paul Brock, of recent Moving Cloud fame, who shares with Gavin a passion for early recordings of Irish and Irish-American music, and their accompanist on piano is none other than Charlie Lennon, one of the best in the business. As it should be for a tribute to Joe Cooley, the famous accordion player from Peterswell, County Galway, the pace of the music is relaxed, so that the interplay of the two lead instruments can be savored in all its intricacies. Gavin was one of the guest musicians on Andy Irvine's excellent Rainy Sundays . . . Windy Dreams . . . ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1980, prod. Dónal Lunny). Gavin's performance of Tommy Coen's reel "Christmas Eve" is definitely one of the highlights of the album, as is the Bulgarian "Paidushko Horo" on which he plays fiddle and flute. Ireland ♪♪♪♪ (WDR, 1993, prod. Christian Scholze, Jean Trouillet, Jan Reichow), a collection of live recordings made in Germany, includes five tracks featuring Gavin solo or with Belfast flute player Desi Wilkinson and master uilleann piper Liam O'Flynn.

influences:

⏪ Patsy Touhey, James Morrison, John McKenna, Flanagan Brothers

⏩ Seán Kane, Tommy Peoples, Paddy Glackin, John Carty

see also: De Danann

Philippe Varlet

General Humbert

See: Mary Black

Frank George

Born 1928, in Bluefield, WV.

Frank George was born in Bluefield, West Virginia, and has lived in that area most of his life. George won his first contest in 1937, playing a banjo made for him by his grandfather, who also made him a fiddle and taught him to play both. Heavily influenced by Virginia fiddler Jim Farthing, George was a master of the fiddle and banjo by the time he was a young man. Military service took him to Europe, where he met—and played music with—Scots and Irish people. The British Isles are the source of much of Appalachian music, and George returned to the United States with a deep understanding of Celtic music as well as his own. Today, George is still a master of the fiddle, banjo, mountain dulcimer, hammered dulcimer, piano, and the bagpipes. He still lives in West Virginia and passes on his traditions at festivals and music camps around the state.

what to buy: Reflections of the Past ♪♪♪♪ (Roane Records, 1996, prod. David O'Dell) presents George on fiddle and Dave O'Dell on banjo. O'Dell, one of West Virginia's finest banjo players from the younger generation, has played music with George for years. The fiddle/banjo combination is part of the very core of Appalachian old-time music, and this particular combination is one of the best. Neither instrument dominates the other; they are woven together seamlessly in a manner that tells you these guys have been playing together for a long time and understand each other very well. George's fiddling moves from an almost blues-like style on "Train on the Island" to a decidedly Celtic sound on "Loch Lavan." Throughout, O'Dell's banjo playing is precise and strong. Many of the tunes are old-time standards, a few with an unusual twist. There are also a few relatively unknown tunes, including the delightful "Green Mountain Reel." The sound quality is remarkably good, and it comes as a surprise to learn that this was not recorded in a studio. This might be hard to find at a record store, but can be obtained directly from Roane Records, Rte. 3, Box 293, Spencer, WV 25276.

what to buy next: You can hear an earlier incarnation of George and O'Dell on The Cedar Point String Band ♪♪♪ (Roane Records, 1997, prod. David O'Dell). This was originally recorded in 1983, and the band consisted of Frank, Dave, and guitarist Bob Roark (now deceased). The tunes are nearly all old-time standards, such as "Liberty" and "Sourwood Mountain." The recording is not quite as clear as on Reflections of the Past, but it certainly isn't bad. Also available directly from Roane Records at the above address.

influences:

⏪ Jim Farthing, Harvey Sampson

⏩ Too many young old-time fiddlers to count

Dave Shombert

Paul Geremia

Born in RI.

Guitarist/singer/songwriter Paul Geremia has spent the last 30 years traveling across what he calls "Uncle Sam's backyard," performing classic acoustic country blues and folk music with authenticity, flair, and a personal touch. Geremia began playing professionally in 1966, serving his musical apprenticeship during the era of folk "rediscovery" that gave him the opportunity to absorb firsthand the musical influences of such country blues innovators as Son House, Skip James, Bukka White, and Sleepy John Estes. He recalls these players with unabashed respect and affection, and his commitment to the genre is evident in his performances and recordings. Geremia plays finger-style on six- and 12-string guitars, often using a slide and open or altered tunings, and occasionally adds rack harmonica. In addition to Mississippi Delta styles, Geremia's fluency extends to the East Coast "Piedmont" blues tradition of players such as Blind Willie McTell, Blind Blake, Pink Anderson, and Barbecue Bob Hicks. He is unparalleled as an interpreter—and perpetuator—of McTell's musical legacy.

what to buy: I Really Don't Mind Livin'/My Kinda Place ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1991, prod. Paul Geremia, others), clocking in at more than 70 minutes, combines two of Geremia's LP releases. I Really Don't Mind Livin', from 1982, included all-original material. My Kinda Place, from 1986, featured outstanding covers of material by Lonnie Johnson, Leadbelly, McTell, Scrapper Blackwell and others, as well as some originals. Packaged together on one CD, they offer an essential introduction to Geremia's repertoire. Gamblin' Woman Blues ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1993, prod. Uwe Kranner) licensed from the Austrian label Shamrock Records, is an ideal complement to the Flying Fish set, covering artists such as Blind Lemon Jefferson, Big Bill Broonzy, Peg Leg Howell, McTell, Hicks, James, and others. Live from Uncle Sam's Backyard ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1997, prod. Chris Frymire) is a crisply recorded June 1991 live performance from Minneapolis that accurately captures the energy and audience rapport endemic to a Geremia show.

what to buy next: Self Portrait in Blues ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1994, prod. Uwe Kranner), also licensed from Shamrock, is more of the same good stuff. Guest spots from octogenarian violinist/mandolin Howard Armstrong and upright bassist Rory McLeod add texture to the release.

worth searching for: If you can find these out-of-print vinyl LPs, buy 'em: Just Enough ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1968), Paul Geremia ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1973), and Hard Life Rockin' Chair ♪♪♪ (Adelphi, 1973). Geremia also did a guest spot on Peter Keane's CD, The Goodnight Blues ♪♪½ (Northeastern, 1991).

influences:

◀◀ Willie McTell, Pink Anderson, Skip James, Scrapper Blackwell, Son House, Mississippi John Hurt, Leadbelly

▶▶ Roy Book Binder, Steve James, John Hammond, Larry Johnson, Paul Rishell

Bryan Powell

Mark Germino

Born in NC.

Possibly because of his rebellious streak, stellar Nashville singer/songwriter Mark Germino has never tasted much commercial success, despite one truly classic country-rock song. "Rex Bob Lowenstein," his opus, is the story of a beloved old-fashioned (and crotchety) Southern DJ who gets replaced by a computerized playlist and locks himself in the studio playing thrash music. Though it applies to all kinds of radio stations, the song was most prophetic about country radio, which became hugely successful and blandly regimented right around 1991. Germino, a Vietnam veteran, sings with the punch and twang of Steve Earle, but he has a much more explicit social conscience. His backing band, the Sluggers, plays with the rocking consistency of the E Street Band.

what to buy: Radartown ♪♪♪½ (Zoo, 1991, prod. R.S. Field) contains "Rex Bob Lowenstein" and a lot of funny songs, including "Lerdy and Bo's Totalitarian Showdown," about love, freedom and injustice; it never went anywhere commercially.

what to buy next: With humor and hillbilly eloquence, Germino spins great tales on Rank & File ♪♪♪ (Winter Harvest, 1995, prod. Owsley Manier, Steve Roberts), including "Rosemary's New Constitution," about a black woman standing in line to vote and fantasizing about being elected president.

what to avoid: London Town & Barnyard Remedies ♪♪½ (RCA, 1986, prod. Paul Samwell-Smith), Germino's debut, isn't quite as fleshed-out as his later releases.

worth searching for: The Rex Bob Lowenstein ♪♪♪ EP (Zoo, 1991, prod. R.S. Field) is culled mostly from Radartown, but its highlight is a killer cover of Bob Dylan's "Highway 61 Revisited."

influences:

◀◀ Steve Earle, Bob Dylan, Carl Perkins, Johnny Cash, Bruce Springsteen

▶▶ Dan Bern, John Wesley Harding, Todd Snider

Steve Knopper

Alice Gerrard

See: Hazel & Alice

Gibson Brothers Band

Formed 1991, in Champlain Valley, NY.

Eric Gibson (born October 23, 1970, in Plattsburgh, NY), vocals, banjo; Leigh Gibson (born October 11, 1971, in Plattsburgh, NY), vocals, guitar; Junior Barber, dobro; Mike Barber, bass.

Eric and Leigh Gibson were raised on a dairy farm owned by their family since Civil War times and located near Ellenburg

blues guitar styles

Although it has African and European overtones, the blues is a uniquely American musical idiom. A convincing case has been made that the banjo might be the initial blues instrument, imported through the slave trade from Africa, but the blues is meant to be played on a guitar, and many of the guitar techniques that have spread into other forms of music originated among blues players. Players like Son House and Charlie Patton pioneered the technique of playing a guitar in open tunings with a glass or metal slide, developing the "bottleneck" sound that is now an integral part of rock and blues music as a method of emulating the cry of a human voice on a stringed instrument. The depths of emotional expression that early blues players could wring out of their instruments were also accomplished by other means. String bending was another method by which early players, most prominently Lonnie Johnson, produced intermediate "blue notes," and it has become the principal method of expression in rock and country playing as well. Blind Blake was the first, and one of the best, of the ragtime guitarists, who developed an elaborate finger-picking style that was able to emulate the sound of stride piano with only six strings. In later years, blues playing became diversified by geographical region, with distinctive styles emerging from Mississippi, Chicago, Texas, Memphis, and the eastern Piedmont.

Michael Parrish

Depot in the Adirondacks, just south of the border—the Canadian border, that is. Eric recalls that at an early age he and his brother fell in love with a landmark bluegrass album recorded many years ago by Lester Flatt and Mac Wiseman, and soon found themselves immersed not only in the great classic bluegrass sounds of Flatt and Scruggs, Jim and Jesse, and other pioneers of the music begun by Bill Monroe, but also the country sounds of artists like Buck Owens, whose performances with the late guitarist Don Rich had special impact on the young brothers. With support and encouragement from their parents, they began playing banjo and guitar together at an early age, and by their teenage years had begun to develop the "brother duet" vocal sound that has drawn frequent favorable comparisons to the classic brother acts of bluegrass and country music. In particular, their knack for trading lead and harmony back and forth, sometimes within the same song, brings recollections of the Louvins clearly into focus. Both still in their mid-20s (born just less than a year apart), Eric and Leigh Gibson have also shown themselves to be among the best young songwriters on the scene today, both individually and as a team, producing a body of work that should gain them a lot of attention and covers well beyond the borders of bluegrass. In forming their band in 1991, they made sure it stayed a family-oriented band by bringing aboard dobroist Junior Barber and his bass-playing son Mike. After releasing a self-produced album in 1994 (now out of print), they signed on with Virginia-based Hay Holler Records, one of the leading bluegrass specialty labels, for which they have recorded three well-received and critically praised albums. As the list of their concert and festival appearances grows, so does their reputation as one of the best young bluegrass bands on the scene today. Like another band of sibling New York natives, the Fox Family, the Gibson Brothers Band is proving that you can find great bluegrass far north of the Mason-Dixon Line.

what to buy: It may be putting undue pressure on the Gibson Brothers and their band to give them a top-of-the-scale rating this early in their careers, but Spread Your Wings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hay Holler, 1995, prod. Kerry Hay) is not only an album that every bluegrass fanatic should own, but also is an album that may end up drawing a great many new fans to the music—this is music that speaks not only to those older country fans who like the fresh interpretations of classic songs and artists, but also to today's alternative music fans who worry less about labels and categories than about whether the music is honest and well crafted. If you're looking for one single album as an introduction to the future of bluegrass, Spread Your Wings is at or near the top of a very short list. Five of the album's 14 cuts were written or co-written by Eric or Leigh Gibson, with "Picture in the Moonlight" and "Sam Smith" standing out not only as good songs, but as examples of the brothers' talent for writing different kinds of material. Peter Rowan's "I'm Gonna Love You (Like There's No Tomorrow)" is also done in fine style here as well. The remainder of the album will bring pleasant reminders from the past of country greats like Hank Williams, Webb Pierce, Marty Robbins, and Dolly Parton. And fans of contemporary folk music will want to check out the Gibsons' rendition of Greg Brown's "Early." With only one guest musician—fiddler and mandolinist Aubrey Haynie—to bolster the band, Spread Your Wings is not a studio creation—this is pretty much what the Gibson Brothers Band sounds like when you see it on stage. Which is exactly what you'll want to do after hearing this record.

what to buy next: Long Forgotten Dream ♪♪♪♪ (Hay Holler, 1996, prod. Kerry Hay) is the group's debut on Hay Holler, and a mighty impressive one at that. The 15 tracks include eight originals by the brothers, along with renditions of material from the Louvins, Buck Owens, and Jimmie Davis. Picking favorites is tough, but pay special attention to "Looking for a Smile in a Heartache," "Good as Gold," and the album's title track, written by Seth Sawyer. Guesting on this record is the wonderful Canadian fiddler and mandolin player Ray Legere.

worth searching for: You may have to comb the record-concession bins at Northeastern bluegrass festivals like Delaware Valley or Winterhawk to find Underneath a Harvest Moon ♪♪♪½ (1994, self-produced), but snap it up if you do, as it will likely be a collector's item someday. Just don't let it sit around collecting value (or dust); play it. Now out of print, it shows the brothers still developing their talents, but their distinctive vocal sound is impressive even in this first release.

solo outings:
Junior Barber:
Stone Bottom Boogie ♪♪♪½ (Hay Holler, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Louvin Brothers, Lester Flatt, Mac Wiseman, Buck Owens, Don Rich, Jim & Jesse, Emmylou Harris, Ricky Skaggs

▶▶ Rarely Herd, Fox Family, Traditional Grass

John Lupton

Bob Gibson

Born November 16, 1931, in New York, NY. Died September 27, 1996, in Portland, OR.

A major player during the late '50s and early '60s folk-music scene, Bob Gibson helped bring the folk movement from the purists to a much wider audience, pre-dating the eventual commercial acceptance by the likes of the Kingston Trio. At first a banjo performer, Gibson eventually made the transition to 12-string guitar (and helped launch the early '60s popularity of that instrument), and his flawless playing would be a huge influence on soon-to-be-rockers Roger McGuinn and Steve Stills. Among the most successful of Gibson's ventures was his pairing with Bob Camp; their on-again-off-again relationship became among the most revered of all folk acts of the early '60s. Despite serving as a role model for '60s folk rockers (Stills's band Buffalo Springfield "thanks" Gibson on the sleeve of its second album), Gibson stayed a pure folk artist until the end, frequently collaborating with writer Shel Silverstein through the years and even trying his hand at playwriting, including his 1984 musical The Courtship of Carl Sandburg.

what to buy: Joy Joy! The Young and Wonderful Bob Gibson: The Riverside Folklore Series Vol. I ♪♪♪♪ (Riverside, 1996, prod. Orrin Keepnews, Kenneth S. Goldstein) is a well-stocked overview of Gibson's early career, spanning the years 1956–59 (and culling tracks from original Riverside albums I Come to Sing, Offbeat Folk Songs, Hootenanny at Carnegie and There's a Meetin' Here Tonight and including Gibson staples "There's a Meeting Here Tonight" plus oldies like "Lost Jimmie Whalen" and "John Riley."

worth searching for: On the heels of a major commercial folk boom, Gibson and Camp were caught live at Chicago's Gate of Horn nightclub for the revelatory Bob Gibson and Bob Camp at the Gate of Horn ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1961, prod. Bob Gibson, Bob Camp). In top form, the duo plow through the hard-rocking "Betty and Dupree," lampoon the computer in "The Thinking Man," and issue wry observations on Mayor Daley's law enforcement crew in "Chicago Cops." Dylan, McGuinn, Stills, and Young had to be listening. (The duo would haul out this same set 25 years later for 1986's Gibson and Camp–The Gate of Horn: Revisited!)

the rest:
Makin' a Mess: Gibson Sings Shel Silverstein ♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Shel Silverstein, Pete Seeger

▶▶ Erik Darling, Tommy Smothers, Neil Young, Stephen Stills, Roger McGuinn

David Simons

Ronnie Gilbert

Born 1926, in New York, NY.

Classical and pop music formed the musical soundtrack of New York–born singer Ronnie Gilbert's childhood. But, her love of folk songs and vocal harmonies made her one of the most influential female vocalists of the twentieth century. Through her concerts and recordings as a soloist and with folk-singing group the Weavers, and singer-songwriter-activist Holly Near, Gilbert has inspired nearly every woman who has sung a folk song in the past 50 years. Gilbert first sang folk songs in a Washington, D.C.-based band called the Priority Ramblers. Her greatest success, however, came after she joined Pete Seeger and Lee Hays, formerly with the Almanac Singers, and Fred Hellerman, a guitarist she had met at a summer camp, to form the Weavers in 1958. The group's debut performance at the Village Vanguard in New York's Greenwich Village was so successful that it was extended from a one-stand gig to a six-month engagement. Signing a record contract with Decca Records in 1959, the Weavers' first single, "Goodnight Irene," written by Leadbelly, spent an unprecedented 14 weeks at the top of the Billboard Hit Parade charts and made the group an overnight sensation. However, the Weavers' prosperity was short lived. With the spread of McCarthyism and Communist red-baiting, the quartet's involvement with labor unions and the campaign to elect radical politician Henry Wallace for president led to them becoming among the earliest victims. Radio stations refused to play their records while club and concert promoters canceled their contracts. With no place to perform, the Weavers went their separate ways. Gilbert married and moved to California, not returning to the East Coast until the band's manager Harold Leventhal booked Carnegie Hall for a reunion show in 1955. The reunited Weavers remained together, with Seeger being replaced by banjo players Bernie Krauss and Frank Hamilton. They disbanded again during the early 1960s.

By 1963 Gilbert was recently divorced and beginning a solo career. Meeting Joseph Chaikin, actor/director of the experimental Open Theater, she became absorbed with acting. During the 1970s, she returned to school and earned a master's degree in clinical psychology. She continues to maintain a practice as a therapist. The influence of Gilbert and the Weavers has continued to grow. When a documentary producer assembled the group together to film an informal reunion in 1980, talk of a serious comeback was raised. Over the next two years the Weavers performed several shows. Portions of their Carnegie Hall concert were added to the original footage and produced as a video and album, Wasn't That a Mighty Time. A segment of the documentary enabled Gilbert to meet and sing with Near, who had grown up on her music. The results were so successful that Gilbert and Near embarked on several tours and collaborated on three albums, Lifeline, Singing with You, and The Train Still Runs. Since 1985 Gilbert has recorded two solo albums—The Spirit Is Free and Love Will Find a Way. Together with Near, Seeger, and Arlo Guthrie, she recorded a quartet album, H.A.R.P. Gilbert's most recent project was a one-woman show based on the life of union activist Mother Jones.

what to buy: Gilbert's third collaboration with singer-songwriter-activist Holly Near, This Train Still Runs ♪♪♪½ (Abbe Alice Music, 1996, prod. Donna Korones) is the product of two mutually admiring vocalists coming together to share music and political vision. A celebration of Gilbert's 70th birthday, the album includes rousing, harmonious interpretations of songs by Phil Ochs, Woody Guthrie, Sally Fingerett, and Janis Ian.

what to buy next: On Love Will Find a Way ♪♪♪ (Abbe Alice Music, 1989, prod. Donna Korones), Gilbert and piano and synthesizer player John Bucchino present an emotional musical look at romance and the affairs of the heart.

the rest:
Alone with Ronnie Gilbert ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1964)
(With Holly Near) Lifeline ♪♪♪ (Redwood, 1983)
(With Holly Near) Singin' with You ♪♪♪ (Redwood, 1985)
(With Holly Near, Arlo Guthrie, and Pete Seeger) H.A.R.P. ♪♪♪ (Redwood, 1985)
The Spirit Is Free ♪♪♪½ (Redwood, 1985)

worth searching for: Gilbert made important contributions to the soundtracks of video documentaries, Woody Guthrie: A Hard Travelin' and Ken Burns's The Civil War.

influences:
◀◀ Carter Family, Almanac Singers, Paul Robeson ▶▶ Holly Near, Joan Baez, Joni Mitchell, Judy Collins

see also: Weavers, Holly Near

Craig Harris

Vance Gilbert

Born in Philadelphia, PA.

Vance Gilbert was born in Philadelphia and now lives in Boston. He cites Shawn Colvin as a major influence; he used to open for her. Gilbert has become a mainstay of the folk festival circuit because his performing skills match or outstrip his musical skills. He's got a great stage presence; small children dance at his feet, audiences laugh nervously as he upbraids innocent members of their throng. He trades on his race for laughs in a way that makes some liberals uneasy, but it helps make him memorable. (One of his most popular songs is "Country Western Rap," a hip hoedown that hits all the easy targets.) He seems to enjoy the power struggle between performer and audience, but he's always in control. A powerful guitar player, an agile-voiced singer, he slips from humor into pathos and back again. Few of his best qualities, unfortunately, come across on his albums, which are far too glossy and flat.

what to buy: Edgewise ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1994, prod. Alain Millet) is worth having only if you enjoy "Country Western Rap" enough to play it over and over. Save your money and spend it on a live Gilbert performance instead. Fugitives ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1995, prod. John Switzer) is better executed. Highlights includes the traditional song "Spencer the Rover," the buoyant Amelia Earhart tribute "Dear Amelia," and an intriguing look at black crime, "Just the Way That It Was," recorded in Jane Siberry's living room with Siberry on piano.

the rest:
Shaking off Gravity N/A (Philo, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Bill Cosby, Shawn Colvin, Aaron Neville
▶▶ Tom Prasada-Rao

Pamela Murray Winters

Steve Gillette & Cindy Mangsen

Formed 1988, in VT.

Steve Gillette (born November 23, 1942, in Pensacola, FL); Cindy Mangsen (born July 21, 1950, in Niagara Falls, NY).

Steve Gillette and Cindy Mangsen are two of the finest folk musicians playing today. The husband-wife team from Bennington, Vermont, write from their souls and they reflect the rich traditions that make others take notice. Gillette, an accomplished fingerstyle guitarist, got his first real break in 1966, when Canadian folk duo Ian and Sylvia recorded his classic song (written with Tom Campbell) "Darcy Farrow." Since then, his songs have continued to make their mark, mostly in country music circles. He spent many years as a songwriter in Nashville, perfecting his craft and releasing several albums that featured such artists as Graham Nash and Emmylou Harris's Hot Band. Mangsen, one of the United States's finest soprano vocalists, plays guitar, piano, English concertina, banjo, and dulcimer. A former librarian, she began performing professionally in 1976, releasing her first album, the critically acclaimed Long Time Traveling, in 1983. Gillette and Mangsen were introduced by singer-songwriter Anne Hills at the Golden Link Folk Festival in Rochester, New York, in 1988; they married in 1989. While they have recorded a pair of stunning duet albums on their own Compass Rose Music label and have played backup for such legendary folk singers as Tom Paxton, they also have continued to release solo efforts and collaborations. Mangsen has toured with Anne Hills and Priscilla Herdman, and her passion for playing Celtic and American traditional music has brought her before audiences on public radio and television. Gillette wrote and sang theme songs for several Hollywood films, including The Pond, The Grass Is Greener, Summer Run, Door to Door, and The Outfit. In addition to performing, Gillette continues to teach songwriting, guitar playing, and record production, and has released an instructional cassette How to Play Guitar like I Do (Compass Rose Music, 1995), along with two books: The Steve Gillette Songbook (Compass Rose Music, 1990) and Songwriting and the Creative Process (Sing Out Publications, 1994).

what to buy: The best combo album for Gillette and Mangsen is Live in Concert ♪♪♪♪♪ (Compass Rose Music, 1991, prod. Steve Gillette, Cindy Mangsen), which includes a strong repertoire of their best-known songs. Digitally recorded live at the Ark in Ann Arbor, Michigan, the 60-minute disc captures the sparse arrangements, warmth, and sweet harmonies that mark their shows. It features "the lazy man's parade" of Gillette's "The River" and "Darcy Farrow," Mangsen's take on Mark Graham's comical "Their Brains Were Small and They Died," and the traditional child ballad "Annachie Gordon." Individual efforts worth checking out include Mangsen's critically acclaimed Songlines ♪♪♪♪ (Compass Rose, 1992, prod. Pete Sutherland) with the sea-chantey-like a cappella of Jez Lowe's "Black Diamonds" and Nancy White's "Daughters of Feminists," sung with Gillette, Anne Hills, Abby Newton, and Priscilla Herdman. Gillette's "solo" The Ways of the World ♪♪♪♪ (Compass Rose, 1992, prod. Jim Rooney) has lovely harmonies by Mangsen and contains his romantic ballad "Bed of Roses," and songs about destitute hobos, farmers losing their land, walking a mountain trail, never losing touch with the hometown, or coming to grips with a changing world.

what to buy next: The duo's Light of the Day ♪♪♪♪ (Compass Rose, 1996, prod. Steve Gillette, Cindy Mangsen) has a delightful tribute to the late folk singer Gamble Rogers and a delightful song by Mangsen about finding your way through life ("Dark of the Moon"). Also worth checking out is Mangsen's stunning collaboration with Anne Hills and Priscilla Herdman, Voices ♪♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1990, prod. Abby Newton), which has everything a harmony lover could want: tight vocals presented by three of the best singers on the planet. No small praise, but one listen is all it takes to realize that the human voice can achieve some amazing and mesmerizing effects. Also check their outstanding live seasonal release Voices of Winter ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gadfly Records, 1997, prod. Cindy Mangsen, Anne Hills, Priscilla Herdman).

3
1
2 jimmie dale gilmore

the rest:
On This Day Earth Shall Ring ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1985)

worth searching for: Gillette's second, third, and fourth albums are out of print. His albums Alone . . . Direct ♪♪♪ (Sierra, 1979, prod. John Delgatto) and A Little Warmth ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1979, prod. Graham Nash) are possible finds, though Back on the Street Again ♪♪♪ (Outpost, 1974, prod. John Ware) is less likely to appear since it was a limited pressing of only 1,000 LPs. Likewise, two of Mangsen's early efforts are out of print. Her Long Time Traveling ♪♪♪½ (Hogeye, 1983, prod. Cindy Mangsen), recorded live to two-track, includes Anne Hills, Jan Burda, and Fred Campeau and was chosen as one of the top folk albums of the year by the Chicago Reader. The other is Settle Down ♪♪♪ (Front Hall, 1987, prod. Cindy Mangsen), which has backup from Hills and Abby Newton.

solo outings:
Steve Gillette:
Steve Gillette ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1968)

Cindy Mangsen:
(With Anne Hills and others) On This Day Earth Shall Ring ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1985)
(With Anne Hills and others) Never Grow Old ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1994)

influences:
⏮ Doc Watson, Merle Travis, Ian & Sylvia, Joan Baez, Martin Carthy, Jean Redpath

⏭ Garth Brooks, John Denver, Anne Murray, Kenny Rogers, Tammy Wynette, Don Williams, Waylon Jennings, Jennifer Warnes, Oak Ridge Boys, Tony Rice, Jerry Jeff Walker, Linda Ronstadt, Anne Hills, Priscilla Herdman, Laurie Lewis

Stephen Ide

Jimmie Dale Gilmore

Born May 6, 1945, in Amarillo, TX.

Blessed with a voice of extraordinary range and expressiveness—think Roy Orbison if he'd wanted to be Jimmie Rodgers instead of Mario Lanza—and a lyrical vision that is equal parts West Texas lonesome and the sound of one hand clapping, Jimmie Dale Gilmore is a unique presence in contemporary music. Silent for nearly two decades after his abortive debut with the supergroup-in-retrospect Flatlanders, Gilmore's solo career began in fairly conventional country territory and moved further left-of-center with each release. His interpretive skills have led him to become the definitive performer of songs by fellow Texas visionary (and former Flatlander) Butch Hancock, while Gilmore's own songs have been covered by Natalie Merchant and David Byrne.

what to buy: After Awhile ♪♪♪♪♪ (Elektra Nonesuch American Explorer Series, 1991, prod. Stephen Bruton) is a stunning showcase for Gilmore's original artistry, notably the elliptical, Zen-like "Tonight I Think I'm Gonna Go Downtown" and "Treat Me like a Saturday Night." But the album's otherworldly feel is nicely undercut by the gentle humor of Gilmore's own "Go to Sleep Alone" and the not-so-gentle humor of Butch Hancock's "My Mind's Got a Mind of Its Own." To complete the package, the blazing "Midnight Blues" proves Gilmore can play with intensity. Just try keeping your jaw from dropping repeatedly while listening to this one. Spinning around the Sun ♪♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1993, prod. Emory Gordy Jr.) relies more heavily on covers than its predecessor, and it would rate as a superior work if Gilmore's near-definitive take on Hank Williams's "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry" was its only selection. But there's also a loping cover of the Elvis B-side "I Was the One" and Butch Hancock's devastating lover's put-down, "Just a Wave." If anything proves Gilmore's mettle, it's his cover of his ex-wife Jo Carol Pierce's "Reunion," which imagines a couple sundered on earth to be joined again in the hereafter.

what to buy next: If Magical Mystery Tour had been recorded in Austin, Texas, it might sound something like Braver Newer World ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1996, prod. T-Bone Burnett). Producer Burnette removes Gilmore almost entirely from a country context, surrounding him instead with saxophones, echo-laden drums, and stinging, sitar-like guitar leads, making explicit Gilmore's country & Eastern leanings. It's a radical experiment, but it works.

the rest:
Fair & Square ♪♪♪½ (HighTone, 1988)
Jimmy Dale Gilmore ♪♪♪½ (HighTone, 1989)

worth searching for: Mudhoney/Jimmie Dale Gilmore ♪♪♪ (Sub Pop EP, 1994, prod. various) is a peculiar artifact on which Gilmore and the Seattle grunge pioneers cover each others' songs and team up for the late Townes Van Zandt's "Buckskin Stallion Blues." Also, Gilmore and Hancock's Two Roads: Live in Australia ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin Records Australia, 1990/Caroline, 1993, prod. Keith Glass, Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Butch Hancock), which

Jimmie Dale Gilmore (© Jack Vartoogian)

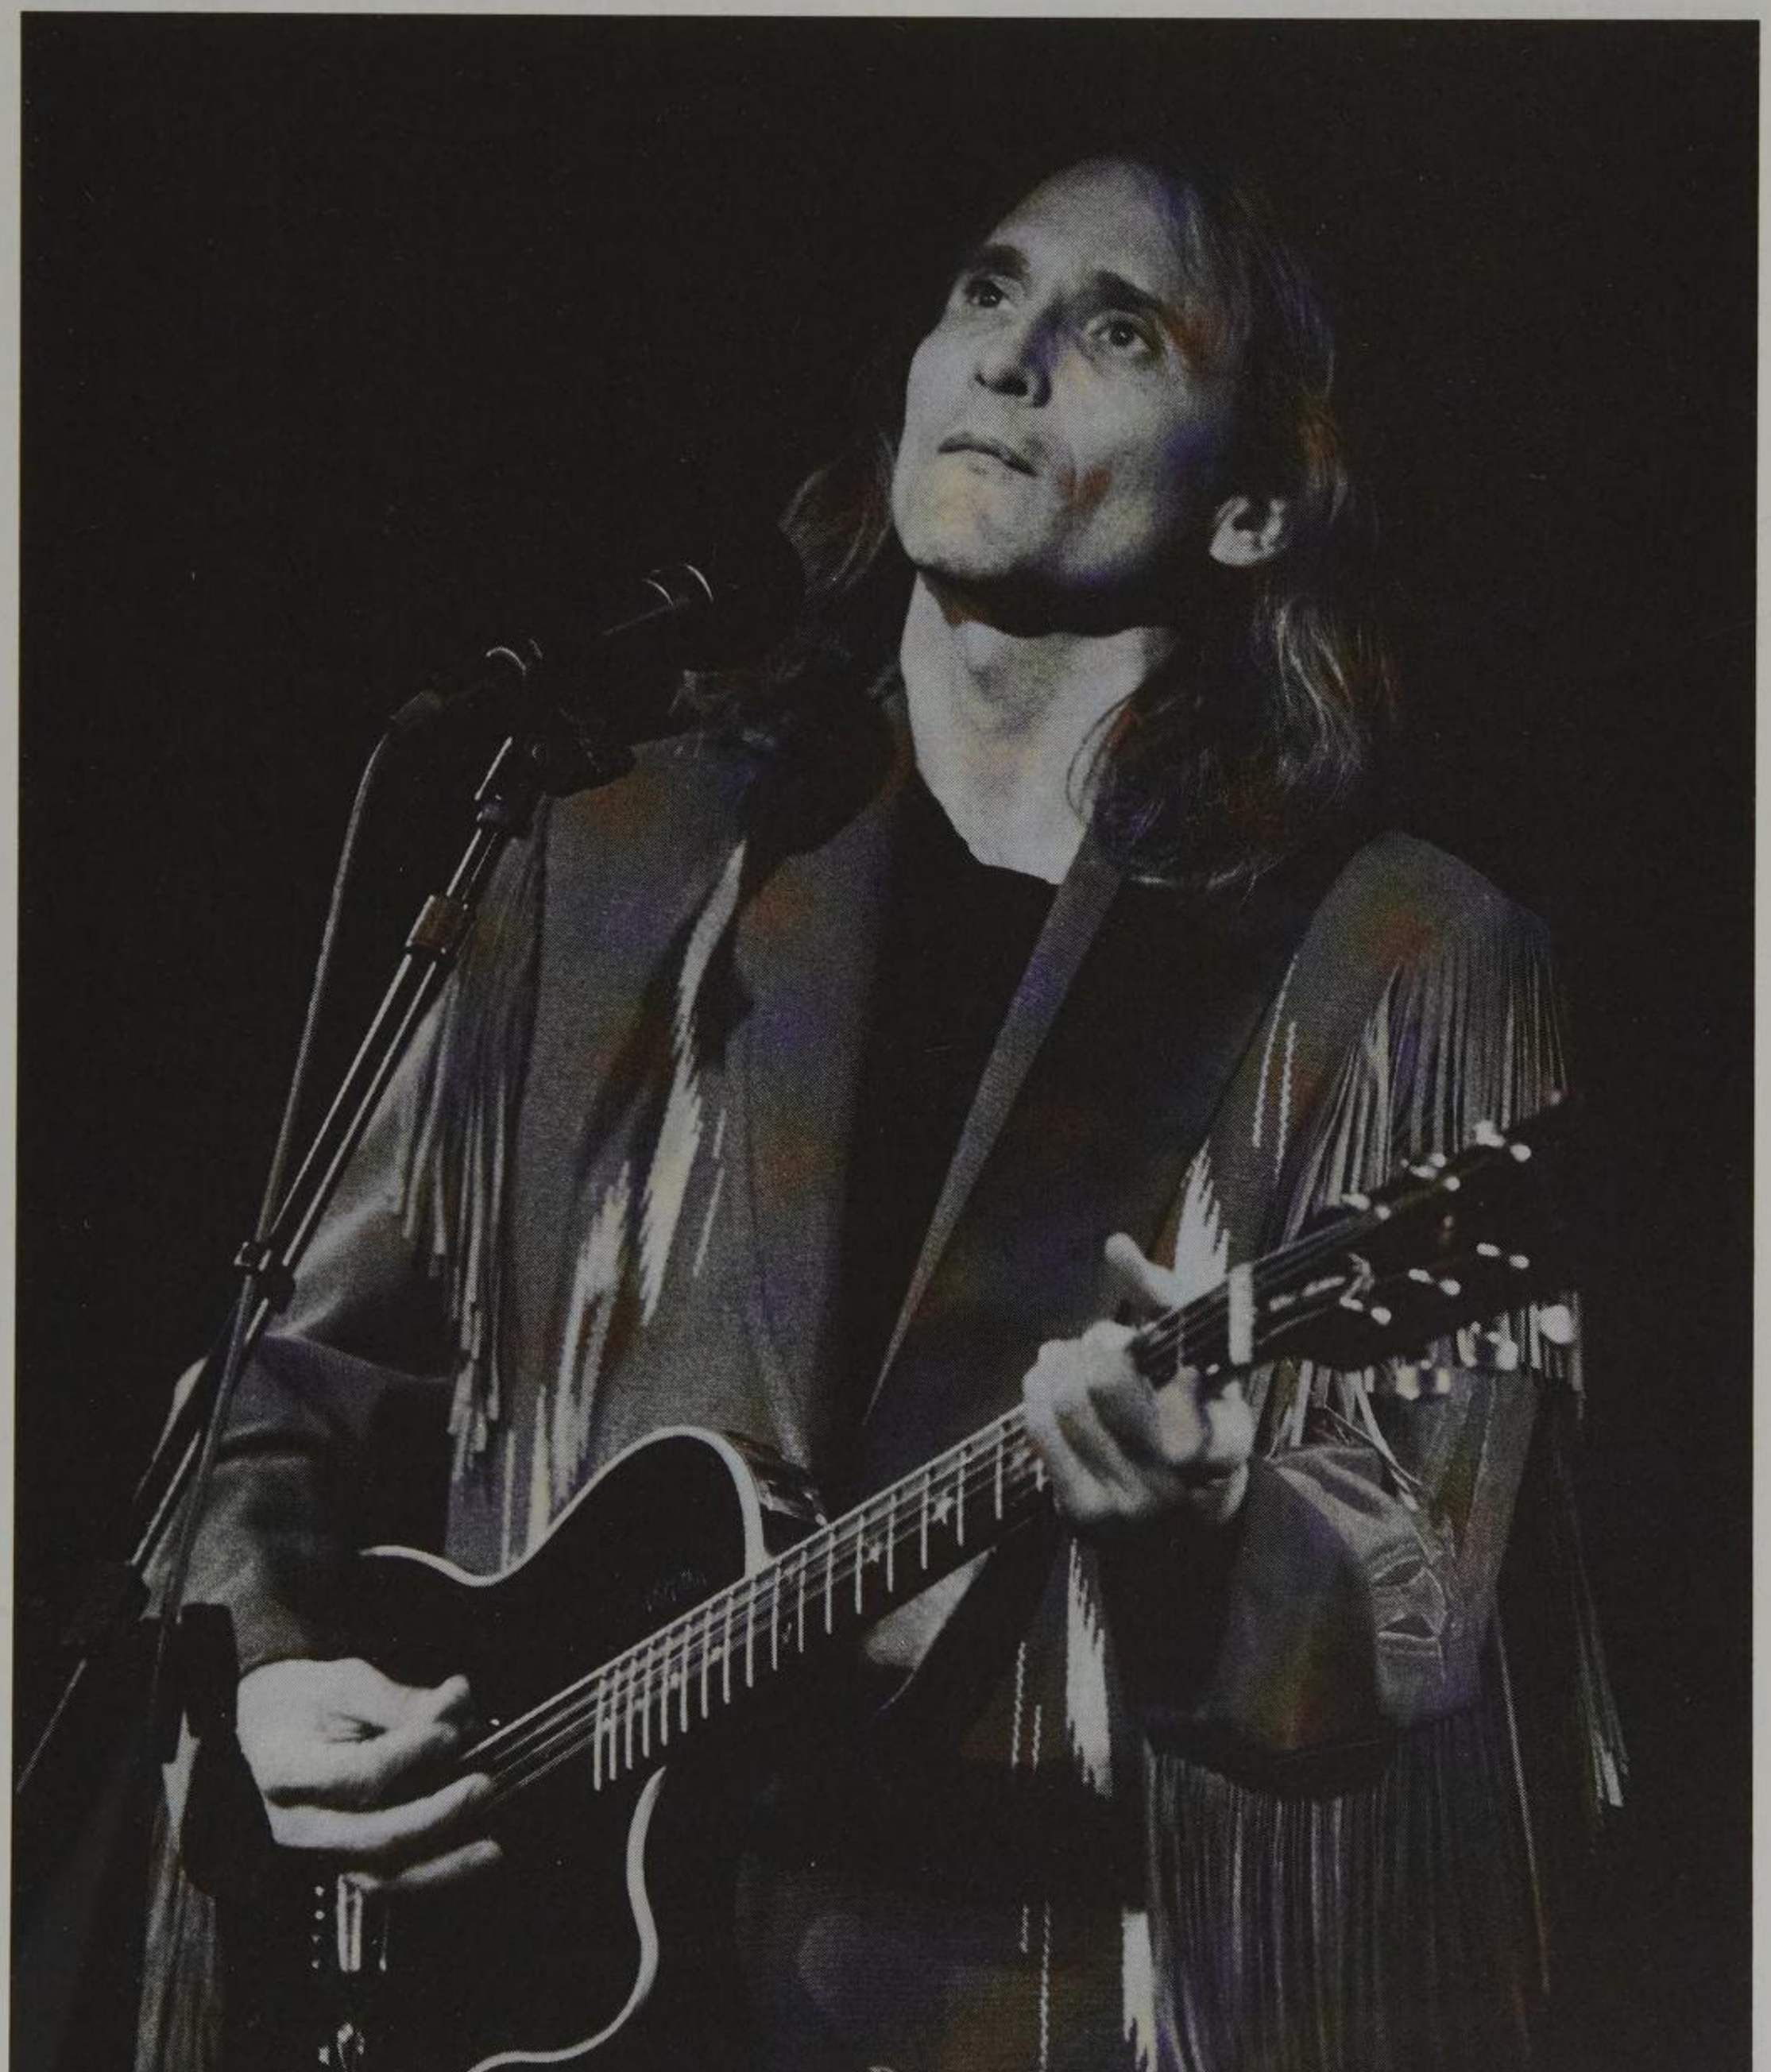
jimmie dale gilmore



finds the two performing solo and in tandem, is an immensely satisfying live album from way, way south of the border.

influences:

◀◀ Hank Williams, Roy Orbison, Buddy Holly, Jimmie Rodgers, Willie Nelson, Alan Watts

▶▶ Jim Lauderdale, Kevin Welch, Iris DeMent, Gillian Welch

see also: Flatlanders

Daniel Durchholz

Julie Gold

See: Four Bitchin' Babes

Golden Gate Quartet /Golden Gate Jubilee Quartet

Formed as the Golden Gate Jubilee Quartet, early 1930s, in Norfolk, VA.

A.C. "Eddie" Griffin, tenor (early 1930s–34); Robert "Peg" Ford, bass (early 1930s–36); Willie Johnson, baritone (early 1930s–48); Henry Owens, tenor (early 1930s–50); William Langford, tenor (1934–39); Orlandus Wilson, bass (1936–90s); Clyde Riddick, tenor (1939–90s); Orville Brooks, baritone (1948–50); Alton Bradley, tenor (1950–51); Eugene Mumford, tenor (1951–54); Clyde Wright, tenor (1954–90s); Julius Caleb "J.C." Ginyard, baritone (1955–71); Paul Brembley, baritone (1971–90s).

One of the most popular gospel vocal groups in history, the Golden Gate Jubilee Quartet formed out of a Virginia high-school glee club. The lineup gelled when bass singer Orlandus Wilson joined baritone William Langford and tenors Willie Johnson and Henry Owen in 1936; the following year the quartet made its first recordings for Bluebird Records. The Gates's style drew on spirituals and hymns but also incorporated elements of jazz and other vocal groups like the Mills Brothers. Performing a cappella, the members of the group often imitated instruments with their voices. At the recommendation of John Hammond, the Golden Gate Jubilee Quartet performed at the 1938 "Spirituals into Swing" concert at New York's Carnegie Hall, along with Benny Goodman, Count Basie, and others. Their popularity soared afterwards, with regular nightclub and national radio performances. The group shortened its name to the Golden Gate Quartet in 1939 and the following year recorded a session with Leadbelly. During the early '40s, the quartet started recording for OKeh Records and also appeared in a number of feature films. The group maintained its popularity throughout the decade with strong recordings, but personnel changes and the advent of rock 'n' roll took their toll during the '50s. In 1955 the group made its first tour of Europe and made that continent its base during the following decades. The Golden Gate Quartet made its most important recordings during the '30s and '40s, but recordings made during the '60s are still available, mostly on French imports. The quartet continued to be active performers into the '90s with a lineup that had been stable for more than two decades.

what to buy: Meet Me at the Golden Gate ♪♪♪♪ (Magnum America, 1996, executive prod. Bob Marin) compiles the best recordings from the Gates' sessions for both Bluebird and OKeh/Columbia. It's not the easiest of the group's albums to find, but it boils down the most influential seven-year period of the group's career into a succinct 20 songs, with highlights like "Golden Gate Gospel Train," "Jezebel," the World War II novelty "Stalin Wasn't Stallin'," and "Rock My Soul," listed by the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame as one of the "500 Songs That Shaped Rock & Roll."

what to buy next: For a more in-depth collection of the group's Bluebird recordings between 1937 and 1939, try Travelin' Shoes ♪♪♪♪ (Bluebird, 1992, compilation prod. Billy Altman). This is likely the easiest Golden Gate album to locate, and it contains both spirituals ("Bedside of a Neighbor," "Motherless Child," "Travelin' Shoes") and contemporary pop (Louis Armstrong's "Ol' Man Mose," Irving Berlin's "My Walking Stick," and a fabulous arrangement of "Stormy Weather").

what to avoid: The performances are as captivating as the ones on their studio recordings, but the surface noise of Radio Transcriptions: 1941–44 ♪♪½ (Document, 1997) makes it a chore to enjoy—though a spirited run-through of "Straighten Up and Fly Right" helps. The Very Best of the Golden Gate Quartet ♪♪ (World Pacific, 1997, prod. Pathé Marconi) covers the years 1955–69, but the recordings largely consist of spirituals and contemporary tunes (like Otis Redding's "The Dock of the Bay" and the Beatles' "Honey Pie"!) done as everything from Dixieland to doo-wop. Recorded mostly in France with session musicians, these attempts to modernize the group capture neither the quartet's best qualities nor the tenor of the times.

the rest:

Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order: Volume 1 (1937–38) ♪♪♪½ (Document, 1996)

Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order: Volume 2 (1938–39) ♪♪♪½ (Document, 1996)

Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order: Volume 3 (1938–39) ♪♪♪½ (Document, 1996)

Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order: Volume 4 (1939–43) ♪♪♪½ (Document, 1996)

worth searching for: Swing Down, Chariot ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1991, prod. Michael Brooks) contains 20 songs from the group's OKeh years (1941–50), including "Jezebel," "Swing Down, Chariot," and the more topical "No Restricted Signs" and "Atom and Evil." A French import, Golden Years (1949–1952) ♪♪♪ (FD, 1993, compilation prod. Christian Bonneau) contains European sessions recording between 1939 and 1952, including the quartet's first recordings with piano accompaniment. Three tracks from the Bluebird-era Gates (including "Rock My Soul") and three more from the Southern Sons, a quartet formed in 1939 by former Gates lead singer William Langford, are included on the I Hear Music in the Air! ♪♪♪♪ (Bluebird, 1992, compilation prod. Billy Altman) compilation.

influences:

◀◀ Mills Brothers, Famous Bluejay Singers, barbershop vocal groups

▶▶ Dixie Hummingbirds, Soul Stirrers, Swan Silvertones, Fairfield Four, Jubalaires, Southern Sons

Brian Mansfield

Golden Ring

See: Sandy & Caroline Paton, Gordon Bok, Bok, Muir & Trickett, Ed Trickett, Sara Grey, Cathy Barton & DavePara

Good Ol' Persons

Formed 1975, in Berkeley, CA.

Kathy Kallick, guitar, vocals; Laurie Lewis, fiddle, vocals (1975–77); Dorothy Baxter, guitar, vocals (1975–77); Barbara Mendelsohn, banjo, hammered dulcimer, vocals (1975–77); Sue Shelasky, mandolin, vocals (1975); Paul Shelasky, fiddle, vocals (1975–88); Kevin Wimmer, fiddle (1988–present); Sally Van Meter, dobro, banjo, vocals (1977–present); John Reischman, mandolin, vocals (1978–present); Markie Sanders, bass, vocals (1977–80); Bethany Raine, bass, vocals (1980–90); Beth Weil, bass, vocals (1991); Todd Phillips, bass (1991–present).

A musical institution in the San Francisco Bay area for more than two decades, the Good Ol' Persons began life as an all-women band that blended bluegrass, folk, old-time country, and swing music. Although the gender line would be breached the first year, musical eclecticism has remained a hallmark of this influential group. After recording a self-titled debut for Bay in 1977, the Persons made three albums during the 1980s for Kaleidoscope, all of which have recently been reissued by Flat Rock. Though relatively inactive in recent years, the band celebrated its 20th anniversary in 1995 with a live career-retrospective album on Sugar Hill and a gala two-night concert in Berkeley that reunited many of the band's past line-ups.

what to buy: Good n' Live ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Pieter Groenveld, Peter Thompson), which draws from live recordings spanning the years 1985–91, presents a satisfying overview of the band's career. Highlights include John Reischman's fiery playing on virtually every cut, Kathy Kallick's sassy lead vocals and such band favorites as "Part of a Story" and "I Can't Stand to Ramble." I Can't Stand to Ramble ♪♪♪ (Kaleidoscope, 1983/Flat Rock, 1995, prod. Tom Diamant) features the group's signature version of "You Don't Miss Your Water," a half-dozen Kallick originals, and a couple of cool Reischman-penned tunes: "Itzbin Reel" and "Get Up, Go to Work."

what to buy next: Anywhere the Wind Blows ♪♪♪ (Kaleidoscope, 1989/Flat Rock, 1995, prod. Tom Diamant) showcases strong Kallick lead vocals on "Waking up Alone" and the title song. Other highlights include Bethany Raines's swinging take on "Walking the Floor over You" and a pair of Reischman's original tunes.

the rest:

Part of a Story ♪♪♪ (Flat Rock, 1996)

solo outings:

Todd Phillips:

Released ♪♪♪½ (Varrick, 1995)
In the Pines ♪♪♪ (Gourd, 1996)
Time Frame ♪♪♪ (Compass, 1996)

John Reischman:

North of the Border ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1993)

influences:

◀◀ Vern & Ray, High Country

▶▶ Laurie Lewis & Grant Street, All-Girl Boys

see also: Kathy Kallick, Laurie Lewis, Sally Van Meter

Jon Hartley Fox

Steve Goodman

Born July 25, 1948, in Chicago, IL. Died Sept. 20, 1984, in Seattle, WA.

Steve Goodman was a folk singer from Chicago and a good friend of John Prine who emerged during the early 1970s with a gift for blues guitar playing and, like Prine, compassionate and humorous songwriting. His compositions have been recorded often by Jimmy Buffett, Prine, David Allen Coe, and the Clancy Brothers; Arlo Guthrie, John Denver, and Willie Nelson are among those who have covered Goodman's best-known song, "The City of New Orleans." After a bout with major labels, Goodman settled into a groove with his own Red Pajamas label until he died of leukemia at age 36.

what to buy: No Big Surprise ♪♪♪♪♪ (Red Pajamas, 1994, prod. various), a worthy anthology with a disc each of Goodman in the studio and onstage, offers more than a taste of him at his best. Santa Ana Winds ♪♪♪♪ (Red Pajamas, 1980, prod. Steve Goodman) showcases his strongest song collection—produced the way it ought to be.

what to buy next: Affordable Art ♪♪♪½ (Red Pajamas, 1983, prod. Steve Goodman, Dan Einstein) includes "Talk Backwards," "Watching Joey Glow," and "A Dying Cub Fan's Last Request," one of the most poignant of all baseball songs. Tribute to Steve Goodman ♪♪♪♪½ (Red Pajamas, 1985, prod. Al Bunetta) features lots of special guests—including John Prine, Arlo Guthrie, John Hartford, Bonnie Raitt, and David Bromberg—doing some of Goodman's best tunes.

the rest:
Artistic Hair ♪♪♪ (Red Pajamas, 1983)
Unfinished Business ♪♪♪ (Red Pajamas, 1987)
The Best of the Asylum Years, Volume 1 ♪♪♪ (Red Pajamas, 1988)
The Best of the Asylum Years, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Red Pajamas, 1989)

worth searching for: Somebody Else's Troubles ♪♪♪♪½ (Buddah, 1972, prod. Arif Mardin) is an early collection that includes "The Dutchman," "The Loving of the Game," and the powerful "The Ballad of Penny Evans."

influences:
◀◀ Bob Gibson, Josh White, Woody Guthrie, Bob Wills, Hank Williams, Big Bill Broonzy, Jethro Burns, Bob Dylan

▶▶ James McMurtry, Michael Penn, Steve Forbert

Leland Rucker

John Gorka

Born July 27, 1958, in Edison, NJ.

Championed by the new folk movement of the late 1980s and early 1990s, John Gorka is hardly a straight folk or country artist. But his dark, emotionally honest songs fit in perfectly with classic country paradigms. Gorka's characters typically feel out of place or out of step with the world around them. In his songs, this can make for some harrowing or sometimes just plain funny stories. That his music sometimes blurs the lines between the two is further evidenced by his collaborations and tours with country stars Mary Chapin Carpenter and Kathy Mattea, not to mention work with Nanci Griffith, another singer-songwriter with feet planted firmly in both traditions. With a voice as deep as his hair is dark, the New Jersey–born, Pennsylvania-based Gorka has quietly carved out a niche for himself as a writer and vocalist who sings about the process of living. Gorka was a mainstay at the club Godfrey Daniels in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, before winning the 1984 New Folk Award at Texas's Kerrville Folk Festival, recognition that helped him sign with independent Red House Records three years later. His fame spread after Will Ackerman signed him to his Windham Hill label and released Land of the Bottom Line in 1990. While his earliest albums were stark, unadorned affairs, Gorka began recording with a full band with 1994's Out of the Valley. Gorka now records for Windham Hill's High Street imprint.

what to buy: Nowhere is Gorka's mordant wit more apparent than on Land of the Bottom Line ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1990, prod. Bill Kollar), an evocative indictment of society—and relationships—run amok.

what to buy next: Jack's Crows ♪♪♪ (High Street, 1991, prod. Dawn Atkinson, William Ackerman) is the most critically acclaimed of Gorka's six albums and one of his most intimate. The video for "Houses in the Fields" was a moderate hit on CMT.

the rest:
I Know ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1987)
Temporary Road ♪♪♪ (High Street, 1992)
Out of the Valley ♪♪♪ (High Street, 1994) Between Five and Seven ♪♪♪ (High Street, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Stan Rogers, Woody Guthrie, Nanci Griffith

▶▶ Shawn Colvin, Dar Williams, Bill Morrissey, Lucy Kaplansky

Doug Pullen

Skip Gorman

Born May 18, 1949, in Providence, RI.

Skip Gorman is an accomplished bluegrass mandolinist, traditional fiddle player, and a onetime member of the old-timey group the Desert String Band, as well as being one half of the traditional duo Rabbit in a Log. He also recorded two albums of traditional cowboy songs for Folk-Legacy in the 1970s, and has performed Western songs for a quarter century. Lately, Gorman has toured and recorded as a solo artist, performing traditional cowboy songs exclusively.

John Gorka (© 1994, Stephen A. Ide)

what's available: Greener Prairie ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Skip Gorman) features Gorman's fine instrumentals and melodic vocals on a repertoire of mostly traditional western fare. Lonesome Prairie Love ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Skip Gorman) is just as good as the first, and just as true to the traditions from whence the songs are drawn.

influences:

◀◀ Carl Sprague, Eck Robertson

▶▶ Don Edwards

Randy Pitts

Vern Gosdin

Born August 5, 1934, in Woodland, AL.

Dubbed "The Voice" because of the devastating power of his dramatic vocals, Vern Gosdin grew up singing in church and in a family gospel quartet. Early on, he moved to Chicago and worked as a machinist while singing nights in smoky clubs. During the mid-1960s Gosdin moved to Los Angeles and joined the Golden State Boys, a bluegrass band that would also include brother Rex and Chris Hillman. Gosdin first hit the charts with "Hangin' On" (on the Bakersfield Sound label) and performed with Rex as a member of the Gosdin Brothers in 1967. The brothers would sing harmony on the Byrds' classic country-rock album, Sweetheart of the Rodeo. After failing to take their own recording career to the next level, the Gosdins parted ways in 1972 and Vern moved to Atlanta with his wife and two sons and started a glass business. Despite the success of that endeavor, music drew him to Nashville in 1976; Gosdin asked Emmylou Harris to sing with him on his first Music City session. She agreed and he was offered a deal with Elektra. He had his first Top 10 hit in 1977, at the age of 42, and for the next decade recorded for a variety of labels, finally scoring a #1 in 1984 with "I Can Tell by the Way You Dance (You're Gonna Love Me Tonight)" on Compleat. After signing with Columbia in 1986 Gosdin's reputation as a master of heartache and harmony was cemented by brilliant ballads, including "Do You Believe Me Now" and "Chiseled in Stone," the Country Music Association Song of the Year in 1989.

what to buy: Chiseled in Stone ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1987, prod. Bob Montgomery) is a masterwork of vocal balladry and songwriting artistry, with Gosdin collaborating with songwriting aces Max D. Barnes and Hank Cochran to craft the heart-stretching immortal country of the title track, "Do You Believe Me Now," "Set 'Em up Joe" (an Ernest Tubb tribute), "Is It Raining at Your House," and "Who You Gonna Blame It on This Time," all Top 10 hits.

what to buy next: Warning: Contains Country Music (The Great Ballads of Vern Gosdin) ♪♪♪♪½ (American Harvest, 1996, prod. Gary S. Paxton, Vern Gosdin, Ron Oates, Blake Mevis, Robert John Jones) is a stellar 19-track collection containing key tracks and re-recordings of material from his stints at Elektra, Compleat, and Columbia as well as a new single—"The Number"—and the non-ballad "Dream of Me," a 1981 Top 10 hit originally recorded for Ovation. The Gospel Album ♪♪♪♪½ (American Harvest, 1995, prod. Vern Gosdin, Robert John Jones) is the reissue of the Compleat album If Jesus Comes Tomorrow (What Then), a collection of gospel standards that Gosdin had sung in church and some newer Gosdin/Barnes collaborations.

the rest:

Alone ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1989)
10 Years of Greatest Hits—Newly Recorded ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1990)
Out of My Heart ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1991)
The Truly Great Hits of Vern Gosdin ♪♪♪♪ (American Harvest, 1994)
Super Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1994)
If You're Gonna Do Me Wrong (Do It Right) ♪♪♪♪ (American Harvest, 1996)
24-Karat Heartache ♪♪♪½ (American Harvest, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Blue Sky Boys, Byrds

▶▶ George Jones, Vince Gill

David Sokol

Susan Gottlieb

See: Phranc

The GP's

See: Ralph McTell, Richard & Linda Thompson

Davey Graham

Born November 22, 1940, in Leicester, England.

If one were to chart a genealogy of the development of British folk guitar, one could trace it back to one man: Davey Graham, the apparent lone Prime Mover of the London folk guitar scene during the late '50s and early '60s. Many of the artists who populated the London clubs in that era—among them Bert Jansch, John Renbourn, Martin Carthy, Ralph McTell, Wizz Jones, Robin

Williamson, even Paul Simon, who spent some time soaking up the scene—credit Graham with a decisive influence on their own guitar playing. As well they might. Graham's instrumental skills were near-legendary among the cognoscenti even before the release in 1965 of the watershed album Folk Roots New Routes with Sussex singer Shirley Collins, a now-obscure recording that at the time created a sensation. It heralded two important things: first, a successful wedding of English traditional folk song with a new guitar style tailored to the music; folk guitarists had cut their teeth on Lonnie Donegan and skiffle music, or American blues and jazz, but no one in the English scene had attempted to play English folk this way. The second innovation was that Graham had synthesized his wide interests in folk, blues, jazz, even Middle Eastern and Indian music, into a guitaristic musical vocabulary entirely his own, a lexicon of riffs that everyone who heard him scrambled to learn. Graham is generally credited with inventing DADGAD tuning—a modal alternate tuning now used seemingly everywhere (Pierre Bensusan, for one, plays exclusively in this tuning). If Graham didn't exactly invent it, there's little question that he was the first to pass it into popular parlance. His instrumental piece "Angie" was the de facto test piece for virtually every coffeehouse guitarist in England or America, fueled greatly by Paul Simon's recorded version on Simon and Garfunkel's Sounds of Silence album. His modal, raga-like version of "She Moved through the Fair" was nicked by Jimmy Page in his Yardbirds days (perhaps a tune-up for his later notorious rehashing of Bert Jansch's "Blackwaterside"!) and re-titled "White Summer." Jansch reworked Graham's legendary version of Charles Mingus's "Better Git It in Your Soul" at least three times on recordings; indeed, one can hardly listen to any of his or John Renbourn's early recordings—whether solo, duets, or with their band Pentangle—without practically hearing an inventory of Graham's guitar licks. Unfortunately, while Graham is still active and playing, his glory days seem to be well in the past, a stasis generally attributed to his long struggles with drug abuse. Stefan Grossman drew him out of seclusion long enough to record two LPs on the Kicking Mule label: The Complete Guitarist in 1978 and Dance for Two People (1982), both tentative and unremarkable efforts that are long out of print. Nevertheless, a whole world of guitarists, from contemporaries like Martin Carthy to moderns like Martin Simpson, Pierre Bensusan, or thousands more who play Celtic or British fingerstyle guitar, owe a debt to this totally original, highly influential guitarist.

what to buy: If you can find it, grab Folk Blues and All Points in Between ♪♪♪ (See for Miles, 1985, prod. Ray Horricks), a collection issued in France. Of the many LPs and EPs recorded for British Decca through the '60s, this CD culled from those recordings is all that's left in print—but it's a good one. His signature "Angie" isn't here, but "Better Git It in Your Soul" is, as well as Bobby Timmons's "Moanin'," an astonishing version of Willie Johnson's "I Can't Keep from Crying," the North African–flavored "Maajun," and enough other goodies from Graham's heyday to demonstrate why everyone who heard him knocked themselves out trying to play that way.

the rest:

(With others) Music of Ireland: Airs, Jigs, Reels, Hornpipes, and Marches Arranged for Fingerstyle Guitar ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
(With others) Art of Fingerstyle Guitar ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992) Guitar Player . . . Plus ♪♪♪ (See for Miles, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ Charles Mingus, Josh White, his own fertile imagination

▶▶ Martin Carthy, Bert Jansch, John Renbourn, Pierre Bensusan, Nic Jones

Chris Rietz

Grant Street

See: Laurie Lewis

Bill Grant

See: Delia Bell & Bill Grant

The Grass Is Greener

See: Richard Greene

Grateful Dead

Formed 1965, in San Francisco, CA. Disbanded 1995.

Jerry Garcia (died August 9, 1995), guitar, vocals; Bob Weir, guitar, vocals; Phil Lesh, bass, vocals; Bill Kreutzmann, drums; Mickey Hart, drums (1967–69, 1974–95); Ron "Pig Pen" McKernan (died March 8, 1973), vocals, keyboards (1965–72); Keith Godchaux (died July 23, 1980), keyboards (1972–79); Donna Godchaux, vocals (1972–79); Brent Mydland (died July 26, 1990), keyboards, vocals (1979–90): Vince Welnick, keyboards, vocals (1990–95).

Under the spell of the Band's Music from Big Pink, the Grateful Dead returned to its own roots in bluegrass, folk, and jug-band music with the 1970 album Workingman's Dead. The acoustic, folky mood also flavored their subsequent album, American Beauty, but the Dead have always sidled up alongside country rather than wholeheartedly embraced it. The elemental music stream has trickled through the band's electric rock improvisations—such as Merle Haggard's "Mama Tried" or Marty Robbins's "Big Iron"—but it was only on Dead side projects that guitarist and figurehead Jerry Garcia got to fully indulge his passion for traditional American country music.

320 grateful dead

what to buy: Workingman's Dead ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1970, prod. Grateful Dead) remains the crucial studio work in the band's entire oeuvre. American Beauty ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1970, prod. Grateful Dead) also manages to convey the band's fluid lyricism, although with somewhat darker undertones. On the solo side, Garcia's collaborations with longtime associate David Grisman—one of the key figures in the modern bluegrass movement—would be the means by which the late guitarist expressed his love and affinity for old timey music. Garcia's bluegrass prowess is best heard on Jerry Garcia/David Grisman ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1991) and Shady Grove ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1996).

what to avoid: Despite their occasionally rootsy forays, the Dead's hackneyed attempts at commercial relevance during the late 1970s—Terrapin Station woof! (Arista, 1977, prod. Keith Olsen), Shakedown Street woof! (Arista, 1978, prod. Lowell George, Dan Healy), and Go to Heaven woof! (Arista, 1980, prod. Gary Lyons)—should be avoided at all costs.

best of the rest:

The History of the Grateful Dead, Volume 1 (Bear's Choice) ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1973)
Two from the Vault ♪♪♪♪♪ (Grateful Dead Records, 1992)
Dick's Picks, Volume 4 ♪♪♪♪ (Grateful Dead Records, 1996)

solo outings:

Jerry Garcia:

(With Vassar Clements, Richard Greene, and David Grisman) Old & In the Way ♪♪♪ (Grateful Dead Records, 1975)
(With Grisman) Not for Kids Only ♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1993)
(With Old & In the Way) That High Lonesome Sound ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1996)

influences:

Cannon's Jug Stompers, Jimmy Reed, Bob Dylan, Rolling Stones

Allman Brothers Band, Los Lobos, Spin Doctors, Phish, Blues Traveler

Joel Selvin and Gary Graff

Jerry Garcia of the Grateful Dead (© Ken Settle)

Josh Graves

See: Flatt & Scruggs, Kenny Baker

The Greenbriar Boys

Formed 1958, in Madison, WI.

John Herald, guitar, vocals; Bob Yellin, banjo, vocals; Eric Weissberg, banjo, vocals (1958–59); Ralph Rinzler, mandolin, vocals (1959–64); Frank Wakefield, mandolin, vocals (1964–67); Jim Buchanan, fiddle (1964–67).

This band of young urban bluegrass enthusiasts played a small but important role in the folk revival of the 1960s, and must particularly be cited for bringing bluegrass music to urban audiences that may not otherwise have heard it. They won the band contest at the famed Union Grove Fiddler's Convention in 1960, a fair indication of the seriousness with which they approached the music. Guitarist John Herald was a product of the Washington Square folk jams in New York's Greenwich Village; he, Eric Weissberg, and Bob Yellin formed the first version of the band while students in Wisconsin. Mandolinist Ralph Rinzler joined in 1969, when Weissberg left. The band played a frenetic, skittery bluegrass blend; their repertoire was marked by the inclusion of traditional music from many traditions, from "Stewball" to "Amelia Earhart's Last Flight." In addition to their own recordings, they backed Joan Baez on some bluegrass selections and also recorded with West Coast singer Di'an James on a bluegrass and traditional country record. After Rinzler left the band in 1964, ace pickers Frank Wakefield (mandolin), and Jim Buchanan (fiddle) joined the group for a time.

what's available: One reissue compilation is currently available, titled The Best of the Greenbriar Boys ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1992).

worth searching for: Di'an & the Greenbriar Boy ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1963, prod. Jim Dickson) is a quirky, long out-of-print album on which both the band and vocalist James are shown to best advantage on an adventurous repertoire of bluegrass, traditional country, and folk material.

influences:

Red River Dave McEnery, Ramblin' Jack Elliott

David Grisman, Jody Stecher

Randy Pitts

bruce greene

slack key guitar

Slack key is an indigenous Hawaiian style of finger-picking solo acoustic guitar, the name of which refers to the guitar's open tunings (in the native Hawaiian tongue, slack key is called "ki ho'alu," literally, "loosen the key"). The tunings—which vary from player to player and may be kept secret—usually contain major chords of major chords with a 6th or 7th. Slack key developed from the Hawaiian cowboy tradition after cowboys (or "vaqueros") from Mexico, California, Spain, Portugal, and many South American countries introduced the guitar—and the Western concept of melody—to the islands during the 1830s. The guitar as a solo instrument gained attention in Hawaii during the 1940s and '50s with the recordings of such artists as Gabby Pahinui and Sonny Chillingworth and came to prominence during the '70s as those guitarists influenced a new generation of players. The selection of slack key albums available on the mainland is still limited, with the easiest to find coming from pianist George Winston's Dancing Cat label, which began recording some of the best contemporary players, including Keola Beamer and George Kuo, in 1994.

Brian Mansfield

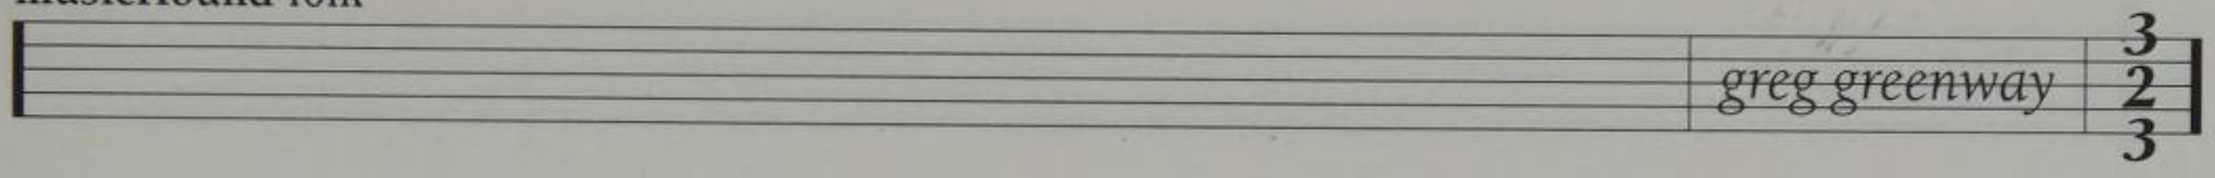
Bruce Greene

Born January 10, 1951, in NJ.

Bruce Greene is originally from an urban background. He went to Kentucky to study folklore at Western Kentucky University and stayed in the state for many years after, hunting down and learning from the older fiddlers who were the source of this beautiful, archaic music. One of his many accomplishments was the documentation and preservation of the music of John Salyer of Magoffin county, with the help of Grover Salyer, John's son. These unique recordings now reside in the archives of the Appalachian Center at Berea College. Presently living in Burnsville, North Carolina, Greene continues the tradition by passing on his knowledge at music camps around the country.

what to buy: Most recordings of old-time fiddlers include some sort of accompaniment, usually banjo and/or guitar. Greene dispenses with that custom for Five Miles of Ellum Wood ♪♪♪♪♪ (BG Records, 1996, prod. Bruce Greene), and for good reason. These tunes are not the well-known standards of fiddle music; they're unusual, slower paced, crooked, and wildly beautiful. They represent the essence of old-time fiddling, evoking a sense of the isolation and primitive nature of life in the Appalachian mountains. All were collected by Greene from older fiddlers, primarily in western Kentucky, some of whom would otherwise never have been heard outside their own communities. Many of the tunes are from the time of the Civil War or earlier. Greene's playing is distinctive and unique, particularly his bowing, and it's exactly what's required to present these tunes with all their inherent grace and dignity. He avoids the all-too-common tendency to overuse drone strings, preferring to ring a bass string occasionally with a light but sure touch. This kind of fiddle playing has been all but lost from the American traditional music genre; Greene does his part and more to preserve it. Comprehensive and interesting notes about the tunes and fiddlers are included in the liner notes, as are the fiddle tunings for each tune. This disc may be difficult to find in record stores, but can be obtained directly from the artist at Rte. 5, Box 340, Burnsville, NC 28714.

what to buy next: Fiddler's Dozen ♪♪♪♪½ (1994, prod. Bruce Greene, Hilary Dirlam) is similar to the above: uncommon Kentucky fiddle tunes learned from older fiddlers, played in the same distinctive style with solid backup guitar provided by Hilary Dirlam. This cassette originally came with a calendar with original drawings by Loy McWhirter; comprehensive liner notes are included. Vintage Fiddle Tunes ♪♪♪♪½ (Leatherwood Recordings, 1987, prod. Bruce Greene, Hilary Dirlam) features more beautiful Kentucky fiddle music with Hilary Dirlam accompanying on guitar. This was Greene's first cassette and is still available directly from him. Greene is also an excellent old-time banjo player, and you can hear some of that on Old Time Pickin' ♪♪♪♪ (1993, prod. Red Wilson, Bruce Greene). Here he joins Red Wilson, a fiddler from the western North Carolina/Eastern Tennessee region who is past 70 and still going strong. The tunes on this cassette are, for the most part, well-known old-time tunes. Wilson's playing is steady and rhythmic and his intonation better than many fiddlers half his age. Greene plays banjo and provides some vocals; Paul Buchanan plays guitar. It's available directly from Greene at the above address.



influences:

- John Salyer, Hiram Stamper, Darley Fulks, Gusty Wallace, other Kentucky fiddlers
- Too many aspiring old-time fiddlers to count

Dave Shombert

Richard Greene /The Grass Is Greener

Born November 9, 1942, in Hollywood, CA.

Fiddle/violin virtuoso Richard Greene started out with Bill Monroe's Blue Grass Boys and in 1969 formed the country-rock fusion band Seatrain with bluegrass crony Peter Rowan, also a Monroe alumnus. During the early 1970s he returned to his bluegrass roots, co-starring with David Grisman and Jerry Garcia in the legendary Old & In the Way and producing as well as accompanying Muleskinner. During the late 1980s Greene recorded two albums with a group known as the Grass Is Greener, whose lineup over the years has included Bill Keith, David Grier, Kenny Blackwell, Tim Emmons, Butch Baldassari, Tony Trischka, and Buell Neidlinger.

what to buy: The Greene Fiddler ♪♪♪½ (Sierra, 1995, prod. Richard Greene) spans Greene's musical career from 1967 through the 1990s and showcases the fiddler's mastery of styles ranging from bluegrass to Bach. Especially noteworthy are "Soldier's Joy" and his version of "Blue Rondo a la Turk." Muleskinner: A Potpourri of Bluegrass Jam ♪♪♪♪ (Sierra, 1974/Warner Bros., 1994, prod. Richard Greene, Joe Boyd) is a landmark of the "newgrass" era that features some stellar call-and-response fiddle and guitar playing on "Muleskinner Blues."

what to buy next: Seatrain ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1969, prod. George Martin) was produced by legendary Beatles collaborator Martin and represents his first project after the last Fab Four album. On this recording Greene unleashes a psychedelic version of "Orange Blossom Special" that has to be heard to be believed.

the rest:

(With Seatrain) Marblehead Messenger ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1971)
The Grass Is Greener ♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1995)
(With Old & In the Way) That High Lonesome Sound ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1996)
(With the Grass Is Greener) Wolves a' Howlin' ♪♪♪½ (Rebel, 1996) worth searching for: Blue Rondo (Sugar Hill, 1979/1992) is available on LP and cassette.

influences:

- Bill Monroe, Seatrain, Scotty Stoneman
- Peter Rowan, John McEuen, Butch Baldassari, Mark O'Connor

Douglas Fulmer

Greg Greenway

Born December 13, 1952, in Richmond, VA.

Freedom and justice are the themes that run through the songs of Virginia-born and Massachusetts-based singer-songwriter Greg Greenway. A former high school and college basketball player, Greenway used music as a release from the anger and frustration sparked by the racism he saw his teammates experiencing. Although he initially attracted attention with his humorous ode on bad driving, "Massachusetts," his greatest impact was with his songs that examine racial problems and human communication.

Greenway first visited Boston during his senior year at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Virginia. Walking through Harvard Square, he was inspired by the folk singers and street musicians that he saw. Although he returned to Virginia to finish college, he moved north in 1976. Assembling a folk/rock band, he spent a year opening shows for Livingston Taylor all over the eastern United States. When the group added an electric guitarist, he became disenchanted with the changed sound and left to form another group, Trace of Red, that performed covers of material by the Who and the Police. Greenway stayed with the band for three years. In 1981 Greenway and bass player Doug Wray began playing as an acoustic duo.

what to buy: A Road Worth Walking Down ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Front, 1992, prod. Greg Greenway, Dave Dickerson) features band arrangements of the songs that Greenway and Wray perfected during their duo performances. In addition to Greenway's hilarious satire on reckless driving, "Massachusetts," recorded during a coffeehouse concert, the album includes his rhythmic songs of freedom—"Free at Last" and the title track. David Wilcox sings harmony on the a capella tune, "Waterfall."

what to buy next: Singing for the Landlord ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Front, 1995, prod. Greg Greenway, Dave Dickerson) picks up where Greenway's debut album left off. A deeply personal and politically conscious recording, the album spotlights Greenway's gospel-flavored songwriting.

worth searching for: Recorded at the intimate Old Vienna folk music coffeehouse in Westboro, Massachusetts, The Old Vi-

clive gregson

enna Tapes—Volume 2 (Fast Folk, 1993) includes a live recording of Greenway's chilling tune, "Ghost Dance."

influences:

Livingston Taylor, David Wilcox

David Wilcox, Brooks Williams

Craig Harris

Clive Gregson

Born January 4, 1955, in Ashton-under-Lyne, Manchester, England.

Someone once groused, "Folk music is nothing but country with a British accent." Maybe she was right. Clive Gregson's got a Nashville label these days, and if he had a Tennessee twang he'd be a superstar. The Manchester native fronted Any Trouble, a Stiff Records band in the days when Stiff was just making its reputation as a purveyor of cool class. Stiff, however, was more interested in labelmate Elvis Costello. Any Trouble disbanded, and Gregson toured for a time with Christine Collister, both as a duo and as part of Richard Thompson's band. All the while Gregson continued to write intelligent pop songs and deliver them with a friendly voice and rapid-fire guitar. When the duo broke up, it seemed that the big-voiced Collister got custody of the audiences, but Gregson persisted. Now on Nashville's Compass label, he may or may not be looking for that big break anymore, but he's getting the right kind of support. Gregson has also produced albums for the Oysterband and Stephen Fearing, and his songs are often covered by other musicians. In the duo days, his own warm baritone was often overshadowed by Collister's powerful voice, but it's one of his secret weapons.

what to buy: I Love This Town ♪♪♪♪ (Compass, 1996, prod. Garry West, Clive Gregson) is a collection of pop songs that rivals the best of Any Trouble and Gregson/Collister.

what to buy next: The more acoustically oriented People and Places ♪♪♪½ (Compass, 1995, prod. Clive Gregson) features some very strong Gregson compositions like "Mary's Divorce" (based loosely on the Irish traditional tune "Mairi's Wedding").

the rest:

Strange Persuasions ♪♪♪½ (Demon, 1985/Compass, 1995)

worth searching for: Carousel of Noise ♪♪♪♪ (Flypaper, 1994, prod. Clive Gregson) is a live CD containing many of the songs Gregson and Collister popularized (including "I Shake" and "It's All Just Talk"); it was sold through the Richard Thompson fan mailing list Flypaper (Box 391, Wainscott, NY 11975). Keep an eye out for Welcome to the Workhouse ♪♪♪♪ (Special Delivery, 1990, prod. Clive Gregson, John Wood), a collection of demos and rarities that contains a revealingly understated cover of Michael Jackson's "She's out of My Life."

influences:

Richard Thompson, Elvis Costello

Don Dixon, Lee Collinson

see also: Christine Collister, Clive Gregson & Christine Collister

Pamela Murray Winters

Clive Gregson & Christine Collister

Formed 1985, in Manchester, England; Clive Gregson born January 4, 1955, in Ashton-under-Lyne, Manchester, England; Christine Collister born on the Isle of Man, U.K.

Between 1980 and 1984, Clive Gregson led an offbeat pub-rock band called Any Trouble. Clever and attractive, but neither groundbreaking nor commercial, the band eventually broke up without leaving Gregson in any position to carve out a hitmaking solo career. Sizing up his options, he happened to hear Christine Collister performing in a small bar and was immediately taken with her smoky alto voice and impassioned delivery. He agreed to produce some tracks for her, and the pair began performing in clubs. Soon, both were on tour as members of Richard Thompson's backup band, and with that extra experience behind them, they launched what would be a seven-year period of smart, poignant folk/rock. Because they were romantically linked during that time, the story of their musical career parallels that of their affair, shifting from tentative (Mischief, highlighted by the lovely but cutting "I Specialise"), to self-assured and powerful (1989's classic A Change in the Weather), to sniping and bitter (1992's The Last Word). Like Thompson, Gregson is a terrific guitarist, and he's not a bad singer, but his real skill lies in his ability to pen canny and insightful country/rock and pop/rock tunes. He has gone on to record several rather impressive solo albums, but he'll probably never again have as potent an instrument to write for as Collister's voice. She recently put out a live album that, sadly, shows what can happen when someone with great pipes loses their direction. The sound is there, but the feeling and intent are not.

what to buy: Varied and peppy, but often melancholy and/or dramatically moving, A Change in the Weather ♪♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1989, prod. Clive Gregson) features two absolutely heartstopping vocal performances by Collister, plus a host of other strong numbers, particularly "This Is the Deal," a touching tale of domestic abuse. Either "A Blessing in Disguise" or "How Weak I Am" would be worth the price of admission for any disc; together, they beautifully demonstrate the magic of Gregson's songwriting and Collister's singing.

what to buy next: Darker than Weather, The Last Word ♪♪♪♪ (RNA/Rhino, 1992, prod. Clive Gregson) was the album Gregson and Collister made after their relationship had come to an end. You may want to sit down for this one.

what to avoid: An album of cover tunes by Jackson Browne, Bruce Springsteen, Aztec Camera, Merle Haggard, and others, Love Is a Strange Hotel ♪♪ (RNA, 1990, prod. Clive Gregson, Christine Collister) should have been brilliant. But both Gregson's arrangements and Collister's vocals are too tame, too reverent, and other than Browne's "For a Dancer," the album floats along without making much of an impression.

the rest:
Home and Away ♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1987/Flying Fish, 1992) Mischief ♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1988)

influences:
◀◀ Richard & Linda Thompson, Hank Williams, Sandy Denny, Nick Drake
▶▶ John Wesley Harding, Eleanor McEvoy, Matt Keating

see also: Clive Gregson, Christine Collister

Bob Remstein

Adie Grey

Born in Los Angeles, CA.

Adie Grey, granddaughter to film composer Bill Lava, and her husband/partner/co-writer Dave MacKenzie, a first-rate, Chicago-bred acoustic blues guitarist, rank among Nashville's most versatile couples. Their day job takes them around the world as players with the surviving member of Sam and Dave. In their spare time they write and produce their own music. Much like Gillian Welch and David Rawlings, or even Buddy and Julie Miller, Adie Grey's name on the CD spine speaks only to who's singing and whose smile adorns the cover. MacKenzie writes or co-writes most of the songs, and his guitar work anchors Grey's vocals (Grey also plays dulcimer). Their collaboration has about it the same sturdy care that marks the best of the 1960s folk boom: an emphasis on songs and the variety of ways they might be presented, with gentle tints of gospel and blues.

what's available: Grey's second outing, Grandpa's Advice ♪♪♪½ (Hey Baby! Music, 1997, prod. Adie Grey, Dave MacKenzie), reveals somewhat more stylistic versatility than does her debut, Brand New Old Time Music ♪♪♪½ (Hey Baby! Music, 1994, prod. Adie Grey, Dave MacKenzie). That said, they're both pleasing, graceful discs that have about them the soothing kindness that makes Victoria Williams so captivating. Grandpa's Advice runs from the touching "My Old Man" to the catchy "Daddy Put Your Beer Down" (the next line is "Mama wants to dance," and Jo-El Sonnier is on accordion) to the lilting Irish drinking wisdom of "The Grape and the Grain." Brand New Old Time Music is a simpler disc, though guest appearances by Wynonna Judd, John Hartford, Ranger Doug, and Tammy Rogers will remind the listener that it is not without ambition. On both discs Grey stays with her strength: a sweet, limber voice that exudes happiness, even on the most bittersweet of songs.

influences:
◀◀ Peggy Seeger, Christine Collister
▶▶ Maria Sangiolo, Debi Smith

Grant Alden

Sara Grey

Born in Boston, MA.

Sara Grey is a fine singer of traditional ballads with a sweet and powerful voice. Born in Boston, she lived in Greensboro, North Carolina, until she was nine years old, which fueled a lifelong love for traditional mountain music and the five-string banjo. She later attended Boston University and then Oberlin College in Ohio. She earned a master's degree in theatre arts at Montana State University while spending summers in repertory theatre at the University of Washington. In Montana she met and was influenced by folk singers Bob and Evelyn Beers and later became a neighbor of the great Appalachian singer Jean Ritchie in Port Washington, New York. After moving to Philadelphia in 1967, Grey began learning to play the banjo and studied folklore at the University of Pennsylvania, specializing in the study of Amish recreational pastimes. She subsequently spent a number of years living in England, Scotland, and Wales, with occasional forays back to the states to tour and record. Her repertoire mixes traditional music from all of these sources.

what to buy: Sara ♪♪♪ (Harbourtown, 1994, prod. Gordon Jones, Bob Thomas) is a nice—and very generous at 57 minutes—collection of ballads from several traditions and is typical of the type of material Grey performs in concert. Selections range from child ballads such as "The Lady Gay" to Appalachian fiddle tunes like "Betsy Liken." Grey does a particularly nice version of "Across the Bridge," which she describes as "an old Carolina hymn." Actually, it was written by Van Morrison, but why quibble . . . it's still good.

grianan

what to buy next: Promises to Keep ♪♪♪ (Harbourtown, 1990) is available on cassette only and is another fine collection of traditional material that features Grey's vocals and banjo playing with help from friends on guitar, bouzouki, fiddle, and bass.

the rest:
Sara Grey with Ed Trickett ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1970) (cassette only)
A Breath of Fresh Air ♪♪♪½ (Fellside, 1981) (cassette only) Making the Air Resound ♪♪♪½ (Fellside, 1984) (cassette only) Flash Company ♪♪♪½ (Fellside, 1987) (cassette only)
You Gave Me a Song ♪♪♪½ (Greenwich Village, 1987) (cassette only) worth searching for: It's worth noting that Grey also appears on the two recently released Golden Ring reunion CDs Five Days Singing, Volumes I and II ♪♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1996, prod. Sandy and Caroline Paton). These were originally released in 1971 but still resonate with obvious good fun and equally excellent singing by a very strong company of excellent musicians.

influences:
◀◀ Bob & Evelyn Beers, Ed Trickett, Hedy West
▶▶ Ann Mayo Muir, Anne Hills

Neal Walters

Grianan

See: Kevin Crawford

David Grier

Born September 23, 1961, in Washington, DC.

The preeminent bluegrass lead guitar player of the 1990s, David Grier was exposed to the music early, through his father Lamar Grier, banjo picker for Bill Monroe during the mid-1960s. A devotee of the idiosyncratic playing of Clarence White, Grier first made himself known on a national level through recordings with the Doug Dillard Band and Country Gazette. Since launching his solo career during the late 1980s, Grier has become the highest-profile guitarist in bluegrass, thanks to tours and recordings with the Rounder Banjo Extravaganza, the Grass Is Greener, and Psychograss; a pair of well-received solo albums and an outstanding duet album with mandolinist Mike Compton; guest appearances on literally scores of bluegrass, folk, and country recordings; and three Guitar Player of the Year awards from the International Bluegrass Music Association (1992, 1993, and 1995).

what to buy: Freewheeling ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Jim Rooney, David Grier) acknowledges Grier's debt to the late Clarence White with dazzling versions of "Alabama Jubilee" and "The New Soldier's Joy." Solo performances on "Gold Rush" and "Fog Rolling over the Glen" are especially nice, but most of the album features a first-rate band that includes Stuart Duncan and Sam Bush.

what to buy next: Lone Soldier ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Stuart Duncan) casts Grier in a jazzier light on "Porkchops and Applesauce" and "Alphabet Soup," but the more traditional-sounding tunes, particularly his originals "Smith Chapel" and "R Somethin'," suit him better. The superb backing band includes Béla Fleck, Craig Smith, Duncan, and Bush. Climbing the Walls ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1991, prod. David Grier, Mike Compton), which pairs Grier with former Nashville Bluegrass Band mandolinist Mike Compton, is a sparkling all-instrumental romp through a set that includes original tunes, lesser-known gems from Bill Monroe ("Honky Tonk Swing" and "Going up Caney") and a killer duet on "Black Mountain Rag."

the rest:
Panorama ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Clarence White, Tony Rice
▶▶ Wyatt Rice, Chris Thile

Jon Hartley Fox

Patty Griffin

Born March 16, 1964, Old Town, ME.

Patty Griffin has a knack for writing songs you think you've heard before. While her vocals are at times too impassioned where understatement is called for, Griffin's hooky tunes are elevated by stark confessional imagery, and most are grabbers. The youngest of seven children, Griffin took up the guitar when she was 16. She began performing regularly after moving to Boston in her mid-20s. Married at 24, she was encouraged to overcome her innate shyness and take to the stage by her new husband. The relationship dissolved four years later, but Griffin

Patty Griffin (© Ken Settle)

3
2
8 grace griffith

continued to write and perform. Her A&M debut was delayed when the inhibited New Englander didn't respond well when working in a studio with a producer. As a fall-back option, she was freed to take a more informal approach, recording almost everything solo in houses in Boston and Nashville.

what's available: Living with Ghosts ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1996, prod. Steve Barry), is less a folk album than a rock recording without the rhythmic clutter, a la Springsteen's contemporaneous The Ghost of Tom Joad. Think Melissa Etheridge without the rote arrangements and with much better songs.

worth searching for: Let Him Fly ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1997, prod. Steve Barry, others), a three-track promotional CD, features radio-oriented re-mixes of "Let Him Fly" and "Every Little Bit" from Living with Ghosts.

influences:

◀◀ Bruce Springsteen, Melissa Etheridge, Tracy Chapman

▶▶ Burns Sisters

Steven Stolder

Grace Griffith

Born October 30, 1956, in Washington, DC.

Grace Griffith is an eloquent and passionate singer who is true to her name—graceful. In her native Washington, D.C., area, she was named Washington Area Music Association's "Best Female Vocalist" in both the Celtic and traditional folk categories for four consecutive years.

what's available: GRACE ♪♪♪½ (Blix Street, 1996, prod. Grace Griffith, Blix Street) is a re-release of sorts. It contains eight tracks from Griffith's debut album, Every Hue and Shade, along with "Sailing/Ships Are Sailing" from Siren Song by Connemara, a group that features Griffith as the lead singer, and Griffith's version of "Turning Away," Dougie MacLean's anthem to his Scottish ancestors that was recorded especially for GRACE and is not on Every Hue and Shade. When asked why they chose to create a new album rather than simply re-releasing Every Hue and Shade, Blix Street noted that, "It isn't often that you have the opportunity to begin again with an album that is already a near classic. The people who bought Every Hue and Shade already know. We are asking them to join us in turning on the world to Grace's music, while offering those early believers an opportunity to obtain GRACE at our cost." So why not? Alternatively, I suppose you can just buy Every Hue and Shade ♪♪♪ (Grace Griffith, 1993, prod. Grace Griffith). Either way you get Betsy Rose's spellbinding "Water, Fire, and Smoke," a spiritual tribute to Mother Earth, and "Beautiful Fool," Don Henry's portrait of Martin Luther King Jr. as seen through the eyes of those who were children when he lived and died. Griffith sings with strength and compassion and an obvious sense of inner peace. She observes: "Music is the closest I come to a feeling of bridging the division between the material and the intangible."

solo outings:

Connemara:

Beyond the Horizon ♪♪♪ (Connemara, 1993)

Siren Song ♪♪♪½ (Connemara, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ Dolores Keane, Mary Black

▶▶ Lisa Moscatiello, Susan Graham-White

Neal Walters

Nanci Griffith

Born July 16, 1954, in Seguin, TX.

Nanci Griffith has spent a career bridging the uneasy gap between country and folk, earning critical praise, devoted fans, and minimal mass market success. Emerging from the Austin, Texas, folk scene during the mid-1970s, she recorded two albums for tiny labels and crisscrossed the country, performing at festivals. By the time she cut her first Nashville album in 1984, she had a reputation as a writer of tight, insightful songs. Griffith released her first work for MCA in 1987, but big-label backing did not translate into chart success for her idiosyncratic style (in the U.S., anyway; Griffith has consistently topped charts in Ireland and Britain). Her songs, meanwhile, became Top 10 country hits for other singers like Kathy Mattea and Suzy Bogguss. Along with fellow Texan Lyle Lovett, Griffith just couldn't seem to carve out a niche in Nashville, even as her music was perceived in other quarters as too countrified to be rock. Fortunately, a move to MCA's pop division in 1989 pointed Griffith toward a grown-up pop emphasis that better suited both her distinctive voice and the burgeoning adult-contemporary format. Griffith held this course while changing labels to Elektra and remains in demand as a collaborator for everyone from the Chieftains to R.E.M. Still, she's best known as a musical storyteller whose slice-of-life vignettes like "Trouble in the Fields," "Love at the Five and Dime," and "It's a Hard Life" only gain impact with repeated handlings by other singers.

Nanci Griffith (© Ken Settle)

david grisman

what to buy: Merely mentioning Last of the True Believers ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder/Philo, 1986, prod. Jim Rooney, Nanci Griffith) reduces many Griffith fans to mindless babbling. It is a beauty, with a supporting cast of musicians' musicians (Béla Fleck, Roy Huskey Jr., Maura O'Connell, Lyle Lovett) and a fistful of classic Griffith songs ("Love at the Five and Dime," "More than a Whisper," "Lookin' for the Time"). Another fine introduction to the Griffith songbook is the live One Fair Summer Evening ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1988, prod. Nanci Griffith, Tony Brown), with moving versions of much of her best material and an understated reading of Julie Gold's "From a Distance" that eclipses Bette Midler's mawkish rendition.

what to buy next: Other Voices, Other Rooms ♪♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1993, prod. Jim Rooney), a Nanci Griffith record devoid of Nanci Griffith material, is a study of her interpretative abilities, featuring 17 songs by everyone from Woody Guthrie to John Prine to (yep) Janis Ian. On Late Night Grande Hotel ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1992, prod. Peter Van-Hooke, Rod Argent), the most successful-to-date of Griffith's VH1-style albums, Phil Everly duets on the nervous, driving "It's Just Another Morning Here," and Griffith continues her tradition of incisive political commentary with "One Blade Shy of a Sharp Edge."

what to avoid: The problem with Lone Star State of Mind ♪♪ (MCA, 1987, prod. Tony Brown, Nanci Griffith) isn't material; nor is it collaborators (Fleck, Huskey et al.). It's MCA's production, which attempts to jam Griffith's music into a pair of pink sequined cowboy boots. Bad move. Griffith is many things, but a good ole girl ain't one of 'em.

the rest:
Poet in my Window ♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1982)
Once in a Very Blue Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder 1984)
Little Love Affairs ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1988)
Storms ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1989)
The MCA Years: A Retrospective ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1993)
Flyer ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1995)
Blue Roses from the Moon ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1997) worth searching for: There's a Light beyond These Woods ♪♪♪ (MCA UK, 1982) is a re-release of Griffith's first album from 1978, recorded live in an Austin studio.

influences:
◀◀ Carolyn Hester, Bill Staines, Weavers, Judy Collins, Tom Paxton ▶▶ Lucinda Williams, Iris DeMent

Elizabeth Lynch

David Grisman

Born March 23, 1945, in Hackensack, NJ.

Dubbed "The Paganini of the Mandolin" by The New York Times, David Grisman is also a well-known champion of the "new acoustic music" movement, which draws heavily from traditional bluegrass, blues, ethnic music, and jazz. Grisman discovered the mandolin as a teenager and soaked up the stylings of bluegrass pioneers Bill Monroe and Frank Wakefield. His recording career began during the mid-1960s with the Even Dozen Jug Band, and during the late 1960s he hooked up with Bill Monroe–alumnus Peter Rowan to form the rock group Earth Opera, which was based in Boston. During the early 1970s, as a member of Old & In the Way and Muleskinner, Grisman wowed critics and fans at bluegrass festivals and college campuses with his fast-as-lightning picking style and mastery of jazz and classical music as well as bluegrass. In 1977 the floodgates opened when Kaleidoscope Records released the David Grisman Quintet. The record brilliantly captured the breadth and depth of Grisman's playing, helped no doubt by the top-notch accompaniment of guitarist Tony Rice and fiddler Darrol Anger. Jerry Garcia gave Grisman the nickname "Dawg," which has since been adopted by the manic mandolinist to describe his unique brand of music.

what to buy: DGQ-20 ♪♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1996, prod. David Grisman) is a three-disc, 20-year David Grisman Quintet retrospective. What's unique is that it's made up entirely of previously unreleased tracks from both live and studio performances. Among the outstanding DGQ alumni featured on the collection—and who established impressive careers of their own—are Darrol Anger, Mike Marshall, Mark O'Connor, and Tony Rice. The set also contains memorable collaborations with Jethro Burns, Vassar Clements, Jerry Garcia, Stephane Grappelli, Svend Asmussen, and the Kronos Quartet.

what to buy next: David Grisman Quintet ♪♪♪½ (Kaleidoscope, 1977, prod. David Grisman) is the one that started it all and subsequently set the stage for new-agey "Dawg" music. The interplay between Grisman and guitarist Tony Rice is awesome. Doc & Dawg ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1997, prod. David Grisman) teams Grisman with legendary flatpicker Doc Watson for an acoustic journey through an array of musical styles, including a sparkling "Soldier's Joy," a lilting Bill Monroe blues, "Bluegrass Stomp," and an easy-rolling version of George Gershwin's "Summertime."

David Grisman (© Stephen A. Ide)

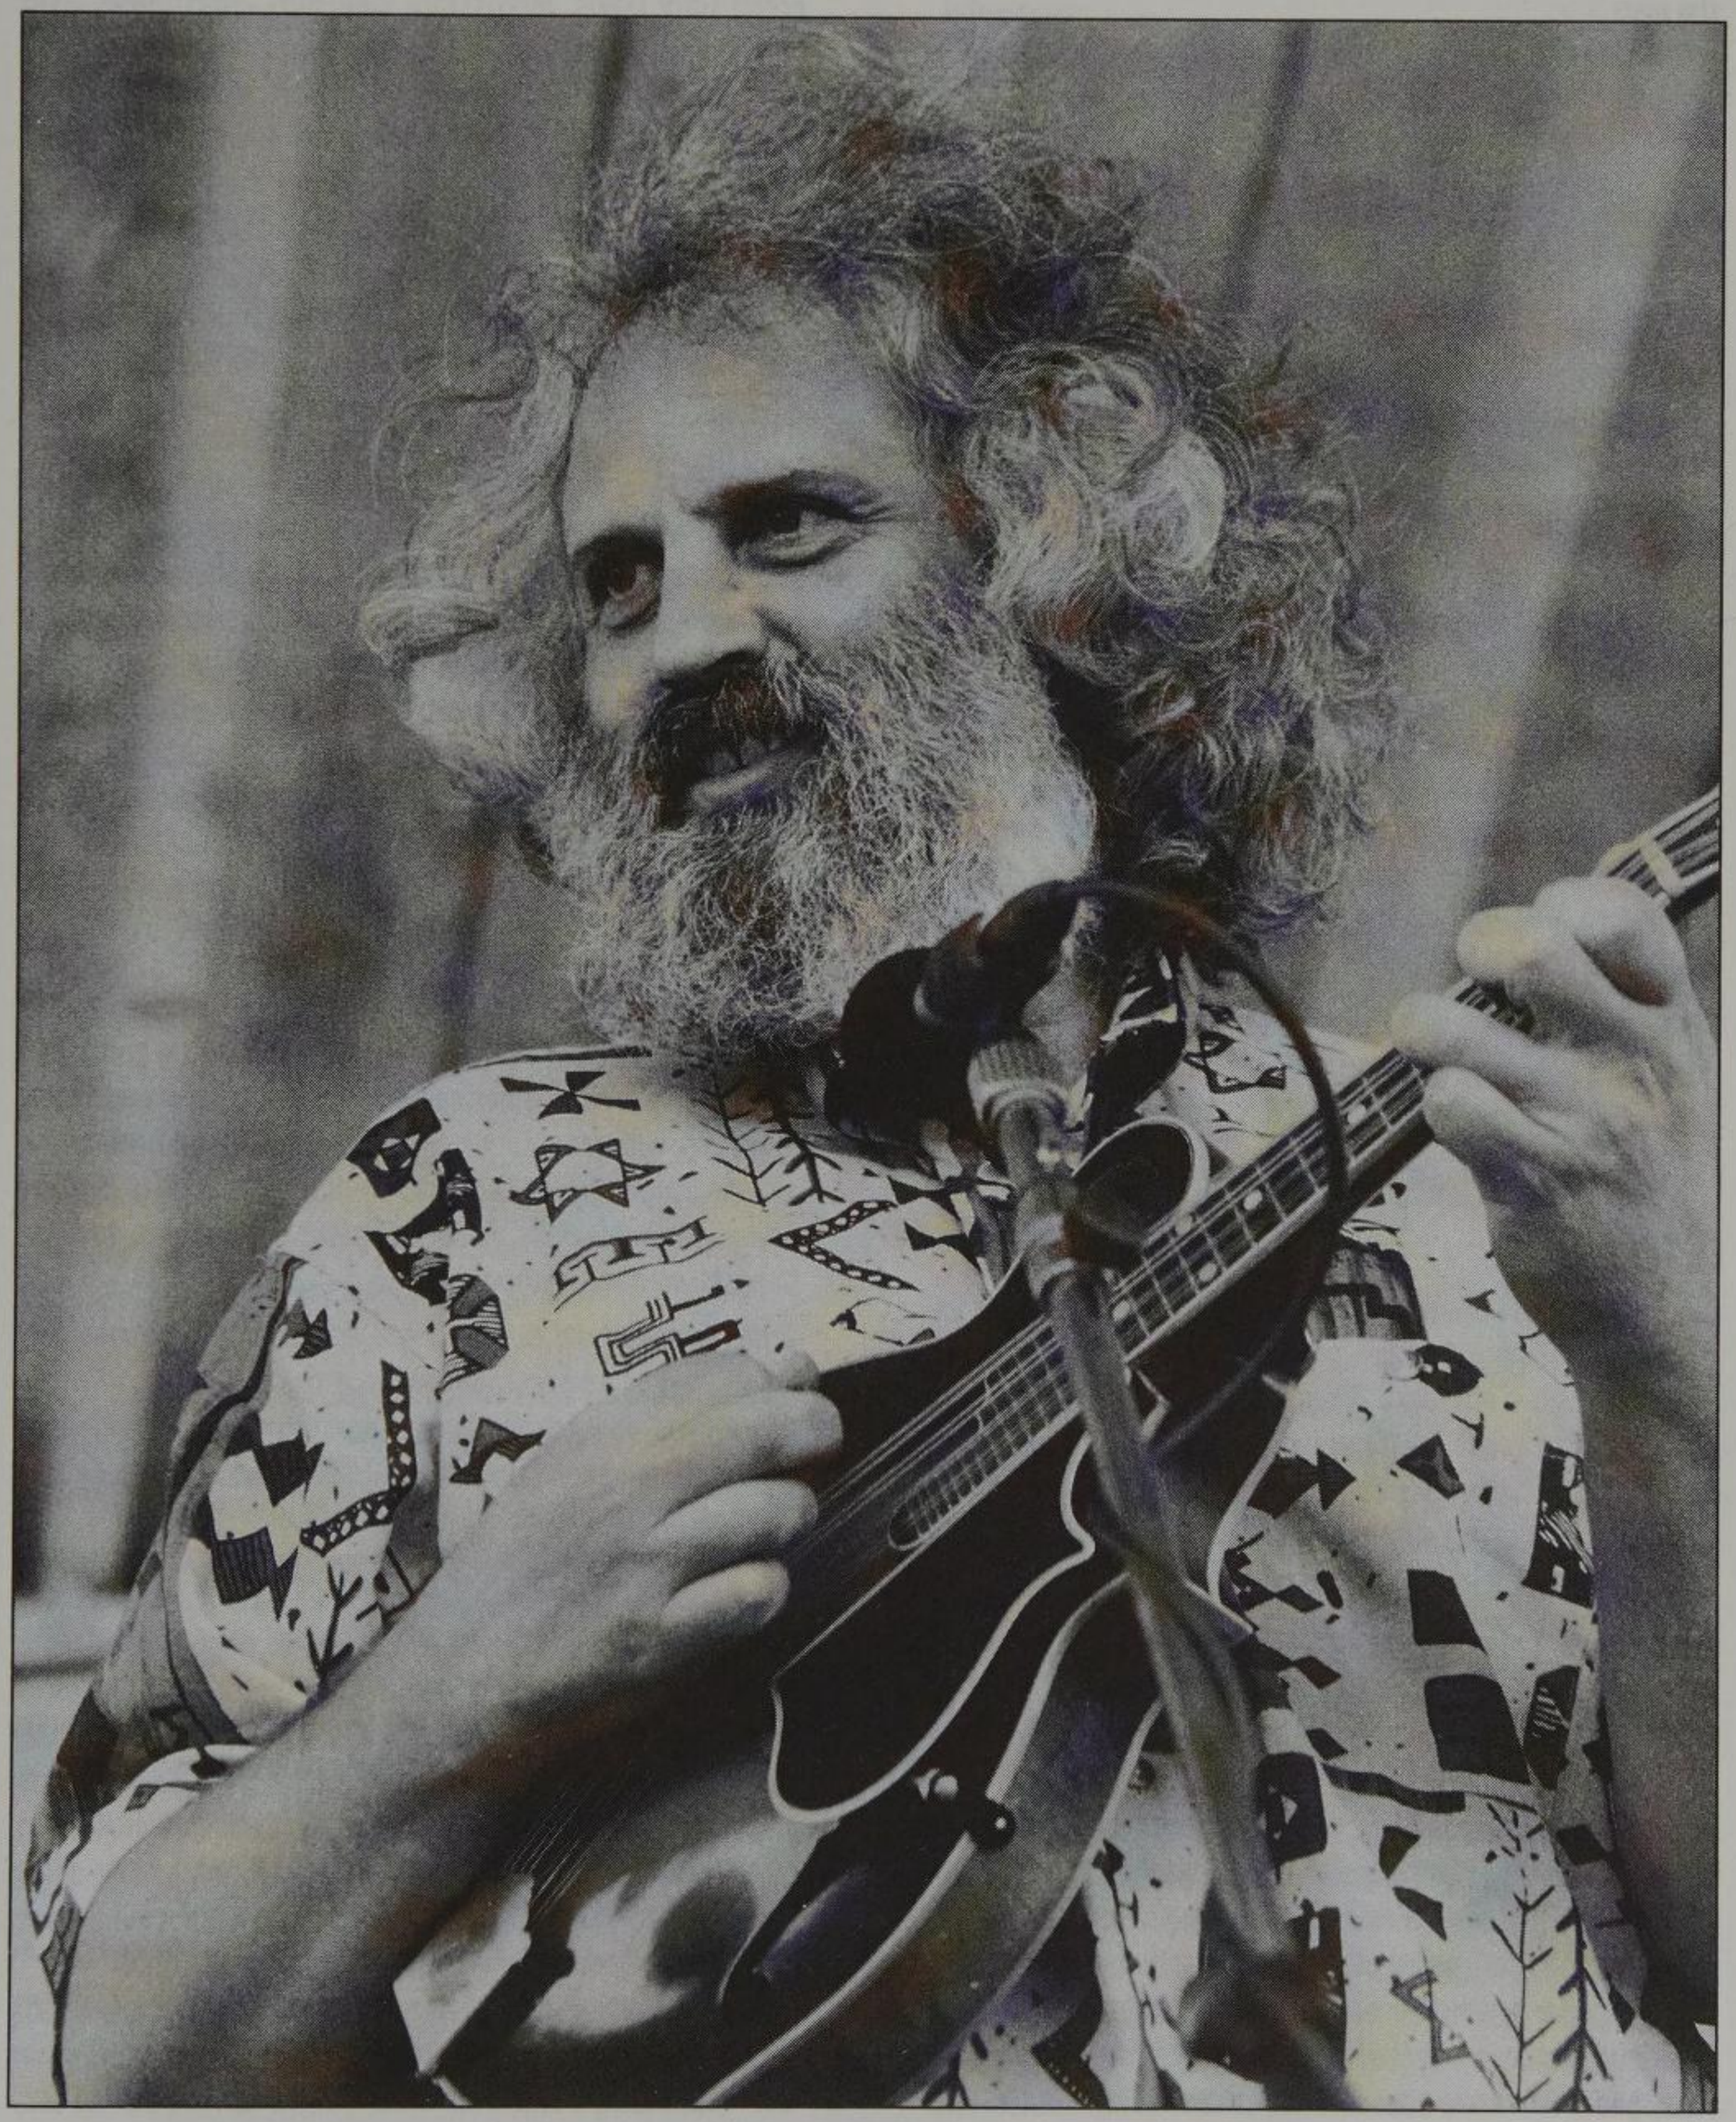
david grisman



stefan grossman

the rest:
(With Old & In the Way) Old & In the Way ♪♪♪♪ (Grateful Dead Records, 1975)
The David Grisman Rounder Compact Disc ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1976)
Hot Dawg ♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1979/1987)
Early Dawg ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1980)
David Grisman Quintet 1980 ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1980)
(With Vince Gill, Herb Pedersen, Jim Buchanan, and Emory Gordy Jr.) Here Today ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1982/1992)
Acoustic Christmas ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1983)
Mondo Mando ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros./Zebra Acoustic, 1983)
(With Andy Statman) Mandolin Abstractions ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1983)
Home Is Where the Heart Is ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988)
Dawg '90 ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1990)
(With Red Allen, Herb Pedersen, Jim Buchanan, James Kerwin, and Jerry Garcia) Bluegrass Reunion ♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1992)
Dawgwood ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1993)
(With Jerry Garcia) Not for Kids Only ♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1993)
(With Daniel Kobialka) Common Chord ♪♪♪½ (Cymekob, 1993)
(With Tony Rice) Tone Poems: The Sounds of the Great Vintage Guitars and Mandolins ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1994)
(With Martin Taylor) Tone Poems II ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1995)
Dawganova ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1995)
(With Andy Statman) Songs of our Fathers ♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1995)
(With Old & In the Way) That High Lonesome Sound ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1996)
(With Old & In the Way) Breakdown ♪♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Bill Monroe, Frank Wakefield
▶▶ Béla Fleck, Jerry Douglas, Darrol Anger, Mike Marshall, Tony Rice

see also: Muleskinner

Rick Petreycik

Stefan Grossman

Born April 16, 1945, in New York, NY.

The lessons taught by pre–World War II acoustic bluesmen have been learned by fingerstyle guitarist, folklorist, and instructor Stefan Grossman. In addition to writing many instructional books published by Mel Bay Publications and producing videos for his own company, Vestapol, Grossman has recorded numerous albums of his transcriptions of pre-1930 blues tunes. Inspired by the early '60s folk scene in Greenwich Village, Grossman first attracted attention as a member of the Even Dozen Jug Band, which also featured John Sebastian and Maria Muldaur, and he performed occasionally with the Fugs. In the late 1960s, Grossman apprenticed with such bluesmen as Reverend Gary Davis, Mississippi John Hurt, Son House, Skip James, Fred McDowell, and Mance Lipscomb, traveling and learning what he could from the originators. Moving to England in 1967, he recorded his first album, Aunt Molly's Murray Farm, a year later. His U.S. debut came with his third album, Yazoo Basin Boogie. Although he recorded several albums in the 1970s that featured his singing and songwriting, he's focused on guitar instrumentals since. In 1972 he formed his own label, Kicking Mule Records. In addition to his solo albums, Grossman has recorded several albums and toured with British guitarist John Renbourn.

what to buy: When originally released in the late 1960s, How to Play Blues Guitar ♪♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1968/Shanachie, 1990) helped to spark interest in acoustic blues. In addition to showcasing Grossman's solo guitar wizardry, the album is strengthened by guest appearances by Son House, Mickey Baker, Jo Ann Kelly (Rory Block), Sam Mitchell, and John Renbourn. Faithful interpretations of such tunes as "Police Dog Blues," "Corrina, Corrina," "Pallet on Your Floor," "Hard Time Killin' Floor," and "Oh Babe It Ain't No Lie" pay homage to the early roots of the blues.

what to buy next: Black Melodies on A Clear Afternoon ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Stefan Grossman) is a solo guitar survey of early African American music recorded between 1972 and 1975, with most tunes originally released on Grossman's albums, Fingerpicking Guitar Techniques, How to Play Ragtime Guitar, My Creole Belle, Famous Ragtime Guitar Solos, and Bottleneck Serenade, in the 1970s.

the rest:
Love, Devil, and the Blues ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1989)
Guitar Landscapes ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1990)
Yazoo Basin Boogie: A Collection of Rags ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991)
Shining Shadows ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1992)
(With Duck Baker) Northern Skies, Southern Blues ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Reverend Gary Davis, Mississippi John Hurt, Son House, Skip James, Fred McDowell, Mance Lipscomb
▶▶ Paul Geremia, John Hammond, Rory Block, Bonnie Raitt

see also: John Renbourn

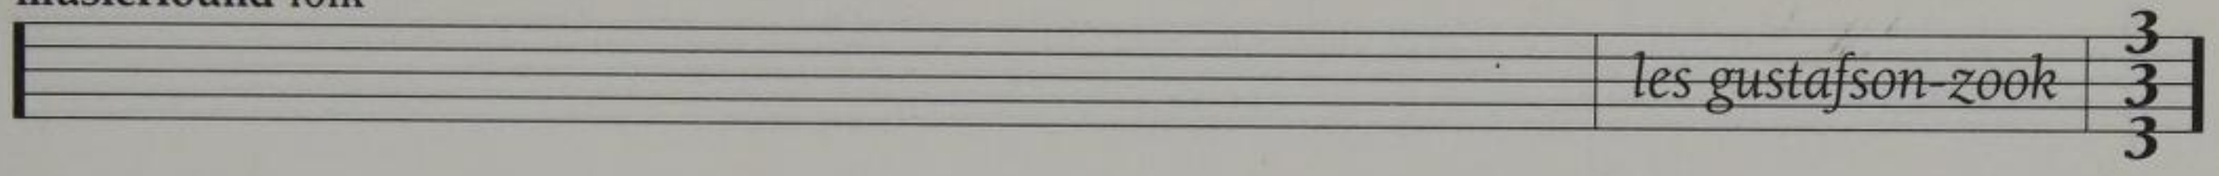
Craig Harris

Ida Guillory

See: Queen Ida



Kristi Guillory

Born December 26, 1978, in Lafayette, LA.

By the time she reached 18, Kristi Guillory was an accomplished accordionist and singer with two CDs under her belt. She picked up on the accordion at age 11 after trying to play one at a crawfish boil. Cajun women musicians are still pretty rare, so her interest and skill drew her extra attention. She was soon playing regularly and made her first record as a junior with a group of musicians who were all less than 20 years old. Although she admires traditionalists like Horace Trahan, Guillory is interested in the continuing evolution of Cajun music and writes her own originals that step further out of the tradition. Her singing has a little bit of country in it, but her playing and her band are pure Cajun dance music. Her lyrics reflect her continuing interest in the French language, an interest that has led her to take a sabbatical from music to study at the University of Southwest Louisiana's Francophone Studies program. Her plans include eventually teaching French and hopefully returning to music.

what to buy: At the time La Dance des Ancetres ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1996, prod. Terry Huval) was recorded, Guillory was 17 years old. This record is a solid, stripped-down Cajun band with her brother Craig on bass and Jude Veillon on drums providing a very solid danceable bottom. Jamey Bearb, who got second billing to Bill Grass on her first record, is the only fiddler on this one and the sound benefits from his subtle playing. Kristi's accordion playing is in the style of modern Cajun dance bands, shuffling the rhythm on the two steps, slurring the blues, and being squeezed for every last ounce of emotion on the waltzes. Her work on "Oil Rig Blues" stands out as the strongest example of her accordion work, while her strongest songwriting is probably "Personne dans mes bras," which takes the perspective of the broken-hearted bandleader singing to a full dance floor. It's a fairly typical topic for a Cajun song but rarely heard from a woman's perspective.

what to buy next: Reveille: The New Cajun Generation ♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1994, prod. Terry Huval) is listed under Guillory and Bill Grass, but the record really features Guillory and Horace Trahan. At 14, Kristi's accordion playing is fully formed and, if not original, still extremely expressive. Her deep, unaffected voice recalls Ann Savoy, and when she and Trahan sing together it is reminiscent of Ann's duets with her husband Marc. There is a little more modern country influence in her singing than in Ann's and you can hear that when Guillory sings Annette Huval's compositions "La Valse de la Grand Mere," "Allons au Fais Do-Do," and her own "Une Affaire à Pu Finir."

influences:

- Paul Daigle, Cleoma Falcon, Savoy Doucet Cajun Band, Sheryl Cormier
- Balfa Toujours

see also: Horace Trahan

Jared Snyder

Les Gustafson-Zook

Born May 21, 1957, in Mt. Pleasant, PA.

Les Gustafson-Zook is a skillful autoharp recording artist who recently relocated from Portland, Oregon, to Goshen, Indiana. In 1989 he won the National Autoharp Championship and has placed second and third numerous times in international competitions. His repertoire varies from fiddle tunes to folk melodies to hymns, and his clear melody playing is evident in all styles. He clearly loves hymns, a reflection of his career with the Mennonite Church, and he presents them in inspiring, uplifting renditions. Gustafson-Zook often performs with his wife Gwen, presenting school programs on the songs of the Oregon Trail. He has also teamed up with Jon ten Broek, an Oregon songwriter and guitar player, and together they have collaborated on two recordings.

what's available: Gather at the River ♪♪♪♪ (Raindrop Records, 1994, prod. Jon ten Broek) is an instrumental recording of well-loved hymns, including "In the Garden," "Be Still My Soul," and "It Is Well with My Soul." The 14 selections are infused with life as Gustafson-Zook gives them a unique treatment with his clean, delicate autoharp picking, underscored by ten Broek's talented guitar and Mark Bielman's bass. The hymns are splendidly arranged and offered in a variety of styles so you will not be the least bit tired of listening to one chestnut after another. Cascade Noel ♪♪♪½ (Raindrop Records, 1994, prod. Jon ten Broek) is an offering of 19 instrumental Christmas songs, most traditional melodies, played in a similar fashion to Gather at the River. These tasteful arrangements would be a nice complement to anyone's Christmas collection of CDs; all recordings are available from Raindrop Records, P.O. Box 1797, Corvallis, OR 97339.

worth searching for: Great Hymns ♪♪♪ (Les Gustafson-Zook, 1991, prod. Bill Landow, Precision Audio, Inc.) is the first recording effort of the artist and is solo autoharp. Long Time Traveling ♪♪♪½ (Les Gustafson-Zook, 1993, prod. Les and Gwen Gustafson-Zook) is a recording of the husband-and-wife duo and includes great vocals, guitar, mandolin, jawharp, and bass.

3/4 arlo guthrie

banjo styles

The most common banjo style in old-time music is clawhammer, sometimes called frailing. The right hand is loosely curled and the four long strings are struck with the nail of the index finger in a downward motion, followed by plucking the shorter 5th string with the thumb. The 5th string is almost never "noted," i.e., held down at a fret, so it really acts as a drone and provides a syncopating effect. This is a very rhythmic style, traditionally used to accompany a fiddle, and many old-time musicians consider that combination the DNA of their music. Less popular but every bit as legitimate is fingerstyle playing, in which the strings are plucked with the bare fingers in an upward motion. Old-time players seldom play above the ninth fret, and use many different tunings to simplify the work of the left hand. With some exceptions, most old-time banjo players tend to think that "less is more" and avoid flashy runs and complex chords. In bluegrass music, players wear metal picks and pluck the strings in a fashion similar to the old-time fingerstyle, only faster. Bluegrass players frequently play at the higher frets and make more use of chords.

David Shombert

These two recordings are available on cassette tape from the artist at 212 East Douglas, Goshen, IN 46526.

influences:
⏪ Bryan Bowers
⏩ Alan Mager, Mike Fenton

Heidi Cerrigione

Arlo Guthrie

Born July 10, 1947, in Coney Island, NY.

Much like Hank Williams Jr., Arlo Guthrie grew up in the shadow of a giant. Also like "Bocephus," Guthrie has honored the legacy while creating a distinct musical tradition. Still best known for his Vietnam-era satire/commentary "Alice's Restaurant" (which inspired the like-titled 1969 movie that he starred in), Guthrie has created a body of work over the last three decades that melds American roots/folk/country music into a rich contemporary setting. As early as his live 1968 second album, Arlo, he was dipping into classic country (in this case, Ernest Tubb's "Try Me One More Time"), and he was the first to bring Steve Goodman's "City of New Orleans" to a wide audience. He appeared with Bob Dylan's "Rolling Thunder Revue" during the mid-1970s and, after a long career of releasing intelligent and heartfelt neo-folk albums for Warner Bros., continues to record for his own Massachusetts-based Rising Son label.

what to buy: Outlasting the Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1979/Rising Son, 1986, prod. John Pilla) gives Shenandoah (no, not the chart-topping country band), his band at the time, co-billing, but the songs (except for one by Pete Seeger and one by Hoyt Axton) are Arlo all the way. Coming at a time of religious reawakening for Guthrie, Outlasting the Blues is a spirited set pondering life, compassion, and mortality with rootsy melodicism and a touch of his trademark humor.

what to buy next: Amigo ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1976/Rising Son, 1986, prod. John Pilla) is a gorgeously cohesive and warm collection spanning folk and rock and featuring collaborations with Linda Ronstadt and Leah Kunkel as well as a smokin' version of the Rolling Stones' "Connection."

what to avoid: Together in Concert ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1975, prod. John Pilla), a live collaboration with Pete Seeger, lacks the spirit and energy that such a prodigious pairing promises.

the rest:
Alice's Restaurant ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1967/Rising Son, 1988)
Arlo ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1968/ Koch International, 1997)
Running down the Road ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1969/Koch International, 1997)
Washington County ♪♪½ (Reprise, 1970/Koch International, 1997)
Hobo's Lullaby ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1972/Koch International, 1997)
Last of the Brooklyn Cowboys ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1973/Koch International, 1997)
Arlo Guthrie ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1974/Rising Son, 1988)
One Night ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1978/Rising Son, 1988)
Power of Love ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1981/Rising Son, 1986)
Someday ♪♪♪ (Rising Son, 1986)
Son of the Wind ♪♪♪ (Rising Son, 1992)
Mystic Journey ♪♪♪½ (Rising Son, 1996)

worth searching for: The Best of Arlo Guthrie ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1977, prod. various) is an early career overview that as-

Arlo Guthrie (© Jack Vartoogian)

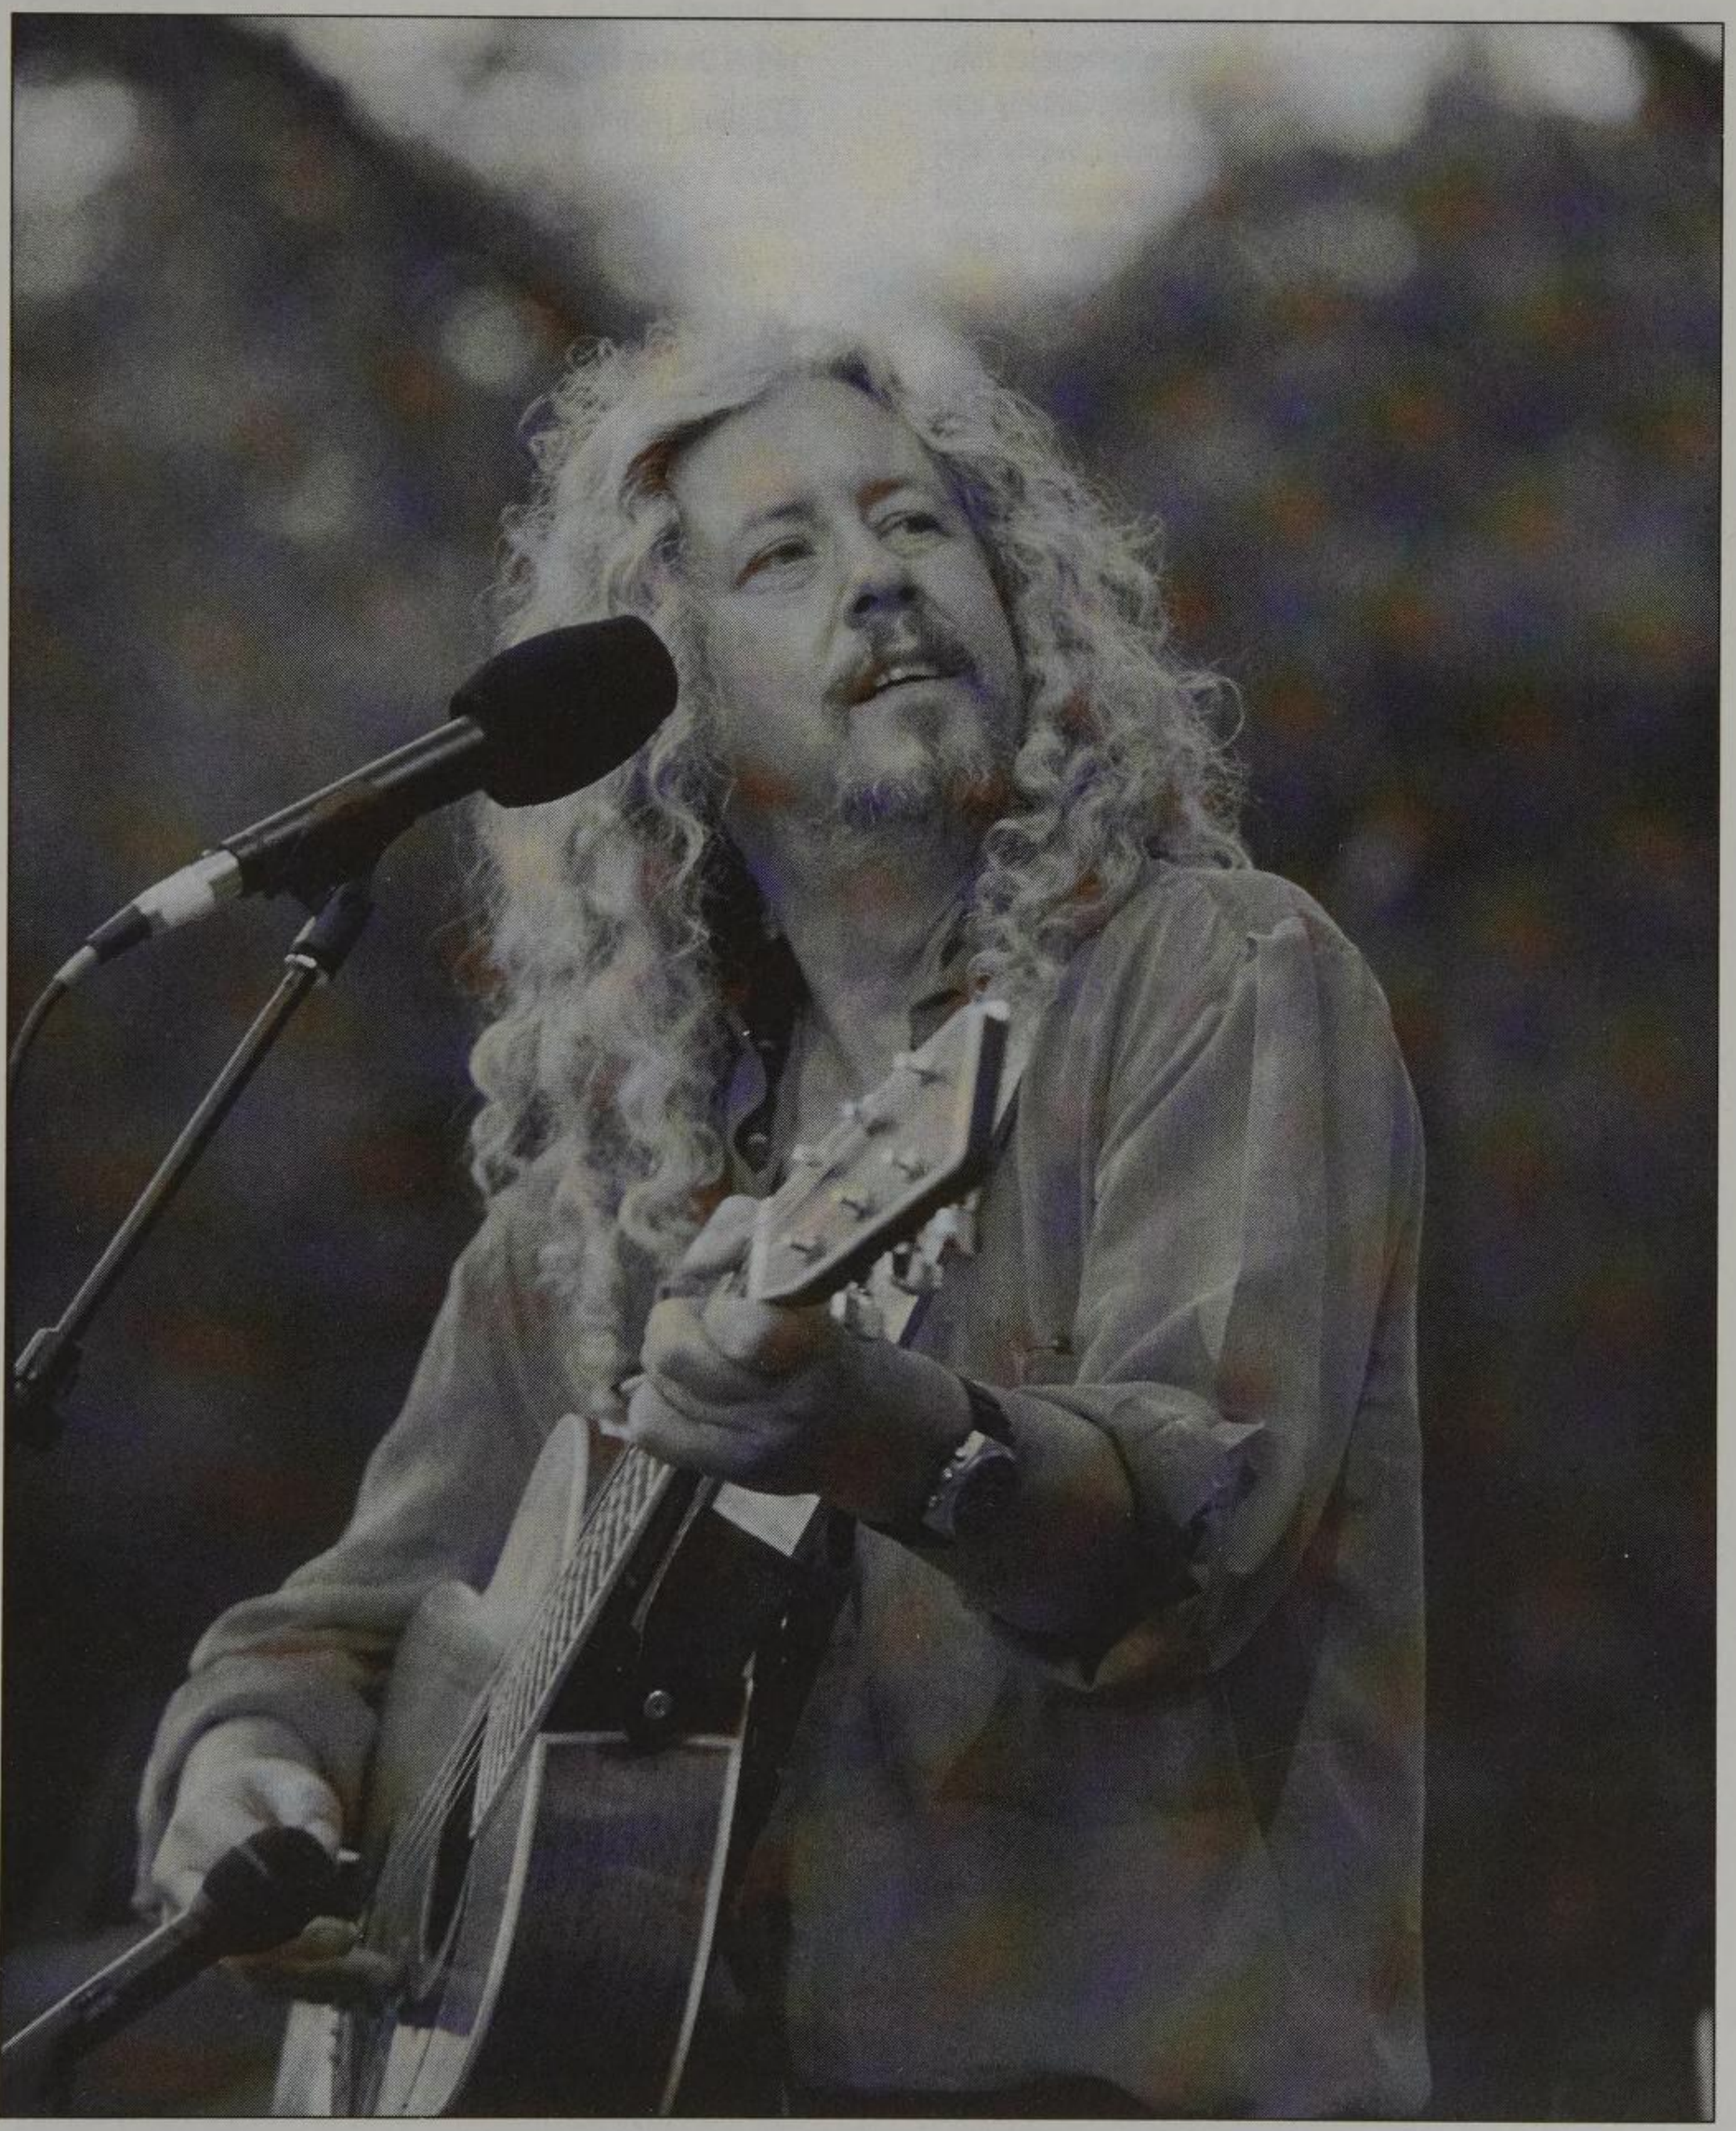
arlo guthrie



sembles the 18 1/2-minute "Alice's Restaurant Massacree," the hit single "City of New Orleans," the slightly left-of-center "Motorcycle (Significance of the Pickle) Song," and "Coming into Los Angeles" in one place. For that it's worthwhile, but far from cohesive. All over the World ♪♪♪♪ (Rising Son, 1991, prod. John Pilla, Lenny Waronker) reprises some of Guthrie's most memorable material, here thematically connected by geography and titles like "Massachusetts," "Miss the Mississippi and You," "City of New Orleans," and Richard Thompson's "When I Get to the Border."

solo outings:

Woody & Arlo Guthrie:

This Land Is Your Land ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997)

The Guthrie Family:

Woody's 20 Grow Big Songs ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1992)

Arlo Guthrie & Pete Seeger:

Precious Friend ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1982)

More Together Again in Concert ♪♪♪½ (Rising Son, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Pete Seeger

▶▶ John Prine, Bob Dylan

David Sokol

Jack Guthrie

Born November 13, 1915, in Olive, OK. Died January 15, 1948, in Livermore, CA.

Jack Guthrie was the cousin and sometime performing partner of the legendary Woody Guthrie, with whom he shares composer credit for the oft-covered "Oklahoma Hills," the song with which he is most closely identified. The song was a big hit for Jack in 1945, when, ironically, he was serving in the army on Iwo Jima. Guthrie's music was an infectious blend of cowboy music, Western swing, country boogie, and the newly emerging honky tonk. The records he made for Capitol between 1945 and 1948 are among the finest examples of the post-Depression country music recording scene in Southern California. Guthrie died of tuberculosis at the age of 33.

what's available: Oklahoma Hills ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1991, prod. Lee Gillette) contains everything Guthrie cut for Capitol, including his biggest hits, "Oklahoma Hills" and "Oakie Boogie," plus eight previously unreleased titles. Also contains a thoroughly annotated 32-page booklet with discography: the definitive Jack Guthrie reissue.

influences:

◀◀ Al Dexter, Ernest Tubb

▶▶ Hank Thompson, Arlo Guthrie

Randy Pitts

Woody Guthrie

Born Woodrow Wilson Guthrie, July 14, 1912, in Okemah, OK. Died October 3, 1967, in Queens, NY.

Woody Guthrie is unquestionably the most important North American folk singer of the twentieth century. Born into poverty in dust-bowl Oklahoma, Guthrie left home as a teenager and roamed far and wide, riding the rails, hitchhiking, and walking all over the United States. While on his travels he developed an unusually deep appreciation for the nation's natural beauty, perhaps best expressed in the anthem "This Land Is Your Land." And yet Guthrie was also a peerless chronicler of human struggle and the resiliency of the human spirit. Always siding with the underdog, his paeans to migrant workers, hobos, and dust bowl refugees convey America's restless, expansive heart no less than the writings of Walt Whitman and Mark Twain. Guthrie's greatest gift was his ability to invest everything from protest songs to outlaw ballads with unfailing humor, compassion, and insight. Drawing on the vast repository of blues, ballads, and breakdowns he learned in his youth, Guthrie wrote over 1,000 songs before he became hospitalized for Huntington's chorea in 1954. He also wrote four books of prose, sketches, and poetry, most notably his 1943 autobiography, Bound for Glory. As a performer, Guthrie collaborated with fellow songwriter-activists Pete Seeger, Lee Hays, and Millard Lampell as a member of the Almanac Singers, as well as with folk-blues singers Sonny Terry, Cisco Houston, and Leadbelly. Guthrie's own recordings date from 1940, when Alan Lomax captured him on tape for the Library of Congress. Guthrie's influence on subsequent generations of politically minded singers, and especially on the songwriting of Bob Dylan, Phil Ochs, and Bruce Springsteen, is immeasurable. His children's albums are second-to-none.

what to buy: Dust Bowl Ballads ♪♪♪♪♪ (Victor, 1940/Rounder, 1988, prod. Frank Driggs) represents the earliest flowering of Guthrie's social conscience and narrative sweep. His song paintings are as vivid and gut-wrenching as the prose of James Agee and the photographs of Walker Evans.

what to buy next: Library of Congress Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Alan Lomax) contains three volumes of conversation, songs, and humanity that offer the most complete portrait of America's greatest folksinger.

what to avoid: Worried Man Blues ♪♪ (Collectables, 1990), The Immortal Woody Guthrie ♪♪♪ (Collectables, 1990), and Woody Guthrie & Cisco Houston: Volumes 1 & 2, the Stinson Collectors Series ♪♪ (Collectables) all present classic Guthrie material with inferior sound quality and packaging.

the rest:
Songs to Grow On ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1951)
Songs to Grow On, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1958)
Songs to Grow On, Volume 3 ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1961)
Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1962/1989)
Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1964)
Bound for Glory ♪♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1967)
Poor Boy ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1968)
Struggle ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1976/1990)
Columbia River Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1987)
The Greatest Songs of Woody Guthrie ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1988)
The Early Years ♪♪♪½ (Tradition, 1991)
Songs to Grow on for Mother and Child ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1991)
(With Pete Seeger and Leadbelly) Folkways: A Vision Revisited ♪♪♪♪ (Legacy)
Nursery Days (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1992)
Long Ways to Travel ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1994)
Ballads of Sacco & Vanzetti ♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1996)
This Land Is Your Land ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1997)
Muleskinner Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1997)

worth searching for: Tribute to Woody Guthrie ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1989) is an uneven compilation of Guthrie's tunes recorded by other artists, but it's occasionally interesting.

solo outings:
Woody and Arlo Guthrie:
Woody's 20 Grow Big Songs ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1992)
This Land Is Your Land ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Elizabeth Cotten, Carter Family
▶▶ Bob Dylan, Bruce Springsteen, Phil Ochs

Bill Friskics-Warren

Buddy Guy

Born George Guy, July 30, 1936, in Lettsworth, LA.

With a gigantic grin and inventive electric guitar riffs played so fast you can barely focus on one at a time, Buddy Guy has come to symbolize traditional Chicago blues. Until 1991 he was, amazingly, still an undiscovered talent by most of the world; he ran his downtown Chicago nightclub, Buddy Guy's Legends, and showed off his immense charisma and talent on the national blues circuit. But despite opening gigs for the Rolling Stones and other blues-rock performers in the early 1970s, few outside Chicago and the national blues community had really heard of him. Then came a marketing break: His comeback album, Damn Right, I've Got the Blues—with a new version of the old standard "Mustang Sally" and guest cameos by Mark Knopfler and Eric Clapton—worked like a charm. It sold well, earned a Grammy, established Guy as a blues celebrity along with B.B. King and John Lee Hooker, and eventually opened the doors for a lucrative Reebok television commercial with White Sox slugger Frank Thomas.

Guy's career beginnings paralleled those of many other bluesmen, from mentors Muddy Waters and King to contemporaries Otis Rush and Junior Wells. Born to a sharecropping family, Guy picked cotton until blues songs on the radio inspired him to pick up a guitar. After playing local roadhouses, he moved to Chicago's thriving, blues-friendly South Side and, despite his young age, gained renown in "head-cutting" competitions against Rush and Magic Sam. Following Howlin' Wolf, Little Walter, Waters, and so many others to the legendary Chess Records, Guy recorded his trademark songs, including 1960 versions of Eurreal Montgomery's "First Time I Met the Blues" and Willie Dixon's "Let Me Love You Baby." In the 1960s he was one of the few nationally recognized bluesmen who wasn't old enough to be a rock 'n' roller's father so he started to cross over into the rock audience. The blues revival died down in the 1970s, and despite a creatively rich partnership with harpist Junior Wells, Guy had trouble translating the energy of his long, heavy-jamming songs to record. He eked out a living in Chicago as owner of the Checkerboard Lounge before opening Legends, befriending the hero-worshipping Stevie Ray Vaughan (he played at the guitarist's final show before his death), and recording. He continues to tour, play festivals, sell out 20 or 30 consecutive Legends appearances every January, and serve as Chicago's reigning blues hero.

what to buy: True to its reputation, Damn Right, I've Got the Blues ♪♪♪ (Silvertone, 1991, prod. John Porter) pretty much captures Guy's fiery performances, although you miss things like watching him walk from the stage to the bathroom while continuing to play the guitar. Despite an overwillingness to please non-blues fans—"Mustang Sally" is included just for familiarity, not because it adds anything to the original, and the guest stars sometimes crowd the singer—Guy's voice is at top soul power. His best album is Stone Crazy ♪♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1981, prod. Didier Tricard), with a hot Chicago four-piece rhythm section and Guy's soaring-and-smashing electric riffs. Before that, the closest Guy came to matching his live power was his debut, A Man and the Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1968/1987, prod. Samuel Charters), with killer versions of "Mary Had a Little Lamb" and "Money (That's What I Want)." To complete the set, you'll need one of several Chess compilations, such as Buddy's Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Chess/MCA, 1997), and at least one Junior Wells collaboration, most notably Alone and Acoustic ♪♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1991, prod. Didier Tricard), a spontaneous 1981 Paris session including Hooker's "I'm in the Mood," Guy's "Sweet Black Girl," and the rock classic "High Heel Sneakers."

what to buy next: An early linking with Clapton, who once called Guy the world's greatest living guitar player, produced the nice but not-so-explosive Buddy Guy & Junior Wells Play the Blues ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1972/Rhino, 1992, prod. Eric Clapton, Ahmet Ertegun, Tom Dowd, Michael Cuscuna). While Chess/MCA has mined Guy's early hits on many indistinguishable compilations, it's always worth tracking down the original LP of Chess singles, I Was Walkin' through the Woods ♪♪♪½ (Chess, 1970). Feels like Rain ♪♪♪ (Silvertone, 1993, prod. John Porter), the slower follow-up to Damn Right, is especially worth buying for Guy's soulful vocals, but not for the Travis Tritt and Paul Rodgers cameos.

what to avoid: Chess Records has driven a long way on the strength of its classic 1950s and 1960s singles; if you buy the newer Buddy's Blues, you won't need the more thorough but redundant The Complete Chess Studio Recordings ♪♪♪ (Chess/MCA, 1992). Live! The Real Deal ♪♪½ (Silvertone, 1996, prod. Buddy Guy, Eddie Kramer), with the pompous pony-tailed guitarist G.E. Smith and his Saturday Night Live band, captures a lackluster performance, with typically good Guy solos but very little else.

best of the rest:

I Left My Blues in San Francisco ♪♪½ (Chess, 1967/MCA, 1987)
This Is Buddy Guy ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1968)
(With Junior Wells and Junior Mance) Buddy and the Juniors ♪♪½ (MCA, 1970)
Hold That Plane! ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1972)
(With Junior Wells) Live in Montreux ♪♪♪ (Evidence, 1977/1992)
(With Junior Wells) Drinkin' TNT and Smokin' Dynamite ♪♪♪ (Blind Pig, 1982)
Buddy Guy ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1987)
(With Junior Wells) Original Blues Brothers ♪♪♪½ (Blue Moon, 1991)
Original Blues Brothers Live ♪♪½ (Quicksilver, 1992)
The Best of Buddy Guy ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1992)
My Time after Awhile ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1992)
Slippin' In ♪♪½ (Silvertone, 1994)
Southern Blues 1957–63 ♪♪½ (Paula, 1994)

worth searching for: The import-only JSP series captures Guy smoking, with his great 1970s band, including brother Phil on rhythm guitar; best of the hard-to-find CDs are D.J. Play My Blues ♪♪♪ (JSP, 1994), Breaking Out ♪♪♪½ (JSP, 1993), and Live at the Checkerboard Lounge ♪♪♪ (JSP, 1979/1995).

influences:

- Muddy Waters, Magic Sam, Otis Rush, Junior Wells, T-Bone Walker, Guitar Slim, B.B. King, Albert King
- Eric Clapton, Stevie Ray Vaughan, Son Seals, Jonny Lang, Kenny Wayne Shepherd, Tinsley Ellis, Luther Allison, Rolling Stones, Jeff Beck

Steve Knopper

Hackberry Ramblers

Formed 1933, in Hackberry, LA.

Luderin Darbone, fiddle; Lennis Sonnier, vocals, guitar; Glen Croker, vocals, guitar; Johnnie Parket, bass; Edward Duhon, accordion; Ben Sandmel, drums. Past members include: Lonnie Rainwater, vocals, guitar; Floyd Shreve, vocals, guitar; Joe Werner, vocals, guitar.

In the 1930s, as oil brought some economic prosperity and the radio offered Western swing and hillbilly music, the accordion lost some of its hold on Cajun music. The Hackberry Ramblers epitomize this change in taste. They were easily one of the most popular bands of the 1930s to play exclusively string-band style Cajun. The band was based around its leader, fiddler Luderin Darbone, who had spent much of his early life in Texas, outside the realm of Cajun culture. In fact, as the recording career of the band progressed, they formed a separate identity as the Riverside Ramblers, under which name they played non-French songs. The most popular of these was "Wondering," sung by Joe Werner. In active duty during World War II, members of the band re-formed after the war, but began to move away from the string-band sound and instead, with the addition of guitarist Glen Croker, play a wider variety of rocking and swinging sound that spans the spectrum of Louisiana roots music. In recent times, the Ramblers' longevity has begun to work in their favor as a selling point; they've regained popularity once again on the festival circuit.

what to buy: Early Recordings: 1935–1948 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Old Timey, 1988, prod. Chris Strachwitz) brings together all the classic sounds of the Hackberry Ramblers. Those thinking of smooth-sounding Harry Choates will be shocked by the drive and pure chank that this string band produced. The more "Texas" sounding songs are here, but this was still recorded for a Cajun crowd that had to dance. Any fan of old-time fiddling will have to check out the slippery bow of Luderin Darbone.

what to buy next: There is an atmosphere to Jolie Blonde ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1993, prod. Chris Strachwitz) of musicians who know themselves and each other so well and are just purely enjoying the act of making music together. This is the Ramblers demonstrating that they still had it in themselves back in 1963 to play with anybody.

the rest:
Cajun Boogie ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1988)
Louisiana Cajun Music (Arhoolie, 1994)

worth searching for: Deep Water ♪♪♪♪½ (Hot Biscuits, 1997, prod. Ben Sandmel) gives the generations a chance to play together. On three cuts Ben Sandmel brings Michael Doucet in to play with Darbone and the results are some truly charming music. Other guest vocalists include Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Rodney Crowell, and Marcia Ball. This record works like Will the Circle Be Unbroken with a group of guests performing with, and in honor of, the Hackberry Ramblers.

influences:
◀◀ Dennis McGee, Harry Choates, Leo Soileau
▶▶ Wallace "Cheese" Read, Michael Doucet, Steve Riley, Dewey Balfa

Jared Snyder

Ed Haley

Born 1883, in Hart's Creek, Logan County, WV. Died 1951.

When Ed Haley was three years old he was blinded from a bout with the measles. Beginning the fiddle at a young age, he held the instrument against his arm, instead of under his chin, and was known to occasionally slide it back and forth underneath a stationary bow to draw the sound out of the instrument. These differences, among others, caused him to create a unique and identifiable style of playing the old tunes. Haley was also not what you would call a conservative fiddler as far as tune choice and style goes. He played what he fancied, whether it was a tune from his native county or something he heard on the radio, and was known to play in more than one regional style.

what's available: For fear of someone taking advantage of him because of his blindness, Haley never wanted to perform on radio or be recorded by the record companies. In 1946, however, Ed's oldest son, Ralph Haley, got permission to record many of his father's tunes, some of which have been released on a two-CD set, produced by John Hartford and Bob Carlin, called Forked Deer—Volume 1 ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, prod. John Hartford). Due to the circumstances under which they were recorded and the age of the recordings, many of these tunes are buried in surface noise. For that reason, and for that reason only, this would be recommended to the more hardcore fans who really want to hear the fiddle styles of a master player and will take whatever they can get.

influences:
◀◀ Clayton McMichen
▶▶ Clark Kessinger, Bruce Molsky, Snake Chapman, John Hartford

Steve Gardner

Kristen Hall

Kristen Hall is blessed with a smoky voice and a penchant for confessional-but-catchy songwriting. She emerged from the same Atlanta singer/songwriter scene that spawned the Indigo Girls and Michelle Malone, developing a following at Atlanta clubs such as the Point, Trackside Tavern, and, later, Eddie's Attic. She recorded for the local Daemon label before signing with High Street Records, a member of the Windham Hill/BMG group. No longer affiliated with either label, Hall recently relocated to Los Angeles.

what to buy: Fact & Fiction ♪♪♪½ (Daemon, 1991, prod. Don McCollister, Kristen Hall) succeeds at first listen and improves with repeated plays. Its lyricism and simplicity are its principal virtues; another is subtle support on two cuts from Emily Saliers.

what to buy next: Be Careful What You Wish For . . . ♪♪½ (High Street, 1994, prod. Jerry Marotta) is so relentlessly dark and heavy as to risk drowning under its own weight, despite guest spots from Saliers, John Sebastian, Jules Shear, Kristian Bush, Larry Gowan, and Matthew Sweet. It's fuel enough for those who want to commiserate over a failed relationship ("I was kind enough to love you, you were cruel enough to leave," etc.), but tough going otherwise.

worth searching for: Real Life Stuff ♪♪♪ (Daemon, 1994, prod. Kristen Hall, Kay Busbey), now out of print, shares Fact & Fiction's clean, straightforward production. Hall may also have self-produced material available at live shows.

influences:
◀◀ Indigo Girls

Bryan Powell

Tom T. Hall

Born May 25, 1936, in Tick Ridge, KY.

It's a testament to Tom T. Hall's songwriting capabilities that his efforts have reached the Number One spot on the charts nearly 30 years apart. Known as "The Storyteller," Hall recounts the escapades of some folks he knew from his youth in Olive Hill, Kentucky in the 1968 smash, "Harper Valley, P.T.A.," a dark saga that Jeannie C. Riley would take to the top of both the country and pop charts. The tune inspired a film and TV series as well. About that time, Hall's own solo career grew on the strength of such hits as "Ballad of 40 Dollars" (1968), "Homecoming," and "A Week in a County Jail" (both 1969). His reputation as a performing songwriter was quickly established due to the consistency of his albums. In the strange days of the late 1960s and most of the 1970s, Hall unabashedly wrote with a liberal outlook, especially in such brilliant cuts as "I Washed My Face in the Morning Dew," "Mama Bake a Pie," and "The Monkey That Became President." His works are so concise that they have barely aged. Hall has also written novels and short-story collections. In 1996 Alan Jackson topped the charts with Hall's recent "Little Bitty."

what to buy: For the most comprehensive collection, Storyteller, Poet, Philosopher ♪♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1995, compilation prod. Robert K. Oermann) is unbeatable. The biggest hits are here ("Old Dogs, Children and Watermelon Wine," "I Like Beer"), as are dozens of lesser-known wonders, such as "Strawberry Farms" and "I'm 40 Now." An excellent essay by compiler Oermann accompanies the affordable, two-CD, 50-song set.

what to buy next: Unlike Songs from Sopchoppy, Hall's laconic 1996 return to recording, Home Grown ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1997, prod. Tom T. Hall) sounds like more than a throwaway. Working with acoustic musicians, the album features Hall's best songs in years, like "Bill Monroe for Breakfast." Should the Storyteller box prove too pricey, two other compilations, taken together, also form a solid presentation of Hall's work. Greatest Hits, Volumes I and II ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1983) is now available on one disc. Loves Lost and Found ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1995, compilation prod. Robert K. Oermann), with 13 cuts, never overlaps with Storyteller and is notable for "I Love" and "Your Man Loves You Honey."

the rest:
Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1972)
Greatest Hits, Volume II ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1975)
The Essential Tom T. Hall ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1988)
Country Songs for Kids ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1988)
Songs from Sopchoppy ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1996)
The Hits ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1997)
Soldier of Fortune ♪♪♪ (KOCH, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Floyd Carter, Roger Miller
▶▶ John Denver, John Gorka

Craig Shelburne and Brian Mansfield

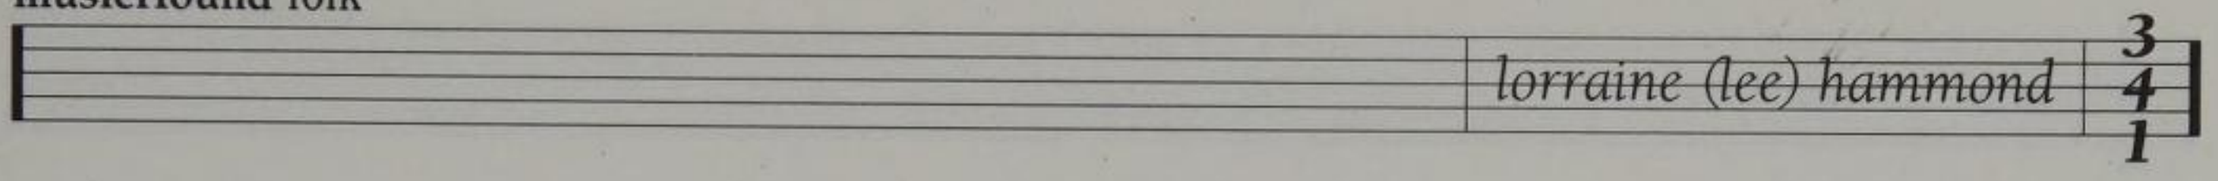
Hamilton Pool

See: Iain Matthews

John Hammond Jr.

Born John Paul Hammond, November 13, 1942, in New York, NY.

Armed with only his guitar, a harmonica, and a rich singing voice that forages through historic explorations of country blues, John Hammond Jr. has created his own niche as a solo blues performer. Emerging out of the American folk movement of the 1960s, Hammond first brought his rich sense of blues history and adept musicianship to the coffeehouse circuit in California and later to the burgeoning Greenwich Village scene in New York. The son of a noted Columbia Records executive, Hammond was raised by his mother. After a short stint at Antioch College in Ohio, Hammond hitched his way to Los Angeles. There, at the age of 20, he inked his first record deal and began an impressive recording career that spans 25 years and more than 30 albums. Hammond is not a songwriter but has dedicated his life to re-interpreting blues classics and, in doing so, has resurrected tunes that might otherwise have disappeared. And while he continues to tour as a solo act, Hammond's recording career has featured a wider range of material, including magical full-band sessions.



what to buy: Released when Hammond was only 24, Big City Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1964/1995) was his second album and one of the first electric blues recordings by a white artist. Hammond gives a fresh, electric guitar twist to older classics, including several Chess hits. The only full-length live set Hammond has released in the United States, John Hammond Live ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1983/1992, prod. John Nagy) captures the immense power and depth of emotion he can extract from guitar, harmonica, plaintive vocals, and a stomping foot onstage. Recorded at McCabe's in Los Angeles, it is the highlight of his Rounder stint. In between labels, Hammond financed Nobody but You ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1988/Pointblank, 1996, prod. Ken Whiteley). He is joined by a tight, five-piece band that provides restrained backing fill behind Hammond's emotive singing, nimble guitar picking, and some of his best harmonica work on songs by John Lee Hooker, Muddy Waters, and Little Walter. Trouble No More ♪♪♪♪½ (Pointblank, 1994, prod. J.J. Cale, Mike Kappus) finds Hammond switching between solo Delta blues standards and raucous full-band workouts featuring Little Charlie and the Nightcats. Hammond also pulls in other guests for jaunts into Western swing jazz fare, but the spunky, electric jams are the real treats.

what to buy next: I Can Tell ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1967) is one of Hammond's hottest collaborations, a loose session teamed with the Rolling Stones' Bill Wyman on bass, Robbie Robertson on lead guitar, Charles Otis on drums, and Artie Butler on piano. The Best of John Hammond ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1970/1989, prod. Maynard Solomon) is a strong collection of Hammond's most alluring early work. On Found True Love ♪♪♪♪ (Pointblank, 1996, prod. John Hammond, Duke Robillard), the power of Hammond's vocals really comes to the front in duets with singer Soozie Tyrell and on several Howlin' Wolf tunes. Other highlights include the punch/counterpunch of Hammond's acoustic playing jousting with Robillard's piercing electric guitar.

the rest:

John Hammond ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1962/1992)
Country Blues ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1964/1995)
So Many Roads ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1965/1993)
Mirrors ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1967)
Sooner or Later ♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1968)
Encore ♪♪♪ (Spivey, 1969)
Southern Fried ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1969)
Source Point ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1970)
I'm Satisfied ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1972)
Triumvirate ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1973)
Can't Beat the Kid ♪♪½ (Capricorn, 1975/1997)
John Hammond Solo ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1976/1992)
Footwork ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1978)
Hot Tracks ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1979)
Mileage ♪♪ (Rounder, 1980/1995)
Frogs for Snakes ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982/1994)
John Hammond Live in Greece ♪♪♪ (Lyra, 1984)
John Hammond ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1987)
Got Love If You Want It ♪♪♪½ (Pointblank/Charisma, 1992)
I Can Tell ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1992)
You Can't Judge a Book by Its Cover ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1993)

worth searching for: Hammond composed and performed all of the music for the movie soundtrack Little Big Man ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1971). Spivey issued an impressive compilation, Kings & the Queen ♪♪♪½ (Spivey, 1970) that includes a Hammond duet with Roosevelt Sykes and harmonica accompaniment on a couple of tracks from a very young Bob Dylan.

influences:

◀◀ Robert Johnson, Jimmy Reed, Lightnin' Hopkins

▶▶ Corey Harris, Rory Block

Matt Pensinger

Lorraine (Lee) Hammond /Lorraine & Bennett Hammond /Solomon's Seal /Rick & Lorraine Lee

Born 1944, in West Cornwall, CT.

The traditional songs and ballads of northern New England are reflected through the music of dulcimer-, harp-, and banjo-player/vocalist Lorraine Hammond. Her performances and recordings with her ex-husband, Rick Lee, and with her current husband, Bennett Hammond, have brought a fresh vision to the songs of the past. Traditional music has infused Hammond's creativity since childhood. As a youngster, she was inspired by the singing of noted folklorist and neighbor, Oscar Degrenia, and by folklorist Helen Flanders. Another neighbor, Ed Canby, introduced her to the music of Jean Ritchie and to the sounds of the mountain dulcimer. As a student at Goddard College in Plainfield, Vermont, Hammond convinced her roommate to order a dulcimer. When it arrived, she taught herself to play. Later, while working with the Peace Action Center in Washington, D.C., she became engrossed in bluegrass and traditional folk music. In 1962 Hammond produced the Yelping Hills Folk Festival and met Boston-area musicians, including Rick Lee. In addition to pooling their musical resources, the two musicians fell in love and were married within a year. Lorraine began to perform music for children while working at a day care center in 1969. Although she re-enrolled at Goddard College's Continuing Education program to study early childhood, her adviser suggested that she turn her attention to music. She took the advice to heart, persuading music faculty professor Dennis Murphy to sponsor an apprenticeship and designing and building her own dulcimer. Rick and Lorraine Lee were encouraged to record their first album, Living in the Trees, in 1975 by Sandy and Caroline Paton of Folk-Legacy Records. Over the next decade, they released five additional albums. Lorraine also penned two books—The Elizabethan Songbook and The Magic Dulcimer—as well as a six-cassette set music instruction for Homespun Tapes. Together with whistle-player Sarah Bauhan and fiddler Jane Orzechowski, Rick and Lorraine formed the band Solomon's Seal during the early 1980s, and recorded two albums—Green Gate and The Old Road.

When their marriage began to dissolve, the Lees attempted unsuccessfully to maintain their professional relationship. As pressures mounted, Lorraine increasingly collaborated with acoustic guitar virtuoso Bennett Hammond. Inspired by the old-timey folk music of Etta Baker and the country blues of Lightnin' Hopkins, Hammond had performed as a solo guitarist until joining forces with Lorraine in 1986. Shortly after Lorraine's marriage to Rick Lee ended in divorce, she and Bennett were married. In addition to recording and performing with her second husband, Lorraine has remained active on her own, recording an album of West Virginia tunes with fiddler Gerry Milnes and narrating and composing an original score for "The Little House" by Virginia Lee Burton.

what to buy: With the release of Love Has a Life of Its Own ♪♪♪ (Wizmak, 1997), Lorraine Hammond, accompanied by the fingerstyle melodies of husband Bennett on guitar, recaptures the spotlight with her earthy vocals and tradition-rooted mountain dulcimer, harp, and banjo playing. Although the album remains grounded in Appalachian and New England folk traditions, the Hammonds show their mastery of the traditional form with eight original songs by Lorraine and a melodic instrumental, "Grapevine," by Bennett.

what to buy next: On Peace on Earth ♪♪½ (SoundWorks, Inc., 1994, prod. Lorraine & Bennett Hammond) the Hammonds join together to musically celebrate Christmas and the winter season.

the rest:
Beloved Awake ♪♪ (Front Hall Records, 1991)
Jonah's Dream ♪♪½ (SoundWorks, Inc., 1995)
Cape and Island Ways ♪♪½ (Site Productions, 1997) worth searching for: Lorraine Hammond's albums with her first husband, Rick Lee, are out of print and difficult to find, but The Old Road ♪♪½ (Front Hall, 1984, prod. Solomon's Seal), recorded with their folk ensemble Solomon's Seal and featuring whistle player Sarah Bauhan and fiddler Jane Orzechowski, is worth seeking out. In addition to faithful renditions of traditional tunes like "Vinion's Hornpipe" and "Captain Kidd," the album includes Lorraine's original tunes "Winter Waltz and Dancing Anna" and the title track, and Rick's Native American tribute, "Natick."

solo outings:
Rick Lee:
Natick ♪♪♪ (Waterbug, 1995)

influences:
Jean Ritchie, Oscar Degrenia, Helen Flanders
Sally Rogers, Priscilla Herdman, Claudia Schmidt

Craig Harris

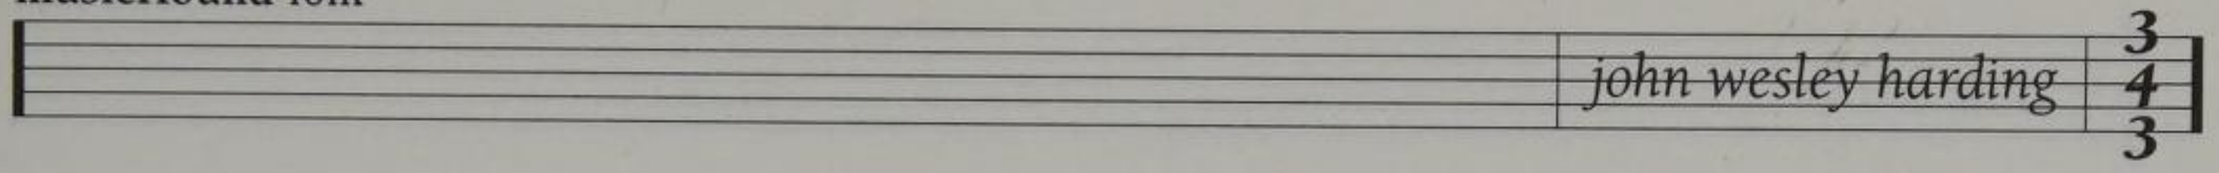
Thomas Hampson

See: Jay Ungar & Molly Mason

Butch Hancock

Born July 12, 1945, in Lubbock, TX.

When the Flatlanders broke up, it was kind of like the Beatles—if they'd released only one album. The founding members, all Texas country outlaws who knew how to play the rock 'n' roll, went on to prolific solo careers with varying degrees of commercial success. Butch Hancock, the weary folkie Flatlander—as opposed to Joe Ely's strident, rocking Flatlander or Jimmie Dale Gilmore's dignified, friendly Flatlander—took longest to grow his name in the music world. At first he focused on his architecture career, helping to design an amphitheater in Clarendon, Texas. During the late 1970s Hancock formed his own underground record label, Rainlight, and put out eight albums full of old-fashioned country songs about boxcars, junkyards, and dust bowls. In 1991 he did something extraordinary, even by the standards of fellow prolific artists like Prince or They Might Be Giants. He did a six-night stand, "No Two Alike," at an Austin cafe during which he performed (and recorded) more than 200 songs; then he released 140 of them on 14 one-hour Rainlight cassettes. A switch to the more established Sugar Hill Records, if anything, re-energized Hancock, who had squeezed in a couple of tepid albums among the gems at Rainlight. His most recent, Eats Away the Night, sounds like Bob Dylan died just after Nashville Skyline and was reincarnated into Hancock's body.



what to buy: The best of Hancock's Rainlight albums are the live party tape Firewater Seeks Its Own Level ♪♪♪♪ (Rainlight, 1981, prod. Butch Hancock, Joe Gracey), the relentlessly catchy Diamond Hill ♪♪♪ (Rainlight, 1981, prod. Butch Hancock, Joe Gracey), and the dry, twangy solo debut West Texas Waltzes & Dust Blown Tractor Tunes ♪♪♪ (Rainlight, 1978, prod. Butch Hancock, Joe Gracey). Eats Away the Night ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Gurf Morlix) is the best of Hancock's Sugar Hill career, full of unashamed Americana imagery, including "Moanin' of the Midnight Train" and "Junkyard in the Sun." Finally, the Hancock-Gilmore (along with the original Flatlanders producer) reunion Two Roads: Live in Australia ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1990, prod. Royce Clark) is more consistent than almost any Merle Haggard–Willie Nelson collaboration.

what to buy next: Own and Own ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1991, prod. various) has moments of brilliance, but it's uneven.

what to avoid: Maybe he was too busy designing new buildings, but Hancock clearly phoned in a few of his Rainlight albums, including the tepid Yella Rose ♪ (Rainlight, 1985, prod. Butch Hancock, Royce Gracey) and Cause of the Cactus ♪♪ (Rainlight, 1987, prod. Butch Hancock, Wayne Gracey).

the rest:
The Wind's Dominion ♪♪ (Rainlight, 1979)
1981: A Spare Odyssey ♪♪♪ (Rainlight, 1981)
Split and Slide II ♪♪♪ (Rainlight, 1986)

worth searching for: Why search? Call (512) 478-1688, and ask the nice people at Lubbock or Leave It for all 14 volumes of the amazing No Two Alike Tape of the Month Club ♪♪♪♪ (Rainlight, 1990s, prod. Butch Hancock); but be sure not to ask about the weather in Lubbock, because the company is located in Austin.

influences:
◀◀ Willie Nelson, Johnny Cash, Jimmie Rodgers, Bob Dylan, Merle Haggard, Patsy Cline, Carl Perkins, Elvis Presley, Woody Guthrie
▶▶ Guy Clark, Lyle Lovett, Joe Ely, Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Bruce Springsteen, John Mellencamp, Rosanne Cash, Townes Van Zandt

Steve Knopper

Tim Hardin

Born December 23, 1941, in Eugene, OR. Died December 29, 1980, in Los Angeles, CA.

Tim Hardin was a dark-hued and often mournful singer-songwriter whose place in the late '60s folksinger movement was ensured not so much by his own commercial success but by later versions of his songs covered by other artists. Hardin's originals were marked by spare performances—nearly outlines, really—and brief running times (most clock in at under two minutes). But the undeniable strength inherent in his sketchy yet potent style earned the singer substantial critical acclaim, if relatively little else. By the early 1970s, Hardin's career had been effectively wiped out from a nasty drug addiction, which eventually killed him at age 39.

what to buy: Hang on to a Dream: The Verve Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1994, prod. Erik Jacobsen) is a far-reaching and comprehensive document, collecting every Verve recording plus 17 unreleased tracks of pure melancholy. His most notable tracks, including "Reason to Believe," "Misty Roses," "If I Were a Carpenter," and "Black Sheep Boy," are all included.

the rest:
Tim Hardin Live in Concert ♪♪ (PolyGram Special Products, 1968/1995)
Reason to Believe (Best of) ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1987)

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, Phil Ochs
▶▶ Paul Siebel, Neil Young

Allan Orski

John Wesley Harding

Born 1965, in Hastings, England.

Although he started his stateside career as a pop songsmith with Brian Wilson dreams and Elvis Costello pretensions, John Wesley Harding has reverted to his politically charged folk roots since parting ways with Sire Records in 1992. This isn't a shock to most fans; the brash singer-songwriter—who took his name from the classic Bob Dylan album—has always laced his shows with biting commentaries in the form of rambling monologues as well as such tersely but cleverly worded numbers as "Scared of Guns," "Hitler's Tears," "The Triumph of Trash," and "July 13th 1985" (about how Live Aid was really more about bloated egos than starving children). Over the years, the Costello comparisons have passed and Wes's upbeat, often frantic stage show has developed into a more thoughtful, though equally pointed platform that even caught the attention of Bruce Springsteen: the Boss, who rarely hires opening acts, invited Harding to join him on two 1995 West Coast dates during his solo acoustic tour.

what to buy: Here Comes the Groom ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1989, prod. Andy Paley) bubbles with the youthful fervor and manic word-play of Costello's "My Aim Is True" (no surprise since the backing band includes Pete Thomas and Bruce Thomas of the Attractions) and the heel-clicking splendor of the Lovin' Spoonful. John Wesley Harding's New Deal ♪♪♪♪ (Forward/Rhino, 1996, prod. John Wesley Harding, Chris von Sneidern), his self-proclaimed antidote to Newt Gingrich's Contract with America, is clearly more Phil Ochs than Phil Spector. It's also his most relaxed record, with fiddles, mandolins, cellos, acoustic guitars, and Hammond organs backing his delicate delivery on "Kiss Me, Miss Liberty," "Other People's Failure" and "The King Is Dead Boring."

what to buy next: Harding's straight-faced acoustic cover of Madonna's "Like a Prayer" is one of three non-LP oddities on God Made Me Do It: The Christmas EP ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1989, prod. John Wesley Harding). Pett Levels: The Summer EP ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1992, prod. Andy Paley, Steve Berlin, Scott Matthews) boasts five previously unreleased tracks highlighted by the glorious "Summer Single," his final flirtation with wall-of-sound pop, and the hard-nosed live favorite "One Shot."

what to avoid: It Happened One Night ♪♪ (Rhino, 1991, prod. Wes Stace), a live solo acoustic album originally released in England in 1988, is driven more by adrenaline than vision.

the rest:
The Name above the Title ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1991)
Why We Fight ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1992)

worth searching for: Dynablob ♪♪♪ (Mod Lang, 1996, prod. John Wesley Harding) is a collection of studio outtakes and radio performances sold via his fan club and Mod Lang Records (P.O. Box 10111, Berkeley, CA 94709). It includes the original country version of "The Devil in Me" and his much-requested "Talking Return of the Great Folk Scare Blues."

influences:
◀◀ Phil Ochs, Bob Dylan, Elvis Costello
▶▶ Dan Bern

David Okamoto

Jack Hardy

Born November 23, 1947, in South Bend, IN.

The spearhead and spiritual leader of Greenwich Village's singer-songwriter scene since the mid-1970s, Indiana-born Jack Hardy was instrumental in the founding of the Songwriters' Exchange, the Speakeasy Musicians' Co-op and the Fast Folk Musical Magazine. The craftsmanship of his Americanized Irish songs has been a major influence on songwriters ranging from Suzanne Vega and Christine Lavin to John Gorka, David Massengill, and Cliff Eberhardt. Influenced by American songwriters like Bob Dylan and British songwriters such as Nick Drake and Davey Graham, Hardy wrote his first songs at the age of 14. His lyrical approach was enhanced at the University of Hartford, where he served as editor of the school newspaper and graduated with a degree in literature in 1970. After traveling around the United States and Europe for five years, he settled in New York's Greenwich Village in 1974.

what to buy: The Collected Works: 1965–1995 ♪♪♪♪ (1-800-Prime-CD, 1997, prod. Mark Dann, Jack Hardy) assembles tracks from Hardy's first nine albums, originally released on his own Great Divide label in the United States and Brambus in Europe, and marks the first time that all of his recordings have been available at the same time. With urban-minded lyrics set to tradition-rooted melodies, Hardy's songs are the reflections of a modern-day visionary. His interests in mythology give his balladry a gothic sensibility, while the precision of his wordplay makes his compositions well-conceived masterpieces.

what to buy next: Hardy's American-style approach to Celtic balladry reached its pinnacle with The Cauldron ♪♪♪♪ (Great Divide, 1984, prod. Mark Dann, Jack Hardy). Accompanying his soft-spoken vocals on acoustic guitar, mandolin, and tin whistle and joined by Mark Dann (harmony vocals, acoustic and electric lead guitar, synthesizer), John Caulfield (fiddle), the late Howie Wyeth (drums), and his brother Jeff (harmony vocals, acoustic bass), Hardy combines poetic lyricism with syncopated rhythms to create a distinctly personal recording. Songs range from the delicate poetry of "The Wren" and "The Bells of San Blas" to the mythological balladry of "The Cauldron" and "Ottomanelli."

the rest:
Mirror of My Madness ♪♪♪ (Great Divide, 1976)
Landmark ♪♪♪ (Great Divide, 1980)
White Shoes ♪♪♪ (Great Divide, 1982)
The Hunter ♪♪♪ (Great Divide, 1986)
Civil Wars ♪♪♪ (Great Divide, 1994)

worth searching for: The founder and editor of the Fast Folk Musical Magazine, Hardy recorded numerous songs for the audio publication. While many of these songs were later re-recorded and featured on his own albums, live versions make them worth seeking out. Songs of Jack Hardy, Volume 1: Of the Goddess ♪♪♪ (BCN, 1994) celebrates the strength of Hardy's songwriting with his songs interpreted by Diane Taraz, Pendragon, Jem Moore & Ariane Lydon, the Roches, and Lucy Kaplansky.

influences:

◀◀ Bob Dylan, Tom Paxton, Paul Siebel, Paul Simon, Nick Drake, Davey Graham

▶▶ Suzanne Vega, Shawn Colvin, Christine Lavin, John Gorka, David Massengill, Richard Meyer, Richard Shindell, Rod MacDonald, Lucy Kaplansky, Cliff Eberhardt

Craig Harris

Bill Harley

Born William Harley, July 1, 1954, in Greenville, OH.

One of the premier singer-songwriters and storytellers in the United States, Bill Harley has a magic pull with children and adults. The award-winning performer and author has a way of presenting stories and messages that are not only easy for kids to grasp, but make them want to hear his stories and songs again and again while making them laugh and think. As an eight-year-old listener said: "He's a grownup but he sounds like a kid." Indeed, Harley knows what it's like to be the odd kid out, how to be just plain silly, how cruel and kind kids can be, how tough it is growing up, and basically about how kids relate to the world. Though it may be cliché, Harley is one of the few artists who truly can make you laugh one moment and cry the next. Many of his stories are inspired by traditional tales, others by his own kids, still others by what he recalls from his own childhood.

Harley grew up in Indianapolis, Indiana, the second of three boys. His father was a publisher and a lawyer; his mother a children's writer and editor. He moved to Connecticut at age 16. After graduating from Hamilton College with a degree in religion, Harley went on to direct a program working with inner city and rural schools in combating violence, inspired by leaders like Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr. Singing for children seemed natural for Harley, and he began doing so while running a day camp.

In addition to performing, Harley has worked as a co-director for a community-based learning program in Providence, Rhode Island, and was the co-founder of the Stone Soup coffeehouse in Providence. He works with an alliance trying to save waterways near his home in Seekonk, Massachusetts. Harley has worked with the Massachusetts Arts Collaborative and was an artist-in-residence with the Rhode Island State Council on the Arts. He is popular at many regional festivals as well as the National Storytelling Festival in Jonesborough, Tennessee. Though much of Harley's material is for children—he performs some 125 shows a year—he also has been a popular commentator on National Public Radio's All Things Considered. In recent years, while not abandoning music, he has turned toward writing books, and has worked on a stage show with his band, the Troublemakers (Stephen Snyder, Kenneth Carpenter, Kathy Burkly), designed to play at smaller theaters.

what to buy: Though Wacka Wacka Woo & Other Stuff ♪♪♪♪½ (Round River, 1995, prod. Bill Harley) has a silly title, it's enjoyably reflective of its songs and stories. The title song is nonsensical, with a kid-friendly, shoutable chorus (did someone say "Wacka Wacka Woo?"). Other songs, like "Is Not, Is Too," which needs little explanation to parents, become instant kid favorites. Harley is a master storyteller as well. He remembers what it was like to be a kid. He hooks kids with tales about a boy going to the store to buy soap, a tricky pet hamster who meets dreaded Aunt Edith, and a girl who tries some magic to cheer up her sad dad. Another fave is Lunchroom Tales: A Natural History of the Cafetorium ♪♪♪♪½ (Round River, 1996, prod. Bob Jaffe). Its delightful songs and stories recall life in elementary school, from morning announcements to memorable bus drivers. Harley adds a touching story about a child dealing with a sick friend. The tale, which seems all too real, touches on feelings of joy and guilt, and will likely bring a tear to an adult's eye. The song "A Little Bit Different" revels in our uniqueness, expressing joy in a mix of races, cultures, and even the way people dress and eat.

what to buy next: From world beat to rock to Cajun, Harley enjoys his music, and his energy carries over to kids and families in Big Big World ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1993, prod. Bill Harley). Harley sings of pretending to be a pirate who doesn't take baths or naps, about cleaning up a mess, and throwing pizza slices in the blender. When he's not being outright silly, he sings of creating friendships, having respect for others, and keeping our world clean. In Bill Harley's world, kids know that grownups are slow and make kids rush, and that kids need to understand why their parents sometimes divorce. Plenty of musicians add to this thoroughly enjoyable album. It will keep kids hopping.

the rest:

Monsters in the Bathroom ♪♪♪♪ (Round River, 1985)
50 Ways to Fool Your Mother ♪♪♪ (Round River, 1986)
Dinosaurs Never Say Please and Other Stories ♪♪♪♪ (A&M/Round River, 1987)
Cool in School—Tales from the Sixth Grade ♪♪♪♪ (Round River, 1987)

3
4
6 bill harley

Coyote ♪♪♪♪ (Round River, 1987)
You're in Trouble ♪♪♪♪ (Round River, 1988)
In the Hospital ♪♪♪♪½ (Moose School Records, 1988)
(With Peter Alsop) In the Hospital ♪♪♪♪ (1988)
Grownups Are Strange ♪♪♪½ (Round River, 1990)
Come on out and Play ♪♪♪♪ (Round River, 1990)
Already Someplace Warm ♪♪♪ (Round River, 1994)
Sitting on My Hands ♪♪♪♪ (Round River, 1995)
From the Back of the Bus ♪♪♪♪ (Round River, 1995)
There's a Pea on My Plate ♪♪♪♪½ (Round River, 1997)

worth searching for: I'm Gonna Let It Shine—A Gathering of Voices for Freedom ♪♪♪½ (Round River, 1990, prod. Bill Harley, Jon Solins) is a Harley-led a cappella benefit album to help organizations working for racial justice and civil rights. Singers include Debbie Block, Howie Bursen, Guy Carawan, Kim & Reggie Harris, Lashunda Johnson, and many others. Other projects include Who Made This Mess (A&M, 1992), a video, and a number of books: the out-of-print Carna and the Boots of Seven Strides, Nothing Happened, Sarah's Story, and Sitting down to Eat.

influences:
◀◀ Cathy Fink, Marcy Marxer
▶▶ David Holt

Stephen Ide

Ben Harper

Born October 28, 1969, in Pamona, CA.

Given the political bent of some of Ben Harper's lyrics, it would be easy to tag him as a male version of Tracy Chapman, but his voice is less distinctive. Of course, Harper puts his own spin on things, keeping the instrumental arrangements simple but cleverly nuanced, and often adding choir-like backing vocals.

what to buy: Harper made a critical splash with his debut album, Welcome to the Cruel World ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1994, prod. Ben Harper, J.P. Plunier), partly because it's still unusual these days for a young black man to sing reflective, bluesy acoustic folk-rock. Highlights range from the funny, reggae-ish "Mama's Got a Girlfriend Now" to the surprisingly upbeat "How Many Miles Must We March?" to the dreamy "I'll Rise." His follow-up, Fight for Your Mind ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1995, prod. Ben Harper, J.P. Plunier), gets more electric on a few numbers, but mostly it sticks to the same Bob Marley– and Neil Young–influenced folk-rock. Occasionally, he gets too ambitious for his own good, adding a string quartet to the already dark "Power of the Gospel" and winding up with something tedious instead of stirring. Still, "Ground on Down" is powerful, damning stuff, and there's certainly going to be more where that came from.

the rest:
The Will to Live ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Richie Havens, Taj Mahal, Curtis Mayfield, Bob Marley, Neil Young ▶▶ Tracy Chapman, Chic Street Man

Bob Remstein

Bill Harrell

See: Don Reno & Red Smiley

Dick Harrington & Victoria Young

Formed 1991 in VA.

Dick Harrington (born March 8, 1942, in Rapid City, SD), fiddle; Victoria Young (born February 27, 1945, in Fredericksburg, VA), dulcimer.

Individually, Dick Harrington and Victoria Young have been playing and singing southern folk music since the 1950s, but they only began singing together in 1991. This Virginia-based (and now husband-and-wife) duo love the old-style country duets, harmonizing beautifully together, trading lead and harmonies easily. Their voices blend and move together as one, with tasteful accompaniment by autoharp and guitar in a Carter Family style. In addition, their excellent instrumental abilities are apparent in their repertoire of old-time fiddle tunes as Harrington plays the fiddle and Young plays lap dulcimer.

what's available: Lover's Return ♪♪♪♪ (Fiddletop Productions, 1996, prod. Dick Harrington, Victoria Young) is a superb mix of vocal duets and fiddle tunes. Starting with the title cut, the outstanding vocals make this recording exceptional. Many of the songs are such old traditional selections as "Little Birdie" and "Pretty Saro," with a great blues number, "St. Louis Blues," sung by Victoria, and "T for Texas," complete with yodels. The addition of such fiddle tunes as "Rye Straw," "Dry and Dusty," and "Eighth of January" add considerable up-tempo energy to the recording. Musicians contributing to this effort include Mark Beall (bass), Judy Chaudet (banjo), and Gary Hawk (harmonica). Lover's Return is available from Fiddletop Productions, 1779 Mountain Road, Afton, VA 22920-9334.

Ben Harper (© Ken Settle)

dick harrington & victoria young

worth searching for: Long Journey ♪♪♪ (Fiddletop Productions, 1993, prod. Dick Harrington, Victoria Young) is the duo's first recording and includes 15 songs (no instrumentals) with wonderful harmonies (some overdub of themselves) accompanied by guitar. This recording is available on cassette tape from Fiddletop Productions.

influences:

- Carter Family, Woody Guthrie, Stanley Brothers, Blue Sky Boys
- Jody Stecher & Kate Brislin, Cliff Perry & Laurel Bliss

Heidi Cerrigione

Emmylou Harris

Born April 2, 1947, in Birmingham, AL.

While her musical trademark is a pure, aching soprano, Emmylou Harris's defining musical characteristic is curiosity. It has led her to traditional country, and from there to new songwriters and maverick producers. Practically every hotshot on the country scene today, from Garth Brooks on down, claims Harris as an inspiration, but few can match her creative daring. Harris began as a 1960s-style folkie, working clubs around Washington, D.C. Through ex-Byrd Chris Hillman, she met Gram Parsons. Their duets on Parsons's Grievous Angel are pioneering moments in country-rock and brought Harris's voice to the big time. Parsons's death in 1973 left Harris fiercely committed to continuing his vision in her solo work. With her 1975 major-label debut, Pieces of the Sky, she unveiled the sound that would become an influential trademark: classic country touches like galloping rhythm guitar and heartfelt vocals were cut with a driving rock back beat. Early on, Harris demonstrated both her interest in country's past (the Louvin Brothers) and her commitment to new or unconventional material (the Beatles' "Here, There and Everywhere" or "Easy from Now On," by the young Carlene Carter). Harris's Hot Band, which toured with her through the 1980s, was an incubator of top talent; alumni include Ricky Skaggs, Vince Gill, Rodney Crowell, and Albert Lee, as well as producers Emory Gordy Jr. and Tony Brown. Opting for a bare-bones traditional sound during the 1990s, Harris formed the Nash Ramblers and released the acclaimed At the Ryman in 1992. Her fan base is solid enough to offset country radio's indifference, and her most recent work reflects an increasing rock flavor and a continued willingness to stretch the boundaries.

Emmylou Harris (© Jack Vartoogian)

what to buy: For a warp-speed trip through Harris's career, start with Profile: The Best of Emmylou Harris ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros, 1978, prod. various), the cream of her early studio work. High points: covers of Dolly Parton's "To Daddy" and the Louvins' "If I Could Only Win Your Love." Low point: a screechy "You Never Can Tell," which naturally remains the one Harris

editor's choice
13 desert island discs

If you were going to a desert island and could take only one CD, which one would it be? MusicHound Folk writers respond:

Pamela Murray Winters: Sandy Denny, The North Star Grassman and the Ravens (Island)

Jo Hughey Morrison: Bonnie Rideout, Kindred Spirits (Maggie's Music)

Steve Knopper: Bob Dylan, Biograph (Columbia)

Steve Winick: Nick Drake, Pink Moon (Island Records)

Neal Walters: Cliff Perry/Laurel Bliss, Old Pal (Telegraph)

Ken Roseman: Janis Joplin, Pearl (Columbia)

Bryan Powell: Dave Brubeck Quartet, Time Further Out (Columbia Legacy)

Ken Burke: Jerry Lee Lewis, Live at the Star Club (Phillips)

Grant Alden: Herbert Von Karajan (conductor) Beethoven's Ninth Symphony (DGC)

Leland Rucker: Charlie Parker, Charlie Parker on Dial (Spotlite)

David Sokol: Bob Dylan, Blonde on Blonde (Columbia)

Heidi Cerrigione: Sally Rogers, We'll Pass Them On (Red House Records)

Philippe Varlet: Matt Molloy, Paul Brady, Tommy Peoples, Molloy, Brady, Peoples (Mulligan)

song most likely to be played on country radio. Fast-forward to 1995's daring Wrecking Ball ♪♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1995, prod. Daniel Lanois) to hear a Harris now completely confident in her musical impulses. Within rock producer Lanois's otherworldly arrangements, she pushes her voice to a raw, urgent edge and continues to dig up great material by underappreciated writers (Lucinda Williams, Gillian Welch, etc.). Two live albums provide excellent introductions to important phases of Harris's music. Last Date ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1982, prod. Brian Ahern), an exuberant country-rock manifesto, summarizes why Harris's Hot Band work had such impact. She finds fresh drive in classics by Carl Perkins and Hank Cochran, pays tribute to Parsons with three of his songs and points the way forward with a startling yet stone-country cover of Bruce Springsteen's "Racing in the Streets." At the Ryman ♪♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1992, prod. Allen Reynolds, Richard Bennett) offers Harris as acoustic purist, extending and refining ideas first explored in Roses in the Snow. With the Nash Ramblers Harris achieves an unplugged sound that is firmly traditional and astoundingly flexible, encompassing everything from Steve Earle to Stephen Foster.

what to buy next: Any would-be country traditionalist should own Roses in the Snow ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1980, prod. Brian Ahern), Harris's valentine to old-timey music (with assists from the likes of Parton, Skaggs, Linda Ronstadt, and Johnny Cash). The ambitious concept album The Ballad of Sally Rose ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1985, prod. Emmylou Harris, Paul Kennerley) doesn't meld into a convincing dramatic whole, but features wonderful songwriting by Harris and Kennerley on such songs as "Woman Walk the Line." The spiritual, introspective Cowgirl's Prayer ♪♪♪♪½ (Asylum, 1993, prod. Allen Reynolds, Richard Bennett) features an eerie, ethereal version of Leonard Cohen's "Ballad of a Runaway Horse." And while Harris anthologies will probably always spark arguments over what was left out, the three-disc box set Portraits ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996, prod. various) does a respectably thorough job of collecting her Warner Bros. work.

what to avoid: Cimarron ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1982, prod. Brian Ahern) is mostly listless Nashville-by-the-book—and Harris is infinitely better when she chucks the rule book.

the rest:
Pieces of the Sky ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1975)
Elite Hotel ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1976)
Luxury Liner ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1977)
Quarter Moon in a Ten Cent Town ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1978)
Blue Kentucky Girl ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1979)
Light of the Stable ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1980)
Evangeline ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1981)
White Shoes ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1983)
Profile II: The Best of Emmylou Harris ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1984)
Thirteen ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1986)
Angel Band ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1987)
(With Linda Ronstadt and Dolly Parton) Trio ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1987)
Bluebird ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1989)
Brand New Dance ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1990)
Duets ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1990)
Songs of the West ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1994) worth searching for: Gliding Bird ♪♪½ (Jubilee, 1969), Harris's very first album, reportedly turns up from time to time in the record collections of Harris junkies; see if they'll let you tape it, though Harris herself—who sued for and won the rights to the masters after Jubilee folded—would probably prefer you don't.

influences:
Carter Family, Buck Owens, Louvin Brothers, Hazel & Alice, Tom Rush, Gram Parsons

Alison Krauss, Mavericks, Cowboy Junkies

see also: Gram Parsons

Elizabeth Lynch

John Hartford

Born December 30, 1937, in New York, NY.

If John Hartford were known only for his most famous song, "Gentle on My Mind," that would certainly be enough. One of the most performed and recorded songs of all time—it's been done by everyone from Glen Campbell, who used it as the opening theme of his Goodtime Hour TV show during the 1960s, to Aretha Franklin—it has earned Hartford sufficient royalties to play whatever music he chooses, regardless of commercial considerations, and to spend time as a riverboat pilot, his true passion. Hartford is an astonishing talent on both fiddle and banjo, but the entertainment quotient is kicked to a whole other level when he throws in the trick that has made him unique: he provides his own percussion, clog-dancing on a piece of amplified plywood he refers to as the "whomper stomper." It may not be much on record, but you should see him live. Hartford's artistic freedom led him to become Nashville's version of a hippie—respectful of his elders (so long as they can play), but stoned enough to record a twisted version of the Lord's Prayer on his best album, Mark Twang. Hartford has mellowed over the years, and many of his albums are interchangeable. As a rule, he's at his best and most entertaining when he lets his eccentricities run wild.

what to buy: Mark Twang ♪♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1976, prod. Mike Melford) is the album on which Hartford's eccentric style came to its full fruition. Sawing the fiddle, pickin' the banjo, tapping his feet, and singing about steamboats, the Mississippi river, his bluegrass heroes, and reefer, Hartford sounds like he's singing for no one so much as himself. But it offers a glimpse at a worldview so fully formed and so compelling that you can't help forgive him his self-indulgence. Or, at the very least, tap your foot in time. Me Oh My, How the Time Does Fly ♪♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1987, prod. various) is a generous best-of disc that covers his years on the Flying Fish label that marked the creative apex of his career.

what to buy next: Aereo-Plane ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1971/Rounder, 1997, prod. David Bromberg) has a wonderful, old-timey feel, abetted by an amazing backup trio of Tut Taylor, Norman Blake, and Vassar Clements. This album would sound best played through an old cathedral radio. Nobody Knows What You Do ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1977, prod. Mike Melford) is one of Hartford's more eccentric efforts, but it contains the wistful "In Tall Buildings," one of his best songs, plus some low humor in "The Golden Globe Awards" and even a brief tribute to the jazz-fusion guitar hero "John McLaughlin." After many soft albums, notably those on his own label Small Dog a'Barkin', Wild Hog in the Red Brush and a Bunch of Others You Might Not Have Heard ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. John Hartford, Bob Carlin) is a heartening return to form, featuring engaging arrangements of 19 old fiddle tunes.

what to avoid: A pair of albums, now available as a two-fer, Glitter-Grass from the Nashwood Hollyville Strings/Permanent Wave woof! (Flying Fish, 1977, 1980, 1995), with Doug & Rodney Dillard, are filled with dreadful country-pop. The bizarre song selection—"Boogie on Reggae Woman," "No Beer in Heaven"—doesn't help.

the rest:
Morning Bugle ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1972/Rounder, 1995)
Annual Waltz ♪♪ (MCA, 1987)
Down on the River ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1989)
(With Jamie Hartford) Hartford & Hartford ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1991)
(With Mark Howard) Cadillac Rag ♪♪½ (Small Dog a'Barkin', 1992)
Goin' Back to Dixie (Small Dog a'Barkin', 1994)
The Walls We Bounce off Of ♪♪½ (Small Dog a'Barkin', 1994)
Live at College Station, PA ♪♪♪ (Small Dog a'Barkin', 1994)
(With Bob Carlin) The Fun of Open Discussion ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995)
No End of Love ♪♪½ (Small Dog a'Barkin', 1996) worth searching for: Hartford's original version of "Gentle on My Mind" can be found on the out-of-print Earthwords and Music ♪♪ (RCA, 1967, prod. Felton Jarvis), a true artifact of the 1960s.

influences:
Flatt & Scruggs, Stringbean, Samuel Clemens

Mark O'Connor, Béla Fleck

Daniel Durchholz

Richie Havens

Born January 21, 1941, in Brooklyn, NY.

Though he first established himself as a folk singer on the New York coffee house circuit, Richie Havens's rich, craggy voice and prowess as an interpreter of others' material gained him national recognition during the late 1960s. His first couple of albums stiffed, but subsequent releases for MGM/Verve—notably Mixed Bag—encapsulated the humanistic, progressive mood of the time. Almost distinctive as his clarion vocals was Havens's powerful guitar playing, which involved hooking his thumb over the open-tuned strings and strumming furiously. His moment of greatest visibility came with his extended improvisation on the old spiritual "Motherless Child" at the Woodstock festival in 1969. He scored several hit singles during the next few years, recording memorable renditions of songs by Bob Dylan and the Beatles, as well as his own material. After a decade-long hiatus from recording, he began turning out albums again in 1987 and has appeared frequently with other '60s pop veterans at nostalgic reunion concerts. Aside from his musical endeavors, Havens has long worked as an environmental activist and done commercial voice-over work (he's best known in this regard as the singer of the Amtrak train jingle), as well as some film acting.

what to buy: Resume: The Best of Richie Havens ♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1993, comp. Johanan Vigoda) is a generous anthology that draws from his best original songs and covers.

what to buy next: Mixed Bag ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1967, prod. Johanan Vigoda) is an early peak, boasting the anti-war classic "Handsome Johnny" and his versions of Dylan's "Just like a Woman" and the Beatles' "Eleanor Rigby."

what to avoid: Mixed Bag II ♪♪ (Verve, 1974, prod. Johanan Vigoda) is, like so many sequels, inferior to the original.

ginny hawker & kay justice

the rest:
A Richie Havens Record ♪♪♪½ (Douglas, 1965)
Electric Havens ♪♪♪½ (Douglas, 1966)
Something Else Again ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1968)
Stonehenge ♪♪♪ (Stormy Forest, 1970)
State of Mind ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1971)
Alarm Clock ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1971)
Great Blind Degree ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1971)
Richie Havens on Stage ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1972)
Portfolio ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1973)
Richie Havens ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1975)
The End of the Beginning ♪♪ (A&M, 1976)
Mirage ♪♪ (A&M, 1977)
Connections ♪♪ (Elektra, 1980)
Richard P. Havens ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1969/1983)
Common Ground ♪♪♪½ (EMI, 1984)
Simple Things ♪♪♪½ (RBI, 1987)
Collection (Rykodisc, 1987)
Now ♪♪♪ (Solar/Epic, 1991)
Live at the Cellar Door (Five Star, 1991)
Cuts to the Chase ♪♪♪ (Forward, 1994)
Classics (Rebound, 1995)

worth searching for: Richie Havens Sings the Beatles and Bob Dylan ♪♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1986, prod. Douglas Yeager, Richie Havens) is an album full of covers from Havens's favorite songwriters.

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, the Beatles, Sam Cooke, Leadbelly, Robert Johnson, Muddy Waters
▶▶ Tracy Chapman, Ben Harper, Hootie & the Blowfish

Simon Glickman

Ginny Hawker & Kay Justice

Formed 1986, in Elkins, WV.

Ginny Hawker (born in VA); Kay Justice (born in McDowell County, WV).

Ginny Hawker and Kay Justice both grew up in the southern portion of the Appalachian mountain range, Hawker from southern Virginia and Justice from the southern portion of West Virginia. They met in the mid-'80s and immediately discovered that they had a mutual love for traditional southern music. There's something about southern traditional music when it is done well that is incredibly special, and this duo has captured it. Perhaps it's the convincing nature of good singers singing a good traditional song that makes their music more than just entertainment. This is life itself.

what to buy: Come All You Tenderhearted ♪♪♪♪ (June Appal, 1993, prod. Ginny Hawker, Kay Justice), their third recording as a team, gives the listener a good idea of what type of songs they might have talked about, and sang, at their first meeting; there's the Carter family's songs, the old country duets, and a great amount of gospel and sacred music. If you are a lover of southern singing, or traditional music in general, then track down this CD. If your interests run to southern gospel music, this is essential to your collection. This music is about sharing; and by the sound of Hawker and Justice's music, they want to share it with you.

the rest:
Signs and Wonders ♪♪♪♪ (June Appal) (cassette only) Pathway to West Virginia ♪♪♪♪½ (Pathway Productions, 1988) (cassette only)

influences:
◀◀ Hazel & Alice, Blue Sky Boys, Primitive Baptist Hymnal ▶▶ Dirk Powell

see also: Tracy Schwarz & Ginny Hawker, Tracy Schwarz

Steve Gardner

Ted Hawkins

Born 1936, in Lakeshore, MS. Died January 1, 1995, in Los Angeles, CA.

If Sam Cooke's voice makes you want to fall in love, Ted Hawkins's voice makes you scared to death of losing it. Blessed with a voice from the heavens but cursed with a life of homelessness and incarceration, he died months after he signed to a major label and seemed poised to become a star. The singer-songwriter was at a disadvantage from the beginning: For shoplifting and other minor crimes, he was sent to a reform school before he hit his teens. He was switched to Parchman Farm prison, where he endured pistol-beatings (and heard Sam Cooke for the first time), and later rode the rails as a hobo before landing in a California medical facility. "The uvular blends of his vocal style were similar to those of Sam Cooke and Otis Redding," Francis Davis wrote in the Oxford American magazine, "but his solitary presentation and vagabond life gave him more in common with Robert Johnson, Blind Lemon Jefferson or Blind Willie McTell." After hearing Hawkins sing on the Los Angeles streets, a local DJ set him up with producer Bruce Bromberg. From there, Hawkins's superb recordings gained him a loyal cult following, especially in Europe, but his life continued to run an unsteady course. He drifted, putting out a record every now and then, but mostly trying to fill his tip jar while singing on an old milk crate propped against a wall on some beach-front street. Knowing Hawkins's background sometimes makes listening to his music a painful, or at least difficult, experience: though he consistently denied the charge, he served a final term at the California Medical Facility for allegedly molesting a 13-year-old girl. His long-deserved break came in 1994, when he signed to Geffen and started to play for ticket-buying audiences at clubs around the country before his untimely death.

what to buy: It's chilling to hear Hawkins sing the sad part in "I Got What I Wanted," from Songs from Venice Beach ♪♪♪♪♪ (Evidence, 1995, prod. H. Thorp Minister III), about walking on the beach alone, knowing everybody's used to seeing him with his woman. On this reissued album, culled from the hard-to-find On the Boardwalk: The Venice Beach Tapes, Hawkins can express loneliness as well as Roy Orbison and can even hit the same high (and low) notes.

what to buy next: Though the writing isn't as strong as his best material, Hawkins's first official recordings—Watch Your Step ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1982/1993, prod. Bruce Bromberg, Dennis Walker) and Happy Hour ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1986/1993, prod. Bruce Bromberg, Dennis Walker, Dale Wilson) share an amazing street-bred talent with the rest of the world. Parts of The Next Hundred Years ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1994, prod. Tony Berg), such as the heartbreaking "The Good and the Bad" and the high notes in the soul-pop classic "There Stands the Glass," will make your hair stand up and bring tears involuntarily to your eyes, but some of the production drowns the voice.

the rest:
The Final Tour ♪♪♪♪ (Evidence, 1998)
Suffer No More: The Ted Hawkins Story ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1998)

worth searching for: On the Boardwalk: The Venice Beach Tapes ♪♪♪♪ (1986, prod. H. Thorp Minister III) and Dock of the Bay: The Venice Beach Tapes ♪♪♪♪ (1987, prod. H. Thorp Minister III) were recorded by a young fan in Nashville and made their way to Europe without a label, helping boost Hawkins's huge following abroad. If they're virtually impossible to find, try digging up his first single, "Baby"/"Whole Lotta Women," recorded for Money Records in 1966.

influences:
⏮ Sam Cooke, Otis Redding, Robert Johnson, Wilson Pickett, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Curtis Mayfield, Roy Orbison

⏭ Chris Isaak, Satan & Adam, Robert Cray

Steve Knopper

Martin Hayes

Born July 4, 1962, in Maghera, Co. Clare, Ireland.

The son of famous fiddler P.J. Hayes, who appeared with Paddy Canny on the groundbreaking 1960 LP All-Ireland Champions: Violin and continues to lead the Tulla Ceili Band, Martin Hayes grew up on a dairy farm in East County Clare. He started to play the fiddle at age 10, learning from his father as well as his uncle Paddy Canny, and, while absorbing the distinctive East Clare style, soon developed a highly individual approach to his music. In 1976 Hayes won his first All-Ireland title in the Under-14 category, then repeated the very next year in the Under-16, and went on to win four more titles in following years. Hayes moved to Chicago in the mid-1980s, eking out a living as a musician but experimenting with fusion rather than performing traditional music. By the early 1990s, however, he had gone through a reawakening and in the process found a record label interested in his playing. His first solo album, Martin Hayes, released in 1993, introduced him to American audiences as a master of the expressive brand of fiddle playing known in East Co. Clare as "the lonesome touch." This has been followed by two equally successful releases, Under the Moon and the appropriately titled The Lonesome Touch, which have made Martin Hayes a household name. The fiddle player, who now lives in Seattle, was recently reunited with his father's famous Tulla Ceili Band to celebrate its 50th anniversary with a tour and the release of a new album titled The Tulla Ceili Band: A Celebration of 50 Years.

what's available: When Martin Hayes ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Helen Bommarito, Martin Hayes) was released, Irish music devotees may have been reminded of the time when Kevin Burke's albums first became available in the United States. This has none of the urgent pace of Donegal music nor the thundering din of supergroups like the Bothy Band or De Danann. Rather, it is the reflective, soulful music, simple and complex at the same time, of a fiddle player with a gentle and subtle touch. Uncommon tunes, and common ones in uncommon keys or settings, are performed at the characteristically slow East Clare pace, with perfectly matched guitar accompaniments by Randal Bays. On Under the Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Martin Hayes), recorded in Ireland, Hayes brings in more variety by mixing solo tracks with duets with his father P.J. (fiddle), Chicago concertina and accordion player John hazel & alice

Williams, and Randal Bays (fiddle), while Steve Cooney ably shares accompaniment duties with Bays. The Lonesome Touch ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Martin Hayes, Dennis Cahill) is the product of Hayes's more recent collaboration with guitarist Dennis Cahill. While the fiddling may at times sound almost like a caricature of itself, slower and more dramatic than ever, the interplay between the fiddle and the guitar can be fascinating. One would expect The Tulla Ceili Band: A Celebration of 50 Years ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Martin Hayes) to be strictly a band album, and it is for the most part. However, Hayes's fiddle playing is very prominent in the mix, and a couple of tracks are a fiddle and accordion duet performed with Andrew McNamara, who plays with the Lahawns. Hayes can be heard on a few tracks on the wonderful anthologies My Love Is in America: The Boston College Irish Fiddle Festival ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Mícheál Ó'Súilleabháin) and Gaelic Roots ♪♪♪♪½ (Kells Music, 1997, prod. Séamus Connolly), both recorded live at Boston College.

worth searching for: One of Hayes's earliest appearances on record was on An Fhidil Sraith I (The Fiddle, Volume I) ♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1978, prod. Paddy Glackin), a wonderful anthology of young Irish fiddle players, unfortunately not reissued on compact disc as yet.

influences:

◀◀ P.J. Hayes, Paddy Canny, Paddy Fahy, Tulla Ceili Band

▶▶ Randal Bays, Dale Russ, Kevin Burke

Philippe Varlet

Hazel & Alice /Hazel Dickens /Alice Gerrard

Formed early 1960s, in Baltimore/Washington, DC, area.

Hazel Dickens (born June 1, 1935, Mercer County, WV), vocals; Alice Gerrard, fiddle, banjo, guitar, vocals.

Hazel Dickens and Alice Gerrard began playing bluegrass together informally, and soon made history in a heretofore largely male bastion of traditional music. With their songwriting skills, imaginative arrangements of traditional and original numbers, and, in particular, their impassioned and heartfelt vocal harmonies, working-class West Virginian Hazel and middle-class/West Coast–reared Alice became a highly influential and successful bluegrass and traditional country duet. Their pioneering efforts helped bring countless young women artists into bluegrass and traditional country music, and their landmark recordings have influenced the repertoires of artists as diverse as Emmylou Harris (who adopted their arrangement of the Carter Family's "Hello Stranger") and the Judds, for whom their harmonizing served as an early inspiration. Performing for the first time in 1962, the two recorded their best-known work for Rounder in 1973. Hazel and Alice's wild and fiercely emotional vocal harmonies breathed new life into the traditional material they recorded, and several of their original songs became bluegrass and traditional standards. Since 1981 they have performed together infrequently, but each has continued to perform solo and in other musical contexts. Dickens is widely regarded as among the finest traditional country songwriters in the business, penning such classics as "Won't You Come and Sing for Me," "Mama's Hands," "My Better Years," "A Few Old Memories," "These Old Pictures," and many more. She has also been involved in several movie projects, contributing music to the films Harlan County, U.S.A. and Matewan, in which she also appeared. Gerrard, a gifted fiddler, banjo player, and guitarist, has been publisher of the Old-Time Herald, a quarterly magazine devoted to the preservation of old-time music, since 1987.

what to buy: Hazel & Alice ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1973/1995, prod. Hazel & Alice), the duo's classic album, was extremely popular and influential in traditional music circles when it was released, due in part to the working woman's slant given to the material, but mostly because of the fierceness and raw, heartfelt emotion conveyed in the duo's harmonies. It contains three originals by Hazel and three by Alice, each imbued with the traditional feel of songs by Utah Phillips, the Carter Family, Wilma Lee Cooper, J.B. Coates, and Trixie Smith that make up the remainder of the album's tracks.

what to buy next: Pioneering Women of Bluegrass ♪♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1965/1996, prod. Peter K. Siegel), a reissue of Hazel & Alice's first recordings—26 cuts in all—contains more numbers from the traditional bluegrass repertoire and fewer originals than their first Rounder recording, with bands that include David Grisman, Lamar Grier, Chubby Wise, and Billy Baker. One notable exception to the traditional repertoire here is Hazel's "Won't You Come and Sing for Me," which, in the years since this recording was originally released, has achieved classic status.

worth searching for: Hazel Dickens & Alice Gerrard ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1976) isn't the classic that the first Rounder album is, but is still very worthwhile. Get Acquainted Waltz ♪♪♪♪

Hazel Dickens (center) of Hazel and Alice (© Jack Vartoogian)

(Arhoolie, 1975/1997, prod. Mike Seeger, Chris Strachwitz) features Hazel & Alice along with Alice's then-husband Mike Seeger and his New Lost City Ramblers bandmate Tracy Schwarz, billed as the Strange Creek Singers.

solo outings:

Hazel Dickens:

Hard Hitting Songs for Hard Hit People ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987) (cassette only)

It's Hard to Tell the Singer from the Song ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1987) (cassette only)

A Few Old Memories ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1987)

By the Sweat of My Brow ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989) (cassette only)

Alice Gerrard:

(With Mike Seeger) Mike and Alice Seeger in Concert ♪♪♪ (King (Japan), 1970)

(With Mike Seeger) Mike Seeger and Alice Gerrard ♪♪♪♪ (Greenhays, 1980)

Pieces of My Heart ♪♪♪♪½ (Copper Creek, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ Carter Family, Wilma Lee Cooper, Stanley Brothers

▶▶ Iris DeMent, the Judds, Emmylou Harris, Lynn Morris, Kate Brislin

Stephen L. Betts and Randy Pitts

Bill & Bonnie Hearne

Formed 1970, in Austin, TX.

Bill Hearne (born February 11, 1949, in Dallas, TX); Bonnie Hearne (born March 5, 1946, in Corsicana, TX).

Outside of Texas, and the country songwriting community at large, this soft-spoken country-folk duo has never quite received the popularity or business breaks their 27-year career has deserved. For years, when Bill picked, Bonnie played gospel piano, and the Hearnes neatly wrapped their high-and-low vocals around each other at Texas nightclubs, young musicians paid attention—first Jerry Jeff Walker, then Lyle Lovett, Nanci Griffith, and Robert Earl Keen Jr. Bonnie (who is blind) and Bill (whose thick glasses save him from being blind) met in 1970 at an Austin club, decided to collaborate, and eventually got married; since then, they've moved to New Mexico, but remain a living historical document of folk and country music, playing traditional tunes and new songs by young hotshots Jon Ims, Chuck Pyle, and Tish Hinojosa. They've put out several self-released tapes, but weren't able to delve into the mainstream music industry until 1997, signing to the Warner Western label.

what to buy: It's tough to find the Hearnes' music, except at their shows, because so much of it came out only on cassette or is out of print. Though Diamonds in the Rough ♪♪♪½ (Warner Western, 1997, prod. Jim Rooney) captures them well down the career road, it has excellent cameos by Griffith and Lovett, and the Hearnes' voices sound impeccable on "Alison Lives by the Big Bend," "Muley Brown," and "Rose of Sharon."

what to buy next: Live at Poor David's Pub ♪♪♪½ (Poor David's Recordings, 1991, prod. David J. Card), a cassette, sets old and new songs in the same lively/weary country-folk context. Highlights are Bill Monroe's "Big Sandy River," Griffith's "Love at the Five and Dime," and Ims's "Magic on a Tennessee Night."

the rest:
Down the Road ♪♪♪ (Self-released, 1985) (cassette only)
Most Requested Plus: The Best of Bill & Bonnie Hearne ♪♪♪ (Poor David's Recordings, 1993)

worth searching for: The Hearnes' early albums, Smilin' ♪♪♪ (B.F. Deal, 1977, prod. Mike Williams, Bill & Bonnie Hearne, Steve Brogden) and New Mexico Rain ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1982, prod. David Magill, Michael Hearne, Bill & Bonnie Hearne), are long out of print.

solo outings:
Bonnie Hearne:
Saturday Night Girl ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1995) (cassette only)

influences:
⏪ Johnny Cash, June Carter Cash, Marty Robbins, Bill Monroe, Dave Van Ronk, Flatlanders, Willie Nelson

⏩ Lyle Lovett, Nanci Griffith, Robert Earl Keen Jr., Tish Hinojosa, Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Guy Clark, Jerry Jeff Walker

Steve Knopper

Hedgehog Pie

See: Dave Burland

Michael Hedges

Born December 31, 1953, in Enid, OK. Died November 30, 1997, near Boonville, CA.

Michael Hedges's radical approach to the acoustic guitar effectively transforms it into a different instrument, creating sounds no one else has attempted with six strings. He changes the tunings, hammers and pulls the chords, taps the frets, tosses off lightning leads, and chooses unusual chord progressions. Hedges studied classical guitar, earned a degree in composition from the Peabody Conservatory, and then attended Stanford University's electronic music department. At first, his meditative instrumentals were tagged New Age, but he soon became too bold and quirky for that, or any, label. His own descriptions, although told in jest, are the most accurate: "violent acoustic," "heavy mental," and "wacka-wacka." Hedges's virtuoso technique led Guitar Player magazine to elect him to the "Gallery of the Greats," but he used the instrument as a tool for artistic expression, not just to thrill guitar fans. In recent years, he added more of his sonorous vocals, keyboards, and percussion to his performances. Hedges died tragically when his car skidded off a rain-slicked highway and down an embankment.

what to buy: Live on the Double Planet ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1987, prod. Michael Hedges) is a safe introduction to Hedges's unorthodox guitar style and compositional talents. His covers of rock classics ("All along the Watchtower," "Come Together") show his ability to reinvent the obvious. The instrumental majesty of Aerial Boundaries (Windham Hill, 1984, prod. William Ackerman, Michael Hedges, Steven Miller) marks Hedges's emergence as a guitar rebel but is relatively tame and much more accessible than his later efforts.

what to buy next: Taproot ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1990, prod. Michael Hedges) is a concept album in which Hedges's instrumental prowess explores "classic mythic archetypes" with themes centering on planting, growth, and harvesting. The concept is obscure but Hedges's guitar brilliance is not.

what to avoid: Breakfast in the Field ♪ (Windham Hill, 1981, prod. William Ackerman), his recording debut, is tepid New Age fare.

the rest:
Watching My Life Go By ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1985)
The Road to Return ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1994)
Oracle ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1996)

worth searching for: Hedges's playing is a highlight on the David Crosby solo album Oh Yes I Can ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1989, prod. various).

influences:

Leo Kottke, Martin Carthy, John Martyn, Edgar Varese

Chris Whitley, Ben Harper, Craig Chaquico

David Yonke

The Hee Haw Gospel Quartet

Roy Clark; Buck Owens; Kenny Price; Grandpa Jones.

A popular segment on the long-running Hee Haw TV series, the "quartet" actually came into being with seven members during a break in taping. Guest performer Tennessee Ernie Ford was gathered off camera with regulars Owens, Clark, Jones, Merle Travis, and Archie Campbell when they ran through a few traditional gospel songs. The show's production staff recognized the possible audience appeal, and the idea stuck.

what's available: The Best of the Hee Haw Gospel Quartet ♪♪♪ (Ranwood, 1995) and The Best of the Hee Haw Gospel Quartet, Volume 2 (Ranwood, 1996) each boast 12 familiar gospel songs. Volume 1 contains "Dust on the Bible," "Shall We Gather at the River," and "Amazing Grace"; Volume 2 has "The Glory Land Way," "No Tears in Heaven," and "The Unclouded Day."

influences:

Statesmen, Blackwood Brothers

see also: Grandpa Jones

Randall T. Cook

Gail Heil

See: Bob Bovee & Gail Heil

Helicon

Formed as Ken Kolodner & Chris Norman, 1983, in Baltimore, MD. Became Helicon in 1986 following the addition of Robin Bullock.

Ken Kolodner, hammered dulcimer, fiddle; Chris Norman, flutes, bagpipes, whistles; Robin Bullock, guitar, cittern, bouzouki, fiddle.

A native Nova Scotian, Chris Norman started as a flute performance major, but on moving to Baltimore he became involved in the hot local Irish traditional music scene. He played often with fiddling great Brendan Mulvihill and was briefly a member of the last rendition of the Irish Tradition. Norman also currently plays with the Baltimore Consort and does concerts with Alisdair Fraser. Ken Kolodner was long active in the Baltimore folk scene. At one point he played in a band, Kid on the Mountain, with later-to-become-hammered-dulcimer-great Maggie Sansone. He now works frequently with fiddler Laura Risk. After initially self-producing a recording, Daybreak, as a duo, Kolodner and Norman decided to add Robin Bullock. Bullock had a bluegrass and rock 'n' roll background that broadened the band's rhythmic and dynamic base. Bullock's current musical escapades include playing for the dance company Footworks and in the John Whelan Band. Over time, Helicon (named after the mountain where the nine muses of art in Greek mythology dwelt) has developed a unique way of arranging international music. Norman is a rare cross-over flute player with the technical wizardry of the classical school and the raw spirit and drive of tradition. Although they share leads back and forth, Norman's distinctive use of the flute is the centerpiece of the band, supported by Kolodner's smooth dulcimer accompaniment and Bullock's flashy picking and strumming. The trio's high-powered instrumentals have even led them to perform at the International Cimbalom Festival in Germany. Each has produced solo albums.

what to buy: Horizons: Traditional Music from around the World ♪♪♪♪♪ (Dorian Discovery, 1992, prod. Helicon) masterfully accomplishes this group's integration of international music in a performance context. They combine dynamics and textural layering from classical music with an American folk-roots drive and each member's individual instrumental precision to form an enticing, distinctive blend. The material covers Balkan music with its odd-metered rhythms, pentatonic Andean tunes, an epic Finnish poem and waltz, American and Irish fiddle tunes, Greek dances, plus a few original compositions thrown in. Norman kicks off the CD with heavily ornamented, rhythmically twisty Macedonian tunes on a double-barreled Hungarian whistle. Kolodner's subtle use of dampers on the dulcimer is eerily appropriate for a tune titled "Death of the Incas." Guitar players will enjoy Bullock's flying fingers on "The Dawn."

what to buy next: The Titan ♪♪♪♪ (Turquoise, 1990/Dorian Discovery, 1993, prod. Helicon) starts with a lovely dulcimer separate-hands (a two-part arrangement played solo) setting of a Hungarian tune. The flute sweeps in and then the guitar carries it into a driving original composition of Robin's. French, Andean, Canadian, Scottish, and American tunes can be found on the CD. The "French Schottische" is so sweet it will put you in a good mood! Robin gratifies guitar lovers with a hot, flat-picked Norman Blake tune, "The Old Brown Case." The final track is a sweet Haitian Christmas carol which, via France, ends with a set of polkas, including the title cut that Chris composed.

worth searching for: Daybreak ♪♪♪♪ (Jeb, 1985) was Norman and Kolodner's first recording. Mostly Celtic with some classical, it shows the essence of their style and has fine arrangements.

3/5/8 hellbenders

uilleann pipes

The uilleann ("elbow"), or union, pipes are the Irish traditional bagpipe. Like most other types of bagpipes, including the well-known Scottish war pipes, the Irish pipes comprise a bag in which the air is stored, a chanter on which the melody is played, and drones, which sound one note continuously. There are also some important differences between the uilleann pipes and their Scottish cousin. For one, the bag is not inflated by mouth via a blowpipe, but rather with the help of bellows strapped under the piper's other (right, usually) arm. This tangle of straps and devices has made one Irish American piper refer to his instrument as "a cross between a bra and a whoopee cushion." Another notable difference is that the instrument is played in seated position, with the drones resting across the piper's lap, rather than on his/her shoulder. Furthermore, on what is known as a full set of pipes, there are three or four keyed pipes, called regulators, set in the same stock and positioned on top of the drones, so that the player can activate the keys with his right wrist and play single notes or chords to accompany the melody. This particular feature has earned the instrument the name of "Irish organ." Last but not least, the chanter of the uilleann pipes has a two-octave range and is often fitted with keys to add chromatic steps to the usual diatonic scale of the instrument.

Philippe Varlet

solo outings:

Ken Kolodner:

Walking Stones: A Celtic Sojourn ♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1997)

Chris Norman:

The Man with the Wooden Flute ♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1992)
Beauty of the North ♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1994)
Highlands ♪♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1997)

Robin Bullock:

Green Fields ♪♪♪ (Dorian Discovery, 1993)
Midnight Howl ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1996)
Between Earth and Sky ♪♪♪♪½ (Maggie's Music, 1998)

influences:

Irish Tradition, Metamora, Trapezoid

Skyedance, No Strings Attached

see also: Baltimore Consort, Robin Bullock, Ken Kolodner, Chris Norman

Karen Ashbrook

Hellbenders

See: Bruce Molsky, Carol Elizabeth Jones & James Leva

Neal Hellman

Born April 13, 1948, in New York, NY.

Neal Hellman became interested in the dulcimer while attending school in Virginia. He purchased his first instrument from Ed Presnell in North Carolina and has gone on to become one of the best-known Appalachian dulcimer players in the United States. Although his recordings have been among the most popular dulcimer-oriented releases over the years, perhaps his greatest contribution has been in the area of publishing instruction books, teaching people how to play, and generally evoking interest in the instrument, particularly on the West Coast. His publishing company, Gourd Music, which he founded in 1987 and now runs with the help of instrumentalist Joe Weed, has produced over 20 albums of related material and is among the leaders in the genre. His first album, Appalachian Dulcimer Duets, was nominated as Folk Album of the Year (1982) by the National Association of Independent Record Distributors (NAIRD), and Frets magazine credited Hellman with personally helping to "redefine the role of the mountain dulcimer in contemporary string music"; as a performer, "he has the ability to draw the audience into a cohesive body so that the evening becomes a shared experience . . . meshing rollicking American tunes and delicate O'Carolan compositions into a delightful set sprinkled liberally with his unique sense of humor and wandering storytelling style." Hellman has toured extensively in the United States and Europe and co-composed the soundtrack for the animated children's video Princess Furball. His books include The Beatles Dulcimer Book, The Hal Leonard Dulcimer Method, Dulcimer Airs, Ballads and Bears, Appalachian Dulcimer Duets, The Dulcimer Chord Book, The Dulcimer Song Book, The Richard Fariña Dulcimer Book, and Life Is like a Mountain Dulcimer.

what to buy: Dream of the Manatee ♪♪♪♪ (Gourd Music, 1989, prod. Joe Weed) is a collection of new acoustic music at its finest. It's a diverse selection of arrangements of traditional pieces from Italy and Spain, plus classic works by Mouret, Galilei, and O'Carolan. The enchanting title track is a magical tale of sailors and sea creatures in which each instrument plays a role, inspired by Peter and the Wolf. Guest artists include Gourd regulars Kim Robertson, Shelley Phillips, William Coulter, and Harris Moore and long-time musical friends Lorraine Duisit and Tom Espinola. The songs are precise and perfectly arranged, without ever seeming to wonder or drag on. It is just plain beautiful music, all lilting guitars and dulcimers, with sweet oboes and French horns floating overhead.

what to buy next: Oktober Country ♪♪♪♪ (Gourd Music, 1987, prod. Neal Hellman) was chosen as a selection for The Wireless Catalog and nominated for New Age album of the year by NAIRD. Hellman chose his favorite time of year to inspire his bittersweet and title tune. Other originals include "Durango," "Little St. Anne," "Picnic on the St. Croix," and "La Mort de Coucy." Oktober Country also features arrangements of French and Italian early music, including "Douce Dame," "El Tutu," and "Lauda de Maria Maddalena," and O'Carolan's "Sheebeg Sheemore." Accompanying Hellman's virtuoso mountain dulcimer are Robertson on Celtic harp, Joe Weed on mandolin, fiddle, and guitar, Phillips on recorders and English horn, Robin Petrie on hammered dulcimer, and Danny Carnahan on fiddle and guitar.

the rest:

(With others) Pacific Film Dulcimer Project ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1977)
Appalachian Dulcimer Duets ♪♪♪ (Kicking Mule, 1981)
Dulcimer Airs, Ballads, and Bears ♪♪♪ (Kicking Mule, 1983) Pastime with Good Company ♪♪♪ (Kicking Mule, 1984)

influences:

Howie Mitchell, Michael Rugg, Albert d'Ossche, Robert Force

David Schnaufer, Lois Hornbostel

Neal Walters

Wayne Henderson

Born in Rugby, VA.

Considering that this unassuming son of Appalachian Virginia has toured the nation and the world three times as a member of the "Masters of the Steel-String" show, has an annual music festival and guitar competition bearing his name, and won the prestigious National Heritage Fellowship award from the National Endowment for the Arts in 1995, it's astonishing that his real fame lies not in his accomplishments as a musician, but as a luthier—that is, a maker of fine acoustic stringed instruments. In Wayne Henderson's case, that means guitars, and some mandolins as well. For well over two decades, Henderson has been making instruments in his workshop at home in tiny Rugby, Virginia, and selling his prized instruments and building his astonishing reputation almost entirely on word of mouth, as tales of his unparalleled craftsmanship—and the guitars themselves—pass from one elite player to another. They're instantly recognizable, highly decorated with a distinctive design sense, but really prized for their richness and tone. He currently produces about 20 instruments a year, and many wait patiently for one of his guitars; word has it that Eric Clapton's name is among the many on his long waiting list. But Henderson's no slouch as a player, either. The first thing you'd notice is his unique right-hand technique: rather than holding a flatpick, Henderson has devised an alternating thumb-and-forefinger attack (with thumb pick and fingerpicks) to play the single-note, bluegrass style, giving him an unusual advantage, combining the bluegrass guitar sensibility with a fingerstyle capability. The next thing that jumps right out is his repertoire: although you get the feeling he could play "Beaumont Rag" or any other bluegrass guitar showpiece as well as (or better than) anybody, you're just as likely to hear a Carter Family piece, "Banks of the Ohio," or many other examples of the older, deeply rooted music from his native state that predated the supercharged, commercially driven bluegrass style. But Henderson can play the old tunes with an instrumental dexterity and a musical imagination the old-timers probably couldn't have dreamed of, wedding the old music with a modern-day—but still somehow thoroughly Appalachian—sensibility.

what to buy: Rugby Guitar ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1992, prod. Arnie Solomon) was his first appearance on a label with any sort of national distribution (it appeared first on vinyl in 1990). It's still the best introduction to this unique stylist, and perhaps the most characteristic of his recordings. It's all instrumental, featuring his unusual thumb-and-forefinger style, and the tunes include a welcome array of Blue Ridge classics.

what to buy next: You won't want to miss Not Much Work for Saturday ♪♪♪ (Hay Holler Harvest, 1997, prod. Steve Kaufman), Henderson's duet album with Steve Kaufman. These two are old friends—Kaufman's originally from Knoxville, Tennessee, not too far down the road—and while their respective styles make for an agreeable contrast, their music springs from the same well.

what to avoid: For more than a dozen years, until the watershed Rugby Guitar album was issued, the only recording of Wayne Henderson anywhere was Guitar Pickin' with Herb Key ♪♪ (Heritage, 1977, prod. Fred Williams), a duet album with guitarist Ray Cline and bassist Key. Not that the album's bad—in fact the picking is spirited and the interplay agreeable—but considering that it's available only on tape, and Henderson's covering the same ground better 20 years later on CD, don't bother trying to find it!

the rest:
(With Ray Cline) Guitar Pickin' ♪♪♪ (Heritage, 1988)
W.C. Henderson and Co. ♪♪♪ (Hay Holler Harvest, 1995)

solo outings:
The Bluegrass Band:
Once Again from the Top, Volume 1 ♪♪♪ (Hay Holler Harvest, 1995)
Once Again from the Top, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Hay Holler Harvest, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Maybelle Carter, Doc Watson

▶▶ Steve Kaufman, Norman Blake

Chris Rietz

Don Henley

See: The Eagles

Margo Hennebach

Born November 25, 1958, New York, NY.

Margo Hennebach's keyboarding, guitar playing, and harmony vocals have made her an active participant in the Hoboken, New Jersey, and Greenwich Village, New York, folk music scenes. In addition to accompanying such artists as John Gorka and Shawn Colvin at several of the annual Fast Folk Musical Magazine revues at the Bottom Line in New York, Hennebach has performed and recorded with such singer-songwriters as Rod MacDonald and Richard Shindell and with jazz-folk saxophonist Paul Winter. Her solo performances, often with guitarist Mark Saunders, and two albums, Margo Hennebach and Michaelean, have enabled her to build a following of her own.

Classically trained on piano, Hennebach won several statewide piano performance competitions in New Jersey as a youngster. After graduating from Oberlin Conservatory with a B.A. in piano, she turned her academic focus to music therapy while studying for a master's degree from the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London. Hennebach has performed at festivals, clubs, and coffeehouses throughout the United States. A finalist at the 1991 "New Folks" competition at the Kerrville Folk Festival in Texas, she's occasionally performed, along with Adrienne Jones and Diane Chodkowski, as Madwomen in the Attic.

what to buy: On her third album, Big Love ♪♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME-CD, 1998, prod. Jim Chapdelaine, Mark Saunders, Margo Hennebach), Hennebach explores the diversity of love. In addition to several songs about romantic love, she expands the theme to include songs about unrequited love and the love of a parent for a child. While most of the tracks are intimate duo performances with Saunders, other songs are enhanced by the sensitive drumming and percussion playing of John Peckman and the melodic bass playing of Tyler Van Ostrand.

what to buy next: Hennebach's second album, Michaelean ♪♪♪ (1-800-PRIME-CD, 1996, prod. David Seitz, Margo Hennebach), is a deeply personal, Celtic-tinged recording. Dedicated to her family, Hennebach reflects on her role as an adopted child. The title track is an emotional song about her sister, who was also adopted as an infant. Hennebach's expressive piano playing and vocals are enhanced by Denny McDermott (Steely Dan), Stephanie Winters (The Nudes), Michael Viscaglia (Suzanne Vega Band), and the other women in her trio, Madwomen in the Attic.

the rest:
Margo Hennebach ♪♪♪½ (1-800-PRIME-CD, 1994)

worth searching for: In addition to being featured in several issues of Fast Folk Musical Magazine, Hennebach's songs have been included on two compilations—Hoot (Folk Next Door Volume III, 1994) and Local Color (Folk Next Door, Volume IV, 1995)—assembled by Hartford, Connecticut, radio station WWUH-FM.

influences:
◀◀ Kate Bush, Joni Mitchell, Joan Baez

▶▶ Rod MacDonald, Cliff Eberhardt, John Gorka, Richard Shindell

Craig Harris

Priscilla Herdman

Born February 11, 1948, in Eastchester, NY.

The beauty of Priscilla Herdman's soprano vocals has enabled her to become one of contemporary folk music's best interpreters. Covering tunes by Judy Small, David Mallett, and the late Stan Rogers, the Pine Plains, New York–based songstress has turned songs by James Taylor, Tom Waits, Lui Collins, Si Kahn, and Bill Staines into personal statements. Herdman's debut album, The Water Lily, reflects her interest in the music of Australia and includes songs by Australian folk singer Eric Bogle and musical interpretations of poems by Australia's beloved poet, Henry Lawson (1867–1922). But subsequent releases have taken a more North American view. Herdman was one of the early pioneers of late singer-songwriter Stan Rogers and recorded four of his songs—"The Field behind the Plow," "Lies," "Forty-Five Years," and "Turnaround." Her 1983 album, Seasons of Change, was dedicated to his memory. Although she primarily performs as a soloist, Herdman has toured and recorded in a trio that includes Anne Hills and Cindy Mangsen. She has also recorded two albums of children's songs.

what to buy: Herdman reached her pinnacle with her third album, Seasons of Change ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1983, prod. Artie Traum). While her fingerstyle acoustic guitar and vocals are enhanced by the tone coloring of John Sebastian (harmonica), Abby Newton (cello), Evan Stover (mandolin and fiddle), and Happy Traum (lead guitar), the album remains an acoustic masterpiece. While only one tune—"Rice and Beans"—is original, co-written and sung with Bruce "U. Utah" Phillips, Herdman effectively assembles songs by David Mallett, Woody Guthrie, Si Kahn, and the late Stan Rogers in a musical examination of the "ordinary" people of America.

what to buy next: The long-awaited follow-up to Seasons of Change, Darkness into Light ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1987, prod. Priscilla Herdman, Abby Newton) continued the tradition-rooted approach of its predecessor. Inspired by the birth of her daughter, Herdman explores the role of motherhood with songs including Henry Lawson's "When the Children Come Home" and Judy Small's "From the Lambing to the Wool." Sojourner Truth's poem, "Ain't I a Woman?," is given a musical setting, while Malvina Reynolds and Alan Greene's "Turn Around" is fused with Herdman's arrangement of a traditional Irish tune, "The Garten Mother's Lullaby." Resuming their songwriting and vocal collaboration, Herdman and Phillips deliver the heart-tugging duet, "I Remember Loving You."

the rest:
The Water Lily ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1977)
Forgotten Dreams ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1980)
Stardreamer: Nightsongs and Lullabies ♪♪♪½ (Alcazam!, 1988)
Daydreamer ♪♪♪½ (Music for Little People, 1993)
Forever & Always ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1994) worth searching for: Circles in the Stream, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪ (WUMB, 1993) includes a live version of Herdman's tender rendition of David Roth's "Lullabye."

solo outings:
Herdman, Hills & Mangsen:
Voices ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1990)
Voices of Winter ♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Judy Collins, Joan Baez, Jean Ritchie, Stan Rogers
▶▶ Anne Hills, Cindy Mangsen

see also: Steve Gillette & Cindy Mangsen

Craig Harris

Hesperus

Formed mid-1980s, in Washington, DC.

Tina Chancey, viola da gamba, fiddle, vielle, rebec, recorders, kamenj; Scott Reiss, recorders, hammered dulcimer, flageolet, percussion; Mark Cudek, cittern, baroque guitar, viola da gamba, recorders; Bruce Hutton, banjo, mandolin, mouth bow, mountain dulcimer.

Hesperus could probably be cited as the group that jump-started the early music movement. Believing that ancient music could become living music when properly paired with living styles and authentic instruments, Scott Reiss and Tina Chancey have embarked on a journey with a vision of bringing early music alive to audiences around the world. Lilting recorders, singing melodies on violin or viol, and exciting string lines are characteristic of this group's emotional tunes. Their mastery of their instruments and ability to improvise upon early themes brought a new dimension to the term early music. They leave the listener longing for days gone by, but simultaneously glad to be in the here and now, where this music is so stunningly performed.

what to buy: Early American Roots ♪♪♪½ (Maggie's Music, 1997, prod. Tina Chancey, Scott Reiss) takes a variety of styles and genres of music from around the time of the American Revolution and brings them back to life. Mark Cudek from the Baltimore Consort adds his excellent cittern and guitar lines to this lively mix. From country dances and cotillions to shape note hymns, the music of the American forefathers paints a picture of an earlier way of life.

what to buy next: Scott, Tina, and Bruce team up with Appalachian music expert Mike Seeger (guitar, banjo, fiddle, vocals) to combine medieval and Appalachian music on Crossing Over ♪♪♪ (Greenhays, 1988). The range of styles here is amazing—from a beautiful vielle and dumbek duet on "Estampie Belicha" to "Ground Hog/Ronde" with an amazing country feel to the banjo and fiddle lines. This is a truly unusual and surprisingly successful pairing of traditions. Another recording, Celtic Roots (Maggie's Music, 1998), is worth hunting down.

the rest:
Unicorn ♪♪♪ (Delos, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Ensemble Galilei
▶▶ Capriol, Baltimore Consort

Jo Hughey Morrison

Carolyn Hester

Born 1937, in Waco, TX.

Carolyn Hester was one of the most influential vocalists in early 1960s folk music. Singing in a high-pitched voice that compared favorably with Joan Baez and Judy Collins, Hester set the standard for country-folk vocals and became a major influence on such singers as Mary Chapin Carpenter, Nanci Griffith, Iris DeMent, and Michelle Shocked. Best known for her interpretations of traditional folk songs, Hester was described by The New York Times as having "a vocal range from rooftop soprano to stunning chest tones." Her early albums were produced by top-notch producers, including John Hammond, Norman Petty (Buddy Holly's producer), and Tom Clancy of the Clancy Brothers. Influenced by the cowboy songs she heard in Texas, Hester was performing in folk music coffeehouses by the mid-1950s. With hopes of becoming a folksinger, she moved to New York in 1956. Her first break came when her mother sent a tape of her songs to Petty, who owned a recording studio in Clovis, New Mexico. Petty was so impressed that he helped Hester secure a contract with the Coral Records label. Hester made her recording debut with a collection of traditional songs, Scarlet Ribbons, in 1959, and spent much of the early 1960s traveling between the United States and Great Britain. In 1962 she performed on BBC-TV in England and at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland. The following year, the British government sponsored her tour of Soviet cities. Hester continued to be politically active in the United States, joining and marching for civil rights with the Freedom Riders in Mississippi in the early 1960s and singing at the Democratic National Convention in 1964. In 1961, two weeks after meeting singer-songwriter and novelist Richard Fariña, Hester married him. After she helped Fariña write a beat-inspired novel, Been Down So Long It Looks Like Up to Me, Fariña fell in love with Joan Baez's sister, Mimi, in 1963, and the couple divorced.

After Hester's self-titled album, produced by Tom Clancy, came to the attention of producer John Hammond, Hammond convinced Columbia Records to sign her to a recording contract and produced a second self-titled album, which is best remembered for the presence of Bob Dylan on harmonica. Hester later performed at the Dylan tribute at Madison Square Garden, where she and Nanci Griffith performed Dylan's "Boots of Spanish Leather." Hester and Griffith also sang a duet version of Tom Paxton's "Can't Help but Wonder Where I'm Bound" that was included on Griffith's album Other Voices, Other Rooms. In 1969 Hester married jazz pianist and record producer David Blume. Moving to Los Angeles in 1969, the couple opened Cafe Danssa, an international folk dance club and restaurant.

what to buy: Hester became the answer to a trivia question when she asked Greenwich Village friend Bob Dylan to play harmonica on her album Carolyn Hester ♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1962, prod. John Hammond). One of the first of Dylan's recordings, the album remains an important historical document.

what to buy next: On Warriors of the Rainbow ♪♪♪ (Outpost, 1986, prod. Dave Blume, Rick Ruggieri), Hester showcased her songwriting skills and paid homage to Native Americans with songs including "Geronimo," "Chief Sarah," "Fiercest Freedom Fighter," and the title track.

the rest:
Scarlet Ribbons ♪♪ (Coral, 1961)
Carolyn Hester ♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1962)
That's My Song ♪♪♪ (Dot, 1965)
At Town Hall ♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1965)
Music Medicine ♪♪♪ (Outpost, 1982)

influences:
◀◀ Kitty Wells, Patsy Cline, Rose Maddox
▶▶ Mary Chapin Carpenter, Nanci Griffith, Iris DeMent, Michelle Shocked

Craig Harris

Sara Hickman

Born in TX.

The irrepressible Sara Hickman is nearly impossible to categorize, with a musical style ranging from pop to jazz to folk to her own brand of quirky music. Her music is often infused with her equally quirky sense of humor. With an artistic heritage (her father is a painter and her mother a photographer) Hickman first began playing the guitar when she was seven, and was making her own recordings at eight. She enrolled in Houston's High School for the Performing and Visual Arts and spent her weekends performing at local clubs and parties. After graduating with an art degree from North Texas State, Hickman moved to Dallas and began to play full time. In 1988, aided by Brave Combo front man and longtime friend Carl Finch, she released her first CD, Equal Scary People. She signed with Elektra in 1989 and the album was re-released. Her Elektra debut, Shortstop, featured the hit single, "I Couldn't Help Myself." Hickman's independence soon became problematic for her record company, however, and her next album was shelved by Elektra. Unable to afford the cost of buying the album back from the label, Hickman appealed to her fans and they came through with donations. This, combined with money from selling her house, allowed Hickman to buy Necessary Angels back from the label. Hickman labeled her supporters and contributors "Necessary Angels"; she had bracelets made for them and listed each one in the liner notes when the CD was released in 1994 by Discovery. It wasn't long before she started to have artistic differences with Discovery, and her next album, Misfits, was released on Shanachie. Hickman has since decided to form her own label. Her involvement in music is balanced by her commitment to various charities, including the Romanian Children's Relief Fund, Habitat for Humanity, Bryan's House in Dallas for children living with AIDS, and Austin SPCA.

what to buy: Shortstop ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1990, prod. David Kershenbaum, Sara Hickman) is the most consistent of Hickman's albums, one of her most pop oriented, and easily the most radio friendly. This is not a bad thing. "Couldn't Help Myself" is a light, frothy song about falling in love while "Claim on My Heart" is a sweet, sentimental love song where the singer offers her heart in place of things with monetary value. "Too Fast," a blatantly up-front song about power in relationships, is frank and unblinking. The final cut, "Take It like a Man," is a funky, funny (in a droll kind of way) take on women's place in the world: "Cuz ever since the world began/It's been a constant struggle 'tween/Woman and man/Years went flyin'/Women were taught to sit up straight/To cook and clean and dust and sew/And manipulate/Men went to the office."

what to buy next: Necessary Angels ♪♪♪♪ (Discovery, 1994, prod. Mark Hallman, Paul Fox, Sara Hickman) contains tasteful arrangements and above-average songwriting and comes out at the top of the singer/songwriter's pack. A touching tribute to her grandmother, "Room of One's Own" gives some indication of where Hickman gets her indomitable spirit and drive: "She warned me that life would give me a try. It held no remorse at passing me by if I ignored the call." "Sister and Sam" showcases Hickman's lovely voice, often at its best with little instrumental ornamentation. Danny Levin's cello adds just the right match on this song about a pair of elderly aunts. The album includes some of the best of Austin's musical residents.

the rest:
Domestic Science Club ♪♪♪ (Independent, 1993/Discovery, 1994)
Misfits ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997)

worth searching for: The original Four Dots version of Equal Scary People ♪♪♪ (Four Dots, 1988/Elektra, 1989) includes a bonus track of "Take It like a Man" with all male musicians that's not on the Elektra release. The compilation Legacy (Windham Hill, 1989) includes Hickman's "Salvador." Arachnophobia: Original Motion Picture Soundtrack (Hollywood Records, 1990) includes Hickman's "Blue Eyes Are Sensitive to the Light." Rubiyat (Elektra, 1990), Elektra's 40th-anniversary celebration album, includes Hickman's cover of "Hello, This Is Your Heart" with the Meters.

influences:
◀◀ Sarah Elizabeth Campbell, Dan Fogelberg, John Denver
▶▶ Syd Straw, Carrie Newcomer, Sarah McLachlan

Denise Sofranko

Dan Hicks

Born December 9, 1941, in Little Rock, AR.

Dan Hicks polished the old-timey style of the Charlatans, a little-known but influential San Francisco band in which he served as drummer, into a campy, acoustic-flavored cabaret act, Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks. The group would presage such full-blown period pieces as Bette Midler, the Pointer Sisters, and the Manhattan Transfer by several years. Hicks's sarcastic persona and well-developed sense of irony gave him a determined deadpan attitude and helped obscure the fact that his songwriting was really first-rate. With his jazzy mien and caustic air, he made a modest splash with his Blue Thumb albums of the early 1970s, which had the zippy nonchalance of an R. Crumb cartoon come to life. Hicks continues an active performing career, although his recordings have been few and far between since the heyday of the Hot Licks.

what to buy: Where's the Money ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1971/1989, prod. Tommy LiPuma) probably best reflects the zany intransigence of Hicks & company.

the highwaymen

what to buy next: Striking It Rich ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1972, prod. Tommy LiPuma) captures the live ambiance of the band's appearances.

the rest:
Last Train to Hicksville ♪♪ (MCA, 1973)
Shootin' Straight ♪♪♪ (On the Spot, 1994)

worth searching for: His debut album, Dan Hicks & His Hot Licks ♪♪♪½ (Epic, 1969/1995, prod. Bob Johnston), is his best, with such signature songs as "How Can I Miss You When You Won't Go Away," "Canned Music," and "I Scare Myself" (later covered by Thomas Dolby).

influences:
◀◀ Le Hot Club de France, Andrews Sisters, Charlatans
▶▶ Pointer Sisters, Thomas Dolby

Joel Selvin

The Highwaymen

See: Johnny Cash, Waylon Jennings, Kris Kristofferson

Highwoods String Band

See: Walt Koken, Mac Benford

Noel Hill

Born in Caherea, Lissycasey, Co. Clare, Ireland.

The County Clare in the west of Ireland is a stony, windswept portion of the Gaeltacht—the tiny section of Ireland where Irish, against all odds, is the chief language—and is celebrated around the world for its music. Among the many things about the region's unique style and repertoire is a tradition of concertina playing, and Clare-born Noel Hill is easily its most noted practitioner. Late in the nineteenth century in Britain a small handful of companies (most notably Wheatstone and Lachenal in England) began marketing small concertinas, designed to be good, durable instruments that working folks could afford. The instrument caught on in England; how widespread their use was in Ireland, with its more highly developed tradition of dance music, is not completely known. But the diatonic (i.e., a "push-pull" fingering system confined to fewer keys but better suited to rhythmic dance music) concertina evidently found a permanent home in Clare, where a technique and a special repertoire all its own emerged. If Noel Hill is the inheritor of this little-known but cherished tradition, he shares a modern sensibility with many Irish traditional musicians in the era of mass media: his playing has far expanded the boundaries of the instrument's limits. You'll hear rolls and triplets executed with the finesse of Sligo fiddle players; or he'll ornament a phrase with a style that belongs more to uilleann pipes than to this lowly squeezebox.

what to buy: Irish Concertina ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993. prod. Noel Hill) is Hill's one musical statement, the first and last word on Clare-style Irish concertina—and on how far beyond the boundaries you can really go, which in his case is far indeed. Hill has made a point of bringing his chosen instrument up to the standards enjoyed by the other better-known Irish instruments, and this album is a showcase for not only rollicking Irish dance music but an encyclopedic display of Gaelic technical wizardry—from cranning on the low D like a piper to snapping off a bow triplet like Donegal fiddling legend Tommy Peoples.

what to buy next: A gem of an album from 1978, Noel Hill & Tony Linnane ♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1996, prod. Micheal O'Domhnaill) was in fact Hill's first appearance on record, with his longtime associate Tony Linnane on fiddle. Here's a chance to hear Hill in a setting where ensemble playing rather than overwhelming virtuosity is called for, and the result is one of the most appealing, colorful "session tunes" albums ever made (although Hill's solo showcase, a version of "Johnny Cope" with Micheal O'Domhnaill's haunting harmonium underneath, is a show-stopper). Fellow Olympians Alec Finn and Matt Molloy lend their unique talents here as well.

the rest:
(With Tony McMahon) In Knocknagree ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992)
(With Tony McMahon and Iarla O'Lionaird) Music of Dreams ♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ His uncle, Paddy Hill, Fr. Charlie Coen, Willie Clancy, Miko Russell
▶▶ Mary MacNamara, Gearoid O'Hallmhurain

Chris Rietz

Chris Hillman /The Desert Rose Band

Born December 4, 1943, in Los Angeles, CA. Desert Rose Band formed 1985. Disbanded 1993.

Chris Hillman has been an integral part of country-rock's more notable groupings, with great skills as a collaborator. Already an accomplished mandolin player by the time he picked up the bass and joined the Byrds in 1964, Hillman began picking professionally with the Scottsville Squirrel Barkers, joining Rex and Vern Gosdin in the Golden State Boys by the time he was 16 (together, these musicians would later be known as the Hillmen). His contributions to the Byrds helped push that band in a country direction, climaxing with the seminal, country-flavored Sweetheart of the Rodeo in 1968. He left the Byrds to found the Flying Burrito Brothers with ex-Byrds-mate Gram Parsons in 1969; the Brothers' debut, The Gilded Palace of Sin, is another country-rock essential. Hillman spent the rest of the 1970s partnering with Stephen Stills (Manassas; Stephen Stills Band), John David Souther, and Richie Furay (S.H.F. Band), and former Byrds Roger McGuinn and Gene Clark, along with an occasional solo record. During 1985 he formed, with Herb Pedersen and John Jorgenson, the Desert Rose Band, a more professional version of the Flying Burrito Brothers, which lasted through 1993.

what to buy: Bakersfield Bound ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1996, prod. Herb Pedersen) is a stone-country record with Buck Owens overtones and excellent ensemble playing that takes Hillman and Pederson's Desert Rose Band concept a step closer. Desert Rose ♪♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1984, prod. Al Perkins) is prototypical of the Desert Rose Band as well as Hillman's best solo collection of country songs. The Desert Rose Band ♪♪♪♪½ (Curb, 1987 prod. Paul Worley) features the same kind of kinetic energy and solid writing as The Gilded Palace of Sin, with the added bonus of experience.

what to buy next: Manassas ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1972/1995, prod. Stephen Stills) includes "It Doesn't Matter," written with Stills, along with some underrated instrumental contributions from Hillman, especially on the B-side's country/bluegrass pastiche. The Hillmen ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1964/1995 prod. Jim Dickson) offers spirited bluegrass recorded during 1963 and 1964, before Hillman, the Gosdin Brothers, and Don Parmley became well known. Morning Sky ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1982, prod. Jim Dickson) is a country/rock fusion record with a formidable selection of songs, including Hillman's take on Parsons's classic "Hickory Wind."

what to avoid: The Souther-Hillman-Furay Band, a "supergroup" blues/country concept, ultimately didn't suit any of the participants' musical personalities. For proof, take an earful of Trouble in Paradise ♪♪ (Elektra/Asylum, 1975, prod. Tom Dowd).

the rest:

Chris Hillman:

Clear Sailin' ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1978)

(With Roger McGuinn and Gene Clark) McGuinn, Clark & Hillman ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1979)

Desert Rose Band:

Running ♪♪♪ (Curb, 1988)

Pages of Life ♪♪♪ (Curb, 1990)

True Love ♪♪♪ (Curb, 1991)

A Dozen Roses: Greatest Hits ♪♪♪½ (Curb, 1991)

Traditional ♪♪♪½ (Curb, 1993)

worth searching for: Slippin' Away ♪♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1976, prod. Ron Albert, Howard Albert) is still the best collection of Hillman-penned songs with that polished, 1970s-style production.

influences:

- Pete Seeger, the Weavers, Flatt & Scruggs, Gosdin Brothers, Hank Williams
- The Eagles, Gram Parsons, Jayhawks, Uncle Tupelo, Wilco, Son Volt

see also: The Byrds, the Flying Burrito Brothers, Gram Parsons

Leland Rucker

Anne Hills

Born October 13, 1953, in Moradabad, India.

Anne Hills was the third daughter born to educational missionaries. Raised in Michigan, she attended Interlochen Arts Academy where she was female soloist with the Big Band that turned out future performers Peter Erskine, Bob Mintzer, and Chris Brubeck. She moved to Chicago in 1976 and co-founded Hogeye Music, still a force in the Chicago music scene. Her first three recordings, 1982's The Panic Is On (with then-partner Jan Burda), 1984's Don't Explain, and the "Chicago folk" Christmas album On This Day Earth Shall Ring, were released on her own Hogeye Records, which also released recordings by Tom Paxton, Bob Gibson, Andrew Calhoun, and Cindy Mangsen. In late 1983, Hills began periodically working with the short-lived trio Best of Friends, featuring folk music legends Tom Paxton and Bob Gibson. As Hills's touring schedule and prominence grew, Flying Fish took over Hogeye's catalog. Shortly after the release of her second solo recording, 1987's Woman of a Calm Heart, Hills began the occasional musical partnership with Priscilla Herdman and Cindy Mangsen. Their debut recording, Voices, was met with critical acclaim. Through these years, Hills's singing has also been featured with Jim Post, Tom Paxton, Michael Smith, Livingston Taylor, Artie Traum, Priscilla Herdman, Cindy Mangsen, Ginni Clemens, Si Kahn, and Bob Gibson. She has also produced recordings for Smith, Mangsen, Gibson, Jamie O'Reilly, Al

tish hinojosa

Power, and David Roth. She followed the trio recording with October Child in 1993, produced by jazz drummer and former classmate Peter Erskine (Weather Report) and featuring arrangements by Vince Mendoza, with back-up by Bob Mann, Jim Cox, Carlos Vega, Jimmy Johnson, and the solo reed work of Paul McCandless. Her 1994 traditional music project, Never Grow Old, was nominated for and received an "honorable mention" in the Folk category of the Indie Awards (NAIRD). Recorded with Mangsen, it featured a host of guests, including John Hartford, Laurie Lewis, Tom Paxton, and Gordon Bok.

Along with her soaring soprano, Hills's songwriting has garnered critical acclaim and the attention of her peers. Her songs have been covered by both trios with whom she worked, as well as a growing number of other artists. Her writing is often inspired by news events and she is a regular performer and sometime "Songwriter's School" instructor at the Kerrville Folk Festival. She has co-written with Michael Smith, Jay Ansill, and David Roth. With Roth, Hills organized a benefit recording (including selections from Josh White Jr., Kim & Reggie Harris, Steve Gillette, and Mangsen) for the Carole Robertson Center for Learning, a west-side Chicago family support center named in honor of the four girls killed in the 1963 Birmingham church bombing. Her song "Follow That Road" was selected as the title cut of the 1994 songwriters' compilation released by Rounder Records. The autumn of 1995 saw the release of Angle of the Light, which features 10 of Hills's own songs, including "Follow That Road." She is also an Equity actress who began stage work at age 12; credits have included productions of Quilters, Foxfire, The Courtship of Carl Sandburg, and Jim Post's The Heart of Christmas. Most recently, audiences saw her at Philadelphia's Arden Theatre, acting and singing songs she was commissioned to write (with Jay Ansill, harpist) for Brian Friel's Lovers. Her most recent recording is Voices of Winter, reuniting her with Mangsen and Herdman. Hills currently lives in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, with her husband, Sing Out! editor Mark Moss, and daughter Tamlyn.

what to buy: Angle of the Light ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1995, prod. Anne Hills, Scott Petito) is the first of Hills's projects to showcase her own songwriting and has been widely praised, finding its way onto many folk DJ Top 10 lists. Never Grow Old ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1994, prod. Anne Hills, Cindy Mangsen) is a duet album with long-time singing partner Mangsen. Joined by a striking array of guests, including Tom Paxton, Laurie Lewis, John Hartford, Gordon Bok, Priscilla Herdman, and others, Hills and Mangsen nail 16 traditional songs reaching back to the last century. Both of her two recordings with Mangsen and Herdman, Voices ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1990, prod. Abby Newton) or Voices of Winter ♪♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1997, prod. Cindy Mangsen, Priscilla Herdman, Anne Hills), are exquisite in terms of their vocal harmonies, although neither is, strictly speaking, an Anne Hills album.

what to buy next: Woman of a Calm Heart ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1987, prod. Anne Hills, Stuart Rosenberg, Rich Warren) was Hills's first solo effort for Flying Fish and still ranks among her best. The highlight is perhaps her duet with Livingston Taylor on "Akasha Wind."

the rest:
Don't Panic ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1992)
October Child ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1993)
(With others) Follow That Road ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1994) worth searching for: Hills has a prominent role on On This Day the Earth Shall Ring ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1985, prod. Anne Hills, Jan Burda), a perennial favorite.

influences:
◀◀ Sylvia Tyson, Jean Ritchie
▶▶ Priscilla Herdman, Cindy Mangsen

Neal Walters

Tish Hinojosa

Born Leticia Hinojosa, December 6, 1955, in San Antonio, TX.

You'd think Tish Hinojosa's facility for singing in both English and Spanish would double her chances of stardom, but it's probably held her back. That, and the fact that her music may be too folkish and occasionally too political for country radio. Too bad, too, because Hinojosa's crystalline soprano voice is captivating, as are her songs—many of them autobiographical sketches of growing up as the child of Mexican immigrants. Later albums find Hinojosa trying to make a more conventional pop/country/folk hybrid, and they're fine, but they lack the elements of daring and discovery that mark her earlier efforts. An exception is Cada Niño/Every Child, which makes a case for bilingualism in the form of a children's album with lyrics sung in both English and Spanish.

what to buy: The album that best sums up Hinojosa's appeal is Culture Swing ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Tish Hinojosa), which showcases her beautiful voice as she surveys Tex-Mex,

Tish Hinojosa (© Jack Vartoogian)

tish hinojosa

3/6/8 robyn hitchcock

banjo types

The African "banjar" has spawned quite a few descendants in the last hundred years or so. The most common one in folk music is the five-string banjo, which has four strings of equal length and a shorter fifth string. An American named Joel Sweeney is often credited with the addition of the fifth string, although some have disputed that claim. In any case, the five-string itself has evolved into a couple of different versions. In old-time music, the choice of most players is the open-back banjo, meaning that it has no resonator on the back of the rim. It has a mellow, plunky sound and is not particularly loud, which means it sounds great accompanying a fiddle. The original African instruments did not have frets, and a fretless open-back five-string is still preferred by some old-time musicians. When bluegrass music came along, it was clear that the banjo could not be heard in a larger group without some modification. A resonator and plastic head were added, giving the instrument a loud, crisp sound that makes its voice heard clearly in a band. Bluegrass players also tend to wear metal picks on their fingers, which adds to the volume.

David Shombert

Western swing, folk, pop, and country, addresses timeless themes of family, social issues, and ecology, and showcases her beautiful voice. An all-around winner. The earlier Homeland ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1989, prod. Steve Berlin) is a pleasing folk/country outing but has a slightly political edge, thanks to the opening salvo, "Border Trilogy," which details the hardships faced by illegal immigrants. "Donde Voy (Where I Go)" is another heart-rending meditation on the subject. The Best of the Sandia: Watermelon 1991–1992 ♪♪♪♪ (Watermelon, 1997) offers a generous sampling of her brief stint with that label.

what to buy next: Hinojosa's debut, Taos to Tennessee ♪♪♪½ (self-released, 1987/Watermelon, 1992, prod. Michael Hearne, Tish Hinojosa, Craig Barker) reveals the genesis of her bilingual folk-country style. The album includes "Amanecer," her first all-Spanish composition, several English originals, plus covers of songs by Peter Rowan ("Midnight Moonlight"), James McMurtry ("Crazy Wind and Flashing Yellows"), and Irving Berlin ("Always"). The Spanish-language Frontejas ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Tish Hinojosa) gains considerable bounce from its all-star cast, including Brave Combo, Flaco Jimenez, Santiago Jimenez Jr., Ray Benson, and Eva Ybarra.

the rest:
Memorabilia Navidena ♪♪♪ (Watermelon, 1991)
Aquella Noche ♪♪♪ (Watermelon, 1991)
Destiny's Gate ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1994)
Dreaming from the Labyrinth ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996)
Cada Niño/Every Child ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996)
Sonar Del Laberinto ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, Joan Baez, Linda Ronstadt
▶▶ Eva Ybarra

Daniel Durchholz

Robyn Hitchcock /Robyn Hitchcock & the Egyptians

Born 1953, in West London, England. The Egyptians formed 1985, in Cambridge, England.

Robyn Hitchcock, vocals, guitar; Andy Metcalfe, bass, vocals; Morris Windsor, drums, vocals; Roger Jackson, keyboards (1985–86).

Robyn Hitchcock's first band, the Soft Boys (1977–81) grew out of the folk boom in Cambridge, England, before dissolving in the subsequent indifference. (They prospered, or at least lingered fondly in memory.) Hitchcock painted, wrote songs for Captain Sensible, and licked his wounds for a time. Eventually the pull of songwriting and performing won out and he began to return regularly to the studio as a solo act and with the Egyptians—who, for their part, were the Soft Boys minus lead guitarist Kimberly Rew. Regardless of the setting, Hitchcock writes songs that make inescapable the connection between West Coast psychedelia and folk music. They're sweet, idiosyncratic, sometimes dada, frequently surrealistic, and often tainted with the odor of love (past, present, or future). Always a critic's favorite (and rarely any kind of commercial success), Hitchcock has bounced from label to label. Throughout, his body of work (with one notable exception) has been first-rate. In live performance, he connects his songs with a stream-of-unconsciousness patter that is almost as fascinating as his songs are beautiful.

what to buy: Where to begin? I Often Dream of Trains ♪♪♪♪½ (Midnight Music, 1984/Rhino 1995, prod. Robyn Hitchcock) is an exquisite album, relaxed and focused and studded with kind, wry, sad songs like "Sometimes I Wish I Was a Pretty Girl," the music hall-ish "Uncorrected Personality Traits," and the stunning title track. It is a simple, winsome record, and quite fetching. The Egyptians' college radio hit, "Balloon Man," from Globe of Frogs ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1988, prod. Egyptians), marked the group's ascension to a major label in the States. It is as quirky, eccentric, and ebullient a record as the band would make. That Perspex Island ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1991, prod. Paul Fox) didn't produce a break-through hit—what with the likes of "So You Think You're in Love" and "She Doesn't Exist"—is a testimonial only to the unfairness of things.

what to buy next: The first Egyptians opus, Fegmania! ♪♪♪½ (Midnight Music, 1985/Rhino 1995, prod. Pat Collier) includes the haunting "My Wife and My Dead Wife" and "The Man with the Lightbulb Head." Element of Light ♪♪♪½ (Relativity/Glass Fish, 1986/Rhino, 1995, prod. Robyn Hitchcock, Andy Metcalfe) features the most linear storytelling of the Hitchcock canon, including "Raymond Chandler Evening" and "Ted, Woody, and Junior." Not to mention the laughably misunderstood "Tell Me about Your Drugs." Moss Elixir ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1996, prod. Robyn Hitchcock) is striking for its calm, almost adult tone, if murky pop gems like "The Devil's Radio" can ever be construed as the work of a full-fledged adult.

what to avoid: No question here. Mostly recently titled Gravy Deco ♪ (Rhino, 1995, prod. Matthew Seligman, Steve Hillage), the sessions for Groovy Decay (Albion, 1982) were so wretched Hitchcock reissued an alternate version (Midnight Music, 1985)—and retired from music for three years, again. All right, so "Grooving on an Inner Plane" and "America" are worth hearing, but this is an assortment of bad ideas in which Hitchcock was a disinterested participant. Not a pretty picture, that.

the rest:

Black Snake Diamond Role ♪♪♪½ (Armageddon, 1981/Rhino, 1995)
Gotta Let This Hen Out! ♪♪½ (Midnight Music, 1985/Rhino, 1995)
Eye ♪♪♪♪ (Twin/Tone, 1989/Rhino, 1995)
Queen Elvis ♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1989)
Respect ♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1993)
Invisible Hitchcock ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1995)
You & Oblivion ♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1995)
Greatest Hits ♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1996)
Uncorrected Personality Traits ♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1997)

worth searching for: Rhino produced a promotional sampler titled, well, Catalog Sampler, in 1995 on the occasion of its reissue of Hitchcock and/or the Egyptians' back catalog in 1995, and it's a smashing greatest-hits summation, better, indeed, than the two formal hits packages that followed. A&M produced the promo-only seven-song Live Death in an edition of 1,000 or something equally ridiculous; it includes some Hitchcock standards as well as Richard Thompson's "Withered and Died" and the Lennon/McCartney "A Day in the Life." A vinyl-only fully alternate edition titled Mossy Liquor (Warner Bros., 1996) is more fun than the formal release, including a Swedish take on "Alright, Yeah" and much other glorious mischief.

influences:

◀◀ John Lennon, Syd Barrett, Bob Dylan

▶▶ Crowded House, 16 Horsepower, Pete Droge

Grant Alden

Hobo Jim

Born Jim Varsos, c. 1947, in IN.

If the name isn't immediately familiar in the Lower 48, mention Hobo Jim anywhere in Alaska and chances are there will be someone close by who knows the popular folk singer. A former commercial fisherman, lumberjack, farmhand, and street singer, Varsos, like so many others, read Woody Guthrie's Bound for Glory and, as he explains, it went to his head. He arrived in Alaska in 1972 and found home. Since then he has played literally everywhere in the state—elementary schools, prison benefits, oil field taverns, the Alaska State Fair—from the Arctic Circle to the Kenai Peninsula, taking time off for hunting season (he's a licensed guide). His folk music comes straight out of the blue-collar tradition of Guthrie and Hank Williams, and his songs bear witness to the individualism and adventure of his adopted state.

what to buy: Named after his habit of damaging stages with his thundering right-foot/cowboy boot rhythm section, Thunderfoot ♪♪♪½ (BS, 1984/Flying Fish, 1990, prod. Russell Smith) is a solid series of Alaskan tales—of timber tramps, loggers, fishermen, and farmers—as they carve out their stakes in the last great American wilderness. Also contains "Iditarod Trail," his high-spirited musher's ode that has become the famous sled race's unofficial anthem with the irresistible chorus: "I did, I did, I did, I did the Iditarod Trail."

what to buy next: Where Legends Are Born ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1990, prod. Russell Smith) is another noteworthy set of far-North adventures and folk tales, with subtle background instrumentation by Sam Bush, Béla Fleck, and Pat Flynn of New Grass Revival.

worth searching for: Lost & Dyin' Breed ♪♪♪ (BS, 1985, prod. Duncan Cameron) also includes guest appearances by New Grass Revival and Tim O'Brien.

influences:

◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Hank Williams, Lefty Frizzell, John Prine, Bob Wills, Bob Dylan

Leland Rucker

Robin Holcomb

Born 1954, in GA.

Country is just one ingredient in Robin Holcomb's uncategorizable sound, an element most pronounced in the singer/songwriter's rural imagery (right down to a verse about trading roadkill), quavery Appalachian vibrato voice, and general desolation of mood. Though now thought of as a denizen of the New York avant-garde scene, Holcomb once worked as a sharecropper in North Carolina. As ethereal as her music can often sound, it retains that grounded earthiness and deals with common concerns.

what to buy: The rootsy yet arty songs on Robin Holcomb ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra Nonesuch, 1990, prod. Wayne Horvitz, Peter Holsapple) are built from the simplest, sparest materials, but with extremely imaginative production. Guitarist Bill Frisell's slippery style relates to slide and pedal steel sounds without being either, while Horvitz (Holcomb's husband) contributes a surprisingly varied palette of gray and beige tones with his keyboard work. A couple of songs are almost straightforward country-rock, though even the fiddle-adorned "Troy" stands somewhat apart from country due to a pronounced New Orleans second-line rhythm on the verses, strongly suggesting the Band instrumentally.

what to buy next: Rockabye ♪♪♪ (Elektra Nonesuch, 1992, prod. Wayne Horvitz) has only one outright country track, a cover of Bruce Phillips's "The Goodnight-Loving Trail," but the album begins exploring more distant strains of Americana—not only gospel and folk but also nineteenth-century balladry—and makes Holcomb's spare piano playing more of a musical focus. The latter two aspects culminate in Little Three ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra Nonesuch, 1996, prod. Judith Sherman); a gorgeous solo piano album (Holcomb sings on only two tracks), it combines the feel of Civil War ballads, Indonesian gamelan, minimalism, the polytonality and song quotes of Charles Ives, and many beautiful melodies. The two long tracks sound like suites, with a procession of moods including a strong hoedown rhythm nine minutes into "Wherein Lies the Good." Some moments suggest a deeper, less saccharine George Winston. It's not even remotely a country album, yet very sympathetic to the feelings and impulses of country.

influences:

◀◀ Stephen Foster, Joni Mitchell, the Band, Charles Ives

▶▶ Tori Amos

Steve Holtje

Roscoe Holcomb

Born in KY.

Roscoe Holcomb was born to the Appalachian mountain culture and lived in it all his life. Eastern Kentucky was (and is) a mix of great physical beauty and harsh living conditions, both of which are reflected in the traditional music of the region. He had asthma as a child and worked hard as an adult, and consequently was not physically strong in later life when younger musicians came calling with their tape recorders. In spite of this, he remembered many mountain songs and ballads and was still able to play banjo. Thanks to the efforts of John Cohen, Mike Seeger, and others, Holcomb was able to record two and one-half albums worth of material for Folkways Recordings.

what to buy: The CD Close to Home ♪♪♪½ (Folkways, 1975) is a reissue of the LP of the same name that came out in the '70s. This recording was made by John Cohen at Holcomb's home in Daisy, Kentucky. The recording quality is surprisingly good for a field recording, with very little background noise or distractions. There are 10 vocal selections, most accompanied by Holcomb's banjo or guitar, and one banjo instrumental. Roscoe sometimes played banjo in the familiar clawhammer style, but more often used his own complex version of finger-picking, perfect for accompanying his vocals. His voice was the most compelling part of his music; he sang at the upper end of his vocal range, giving a strength and clarity to the songs that is difficult to describe. Life in isolated Appalachian communities like Daisy could be harsh, demanding, and lonely; all of this is conveyed in this simple man's voice. He lived at a time when radio and recordings were popular enough to bring in some outside influences, and he was partial to the blues music that he heard, particularly Blind Lemon Jefferson. This influence is clear in his guitar playing and, to a lesser extent, in his singing. For the most part, however, Holcomb's music defies analysis. This is folk music in its most thoroughly distilled, pure form—a man's expression of his joys and sorrows, his fears and hopes. In the liner notes, Cohen relates an incident in which Holcomb had difficulty recording "Man of Constant Sorrow"; he saw himself in the song and was uncomfortable at revealing that much of himself to a tape recorder. This is what traditional folk music is all about.

what to buy next: Also available on CD are The High Lonesome Sound ♪♪♪♪½ (Folkways, 1972) and Roscoe Holcomb ♪♪♪♪½ (Folkways, 1962). Both of these are similar to Close to Home, i.e., recordings of Roscoe made by John Cohen and Eric Davidson. The latter disc features Holcomb on one side and Virginia banjo player Wade Ward on the other. It was recorded in a New York City recording studio, and the liner notes suggest that Holcomb was less comfortable than on previous recordings that had been made at his home. This is probably apparent only to someone who knew Holcomb personally; all the selections on this disc are presented with the same clarity and forcefulness that characterize the other recordings.

influences:

◀◀ Blind Lemon Jefferson

▶▶ Mike Seeger, John Cohen, Tracy Schwarz

Dave Shombert

Jerry Holland

Born February 23, 1955, in Brockton, MA.

Fiddler Jerry Holland is one of the great lights of modern Cape Breton music. For the past 25 years he has kept to the traditional heart of the music, playing and writing beautiful music in the straightforward style of his mentors Winston "Scotty" Fitzgerald and Bill Lamey. He is recognized throughout Cape Breton for his fluid fiddling and for his beautiful compositions, many of which are now standards in the repertoire of both Cape Breton and Irish musicians. Holland grew up in Boston learning the music from his father, also an excellent fiddle player and the greatest early influence on his musicianship. By his teens he was sitting in with the best of the island's musicians on family vacations, and was soon playing guitar behind legendary fiddler Angus Chisolm. Holland moved permanently to Cape Breton while in his 20s and began to perform regularly in the island's fertile musical scene. He is among Cape Breton's most popular fiddlers, known both for his fine playing and for his beautiful compositions, which have been recorded by countless Cape Breton compatriots, as well as by Irish groups Altan and Dordan. Although his recordings are difficult to find and he appears only rarely in the United States, Holland is a major figure in Cape Breton music, and his recordings should be sought eagerly by fans of fine fiddle music everywhere.

what's available: The Fiddlesticks Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Jerry Holland, Paul MacDonald) draws from several of his Canadian albums and is Holland's only recording currently available in the United States. It is a solid introduction to Holland's fiddle playing, showcasing both traditional tunes and his own compositions. He is backed by several of Cape Breton's leading musicians on guitar and piano, including Hilda Chiasson, Dave MacIsaac, and John Morris Rankin. Traditional Music from Cape Breton Island ♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1993, prod. Micheal O'Suilleabhain, Robin Broadbank) features performances from a festival held at University College, Cork, Ireland in 1993. Many of the finest performers from Cape Breton took part and the disc provides a good overview of contemporary Cape Breton fiddle music. Holland is featured on one cut and some of his tunes are performed by Natalie MacMaster, Brenda Stubbert, and bagpiper Paul MacNeil.

worth searching for: Master Cape Breton Fiddler ♪♪♪♪ (Boot Records, 1982, prod. Dave MacIsaac, Dennis Ryan) was the album that cemented Holland's status as one of Cape Breton's leading musicians. Along with accompanists Hilda Chiasson and Dave MacIsaac, Holland powers his way through sets of driving reels, jigs, and strathspeys, as well as some sweet waltzes. This was the coming-out party for this crew of young Turks and is one of the most influential Cape Breton albums of the last 20 years. It is sad that this classic is not currently available, although three tracks are included on Fiddlesticks Collection. For musicians, Jerry's tunebook, The Jerry Holland Collection of Fiddle Tunes, is a great resource, containing many of Holland's compositions, as well as standards from the Cape Breton and Irish repertoires. It was assembled by Paul Cranford, one of Cape Breton music's great advocates, and is published in the United States by Mel Bay Publications.

influences:

◀◀ Bill Lamey, Winston "Scotty" Fitzgerald, Angus Chisolm

▶▶ Natalie MacMaster, Brenda Stubbert

Tony Ziselberger

Hollow Rock String Band

Formed 1966, in Durham, NC. Disbanded 1968.

Alan Jabbour, fiddle; Tommy Thompson, banjo; Bobbie Thompson, guitar; Bertram Levy, mandolin.

Led by Alan Jabbour on fiddle, the Hollow Rock String Band was born out of jam sessions in an area of Durham, North Carolina, known as Hollow Rock. The only remnants of this lively area now is a street named Hollow Rock Road and the Hollow Rock Swim and Racquet Club (probably not much old-time music going on there). The band played tunes they learned from old timers who frequented the fiddlers' conventions in North Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia. The bulk of the tunes they performed and recorded were from West Virginia old-time musician Henry Reed. Reed played fiddle, mandolin, harmonica, guitar, and banjo. He remembered a large number of tunes that Hollow Rock was eager to learn. One of the most popular tunes that was reborn out of this collaboration was "Over the Waterfall," which, after the band recorded it, became a standard for old-time musicians worldwide. In 1968 the band broke up and each member went his separate way. Bertram Levy and Jabbour moved to California, Tommy Thompson formed the Red Clay Ramblers, and Bobbie Thompson went on to be in the Fuzzy Mountain String Band. Bobbie's life was tragically cut short in an automobile accident just a few years later. Jabbour is now the head of the Folklife area of the Library of Congress.

what's available: In 1997 County reissued Traditional Dance Tunes ♪♪♪♪♪ (Kanawha, 1968/County, 1997, prod. Hollow Rock String Band). This album was originally released on the Kanawha record label a year after the death of Henry Reed, their main inspiration. It is a fabulous snapshot of the old-time scene in Durham near the end of the '60s. The tunes are energetic and the passion these musicians felt for this music—and for the old-time musicians who made it—cannot be overstated.

influences:

- Henry Reed, Vaughn Marley, Harlan Coble, Lonnie Crosbie, Ross Miller
- Fuzzy Mountain String Band, Highwoods String Band, Red Clay Ramblers

Steve Gardner

David Holt

Born October 15, 1946, in Gatesville, TX.

A Grammy award doesn't even start to tell you how singer-songwriter and storyteller David Holt wins the hearts of children and their parents alike. Holt, who lives in western North Carolina, is a historian as well as an entertainer. He plays 10 acoustic instruments, from guitar and banjo to hambone and washboard. He even clogs. To Holt, keeping traditional music alive and passing it on through the generations are as important as telling the stories that went into the making of those songs. Keeping stories and songs alive has served to make Holt one of the United States' most respected storytellers. Born in Gatesville, Texas, he lived in Garland, Texas, before his family moved to Palisades, California, when he was in junior high school. He gives his family credit for telling stories about his ancestry. "Storytelling was just a natural part of family life for me," he says. "I never thought about telling stories in public until I began to collect mountain music and came across interesting and unusual anecdotes from mountain folks. I began to use these stories in concerts and realized the power storytelling holds." He learned to play bones and spoons from his father, and learned to play harmonica from singing cowboy Carl Sprague, who also taught him old-time cowboy stories. Holt graduated magna cum laude from the University of California at Santa Barbara with a degree in biology and art. He then moved to western North Carolina, where he learned mountain tales and began playing them at concerts. Holt founded and directed the Appalachian Music Program—which involves the study of traditional music and dance—at Warren Wilson College in Swannanoa, North Carolina, in 1975. He became a full-time musician in 1981. Wearing his trademark fedora, his attention to storytelling has earned him recognition. Songs and stories from Holt are included in the Library of Congress' permanent collection, and he has served as a musical ambassador around the world, bringing with him the sounds and stories of American folk music. He has received numerous awards, including a Grammy for his album Stellaluna. In the past, Holt has hosted Fire on the Mountain, Celebration Express, and American Music Shop on the Nashville Network, along with PBS's Folkways. Holt also hosts Riverwalk: Classic Jazz from the Landing for Public Radio International. In addition to recordings of stories and songs, he has released several videos on banjo techniques and books on storytelling.

what to buy: As a teller of old-time tales, it is no surprise that Grandfather's Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (High Windy Audio, 1991, prod. Steven Heller) contains a delightful potpourri of old songs, including "John Henry," "Wabash Cannonball," "Cripple Creek," and "Dixie." Holt addresses the historical significance of these songs and tells how they got written. Joining him are fiddler Mark O'Connor, dobroist Jerry Douglas, and guitarist Chet Atkins. Another, I Got a Bullfrog: Folksongs for the Fun of It ♪♪♪♪½ (High Windy Audio, 1994, prod. Steven Heller), blends traditional folk, blues, and bluegrass with originals that will have you tapping your feet and singing along. Joining him are mandolinist-fiddler Sam Bush, Alan O'Bryant, Roy Huskey Jr., guitarist Russ Barenberg, and several others. Songs range from "Cindy" and "This Little Light of Mine" to animal songs about bugs, chickens, moles and, of course, a big, old bullfrog.

what to buy next: Stellaluna ♪♪♪♪ (High Windy Audio, 1996, prod. David Holt, Virginia Callaway, Steven Heller) is a retelling of the delightful bat tale by Janell Cannon, along with other interesting stories and facts about bats.

the rest:

It Just Suits Me ♪♪♪ (June Appal Recordings, 1981)
Hairyman ♪♪♪♪ (High Windy Audio, 1981)
Reel and Rock ♪♪♪♪ (High Windy Audio, 1985)
Tailybone ♪♪♪♪ (High Windy Audio, 1985)
Why the Dog Chases the Cat: Great Animal Stories ♪♪♪♪ (High Windy Audio, 1994)
Mostly Ghostly Stories ♪♪♪½ (High Windy Audio, 1995)
Spiders in the Hairdo: Modern Urban Legends ♪♪♪♪ (High Windy Audio, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Virgil Craven, Carl Sprague, many other forebears of American folk songs and stories

▶▶ Bill Harley, Cathy Fink, Sheila Adams Barnhill, Laura Boosinger

Stephen Ide

The Holy Modal Rounders

Formed 1963, in New York. Disbanded 1965. Re-formed 1968, recording periodically until 1981.

Peter Stampfel, banjo, fiddle, vocals; Steve Weber, guitar, vocals.

The Holy Modal Rounders were a loose aggregation of beat-generation holdovers organized around the inspired lunacy of co-founders Peter Stampfel and Steve Weber. The duo recorded two albums of old-timey music and blues for Folklore and Prestige between 1963 and 1964 before hooking up with fellow cultural anarchists the Fugs in 1965. Following a mid-1960s breakup that found Weber retaining the band's original name and Stampfel forming the Moray Eels, the two men—aided and abetted by playwright Sam Shepard on drums, as well as folk stalwarts Michael Hurley, Luke Faust, Robin Remaily, and others—reunited for a psychedelic side trip from which they almost didn't return (even though their recording of "Bird Song," included on the soundtrack to the movie Easy Rider, exposed their acid-folk to a wider audience). After reclaiming their string-band roots, Stampfel, Weber, Hurley, and company joined forces with Jeffrey Frederick for Have Moicy!, a bacchanalian fantasy that proved the high point of the group's 18-year career.

what's available: Indian War Whoop ♪♪ (ESP, 1967) makes a strong case for the argument that you had to be there, especially the indulgent, side-long "Jimmy and Crash Survey the Universe." Have Moicy! ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1976, prod. John Nagy) is a lost classic, an undeniable collection of folk, country, and bluegrass that lovingly embraces—and has fun at the expense of—the hippie lifestyle and myth.

worth searching for: The Holy Modal Rounders ♪♪♪♪ (Folklore, 1964, prod. Peter Stampfel, Steve Weber), the duo's debut, contains left-of-center covers of blues and old-timey tunes that never push the album so far overboard that it loses its edge or appeal.

influences:

◀◀ Charlie Poole, Grandpa Jones

▶▶ Austin Lounge Lizards

Bill Friskics-Warren

Homer & Jethro

Henry D. "Homer" Haynes (born July 27, 1920, in Knoxville, TN; died August 7, 1971); Kenneth "Jethro" Burns (born March 10, 1920, in Conasuga, TN; died February 4, 1989, in Evanston, IL).

The clown princes of country music, Homer and Jethro first began performing together when they were 12 years old and had become veteran radio professionals, specializing in song parodies, by the time they enlisted in the military during World War II. It was cornball satires of pop hits—most notably the 1959 smash, "The Battle of Kookamonga"—that the pair recorded for RCA Victor and staked their reputation on during the 1950s and 1960s. They made a series of "Ooh, that's corny" television commercials for Kellogg's Corn Flakes that further enhanced that delicious image of rube punsters. But underneath all the hick shtick, Haynes and Burns were gifted instrumentalists. They also made a number of recordings with virtuoso guitarist Chet Atkins during the 1970s as the Nashville String Band. After Haynes's death, Burns pursued a jazzier direction as a mandolin player, wrote mandolin instructional manuals, and recorded for the folk-based indie label Flying Fish. Neither their classic comedic send-ups—a Nashville parallel to the kind of records Stan Freberg was making in Hollywood—nor their instrumentals have yet been made available on compact disc.

what to buy: Playing It Straight ♪♪♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1962) has long been prized by collectors as a showcase of the duo's instrumental expertise.

worth searching for: Jethro's solo outing Swing Low, Sweet Mandolin ♪♪♪½ (Acoustic Disc, 1995, prod. David Grisman, Don Stiernberg) is an aptly named instrumental album of mandolin-and-guitar duets with Don Stiernberg, recorded in 1987–88. Songs include "Stella by Starlight," "Body and Soul," and "Corrina Corrina."

influences:

◀◀ Uncle Dave Macon

▶▶ Minnie Pearl, Ray Stevens

Joel Selvin

John Lee Hooker

Born August 22, 1920, in Clarksdale, MS.

When the words Delta blues are whispered like holy script, there are but a few names that accurately embody the weight associated with the term. John Lee Hooker, certainly the last of the living greats, is one. His looming presence in the last half century bears a stamp over not only the blues itself, but R&B, early rock 'n' roll, and musicians ranging from Carlos Santana to Bonnie Raitt. Emerging from the tutelage of his stepfather and church gospel, Hooker began his recorded legacy at age 31 with an arrestingly unorthodox approach of feral, six-string blues singles, including "Boogie Chillun" and "I'm in the Mood." The style he came to epitomize was a bone-spare, snake-like groove (often just one chord) supplanted only by the clicking of bottle caps under his stamping feet. The booming low growl emanating from his throat was unhinged animal strength, equal parts menace, barking bravado, and morose longing. Eventually he did weld his open tunings and strange chording to a band format (after all, Mayall's Bluesbreakers and Clapton provided live back-up in the 1960s), although most U.S. audiences didn't get wind of it until his recorded union with blues disciples Canned Heat in the 1970s. Strangely quiet throughout the latter part of that decade and most of the 1980s, Hooker (at age 72) roared back in 1989 with The Healer, winning universal acclaim and a Grammy in the process. Since then, he's recorded at a rate of men half his age, reworking his classics alongside Van Morrison, Keith Richards, Ry Cooder, Santana, and Robert Cray, to name a few. As one of the few legends to enjoy the fruits of his work during his lifetime, Hooker has since retired from live performance but promises to keep recording until he's taken his last breath.

what to buy: The staggering number of Hooker albums available can make for a maddening selection process, but the uninitiated will be served well with The Ultimate Collection ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1991, compilation prod. James Austin), a two-disc set that provides an ample overview for further inquiries, from brutal original versions of "Crawlin' King Snake," "Boogie Chillun," and "House Rent Boogie" in all their unsophisticated raw power to his Canned Heat stew and late 1980s recordings. For a quick dive into the Delta swamps, The Real Folk Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Chess, 1966, prod. Ralph Bass) showcases Hooker manhandling a spare band while flashing uncontrollable lust ("You Know, I Know") and the oft-covered classic drinker's call to arms, "One Bourbon, One Scotch, One Beer."

what to buy next: Time may have diminished his growl a bit, but Hooker can still summon more danger than a teenager with an unlicensed pistol, as The Healer ♪♪♪♪ (Chameleon, 1989, prod. Roy Rogers) demonstrates. A celebratory outing with a star-studded guest list offering inspired performances at the feet of the master, the most welcome aspect of his comeback is that the record's most powerful moments occur when Hooker is unaccompanied.

what to avoid: There are far too many compilations glutting his oeuvre, and Boogie Chillun ♪♪ (Charly) is one of the unnecessary stops.

best of the rest:

Plays and Sings the Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Chess, 1961/1989)
Boogie Chillun ♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1962/1989)
Urban Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1967/1993)
Hooker 'n' Heat ♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1970/1991)
Alone ♪♪♪♪ (Tomato, 1991)
The Cream ♪♪♪♪ (Tomato, 1991)
More Real Folk Blues: The Missing Album ♪♪♪♪½ (Chess, 1991)
The Best of John Lee Hooker (1965 to 1974) ♪♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1992)
Chill Out ♪♪♪♪ (Point Blank, 1995)
Don't Look Back ♪♪♪♪ (Point Blank, 1997)

worth searching for: If you thought Tom Jones bellowing "Tennessee Waltz" with the Chieftains was a goofy hoot, Hooker growling lines like "I eat heavy metal/locomotive pies" alongside Pete Townshend on the former Who guitarist's The Iron Man ♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1989, prod. Pete Townshend) is a gas.

influences:

◀◀ Tony Hollins, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Robert Johnson, Willie Dixon

John Lee Hooker (© Jack Vartoogian)

Animals, Van Morrison, George Thorogood, Canned Heat, Johnny Winter, Rolling Stones, John Mayall, Eric Clapton

Allan Orski

The Hoosier Hot Shots

Formed 1932, in Fort Wayne, IN.

Paul "Hezzie" Trietsch, song whistle, alto horn, washboard, drums; Ken "Rudy" Trietsch, bass horn, banjo, guitar; Otto "Gabe" Ward, clarinet, saxophone, fife. Other members included: Frank Kettering; Gil Taylor; Nate Harrison; Keith Milheim; Skip Farrell.

Country music's answer to Spike Jones & His City Slickers, the Hot Shots began on radio in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and made their way to Chicago's WLS National Barn Dance in 1933. Soon they joined WLS act Uncle Ezra, who had his own radio show on the NBC network. "Are you ready, Hezzie?" became the trademark opening to most of these recordings, and the act incorporated a vast array of musical instruments including whistles, a washboard, and even a pie plate or two. ARC, which later became part of Columbia Records, was their recording home for seven years beginning in 1935, with future Country Music Hall of Famer Uncle Art Satherley overseeing the production of their broadly comical but tastefully orchestrated body of work. Following their success with ARC, the Hot Shots achieved great chart success on Decca from 1944 to 1946, with three singles all hitting the Top Three during those years. Appearing in a number of Hollywood films during the 1940s, the Hot Shots continued to perform for the next three decades, until Hezzie's death.

what's available: Rural Rhythm 1935–1942 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia Legacy, 1992, comp. Michael Brooks) is an uproarious collection that showcases, in equal measure, the humor and the musical proficiency of the Hot Shots. It's a non-stop riot, with such tunes as "I Like Bananas Because They Have No Bones" and "From the Indies to the Andies in His Undies."

the rest:

Are You Ready Hezzie ♪♪♪♪ (Circle, 1992)

3
7
6 mary hopkin

influences:

◀◀ Spike Jones & His City Slickers

▶▶ Homer & Jethro, Lonzo & Oscar

Stephen L. Betts

Mary Hopkin

Born 1950, in Pontardawe, Wales.

Paul McCartney was seeking talent for the fledgling Apple Records label in 1968 when he struck gold with waif folksinger Mary Hopkin. Blessed with a sweet country-lass voice and a face of apple-pie purity, Hopkin (under McCartney's guidance) spun out a short but hit-studded career of precious Olde Worlde ballads and lilting folk-pop.

what's available: Post Card ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1969, prod. Paul McCartney) is a pretty album of twee but romantic confection that includes her hit "Those Were the Days," a terrific cover of Donovan's "Lord of the Reedy River," and a few odd novelty numbers ("Puppy Song," "Inchworm")—music the whole family can enjoy.

worth searching for: Hopkin shed her woman-child image for Earth Song/Ocean Song ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1971, prod. Tony Visconti), a fine collection of lovely folk-rock tunes that are capably rendered. She subsequently married Visconti and retired from music, returning to active duty as a backup singer on David Bowie's Low and as a member of the short-lived trio Oasis (with Julian Lloyd Weber, brother of Andrew) in 1984.

influences:

◀◀ Bing Crosby, Shirley Temple, Fannie Brice, Patti Page, Julie Andrews, Phil Ochs, Donovan, Marianne Faithfull

▶▶ Nick Drake, Emmylou Harris, Kate Bush, Rickie Lee Jones, Suzanne Vega, Altered Images, Nanci Griffith, Tori Amos, Jewel, Anne Murray

Christopher Scapelliti

Lightnin' Hopkins

Born Sam Hopkins, March 15, 1912, in Centerville, TX. Died January 30, 1982, in Houston, TX.

Lightnin' Hopkins was one of the most prolific and frequently recorded bluesmen in history. His recordings span nearly four decades and encompass almost every imaginable style, from relaxed, down-home acoustic blues to no-holds-barred proto-rock. His sound, while drawing on older influences, was uniquely his own and had a pervasive influence on a multitude of post-war musicians. His rough-hewn vocal delivery could be both mild-mannered and urgent, while his repertoire of guitar licks was always effortlessly adapted to the ever-changing currents of popular musical tastes. Though primarily a country bluesman, Hopkins was a master of electric guitar boogie and even scored an R&B hit or two. Hopkins is often thought of as a link between country blues and the urban electric blues it spawned. He was also an inventive songwriter and a consummate folk poet with the uncanny ability to compose tunes on the spot that artfully summarized his life experiences while at the same time striking a common chord with his listeners. He tackled war, natural disasters, and the conquest of inner and outer space, often in an inimitable half-sung, half-spoken singing style tastefully punctuated by trademark bends, pull-offs, and single-string runs. His raw blues songs and storytelling talents made him the darling of the folk-blues revival of the early 1960s, while his utterly hip attitude opened doors with the West Coast rock fraternity—he headlined on bills with the Jefferson Airplane and the Grateful Dead, among others. He died two years after being inducted into the Blues Foundation's Hall of Fame.

what to buy: The Complete Aladdin Sessions ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1991, prod. Pete Welding) is a collection of his earliest recordings, made for Aladdin in the late 1940s. He is joined on the first 13 songs by "Thunder" Smith, the dynamic pianist and vocalist responsible for Hopkins's "Lightnin'" moniker, but the rest is all Hopkins at his creative zenith. Stand-outs include the classic blues numbers "Katie May" and "Short Haired Woman," and the pre-rock-and-roll rocker "Play with Your Poodle." Whenever there was up-front cash on the table, he could also be found in Houston's Gold Star studios. There he recorded landmark songs like the plaintive "Going Home Blues" and "Unsuccessful Blues," inspired by a misunderstanding over payment for a session, and "Tim Moore's Farm," an explicit commentary on the sociological conditions faced by southern blacks. His complete Gold Star output can be found on The Gold Star Sessions, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1990, prod. Bill Quinn, Chris Strachwitz) and The Gold Star Sessions, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1990, prod. Bill Quinn, Chris Strachwitz). Fifteen years after the aforementioned sessions, Hopkins was a blues-revival icon, regularly touring from coast to coast on the circuit and making television and documentary film appearances. Fortunately for blues fans, he also spent time recording some of his songs, the best of which are collected on Texas Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1994, prod. Chris Strachwitz). These tunes nearly equal the power and blues presence of his earlier recordings and explain in no uncertain terms what all of the fuss was about. Still unconvinced? Give a listen to Swarthmore Concert ♪♪♪♪♪ (Bluesville Prestige/Fantasy, 1993, prod. Shel Kagen), an outstanding concert appearance from the same period.

what to buy next: The Herald Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Collectables, 1989) and The Herald Recordings, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Collectables, 1993) are two collections of small group recordings Hopkins made for the Herald label in the early 1950s, the hardest-driving, raunchiest records he ever cut. Blues Train ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mainstream, 1991, prod. Bob Shad) is another outstanding assortment of songs recorded in the early 1950s, this time for the Sitting in With and Jax labels. "Coffee Blues" and "Hello Central" both charted, and numerous others on this set should have. Lightnin' in New York ♪♪♪♪♪ (Candid, 1988, prod. Nat Hentoff) was recorded in 1960, just as Hopkins was coming into prominence on the folk-blues circuit. Highlights include several magnificent slow blues numbers ("Take It Easy," "Wonder Why") and the lengthy folk-tale "Mister Charlie."

what to avoid: For a guy as prolific as Hopkins, it comes as quite a surprise to find so few stinkers in the body of his recorded work. Free Form Patterns ♪♪ (International Artists, 1968/Charly 1991, prod. Lelan Rogers), however, is one to steer clear of. If you are looking for a record that captures what Hopkins would sound like on the other side of a thick wall backed by a bewildered band intent on a 12-bar groove that never materializes, this one's for you!

the rest:

Houston Bound ♪♪♪♪ (Relic, 1960/1994)
Last Night Blues ♪♪♪ (Original Blues Classics, 1960/Fantasy, 1992)
Smokes like Lightning ♪♪♪ (Original Blues Classics, 1962/Fantasy, 1992)
Soul Blues ♪♪♪ (Original Blues Classics, 1964/Fantasy, 1991)
Lightnin' Hopkins ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1990)
Complete Prestige/Bluesville Records ♪♪♪♪ (Prestige/Fantasy, 1991)
Hopkins Brothers: Joel, Lightnin' & John Henry ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1991)
Sittin' in with Lightnin' Hopkins ♪♪♪♪½ (Mainstream, 1991)
Lightnin' ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1993)
Mojo Hand: The Lightnin' Hopkins Anthology ♪♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1993)
Po' Lightnin' ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1995)
Barbara Dane and Lightnin' Hopkins ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1996)

worth searching for: The Houston-based Gold Star label once boasted a stable of some of the finest post-war country blues artists, which included Lil Son Jackson and L.C. Williams, among others. On Texas Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1992, prod. Bill Quinn, Chris Strachwitz) Hopkins stretches out as an accompanist, laying down some of his finest instrumental work on record. On Williams's "Trying, Trying," he even turns out some terrific boogie-woogie piano!

influences:

◀◀ Texas Alexander, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Lonnie Johnson, Joel Hopkins

▶▶ Carolina Slim, Robert Pete Williams, Hound Dog Taylor, Buddy Guy, Albert Collins, Lonnie Brooks, Bob Dylan

D. Thomas Moon

Sam Hopkins

See: Lightnin' Hopkins

Lois Hornbostel

Born February 28, 1949, in New York, NY.

Lois Hornbostel has introduced generations of mountain dulcimer players to techniques and tunes through her instruction books, recordings, and workshop presentations. Her musical tastes and influences are diverse. She began playing in 1975 and spent several years exploring her Irish roots at "sessiuns" in New York City. Hornbostel was one of the first to recognize and adapt the beauty of Celtic music on the mountain dulcimer and her book, The Irish Dulcimer, was groundbreaking in this respect. She also lived for a time in New Orleans, where she assimilated a basic Cajun repertoire, adapting and arranging the music for dulcimer. In 1980 she moved to North Carolina, where she became interested in Appalachian fiddle music and her career really took off. She won the dulcimer championships at both Galax and Pulaski in Virginia and also at North Carolina's Fiddler Grove festival. Mel Bay then published her Dulcimer Fiddle Tunes and American Fiddle Tunes for the Dulcimer, which were again among the first and best books in the genre. Hornbostel is an educator as well as a musician and has taught the history of the mountain dulcimer and the basic elements of playing the instrument to over 13,000 elementary school children. She has published several other books for dulcimer students of all ages. She is the director of the Appalachian State University Dulcimer-Playing Workshop in Boone, North Carolina, which attracts over 250 students each year to study with major dulcimer performers. She is also the coordinator of the Swannanoa Gathering Dulcimer Week held annually at Warren Wilson College in Asheville, North Carolina. In addition to these duties, she continues to travel extensively to perform and teach at a variety of dulcimer and traditional music events. Hornbostel has contributed substantially to the rapid growth in popularity of the dulcimer in this country. All of her releases are available from Alarka Recordings, Piney Grove, Apt. F, Big Cove Rd, Cherokee, NC 28719.

what to buy: Dulcimer Jubilee ♪♪♪½ (Alarka Recordings, 1997, prod. Lois Hornbostel) is a feast of traditional American fiddle music played on the mountain dulcimer. Hornbostel's aggressive style sparkles on more than 30 tunes with significant help from Jeff Furman on second dulcimer and banjo and from the ever-eclectic Ken Bloom on guitar, bowed dulcimer, banjo, concert zither, bouzouki, and bandura. This is a "good time" recording played with rhythm and drive.

what to buy next: Dulcimer Enchantment ♪♪♪ (Alarka Recordings, 1996, prod. Lois Hornbostel) shows Hornbostel's Celtic side and contains dulcimer-centric versions of mostly traditional Irish, Scottish, and Welsh material with a couple of fiddle tunes thrown in for good measure. The approach is much more contemplative and introspective than Dulcimer Jubilee but should be of considerable interest to dulcimer fans or anyone else who appreciates good music both well played and well presented.

the rest:
Vive le Dulcimer! ♪♪♪ (Kicking Mule Records, 1983) (cassette only) Canterbury Revels ♪♪½ (Dudley Laufman Music, 1985) (cassette only) worth searching for: Hornbostel also appears on Masters of the Mountain Dulcimer ♪♪♪♪ (Susan Trump Music, 1997, prod. Susan Trump), an excellent compilation showcasing some 19 of the country's best dulcimer players.

influences:
◀◀ Neal Hellman, Bonnie Carol
▶▶ Don Pedi, Jerry Rockwell

Neal Walters

The Horseflies /The Tompkins County Horseflies

Formed 1981, in Ithaca, NY.

Jeff Claus (born October 31, 1950), vocals, guitar, processed banjo uke; Rich Stearns (born May 23, 1960), vocals, guitar, banjo; Judy Hyman (born September 25, 1951), vocals, violin; Peter Dodge (born August 1, 1953), vocals, keyboards, accordion; John Hayward (born August 15, 1948; died June 6, 1997), bass; Taki Masuko (born September 7, 1952), drums.

The Horseflies' formative years were spent as an acoustic four-piece old-time string band in Ithaca, New York. They played the traditional fiddle music of the American South, much of it learned by traveling to fiddle festivals and contests in North Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia. Initially interested in the music not from the historical point of view but as a groove-oriented music that was at the core of a rocking great social scene and national community, they grew into their own style, which was quite different and more rock-inflected than the straight-ahead, traditional style. They also began to write their own material. In 1983, on the strength of their single "Oh Death" (a Doc Boggs song that received the typical Horseflies makeover), recorded for a local radio show, they were able to tour Europe for three and a half months. On their return, they were approached by Rounder Records while playing street music in New Orleans and recorded Chokers and Flies, an album unusual in that they shared it with a Boston-based fiddle band, the Chicken Chokers. This release led to a great deal of interest on the part of the folk community and a lot of travel and performance in the United States and Canada. In 1986 they recorded Human Fly, their second album for Rounder. By this time, though they were still playing acoustic instruments, they had begun experimenting with forms, textures, vocals—somewhere between folk, pop, world, and minimalism—and incorporating keys, sequencing, and live percussion. As a result of the interest Human Fly generated, they decided to expand the band to allow them to approximate live the music on the record. Taki Masuko (drums) and Peter Dodge (synthesizer and accordion) joined the Horseflies in 1987. The original foursome also began playing electric instruments in the band at that point to maintain a balance with the drums and keys. In time, as a result of the new configuration and instruments, the music became something else again—more pop, more alternative with a trad/roots underpinning. In 1990 they recorded Gravity Dance for MCA Records. By now the group was straddling the rock-club, folk-festival, and art-concert worlds. In 1994 they scored a film for Caledonia Pictures (Where the Rivers Flow North, based on a book by Howard Frank Mosher) and the sound track was released on Alcazar Records. In 1997 they scored a second film, for Whiskeyjack Pictures (A Stranger in the Kingdom, based on another Mosher book). The soundtrack for this film is still looking for a label. In 1996, after many years away from the folk world, they began performing as an acoustic foursome again, sometimes with a percussionist. John Hayward, the Horseflies' bass player of 17 years, died of cancer in June 1997.

what to buy: Dan Kening of the Chicago Tribune describes Gravity Dance ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1991, prod. Hilton Rosenthal) as combining "musical and lyrical quirkiness with beguiling wit and intelligence." With its mix of minimalist folk and rock and boasting the sinuous fiddle of Judy Hyman, this album challenges the brain without sacrificing the groove.

what to buy next: Human Fly ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987, prod. Bill Usher), subtitled "neoprimitive bug music," is the Horseflies' debut album on Rounder after they shared an album with Boston's Chicken Chokers. Not quite as quirky as Gravity Dance, the addition of ethnic percussion, sequencing, and synth to what had previously been an all-acoustic sound definitely establishes a new direction for the band.

the rest:
Chokers and Flies ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1985)
Where the Rivers Run North ♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Highwoods String Band, the Police ▶▶ Heartbeats

Neal Walters

Hot Rize /Red Knuckles & the Trailblazers

Formed 1978, in CO. Disbanded 1990.

Tim O'Brien, vocal, mandolin, fiddle; Pete Wernick, banjo; Nick Forster, bass; Charles Sawtelle, guitar. Former members include: Mike Scap, guitar, vocals.

Hot Rize and their zany alter-egos, Red Knuckles & the Trailblazers, managed to walk a fine line between folk, country, pop, jazz, and bluegrass, and surprisingly, rarely alienated anyone in the process. The group's lineup changed only once in nearly 15 years, even as they continued to diversify. Led by Tim O'Brien's folky vocals and supplemented by the skillful playing of Pete "Dr. Banjo" Wernick, Hot Rize (named for the secret ingredient in Martha White flour, long associated with bluegrass music) first recorded in 1979. Three years later they introduced their counterparts, the Trailblazers (the name comes from Martha White's brand of dog food!) with "Waldo Otto" (Wernick) on steel guitar, "Wendell Mercantile" (Forester) playing lead guitar, "Slade" (Sawtelle) on bass, and the devilishly charming "Red Knuckles" (O'Brien) on lead vocals and rhythm guitar. Veering from bluegrass to explore more honky-tonk music and to showcase their gifts for humor, the Trailblazers were as much in demand (if not, they frequently joked, as well-treated) as Hot Rize. O'Brien had a Top 10 country hit in 1990, a duet with Kathy Mattea on "Battle Hymn of Love," and earlier, in 1986, Mattea had hit the Top 10 with O'Brien's "Walk the Way the Wind Blows." O'Brien also released solo albums and recorded duet albums with sister Mollie throughout the years Hot Rize was in existence. In 1996 the band held a short reunion tour, which was highlighted by their appearance on the Martha White Bluegrass Series at Nashville's historic Ryman Auditorium. Once again, Red Knuckles & the Trailblazers threatened to steal the show, but all ended well as fans were reminded why Hot Rize will be remembered as one of the most innovative and important bluegrass/traditional bands of the 1980s.

what to buy: Untold Stories ♪♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1987, prod. Hot Rize) is an absolutely beautiful record with some solid bluegrass picking and O'Brien in fine voice.

what to buy next: The immensely entertaining Take It Home ♪♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1990, prod. Hot Rize) is a thoroughly satisfying collection, and sadly, the band's last.

the rest:
Hot Rize ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1979)
Radio Boogie ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1981)
Red Knuckles & the Trailblazers/Hot Rize in Concert ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1982/1984)
Hot Rize Presents Red Knuckles & the Trailblazers: Shades of the Past ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1988)
Traditional Ties ♪♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1988)

solo outings:
Pete Wernick:
(With others) Dr. Banjo Steps Out ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1978)
On a Roll ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1993)
I Tell You What! ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Tim & Mollie O'Brien, Pete Wernick
▶▶ BR5-49, Jeff White

see also: Tim O'Brien

Stephen L. Betts

Hot Tuna

Formed 1969, in San Francisco, CA.

Jorma Kaukonen, guitar, vocals; Jack Casady, bass; Will Scarlet, harmonica (1970–71); Papa John Creach, violin (1971–72); Sammy Piazza, drums (1971–74); Bob Steeler, drums (1974–77); Michael Falzarano, guitar, mandolin, harmonica, vocals (1990–present).

Formed in hotel rooms across the country after Jefferson Airplane concerts, when guitarist Jorma Kaukonen and bassist Jack Casady couldn't stop playing, Hot Tuna slowly emerged into the public, first as an acoustic duo and then as an electric quartet appearing often as a support act for the mothership. Essentially a vehicle for Kaukonen's remarkable skills as a country blues guitarist, Tuna specialized in lengthy improvisations in which Casady's fluid, inventive bass figures would wrap around Kaukonen's delta-blues lines almost endlessly. The band, on one occasion at least, performed for eight hours straight. Friends since childhood, Kaukonen and Casady split in the late '70s and re-formed about 10 years later. The original unplugged band, Tuna remains the sole surviving unit of the San Francisco psychedelic scene's heyday.

380 hot tuna

what to buy: Either First Pull up, Then Pull Down ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1971, prod. Jorma Kaukonen) or Burgers ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1972, prod. Jorma Kaukonen) will provide the quintessential Tuna experience, mixing the Rev. Gary Davis/Mississippi John Hurt fingerpicking nobody does any better than Kaukonen with Casady's imaginative bass playing.

what to buy next: The duo's quiet acoustic debut, Hot Tuna ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1970, prod. Al Schmitt), captured the lads, fresh out of the hotel rooms, in a small Berkeley nightclub playing relatively straight-ahead elaborations on traditional country blues, unplugged before its time.

what to avoid: The sound quality on Classic Hot Tuna Acoustic ♪♪ (Relix, 1996, prod. Michael Falzarano), taken from a radio broadcast, leaves much to be desired, although the companion piece, Classic Hot Tuna Electric ♪♪♪ (Relix, 1996, prod. Michael Falzarano), fared better since it was taken from multi-track recordings made during the 1971 final week at the Fillmore West.

the rest:

The Phosphorescent Rat ♪♪ (RCA, 1973)
America's Choice ♪♪ (RCA, 1975)
Yellow Fever ♪♪ (RCA, 1975)
Hoppkorv ♪♪ (RCA, 1976)
Double Dose ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1977)
Pair a Dice Found ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1991)
Historic Hot Tuna ♪♪♪½ (Relix, 1991)
Splashdown Two ♪♪♪½ (Relix, 1991)
Live at Sweetwater ♪♪♪½ (Relix, 1992)
Live at Sweetwater Two ♪♪ (Relix, 1993) Trimmed & Burning (Edsel, 1994)

solo outings:

Jorma Kaukonen:

klezmer music

Originating in Eastern Europe, klezmer is a form of Jewish folk music including fast dance tunes as well as more reflective pieces. It was influenced by Jewish prayer music and music from other Eastern European cultures. Klezmer was brought to North America in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries by immigrant musicians who continued to ply their trade in their new home. In fact, klezmer recordings were issued by U.S. record companies from the 1910s through the 1950s. In the 1970s a serious klezmer revival began when young musicians discovered these older recordings and decided to play the music. Since then the klezmer movement has developed and several distinct strands have emerged. There are bands like the Klezmorim and Kapelye, who prefer a traditional approach, basically re-creating what they've been listening to on older recordings. The Klezmer Conservatory Band, an eleven-member "big band," takes a slightly more theatrical tack, featuring dramatic vocalizing by Judy Bressler. And then there's the progressive wing, led by New York City's marvelous Klezmatics, who fuse traditional klezmer styles with modern jazz, rock, and "world" influences. Other bands charting new directions include Brave Old World, who incorporate classical music's finesse and jazzy improvisation into their sound, and the New Orleans Klezmer All Stars, whose klez-rock is guaranteed to get a party going. For a superb picture of klezmer and its evolution, check out the following collections: In The Fiddler's House (Angel), a collaboration between violin master Itzhak Perlman and four klezmer bands: Brave Old World, the Klezmatics, the Andy Statman Klezmer Orchestra, and the Klezmer Conservatory Band; Klezmania (Shanachie), a sampler of "progressive" klezmer tracks; and Klezmer Music: A Marriage of Heaven & Earth (Ellipsis Arts), a lush package with cuts from performers from the United States, Germany, and Canada.

Ken Roseman

Quah ♪♪♪½ (Relix, 1974)
Magic ♪♪♪ (Relix, 1985)
Too Hot to Handle ♪♪♪ (Relix, 1986)
Magic Two ♪♪♪ (Relix, 1994)
Land of Heroes ♪♪♪½ (American Heritage, 1995)
Christmas ♪♪♪ (Relix, 1997)

influences:
⏪ Rev. Gary Davis, Mississippi John Hurt, Scott LeFaro
⏩ Keb' Mo', Jeff Buckley, Chris Whitley, Jeff Healey

Joel Selvin

Hothouse Flowers

Formed 1986, in Ireland.

Liam O'Maonlai, lead vocals, piano, Hammond organ, Wurlitzer, low whistle, bodhrán, didjeridoo; Fiachna O'Braonain, electric and acoustic guitars, bouzouki, vocals; Peter O'Toole, bass guitar, bouzouki, backing vocals; Leo Barnes, saxophone, Hammond organ, Wurlizter, backing vocals; Jerry Fehily, drums, percussion.

More Memphis Stax than Dublin U2, Hothouse Flowers blends Celtic mysticism with R&B and gospel. The result is clearly Irish in its quest for the transcendental, though the band displays its spirituality more boldly than most. When the group gained critical acclaim for its debut, People, and a host of predictions that it would be the Emerald Isle's next big export, many of the reviews cited the Hothouse's apparent disdain for U2's more mainstream heroic vision. Maybe it was the horns and the gritty sound, but though the influences might differ, both bands are obviously in search of something bigger than rock stardom. With Hothouse Flowers, the embrace of American soul and Irish traditional as the road to God is more consistent, and for that matter, much more Irish. Liam O'Maonlai's impassioned vocals and the musicianship of guitarists Fiachna O'Braonain and Peter O'Toole frequently reach glorified heights, though occasionally 'O Maonlai has a tendency to over-testify. The band is also reluctant to record, with three albums to its credit since 1988, though members appear on a host of recordings by others (well, they have the time).

what to buy: People ♪♪♪♪♪ (London, 1988, prod. Clive Langer, Alan Winstanley) is a beautiful merging of original vision and mainstream influences and became the best-selling debut in Irish pop history. Standout cuts include "The Older We Get," which speaks to wisdom hard earned.

what to buy next: With an effective reworking of Johnny Nash's chestnut "I Can See Clearly Now" and the gorgeous "Christchurch Bells," Home ♪♪♪♪ (London, 1990, prod. Paul Barrett, Pat McCarthy, Daniel Lanois, Clive Langer, Alan Winstanley, Norman Verso) is a strong follow-up to the debut. Fiddler Steve Wickham, late of the Waterboys, guests on the live "Dance to the Storm."

the rest:
Songs from the Rain ♪♪♪ (London, 1993)

influences:
⏪ U2, Waterboys
⏩ 54.40

Martin Connors

The House Band

Formed 1984, in England.

Ged Foley, vocals, acoustic and electric guitars, mandolin, Northumbrian pipes; Chris Parkinson, melodeons, keyboards, accordion, harmonica, vocals; Iain MacLeod, 10-string mandolin, guitar, vocals (1984–86); Jimmy Young, smallpipes, flute, whistles (1984–86); Brian Brooks, bouzouki, keyboards, whistle, vocals (1986–88); John Skelton, flutes, whistles, bombardes, bodhrán (1986–present); Roger Wilson, fiddle, guitar, viola, vocals (1995–present).

Ged Foley's trademark slow renditions of popular bar songs, Chris Parkinson's rhythmic accordion with a Cajun twist, and John's Breton dance tunes on wooden flute interspersed with shocking in-your-face bombarde leads characterize this unusual English/Celtic band. They have so much drive and variety in their arrangements it is easy to forget that for many years they were a three-piece band. Foley played with both the Battlefield Band and Jez Lowe for several years before starting the House Band. John played in London with an Irish band called Shegui, which also played Breton material. His driving flute playing, European repertoire, and dry wit were a natural addition to Foley and Parkinson. Foley and Skelton have married Americans and now live in the States. Parkinson comes over to tour and teach with the band at least every other year. On more recent releases the House Band has added Mark Hellenberg on bodhrán and dumbek. Continually developing new material, they seem to come out with a new CD every couple of years. In the musical chairs of Irish bands, Foley can now also be found playing with and producing Patrick Street's latest endeavors.

what to buy: Another Setting ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. House Band) has the addition of Roger Wilson on fiddle. "Jig-jazz," as the title implies, stretches the concept of "jig" into a lighthearted, contemporary context. In good humor, there are echoes of Jamaica's Jolly Boys on " African Marketplace." This CD would be remiss without Ged singing a mellow Irish bar song. In this case, "Rocky Road to Dublin" takes on an ominous overtone in this sober rendition.

what to buy next: Rockall ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1996) is named after a desolate rock island north of the Hebrides that is associated with the BBC Shipping Forecast. Much of the music is from the north of England and on maritime topics. The band includes two moving songs about dying industries. There is a brilliant transition from "The Flat Cap," an unusual 3/2 English piece, into "Sgean Dhu," an old Scots 6/8 jig. The album ends with a spirited, contemporary Breton bagad (pipe band) march. Stonetown ♪♪♪♪½ (Harbourtown/Green Linnet, 1991) received the British Retailers Association's award for the Best Folk Album of 1992. Groundwork ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. House Band, David Kenny) is a partial compilation of the House Band's first two recordings—The House Band ♪♪♪½ (Topic, 1985, prod. House Band, David Kenny) and Pacific ♪♪♪½ (Topic, 1987, prod. House Band, David Kenny). Both of the original recordings are out of print.

the rest:
Word of Mouth ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1989)

worth searching for: John Skelton's recordings with the band Shegui, All around the World (Green Linnet) and In the Wind (Highway, 1984) are worth searching out. Chris Parkinson also has some obscure solo recordings he has produced himself.

influences:
◀◀ Battlefield Band, Shegui, Blowzabella, Kornog
▶▶ Rankin Family, Arcady

Karen Ashbrook

Son House

Born Eddie James House Jr., March 21, 1902, in Clarksdale, MS. Died October 19, 1988, in Detroit, MI.

One of the greatest exponents of Mississippi Delta blues was Son House. A sharecropper, House taught himself to play guitar, developing a highly dramatic slide guitar style. He traveled to Grafton, Wisconsin, in May of 1930 with his partner, Willie Brown, and recorded for Paramount. Three 78s were issued, which featured slashing slide guitar, dark, moaning vocals, and walking bass lines. House would become an early inspiration to Robert Johnson. Although he was one of the most popular bluesmen in the Delta, he wouldn't record again until 1942 when Alan Lomax taped him for the Library of Congress. Around this time, House took a job as a railway porter, moved to Rochester, New York, and forgot about music. However, House's rediscovery in 1964 helped fuel the first blues boom, and he made a courageous comeback. Although he hadn't picked up the guitar in nearly two decades, he quickly redeveloped his technique. Throughout the 1960s and 1970s, he recorded and toured extensively, entertaining audiences with his music and stories.

what to buy: Son House and the Great Delta Blues Singers 1928–30 ♪♪♪♪½ (Document, 1994) includes the haunting Paramount sides as well as tracks by Willie Brown and Rube Lacey, among others. House rarely sounded better than on Delta Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (Biograph, 1991, prod. Arnold S. Caplin), which includes the Library of Congress field recordings from 1941 and 1942. Although House hadn't been in a recording studio in 35 years, he mustered all of his power on Death Letter Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (Edsel, 1965, prod. Alan Wilson), proving he was still a master of the Delta blues. Consisting of 1970 recordings, Delta Blues and Spirituals ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1995) has House accompanied by Alan Wilson on guitar and harmonica.

what to buy next: At Home 1969 ♪♪♪♪½ (Document, 1969) contains several of the songs, monologues, and a cappella vocals House used in his performances.

the rest:
Father of the Delta Blues: The Complete 1965 Sessions (Columbia/Legacy, 1992)
Oberlin College Concert ♪♪½ (King Bee, 1993)
In Concert (Magnum America, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Charley Patton, Willie Brown, Willie Wilson ▶▶ Skip James, Robert Johnson, Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Elmore James, Alan Wilson, John Mooney

Jeff Hannusch

Cisco Houston

Born Gilbert Vandine Houston, August 18, 1918, in Wilmington, DE. Died April 29, 1961, in San Bernardino, CA.

A contemporary of Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger, Cisco Houston somehow survived during the Depression as a traveling minstrel. He later found fame on the college and folk-club circuit and as a member of the Weavers. A significant influence on the likes of Bob Dylan, Ramblin' Jack Elliott, and Tom Paxton, Houston was truly a master of the folk genre.

what to buy: Houston was one of the best pure vocalists of the folk movement, though that didn't always work to his advantage with fans of the era. It has helped his recordings stay fresh with time, however. His easygoing baritone makes the versions of "Dark as a Dungeon," "Saint James Infirmary," the humorous "The Cat Came Back," and more than two dozen other tunes on The Folkways Years, 1944–1961 ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1994, compilation prod. Guy Logsdon) thoroughly enjoyable.

the rest:
Cisco Houston Sings Woody Guthrie ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1989)

influences:
◀◀ Woody Guthrie
▶▶ Tom Paxton, Ramblin' Jack Elliott, Bob Dylan

Randall T. Cook

Ray Wylie Hubbard

Born November 13, 1946, in Soper, OK.

Ray Wylie Hubbard has been best remembered (saddled?) by his 1970s anthem, "Up against the Wall, Redneck Mother"—not that it has done him any real favors. The song linked him with Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, and Kris Kristofferson, but, unlike the outlaw triumvirate, Hubbard's boozin' and general lawlessness produced ill-fated (and out-of-print) albums coupled with years of inactivity. In the last decade, however, he put a cork in the bottle, experienced a musical rebirth of sorts, and returned to recording. Shrugging off the Nashville sound, Hubbard now favors acoustic fingerpicking and more comtemplative themes.

what to buy: Loco Gringo's Lament ♪♪♪½ (Dejadisc, 1994, prod. Lloyd Maines, Brian Hardin) finds a lean and confident Hubbard rambling through dusty tales of experience that clearly offer a more philosophical view than "Up against the Wall"—not that he can't still pen a bruiser like "Wanna Rock and Roll," in which he handles two-timers with clear adrenalin-pumping intent. Let's just say it involves knifeplay and leave it at that. Dangerous Spirits ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1997, prod. Lloyd Maines, Brian Hardin) is another solid collection of Hubbard's world of gunfighters, wounded lovers, and resurrected souls. While he can get a bit florid on the love tunes, his redemptive outlaw tales have gritty authenticity. It cements the notion that Hubbard's return is more than a passing shot.

what to buy next: Initially self released in 1993, Lost Train of Thought ♪♪♪ (Dejadisc, 1995, prod. Ray Wylie Hubbard) is a hopeful, if not slightly tentative prelude of things to come. It's nowhere near as stripped down and saddle weary, but Hubbard emerges as a changed man with new tales to tell.

influences:
◀◀ Waylon Jennings, Willie Nelson, Kris Kristofferson, Jerry Jeff Walker, Townes Van Zandt
▶▶ Steve Earle, Bill Morrissey

Allan Orski

Hui Ohana /Ledward Kaapana

Formed 1970s, in HI. Disbanded c. 1990.

Ledward Kaapana (born 1948, in HI), guitar, vocals; Nedward Kaapana (born 1948, in HI), bass, vocals; Dennis Pavao, vocals, rhythm guitar.

"Hui Ohana" is Hawaiian for "family group," a fitting name for a trio consisting of a set of twins and their cousin. The group was one of the most successful of Hawaii's local groups during the '70s and '80s. The group recorded 14 albums before disbanding around 1990, though only a handful are still available—and then only after diligent searching.When Hui Ohana disbanded, guitarist Ledward Kaapana joined another group called I Kona, with which he recorded five albums. All three members of Hui Ohana have gone on to record solo albums, though Ledward's 1994 album for Dancing Cat is the only one to receive significant national distribution.

what to buy: Though it's atypical of the Hui Ohana sound, Ledward Kaapana's solo album Led Live Solo ♪♪♪½ (Dancing Cat, 1994, prod. George Winston) is certainly the easiest album by any member of this group to find on the mainland. Recorded at an intimate venue, the album features not only Kaapana's wonderful guitar playing, but also his yodeling and informative between-song patter.

what to buy next: Hui Ohana's sound is marked by Ledward's facile picking—usually on electric guitar—and his cousin Dennis Pavao's ethereal falsetto. Hui Ohana ♪♪♪ (Paradise, 1987) was a reunion album recorded in 1987 and serves as a fine introduction to the group's Hawaiian pop sound. Perhaps it makes sense because of Hui Ohana's falsetto trio harmonies, but the title for Live—Tahiti Come on Over ♪♪½ (Paradise, 1989, prod. Tom Moffatt) comes from a Bee Gees tune. The group

hundred watt smile

also arranges "Stars and Stripes Forever" Hawaiian style, though elsewhere they settle into a more traditional sound on this live date from 1988.

the rest:
Volume I—Best of Hui Ohana ♪♪♪ (Lehua, 1997)
Volume II—Best of Hui Ohana ♪♪♪ (Lehua, 1997)

worth searching for: Hawaiian Style Guitars ♪♪♪ (Lehua, 1997, prod. Bill Murata, Charles Bud Dant) features alternating tracks by Hui Ohana and steel-guitar master Jerry Byrd.

influences:
◀◀ Fred Punahoa, Gabby Pahinui, Sonny Chillingworth
▶▶ George Kuo, Ozzie Kotani

Brian Mansfield

Hundred Watt Smile

See: Ed's Redeeming Qualities

Michael Hurley

Born December 20, 1941, in Bucks County, PA.

Michael Hurley is blessed with a rare and disarming quality one might associate with that of a skilled tailor: he makes things cut in an irregular pattern fit comfortably. Another way of putting it: Hurley makes the offbeat seem commonplace. Hanging out in Greenwich Village during the early '60s folk boom, the promising Pennsylvanian's progress was delayed due to health problems. He did, however, record for Folkways in 1964. Around that period, he moved in with Peter Stampfel, joining teen pals Robin Remailey and Steve Weber, a member of the New York City conceptual folk troupe the Holy Modal Rounders and a musical and spiritual kindred spirit. (Stampfel later fittingly characterized the Rounders as a "really bent traditional band"; Hurley could well be called a really bent folksinger.) Another companion from his teen years, Jessie Colin Young of the Youngbloods, brought Hurley to the Youngbloods' Warner Bros. subsidiary, Raccoon, during the early '70s; he recorded two LPs—Armchair Boogie and Hi-Fi Snock Uptown—for the imprint. In 1976 he linked up with an assortment of like-minded loons to cut Have Moicy for Rounder Records. The LP, on which Hurley shares billing with Stampfel, Jeffrey Frederick, and the Holy Modal Rounders, has become a modern folk touchstone, earning a rare A+ rating from Village Voice critic Robert Christgau, who credited the motley crew with "renewing the concept of American folk music as a bizarre apotheosis of the post-hippie estate." Hurley recorded two albums for Rounder—1977's Long Journey and 1980's Snockgrass. During the '80s, he made his living selling his cassettes and illustrated storybooks through his mail-order business, Bellemeade Phonics. His artwork also developed a devoted following. Hurley reemerged as a recording artist in 1995 with the KOCH title WolfWays, an assortment of new and old recordings.

what to buy: WolfWays ♪♪♪♪ (KOCH, 1994, prod. Ed Friedland, John Jordan, Gideon Freudmann, Gus Ziesing) was conceived as a primer for European folk fans. Given Hurley's rather limited following, however, it's also an apt intro for most Yanks. In addition to three new songs, WolfWays is fleshed out with four ditties from an out-of-print 1986 album called Watertower and re-recordings of a half-dozen old Hurley faves.

what to buy next: Snockgrass ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1980/1997, prod. Kornbread) is a very likable, very whimsical 18-song collection. The CD includes two selections not included on the original CD, including an alternate take of Hurley's classic "Sweet Lucy." As with his best work, Snockgrass is informed with folk familiarity yet is as idiosyncratic and unconstrained as its creator.

solo outings:
Michael Hurley, Unholy Modal Rounders, Jeffrey Frederick & the Clamtones:
Have Moicy! ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1976/1991)

influences:
◀◀ Holy Modal Rounders, Peter Stampfel
▶▶ Ed's Redeeming Qualities, Eugene Chadbourne

Steven Stolder

Mississippi John Hurt

Born John Smith Hurt, July 3, 1893, in Teoc, MS. Died November 2, 1966, in Grenada, MS.

It reads like a fairy tale or a Hollywood script: "Ardent blues lover uses a song lyric to track down long-lost, thought-to-be-dead musician whose only recordings were 35 years past and who had since worked as a farm laborer. 'Rediscovered' musician takes folk world by storm." Truth is indeed stranger than fiction. In 1963 young blues enthusiast Tom Hoskins found Mississippi John Hurt in Avalon, Mississippi, a city Hurt had immortalized in "Avalon Blues," one of 13 songs Hurt recorded in 1928 for the OKeh label. Singer/songwriter/guitarist Hurt's return was marked by a triumphant appearance at the 1963 Newport Jazz Festival. He became the most celebrated of the rediscovered 1960s folk artists, a star at age 71. He moved his family from Mississippi to Washington, D.C., to take advantage of opportunities to play festivals and coffeehouses across the United States and Canada. He moved back to Mississippi shortly before his death in 1966. Hurt played gentle, folksy ballads and blues tunes with an even fingerpicking style and a friendly, front-porch demeanor. His guitar technique sounds deceptively simple, but Hurt possessed a smooth, rolling style characterized by a challenging combination of "constant bass" work with his thumb and an ever-present melodic line on top. His work remains a litmus test for fingerpicking acoustic guitar players and a unique pleasure for blues fans.

what to buy: There are no bad John Hurt albums. If you're starting from scratch, here's a recommended order: Avalon Blues: The Complete 1928 OKeh Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1996, prod. Lawrence Cohn) includes the definitive, essential 1928 material mentioned above, digitally remastered and packaged with tender, loving care and attention to detail, including excellent liner notes and a reproduction of the OKeh label on the CD itself. Well done. The same recordings are available, in a different song sequence, on 1928 Sessions ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1990, prod. Nick Perls). The Yazoo liner notes and packaging are also excellent, but the recordings are noisier than those on the Columbia/Legacy release. The Best of Mississippi John Hurt ♪♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1987, prod. Bob Scherl) captures Hurt in an hour of superb 1965 live performance, demonstrating his affable command of enraptured folk audiences.

what to buy next: Avalon Blues 1963 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Richard Spottswood, Thomas Hoskins) and Worried Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Richard Spottswood, Thomas Hoskins) present Hurt's first recordings after rediscovery. The liner notes, duplicated on both CDs, are the best available for purposes of historical reference. One gripe: Avalon Blues is barely 30 minutes long; Worried Blues 40 minutes. Why aren't they on one CD? Memorial Anthology ♪♪♪♪ (Genes, 1993, prod. Gene Rosenthal) is a two-CD live set that clocks in at more than two hours. Most of the performances come from the Ontario Place coffeehouse in Washington in 1964, but the release also includes a 30-minute Hurt interview conducted by Pete Seeger followed by Hurt performing a handful of songs for Seeger. The performances are solid, well-recorded, and nicely packaged with a 16-page booklet. Today! ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1987, prod. Patrick Sky) covers much of the same turf as the 1963 sessions released on Rounder, but the sound is not quite as crisp as the Rounder material.

the rest:
The Immortal Mississippi John Hurt ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1967)
Last Sessions ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1972)
Satisfying Blues ♪♪♪ (Collectables, 1995)
Legend N/A (Rounder, 1998)

worth searching for: The Canadian LP Mississippi John Hurt: Volume One of a Legacy ♪♪♪♪ (Rebel) features excellent studio performances of tunes unavailable on the CDs listed above, such as "See See Rider" and "Do Lord Remember Me."

influences:
Chris Smither, John Fahey, Leo Kottke, Bob Dylan, Fred Neil, Dave Van Ronk

Bryan Powell

Ashley Hutchings /The Albion Band

Born January 26,1945, in Southgate, Middlesex, England.

Elton John was recently knighted. If the British are serious about honoring musical heroes, Ashley Hutchings's time is long overdue. No one person has done more to re-invigorate and popularize English folk traditions than "The Guv'nor." Like many teens of his generation, Hutchings fancied himself a rock 'n' roll star and even led a series of rock 'n' roll bands in the mid-1960s. But his initial claim to fame would come as bassist with folk-rock pioneers Fairport Convention. It was during his later Fairport days that he discovered traditional music, and he was one of the driving forces behind Fairport's landmark Liege and Lief set, one of the first recordings to blend Anglo-Celtic folk music with rock. That project altered Hutchings's career forever. He left Fairport in 1969 to more seriously pursue the goal of revitalizing traditional music, and his first step on this career path was the formation of Steeleye Span, with whom he recorded three albums. Since leaving Steeleye Span in 1971, Hutchings has concentrated on expanding his vision of a specifically English-rooted, contemporary music by leading the numerous incarnations of the Albion Band (the Albion Country Band, the Albion Dance Band), and producing a series of one-time-only projects such as Morris On (new arrangements of morris dance tunes), The Compleat Dancing Master (new arrangements of different kinds of dance tunes with readings), and even a romantic song cycle—By Gloucester Docks I Sat Down and Wept—A Love Story. Hutchings even starred in a one-man production called An Evening with Cecil Sharp and Ashley Hutchings in which he portrayed himself and the famed song researcher. He has amassed quite a collection of tapes from all of his projects and this archival material has begun to see the light of day as the series of "The Guv'nor" collections.

3/8/6 frank hutchison

At the 1997 Cropredy festival, Hutchings narrated the Fairport Convention "oldies" set and led the opening number, his song "Wings," which looks back fondly on the growth of English folk-rock. "Wings" is available on The Guv'nor Volume IV and the Cropredy performance featuring that song and several others by old and new members of Fairport Convention was scheduled to be released as an album in the spring of 1998.

what to buy: Phil Pickett's collection of "early music" instruments added a distinctive color to the arrangements of traditional dance tunes featured on The Prospect before Us ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI/Harvest, 1976/Hannibal, 1996, prod. Ashley Hutchings, Simon Nicol). Rise up like the Sun ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMJ/Harvest 1978, prod. Joe Boyd, John Tams), credited to the Albion Band, was not as dance oriented, and John Tams's role in the band had become much more prominent. He served as co-producer, did a lot of the lead singing, and brought in many of the songs. Among the Albion classics included on this album are: "Ragged Heroes" (a Tams composition), "Poor Old Horse," and Richard Thompson's "Time to Ring Some Changes."

what to buy next: Battle of the Field ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1976, prod. John Wood) features a never to be duplicated line-up: Hutchings, Martin Carthy, John Kirkpatrick, Sue Harris, and Roger Swallow. Twangin' n' a-Traddin ♪♪♪♪ (Wildcat, 1995, prod. Ashley Hutchings), something completely different, was credited to a unit called the Ashley Hutchings Big Beat Combo. It's an unlikely pairing of morris and surf music—but who could resist an album that (1) credits Richard Thompson with playing electric guitar and pennywhistle and (2) includes a swingin' little tune called "Twistin' Welsh Girls"? It's a fitting reminder that Hutchings, now revered as a traditionalist, started out as a rock and rollin' Duane Eddy fan.

best of the rest:

(With the Albion Band) Give Me a Saddle, I'll Trade You a Car ♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1989)

(With the Albion Band) In Concert ♪♪♪♪ (Windsong, 1993)

(With the Albion Band) Acousticity ♪♪♪♪ (HTD, 1993)

(With the Ashley Hutchings Dance Band) A Batter Pudding for John Keats ♪♪♪♪ (HTD, 1996)

worth searching for: Lark Rise to Candleford (Charisma, 1979), credited to Keith Dewhurst and the Albion Band, contains music (and some spoken excerpts) from the stage production. The core of the Albion line-up involved—including John Tams—went on to form the magnificent Home Service.

influences:

◀◀ Fairport Convention, Steeleye Span, Cecil Sharp, Mr. Fox

▶▶ Home Service, Oyster Band, New St. George

see also: Fairport Convention, Steeleye Span, Richard Thompson, Shirley Collins

Pamela Murray Winters and Ken Roseman

Frank Hutchison

Born March 3, 1897, in Logan, WV. Died November 9, 1945, in Columbus, OH.

Hillbilly blues guitarist Frank Hutchison grew up in the coal mining regions of West Virginia and eastern Kentucky. In addition to performing square dance tunes on the harmonica, blackface minstrel routines, and Anglo-American ballads, he developed a taste for blues guitar, a style he apparently learned from a local black guitarist named Bill Hunt. Hunt reportedly inspired Hutchison to play slide guitar, re-tuning the instrument and then playing flat on his lap. In September 1926, Hutchison traveled to New York City to record his first two sides. These sold well enough for OKeh Records to continue to record him for the following four years; his last session was in 1929. After the Great Depression put an end to his recording career, Hutchison ran a grocery store in Lake, West Virginia. He died of liver cancer in 1945.

what to buy: Frank Hutchison is required listening for anyone with a serious interest in old-time country guitar. Hutchison's finest sides have been reissued on Volume I 1926–1929 ♪♪♪♪ (Document, 1997). Here are some of old-time country music's most enduring and powerful guitar standards: "Train That Carried My Girl from Town" (later a staple of Doc Watson's repertoire), "Coney Isle" (reincarnated by Cowboy Copas as "Alabam"), and the first recording of what was to become one of the most famous of American folk songs, "Stackalee." The latter song had an extremely far-reaching influence as a result of its inclusion on The Harry Smith Anthology of American Folk Music; it entered the repertoire of seminal folk music figures such as Bob Dylan, who recorded it on World Gone Wrong. Perhaps most unusual and beautiful from Volume I are the mellifluous slide guitar pieces, particularly "Worried Blues." The remaining sides from Hutchison's final 1929 session can be found on Old-Time Music from West Virginia ♪♪♪ (Document, 1997). Both volumes contain a certain amount of duplication, since Hutchison recorded his most popular numbers several times, sometimes under the identical title, often changing the words slightly and renaming the song. Thus, we get several different versions of "Stackalee" (one instrumental, the other with lyrics); "Train That Carried

My Girl from Town" was also recorded twice. "Coney Isle" was recycled a year later as "Back in My Home Town," and the melody was used yet again the following year in the two-part "Johnny and Jane."

influences:

◀◀ Mississippi John Hurt, Sam McGee, Fiddlin' John Carson

▶▶ New Lost City Ramblers, Doc Watson, Ry Cooder, Bob Dylan

Suzy Rothfield Thompson

Walter Hyatt /Uncle Walt's Band

Born October 25, 1949, in Spartanburg, SC. Died May 11, 1996, in FL.

In 1990 Lyle Lovett persuaded MCA to sign soulful Austin, Texas, crooner Walter Hyatt and produced his first solo album, the gorgeous King Tears. It seemed like a strange way to wield his newfound clout, but Lovett had some debts to repay. As the leader of the regionally revered Uncle Walt's Band—a genre-defying, harmony-laden acoustic trio featuring David Ball and Champ Hood—Hyatt often invited the young Lovett to open the group's Texas A&M campus concerts during the late 1970s. Lovett's esoteric blend of Texas swing, gospel, folk, and jazz clearly stems from Hyatt's daring vision, which flew in the face of Nashville convention and Austin's then-thriving Jerry Jeff Walker–led "Cosmic Cowboy" scene. Signing with Sugar Hill in 1993, Hyatt started drifting back to his Western swing roots on Music Town. He was benefiting from renewed interest in his music via Sugar Hill reissues of his influential 1974–82 recordings with Uncle Walt's Band and had started touring with a new band called King Tears when he was killed in the 1996 ValuJet crash in the Florida Everglades.

what to buy: Reissued at Lovett's request after Hyatt's death, the romantic King Tears ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1990/1996, prod. Lyle Lovett) is an exquisite collection of gentle swing numbers and jazz-tinged ballads highlighted by the swaying "Tell Me Baby" and a faithful take on Ray Charles's "Ruby." This is the album Harry Connick Jr. always wanted to make.

what to buy next: Culled from three Uncle Walt's Band releases recorded between 1979 and 1982, An American in Texas Revisited ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1991, prod. various) contains the trio's liveliest music, partly the result of a temporary breakup that gave each member an opportunity to explore other styles. Although the country influences abound, such Hyatt numbers as "Motor City Man," "Deeper Than Love," and "Desiree" also resonate with the melodic stamp of the Rubber Soul–era Beatles.

the rest:

The Girl on the Sunny Shore ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1991)
Music Town ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1993)

worth searching for: Lovett fans who own Lyle Lovett and His Large Band ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1989, prod. Lyle Lovett, Tony Brown, Billy Williams) can hear the influence and reunited voices of Uncle Walt's Band on the jazzy closing track, "Once Is Enough."

influences:

◀◀ Bob Wills, Django Reinhardt, Ray Charles, Beatles, Grateful Dead

▶▶ Lyle Lovett

David Okamoto

Ian & Sylvia /Ian Tyson /The Great Speckled Bird /Sylvia Fricker Tyson

Formed 1959, in Toronto, Canada. Disbanded 1972.

Ian Tyson (born September 25, 1933, in Victoria, British Columbia, Canada); Sylvia Fricker Tyson (born September 19, 1940, in Chatham, Ontario, Canada).

British Columbia–born singer-songwriter Ian Tyson has become the musical voice of the American Cowboy and the Old West. But Tyson initially attracted acclaim with traditional Canadian folk ballads and covers of American folk tunes in a duo, Ian & Sylvia, that he shared with ex-wife Sylvia Fricker Tyson during the 1960s and early 1970s. Despite their heavily acoustic sound, which often featured Spike Lee's father, Bill, on upright bass, the duo played a major role in the evolution of folk-rooted rock and roll. Tyson, who grew up on a Canadian farm, traveled through western Canada and worked a variety of jobs, including performing on the rodeo circuit. An injury at the age of 19 convinced him to seek a different venture. While studying at the Vancouver School of Art, he began performing with a band, the Sensational Stripes. Tyson and Fricker first met at a Toronto folk club in 1959, where Tyson was performing folk songs and hosting an open mic every Wednesday night. Accompanying herself on mando-cello, a cross between a guitar and a mandolin, Fricker, whose mother was a music teacher, organist, and church choir director, sang with a lovely high vibrato voice that caught Tyson's attention. Before long, the two were singing and playing music together. They were married in 1966. Moving to New York's Greenwich Village in 1961, the duo became swept up by the then-thriving folk music scene. When favorable word reached the ears of Bob Dylan's manager, Albert Grossman, Ian and Sylvia were signed to a management deal. Although their self-titled 1962 debut album featured interpretations of traditional songs, Ian and Sylvia began to showcase their songwriting skills on their subsequent recordings. Tyson's "Four Strong Winds" was the title track of their second album, in 1962, while Fricker's "You Were on My Mind," which became a pop-folk hit for the We Five, was featured on Northern Journey two years later. As the 1960s faded into the '70s, Ian and Sylvia expanded into a Nashville-influenced country band, the Great Speckled Bird. Their first full-band effort, Great Speckled Bird was produced by Todd Rundgren in 1972. When the band was dissolved, it put a further strain on Tyson and Fricker's marriage; they were divorced the following year. Tyson settled on his 160-acre T-Bar-Y ranch in Longview, Alberta, and balanced work as a cowboy with his career as a songwriter. His influential album of cowboy songs, Cowboyography, was released in 1985. The 1996 album, All the Good 'Uns, is a compilation of memorable tracks from his six albums of traditional and original cowboy songs. Fricker has recorded three solo albums—Woman's World, produced by her former husband, in 1975, You Were on My Mind in 1990, and Gypsy Cadillac in 1992.

what to buy: All the Good 'Uns ♪♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1996, prod. Ian Tyson, Adrian Chornowol, Louis Sedmark, Jim Rooney, Doug Riley) reprises 19 tracks from Tyson's post–Ian and Sylvia solo recordings of cowboy-related songs.

what to buy next: Recorded during their 1963 and 1965 appearances at the Newport Folk Festival, Live at Newport ♪♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1994, prod. Jeff Zaraya) documents the depth of Ian and Sylvia's early repertoire and the intimacy and vocal harmonies of their concert performances. In addition to tradition-rooted versions of Canadian folk songs—"Un Canadian Errant" and "V'la L'Bon Vent"—the duo showcase their songwriting talents with eight original tunes, including Ian's "Someday Soon," "Four Strong Winds," and Sylvia's "You Were on My Mind."

the rest:
Ian and Sylvia ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1962)
Four Strong Winds ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1964)
Northern Journey ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1964)
Early Morning Rain ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1965)
Play One More ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1966)
So Much for Dreaming ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1967)
Lovin' Sound ♪♪ (MGM, 1967)
Best of Ian and Sylvia ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1968)
Nashville ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1968)
Full Circle ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1968)

solo outings:
Sylvia Fricker Tyson :
Woman's World ♪♪ (Capitol, 1975)
You Were on My Mind ♪♪♪½ (Stony Plain, 1990)
Gypsy Cadillac ♪♪♪½ (Folk Era, 1992)

Great Speckled Bird: Great Speckled Bird ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1972)

influences:
Canadian folk music, Tom Paxton, Bob Dylan, Peter, Paul & Mary

Byrds, Band, Tom Russell, Riders in the Sky, Joni Mitchell, Gordon Lightfoot

see also: Ian Tyson

Craig Harris

Janis Ian

Born Janis Eddy Fink, May 7, 1951, in New York, NY.

Janis Ian was the Tiffany and Debbie Gibson of her time, with a crucial difference: her music was good, and serious. Ian was just 15 when she courted controversy with "Society's Child," her searing observation about interracial romance that was banned by some radio stations but finally won respect when Leonard Bernstein invited her to perform it on a 1967 TV special he hosted about rock. But the rest of Ian's career has been somewhat fitful, marked as much by commercial slumps and prolonged absences as by hits. She did return to the charts in 1975 with her hit "At Seventeen," but not long after that she began a 12-year break from recording. When she returned, Ian came out, and though her subsequent albums have not launched hits, they have been among the most moving and resonant of her career.

what to buy: On Between the Lines ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1975), "At Seventeen" is only one of an album full of luminous, well-crafted songs. Breaking Silence ♪♪♪♪ (Morgan Creek, 1993, prod. Janis Ian, Jeff Balding) is a bold return to recording on which Ian, never one to scrimp on her emotions, is even more frank and pointed.

what to buy next: Seek out Society's Child: The Verve Recordings ♪♪♪ (Polydor/Chronicles, 1995, prod. various) because you have to have "Society's Child," although this two-disc set would have been better as a more judiciously selected single.

what to avoid: Present Company ♪♪ (Capitol, 1971/One Way, 1994) is a transitional effort between Ian's earnest teenage recordings and her more deeply rooted work of the mid-70s, an awkward phase in anybody's life, much less a recording artist.

the rest:
Revenge ♪♪♪½ (Beacon, 1995)

worth searching for: Between the Lines' predecessor, Stars ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1974), marked a new maturity in Ian's music. It also includes "Jesse," which was a hit for Roberta Flack.

influences:
◀◀ Joan Baez, Rev. Gary Davis, Ronnie Gilbert
▶▶ Suzanne Vega, Tracy Chapman, Shawn Colvin

Gary Graff

Rob Ickes

See: Blue Highway

The Ill-Mo Boys

See: Geoff Seitz

Incredible String Band

Formed 1966, in Glasgow, Scotland. Disbanded 1974.

Robin Williamson, vocals, guitars, etc.; Mike Heron, vocals, guitar, sitar, etc.; Clive Palmer, guitar, banjo, vocals (1966); Christina "Licorice" McKenna, vocals, organ (1968–72); Rose Simpson, vocals, bass, percussion, violin (1968–71); Janet Shankerman, background vocals (1970); Pete Grant, banjo (1970); Greg Hart, sitar (1970); Malcolm Le Maistre, keyboards, bass, vocals (1971–74); Gerald Dott, clarinet, saxophone (1971–73); Stan Lee, bass (1972–74); Jack Ingram, drums (1972–73); John Gilston, drums (1973–74).

The Incredible String Band's reputation has been in ascendancy of late in part thanks to an extensive mid-'90s reissue program by Rykodisc via its Hannibal imprint. In its time, ISB ranked with the most curious anglo folk-rock outfits. They were, observed producer Joe Boyd, the first artists to connect folk music and psychedelia. Founders Robin Williamson and Clive Palmer began working together as a duo in 1965, performing regularly at Palmer's Incredible Folk Club. They soon added multi-instrumentalist/vocalist Mike Heron and appropriated Palmer's club's name for their ensemble. The trio recorded a debut LP in 1966, then set off to explore the world separately, Palmer venturing to Afghanistan while Williamson traveled to Monaco. When the threesome returned to Scotland, Palmer opted out of the group. Williamson and Heron recorded a second album, The 5000 Spirits or the Layers of the Onion, in 1968. It put the group in the British top 10. After releasing 1968's The Hangman's Beautiful Daughter, Williamson and Huron's girlfriends, Christina "Licorice" McKenna and Rose Simpson, respectively, signed on. Over the next half-dozen years, the band went through myriad personnel changes as it floated into hippie mysticism. The recorded yield, consequently, became less appealing. Heron released his solo debut, Smiling Men with Bad Reputations, on Elektra in 1971; the following year, Williamson tried his hand as a solo recording artist, releasing Myrrh on Reprise. By mid-decade, they dissolved the group.

what to buy: The 5000 Spirits or the Layers of the Onion ♪♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1967/Hannibal, 1994, prod. Joe Boyd) is an expert melding of a tremendous range of influences (including bits nicked from Indian, blues, African, and country-western sources) into a psychedelic-folk tapestry. The group was blessed with two distinctive frontmen in Williamson and Heron. Their instrumental versatility and Boyd's adroit production elevate The 5000 Spirits above the Brit-folk pack.

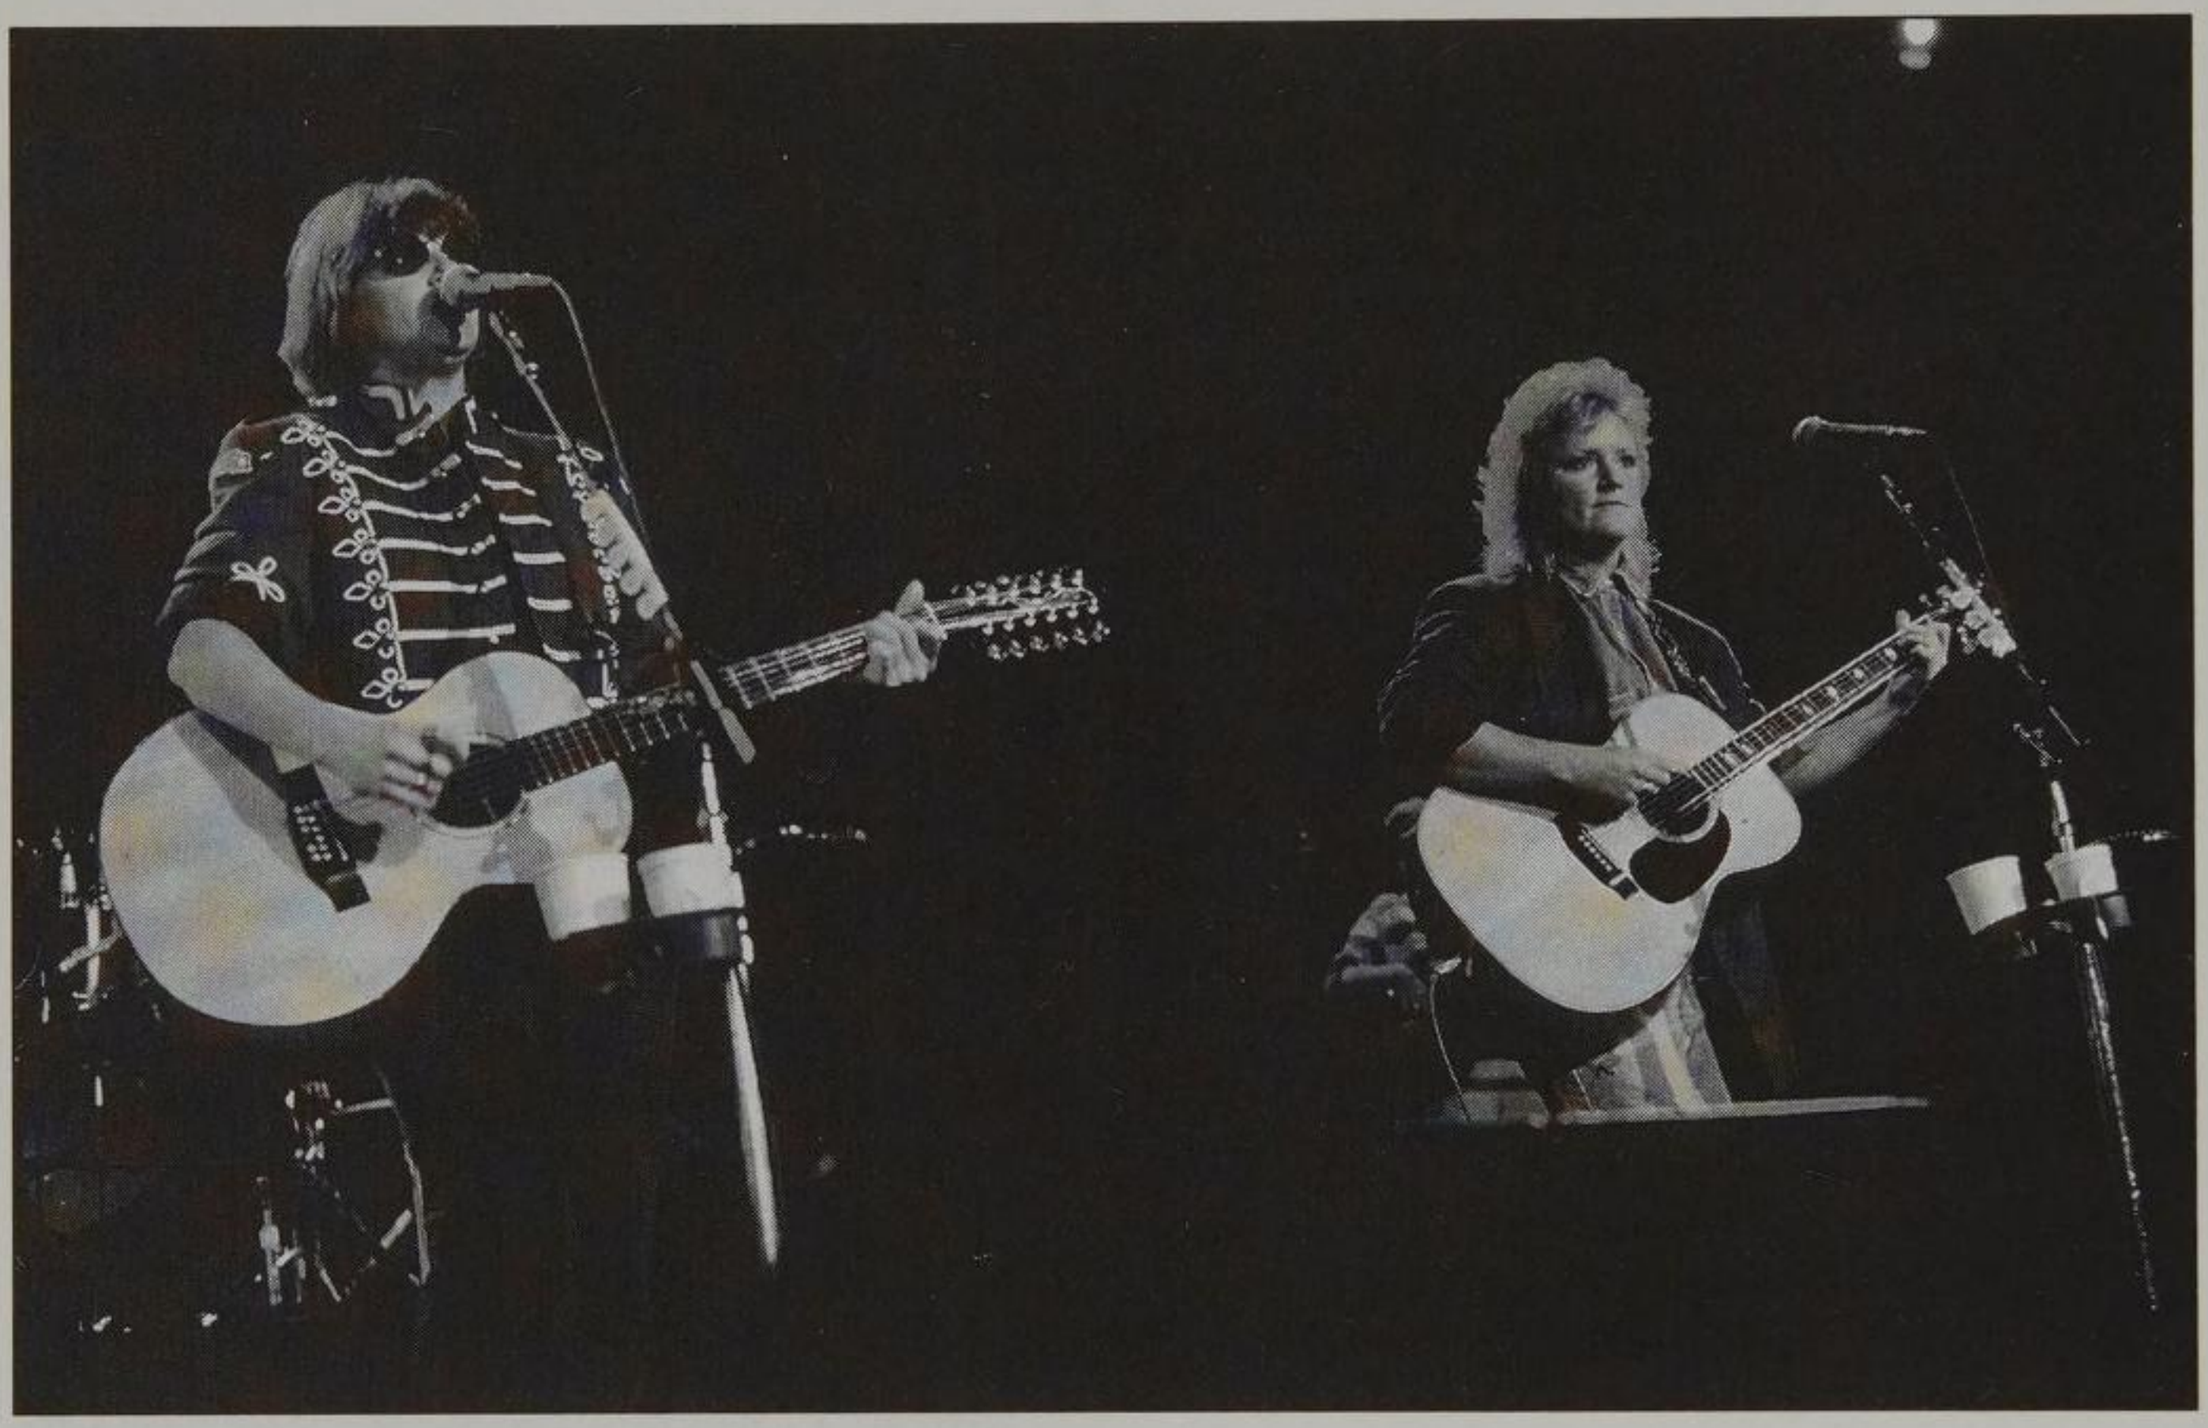
what to buy next: The Incredible String Band ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1966/Hannibal, 1994, prod. Joe Boyd) features material by all three founding members. Of a more traditional mind than that which followed, ISB's spry appeal remains intact more than three decades after its appearance.

the rest:
The Hangman's Beautiful Daughter ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1968/Hannibal, 1994)
Wee Tam & the Big Huge ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1968/Hannibal, 1994)
Changing Horses ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1969/Hannibal 1994)
I Looked Up ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1970/Hannibal, 1994)

worth searching for: The Hannibal Sampler ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1994) is a nifty promo-only release that's worth hunting down in used-CD racks. It offers a discriminating assortment of choice tracks, including Williamson's "First Girl I Loved" and Heron's "Air."



The Indigo Girls: Amy Ray (l) and Emily Saliers (© Ken Settle)

influences:

◀◀ Pentangle, Fairport Convention, Steeleye Span, Donovan

▶▶ Yo La Tengo

Steven Stolder

Indigo Girls

Formed 1984, in Decatur, GA.

Amy Ray, guitar and vocals; Emily Saliers, guitar and vocals.

Amy Ray and Emily Saliers easily won over sensitive folkies and alternative rockers alike with their 1989 major-label debut by baring their souls where others merely beat on their chests. Fusing biblical imagery, feminist integrity, and poetic pretensions, the Atlanta duo risked coming across as angstful overachievers, but their unflagging earnestness and soaring harmonies made an indelible impression. Since then, they have struggled to harness the power of their voices and their convictions: For every shimmering pop triumph like "Hammer and a Nail" or "Power of Two" there's a heavy-handed "The Girl with the Weight of the World in Her Hands" or "You and Me of 10,000 Wars." For every tasteful cover of Bob Dylan's "All along the Watchtower" or Elton John's "Mona Lisas and Mad Hatters," there's an overwrought take on Dire Straits' "Romeo and Juliet" and Buffy Sainte-Marie's "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee." But 1994's hard-rocking Swamp Ophelia hit the emotional and artistic mark, proving that with each album, Saliers and Ray are indeed getting closer to fine.

what to buy: Indigo Girls ♪♪♪♪♩ (Epic, 1989, prod. Scott Litt) boasts help from R.E.M. and Hothouse Flowers, who lend an edge to "Closer to Fine," "Kid Fears," and "Tried to Be True." Swamp Ophelia ♪♪♪♪♩ (Epic, 1994, prod. Peter Collins) expands the duo's sound with horns, mandolins, African drums, accordions, and other textures that for once are conducive, not cosmetic.

what to buy next: The range of styles covered in the Indigo Girls' live shows is documented on the sprawling two-CD 1200

Curfews ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1995, prod. Indigo Girls, Russell Carter), but the intensity is stronger on the eight-song Back on the Bus Y'All ♪♪♪½ (Epic, 1991, prod. Timothy R. Powell), which also features the Ellen James Society.

what to avoid: Strange Fire ♪♪ (Epic, 1989, prod. John Keane), a reissue of the Indigo's 1987 indie debut, is burdened by an underdeveloped vision and tentative vocals. Their idea of a statement at the time was covering the Youngbloods' "Get Together."

the rest:
Nomads Indians Saints ♪♪♪½ (Epic, 1990)
Rites of Passage ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1992)
Shaming of the Sun ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1997) worth searching for: Jesus Christ Superstar: A Resurrection ♪♪♪½ (Daemon/Long Play, 1994, prod. Michael Lorant) is a rocking but uneven update of the Andrew Lloyd Webber–Tim Rice musical featuring Ray as Jesus Christ and Saliers as Mary Magdalene. Their duets on "Everything's Alright" and "What's the Buzz" top Saliers's shaky "I Don't Know How to Love Him."

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, R.E.M., Simon & Garfunkel
▶▶ Story, disappear fear

David Okamoto

Irish Rovers

Formed 1964, in Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

Jimmy Ferguson (died October 8, 1997), vocals; Joe Millar, accordion, bass; Wilcil McDowell, accordion; Will Millar, vocals, guitar, banjo (1964–present); Wallace Hood, banjo, mandolin, whistle vocals; John Reynolds, banjo; George Millar, guitar; Kevin McKeown, percussion.

The Irish Rovers have been entertaining audiences for more than 30 years with their blend of Celtic folk, barroom novelties, and poignant parables. The Rovers' exuberant, untutored sound bolsters their image as a group of friends who travel the countryside sharing stories, jokes, and songs with their extended family of fans and admirers. The Rovers allow each individual member a moment in the spotlight. Their live show is a guaranteed good time for young and old alike. After moving to Canada from Northern Ireland, brothers George and Will Millar saw the Clancy Brothers with Tommy Makem on The Ed Sullivan Show and were inspired to start their own group. After scuffling in the nascent Celtic scene for a few years, they signed with Decca Records in 1967. The following year they scored their lone Top 10 U.S. hit with the Shel Silverstein–penned classic "The Unicorn," a mythical novelty that remains popular to this day. Several lesser hits followed, such as "Whiskey on a Sunday," "The Puppet Song," "The Biplane Evermore," "Lily the Pink," and "Did She Mention My Name," which were more popular in Canada than in the States, and which led to the Rovers starring in their own weekly TV variety show on CBC from 1971 through 1974. The group moved to Epic records in 1980, where their ode to alcoholic excess "Wasn't That a Party," reached Number 37 on the pop charts and the country music Top 10, and led to their last chart records "Mexican Girl," "Pain in My Past," and "No More Bread and Butter." Will Millar eventually left the group to be replaced by Wallace Hood from Pat's People and Kevin McKeown of Emerald Express. The Celtic music boom combined with the Riverdance craze has revived interest in the Irish Rovers in recent years, and the group has formed their own label where they have recorded new material as well as fresh versions of their classic hits. The death of Jimmy Ferguson (whose powerful vocal illuminates "Wasn't That a Party") temporarily shut down the group's activities, but the Irish Rovers planned to add a new member, and dedicated their entire 1998 world tour to their beloved late partner.

what to buy: All their early hits plus several fan favorites reside happily on Irish Rovers' Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1981/1997, prod. various), a 20-track compilation.

what to buy next: The two-LPs-on-one-disc reissue The First of the Irish Rovers/The Unicorn ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1980/1991, prod. various) gives you a lot of prime Rovers material in one budget offering. Nice.

what to avoid: The guys are in good voice and the production values are top-notch, but be forewarned: The Irish Rovers' Gems ♪♪♪ (Rovers Records, 1996, prod. Irish Rovers) features re-recordings of their best-known songs. The originals are classics.

the rest:
The Unicorn ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1971/1991)
The First of the Irish Rovers ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1971/1991)
The First of the Irish Rovers/The Unicorn ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1971/1996)
Years May Come & Years May Go ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1985/1993)
Celtic Collection: The Next 30 Years ♪♪♪½ (Rovers Records, 1995)
Ramblers & Gamblers ♪♪♪ (Carlton Sounds, 1997)

irish fiddle styles

While all Irish fiddlers play Irish traditional music, they may do so in very different ways, depending on their native district. These differences manifest themselves in various ways. Some have to do with specific fiddling technique, such as bowing, others with features of the music that may be common to other instruments, such as the preferred use of this or that ornament, others still with the repertoire being performed. The main Irish regional styles are, from north to south: Donegal, Sligo, Galway/Clare, Kerry/Cork. With some similarities to Scottish music, the music of Donegal fiddlers is fast-paced, played with insistent, short, single-note bow strokes, little or no swing, and a preference for bowed triplets over fingered ornaments. By contrast, Sligo fiddle music flows with a lilting swing and shows an emphasis on complex fingered ornaments and melodic flourishes. Further south, East Galway and East Clare are home to a strikingly different style of fiddle playing, slow paced and introspective, with an almost bluesy sound, locally called "the lonesome touch." The local fiddle tradition of the Southwest is most remarkable by its unique repertoire of polkas and slides (fast jigs) played for the local sets (dances). With the advent of better communications and of the mass media, regional styles have lost ground to a new hybrid form of playing. However, the recent commercial success of bands and players like Altan (Donegal) and Martin Hayes (East Clare) show that these regional styles have not entirely lost their appeal.

Philippe Varlet

worth searching for: For a jaunty good time seek out Irish Rovers Live ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1972, prod. various), a solid set of laughs and great tunes in front of an enthusiastic live audience.

influences:

◀◀ Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem, Dubliners

▶▶ Scaffold, Chieftains

Ken Burke

Irish Tradition /Brendan Mulvihill & Billy McComiskey

Formed 1975, in Washington, DC. Disbanded 1987.

Brendan Mulvihill (born July 12, 1954, in Northampton, England), fiddle; Billy McComiskey (born December 21, 1951, in New York, NY), button accordion; Andy O'Brien (born July 29, 1947, in Co. Kerry, Ireland), guitar, vocals.

Both as individuals and collectively, the members of the Irish Tradition stand out as some of the most talented and influential musicians in the recent history of Irish music. From their first appearance in 1975, the trio's technical virtuosity and great musical rapport created a surge of interest in Irish music in the Washington, D.C., area and led to the development of an outstanding local music scene. Some of the D.C.-area artists influenced, inspired, or taught by the Irish Tradition include Celtic Thunder, Maggie Sansone, Lisa Moscatiello, Grace Griffith, and Ceoltoiri, among many others. The group's two albums on Green Linnet records, both classics, were consistently that label's biggest sellers during its early years, and provided a base from which that now mighty label could expand to its present lofty heights. Finally, Brendan Mulvihill and Billy McComiskey, as teachers, have introduced new musicians to playing of the highest caliber, and have kept the standards for traditional music high in both Washington, D.C., and New York City.

Mulvihill is an explosive fiddler with tremendous power, grace, and sensitivity in his playing. Growing up in England and New York City, Brendan learned his music from his father, legendary fiddler and music teacher Martin Mulvihill, as well as from the many outstanding musicians he met in both New York and Birmingham, England. Mulvihill won the all-Ireland senior fiddle title in 1974, and moved to Washington, D.C., the following year. He has appeared all over the world, and has influenced many of today's top young musicians, including Eileen Ivers, Joannie Madden, and Natalie MacMaster. McComiskey is an incredibly talented accordionist with a deep sense of what makes traditional music and an incredible virtuosity on his instrument. While growing up in New York City, he learned his music from family members and from the great local box player Sean McGlynn. Billy won the all-Ireland in 1986 and has appeared all over the United States and Ireland as a solo performer and with his current group, Trian. He is a prolific composer of tunes and an outstanding teacher, having instructed or influenced performers as diverse as Celtic harpist Sue Richards, box players John Nolan, Colm Gannon, and Mary Rafferty, and piper Jerry O'Sullivan.

what to buy: The Irish Tradition's The Corner House ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1978, prod. Mick Moloney) features some of the most beautiful note-for-note playing of Irish dance music ever recorded. Billy and Brendan had been playing together every night for years when they recorded this album and it shows in their tight, tasty duet playing. In addition to backing the other two on their virtuoso flights, Andy O'Brien contributes four sweet songs. Finally, the trio's setting of the song "The Dark-Eyed Sailor" shows how powerful and moving a simple song arrangement can be in the hands of master musicians.

what to buy next: McComiskey's Makin' the Rounds ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1981 prod. Mick Moloney, Billy McComiskey) makes a very convincing case that the button accordion, in the right hands, can be as beautiful, expressive, and moving as any other instrument in traditional Irish music. Moving from tunes he learned in his youth from friends and heroes to his own compositions, many of which are now standards, Billy shows the past and present of Irish music. He rocks with the best of them on sets like "Leave My Way" and "The Chicago Reel," and brings a classical refinement to the slow set dance "Planxty Davis." This album is a tour-de-force of box playing. Mulvihill and Donna Long's The Morning Dew ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Joe Wilson, Julia Olin) allows the musical genius to strut his stuff, ably backed by one of the finest piano players around today. Brendan's playing ranges from the ferocious to the elegant, and the sound is as good as any in Green Linnet's history.

the rest:
The Times We've Had ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1985)

solo outings:
Brendan Mulvihill:
The Flax in Bloom ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1979)

worth searching for: Mulvihill and Long's self-produced cassette, The Steeplechase ♪♪♪ (Steeplechase, 1990, prod. Donna Long, Brendan Mulvihill), was the first recording for the pair. The Irish Tradition's first recording, Catchin' the Tune (self-released, 1976, prod. Irish Tradition), is long out of print.

see also: Trian

influences:
◀◀ Martin Mulvihill, Paddy O'Brien, Andy McGann, Jack Coen ▶▶ Cherish the Ladies, Jerry O'Sullivan

Tony Ziselberger

Andy Irvine

Born June 14, 1942, in London, England.

Andy Irvine has the most bittersweet voice in Celtic music. It has that feel of Irish whiskey poured into a glass of hot tea with a couple of large dollops of sugar to sweeten it up. Whether he's singing his own compositions or his arrangements of traditional pieces, it just washes over you, hot and sweet, and then you feel that bite that lurks underneath. Later on you notice that he is a perfectionist, whether playing harmonica, mandolin, or the Irish bouzouki. Finally you'll notice that he is also an excellent songwriter and has written several tunes that seem to have become standards of Irish repertoire, most notably "West Coast of Clare." His impeccable taste and talent have made him the core of three important Irish groups: Sweeney's Men, Planxty, and Patrick Street. Born in London, Irvine was a child actor before developing an interest in jazz and classical music. Like many other musicians in the British Isles, it was through the skiffle music craze that he got interested in traditional music, particularly that of Woody Guthrie. By the early 1960s he was playing in the folk scene in Dublin where his first group, Sweeney's Men, was formed in 1966. The group made several recordings and lasted until he left for Eastern Europe during the turbulent summer of 1968. He spent over a year and half there, busking and absorbing the local music. The influence of that experience began to surface in the music of his next group, Planxty. That band first came together in 1972 while recording an album under Christy Moore's name. They rapidly became an extremely popular group, both in Ireland and elsewhere in Europe. The group lasted in one form or another until 1975, making several excellent recordings along the way. After Planxty, Irvine worked for a while with Paul Brady, with whom he made one highly acclaimed album and toured in Europe and the States. Shortly after that, he began to work with the musicians who comprise Patrick Street. While nowhere near the groundbreaking group Planxty, Patrick Street makes its mark with the extremely high-quality craftsmanship that it brings to traditional Irish music. Irvine's more adventurous side can be found in his solo efforts and his joint collaborations with Dick Gaughan, Davy Spillane, and others.

what to buy: Andy Irvine & Paul Brady ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1976/Green Linnet, prod. Donal Lunny) might be the finest single record of Irish music available. These recordings were made after the demise of ground-breaking group Planxty, of which Irvine had been a founding member and Brady had joined as a replacement for Christy Moore. The arrangements here have a grittier sound than Planxty, with Kevin Burke's fiddle replacing the role piper Liam O'Flynn played in the Planxty sound. There are more of the Balkan elements that Irvine had begun to introduce in Planxty, like the 7/8 break that transforms the middle of "The Plains of Kildare." Brady's innovative open-tuned guitar work is highlighted throughout, but nowhere like on his show-stopping "Arthur McBride." But the real magic of this record is the contrast between the voices of the two men. Irvine's bitter-sweet voice curls around songs like a fog while Brady's full-throated charge never sounded better than on this recording.

what to buy next: Rude Awakening ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Bill Whelan) spotlights Irvine's songwriting, which is normally less visible in the more traditional settings like Patrick Street, where his instrumental prowess and singing of traditional songs is emphasized. This is a concept album, with the concept being that Irvine has selected his favorite heroes and anti-heroes to write about. His talent for setting traditional words and music in a contemporary context are still here, both in "James Connolly" and "Allan McLean," but his heroes are of a more international lot: Woody Guthrie, Raoul Wallenberg, and Zapata. The combination of topic and tradition is reminiscent of Dick Gaughan, someone with whom Irvine had recorded several years earlier.

the rest:

(With Dick Gaughan) Parallel Lines ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1983/Appleseed, 1997)
(With Davy Spillane) East Wind ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1991)
Corner Boys ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1996)
Made in Cork ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997)

worth searching for: Planxty ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1972, prod. Phil Coulter) was Planxty's first record and worth seeking for several reasons. First, because it was a ground breaking record and well worth the search just for that reason, but secondly because it has Irvine's "The West Coast of Clare," which is one of his finer compositions.

influences:

◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Davey Graham, Seamus Ennis

▶▶ Pogues, Eileen Ivers, Seamus Egan

see also: Planxty, Paul Brady, Patrick Street, Dick Gaughan, Sweeney's Men

Jared Snyder

Barney Isaacs & George Kuo

See: George Kuo

Eileen Ivers

Born 1965, in the Bronx, NY.

No sooner had Eileen Ivers established herself as one of the finest traditional Irish fiddlers of her generation than she transcended that circumscribed world to tour the world, first with Hall & Oates and then with the Riverdance stage musical. Ivers grew up in the Bronx, where she studied with the legendary Irish fiddler Martin Mulvihill; she was only 14 when she first recorded, on an anthology of Mulvihill's students. She went on to win seven All-Ireland Championships on the fiddle, including the coveted Senior Championship in 1984. She was a member of the all-female Irish folk band, Cherish the Ladies, and accompanied many of the top Irish-American folk musicians, including Mick Moloney and Seamus Egan. She recorded a duet album with accordionist John Whelan in 1987. In 1990 she was recruited to play on Hall & Oates's Change of Season album and to accompany them on the subsequent tour. She released her debut solo album in 1993; collaborated with composer Mícheál Ó Súilleabháin on his Irish TV series River of Sound; joined the New York Celtic-rap-rock band, Paddy a Go-Go; and became a featured soloist in Riverdance. In every venture, Ivers's trad-fiddle virtuosity has been evident, but she has not been reluctant about combining her Irish roots with African drums, hip-hop rhythms, Broadway orchestration, and anything else that might catch her fancy.

what to buy: The best introduction to Ivers's work is the single-CD anthology, So Far: The Eileen Ivers Collection, 1979–1995 ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Kevin Yatarola), which features tracks from both solo albums, the duo album with Whelan, the Mulvihill School album, plus her appearances on the Riverdance soundtrack, a Cherish the Ladies album, a multiple-artist concert recording, and Jerry O'Sullivan's "The Invasion." It's a wonderfully diverse assemblage of music, but Ivers's surpassing technique and fearless chance-taking are evident throughout. The debut album Eileen Ivers ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Gabriel Donohue, Eileen Ivers) finds the fiddler in transition between her traditional training and her bold experiments into the future of the Celtic fiddle, and she excels at both.

what to buy next: Wild Blue ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Tom "T-Bone" Wolk, Eileen Ivers) is named after the varnished color and uninhibited sound of Ivers's violin. Ivers experiments with all sorts of drums, bass, and keyboards, but she never loses her foundation in traditional Celtic forms and pure violin tone. Fresh Takes ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1987, prod. Mick Moloney) is a lovely, all-instrumental album built around the musical dialogues between Ivers's fiddle and Whelan's button accordion, though the Bothy Band's Triona Ni Dhomhnaill adds synthesizer and clavinet to half the cuts.

influences:

Martin Mulvihill, Brendan Mulvihill, Eugene O'Donnell

Natalie MacMaster

Geoffrey Himes

Burl Ives

Born June 14, 1909, in Jasper County, IL. Died April 14, 1995.

Burl Ives fits comfortably into the title of "Renaissance Man," as his contributions to entertainment far exceeded music. Ives fairly well mastered all media, landing theatrical roles on Broadway, hosting his own CBS radio show during the 1940s, and starring in several movies. He also compiled a number of books on folk songs and folk traditions. But as a singer and interpreter of folk music, particularly ballads, Ives enjoyed his most consistent success. Bearded, burly, and definitely benign, he projected a friendly, almost grandfatherly (even as a young man) image. The persona matched the vocal style, so fluid as to seem effortless. Ives learned folk traditions from his family, who handed down songs and anecdotes to him as a youth. He carried many of those same tunes with him to New York during the 1930s, where he had decided to stake his claim. The Village Vanguard in Greenwich Village hired him, but Ives correctly noted that better money could be made on the stage. During the 1930s and 1940s he performed on Broadway in Ah, Wilderness and I Married an Angel, among others. In 1940 Ives had a popular hit, "The Wayfaring Stranger," which subsequently became the title of his own show on CBS radio. The program featured Ives and guests in a mostly musical format. Also during the early 1940s, Ives produced and starred in a folk-song revue, Sing Out, Sweet Land. He won acclaim for his renditions of "Foggy Foggy Dew," "Blue Tail Fly," and other standards, furthering the Ives reputation. In 1945 he performed his first major concert to a sellout crowd at New York's Town Hall. The following year, he appeared with folk and blues legend Josh White in a full-length film about folk music. Ives scored his first breakthrough on the national record charts in 1948 with a rendition of "Blue Tail Fly." In 1949 he charted in the Top 30 with "Lavender Blue," leading to his first album that year, The Wayfaring Stranger. That was followed closely by The Return of the Wayfaring Stranger the same year. The overused term "prolific" was nearly understatement when applied to Burl Ives. In 1958 alone, he released four albums for Decca: Down to the Sea in Ships, Folk Songs Dramatic and Humorous, Old Time Varieties, and Christmas Eve with Burl Ives. His big year for singles came in 1962, when two Ives recordings, "A Little Bitty Tear" and "Funny Way of Laughin'," dented both the pop and country charts. "Call Me Mr. In-Between," written by Nashville titan Harlan Howard, hit #3 on the country charts that year. The gruff-but-kindly Ives charisma, coupled with his distinct speaking voice, made him a near-natural for movies. In 1954 he starred in a revival of Showboat, then picked up supporting parts in three 1958 films: Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, Desire under the Elms, and The Big Country. His portrayal of Rufus in The Big Country earned him an Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor. Acting accolades failed to interfere with his first love, music. Ives continued to record folk material during the 1960s, but also took a serious country turn during that era. His album Funny Way of Laughin' made extensive use of Nashville-based writers. Mel Tillis had four cuts on the album, while Roger Miller contributed "I Ain't Comin' Home Tonight." Top Music Row producer Owen Bradley was at the helm for Big Country Hits, in which Ives reprised such country favorites as "Cold, Cold Heart," "Devil Woman," and "Heartaches by the Number." Ives's contributions to the popularity and preservation of folk music were numerous. His most lasting gift is perhaps the six-record Historical America in Song, produced for Encyclopedia Britannica Films. Ives took folk music to the mainstream, while never neglecting its roots.

what to buy: Greatest Hits! ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1996, prod. Owen Bradley) is one grand collection, from "Little Bitty Tear" and "Funny Way of Laughin'" to his live rendition of "Blue Tail Fly," recorded at the Coronation Concert in London in 1954. Most of the material was cut in Nashville.

what to avoid: Christmas Album ♪ (Columbia, 1997) is standard fare, not even close to the far merrier Have a Holly Jolly Christmas ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1996).

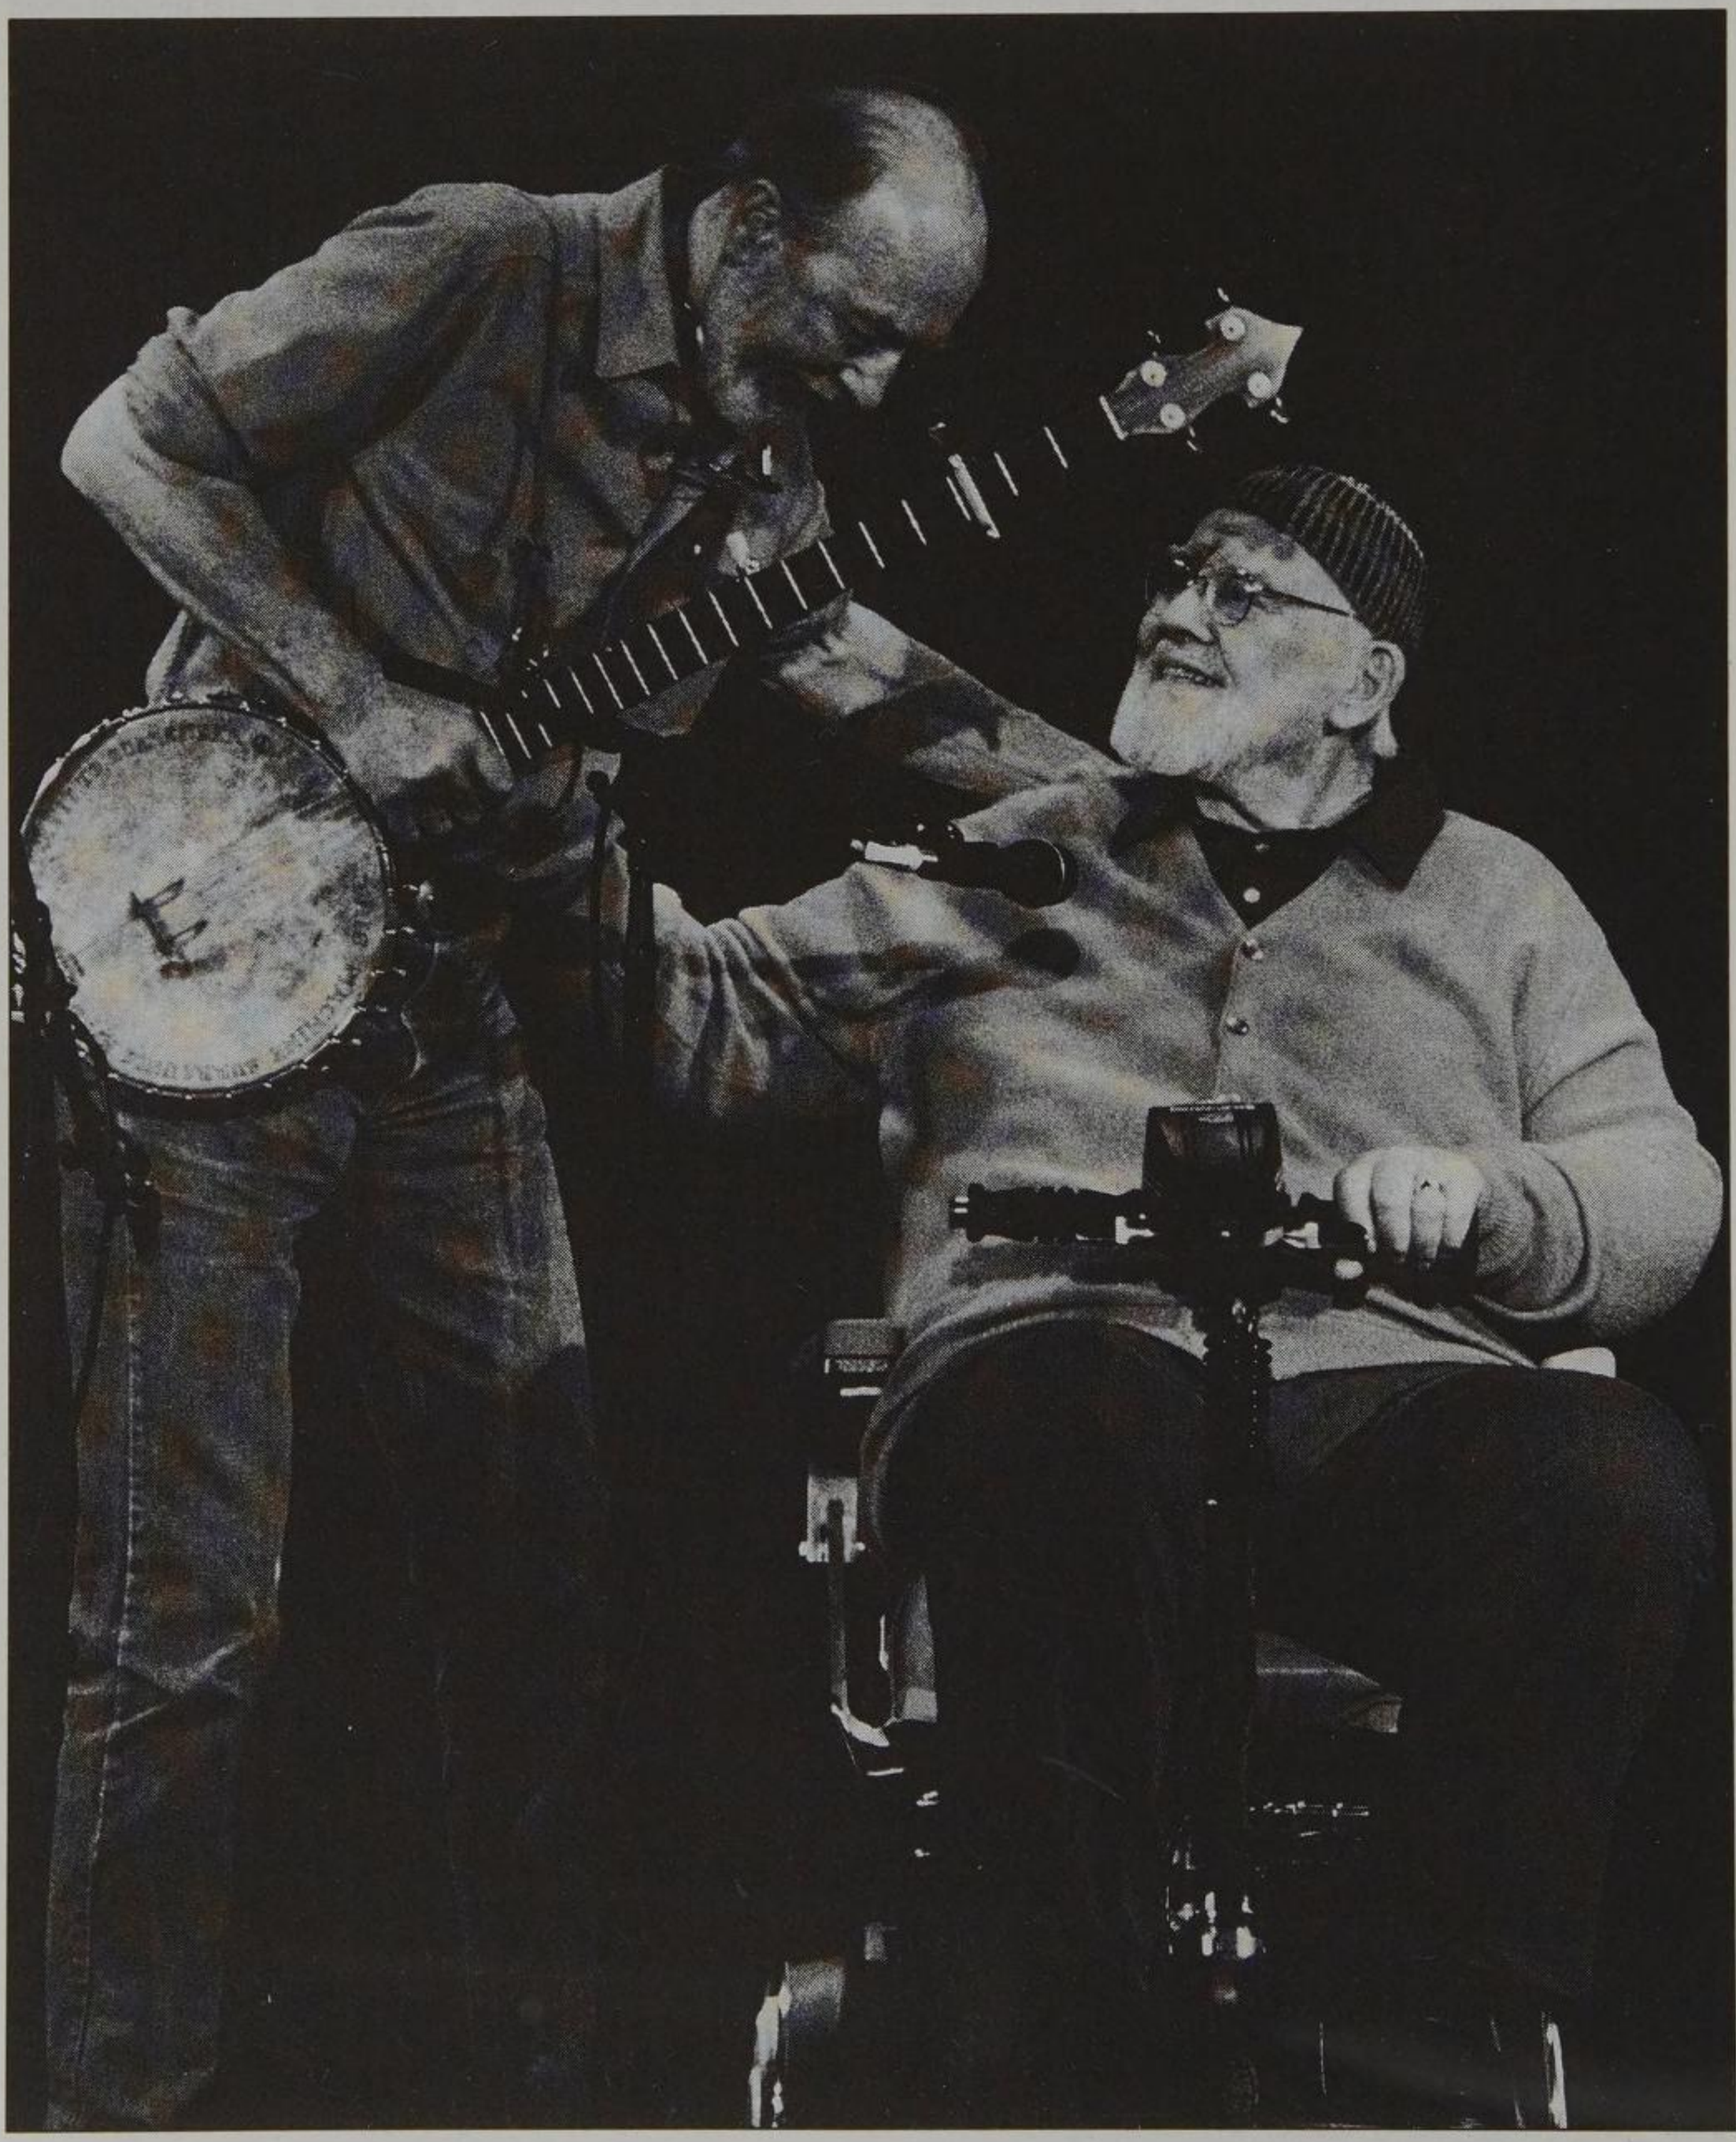
the rest:

The Best of Burl Ives for Boys and Girls ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1987)
At His Best ♪♪♪ (Special Music Company, 1993)
A Little Bitty Tear ♪♪♪½ (MCA Special Products, 1995)
In Memoriam ♪♪♪½ (Legacy, 1995)
Sings His Favorites ♪♪♪ (Collector's Edition, 1996)
Poor Wandering Stranger ♪♪♪½ (Pearl Flapper, 1996)
Some of the Best ♪♪♪½ (Laserlight, 1996)
More of the Best ♪♪♪ (Laserlight, 1996)

burl ives



Little Bitty Tear ♪♪♪♪ (Members Edition, 1997)
Burl Ives Sings ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1997)

worth searching for: Among Ives's early recordings worth looking up are The Wayfaring Stranger ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1949/1960) and Songs of the West ♪♪♪♪ (Decca, 1968, prod. Milt Gabler). Payin' My Dues Again ♪♪♪ (1972, MCA, prod. Milt Gabler) is best-known for the title cut, reportedly one of Ives's favorites. Funny Way of Laughin' ♪♪♪♪ (Decca, 1962, prod. Milt Gabler) features the title single, plus songs from the pens of Mel Tillis and Roger Miller. Coronation Concert ♪♪♪♪ (Decca, 1953) was recorded live in London.

influences:

◀◀ Jimmie Rodgers, Woody Guthrie

▶▶ Roger Miller, Ramblin' Jack Elliott, Chad Mitchell Trio, Peter, Paul & Mary

Bob Paxman

J

Carl Jackson

Born September 18, 1953.

Multi-instrumentalist Carl Jackson (banjo, guitar, mandolin, dobro, fiddle) was hired at age 14 by Jim and Jesse McReynolds to become one of their Virginia Boys. After five years with Jim and Jesse he worked for the bluegrass gospel group the Sullivan Family, and then was in Glen Campbell's band for 12 years. Jackson also recorded solo albums for Capitol during the 1970s, Columbia during the 1980s, and three albums for Sugar Hill during the early 1990s. He is a much-in-demand session player and harmony singer and has had considerable success as a songwriter, both in country and bluegrass; he co-wrote Vince Gill's #3 hit "No Future in the Past" in 1993, and his bluegrass gospel number, "Little Mountain Church House," has rapidly achieved standard status in that realm.

what's available: Spring Training ♪♪♪½ (1991, Sugar Hill, prod. Carl Jackson, John Starling), Jackson's 1991 collaboration with longtime Seldom Scene vocalist and guitarist John Starling and Emmylou Harris's acoustic band the Nash Ramblers, received the 1991 Best Bluegrass Album Grammy.

influences:

◀◀ Earl Scruggs, Jim & Jesse

▶▶ Ricky Skaggs, Herb Pedersen

Randy Pitts

John Jackson

Born February 25, 1924, in Woodville, VA.

A talented singer and guitarist who playfully and lovingly reproduces bouncy classics like "The Midnight Special," John Jackson continues to show Washington, D.C., audiences why the music of Blind Blake and Blind Boy Fuller is so timeless. He performs (frequently with James, his son) in the traditional rickety rhythms and sing-song vocals of the East Coast Piedmont style. Jackson learned guitar and banjo as a child in Virginia by listening to 78s and paying attention when guitarists like Willie Walker visited his father's house. Though a popular performer at house parties in Rappahannock County, in 1951 he started work as a gravedigger to pay the bills. The 1960s folk revival gave him more clout as a performer, which he continues to use to this day, nailing down European festivals, album deals, and, of course, continuous nightclub bookings in the D.C. area.

what to buy: Jackson's folk music, by turns serious and goofy, comes across in a warm, friendly style on Blues and Country Dance Tunes from Virginia ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1965), an excellent document of the Piedmont tradition played by a surviving master.

what to buy next: Step It up & Go ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1979) is more ragtime than blues, and also includes lots of hillbilly and folk tunes.

the rest:

John Jackson in Europe ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1969)
Don't Let Your Deal Go Down ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1970)
More Blues and Country Dance Songs ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1971)

influences:

◀◀ Willie Walker, Blind Blake, Blind Boy Fuller, Leadbelly, Jesse Fuller

▶▶ Cephas & Wiggins, Keb' Mo'

Steve Knopper

Burl Ives (r) with Pete Seeger (© Jack Vartoogian)

scott jackson

Scott Jackson

Born January 1, 1964, in Cleburne, TX.

Scott Jackson has been playing hammered dulcimer since 1985 and has even assisted in building the instruments with David Lindsey, a luthier from Alvarado, Texas, who builds "monster"-sized dulcimers with a floating soundboard and special side bridges. Scott's repertoire focuses on old time music, enjoying fiddle tunes on his big dulcimers as well as the slow, pretty tunes. He is usually accompanied by Todd Noyes who plays an excellent rhythm guitar, but they also enjoy swapping leads, which demonstrates Scott's ability to play interesting backup on the dulcimer.

what's available: Shanty Tunes ♪♪♪♪ (self-released, 1996) is a collection of old time tunes played with both imagination and skill, featuring the hammered dulcimer in a tight ensemble sound. The musicianship by all is impeccable, the tunes really swing, and the arrangements are extremely well planned. Tune selections include medleys of such well-loved dance tunes as "Liberty/Soldiers Joy/Rosetree" and "Missouri/Blackberry Blossom/Down the Brae" as well as "The Children Still Sing," a tune by Dana Hamilton. The supporting musicians include Todd Noyes (guitar), Shanda McDonald (fiddle), Dana Hamilton (mountain dulcimer, guitar), Betty Odum (banjo, mountain dulcimer, pennywhistle), Jean Roberts (bass), Mark Abbott (bass), and Annette Lindsey (piano). The band is hard-driving with each musician taking a turn in the spotlight, managing to keep the tempo danceable by not playing too fast. Shanty Tunes is available from the artist at Box 71, Alvarado, Texas 76009.

influences:

◀◀ Dana Hamilton, Bill Spence, Walt Michael

▶▶ Rick Thum, Kendra Ward-Bence

Heidi Cerrigione

Tommy Jackson

Born March 31, 1925, in Birmingham, AL. Died December 9, 1979.

Nashville's first great session fiddler, Tommy Jackson grew up in Nashville listening to the Grand Ole Opry. A child prodigy, he went on tour with Johnny Wright and Kitty Wells at age 12; by the time he was 17, Jackson appeared regularly on the Opry with Curly Williams and His Georgia Peach Pickers. After World War II he became a member of Red Foley's Cumberland Valley Boys (guitarist Zeke Turner, steel player Jerry Byrd, and rhythm guitarist Louis Innes), who became the first great "A" team of studio musicians in Nashville. During this period Jackson played fiddle on countless country classics, including Hank Williams's "I Saw the Light" and "Lovesick Blues" and Foley's "Satisfied Mind." The Cumberland Valley Boys then moved to Cincinnati in 1948, became the Pleasant Valley Boys, and continued to do studio work, primarily for King Records, while remaining Foley's band. Jackson began cutting records under his own name in Cincinnati, capitalizing on the then-current square-dance craze. He recorded first for Mercury, then signed a long-term contract with Dot Records and made 11 albums for them. He broke with Foley and, from 1954 on, made his living exclusively as a studio musician, pretty much inventing, then refining and redefining, standard country backup fiddle style. Jackson was the most imitated country fiddler of the time, and popularized the shuffle fiddle sound heard to great effect on the vastly influential recordings of Ray Price, among countless others.

what's available: Lamentably, the only currently available examples of Jackson's incredibly influential lead fiddle style are the 10 tunes on Good Old Fiddle Music ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1995). Titles include "Little Ida Red," "Bitter Creek Breakdown," "Acorn Hill Breakdown," "Big Sandy," "Snowflake Breakdown," "Stay a Little Longer," and "Done Gone."

worth searching for: Two of Jackson's instrumental albums served as primers for fledgling bluegrass fiddlers during the bluegrass boom of the 1950s. They were Greatest Bluegrass Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Dot, 1962) and Square Dances without Calls ♪♪♪♪ (Decca, 1959).

influences:

◀◀ Fiddling Arthur Smith, George Wilkerson

▶▶ Gordon Terry, Vassar Clements

Randy Pitts

Kate Jacobs

Born January 11, 1959, in Alexandria, VA.

A winsome folkie with a melancholy streak, Kate Jacobs can sing about loss and regret with the best of them, but her ability to occasionally express contentment, happiness, and love truly sets her apart. After all, who writes songs about feeling good anymore? Jacobs's songs are as fully fleshed-out as quality fiction, but her lilting, girlish voice lifts them off the page. Backed by an austere, three-piece band, Jacobs comes off as an East Coast answer to Iris DeMent. (The Calm Comes After even contains a song about DeMent, "Iris Has Faith.") Jacobs's EP A Sister is a companion recording to her children's book, A Sister's Wish (Hyperion, 1994).

John Jackson (© Jack Vartoogian)

what to buy: On the surface, What about Regret ♪♪♪♪½ (Bar/None, 1995, prod. Gary Arnold, Kate Jacobs, others) seems straightforward and breezy, but look a little closer and you'll find some of the richest, most complex songs written during the last decade. "See the Moon" seems to be about an old couple planning a dinner party, until you realize what they're contemplating is double suicide. Even the slightest songs, such as "Indiana," are carried along on such beautiful melodies that they seem instantly memorable. And there's even a touch of comic relief in "Three Years in Nebraska," about marijuana farming during the 1970s, and "A Sister," about a girl with too many brothers and no one on her side.

the rest:
The Calm Comes After ♪♪♪½ (Bar/None, 1993)
A Sister ♪♪♪ (Bar/None EP, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Nanci Griffith, Dolly Parton

Daniel Durchholz

Skip James

Born Nehemiah Curtis James, June 9, 1902, in Bentonia, MS. Died October 3, 1969, in Philadelphia, PA.

It's an incredible American tragedy that Skip James did not play blues concerts or make recordings from 1931 to 1964. But there's not much point in once again ripping early-century racism or the music industry for derailing James's career after Paramount put out 18 of his eerie, wonderfully sung and subtly played country-blues songs. James, a major talent, grew frustrated with music and became a gospel singer, touring with his father's revival show throughout the South and eventually becoming a minister. The often ill-tempered James, who did not suffer fools, had been in a Tunica, Mississippi, hospital in 1964 when John Fahey and two other blues historians tracked him down and persuaded him back into blues. (It should be noted that James was not always in a bad mood; he welcomed reverential young musicians and fans backstage and thrilled them by introducing them to friends such as Son House and Bukka White.) That was when James's career, 30 years too late, began to take off—his high-pitched, effortlessly lonesome vocals and haunting, textured acoustic guitar playing established him as one of the most reliable festival performers throughout the 1960s. Eric Clapton, among many others, took notice and stuck a bombastic version of "I'm So Glad" on one of Cream's million-selling classic rock albums, giving James serious royalty payments just before he died. James was responsible for some of this century's best popular songs—"Drunken Spree," "Devil Got My Woman," "Worried Blues," "Catfish" and, of course, "I'm So Glad." More important, like the more posthumously heralded Robert Johnson, James contributed a key haunting, moaning soul to American music. We're lucky James, unlike Johnson, hung around long enough so he could receive at least a fraction of his deserved popularity.

what to buy: Of 26 Paramount sides James was said to have recorded in 1929, 18 survive—and they're compiled on the absolutely essential Complete Early Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Yazoo, 1994). James's guitar-plucking style is more enthusiastic and pronounced than his 1960s recordings, but his voice is the main attraction; he sings like nobody else, smoother than Robert Johnson and grittier than Sam Cooke, but the direct or indirect inspiration behind them both. This collection includes definitive versions of "Drunken Spree," "22-20 Blues," "I'm So Glad" and "Devil Got My Woman."

what to buy next: There are many 1960s James recordings to choose from, so go with an original, Today! ♪♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1965/1988), in which James's guitar playing has slowed down but his voice seems richer and more textured. Another excellent document is Greatest of the Delta Blues Singers ♪♪♪♪½ (Biograph, 1992, prod. Arnold S. Caplin), James's first studio sessions after his legendary 1964 Newport Folk Festival appearance.

what to avoid: It's hard to go wrong with James's albums, but after the essential stuff his 1960s material gets somewhat repetitive; Devil Got My Woman ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1968/1988) is the least important. Also, the great Complete 1931 Session ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1986) has been displaced on the market by the better Complete Early Recordings.

the rest:
Complete Recorded Works (1931) ♪♪♪ (Document, 1994)
Live 1964 & '66 (Document, 1994)
Skip's Piano Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Genes, 1996)

worth searching for: She Lyin' ♪♪♪♪♪ (Genes, 1964/1993, prod. John Fahey, Ed Denson, Bill Barth) was once hard to find, sitting inexplicably in the vaults for years until its recent reissue.

influences:

◀◀ Tommy Johnson, Charley Patton, Son House

▶▶ Robert Johnson, Muddy Waters, Sam Cooke, Eric Clapton, Charles Brown, Art Tatum, Charlie Parker, B.B. King

Steve Knopper

Bert Jansch

Born November 3, 1943, in Glasgow, Scotland.

Calling Bert Jansch one of the important figures in British folk music is an extreme understatement. Jansch's first record, Bert Jansch, was one of those seminal records—like Doc Watson—that seemed to have been worn out by every guitarist during the 1960s. Neil Young says that Jansch's impact on the acoustical guitar was equal to that of Hendrix on the electric and not many would argue the point. Young even credited him on the back of the Buffalo Springfield's Buffalo Springfield Again. Jansch had the most direct influence on Donovan, who could be called Jansch's protege. Jansch played some lead guitar on Donovan's first album and his "Bert's Blues" is included on Sunshine Superman and "The House of Jansch" on Mellow Yellow. Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page admits to an obsession with Jansch and it shows on Zeppelin's "Black Mountain Side" that lifts straight from Jansch's "Black Water Side." Born in Scotland, Jansch moved to London in his teens and became part of the early folk scene there. His guitar playing mixed elements of both classical style and American blues with the inflections from the traditional music of the British Isles. He was also writing his own material and singing in a gruff but effective voice. By the time he recorded his second LP, It Don't Bother Me, he had begun working with the only other guitarist in Britain on his level: John Renbourn. The initial collaboration grew to a highly regarded duet record Bert and John and laid the foundation for the British folk rock group Pentangle. This five-member group joined Jansch and Renbourn with vocalist Jacqui McShee and the rhythm section of Danny Thompson and Terry Cox. Their first three albums—Sweet Child, The Pentangle, and Basket of Light—show a wide diversity of styles and influences being melded together. Perhaps no folk group had a greater appreciation of the swing of jazz and found a way to integrate it into a traditional sound. Certainly no band swung so hard so quietly. After Pentangle's breakup, Jansch continued writing and recording, sometimes with Renbourn and occasionally with a re-formed Pentangle. While his catalog of recordings has continued to grow, his recordings from the '60s remain the most popular.

what to buy: The compilation The Best of Bert Jansch ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1980, prod. Nathan Joseph) offers the listener an excellent place to begin with the music of Bert Jansch. The tunes are picked from his 1960s output, covering the best tracks from his first record Bert Jansch, including the influential traditional tune "Black Water Side" and his own "Needle of Death" that Neil Young rewrote as "Ambulance Blues" on his On the Beach LP. There is also an example of Jansch's longtime fascination with the music of jazz bassist Charles Mingus, "Alice's Wonderland."

what to buy next: It's nice to have Bert Jansch/It Don't Bother Me ♪♪♪♪♪ (Essential, 1996, prod. Bill Leader) cleaned up and on one CD. This brings together the first two records Jansch made. It may be a little hard, considering all of the guitarists who've emulated Jansch, to realize how there really was nothing like this before this record appeared on the scene. Get it and put it next to your copy of Doc Watson or The Free Wheelin' Bob Dylan, and you'll be very happy.

the rest:

Bert Jansch ♪♪♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1965)
It Don't Bother Me ♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1965)
Jack Orion ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1966)
Early Bert, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Xtra, 1966)
(With John Renbourn) Bert & John ♪♪♪♪½ (Transatlantic, 1966)
Nicola ♪♪♪ (Demon, 1967)
Lucky Thirteen ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1969)
Birthday Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (Demon, 1969)
Stepping Stones ♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1969)
Sampler ♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1969)
Rosemary Lane ♪♪½ (Reprise, 1971)
Box of Love ♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1972)
Moonshine ♪♪ (Reprise, 1973)
L.A. Turnaround ♪♪ (Charisma, 1974)
Santa Barbara Honeymoon ♪♪ (Charisma, 1975)
Rare Conundrum ♪♪½ (Charisma, 1977)
Guitar of Bert Jansch ♪♪♪½ (Transatlantic, 1977)
Anthology ♪♪♪½ (Transatlantic, 1978)
Avocet ♪♪½ (Charisma, 1979)
13 Down ♪♪½ (Kicking Mule, 1980)
Heartbreak ♪♪ (Hannibal, 1982)
From the Outside ♪♪ (Mausoleum, 1985)
Strolling down the Highway ♪♪½ (Transatlantic, 1986)
Essential Collection, Volume 1 ♪♪♪½ (Transatlantic, 1987)
Leather Launderette ♪♪ (Black Crow, 1988)
Ornament Tree ♪♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1990)
Sketches ♪♪♪ (Temple Music, 1990)
After the Dance ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1992)
BBC Radio 1 in Concert ♪♪♪ (Windsong, 1993)
When the Circus Comes to Town ♪♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1995)

Nicola/Birthday Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (Transatlantic, 1995)
Collection ♪♪♪♪½ (Castle, 1995)
Live at the 12 Bar ♪♪♪ (Jansch, 1996)
Jack Orion/Nicola ♪♪♪♪ (Castle, 1997)
Birthday Blues/Rosemary Lane ♪♪♪♪½ (Castle, 1997) Gardener: Essential 1965–1971 ♪♪♪♪½ (Demon, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ A.L. Lloyd, Ewan McColl, Charles Mingus, Davey Graham ▶▶ Martin Simpson, Richard Thompson

see also: Pentangle, John Renbourn, Stefan Grossman

Jared Snyder

Tommy Jarrell

Born 1901, in Surry County, NC. Died 1985, in Spray, NC.

Tommy Jarrell was born and raised in Surry County, North Carolina. He lived in the area known as Round Peak, which was rich in the regional music style. This area was isolated from most outside influences due to the lack of decent roads in and out of town, a fact that caused the regional styles to flourish. Jarrell's father, Ben, was the fiddler for Da Costa Woltz and His Southern Broadcasters, an old-time string band that recorded nine 78s for Gennett in 1927. Because of this Jarrell grew up around music. Picking up an instrument and having dad teach you some tunes wasn't as easy as you might expect, however, since Jarrell had 10 brothers and sisters. Jarrell watched his father "like a hawk," though, and started to play the banjo when he was eight. Later, when he was 14, he bought a fiddle with money he had won gambling. After Jarrell was married, he got a full-time job with the state working on the highways that were being built. He played fiddle on most nights and weekends, but it wasn't until he retired in 1966 that he really became known to people outside of his immediate surroundings. It was around that time that his son, B.F., was working as a DJ in Durham, North Carolina, and met Alan Jabbour. Alan was then a member of the Hollow Rock String Band, but later went on to head up the American Folklife Division of the Library of Congress. B.F. told Jabbour about his father and they took a trip back to Surry County to record him. The rest of Jarrell's years were spent playing fiddle and banjo with the young enthusiastic old-time musicians who sought him out at fiddler's conventions. Before Tommy's death in 1985, he was awarded the National Heritage Fellowship Award.

what to buy: Sail Away Ladies ♪♪♪♪♪ (County, 1998, prod. Barry Poss) is the best introduction to the music of Tommy Jarrell. While going quickly out of print, County had plans to release it on CD soon. This album is also special because it contains spoken introductions by Jarrell that give some insight into the tunes. Also worth noting is that the entire album was recorded with just Jarrell and his fiddle; no backing band. If you love old-time music—particularly the fiddle—then there is hardly a better recording to suit your fancy. Tommy & Fred: Best Fiddle-Banjo Duets Played by Tommy Jarrell & Fred Cockerham ♪♪♪♪♪ (County, 1992, prod. Ray Alden) is a fabulous recording compiled from recordings made in the mid-'60s (and released by County) when Tommy and Fred Cockerham got together with Oscar Jenkins to try to recreate Da Costa Woltz's Southern Broadcasters. The remaining cuts on this CD were recorded by Ray Alden and Dave Spilkia "for the sheer enjoyment of the music." With it you can hear two of the best old-time musicians ever to come out of Surry County, North Carolina playing together on many of the best-loved tunes of the area. No old-time music collection is complete without either of these two recordings.

the rest:
Rainbow Sign ♪♪♪♪♪ (County) cassette only
(With Kyle Creed) Old-Time Fiddling & Clawhammer Banjo ♪♪♪♪♪ (Heritage)

worth searching for: Jarrell recorded several LPs, none of which are currently in print. Should you find any of them at your local garage sale, buy them. They include: Back Home in the Blue Ridge ♪♪♪♪½ (County), Down at the Cider Mill ♪♪♪♪½ (County), Stay All Night ♪♪♪♪½ (County), and June Apple ♪♪♪♪½ (Mountain).

influences:
◀◀ Ben Jarrell, Charlie Lowe, Houston Galyean, Zack Paine
▶▶ Bruce Molsky, Ray Alden, Camp Creek Boys, Brad Leftwich

Steve Gardner

Blind Lemon Jefferson

Born reportedly as Lemon Jefferson, July 11, 1897, in Couchman, TX. Died December 1929, in Chicago, IL.

Blind Lemon Jefferson roamed thousands of miles and packed 100 recordings into his abbreviated 32 years, enough to establish himself as the first great male blues star of the 1920s and a man whose success set the standard for generations who followed. Corpulent, blinking out at the world through wire-rimmed spectacles, Jefferson's unmistakable keening voice and odd, stop/start strumming reportedly sold thousands of copies of Paramount 78s. The record company issued 43 records, rare for a blues artist of that time. Jefferson was such an admired figure among his peers that blues titans like Leadbelly and T-Bone Walker talked reverently about leading Jefferson around Dallas for street performances. Titles and stanzas from his songs have found their way into the blues lexicon for decades. Among the most familiar: "That Black Snake Moan"; "Matchbox Blues" (later a standard for Albert King and Carl Perkins); "Easy Rider Blues"; and the solemn "See That My Grave Is Kept Clean" (adapted by Bob Dylan). Little is known about Jefferson's early years; he seemed to have appeared out of nowhere, a fully formed bluesman, on the streets of Dallas. Described by other musicians as an independent sort who equipped himself with both a cane and a gun, Jefferson could reportedly identify paper bills by feeling them in his hands. Brought to Paramount's attention by a Dallas retailer in 1925, Jefferson was an overnight success. Paramount treated him the way big labels now pamper gangsta rappers, buying him a new Ford equipped with a chauffeur. Jefferson had the repertoire to back up their confidence in him, able to trot out Texas specialties like "Mean Jumper Blues" or cover Leroy Carr's "How Long How Long." Commuting between Dallas and Chicago, where he recorded, Jefferson apparently found work as a porter during lean times. He was in Chicago for the harsh winter of 1929, dying under mysterious circumstances in the middle of a snowstorm. Some accounts maintain he froze to death; others insist he collapsed of a heart attack in his car and was abandoned there by his chauffeur. However he died, Jefferson left a motherlode of recordings and some of the most influential songs ever recorded.

what to buy: The four discs of Blind Lemon Jefferson: Complete Works 1926–29 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Document, 1991, prod. Johnny Parth) contain all of Jefferson's known efforts. Most are surprisingly clear-sounding, considering the fact that the Paramount 78s tended to scratch and wear out quickly. It is hard to choose a favorite among the four, but the third disc, which covers 1928, has better sound than the earlier volumes and a wide variety of fine performances, including "Grave." Blind Lemon Jefferson ♪♪♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1992, prod. Orrin Keepnews) is the best single-disc representation of Jefferson's work, ranging from 1926 to 1929 and including "Black Snake Moan," "Matchbox Blues," and 23 other cuts. The sound is as good as early-1990s technology can provide.

what to avoid: Penitentiary Blues ♪♪ (Collectables, 1994) offers a stingy sampling of Jefferson with mushy sound and haphazard notes. An afterthought.

the rest:
King of the Country Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Yazoo, 1990)
Moanin' All Over ♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Mamie Smith, Bessie Smith
▶▶ T-Bone Walker, Lightnin' Hopkins, Albert King, B.B. King, Carl Perkins, Bob Dylan

Steve Braun

Ella Jenkins

Born 1925, in St. Louis, MO.

Ella Jenkins is one of the prime originators of children's music. In the four decades since her debut album, the Chicago-based folklorist and performer has produced more than 25 additional albums of game songs, rhythmic exercises, and folk songs from around the globe and continued to enrich the musical tradition of her youngest listeners.

The music of different cultures has been a powerful tool for Jenkins. The daughter of a domestic, Jenkins, who grew up on Chicago's South Side, used songs and rhythms as a youth worker after graduating from San Francisco Sate College with a major in sociology. By the early 1950s she was attracting attention in Chicago folk clubs. On the strength of a four-song demo, she was signed by Folkways in 1956 and released her first album on the label. Her 1966 album, You Sing a Song and I'll Sing a Song, remains the biggest-selling album in the label's history. Jenkins, who continues to record for Smithsonian/Folkways, has released two videos, Ella Jenkins Live at the Smithsonian and Ella Jenkins for the Family. Jenkins, who pioneered the use of call-and-response in children's music, hosted her own children's television program in Chicago from 1964 to 1965.

what to buy: You Sing a Song and I'll Sing a Song ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1966/Smithsonian Folkways, 1989) remains one of the best-selling children's music recordings of all time. Joined by members of the Urban Gateways Children's Chorus, Jenkins leads the way for an exploration of the world's folk music. Spanish songs ("Dulce Dulce"), Hebrew songs ("Cadima" and "Shabot Shalom"), and New Zealand Indian chants ("Maori Indian Battle Chant") are successfully balanced by African American tunes ("The Train," "Did You Feed My Cow?," and "Guide Me"). The folk tune "Miss Mary Mack" is presented in three different versions.

what to buy next: Although Jenkins focuses on American and African American folk songs on This-a-Way, That-a-Way ♪♪♪

4/4 john jennings

bluegrass music

Bluegrass music seems as old as the hills, but actually it began in the 1940s, when mandolinist Bill Monroe put together his classic Bluegrass Boys (from whence the genre takes its name) with banjo wizard Earl Scruggs, guitar picker and singer Lester Flatt, and fiddler Chubby Wise. This band immediately set the standard for a brand-new style of country music, which blended old-time mountain ballads, breakdowns, and gospel singing with blues and swing. Vocals are central to bluegrass, usually sung in the high end of the range, with many duets, trios, and quartets. The distinctive instrumental texture often features the driving, syncopated 5-string banjo, played with finger-picks. Other instruments used include guitar, fiddle, mandolin, bass, and sometimes dobro; all the instruments are usually acoustic (with the possible exception of the bass). In the late '60s, many bluegrass musicians began adding influences of rock and roll and jazz to their sound. That trend continues, with artists like Alison Krauss borrowing material from rock and pop sources, and the instrumental hijinks of groups like Psychograss, which transplants modern jazz and new age music into a bluegrass instrumental setting.

Suzy Thompson

(Folkways, 1973/Smithsonian Folkways, 1989), the result is a similar, fun-filled collection of children's songs and chants. While the emphasis is on traditional material, Jenkins shows her mastery of the form with five original tunes.

best of the rest:

Fun with Rhythms and Sounds: Chants for Group Participation ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1959)
Adventures in Rhythm ♪♪♪ (Scholastic Records, 1959/Smithsonian/Folkways, 1989)
This Is Rhythm ♪♪ (Folkways, 1962/Smithsonian/Folkways, 1990)
And One and Two, and Very Early Children's Songs for Pre-school and Primary Children ♪♪♪ (Phonodisc, 1962)
Songs and Rhythms from Near and Far ♪♪♪ (Scholastic Records, 1964)
We Are America's Children ♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1976/Smithsonian/Folkways, 1989)
Did You Feed My Cow? ♪♪ (Red Rover Records, 1989)
My Street Begins at My House ♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1989)
Travellin' with Ella Jenkins: A Bilingual Journey ♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1989)
Rhythms of Childhood ♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1989)
Counting Games and Rhythms for the Little One ♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1990)

influences:

◀◀ Pete Seeger, Danny Kaye, Woody Guthrie

▶▶ Raffi, Tom Chapin, Jon Gailmor, Cathy Fink & Marcy Marxer, Rachel Buchman, Sweet Honey in the Rock

Craig Harris

John Jennings

Born November 22, 1953, in Harrisburg, VA.

John Jennings is a multi-instrumentalist with a background in jingle and session singing who grew up in the northern Virginia suburbs of Washington, D.C. He is best-known for his successful collaborations with country-folk singer Mary Chapin Carpenter, for whom he has served as producer and guitarist. He also co-wrote her hits "Never Had It So Good" and "Goin' out Tonight." Jennings has also produced records by Janis Ian, Beausoleil, John Gorka, and Robin and Linda Williams; played on recordings by Tony Rice and the Indigo Girls; and toured with Lyle Lovett.

what's available: Buddy ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1997, prod. John Jennings, Bob Dawson), Jennings's solo debut, contains the same suburban refinement of folk and rock that have made his recordings with other artists so well received. With a vocal and writing style reminiscent of Lyle Lovett's, Jennings primarily plays guitar, but also ventures onto bass, synthesizer, and even dobro.

influences:

◀◀ Mary Chapin Carpenter, Lyle Lovett

Brian Mansfield

Michael Jerling

Born April 17, 1952, in Joliet, IL.

Songwriting craftsmanship is combined with emotional tenor vocals and melodic acoustic-guitar fingerpicking by Illinois-born and Saratoga Springs, New York–based singer-songwriter Michael Jerling. The manager of a college coffeehouse in Wisconsin, Jerling absorbed the lessons taught him by the traveling musicians he booked. Continuing to perform after graduation, he fused the acoustic blues and country music that he had heard into his own distinctive style. In addition to recording several tracks for the Fast Folk Musical Magazine, Jerling was a finalist at the songwriter competition at the Kerrville Folk Festival in Texas. After releasing two self-produced, now out-of-print albums, Jerling recorded two albums—My Evil Twin and New Suit of Clothes—for Shanachie. His latest outing, In Another Life, was released by Waterbug in 1997.

what to buy: Jerling's first widely distributed CD, My Evil Twin ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Tony Markellis, Michael Jerling), marked him as a promising vocalist and composer of country, blues, and folk-influenced songs, including the nostalgic tune "Before the Country Moved to Town."

what to buy next: Jerling continued to show his talents with his fourth album and second CD, New Suit of Clothes ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994, prod. Tony Markellis, Michael Jerling).

the rest:
In Another Life ♪♪♪ (Waterbug, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Robert Johnson, Hank Williams, Bob Dylan, Jack Hardy
▶▶ Richard Shindell, Richard Meyer, Rod MacDonald

Craig Harris

Jewel

Born Jewel Kilcher, May 23, 1974, in Homer, AK.

When it was released in 1994, Jewel's Pieces of You introduced a sunny, sensitive folkie with a surfer-chick attitude and a poet's soul. But she immediately started bucking against the singer-songwriter pigeonhole: compared to the introspective sound of the album, Jewel's live shows were funny, funky, and loose, liberally dosed with cheerful monologues, yodeling exercises, and such sexually charged, unreleased rockers as "Race Car Driver" and the punk-pop "God's Gift to Women." Relentless touring as an opening act for everyone from Peter Murphy to Bob Dylan and a provocative video for "Who Will Save Your Soul" helped goose her debut to platinum status in 1996. But by the time she was plastered on the cover of Time magazine in 1997 for her role in the Lilith Fair tour, Jewel had sold an astounding seven million records. That feat was not a testament to her still-raw talent, but rather to the music industry's desperate need for a mega-platinum superstar in an era of sagging sales. Instead of letting Jewel naturally develop as an artist with successive albums, her record company chose to follow the "Hootie Principle" and flog Pieces of You from a merely promising debut into a "career" record, thereby catapulting her to an artificially induced level of significance that has triggered an inevitable critical backlash. Songs destined for her long-delayed follow-up album—like the Dylanesque "Sometimes It Be That Way" and the tender "Nikos"—eclipse everything on Pieces of You, most of which she wrote when she was 19. Let's just hope the industry allows her to mature before she turns 30.

what's available: Produced by Neil Young collaborator Ben Keith and recorded partly live and acoustic at a San Diego coffeehouse, Pieces of You ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1994) features "Who Will Save Your Soul" and the original, somewhat anemic versions of "You Were Meant for Me" and "Foolish Games" (both remixed significantly for radio by producer Peter Collins). Her lyrics are sometimes overly earnest, if not clumsy, but her voice—particularly on the majestic "Angel Standing By"—is stunning.

worth searching for: A 1994 Atlantic promo-only EP titled Save the Linoleum was designed to push "Who Will Save Your Soul" and "I'm Sensitive," but its non-LP B-sides, "God's Gift to Women" and "Race Car Driver," made it an instant collector's item among Jewel fanatics. For those two songs alone, it's worth whatever you have to pay for it.

influences:
◀◀ Tracy Chapman, Sheryl Crow
▶▶ Kacy Crowley, Meredith Brooks, Alana Davis

David Okamoto

Jim & Jesse

Jim McReynolds (born February 13, 1927, in Coeburn, VA), guitar, vocals; Jesse McReynolds (born July 9, 1929, in Coeburn, VA) mandolin, vocals.

Jim and Jesse are a pivotal duo in the history of bluegrass music. They and their band the Virginia Boys illustrated early on that the tight harmony vocals featured in much early country music could be adapted to bluegrass and be a very viable commercial force. Additionally, Jesse was and is an important influence as a mandolinist; his patented crosspicking style has added a dimension to bluegrass that hadn't previously existed. Jim and Jesse's band, the Virginia Boys, has also hosted many important musicians over the years, from fiddlers Vassar Clements and Jim Buchanan to banjo players Allen Shelton, Bobby Thompson, Vic Jordan, Carl Jackson, and many more. For a period during the late 1960s, they attempted with some success to adopt a more mainstream country sound, but, with the advent of bluegrass festivals, the duo has returned, for the most part, to the earlier high lonesome sound.

jim & jesse

what to buy: The best single collection of Jim and Jesse material is Jim & Jesse: Bluegrass and More ♪♪♪♪½ (Bear Family, 1993, prod. Don Law, Frank Jones, Jerry Kennedy, Billy Sherrill, Glenn Sutton), which contains everything the brothers recorded for Columbia and Epic between 1960 and 1970. The five-CD collection includes much classic bluegrass, but also their tribute to Chuck Berry (Berry Pickin' in the Country) and their more mainstream recordings, mainly from 1967 to 1972, when they had a country hit with "Diesel on My Tail." Jim & Jesse ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1992, prod. Ken Nelson) is a reissue of all the McReynolds's early Capitol material, from 1952 to 1955.

what to buy next: The Jim & Jesse Story ♪♪♪½ (CMH, 1990, prod. Bobby Thompson) contains excellent remakes of 24 of the brothers' biggest hits, with excellent accompanists and exhaustive liner notes. In the Tradition ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987, prod. Jim & Jesse) is a good representative mix of classic older material and newer stuff, featuring an outstanding band that includes Allen Shelton, Glen Duncan, Charlie Collins, and Roy Huskey. Music among Friends ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Carl Jackson) is a nice set featuring many guest stars, including Bill Monroe, Emmylou Harris, Jim Buchanan, Porter Wagoner, and more.

worth searching for: Border Ride ♪♪♪♪½ (King, 1996), a minimally packaged, scantily programmed (10 cuts, 23 minutes) budget CD contains Starday singles circa the late 1950s and features one of the best groups of Virginia Boys (fiddler Vassar Clements and banjoist Bobby Thompson among them, although the cut that purportedly includes Carl Story probably doesn't). Overlook the cheesy packaging; this stuff has been hard to find for years.

solo outings:
Jesse McReynolds:
A Mandolin Christmas ♪♪♪ (Double J Entertainment)

influences:
◀◀ The Delmore Brothers, the Louvin Brothers
▶▶ The O'Kanes, the Wilburn Brothers

Randy Pitts

Jewel (© Ken Settle)

Flaco Jimenez

Born March 11, 1939, in San Antonio, TX.

The undisputed king of conjunto music and son of the influential Santiago Jimenez, Flaco Jimenez is a squeezebox master who plays a rousing mix of American folk and country and Mexican rancheras and polkas. In addition to his own records, his colorful accordion work and straightforward vocals have graced albums by Ry Cooder (who helped introduce Jimenez to the rest of America), the Mavericks, Dwight Yoakam, and the Rolling Stones. A norteno music veteran of more than three decades, Jimenez has branched out into American country both as a solo act and as a member of the Texas Tornados alongside Freddy Fender, Doug Sahm, and Augie Meyers (both of the Sir Douglas Quintet).

what to buy: Jimenez's most accessible solo work has been with Arista Texas, which released his best Tex-Mex album, Flaco Jimenez ♪♪♪ (Arista, 1994, prod. Bill Halverson). It includes the Grammy-winning "Cat Walk" and features contributions from the Mavericks' Raul Malo, Lee Roy Parnell, and Radney Foster.

what to buy next: Buena Suerte, Senorita ♪♪♪ (Arista, 1996, prod. Cameron Riddle, Flaco Jimenez) leans more heavily toward updating the Mexican side of his music. The rollicking Partners ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1992, prod. Bill Halverson) features some big-name friends, including Linda Ronstadt, Emmylou Harris, Dwight Yoakam, and Los Lobos.

the rest:
El Senido de San Antonio ♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1980)
Ay Te Dejo en San Antonio y Mas ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1986)
Flaco's Amigos ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1987)
Arriba el Norte ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988)
Entre Humor & Batellas ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
San Antonio Soul ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1991)
Un Mojado sin Licencia (A Wetback without a Green Card) ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1993)
Flaco's First ♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Santiago Jimenez
▶▶ Ry Cooder, Doug Sahm

Doug Pullen

Beau Jocque

Born Andrus Espre in 1956, in Kinder, LA.

Beau Jocque is a big man with a big voice and a taste for tight funky music. When an industrial accident left him partially paralyzed in 1987, he learned to play his father's button accordion during his 10-month recovery. He found himself drawn to the hypnotic music of Boozoo Chavis. Jocque used Chavis's one-chord vamps as a launch pad for a more modern sound with a more contemporary beat. This combination of the most primitive of Creole sounds with the most contemporary of beats created a sensation that is still reverberating in Louisiana. Dance floors were filled to overflowing when Beau Jocque played and every other band jumped in to try and create their version of his sound. His band cut a wide swath across the zydeco landscape, much like Sherman's army burning everything in their path on their march to the sea.

what to buy: Pick up on This! ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Scott Billington) gives the full effect of the Beau Jocque sound without too much of the more current rock and hip-hop influences. Those qualities are here but so is a real Creole Louisiana sound. Imagine a van carrying the old Sugar Hill rhythm section of Keith LeBlanc and Doug Wimbush getting lost on their way to the Jazz Festival and ending up at Beau Jocque's door as he is preparing to put his band together. Whether Jocque was responsible for the double bass beat that became his trademark, or the super deep slinky bass of Chuck Bush, both are clearly identified as part of the sound. Billington understands that and jacks up the sound of Bush's five-string bass unlike any zydeco record made before this time. "Give It to Me" starts with the band deep in the minor-key, double-clutched groove and Beau Jocque sounding like he and Malathini have genetically identical vocal chords. This process repeats itself, song after song, even on the relatively straight blues of "Do Right Sometime" and the waltz "Chere Migonne." This record will leave the dancers completely worn out and ready to put their feet up.

what to buy next: Beau Jocque Boogie ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Scott Billington) was the ground-breaking record that started the Beau Jocque beat in zydeco country. From the opening beat of "Richard's Club," this record just sounded different from what had been around before. "Give Me Cornbread" was the first big Beau Jocque hit and led to him being pelted with the golden bread at some of the local festivals. "Damballah" may be the first zydeco tribute to a Haitian voodoo god ever recorded. This record barely deserves to be rated below Pick up on This! Another one of the big man's best is Beau Jocque & the Zydeco Hi-Rollers ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Scott Billington), which contains much more rock and rap influence and a powerful crushing beat. It's the perfect record to play for people you think won't like zydeco.

the rest:
My Name Is Beau Jocque ♪♪♪ (Paula/Flyright, 1995)
Nursery Rhyme ♪♪♪ (Beau Jocque, 1995)
Get It, Beau Jocque ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995)
Gonna Take You Downtown ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin
▶▶ Keith Frank, Chris Ardoin, Geno Delafose

Jared Snyder

Johnnie & Jack

Formed 1938, in Nashville, TN.

Johnnie Wright (born May 13, 1914, in Mount Juliet, TN); Jack Anglin (born May 13, 1916, in Franklin, TN; died March 7, 1963).

Unique in their day for combining hard country arrangements and instruments with surprisingly uptown lyrics and rhythms, the exuberantly raw and raucous duo Johnnie and Jack often featured rhumba figures in their arrangements. They also favored fairly sophisticated vocal harmonies, often featuring a third male voice in their arrangements. Their biggest hits for RCA Victor, songs like "Poison Love," "Crying Heart Blues," "Slow Poison," "Ashes of Love," and "South in New Orleans," were suffused with Latin rhythms and their unique, hard-edged vocals, making for an infectious, very appealing sound. Johnny Wright is the husband of female country legend Kitty Wells; before she became a star in her own right, Wells often toured with the Johnnie & Jack road show. Since the death of Jack Anglin in 1963 (he was killed in an auto accident on the way to Patsy Cline's funeral), Wells has often toured with her family; in recent years, son Bobby Wright has often performed old Johnnie and Jack material with his father on live shows. Wright had a fairly substantial recording career for years after the death of Anglin, reaching his peak commercially with the Number One hit "Hello Vietnam" in 1965.

what's available: Johnnie & Jack ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family, 1992, prod. Sidney Prosen, Syd Nathan, Chet Atkins, Steve Sholes, Paul Cohen, Owen Bradley) contains everything commercially recorded by this unique duo for Apollo, King, RCA Victor, and Decca. Johnnie & Jack with Kitty Wells at KWKH ♪♪♪♪ (Bear Family , 1994, prod. Richard Weize) provides a fascinating look at what a country radio show was like in 1949. This recording, Beau Jocque (© Linda Vartoogian)

Johnson Mountain Boys (© Linda Vartoogian)

taken from a live broadcast from Shreveport, Louisiana, also features Wells, not yet a star, as just another member of the show's cast.

influences:

◀◀ Anglin Brothers, Wilma Lee & Stoney Cooper

▶▶ Farmer Boys, Wilburn Brothers

Randy Pitts

Johnson Mountain Boys

Formed 1978, in Washington, DC, area. Disbanded 1995.

Dudley Connell, guitar, vocals; David McLaughlin, mandolin, vocals; Tom Adams, banjo, vocals; Eddie Stubbs, fiddle, vocals; Richard Underwood, banjo, vocals; Larry Robbins, bass; Marshall Willborn, bass; Ed Ferris, bass; Earl Yager, bass; others.

Guitarist Dudley Connell formed this hard-driving traditional bluegrass band and, with the 1978 release of its debut single on Copper Creek, the Johnson Mountain Boys became an instant success on the D.C. bluegrass circuit. The group quickly widened its fan base once its Rounder debut came out in 1981. Four superb albums followed during the next five years, with the group touring the United States extensively, even playing the Grand Ole Opry. It is of great interest, to Opry fans especially, to note that the band's exemplary fiddle player is WSM/Grand Ole Opry announcer Eddie "Deep Catalog" Stubbs, who's not only one of the finest fiddlers you'll ever hear, but one of old-time and bluegrass music's best friends. Stubbs's radio shows are loaded with lovingly chosen old songs from classic performers. In 1988 the JMB (as many fans are likely to refer to them) decided to retire, but instead merely scaled down their performance schedule and shifted personnel slightly. Their 1993 album was highly praised, but would also be their last studio recording (at this point, anyway). The Boys finally went their separate ways in 1995, following the release of a live album.

what to buy: Blue Diamond ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Ken Irwin, Ronnie Freeland, Johnson Mountain Boys) features "Duncan and Brady," along with several other great tunes. It's a real treat, when you consider the band had been close to breaking up by this point. (And, since they now have, it's an even more essential purchase!)

what to buy next: Favorites ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1987, prod. various) is another outstanding mix of JMB-brand bluegrass.

the rest:

Let the Whole World Talk ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
Requests ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988)
Working Close ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988)
At the Old Schoolhouse ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
Live at the Birchmere ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)
Walls of Time ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994) (cassette only) We'll Still Sing On ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995) (cassette only)

influences:

Bill Monroe, Warrior River Boys

Del McCoury Band, Seldom Scene

Stephen L. Betts

Blind Willie Johnson

Born 1902 or 1903, reportedly in Temple, TX. Died December 1949, in Beaumont, TX.

Although he recorded only religious music, Blind Willie Johnson was influential in the blues world as one of the great purveyors of the bottleneck style of guitar. A guitar evangelist also known as Blind Texas Marian, the adolescent Johnson was taken by his father to the small towns between Houston and Dallas, where he played on the streets. While the lyrics to his songs were religious, his relentless guitar rhythms and harsh, growling vocals were as intense as that of any blues singer. Johnson recorded extensively for Columbia, but the Depression eliminated the demand for his recordings. Some were later re-released on Vocalion, but Johnson never recorded again after 1930. Eventually Johnson moved to Beaumont, where he earned a meager living singing on street corners and at church benefits.

what to buy: An intense two-CD set, The Complete Willie Johnson ♪♪♪♪½ (Legacy, 1993, prod. Lawrence Cohn) contains all of the known sides recorded by the great guitar evangelist.

what to buy next: All of the tracks contained on Praise God I'm Satisfied ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1991), Sweeter as the Years Go By ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1991), and Dark Was the Night ♪♪♪♪ (Indigo, 1995) are contained on The Complete Willie Johnson.

influences:

Leadbelly, Texas Alexander, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Black Ace, Mississippi Fred McDowell, Lightnin' Hopkins, Bob Dylan

Jeff Hannusch

Earl Johnson /Earl Johnson & His Dixie Entertainers /Earl Johnson & His Clodhoppers

Born August 24, 1886, in Gwinnett County, GA.

Earl Johnson, fiddle, vocals; Emmett Bankston, banjo, vocal; Byrd Moore, guitar, vocals (Dixie Entertainers); Lee "Red" Henderson, guitar, vocals (Clodhoppers).

Earl Johnson is one of several wild and crazy Georgia fiddlers who recorded extensively during the 1920s, when fledgling record companies were eager to record bands who might sell as well as the very popular Gid Tanner and the Skillet Lickers, one of Columbia's most popular artists. Johnson recorded with several groups (with some overlapping personnel): in 1925 with the Dixie String Band and under the name of his banjo player, Arthur Tanner, and a few years later with his Dixie Entertainers and his Clodhoppers. This is rough-and-ready Southern old-time music with a vengeance! Its roots are in the Scots-Irish fiddle music and ballads brought to the Appalachians by the early white settlers, but there are also echoes of such early comic Tin Pan Alley songs as "They Don't Roost Too High for Me" and of early African American blues songs like "I'm Satisfied." Johnson's manic versions of fiddle standards like "Mississippi Sawyer" and "Hen Cackle" are notable not for their finesse, but for the juggernaut of the strummed guitar and banjo backup. It is not known what became of Johnson following his recording sessions.

what's available: Johnson's frenzied fiddling can be heard to best effect on his Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order: Volume 1 (1927) ♪♪♪ (Document, 1997). This volume contains all his recordings with his Dixie Entertainers and his Clodhoppers, including both fiddle instrumentals and old-time songs. Here are many of the standards associated with old-time string-band music, including animal imitations ("Hen Cackle"), centuries-old British ballads ("Three Night's Experience"), well-known American folk songs ("John Henry,"

"Sourwood Mountain"), popular songs of the day ("I Don't Love Nobody"), and energetic fiddle tunes featuring a short-bow style ("Boil Them Cabbage Down," "Leather Breeches"). The nearly ever-present falsetto singing may not be to everyone's taste, but it is a big part of the Georgia string-band style of the 1920s, as evidenced not only by the Johnson sides but also by the many popular recordings of Gid Tanner and the Skillet Lickers. These songs are all unremittingly energetic; although introspective old-time string-band music of the '20s definitely exists, you won't find it in Earl Johnson's music. Lyrically, these are not especially deep songs. Those listeners bent on political correctness should be warned that some of the words to some of the songs are likely to offend. Complete Recorded Works in Chronological Order: Volume 2 (1927–1931) ♪♪♪ (Document, 1997) contains Johnson's earlier sides.

influences:

◀◀ Gid Tanner & the Skillet Lickers, Grayson & Whittier, Fiddlin' John Carson, Uncle Dave Macon

▶▶ New Lost City Ramblers, Highwoods String Band, Freighthoppers, Primitive Characters

Suzy Rothfield Thompson

Larry Johnson

Georgia-born Larry Johnson can truly be called a practitioner of the country blues guitar, not just an interpreter or re-creator. Building on his studies with the Rev. Gary Davis, he developed a style he called "stride guitar," with the loping bass lines and ornate treble of the great stride pianists like Fats Waller.

what to buy: Johnson's rich voice and clean, speedy, melodic picking were captured beautifully on the recently re-released 1971 Blue Goose album Fast and Funky ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Goose, 1971/Baltimore Blues Society, 1996).

what to buy next: Midnight Hour Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Biograph, 1995) is another 1970s re-release. John Hammond sits in on harp and National Steel guitar, though his embellishments are hardly necessary. Technically brilliant, but a bit less warm than Fast and Funky.

influences:

◀◀ Rev. Gary Davis, Fats Waller

Jennifer Zogott

Mark Johnson /Mark Johnson & Clawgrass

Formed 1992, in Dunnellon, FL.

Mark Johnson (born 1955, in New York, NY), clawhammer banjo; Tony Rice, guitar (1992–present); Wyatt Rice, guitar (1992–94); Larry Rice, mandolin, vocals (1992–94); Ron Rice, bass (1992–94); James Tucker, dobro (1992–94); Jason Thomas, fiddle (1992–94); Tammy Murray, fiddle (1992–94); Terry Campbell, lead vocals, bass (1996–present); Allen Watkins, mandolin, harmony vocals (1996–present); Allen Shadd, guitar (1996–present).

Mark Johnson likes to tell the story of the time when, as a young man then living in his native New York, he visited Jay Ungar, the highly regarded old-time musician who has become well-known in recent years as the composer of "Ashokan Farewell," featured in Ken Burns's PBS series The Civil War. Primarily a fiddler, Ungar was also teaching clawhammer banjo at the time, and when Johnson said he wanted to learn to play like the kid in Deliverance, Ungar laughed and said, "I can't teach you that, but I can show you another style." From Ungar, Johnson learned the basics of the clawhammer, or frailing, style of playing that is predominant in old-time music, a style that predates the three-finger "Scruggs style" that has become the hallmark of bluegrass banjo. While a Scruggs-style player wears thumb- and fingerpicks and plucks upward on the strings with the fingers, a clawhammer player does not use picks at all and brushes downward on the strings. In watching clawhammer playing, the derivation of the term becomes readily apparent—the player's right hand appears to be paralyzed as if it were a claw, and seems indeed to be hammering away at the head of the banjo. Johnson went on to learn the three-finger style as well, but found himself continually being drawn back to clawhammer. By the early 1980s he had moved to north central Florida and was working in the nuclear power industry when he discovered, to his pleasant surprise, that his neighbors and co-workers were the legendary Rice Brothers—guitarists Tony and Wyatt, mandolinist Larry, and bassist Ron. He began playing music with them, and he credits them with opening his eyes to the many possibilities his unique combination of clawhammer and three-finger techniques opened to him. While jamming with friends at a Florida bluegrass festival, Johnson started describing what he was doing, half-jokingly, as "bluehammer." Before long, he had turned that around into "clawgrass," and with strong encouragement from the Rices—not to mention a few bathroom recording sessions—he released his first album, Clawgrass, on his own label. The critical response was enthusiastic, enough so that a second album followed in 1997, and he was soon able to tour with his own band, proving that old-time music fans and bluegrass fans can find common ground–no mean feat, as the two groups tend to view each other as slightly disreputable cousins. As suggested by the title of his second album, Mark Johnson is doing a lot to bridge that gap.

what to buy: With Bridging the Gap ♪♪♪♪ (Pinecastle, 1997, prod. Bill Emerson), Johnson has taken the clawgrass concept to its next logical level, adding the solid vocals of Terry Campbell to the instrumental foundation provided by the members of what is now his regular band—in addition to Campbell, Allen Watkins and Allen Shadd now tour with Johnson as Clawgrass. For this second album, Tony Rice returns to guest on three banjo-guitar instrumental duets with Johnson, and as he did on the earlier album, Rice concentrates on supporting and highlighting Johnson's banjo, with the kind of interplay between them that commands close attention. Also helping out in guest roles on this release are fiddler Pat White and Seldom Scene dobroist Fred Travers. As difficult as it is to put any recording involving the Rice Brothers in the back seat to anyone, the added presence of Campbell's warm and engaging vocals on tunes like the traditional "Rosewood Casket" makes Bridging the Gap the better choice of the two current Clawgrass releases.

what to buy next: Clawgrass ♪♪♪ (Bangtown, 1994, prod. Mark Johnson) is an entirely instrumental album, with the exception of one vocal by Larry Rice. Although accustomed to being in the spotlight, the Rice Brothers are masterful here as backup musicians, adding a great deal of subtlety and texture to the music. The fiddling of Tammy Murray and Jason Thomas, as well as James Tucker's dobro are welcome additions as well.

influences:

◀◀ Rice Brothers, Don Stover, John McEuen, Herb Pedersen

John Lupton

Michael Johnson

Born August 8, 1944, in Alamosa, CO.

Michael Johnson is a singer/songwriter whose mellow folk-pop has enabled him to have success in a number of markets. Having learned guitar by listening to early rock and jazz, Johnson spent a year studying in Italy and later played alongside John Denver in the Mitchell Trio. He had three Top 40 pop hits during the 1970s, the biggest being 1978's "Bluer than Blue." Johnson recorded for the Nashville divisions of RCA and Atlantic during the 1980s and 1990s with even more success.

what's available: Departure ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1995, prod. Michael Johnson, Randy Goodrum) doesn't have "Bluer than Blue" or "Give Me Wings." Instead, it's an album from Johnson's latest incarnation as a folkie. Which doesn't mean it's substantially different from his days as a pop or country singer. It is, however, one of Johnson's weakest albums, with songs like the electro-pop "Software," which would have sounded silly even in 1984. Note of interest: "Cain's Blood" became a minor hit in 1995 for country vocal quartet 4 Runner. On Then & Now ♪♪♪ (Intersound, 1997, prod. Viktor Krauss, Michael Johnson, Gary Paczosa), Johnson reprises his biggest singles and throws in a few new cuts for good measure. Working with dobroist Jerry Douglas, fiddler Stuart Duncan, and three members of Alison Krauss's Union Station, these covers sometimes outshine the originals. Krauss plays viola and sings duet harmony on "Whenever I Call You Friend," a cover of Kenny Loggins's 1978 pop hit.

worth searching for: Johnson had nine charting singles for RCA between 1985 and 1988. His two #1 songs, "Give Me Wings" and the exquisitely romantic "The Moon Is Still over Her Shoulder," appear on Wings ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1986, prod. Brent Maher), which has yet to be issued on CD.

influences:

◀◀ James Taylor

▶▶ Billy Dean, David Wilcox

Brian Mansfield

Prudence Johnson

There's no mystery about the enduring appeal of Prudence Johnson. Although she's written some fine songs, she's not known as a songwriter—nor is she celebrated as an instrumentalist. What she does do is sing, well enough to inspire jealousy among the seraphim. Johnson fronted a sophisticated vocal group called Rio Nido that was based, as was she, in the Minneapolis/St. Paul area, and which had the good fortune to appear regularly on the earlier days of A Prairie Home Companion's national radio syndication. Since then she's issued three albums under her own name for Red House Records, one of folk and roots music's more respected independent labels. The discipline and technique required to sing jazz has served Johnson well—she's sort of a folk songwriter's Sarah Vaughan—but good technique will take your career only so far. Only those who can breathe life into a song, who can sing it with conviction and heart, can expect to make a song uniquely one's own as Prudence Johnson does.

what to buy: The wedding of great songs with a great voice achieves near-perfection in Prudence Johnson Sings the Songs of Greg Brown ♪♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1990, prod. Prudence Johnson). Greg Brown's songs are among the most clever and beguiling in the genre; and where his distinctive voice growls and wheedles, Johnson's fairly soars, taking these well-crafted gems to a new dimension. Eleven of Brown's best of the day, including "Dream On," "The Train Carrying Jimmie Rodgers Home," "Band of Gold," and "Who'da Thunk It."

what to buy next: Nearly every folk artist seems to have made a kids' album, supplying the boomer generation's increasingly urgent need to keep their children occupied or to get them to fall asleep—but few have the enduring charm of Little Dreamer . . . Lullabies for Young and Old ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1991, prod. Bob Feldman, Eric Peltoniemi). Once again, a nearly perfect selection of songs (in this case, lullabies) defines the project, with some newly composed pieces mixed in with a helping of standards like "Summertime," "A Dream Is a Wish Your Heart Makes," "Nature Boy," and perhaps the best version yet of the oft-recorded "John of Dreams," Bill Caddick's gorgeous lullaby set to a Tchaikovsky theme.

the rest:
Vocals ♪♪½ (Red House, 1992)

worth searching for: Despite the fact that it's available only on cassette tape, check out Rio Nido's Hi Fly ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1988, prod. Bob Feldman). It sounds as good now as it did then, and marks Johnson's first appearance on record (guitarist Tim Sparks was a member, too).

influences:
◀◀ Maria Muldaur, Maura O'Connell
▶▶ Mollie O'Brien

Chris Rietz

Robert Johnson

Born May 8, 1911, in Hazlehurst, MS. Died August 16, 1938, in Greenwood, MS.

More has been made about the 29 songs Robert Johnson recorded during three sessions 60 years ago than any other blues music, or almost any other music, for that matter. That thin, smoldering sheaf of songs, his edgy, high moaning voice, cryptic life, and the unusual circumstances of his death (apparently poisoned by a jealous husband at a country roadhouse gig), compounded by rumors of Johnson's pact with the devil, have made him much larger than whatever he could have become on his own. Despite the deluge of hype over the last few years, really listening to King of the Delta Blues Singers is still the next scariest thing to spending the night alone at a crossroads in Coahoma County under a full moon. The ironies have proliferated: one of the youngest of a generation of Delta acoustic bluesmen, Johnson was nearly an anachronism by the time he was recorded (although who knows what he could have done with electricity coursing through his guitar?); producer John Hammond came looking for Johnson for his From Spirituals to Swing black revue several months after his death; he didn't make the Billboard charts until a half century after he died; and though no one is sure where he's buried, at least two cemeteries have markers for him. Except for those fortunate enough to buy the few 78s distributed during his lifetime and an ever-growing list of tape collectors, Johnson's music was pretty much unavailable until more than 20 years after his death. Research has lifted some of the clouds from his life just as it seemingly has obscured others. But beyond the myth, it's those existential songs—"Hellhound on My Trail," "Stones in My Passway," "Love in Vain," "32-20 Blues"—and that tightly strung, slightly scared, tormented voice—all frozen in time—that burn right through the decades and the scratches, pointing the way to the future. Recent advances in studio technology have attempted to make those scratchy recordings more clear. But no matter how re-mastered a version of "Hellhound on My Trail" you wind up with, you'll still have to squint a little to see that big devil dog in the shadows behind paranoid Bob's hunched back.

what to buy: There is no let-up on King of the Delta Blues Singers ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1961, prod. Don Law, Frank Driggs), which introduced Johnson to the world at large, heavily influencing a generation of superstars, including Keith Richards and Eric Clapton. Johnson sometimes sounds like a band, and the connection between his voice and guitar is complete—they sound like one instrument. (There's even a gold disc version of this one available.) And it's an album, not a greatest-hits collection. If you're interested in hearing the full sessions in chronological order, pick up Robert Johnson: The Complete Recordings ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1990, prod. Don Law, Frank Driggs, Stephen LaVere), the two-disc set that landed old Bob in the pop charts and on Entertainment Tonight.

what to avoid: For some inexplicable reason, there's a "new" compilation, Robert Johnson: King of the Delta ♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1997), which, since all tracks have been released before—most of them twice—there is no reason to own.

the rest:
King of the Delta Blues Singers Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1970)

worth searching for: For more on Johnson's life, we heartily recommend Deep Blues (Viking, 1981), Robert Palmer's groundbreaking book that makes the connection between the acoustic Delta blues of Johnson and the electric version that Muddy Waters conceived in Chicago. Also worth watching is The Search for Robert Johnson (Sony Video, 1992), with narrator John Hammond traveling the Delta in a convertible, stopping to talk to historians and scholars, former Johnson girlfriends, and contemporaries (including Honeyboy Edwards, who was there the night Johnson was poisoned). On the flip side, except for a short, sepia-toned opening segment, steer way clear of Walter Hill's totally inept 1986 film, Crossroads, which stars Ralph Macchio as a blues kid who winds up in a guitar "duel" with a heavy-metal devil played by Steve Vai. Really!

influences:
⏪ Lonnie Johnson, Tommy Johnson, Charley Patton, Willie Brown, Son House

⏩ Muddy Waters, Eric Clapton, Keith Richards, Robert Junior Lockwood

Leland Rucker

Freedy Johnston

Born March 7, 1961, in Kinsley, KS.

It's sad when a musician peaks too early, but it's easier to stomach when he leaves you with a pop-folk-rock masterpiece as perfect as Johnston's second album, Can You Fly. "Well I sold the dirt to feed the band," he sings on the album's first line, referring to his longtime family farm, which he ditched to become a New York City rock 'n' roll singer. Like the Beatles and Squeeze, Johnston has a knack for squeezing rich poetic images into cleverly rhyming three-minute pop songs; his imaginative world includes a love affair with the mortician's daughter and a town called Hopeless. Since then, though his high-pitched, impossibly clear voice remains a powerful pop tool, Johnston has slowly started trying too hard. After a mass of critical raves earned him enough clout to sign with the major label Elektra Records, Johnston's songs have subtly become more labored and less spontaneous. His Elektra debut, This Perfect World, had some excellent moments—including the sublime "Two Lovers Stop," a Romeo and Juliet–style fable about a couple jumping to their deaths—but producer Butch Vig imposed a more formulaic rock style. Though Johnston remains an excellent singer and songwriter, recent material like "On the Way Out" is disappointingly competent.

what to buy: The slower songs on Can You Fly ♪♪♪♪½ (Bar/None, 1992, prod. Graham Maby) tell terrific folk tales, but the rockers, including the opening "Trying to Tell You I Don't Know" and "In the New Sunshine," are what provoke the involuntary dancing around the room. Johnston's lines are consistently sharp and rich; in "The Mortician's Daughter," he observes that "we drew our hearts on the dusty coffin lids," and in "Responsible" he describes the New York City streets as "slick with dew and motor oil." All this in a snappy voice that recalls Paul McCartney, or at least Michael Penn.

what to buy next: Continuing with the dramatic opening lines, the solid-but-disappointing This Perfect World ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1994, prod. Butch Vig) begins with "I know I got a bad reputation, and it isn't just talk, talk, talk." It's gloomier than the optimistic Can You Fly, but it's Vig's straightforward production that blunts Johnston's natural wonder and enthusiasm.

what to avoid: There are excellent moments on Never Home ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1997, prod. Danny Kortchmar), mostly because Johnston's talent shines even when he's coasting or loading himself up with bland material. But the catchy "On the Way Out" and the well-written "He Wasn't Murdered" aren't enough to overcome a creeping mediocrity.

the rest:
The Trouble Tree ♪♪½ (Bar/None, 1990)
Freedy Johnston EP ♪♪♪ (Hello Recording Club, 1995)

worth searching for: Unlucky ♪♪♪ (Bar/None, 1993, prod. Gene Holder) contains one track from Can You Fly, but it's most notable for a clear-eyed reading of the country classic "Wichita Lineman."

influences:
⏪ The Beatles, Squeeze, Jimmy Webb, XTC, Big Star, Raspberries

⏩ Jonny Polonsky, Wilco, Gin Blossoms

Steve Knopper

The Johnstons

Formed in Slane, Co. Meath, Ireland. Disbanded 1974, in London.

Luci Johnston, vocals; Adrienne Johnston (died 1975), vocals; Mick Moloney (born 1944), vocals, guitar, tenor banjo, mandolin; Paul

4
1
6 the johnstons

the johnstons

Brady, vocals, guitar, mandolin, fiddle; Michael Johnston, vocals, guitar.

The original lineup of the Johnstons was purely a family affair, made up of Luci, Adrienne, and Michael Johnston, siblings from the Boyne Valley. They played and sang together all their lives, and became well known in 1966, when their record, a version of Ewan MacColl's "The Travelling People," went to #1 on the Irish charts. They began to tour the country, and eventually ended up playing a folk club in Harcourt Street, Dublin, which was run by banjo and mandolin player Mick Moloney. Feeling that they needed to beef up their instrumental sound, they asked Mick to join the group. Shortly after that, Michael was replaced by Mick's roommate Paul Brady. This lineup of the Johnstons was to last five years, to tour all over Europe and America, and to record seven albums. Their repertoire was mostly songs, and all four of the members were singers capable of leading or harmonizing. In addition, Moloney and Brady worked out arrangements of a few of their favorite tunes to include in their live sets and on their albums. The Johnstons topped the charts in Ireland and trod the boards worldwide, becoming the most popular Irish music group of their era (barring perhaps the Clancys and the Dubliners, both of which groups influenced them greatly). They were also spectacular musicians; Ron Kavana, one of today's more progressive Irish guitarists, banjo players, and mandolinists, remembers seeing the Johnstons once, and being "positively gobsmacked" by their musical acuity. After playing traditional music for a while, the Johnstons were convinced by their management and by Transatlantic, their record company, that contemporary material was to be their ticket to fame. They began to sing and play songs by many top songwriters of the time. They remember recording a few songs by a woman they'd never heard of: Joni Mitchell. They also played songs by Leonard Cohen, Gordon Lightfoot, and others, as well as many early songs by Paul Brady. Luci Johnston left the London-based band in 1969 to return to Ireland. Mick Moloney left in 1972, and came to America, where he remains a strong presence on the American Irish music scene. The remaining duo broke up in 1974. Adrienne recorded a single solo album before she was killed in 1975 (the official verdict was accidental death, but many believe she was murdered). Paul Brady joined the group Planxty until it broke up, then performed traditional music solo and in a duo with Andy Irvine. In the 1980s he decided to concentrate on writing his own songs, and since then has been one of Ireland's most popular songwriters.

Freedy Johnston (© Ken Settle)

what to buy: The CD reissue The Johnstons/The Barleycorn ♪♪♪♪♪ (Castle/Transatlantic, 1996, prod. Nathan Joseph) contains two of the Johnstons' best albums of traditional Irish material, both recorded in 1968. The voices and instrumental work are all excellent, all the more so for being ahead of their time. Among the material not to be missed is Adrienne's particularly moving version of "The Flower of Northumberland," an old Scots border ballad, "What Put the Blood," a version of the ancient ballad "Edward," and a cute version of "Frog's Wedding," a song which came over from English tradition. More local songs given colorful treatments include "The Dublin Jack of All Trades," a veritable catalog of Dublin street names, "They'll Never Get Their Man," an energetic song set in the Belfast linen mills, and "The Coleraine Regatta," a magnificent track teaming Brady's sharp voice up with Moloney's very accurate banjo. Several Gaelic songs, including "Fhir A' Bhata" and "Fuigfidh Mise 'N Baile Seo," add depth to the group's commitment to Irish material, and a few instrumentals, including "O'Carolan's Concerto" and two sets of dance tunes, hint at the capabilities of Moloney and Brady, which were just beginning to be explored.

what to buy next: On the sampler The Transatlantic Years ♪♪♪ (Demon, 1992), some of the tracks are solid traditional material showcasing the Johnstons' four great voices, Moloney's mandolin and banjo, and Brady's trend-setting guitar work. Others are tight but unexciting renditions of Joni Mitchell–, Gordon Lightfoot–, and Leonard Cohen–penned songs, drowning in the strings of nameless arrangers. There are also three original Johnstons songs composed by Brady and producer Chris McCloud that are quite good. Still, the most compelling things on the album by far are the traditional songs; you may want to program your CD player to skip "Both Sides Now" or "Hey That's No Way to Say Goodbye." Although this is still a good collection on its own, don't buy it if you own The Johnstons/The Barleycorn, because most of the best songs are on both CDs.

the rest:

Give a Damn/Bitter Green ♪♪ (Castle/Transatlantic, 1969/1997)

influences:

- Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem, Dubliners, Donal Lunny, Christy Moore, Sean Corcoran
- Planxty, Mick Moloney, Moloney, O'Connell & Keane, Green Fields of America, Paul Brady.

Steve Winick

418 carol elizabeth jones & james leva

cajun fiddle

Cajun fiddle style has its roots in the centuries-old tunes that the Acadians brought to Louisiana from Canada, but over 200 years Cajun fiddlers have borrowed from many other styles: there are echoes of Western Swing, ragtime, and blues in the archaic stylings of Cajun fiddle pioneer Dennis McGee as well as in the contemporary Creole fiddling of Canray Fontenot. Modern players like Michael Doucet incorporate elements of rock and roll and jazz as well. Cajun fiddlers often tune their fiddles a whole step low, in order to use open strings when playing with a C accordion. Because Cajun music evolved long before the use of sound systems, fiddlers developed a style that would project, using lots of droning and unisons with open strings to boost their volume. Cajun fiddlers slide in and out of notes a lot; the downward slide is what produces the distinctive "cry" that is a hallmark of great Cajun fiddlers like Harry Choates and Dewey Balfa. The use of two fiddles was the norm in the era before the introduction of the accordion into Cajun music, and it is one of the most beautiful sounds in Cajun music. The "secondeur" plays a separate part, sometimes a rhythmic chording, sometimes a melody an octave below the lead, sometimes a harmony part. The best examples can be heard in the early recordings of Dennis McGee and the recordings of the Balfa Brothers.

Suzy Thompson

Carol Elizabeth Jones & James Leva

Formed early 1990s, in Lexington, VA.

James Leva and Carol Elizabeth Jones have been playing and performing old-time Appalachian music, vintage and classic American country, and multi-influenced original music for most of their lives. Fans of traditional music will know them for their work with numerous bands such as the Renegades, the Wandering Ramblers, the Wildcats, the Freewill Savages, and the Hellbenders as well as many others. Jones has one of the most wonderful voices in old-time and folk music today. One word from her beautiful voice from the mountains is worth a thousand pictures. Leva also has a great voice, as well as being a magnificent guitarist, clawhammer banjo player, and fiddler. He shines not only when he is taking the lead in a fiddle tune like "Cluck Old Hen" from the Renegades, but also when he is accompanying an original song.

what to buy: Light Enough to Find My Way ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. James Leva, Carol Elizabeth Jones, Dave Grant, Paul Kovac) is their debut album for Rounder. It puts the spotlight on their original songs, although on many occasions, such as with the Jones-penned "North Country," you'll swear that this is some traditional song, just discovered from some old-timer in the southern mountains. The same is true for the devastating "Black as a Crow," which James wrote himself. This song about the real-life tragedy that struck an Alaskan family is so powerful that you can't listen to it and not be affected. The stark accompaniments bring the songs down to their basics and the result is that you feel as if you are in direct contact with James, Jones, and their stories.

what to buy next: If you want a mixture of their original songs with the traditional cuts they do so well, then you should get their work together as the Renegades. Their album I Need to Find ♪♪♪♪ (Carryon, 1995, prod. Renegades) features Jones and Leva, along with June Drucker, Richie Stearns, and Al Tharp. From "Highlander's Farewell" to "Ain't No Ash Will Burn," this is a solid recording.

worth searching for: Jones has some cassette-only releases out on the Marimac label based in Crown Point, Indiana, that are worth searching out. Bands include the Wandering Ramblers and the Wildcats, all excellent old-time revival bands who concentrate on traditional tunes and songs. All of this material is superb. Marimac is starting to release their newer albums on CD so, hopefully, they'll get to their wonderful back catalog in the near future.

influences:

◀◀ Tommy Jarrell, Fred Cockerham, Doug & Jack &Wallin

▶▶ Rhythm Rats, Red Mules

Steve Gardner

Diane Jones and Hubie King

Formed 1988, in Elkins, WV.

Diane Jones (born October 31, 1942, in Mt. Holly, NJ), banjo, vocals; Hubie King (born March 1, 1933, in Washington, DC), banjo.

Diane Jones got her start in traditional Appalachian music on the mountain dulcimer during the late 1970s and took up the banjo in 1981. She was influenced by a wide range of old-time musicians in the Washington, D.C., area and at various music camps in West Virginia and North Carolina. Along the way, she connected with fiddlers Dave Bing and Pete Vigour, of West Virginia and Virginia, respectively. Like many other traditional performers who did not grow up with the music, much of her early exposure came through programs such as the Augusta Heritage Workshops in Elkins, West Virginia. She met Hubie King when both were taking summer classes in folklore at Augusta. Like Jones, King is an urban musician with a strong preference for traditional mountain music. He played banjo in a bluegrass band for several years during the 1950s and drifted into the old-time camp years later, through much the same process as Jones. Eventually, their friendship and musical compatibility led them to the recording studio.

what's available: Jones and Hubie team up with others to present a wide range of traditional Appalachian music on There Are No Rules ♪♪♪♪ (1996, prod. Diane Jones, Hubie King). This is primarily a banjo recording, but with diversity. Jones is a rock-solid clawhammmer banjo player and plays with exceptional clarity. Her control of the instrument stands out on solo banjo pieces like "Singing Birds," which ought to be required listening for those aspiring to play this style. Her voice is strong and without affect, a big plus when singing traditional songs, and she excels at providing banjo accompaniment to the fiddle. This combination of instruments is at the very heart of old-time music, and the five such pieces on this disc are fine examples. King plays both clawhammer and fingerpicking styles, and it's the latter that really shines on this recording. Fingerstyle banjo is less popular than clawhammer among contemporary old-time banjo players, but it's every bit as authentic. Tunes like "Coal Creek March" and "Lost Gander" are extremely complex and difficult, and King does a yeoman's job of presenting them close to their original form. Jones and King team up to combine clawhammer and fingerstyle on a couple of tunes. This is difficult to do and have it sound right, but they succeed. The liner notes are comprehensive, including the tuning of the instruments. This disc might be difficult to find in stores but is available from the artists at 4639 Luxberry Drive, Fairfax, Virginia 20032.

influences:

⏪ Gerry Milnes, Dwight Diller, Dave Bing, Ron Mullenex

⏩ Arnie Naiman, Chris Coole

Dave Shombert

George Jones

Born September 12, 1931, in Saratoga, TX.

George Jones—"The Possum"—is one of the few real living legends in country music today. He has been cited as a major influence by just about every popular country singer of the day, from Garth Brooks to Tanya Tucker. Even though he can't compete with most of them for space on the radio these days, Jones's hurtful nasal tones and honest delivery is all over contemporary country music. And they don't call Jones the "Rolls-Royce of country singers" for nothing. Nobody can cry in their beer more pitifully, bemoan the loss of their woman more painfully, or put himself down more severely than Jones can. He has pretty much stuck to what works over the 40-plus years he's been a recording artist, though he has dabbled briefly with rock 'n' roll (he cut "Heartbreak Hotel" as Hank Smith and "Rock It" as Thumper Jones) and has tried his hand at gospel occasionally. But Jones is at his best when he's singing those honky-tonk blues. His ability to convey pain and regret has made him an excellent duet partner, too; the team-up of the Possum and ex-wife Tammy Wynette was the most formidable male-female duo in country, and one of its most colorful. The key to the Texan's success has been his ability to pick material that mirrors his own messy life—three divorces, years of drinking, and hard living—though the man who once earned the nickname "No-Show Jones" because of his frequently canceled shows has settled down since the early 1980s, living a relatively clean and uneventful life with current wife Nancy. Now in his mid-60s, Jones keeps on plugging away, with tributes and honors still coming his way, including induction into the Country Music Hall of Fame and a tribute duets album featuring everyone from Alan Jackson to Rolling Stone Keith Richards. A number of Jones's songs are considered definitive country, and one of them, "He Stopped Loving Her Today," was voted the #1 country song in a Country America magazine reader's poll.

what to buy: Jones has recorded for several labels during the past 40 years, which makes it hard to own the more than five dozen albums he's released since 1955. Compilations are your best bet, but with so many of them, stick to The Essential George Jones ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia Legacy, 1994, prod. various). Most of his best known hits are here, along with guest performers like Johnny Paycheck, James Taylor, Melba Montgomery, and, of course, Wynette.

what to buy next: The Best of George Jones ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1991, comp. prod. Bill Inglot) covers top hits between 1955 ("Why Baby Why") and the late 1960s, before Jones dumped producer Pappy Daily for the broader palette of Billy Sherrill and the wider distribution of Epic Records. The Bradley Barn Sessions ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1994, prod. Brian Ahern) is a loving tribute to the man, with a diverse array of roots, country, and rock people contributing to this upbeat, loving collection of modern remakes of some of his greatest songs.

what to avoid: Several of Jones's early recordings are out of print, though some have been saved by reissue labels like Razor & Tie and Hollywood/Rounder. Still, there's a lot of bad hits packages and compilations out there that conform to the same formula: throw a couple of widely known hits in with a bunch of average or mediocre stuff and call it a hits album. Among them: Greatest Country Hits ♪♪♪ (Curb, 1990); All-Time Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Liberty, 1994); Golden Hits ♪♪ (Hollywood/Rounder, 1965); Party Pickin' ♪♪♪ (Hollywood/Rounder, 1967); 14 Greats ♪♪ (Hollywood/Rounder, 1992); and Greatest Hits, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Hollywood/Rounder, 1966). Some of his thematic albums don't fare much better, such as the gospel records Homecoming in Heaven ♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1962, prod. Pappy Daily) and 24 Gospel Greats ♪♪ (Deluxe, 1993, prod. various), or the salute George Jones Sings Bob Wills ♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1963, prod. Pappy Daily).

the rest:

The New Favorites of George Jones ♪♪♪ (Liberty, 1962)
George Jones Sings the Hits of His Country Cousins ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1962)
George Sings like the Dickens! ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1963)
My Favorites of Hank Williams ♪♪♪ (Liberty, 1963)
The Race Is On ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1965)
At His Best ♪♪ (Hollywood/Rounder, 1967)
Life Turned Her That Way ♪♪♪ (Hollywood/Rounder, 1967)
(With Tammy Wynette) We Love to Sing about Jesus ♪♪♪ (Epic 1972)
George Jones Sings the Great Songs of Leon Payne ♪♪♪ (Hollywood/Rounder, 1973)
The Grand Tour ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1973)
(With Tammy Wynette) Golden Ring ♪♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1976/1997)
(With Tammy Wynette) Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1977)
All-Time Greatest Hits, Volume 1 ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1977)
Bartender's Blues ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1978)
My Very Special Guests ♪♪♪ (Columbia/Legacy, 1979)
I Am What I Am ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1980)
(With Johnny Paycheck) Double Trouble ♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1980)
(With Tammy Wynette) Together Again ♪♪♪ (Razor & Tie, 1980)
(With Tammy Wynette) Encore: George Jones & Tammy Wynette ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1981)
Still the Same Old Me ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1981)
Anniversary—Ten Years of Hits ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1982)
Who's Gonna Fill Their Shoes ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1984)
By Request ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1984)
George Jones Salutes Hank Williams ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1984)
Wine-Colored Roses ♪♪ (Epic, 1986)
Super Hits ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1987)
I'm a One-Woman Man ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1988)
First Time Live ♪ (Epic, 1989)
You Oughta Be Here ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1990)
Hallelujah Weekend ♪♪ (Columbia, 1990)
And Along Came Jones ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1991)
20 Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Deluxe, 1991)
Friends in High Places ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1991)
Walls Can Fall ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1992)
(With Tammy Wynette) George & Tammy's Greatest Hits, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1992)
High-Tech Redneck ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1993)
Super Hits Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1993)
(With Melba Montgomery) Vintage Collections ♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI, 1993)
A Cup of Loneliness ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1994)
(With Tammy Wynette) The President & the First Lady ♪♪♪ (TeeVee, 1995)
(With Tammy Wynette) One ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1995)
(With Tammy Wynette) Super Hits ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1995)
I Lived to Tell It All ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1996)
Hits ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1997)

worth searching for: Ladies' Choice ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1984, prod. Billy Sherrill) teamed the duet master with a formidable (in its day) cast of partners that included Loretta Lynn, Barbara Mandrell, Emmylou Harris, and Lacy J. Dalton. It's currently available only as an import.

influences:

◀◀ Lefty Frizzell, Hank Williams, Roy Acuff

▶▶ Garth Brooks, Alan Jackson, Randy Travis, Mark Chesnutt, Vern Gosdin, Sammy Kershaw

Doug Pullen

Grandpa Jones

Born Louis Marshall Jones, October 20, 1913, in Niagara, KY. Died February 19, 1998, in Nashville, TN.

Born to a musically talented family, Louis Jones won a talent contest on the guitar at 16, then launched his career as a country singer, banjo player, and comedian with radio appearances in 1929. Billed as "The Young Singer of Old Songs" while paired with ballad singer Bradley Kincaid, Jones became "Grandpa" at 22, wearing an old-man costume because he sounded so much older on the radio. Tall tales about mountain folk, accompanied by the banjo, became Jones's trademark as he struck out on his own in 1937. Although World War II interrupted Jones's career, he cut his first records during the mid-1940s with "It's Raining Here This Morning," "Eight More Miles to Louisville," and "Mountain Dew." After beginning work on the Grand Ole Opry in 1946, Jones worked on radio and TV shows in Virginia and Washington, D.C., until returning to Nashville and a regular stint on the Opry in 1959. That year he had a Top 25 hit with Bobby Bare's "The All-American Boy," then hit the Top 5 with Jimmie Rodgers's "T for Texas." Jones's popularity remained high until his death, having been boosted by a regular slot on Hee Haw, induction into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1978, and continued Opry appearances.

what to buy: Though the 16 recordings on Country Music Hall of Fame ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1992, prod. Country Music Foundation) don't come from Jones's heyday (that would come later for Monument), this is certainly the best-assembled collection available on Jones. Recorded between 1956 and 1959, these 15 studio tracks and one live cut from the Opry find Jones flirting with country (Johnny Cash's "Pickin' Time") as well as recording such old tunes as Bascom Lamar Lunsford's "Mountain Dew" and Jimmie Rodgers's "Waiting for a Train."

what to buy next: Recorded in Cincinnati during 1969, Grandpa Jones Live ♪♪♪½ (Sony Music Special Products, 1969/1992, prod. Ray Pennington) captures Jones in all his hillbilly-vaudevillian glory just as a whole new audience was discovering him through Hee Haw. It's a wonderful introduction to Jones's style and charm—particularly his famed cowbell routine on "My Bonnie Lies over the Ocean," though that's a better sight gag.

the rest:
(With Ramona) Grandpa Jones Story ♪♪½ (CMH, 1976)
Old Time Country Music Collection ♪♪½ (CMH, 1978)
Family Album ♪♪½ (CMH, 1979)
Family Gathering ♪♪½ (CMH, 1981)
24 Country Hits ♪♪♪ (Hollywood/IMG, 1988)
16 Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Hollywood, 1992)
Good Ole Mountain Dew ♪♪♪½ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)
A Pickin' and a Grinnin' ♪♪♪½ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)

worth searching for: Details about release dates and such are extremely sketchy, but Jones released a number of cassettes on his own. Among them are Poems and Songs ♪♪, Poems and Songs Volume 2 ♪♪, and Fifty Years of Country ♪♪. For the true fanatic, Germany's Bear Family label offers Everybody's Grandpa ♪♪♪½ (Bear Family, 1997), a five-disc box set that covers Jones's recordings between 1960 and 1973.

influences:
◀◀ Uncle Dave Macon, Bascom Lamar Lunsford, Jimmie Rodgers ▶▶ Stringbean

Randall T. Cook

Rickie Lee Jones

Born November 8, 1954, in Chicago, IL.

When she stormed on the moribund late '70s music scene like a breath of funky fresh air in 1979 with "Chuck E.'s in Love," Rickie Lee Jones was heralded as the next Joni Mitchell. More of a chanteuse than Mitchell, however, Jones sometimes went for the minimalist beatnik approach (beret and all) and sometimes for lush stylings with heavy jazz leanings. Her range of styles makes her an artist not to be trifled with, though, like Mitchell, it also hurts her commercially because she can't be pigeonholed. Jones songs are less cerebral than Mitchell's, but are sometimes more accessible for just that reason. A stormy childhood and early barfly existence seasoned her at a young age, as did a relationship with Tom Waits. Her songwriting talents were noticed by Lowell George, who recorded her "Easy Money" on Thanks I'll Eat It Here in 1978. Since then, she's recorded dozens of her own and others' compositions in her slurry, sometimes breathy soprano—always backed by impeccably pedigreed talents, some of whom seem to cross genres just for her. Today she's firmly in the "lite music/smooth jazz" mode, though radio could do a lot worse than Rickie Lee—in those or any other formats. And with her penchant for trying new directions, there's no telling where she'll head next.

what to buy: From the soul of Laura Nyro ("Young Blood") to the cool jazz/blues of "The Last Chance Texaco" and "Danny's All-Star Joint," Jones's debut, Rickie Lee Jones ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1979, prod. Lenny Waronker, Russ Titelman), is the kind of album that earns Best New Artist Grammys, and in fact, put one in her hands. On Traffic from Paradise ♪♪♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1993, prod. Rickie Lee Jones), a matured, more introspective Jones crafts a wonderful collection of songs, highlighted by the shimmering "Stewart's Coat" and "Beat Angels" and an interestingly minimalist version of David Bowie's "Rebel Rebel."

what to buy next: Starker, sadder, and more experimental than her debut, Pirates ♪♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1981, prod. Russ Titelman, Lenny Waronker) is relieved by the infectious funk of "Woody and Dutch on the Slow Train to Peking" and "Pirates (So Long Lonely Avenue)," a near remake of "Chuck E.'s in

ledward kaapana

Love." On Flying Cowboys ♪♪♪♪½ (Geffen, 1989, prod. Walter Becker), Rickie finds reggae/funk on "Ghetto of My Mind," while still paying her great debt to the Laura Nyro/girl group harmonizers who helped popularize the styles from which she draws. Crisp production and delightful arrangements abound, and she gets extra points for her cover of "Don't Let the Sun Catch You Crying" and the syncopation-meets-gospel of "Love Is Gonna Bring Us Back Alive." "Juke Box Fury" and "The Real End" are catchy standouts on The Magazine ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1984, prod. Rickie Lee Jones, James Newton Howard).

what to avoid: For Ghostyhead ♪♪½ (Reprise, 1997, prod. Rickie Lee Jones, Rick Boston), Jones veers off toward techno, acid jazz, drum machines, and programmed loops—with mixed results.

the rest:
Pop Pop ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1991)
Naked Songs ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1995)

worth searching for: Girl at Her Volcano ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1983) includes Billy Strayhorn's "Lush Life" and the Left Banke's "Walk Away Renee," along with "My Funny Valentine" and "Under the Boardwalk."

influences:
◀◀ Joni Mitchell, Steely Dan, Billie Holiday, Laura Nyro, Carole King, Randy Newman ▶▶ Laura Love, Bruce Cockburn, Jewel

Lynne Margolis

Ledward Kaapana

See: Hui Ohana

Brenda Kahn

Born May 3, 1967, in Hartford, CT.

Rising out of the Alphabet City "anti-folk" scene in late 1980s Manhattan, singer-songwriter Brenda Kahn took lessons from folk scene veteran Dave Van Ronk but was equally influenced by punk—especially its DIY ethic and emotional directness. She chose the solo acoustic path because, while growing up in New Jersey, local bands resisted the idea of a female guitarist. She's persevered through horrible record label experiences and continues to put her vividly etched depictions of relationships and occasionally piquant political statements before the public, working solo or with a trio. Given the recent public acceptance of "angry women" a la Alanis Morrisette, the underexposed Kahn could, with luck, find a major audience.

what to buy: With minimal bass-and-drums backing, Goldfish Don't Talk Back ♪♪♪♪ (Community 3, 1990, prod. Albert Garzon) showcases fantastic songwriting (the elegiac "Winchester Chimes"), powerful politics (the viciously sarcastic "Eggs on Drugs"), and in-your-face romantic plaints. Epiphany in Brooklyn ♪♪♪♪ (Chaos/Columbia, 1992, prod. David Kahne) is slightly less consistent, but some of Kahn's inspired touches allow her to break out of the acoustic troubadour mold on quiet pieces full of atmosphere and foreboding ("Sleepwalking").

what to buy next: Columbia declined to issue Destination Anywhere ♪♪♪ (Through Being Cool/Shanachie, 1996, prod. Tim Patalan), Kahn's rock album, but "Yellow Sun" was catchy enough to have been a hit.

the rest:
Life in the Drug War Trenches ♪♪ (Crackpot EP, 1992)
Hey, Romeo/...and Door Locks ♪♪♪½ (Through Being Cool single, 1995)
Outside the Beauty Salon ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997)

worth searching for:

60-Second Critic ♪♪♪ (Chaos/Columbia, 1992, prod. Brenda Kahn, Dave Pirner), a duet with Soul Asylum's Dave Pirner, was a promo-only cassette single bitterly commenting on the choices in the '92 presidential election campaign.

influences:
◀◀ Bessie Smith, Phil Ochs, Dave Van Ronk, Lou Reed, Elvis Costello, Clash, X-Ray Spex, Pretenders, Michelle Shocked, Roger Manning
▶▶ Alanis Morrisette, Meredith Brooks

Steve Holtje

Si Kahn

Born April 23, 1944, in Boston, MA.

Politics, social concern, and the folk tradition are combined through the music of topical singer-songwriter Si Kahn. Accompanying his deep, rustic, baritone vocals on acoustic guitar, Kahn continues to musically chronicle modern society. His songs have not only provided a unique perspective on the struggles of the American working class but have explored the people of Poland, Ireland, and the Soviet Union. In addition to being featured on his solo albums and duo recordings with John McCutcheon, Kahn's folk-like tunes, including "Aragon Mill," "Gone Gonna Rise Again," "Goin' to Work on Monday," and "Wild Rose of the Mountain," have become staples of contemporary bluegrass repertoires. The son of a rabbi and president of the national Hillel organization, Kahn grew up in Pennsylvania with the music of the Jewish liturgy. Although he's been involved with music for over two decades, Kahn has made the bulk of his living as a political organizer. All fees from his concerts go directly into his non-profit organization, Grassroots Leadership. Kahn has written two books on political organizing—How People Get Power and Organizing.

what to buy: On In My Heart: Live in Holland ♪♪♪ (Strictly Country, 1993/Philo, 1994, prod. Jesse M. Kahn, Pieter Groenveld), captured during a 1993 concert in Holland, Kahn offers an intimate sampling of his best-known tunes.

what to buy next: On Good Times and Bedtimes ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Cathy Fink), Kahn turns his focus to the youngest members of his audience. Accompanied by Cathy Fink, Marcy Marxer, Pete Kennedy, and the Critton Hollow Stringband, Kahn forsakes his usual themes and presents a child's-eye view of bedtimes, parents, and peanut-butter sandwiches.

the rest:
New Wood ♪♪½ (June Appal, 1974/Philo, 1994)
Home ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1980)
Doing My Job ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1982)
Unfinished Portraits ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1985)
(With John McCutcheon) Sign of the Times ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986)
I'll Be There ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1989)
I Have Seen Freedom ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1991) Companion ♪♪½ (Appalseed, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Woody Guthrie, Joe Hill, Pete Seeger, Tom Paxton, Phil Ochs

▶▶ John McCutcheon, Cathy Fink & Marcy Marxer, Scott Alarik

see also: John McCutcheon, Cathy Fink & Marcy Marxer

Craig Harris

George Kahumoku Jr.

Born early 1950s, in HI.

Like many of Hawaii's slack-key guitarists, George Kahumoku Jr. comes from a family of pickers, most notably his father, George Sr., and younger brother, Moses. Also like many slack-key guitarists, music isn't his only profession: Kahumoku is also a self-employed farmer with degrees in sculpture and agriculture. A player, singer, and composer, Kahumoku began playing professionally at age 13 with Hawaiian singer-songwriter Kui Lee; he also performed with Moses as the Kahumoku Brothers during the '70s and '80s.

what's available: The 12-string guitar that Kahumoku uses throughout Drenched by Music ♪♪♪½ (Dancing Cat, 1997, prod. George Winston, George Kahumoku Jr.) gives this album a fuller guitar sound than most of the other releases on Dancing Cat. The occasional vocal recording is sung in Hawaiian. Steel guitarist Bob Brozman joins Kahumoku on the duet "Hanohano Hawai'i" and Hawaiian singer Diana Aki contributed vocals to "Kaulana O Kawaihae (Famous Is Kawaihae)," a song also performed by Ledward Kaapana and his group Hui Ohana.

influences:
◀◀ Sonny Chillingworth, Gabby Pahinui, Ledward Kaapana, Leonard Kwan, Ray Kane

▶▶ Moses Kahumoku

Brian Mansfield

Moses Kahumoku

Born 1953, in Honolulu, HI.

Moses Kahumoku is known in his home region for more than just his music. In addition to being a noted slack-key guitarist and one half of the popular Kahumoku Brothers (George Kahumoku Jr. is his older sibling), Kahumoku is a well-known activist working for Hawaiian sovereignty as well as a fisherman and farmer. Although he does compose, he's more highly regarded as an interpreter and improviser on his instrument.

what's available: Kahumoku sings on only four of the 14 tracks on Ho' okupu ("The Gift") ♪♪♪½ (Dancing Cat, 1995, prod. George Winston), so the rest of the album focuses on his singular style, which is marked by its arpeggiated melodies, single-note runs, and flamenco influence. It includes a couple of familiar Hawaiian songs, "Hawai'i Aloha" and "Kaula 'Ili," the latter a tune associated with Sonny Chillingworth, who died shortly before the album's release.

influences:
◀◀ Sonny Chillingworth, Gabby Pahinui, Ledward Kaapana, Leonard Kwan, Ray Kane

▶▶ George Kahumoku Jr.

see also: George Kahumoku Jr.

Brian Mansfield

connie kaldor

Connie Kaldor

Born c. 1955.

Connie Kaldor likes being called a "folk chanteuse." It highlights the theater that is so much a part of her creativity. Kaldor is one of the strongest of the folk-influenced artists who have surfaced in Canada in the last three decades. She draws on her experiences as an older woman (in the entertainment world, anything over 30 passes for "older") and a mother; she also endeavors to keep her songs universal rather than exclusively personal.

what's available: Small Cafe ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1997, prod. Paul Campagne), Kaldor's first U.S. release, reveals her as a rich-voiced, contemplative singer with the zing of Joan Armatrading and a fine sense of melody. "What Do They Know?" is a strong rock track (and a caveat to critics everywhere).

influences:

⏮ Sylvia Tyson, Ferron, Holly Near

⏭ Susan Werner

Pamela Murray Winters

Cindy Kallet

Born January 10, 1955, in New York, NY.

Cindy Kallet is a well-respected singer-songwriter hailing from Rockland, Maine. She is widely known for her heartfelt singing, her honest and intelligent songwriting, her skillful playing, and her quietly outrageous humor. Music has always been a part of Kallet's life, from singing in the car with family, to piano and violin lessons at ages seven and eight, to teaching herself guitar at age 11. She began writing songs when she was about 13 years old and as a young adult she was encouraged by her brother, Tony, to find a wider audience for her songs. In 1979, after playing a few concerts on Martha's Vineyard, where she lived for several years, Kallet sent a note to Sandy and Caroline Paton of Folk-Legacy Records in Connecticut, asking if she might send them a tape of her songs. The ensuing correspondence resulted in her appearance at the 1980 Folk-Legacy Festival in Hartford and then in the release of her first album, Working on Wings to Fly, followed by two additional solo albums since then. Kallet's songs arise from just about anything—life's many trials, love (lost, mostly), water (the ocean in particular), and some overtly political topics, although "she never hits us over the head with her concerns," according to a Hartford Advocate review. Kallet enjoys singing and performing with her friends Ellen Epstein Maxwell (vocals, guitar) and Michael Cicone (vocals, hammered dulcimer, piano), and this trio made two recordings—one in 1988 and the second in 1993. While there is some instrumental accompaniment on selected cuts, the a cappella singing of this trio is exceptional on traditional songs, Kallet original compositions, and songs by Bob Dylan, Bruce Springsteen, Dillon Bustin, and Larry Kaplan. One of Kallet's more recent collaborations has been with Gordon Bok, a poet, woodcarver, and songwriter from Camden, Maine. In 1983 the Patons suggested they join their music in a concert or two, and the result was so much fun that they continued to meet occasionally over the next few years. Twelve years later they recorded Neighbors together, which is a wonderful collection of traditional and contemporary pieces (several focused on sailors and the sea) that also features the duo's outstanding guitar skills. Any of these recordings are available through Folk-Legacy Records, or from the artist at P. O. Box 784, Rockland, Maine 04841.

what to buy: Dreaming down a Quiet Line ♪♪♪♪ (Stone's Throw Music, 1989, prod. Cindy Kallet) is filled with Kallet's quiet masterpieces. With help from Gordon Bok, Michael Cicone, Ellen Epstein, and Lisa Kallet-Mare, she presents 13 originals, "Sarah's Song" by Joel Zoss, and the traditional "Cherry Tree Carol." The songs are more about people than nature but she still manages to evoke the stunning images of the shoreline that mark her best work. Her guitar playing adds considerably to the moods she sets. "Song for Margaret" is sung for an infant with the marvelous line, "oh, Margaret, your name is longer than you."

what to buy next: Working on Wings to Fly ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1981/1997, prod. Cindy Kallet, Folk-Legacy) is Kallet's debut recording of 16 original compositions. She accompanies herself with a tasteful guitar and is joined in wonderful harmony on four selections by Ellen Epstein Maxwell and her sister, Lisa Kallet. Songs include "Three-Masted Schooner," about an imaginary sea voyage, "Hang in There," a song of encouragement for a friend, and "Shores of Africa," a song of grim thoughts about the hardened world around us. Cindy Kallet II ♪♪♪ (Folk-Legacy, 1983, prod. Sandy Paton) (cassette only) differs from the first in that there are more complex melodies, more emphatic political statements, and more emphasis on instrumentals. Your choice.

solo outings:

Cindy Kallet, Ellen Epstein & Michael Cicone:

Angels in Daring ♪♪♪ (Overall Music, 1988)

Only Human ♪♪♪ (Overall Music, 1993)

Gordon Bok & Cindy Kallet:
Neighbors ♪♪♪ (Timberhead Music, 1996)

influences:

⏪ Burl Ives, Pete Seeger, Mimi & Dick Fariña, Joni Mitchell, Joan Baez, Tom Paxton

⏩ Sally Rogers, Claudia Schmidt

Heidi Cerrigione and Neal Walters

Kathy Kallick

Born September 19, 1952, in Chicago, IL.

Singer/songwriter Kathy Kallick first made a name for herself in 1975 as a co-founder of the Bay Area bluegrass band the Good Ol' Persons. Originally comprising five women (including Laurie Lewis), the band incorporated swing, Latin, and folk music into their bluegrass sound. Kallick released a solo children's album in 1987 and has since released one children's and two "adult" albums.

what to buy: Use a Napkin (Not Your Mom) ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Alan Senauke, Kathy Kallick) is considered by many to be among the best children's album in recent years. It mixes old-timey country/bluegrass songs with elements of jazz, swing, and zydeco. It contains great originals like the title song, as well as traditional numbers ("Liza Jane") and historic pieces ("Did You See Jackie Robinson Hit That Ball?").

what to buy next: Matters of the Heart ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1993, prod. Todd Phillips), Kallick's first solo album, was a bit of a change of pace from her music with the Good Ol' Persons. The 13 original songs are played on bluegrass instruments plus drums and/or percussion. Piano and accordion appear in spots. Jazz progressions and a rock beat make this something other than a bluegrass album.

the rest:
What Do You Dream About? ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1990/1997)
(With Laurie Lewis) Together ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1991/1995)
Call Me a Taxi ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1996)

influences:

⏪ Good Ol' Persons, Doc Watson

⏩ Laurie Lewis, Sally Van Meter

see also: Good Ol' Persons

Douglas Fulmer

editor's choice
15 old time fiddle albums

Ed Haley, Forked Deer (Rounder)
Various Artists, Virginia Breakdown (County)
Buddy Thomas, Kitty Puss (Rounder)
Benton Flippen, Old Times New Times (Rounder)
John Salyer, Home Recordings 1941–1942 (Berea College)
Tommy Jarrell, Tommy and Fred (County)
Bruce Molsky, Lost Boy (Rounder)
Various Artists, Old Time Fiddle Classics (County)
Hank Bradley, Hassle the Caller (Sage Arts)
Dirk Powell & John Herrmann, One Eyed Dog (Yodel-Ay-Hee)
Bruce Greene, Five Miles of Ellum Wood (BG)
Rafe Stefanini & Bob Herring, Old Paint (Yodel-Ay-Hee)
Lynn "Chirps" Smith, Midwestern Harvest (Marimac)
Lyman Enloe, Fiddle Tunes I Recall (County)
Brad Leftwich, Say Old Man (County)

Rev. Dennis Kamakahi

Born 1953, in Honolulu, HI.

A popular and prolific Hawaiian songwriter, the Rev. Dennis Kamakahi has recorded only rarely as a frontman or solo performer. The son and grandson of slack-key guitarists and a direct descendant of Maui's last chief, Kamakahi grew up with a deep love and respect for Hawaiian musical history that remains evident in his music. He formed the popular group Na Paniolo during the 1960s and in 1973 replaced Gabby Pahinui as the slack-key player in the Sons of Hawaii, a group with which he continues to play. He is an ordained, but rarely practicing, Episcopalian minister.

what's available: When Pua'ena ("Glow Brightly") ♪♪♪½ (Dancing Cat, 1996, prod. George Winston) came out, it marked Kamakahi's first recording session in more than a decade and his kieran kane

first ever as a solo slack-key artist. Sung mostly in Hawaiian, the music is soothing and often romantic in nature, with tunes split between Kamakahi's originals and songs by nineteenth-century Hawaiian royalty.

influences:

⏪ Sons of Hawaii, Gabby Pahinui, Sonny Chillingworth, Leonard Kwan, Raymond Kane

⏩ George Kuo, Hawaiian Style Band

Brian Mansfield

Kieran Kane /The O'Kanes

Born October 7, 1949, in Queens, NY. O'Kanes formed 1986, in Nashville, TN. Disbanded 1990.

Jamie O'Hara (born August 8, 1950, in Toledo, OH), guitar, vocals; Kieran Kane, guitar, vocals.

Kieran Kane began his musical career as a rock 'n' roll drummer at age nine. He also worked as a Los Angeles session musician before moving to Nashville in 1979 and making a name for himself as a writer of songs for Alabama and other acts. Kane recorded for Elektra and Warner Bros. during the early 1980s, reaching the Top 20 six times with songs like "You're the Best" and "It's Who You Love." In 1986 he and songwriting partner Jamie O'Hara formed the O'Kanes and recorded three albums for Columbia. The O'Kanes disbanded in 1990, and Kane began recording on his own. In 1994, he started an artists' cooperative indie label, Dead Reckoning, with Kevin Welch, Harry Stinson, and Tammy Rogers, and has become one of the leading voices of independent music in Nashville.

what's available: Dead Reckoning ♪♪♪♪ (Dead Reckoning, 1995, prod. Harry Stinson, Kieran Kane) was a ground-breaking album because it was one of the first Nashville albums produced by an artist-run independent label. Since Kane was working on his own terms, this is a stripped-down affair (even more so than his other records), with songs that may take a while to get under the skin but stay there longer. The instrumentals center around Kane on guitar, drummer Harry Stinson, and fiddler Tammy Rogers (all co-owners of the label). Guitarist Mike Henderson brings his blues bite in on three cuts, including a cover of Buck Owens's "Love's Gonna Live Here." Emmylou Harris and Lucinda Williams contribute harmonies to "This Dirty Little Town." On the Dead Reckoners' A Night of Reckoning ♪♪♪ (Dead Reckoning, 1997, prod. Harry Stinson) Kane joins compatriots Mike Henderson, Tammy Rodgers, Harry Stinson, Kevin Welch, and others for an album-length guitar pull that defines the label's raison d'être as well as anything. Kane contributes two tunes, "I Desire Fire" and "Rocky Road," an O'Kanes-era tune.

worth searching for: The O'Kanes had only a half-dozen hits (and one #1, "Can't Stop My Heart from Loving You") in their four years together; the act's influence has outstripped its success. The O'Kanes ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1987, prod. Kieran Kane, Jamie O' Hara) has the lion's share of the hits. Find My Way Home ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1994) is Kane's first solo album after the breakup of the O'Kanes.

influences:

⏪ Foster & Lloyd, John Prine

⏩ Kevin Welch, Lucinda Williams

Brian Mansfield and Daniel Durchholz

Ray Kane /Raymond Kane

Born 1925, in 'Ele'ele, Kaua'i, HI.

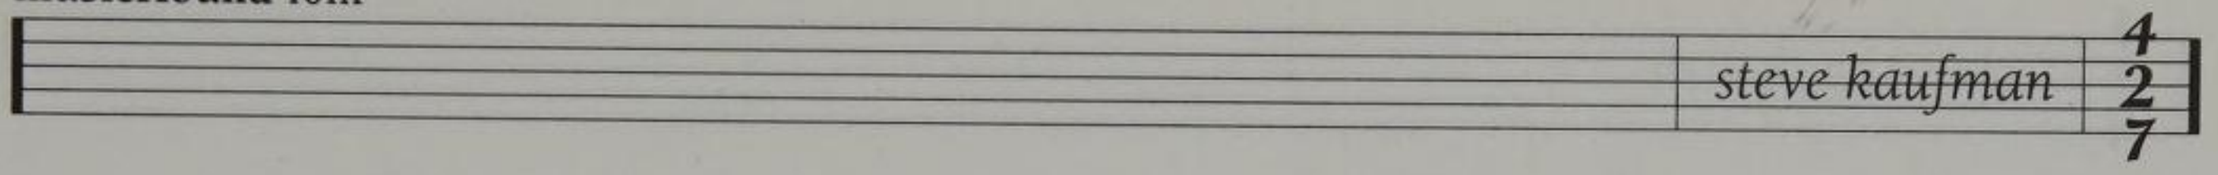
One of the oldest slack-key guitarists who still performs regularly, Ray Kane grew up the son of a fisherman and traded fish for guitar lessons as a youngster. He didn't begin playing seriously until after a stint in the armed services, making his first recordings in 1961 and his first full-length album more than a dozen years later. Though he was the first slack-key player to give a full-length solo recital, he made his living as a welder through most of his career. In 1987 Kane received a National Endowment for the Arts Heritage Fellowship Award, and he continues to record and tour frequently.

what's available: Kane relishes his role as one of the elder statesmen of slack key, and half the charm of the live Master of the Slack Key Guitar ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Robert Mugge) are the history lessons Kane offers with the performances. For a more purely musical experience, there's Punahele ♪♪♪½ (Dancing Cat, 1994, prod. George Winston). It features a version of Kane's most popular tune, "Punahele" (written in 1938) and vocals on four tracks, including "Hawai'i Aloha."

worth searching for: Kane recorded two albums for the Hawaiian Tradewinds label: Nanakuli's Raymond Kane (Tradewinds, 1974), which featured a backing band, and Slack Key (Tradewinds), which contained a half-dozen tracks recorded by Kane in 1961, along with six cuts from Leonard Kwan.

influences:

⏪ Sonny Chillingworth, Gabby Pahinui



Rev. Dennis Kamakahi, George Kuo

Brian Mansfield

Lucy Kaplansky

Born February 16, 1960, in Chicago, IL.

You might say Lucy Kaplansky's career didn't start to take off until she stopped practicing—psychology, that is. As part of the late '80s Greenwich Village folk scene that spawned Shawn Colvin, Suzanne Vega, and John Gorka, Kaplansky emerged as a highly sought-after background singer, contributing to such albums as Colvin's Steady On, Dar Williams's Mortal City, and most of Gorka's albums (that's her and Colvin lending the plaintive harmonies to his 1991 hit, "Houses in the Fields"). Still, she kept her day job counseling drug addicts and mentally ill patients at a local hospital and had even started her own practice when longtime pal and former duo partner Colvin agreed to produce the covers of Richard Thompson, David Massengill, Bill Morrissey, and Cliff Eberhardt tunes that make up the bulk of her 1994 solo debut, The Tide. That album, and a high-profile tour as Gorka's opening act, brought her name and her stirring, soulful alto out of the background. But she truly found her voice on 1996's Flesh and Bone, an engaging album that suggests her only sessions from now on should be recording, not therapy.

what's available: The Tide ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1994, prod. Shawn Colvin) is a pleasant tribute to her folkie peers, highlighted by a bluegrass version of Sting's "Secret Journey" that hints at her interpretive savvy. Flesh and Bone ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1996, prod. Anton Sanko) is a stronger, warmer, and more personal effort, partly because Kaplansky co-wrote eight of the 12 tunes. Yearning, acoustic guitar–driven folk-pop is still her forte, but such full-throttle country numbers as Gram Parsons's "The Return of the Grievous Angel," her own "Love Is the Ride," and a rollicking bluegrass take on Nick Lowe's "(What's So Funny 'Bout) Peace, Love, and Understanding" reveal her playful side.

influences:

Suzanne Vega, Joni Mitchell

Shawn Colvin, Dar Williams

David Okamoto

Steve Kaufman

Born April 20, 1957, in New York, NY.

Steve Kaufman was introduced to music by his father, a jazz pianist, and his mother, a classically trained pianist. At the age of four, he started to play the piano and later moved on to the cello. At 10 he began playing the guitar, but after a few years of strumming, he put the guitar under the bed. At 14, he picked it up again and has not put it down since. Kaufman is the only three-time winner of the prestigious National Flatpicking Championships held in Winfield, Kansas, capturing first place in 1978, 1984, and 1986. His music covers a broad range of styles including bluegrass favorites, popular swing standards, Irish and Appalachian folk tunes, folk and country classics, and novelty tunes. He has been pleasing crowds from California to Austria since 1976, performing in a wide variety of settings, from elementary schools and colleges to major bluegrass festivals and concerts. Perhaps best known as a teacher, Kaufman keeps busy writing instructional manuals for Mel Bay Publications and audio and video instructional material for Homespun Tapes. His instruction catalog shows nearly 25 titles. He now lives in Alcoa, Tennessee.

what to buy: Bullet Train ♪♪♪ (Sleeping Bear Productions, 1997, prod. Steve Kaufman) is Kaufman's latest release and contains an interesting selection of tunes, all played with verve and finesse by one of the finest flatpickers around. His guitar playing is astounding in terms of speed and precision, but he's not just flashy. As Doc Watson says, "the boy can pick."

what to buy next: Not Much Work for Saturday ♪♪♪ (Hay Holler, 1996, prod. Wayne Henderson, Steve Kaufman) teams Kaufman with Wayne Henderson, another hot picker and renowned luthier. The two tear though a collection of standards that stretch from "Freight Train" to "Bells of St. Mary." Henderson's unique style—he uses fingerpicks to get a flatpicked sound—complements Kaufman's straight-ahead flatpicking, and the contrast keeps things from getting even the least bit boring.

the rest:

Frost on the Window ♪♪♪½ (Sleeping Bear Productions, 1986) (cassette only)
Strange Company ♪♪♪½ (Sleeping Bear Productions, 1990) (cassette only)
Breaking Out ♪♪♪½ (Sleeping Bear Productions, 1990)
To the Lady ♪♪♪½ (Sleeping Bear Productions, 1993)
The Arkansas Traveler ♪♪♪½ (Sleeping Bear Productions, 1994)
One Eye Open ♪♪♪½ (Andy Owens Project, 1996)
Star of the Country Down ♪♪♪½ (Sleeping Bear Productions, 1998)

influences:

Mark O'Connor, Dan Crary, Doc Watson

Allen Shadd

Neal Walters

jorma kaukonen

Jorma Kaukonen

See: Hot Tuna

Dolores Keane

Born in Caherlistrane, Co. Galway, Ireland.

The surname Keane was, and is still, O Catháin in the Gaelic language, and has ancient connections with the O'Neills. In the year 1260, the Irish Annals record the death in battle against the English invaders, of the "Chieftain Brian O'Neill . . . and 15 chieftains of the O'Kanes." Dolores Keane's family has lived at Caherlistrane in County Galway for generations and is justifiably famous for its singing and musicianship. Her own talent blossomed early: "Learning songs and tunes was like learning to walk," she once said. A neighbor of Frankie Gavin, Keane appeared on De Danann's first album. By that time she was already a mesmerizing presence on the Irish traditional music scene. She left the band to perform with her husband, John Faulkner, reunited with De Danann for a time (including a memorable performance of "Let It Be," dueting with Mary Black), and then eventually began to pursue a solo career. She is, as Nanci Griffith describes her, "the voice of Ireland."

what to buy: The Best of Dolores Keane ♪♪♪♪ (Dara, 1997, prod. various) is a compilation of 16 of the best songs from Keane's catalog. In addition to selections from her previous solo albums, it includes collaborations with Emmylou Harris, De Danann, Liam Bradley, and Mick Hanly. Keane's best material is traditional and she can be compelling. Her work with De Danann and her various collaborations with husband John Faulkner attest to that. Her last several solo albums have been more contemporary in nature as she tries to follow in the commercially successful footsteps of Mary Black and others. Fortunately this retrospective stays primarily in a traditional vein with only a nod towards her more contemporary efforts.

what to buy next: Keane's solo album There Was a Maid ♪♪♪½ (Claddagh, 1978) and her collaborations with Faulkner contain some great material; any of several releases are worthwhile. Try Farewell to Eirinn ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1981, prod. John Faulkner, Dolores Keane, Seamus O'Neill, Carsten Linde), Broken Hearted I'll Wander ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1981, prod. P.J. Curtis), or Sail Óg Rua ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1984, prod. Dolores Keane, John Faulkner). You can't miss with any of them.

the rest:
Dolores Keane ♪♪♪ (self produced)
Solid Ground ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993)
Lion in a Cage ♪♪½ (Rings End Road, 1989)

influences:
Sarah Keane, Rita Keane
Niamh Parsons, Eleanor McEvoy, Karan Casey

see also: De Danann

Neal Walters

James Keane

Born February 7, 1948, in Drimnagh, Dublin, Ireland.

While James Keane's achievements may have been somewhat overshadowed by that of his older fiddle-playing brother, Chieftains member Seán Keane, they are impressive nevertheless, and Keane must be counted as one of Ireland's top exponents of the B/C button accordion. Keane is first and foremost a "reel man": he can play reel after reel for hours with the same great drive and energy, a penchant which one can undoubtedly trace back to his days with the Castle Ceili Band of Dublin.

Keane was born in a musical family. His mother and father were both fiddle players, from Longford and Clare respectively, and they made sure to expose Seán and James to as much traditional music as they could find, taking them to the Dublin Pipers' Club and to the many local and national fleadhs (music festivals). Being a bit of a rebel, James went against the family tradition and became interested in the accordion, beginning at age six when he began toying with a small instrument his uncle Mick Keane had left at his parents' house. As soon as he started showing promise, his father got him his own instrument. When asked about his early influences, Keane names musicians like Clare piper Willie Clancy and accordion players Joe Cooley, whom he met again years later in San Francisco, Sonny Brogan, and Bill Hart. By age 11, Keane was entering competitions, and by the time he was 16 was a member of the famous Castle Ceili Band alongside such performers as Clare fiddle players John Kelly and Joe Ryan, flute players Michael Tubridy and Mick O'Connor, and Bridie Lafferty on piano. It was during the mid-1960s that Keane accomplished the unprecedented feat of winning three consecutive All-Ireland senior titles on the accordion: in 1964, 1965, and 1966. In 1967 he came to the United States on a three-week tour with the Loughrea Ceili Band, composed of Joe Burke (accordion), Kathleen Collins (fiddle), and Paddy Carty (flute). As soon as he returned to Ireland, Keane began making plans to return. He was back in New York the very next year to start performing at the John Barleycorn, a well-known Manhattan "ballad pub," with Dublin-born singer Michael "Jesse" Owens. This was a quite a change of pace for Keane, who could no longer just play the traditional jigs and reels but mostly had to accompany songs. However, in the early 1970s he recorded two instrumental albums, one of them being the 1971 release Sweet and Traditional, which also featured Longford fiddler Paddy Reynolds and New York-born accordionist Charlie Mulvihill. The album has now been partially reissued as Atlantic Wave, with newly recorded tracks by Keane. Before he left Dublin, Keane had shared an apartment with two members of the famous Johnstons, Paul Brady and Mick Moloney, both of whom credit Keane with their introduction to traditional Irish music. During the 1970s Moloney would also find himself in the United States, working towards a Ph.D. in folklore and as a producer of recordings of Irish traditional music. Keane was one of the musicians recorded for Irish Traditional Instrumental Music from the East Coast of America, Volume I, one of the anthologies Moloney produced for Rounder Records in 1977. In 1980, soon after Keane moved to Canada to join the band Ryan's Fancy, he was invited by Moloney to record for Green Linnet. The result was the release of Keane's powerful Roll away the Reel World, with brother Seán playing fiddle on a few tracks. Settling back in New York in 1983, Keane resumed his musical activities in the city and renewed his collaboration with Moloney, touring with the Green Fields of America and appearing on Moloney's 1984 duet album Uncommon Bonds alongside fiddler Eugene O'Donnell. In 1991 Keane appeared with many other Irish performers in an event organized to bring attention to the plight of Joseph Doherty, an Irish patriot held in a U.S. jail, a recording of which was released as The Rights of Man. Keane's long-awaited second solo album, That's the Spirit, finally came out in 1994, with a little surprise for his fans. The preceding year, Keane had switched from his trademark Paolo Soprani accordion to a Castagnari box, the difference in sound being quite noticeable on the recording. James Keane's latest recording project, just released on the Shanachie label, is an album entitled With Friends Like These. It features legendary musicians like Tommy Peoples, Matt Molloy, Liam O'Flynn, Paddy Glackin, and Kevin Conneff, all of whom Keane met around 1962–63, when traditional music sessions were taking off in Dublin.

what to buy: Roll away the Reel World ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1980, prod. Mick Moloney) is the classic Keane recording. The duet tracks of the two Keane brothers are especially good, for instance on the reels "The Tempest/Sean Frank," but Keane's accordion playing is nowhere better than on the opening reel medley "Crossing the Shannon" or on "Master Crowley's," one of his favorite sets. That's the Spirit ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Gabriel Donahue, James Keane) is Keane's first album recorded with his new Castagnari accordion. This, as well as the aggressive guitar and bodhrán accompaniments, account for the album's somewhat different sound. However, the gain in precision that the new instrument allows, as Keane explains in the notes, serves well his energetic style and easily makes up for whatever raw edge from the old Paolo Soprani may have been lost in the transition. Listen to him play Martin Mulhaire's reel "Carmel Mahoney Mulhaire," which he had recorded as "O'Mahoney's" on the previous album, and you'll be convinced. With Friends Like These ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1998, prod. Garry O'Briain, Greg Anderson) is Keane's "going home" album, recorded with the musicians with whom Keane used to play back in Dublin when a teenager. They also happen to constitute a virtual "who's who" of Irish traditional players: Tommy Peoples and Paddy Glackin (fiddles), Matt Molloy (flute), Liam O'Flynn (uilleann pipes), Kevin Conneff (bodhrán, vocals), with Garry O'Briain (keyboards, guitar, mandocello) providing the accompaniments.

what to buy next: Although Atlantic Wave ♪♪♪♪½ (Kells Music, 1997, prod. Tom Horan, Paddy Noonan) is a reissue of sorts, half of it being from Sweet and Traditional Music of Ireland ♪♪♪♪ (Rego, 1971, prod. Paddy Noonan), Keane's tracks are brand new. The producers and performers were uncomfortable with the electric bass part on the original recordings, and Keane, who already had re-recorded some of his original tunes on later solo albums, asked to redo his tracks entirely, although still with piano great Felix Dolan as the accompanist. Keane's accordion would be easy to miss in the ensemble sound of The Rights of Man: The Concert for Joseph Doherty ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Mick Moloney), but he plays a long and fiery solo on the excellent Gaelic Roots ♪♪♪♪½ (Kells Music, 1997, prod. Séamus Connolly), recorded live at Boston College during the festival of the same name.

worth searching for: Keane's great solo on the reels "Within a Mile of Dublin/The Spike Island Lassies" is only one of 22 reasons to look for Irish Traditional Instrumental Music from the East Coast of America, Volume I ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1977, prod. Mick Moloney), an anthology of some of the best Irish musicians in America today. Collectors will undoubtedly want the original version, on Sweet and Traditional Music of Ireland, for its historical value.

influences:

◀◀ Willie Clancy, Joe Cooley, Sonny Brogan, Bill Harte

▶▶ Joe Burke, Bobby Gardiner, Billy McComiskey, John Whelan

see also: Seán Keane

Philippe Varlet

Seán Keane

Born July 12, 1946, in Drimnagh, Dublin, Ireland.

A member of the internationally renowned Irish band, the Chieftains, Seán Keane was born to fiddle-playing parents who had moved from their native counties of Clare and Longford to the Dublin suburbs. Although traditional music was odd to the average Dubliner and traditional musicians were not welcome in public houses at the time, Keane and his brother, accordionist James Keane, were raised in a house always open to musicians and were encouraged to study dancing and music. Seán Keane's first love was apparently the uilleann pipes, which he first heard played by his uncle Peter Hanley. His hands being to small for the chanter, however, he started learning the fiddle, first with lessons on violin playing and classical music. But traditional music was never too far away, as Keane's parents took their children to hear it whenever possible. By 1960 Keane had abandoned the classical training and was already playing in several bands. In particular, he had joined the famous Castle Ceili Band, which counted among its members Seán's brother as well as a virtual who's who of Clare musicians in Dublin: John Kelly Sr., Joe Ryan, Michael Tubridy, and others. By age 16 Keane had left school and started working, eventually settling on a job at the post office. He was also frequenting O'Donoghue's, the only Dublin pub to allow traditional music and therefore the place to meet other musicians. In 1964 a particular event sealed then 18-year-old Keane's future; he became the grand winner of the fiddle competition held on the Ceoltóirí Cualann radio show and was invited by Seán Ó Riada, who was one of the judges, to join the group. Among its members was, of course, Paddy Moloney who, just a year earlier, had launched the Chieftains by recording, on the Claddagh label, an album conceived similarly to the ideas of Ó Riada. It wasn't long before Keane was the new Chieftain. While the Chieftains were starting to spread their wings, Ó Riada's health was declining rapidly and Ceoltóirí Cualann was dismissed shortly before Ó Riada died in October 1971. With Moloney fully in control as leader of the band and manager of Claddagh Records, the Chieftains' star continued to rise steadily. After a tremendously successful concert at the Royal Albert Hall of London in 1975, the musicians took the plunge and turned professional. It was that same year that Seán Keane recorded his first solo album, the impressive Gusty's Frolicks, for Claddagh. In all likelihood, Chieftains-related commitments have kept Keane busy enough over the years that he has had to be particular about when and what to record on his own. After a guest appearance on his brother's Roll away the Reel World in 1980, Keane participated in the anthology An Fhidil Sraith II (The Fiddle, Volume II) the same year, and recorded his second solo album, simply called Seán Keane, in 1981. His next trip to the studio was for the 1985 album Contentment Is Wealth, a fantastic duet recording with Roscommon flute player Matt Molloy, who had joined the Chieftains in 1979, and ace guitarist Arty McGlynn, later with Patrick Street. A third solo album, Jig It in Style, came out in 1990, as well as a book-and-tape set of fiddle tunes titled 50 Fiddle Solos. Keane's last album appearance to date was on the 1992 The Fire Aflame, recorded with Molloy and Liam O'Flynn.

what to buy: Gusty's Frolicks ♪♪♪♪♪ (Claddagh, 1975, prod. Paddy Moloney) is a masterful display of pure, unaccompanied, traditional fiddle playing. By the same token, this is not an album to listen to in a casual manner. Keane's love of the pipes and their idiom is plainly in evidence throughout, in the repertoire chosen as well as in the complex ornamentation developed by the fiddler. Seán Keane plays on four tracks of his brother James's Roll away the Reel World ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1980, prod. Mick Moloney), an excellent album made all the more remarkable by these masterful duets. Contentment Is Wealth ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1985, prod. Brian Masterson), with Chieftains colleague Matt Molloy (flute), is a superb album of tremendous duet playing, supported by Arty McGlynn's superior guitar accompaniments. Keane's only solo track is a mesmerizing tour-de-force where an imitation of piobaireachd is followed by William Marshall's strathspey "The Marquis of Huntley" and the high-wire hornpipe "The Mathematician," complete with flying spiccato bowing. On Jig It in Style ♪♪♪♪ (Claddagh, 1990, prod. Brian Masterson, Paul Brady, Seán Keane), the emphasis seems to be on the mix of styles, as diverse as Scottish tunes learned from the recordings of Scott Skinner to American classics like "The Tennessee Stud" and "Heartbreak Hotel," with appropriate Dobro and bass accompaniment. Paul Brady's guitar and piano backing and the participation of former Planxty piper Liam O'Flynn give the album an enjoyable variety, but the overwhelming complexity of Keane's technique can sound somewhat contrived at times. Intended as a teaching package, 50 Fiddle Solos ♪♪♪♪ (Conway Editions, 1990) is a book-and-tape set (distributed in the United States by Music Sales) presenting fiddle tunes played one at a time, with accompaniment on keyboards, bouzouki, guitar, and bodhrán. Keane is in great company on The Fire Aflame ♪♪♪♪♪ (Claddagh, 1992, prod. Seán Keane, Matt Molloy, Liam O'Flynn), with Molloy (flute), O'Flynn (uilleann pipes), and McGlynn (guitar). As on Contentment Is Wealth, to which it is a worthy sequel, Keane appears to be toning down his fiddling for the sake of the ensemble playing, and all for the better.

worth searching for: Seán Keane was one of four fiddle players featured on the LP An Fhidil Sraith II (The Fiddle, Volume II) ♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1980, prod. Paddy Glackin), an outstanding collection of unaccompanied traditional fiddle playing. Keane's second solo album, Seán Keane ♪♪♪♪ (Ogham, 1981/Shanachie, 1982, prod. Brian Masterson, Seán Keane), is no longer available but well worth a search, if only for the fiddler's performance of the showpieces "The Banks" and "The Contradiction."

influences:

◀◀ Patrick Kelly, Willie Clancy, Ceoltóirí Cualann

▶▶ Frankie Gavin, Tommy Peoples, Paddy Glackin, Seán Montgomery

see also: Chieftains, James Keane

Philippe Varlet

James Keelaghan

Born in Calgary, Alberta, Canada

James Keelaghan is one of the many young Canadians who've hit the folk scene with a grace and panache that makes some wonder if there's something in the drinking water up there. He first gained acclaim for his songwriting skills; his ballad "Jenny Bryce" was published in Sing Out! Keelaghan's first appearance on the main stage at the Winnipeg Folk Festival was the focus of a CBC documentary. Since then, he's toured extensively and was the first Canadian to perform at the 1996 Hong Kong Folk Festival. He was also part of the Canadian Festival Tour with Ferron, Connie Kaldor, and Stephen Fearing. Keelaghan is a careful musician. His songs are precisely worded, the words precisely sung. His sensitivity to the natural world is clear even when his lyrics aren't explicitly about environmental concerns; you can hear his native Alberta behind every song.

what's available: My Skies ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Don Pennington) won a Juno award for Best Roots and Traditional Album. It contains some sterling songs, miniature movies caught in four-minute skeins of melody. "River Run" is an environmental warning presented as a soft ballad; "Glory Bound" is an energetic look back at a friend who died young. All the songs are unexpected, free of cliché, and full of heart. The same can be said for A Recent Future ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Don Pennington), which is even better arranged than its predecessor. As always, Keelaghan points a finger at the injustices many people choose to hide or overlook. He ducks south of the border for "Lazarus," a scathing look at the posthumous acclaim given to Richard Nixon.

influences:

◀◀ Stan Rogers, Ferron, Al Stewart, Paul Simon

▶▶ Ellis Paul, Tom Prasada-Rao

Pamela Murray Winters

Robert Earl Keen Jr.

Born January 11, 1956, in Houston, TX.

Less weirdly fascinating than his old Texas college buddy Lyle Lovett, this singer/songwriter has penned a handful of the best (and unfortunately unknown) country songs of the past decade. He's friendly and straightforward and brags about his love of old-fashioned Texas hats, food, and style. His songs occasionally match his personality, especially when he weighs in on funny, dysfunctional Christmas tales and (of course) barbecue. But more frequently they're dark, outlaw story-songs about men who've snapped or hard-luck couples wavering between a serene future or becoming the next Bonnie and Clyde. Among his Austin peers, Keen's writing commands respect; Joe Ely did a great rock 'n' roll version of "The Road Goes on Forever" (later recorded by the Highwaymen) and Lovett continues to perform "This Old Porch," which he co-wrote with Keen during their Texas A&M days.

what to buy: Many of the characters on A Bigger Piece of Sky ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1993, prod. Garry Velletri) are as hopeless as those on Bruce Springsteen's Nebraska, but they have a distinctly Texas edge, such as the frustrated narrator who wants to blow you away or the stud with the trunk full of Pearl beer.

what to buy next: West Textures ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1989, prod. Jim Rooney) is an early portrait of the still-developing artist; "The Road Goes on Forever" is a classic story song, and there's some great youthful energy in the rock songs, but it's a little cluttered and filled with clunky phrases. Gringo Honeymoon ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1994, prod. Garry Velletri) contains Keen's live romp "Barbecue," but it doesn't quite have the focused power of Bigger Piece of Sky.

what to avoid: No. 2 Live Dinner ♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1996, prod. Lloyd Maines) is an interesting but not particularly meaty album that serves as a holding pattern until Keen can go back to the studio.

garrison keillor

the rest:
No Kinda Dancer ♪♪♪½ (Philo/Rounder, 1984)
The Live Album ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1988)
Picnic ♪♪♪ (Arista Texas, 1997)

worth searching for: Two great cover versions of Keen's "The Road Goes on Forever" appear on Joe Ely's Love and Danger ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1992, prod. Tony Brown, Joe Ely) and the Highwaymen's The Road Goes on Forever ♪♪♪ (Liberty, 1995, prod. Don Was).

influences:
⏮ Lyle Lovett, Joe Ely, Townes Van Zandt, Johnny Cash, Waylon Jennings
⏭ Richard Buckner, Billy Ray Cyrus, Bottle Rockets, Tracy Byrd

Steve Knopper

Garrison Keillor

Born Gary Edward Keillor, August, 7 1942, in Anoka, MN.

Garrison Keillor is best known as the author of several best-selling books and the host of National Public Radio's Prairie Home Companion, which offers him a weekly forum as a monologuist, sketch player, and singer. As a vocalist, Keillor's quiet, serviceable bass lacks range and power, but can be pleasingly expressive, especially on gospel, country, and folk material. Keillor's musical work is greatly aided by his playful writer's nature, especially on radio where he enjoys combining public domain ditties with well-known poems and prayers, or retrofitting classic lyrics to make a sharp comic point. The power of his ideas, whether comic, sad, whimsical, or strange, gives his work an undeniable energy and charm. Keillor began broadcasting A Prairie Home Companion (an inside reference to a local cemetery) over Minnesota Public Radio in 1974. It was there he introduced audiences to his mythical hometown Lake Wobegon. Keillor's monologues are not unlike Frank Capra's best films. While he extols the humorous eccentricities and virtues of small-town life and people, he uncovers the scary, sometimes paranoid undercurrents inherent in a reclusive, off-the-beaten-path existence. The show's sketches are consistently funnier, but Keillor's Lake Wobegon stories are the backbone of each and every show. Keillor retired the program at its national peak in 1987, only to return a few years later with The American Radio Company of the Air. The slick, New York–based program never really clicked, and soon Keillor returned to his original format. A fine presenter, shrewd judge of material, and underrated comic, Keillor may well be radio's last great variety star.

what to buy: Keillor combines T.S. Eliot's obsession with cats and Peter Schickele's penchant for musical parody with his own folksy narrative powers on Garrison Keillor/Frederica Von Stade: Songs of the Cat ♪♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1992, prod. John McClure) and comes up with a thematic winner. Frederica von Stade adds classical appeal, but it's Keillor's show. Also, Keillor's lengthy run on A Prairie Home Companion is smartly compiled on several sets available from the Wireless and Land's End catalogs as well as your local bookstore. Most enjoyable are Lake Wobegon Days ♪♪♪♪ (HighBridge/PHC, 1986, prod. Lynn Cruise) and Comedy Theater ♪♪♪♪ (Highbridge, 1997, prod. Peter O'bleness, Garrison Keillor). Both are four-tape sets.

what to buy next: Keillor's playful bass vocals are put to good use on harmonies with Kate MacKenzie and Robin and Linda Williams on Garrison Keillor & the Hopeful Gospel Quartet ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1992, prod. Chet Atkins), and is closer to the music he does on the radio.

what to avoid: Unless you're of an extremely religious bent and speak more than a little Norwegian, Now It's Christmas Time ♪♪ (RCA, 1994/Angel, 1997, prod. John McClure) is pretty heavy-handed stuff, with only casual sidesteps into humor.

the rest:
News from Lake Wobegon ♪♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1983/1997)
Ain't That Good News ♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1987)
A Prairie Home Companion with Garrison Keillor: The Final Performance ♪♪ (HighBridge, 1987)
A Prairie Home Companion Anniversary Album: The First Five Years ♪♪♪½ (HighBridge, 1988)
A Prairie Home Companion: The 2nd Annual Farewell Performance ♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1988)
Prairie Home Comedy ♪♪♪½ (HighBridge, 1989)
Lake Wobegon Loyalty Days ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1989) (cassette only)
A Prairie Home Companion: The 3rd Annual Farewell Performance ♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1990)
A Prairie Home Companion: The 4th Annual Farewell Performance ♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1990)
American Radio Company First Season ♪♪½ HighBridge, 1990)
More News from Lake Wobegon ♪♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1990)
Prairie Home Companion: Tourists ♪♪½ (HighBridge, 1991)
Prairie Home Companion 10th Anniversary ♪♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1991)
Local Man Moves to the City ♪♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1991)
WLT: A Radio Romance ♪♪½ (HighBridge, 1991)
Garrison Keillor's Stories ♪♪♪½ (HighBridge, 1992)
A Visit to Mark Twain's House ♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1992)

Lake Wobegon USA ♪♪♪♪ (Highbridge, 1993) (cassette only)
The Book of Guys ♪♪ (Penguin/HighBridge, 1994)
A Prairie Home Companion: 20th Anniversary Collection ♪♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1994)
Guy Noir: Radio Private Eye ♪♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1995)
A Prairie Home Christmas ♪♪½ (HighBridge, 1995)
Horrors ♪♪♪ (HighBridge/PHC, 1996)
Three Dozen Poems ♪♪ (HighBridge, 1996)
Johnny Appleseed ♪♪½ (Rabbit Ears, 1996)
Parables That Jesus Told ♪♪ (Rabbit Ears, 1996)
The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn ♪♪♪½ (Penguin Audio, 1996)
The Family Radio ♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1988/1997)
Mother Father Uncle Aunt: A New Monologue Collection ♪♪♪ (HighBridge, 1997)
Wobegon Boy ♪♪♪½ (HighBridge, 1997)

worth searching for: The stories of faith and spirituality are unusually poignant on Gospel Birds and Other Stories of Lake Wobegon ♪♪♪♪ (PHC, 1985/1992).

influences:
◀◀ Cecil Adams, John Henry Faulk, Jean Shepherd, Bob & Ray, Arthur Godfrey
▶▶ Rob Fisher/Coffee Club Orchestra, Noah Adams

Ken Burke

Paul Kelly

Born January 12, 1955, in Adelaide, Australia.

In the late '80s, it seemed that Australian folk-rocker Paul Kelly was positioned for, if not stardom, then enduring esteem. If, for example, John Hiatt could always count on major-label interest and solid sales, why couldn't one of Down Under's best singer-songwriters? Kelly, after all, possesses a convincing voice, both as a singer and composer. He is that rare songwriter with the ability to be topical without seeming preachy, personal without seeming cloying, literate without seeming haughty. And he's not afraid to break the mold, frequently writing from the perspective of a female protagonist. Kelly began performing solo as a youth in his hometown of Adelaide, Australia. After relocating to Melbourne in the late '70s, he put together a series of backup bands and entered the studio. By the late 1980s, Kelly led a crack band, the Messengers (originally called the Coloured Girls in Australia), and garnered the attention of U.S. label A&M. Unfortunately, three critically hailed A&M titles—1987's Gossip, 1988's Under the Sun, and 1989's So Much Water, So Close to Home—stirred little commercial interest; none remain in print. After ties with A&M were severed, Kelly put out one CD, Comedy, on the Southern California rock indie label, Doctor Dream. It was his last recording featuring the Messengers. Now solo, Kelly has been affiliated with Vanguard since 1994. His profile, however, has never been lower since he first arrived on these shores.

what to buy: Comedy ♪♪♪♪½ (Doctor Dream, 1992, prod. Alan Thorne, Paul Kelly) is the best of Kelly's post-A&M efforts. He sounds most at home, bolstered by the soulful folk-rock backing of the since-disbanded Messengers. Expertly crafted songs such as "Wintercoat" and "Sydney from a 727" (an affectionate nod to Jimmie Dale Gilmore's "Dallas") come to life with support from Kelly's regular crew.

what to buy next: Live at the Continental and the Esplanade ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1996) provides a useful overview of Kelly's career. With his A&M catalog relegated to the "used" bins, this 14-song collection provides a introduction to superior older material, including "Careless," "Dumb Things," and "To Her Door."

the rest:
Wanted Man ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1994)
Deeper Water ♪♪♪, (Vanguard, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, Graham Parker, John Hiatt
▶▶ Dan Bern

Steven Stolder

Ken Keppeler

See: Bayou Seco

The Kennedys /Pete Kennedy /Pete & Maura Kennedy

Formed 1992, in Austin, TX.

Pete Kennedy, guitar and vocals; Maura Kennedy, guitar and vocals.

Jangly, retro-'60s rock, guitar melodies, and warm, Everly Brothers-like vocal harmonies have made Fairfax, Virginia-based husband and wife duo, Pete and Maura Kennedy, one of contemporary folk music's most exciting acts. A former sideman for Kate Wolf, Mary Chapin Carpenter, and Nanci Griffith, Pete Kennedy met his future wife and musical collaborator, Maura, who had previously sung with the Delta Rays, at a picking party in Austin in 1992. Their first date was at Buddy Holly's

4/3/4 the kentucky colonels

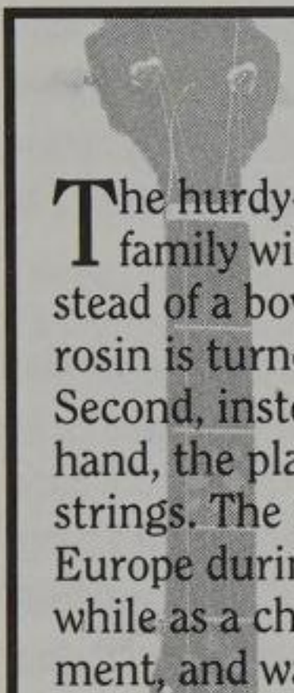
hurdy-gurdy



The hurdy-gurdy is a member of the violin family with two unusual features. First, instead of a bow, a wooden wheel treated with rosin is turned by a crank to scrape the strings. Second, instead of using the fingers of the left hand, the player uses a keyboard to stop the strings. The instrument originated in Western Europe during the Middle Ages, was used for a while as a church instrument and a folk instrument, and was briefly taken up by the classical tradition. Currently it is used mostly in the folk revival, from Spain to Sweden, and is particularly popular in France. There are various kinds of hurdy-gurdies in use. Some have guitar-shaped bodies with flat backs and curved-in sides; others have lute bodies, bowl-backed with an oval cross-section. All have melody strings as well as drones that sound constantly while the instrument is played, producing a sound like the offspring of a bagpipe and a fiddle. By the way, the hurdy-gurdy is not the instrument popular among organ-grinders with monkeys. That instrument is a barrel-organ, but is often mistaken for a hurdy-gurdy because both are played by turning a crank.

Steve Winick

grave-site in Lubbock, Texas, while their first public appearance came during a Nanci Griffith concert in the Beatles' hometown of Liverpool, England. They've since performed and recorded as a duo.

what to buy: The folk-rock sounds of the Byrds and the Beatles are given a modern twist on the Kennedy's second album, Life Is Large ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Pete Kennedy). With guest appearances by Roger McGuinn, Steve Earle, Charlie Sexton, Kelly Willis, Nils Lofgrin, the Dixie Hummingbirds, John Gorka, Peter Holsapple, and Susan Cowsill, the all-original album rocks with an infectious, pop-flavored, intensity.

what to buy next: Pete and Maura Kennedy's debut album, River of Fallen Stars ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Pete Kennedy) is a more intimate recording with most songs flavored by Celtic and British influences. In addition to 11 original songs, the duo joins with bassist Stu Voorman and drummer Stumpy Joe Jr. on re-workings of Richard Thompson's "Wall of Death" and "House on Fire," co-written by Tom Kimmel and Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers' Stan Lynch.

influences:

◀◀ Beatles, Byrds, Richard Thompson

▶▶ Clive Gregson & Christine Collister, Tim & Mollie O'Brien

see also: Nanci Griffith, Mary Chapin Carpenter, Kate Wolf

Craig Harris

The Kentucky Colonels /The Country Boys

Formed 1958 as the Country Boys; became the Kentucky Colonels in 1963. Disbanded 1965.

Roland White, mandolin, banjo, vocals (1958–65); Clarence White, guitar, vocals (1958–65); Eric White, bass (1958–1961); Billy Ray Lathum, banjo (1958–65); LeRoy Mack, Dobro (1959–65); Roger Bush, bass, (1961–65); Bobby Sloane, fiddle, (1963–65); Scott Stoneman, fiddle (1965).

One of the most storied bluegrass bands of all time, the Kentucky Colonels were build around three brothers, Roland, Clarence, and Eric White, who were born in Maine and raised in Los Angeles. With an average age of 18, the young group became a fixture on local L.A. television shows Town Hall Party and Hometown Jamboree. They also recorded four tracks on an Andy Williams album on Capitol and appeared on his television show. After changing their name in 1963 to avoid confusion with Mac Wiseman's band, the Colonels recorded their first album for Briar Records. During this time they made their name as regular performers at L.A.'s famed Ash Grove folk club and benefited from folk music's then-soaring popularity. Traditional songs like "Shady Grove" and "Sally Ann" and gospel numbers like "A Beautiful Life" made up the bulk of the group's repertoire. The years 1964–65 were the band's peak period; they appeared at folk clubs and bluegrass festivals all over the United States and Canada. In 1964 they recorded their best-known album, Appalachian Swing!, for the World Pacific label. Creative differences (primarily over electrification of the band's instruments), exacerbated by the onslaught of the Beatles, forced the group to break up in 1965. Several different pickup bands continued to use the name Kentucky Colonels through 1967. There were several reunions during the early 1970s but no serious reconciliation ever took place. After the Colonels, Roland White moved on, first to Bill Monroe's band in 1967, and two years later to Lester Flatt's band. Today he plays with the Nashville Bluegrass Band and records solo for Sugar Hill Records. Lathum played with the Dillards throughout the 1970s before retiring. Bush became a mainstay in the group Country Gazette before he, too, retired.

The Colonels' greatest claim to fame lies in the brilliant guitar work of Clarence White, who left to join the Byrds in 1968. During the early 1970s White also became a much-sought-after session man contributing to a myriad of recordings, including Arlo Guthrie's Last of the Brooklyn Cowboys, Jackson Browne's Late for the Sky, and Randy Newman's 12 Songs. Unfortunately, White was killed by a drunk driver in 1973 while loading out of a club.

what to buy: The Colonels' finest hour, the instrumental Appalachian Swing! ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1964/1993, prod. Richard Bock, Ed Pearl) showcases Clarence White's increasingly inventive guitar work, which, while not always bluegrass, was always astonishing. The group's versions of "I Am a Pilgrim," "Nine-Pound Hammer," and "Sally Goodin" are near-definitive.

what to buy next: Long Journey Home ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1991, prod. Mary Katherine Aldin) is a live recording of the group's high water mark: their 1964 appearance at the Newport Folk Festival. Especially wonderful are four duets featuring Clarence White and Doc Watson.

the rest:
1965–1967 with R.& C. White ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1976)
The Kentucky Colonels Featuring Clarence White ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1980)
On Stage ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1984)
Livin' in the Past ♪♪♪ (Sierra, 1997)

solo outings:
Roland White:
Trying to Get to You ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Bill Monroe & His Blue Grass Boys, Doc Watson
▶▶ Nashville Bluegrass Band, Hot Rize

Robert Baird

Kentucky Standard Band

Formed in Balltown, near Bardstown, KY.

Nancy Johnson, fretted dulcimer, dulcimer, vocals; Ken Baldwin, guitar, vocals; Alice Burton, hammered dulcimer, vocals; David Wilson, violin, cello, mandolin, percussion; Jim Webb, guitar, mandolin, banjo, fiddle, vocals.

The Kentucky Standard Band combines fretted dulcimer, hammered dulcimer, violin, and guitar into intricate patterns—much like snowflakes, their instrumental lines are similar, yet no two are alike. The band plays original music, grounded in traditional styles. It all started innocently enough with songwriter Nancy Johnson Barker asking guitarist Ken Baldwin and hammered dulcimer player Alice Burton to back her up during a studio session of a new tune she had just written. Caught in the magic that recording studios sometimes offer, the three musicians found themselves so pleased with the sound that the session became the official beginning of what was to become Kentucky Standard Band. The band has subsequently produced at least one tape a year and has played to thousands of people. Almost a decade later, the magic is still there. The band creates original, haunting melodies, sings in beautiful harmony, and builds its sound using intricate instrumentals. Barker, a musician and songwriter, was Kentucky's first artist-in-residence to be hired full time by a school district, and is the originator and coordinator of the region's largest folk festival, the Kentucky Music Weekend, and its related music camp—Kentucky Music Week music camp. Her primary instrument is fretted dulcimer (she hails from eastern Kentucky, and that instrument is part of her musical heritage), and her compositions are the driving force behind the band. Guitarist Ken Baldwin is well known for his humorous lyrics as well as intricate instrumental originals. He is the band's "rock," in terms of solid timing and precision, and his fingerstyle playing and rhythmic strumming patterns center its sound. Baldwin is also a visual artist, from graphics to portraits, and the cover artwork on Angels of Mercy is one of his pieces. Alice Burton plays a tantalizing hammered dulcimer, weaving the bell-like notes of her instrument into sweet accompaniments and harmonies. She is also a physical therapist, specializing in treating injuries specific to performing artists, and she takes care of the rest of the band. David Wilson is a multi-instrumentalist specializing in violin/fiddle but equally at home on mandolin, cello, guitar, and percussion. Barker describes Wilson as the "ribbon of feeling that ties us all together.... smoothing our separate sounds into one complete experience ... our conscience, our heart." He also plays regularly with the bluegrass band Radio Flyer, as well as the Gallier Brothers Band.

what to buy: Angels of Mercy ♪♪♪♪½ (Tree Frog Music, 1996, prod. Kentucky Standard Band) is an all-original, all-instrumental (with one exception) effort with country, folk, Celtic, and even New Age influences. It is an exquisite piece of work with a definite chamber music approach. The arrangements are tight and evocative and the production is first rate.

nancy kerr

what to buy next: Alto Q ♪♪♪ (Tree Frog Music, 1995) also features all-original material, including "Pappa Smurf from Hell," "Pink Moon," "Sara Jean," "The Dancer," and "Dancin' with a Copperhead." For a more traditional approach, try Barker's solo outing, Full Circle ♪♪♪ (Tree Frog Music, 1991), which provides a mixture of traditional and original material, including "Derby Waltz," "Sarvice Tree," "Redwing," and "Kitty Alone."

the rest:
Kentucky Standard Band ♪♪♪ (Tree Frog Music, 1991)
Christmas Dulcimer Music ♪♪♪ (Tree Frog Music, 1991)
New Pioneer ♪♪♪ (Tree Frog Music, 1992)
Lighthouse Keeper of Kentucky ♪♪♪ (Tree Frog Music, 1993)

solo outings:
Nancy Johnson Barker:
Full Circle ♪♪♪ (Tree Frog Music, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ David Schnaufer, Sam Bush, Pentangle, Trapezoid
▶▶ Gallier Brothers, Tom Espinola & Lorraine Duisit

Neal Walters

Nancy Kerr

See: Eliza Carthy

Doug Kershaw /Rusty & Doug

Born January 24, 1936, in Tiel Ridge, LA. Rusty & Doug formed 1954. Disbanded 1964.

Doug Kershaw, fiddle, vocals; Rusty Kershaw (born February 2, 1938, in Tiel Ridge, LA), guitar, vocals.

With his fancy fiddling and on-stage flamboyance, Doug Kershaw was the first major artist to provide Cajun music with exposure to a wide audience that included college students as well as mainstream country fans. In 1948 Doug and his younger brothers Rusty and Pee Wee became part of the Continental Playboys, and in 1953 they hosted their own regional TV show. Rusty and Doug had their first hit record in 1955 with "So Lovely Baby," and in 1957 they cracked the charts again with "Love Me to Pieces." Their watershed year was 1961, when Doug's composition "Louisiana Man" exploded onto the regional and national charts. To this day, the song remains a Cajun and country standard. The duo split up in 1964, and Doug recorded a few mildly interesting albums for Warner Bros.

what to buy: The Best of Doug Kershaw & Rusty Kershaw ♪♪♪½ (Curb, 1991) comes from the recordings the duo made for Roy Acuff's Hickory label during the 1950s and 1960s. The album contains the hit versions of "Louisiana Man" and "Diggy Liggy Lo," which Doug Kershaw would re-record throughout his career. There are also versions of Hank Williams's "Kaw-Liga" and "Why Don't You Love Me" that the sparse instrumentation, sibling harmonies, and heavy slapback turn into an odd Cajun hillbilly rock. Strangely, it doesn't contain two of the duet's biggest hits from that time, "So Lovely, Baby" and "Love Me to Pieces," but it's still a heck of a lot of fun.

what to buy next: The Best of Doug Kershaw ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1989, prod. various) contains versions of Doug's breakthrough hits from the 1960s, including "Louisiana Man" and "Diggy Diggy Lo," as well as spicy remakes of Hank Williams's "Jambalaya (On the Bayou)" and Fats Domino's "I'm Walkin'."

the rest:
The Cajun Way ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1969)
Alive & Pickin' ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1975)
The Louisiana Man ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1978)
(With Rusty Kershaw) Now and Then ♪♪ (Domino, 1992)

worth searching for: The Ragin' Cajun ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1976) doesn't let up for a second. A great party album.

influences:
◀◀ Iry LeJeune
▶▶ Charlie Daniels, Beausoleil, Wayne Toups, Zachary Richard

Rick Petreycik and Brian Mansfield

Robin Kessinger

Born December 14, 1955, in WV.

Guitar virtuoso Robin Kessinger comes by it honestly—his father, Bob Kessinger, plays mandolin and Robin's the nephew of the legendary West Virginian Clark Kessinger. Robin was born in the Mountain State but moved around the Northeast all through childhood. He started playing guitar at age 12, influenced heavily by his uncle's music and that of Robert Rutland (Georgia Slim) and Chet Atkins. He earned the Best Overall Performer crown at the Old-Time Fiddler's Convention in Galax, Virginia, two years in a row, and has placed in the top five at the National Flatpick Guitar Festival in Winfield, Kansas. He won first place at Winfield in 1985. Robin has fans at home and abroad, having toured Japan and Ireland in recent years. He performs near home with other West Virginia musicians, occasionally with fellow flatpicker extraordinaire Wayne Henderson, and teaches guitar at various music camps.

what to buy: Kessinger's CD Robin Kessinger (JMP Records, 1996, prod. Jim Martin) is a compilation of the material from two previous cassettes, The Third Eyebrow and Don't Try This at Home, both also produced by Jim Martin. There are 24 tunes on this CD, many of which are Kessinger's specialty—hot flatpick guitar playing. But there's lots of slower, sweeter stuff to go with it. His rendition of the Benny Thomasson fiddle tune "Midnight on the Water" does justice to the original, not an easy task. There are several Celtic pieces, Scott Joplin's "Maple Leaf Rag," a beautiful selection called "African Guitar Melody," and a traditional tune called "Brilliancy" that is positively delightful. All in all, something for everyone. Kessinger is assisted at times by his son Luke on bass, by Joe Adkins on guitar, Al Prote on drums, and by Tiny Roland on tuba (yes, indeed; the tuba makes an appearance on "Alabama Jubilee"). There are several extremely well-done overdubs on this disc, and the recording quality is excellent throughout. While hard to find in record stores, it is available from JMP Productions, P.O. Box 152, St. Albans, West Virginia 25711.

influences:

Clark Kessinger, Chet Atkins, Robert Rutland

Wayne Henderson, Steve Kaufman

Dave Shombert

Barbara Kessler

Born in Long Island, NY.

Barbara Kessler may be the next Shawn Colvin. She writes crisp, insightful songs and delivers them in a fluid, vibrant voice. She stands with Kate MacLeod, Carrie Newcomer, Susan McKeown, and Sloan Wainwright as one of the most solid and original talents in contemporary folk. She also has a knack for being introspective without getting lost in her own navel. Kessler is a native of Long Island, New York, who learned about life as a world traveler and learned her craft in Boston. Among her many recent awards, she was the National Academy of Songwriters' 1995 Female Acoustic Artist of the Year and featured artist at the 1996 North American Folk Alliance Conference in Toronto, Canada.

what's available: Even in other performances, Kessler meets the standard she sets in Stranger to This Land ♪♪♪♪ (Eastern Front, 1994, prod. Barbara Kessler, Philip Antoniades), a live album with the slick finish of a studio album. Heavy percussion gives the work a rock spiciness that suits Kessler's energetic delivery. Most admirably, she takes two of the moldiest cover tunes—the Eagles' "Desperado" and Leonard Cohen's "Bird on a Wire"—and makes them her own. Notion ♪♪♪♪ (Eastern Front, 1996, prod. Jerry Marotta, Duncan Watt) is a rock album, and a damn good one. If Sarah McLachlan can be on rock radio, Kessler should be as well. "At My Age," reminiscent of "My Back Pages" and "Going Back," is one of the strongest tracks: "At my age I should know better/I should have a winter coat/I should have at least one kid by now."

influences:

Shawn Colvin, Suzanne Vega

Liz Phair

Pamela Murray Winters

Peter Kessler & Gail Fratar

Peter Kessler (born in Media, PA); Gail Fratar (born in Springfield, MA).

Gail Fratar (rhymes with "later") met Peter Kessler during the late 1970s after both had moved to the Bay Area and become involved in the San Francisco Folk Music Club. They began playing music together, and by the mid-1980s their partnership had become marital as well as musical; they remain a husband-and-wife team to this day. Although passionate about both classical music and '50s-vintage rock 'n' roll, Gail's love of old country music was fostered by her grandfather and uncle, both of whom were musicians, and her love of the old records by early Grand Ole Opry stars like Uncle Dave Macon and the great country brother duos: the Delmore Brothers, Louvin Brothers, Blue Sky Boys, and others. While living in the Philadelphia area, Kessler was exposed to a thriving folk scene that included, down the highway a few miles, the hotbed of country, bluegrass, and old time music that centered around the country music parks near the Mason-Dixon Line (Sunset Park, New River Ranch) and included musicians like Ola Belle Reed and Ted Lundy. Kessler is a long-time fan of the great founding bluegrass fathers like Bill Monroe, the Stanley Brothers, Flatt and Scruggs, and Reno and Smiley, with banjo legends Earl Scruggs and Don Reno as special role models. Bluegrass banjo players in old-time music are sometimes likened to the proverbial bull in the china shop, but in teaming with Fratar, Kessler has shown a nice touch in merging his three-finger style into a distinctive brand of music that hearkens to the days when the labels "bluegrass" and "old time" didn't exist—it was all just "country" music. The couple's instrumental arrangements, while not flashy, are designed to support the music as a single, unified whole rather to distract or draw attention from the songs themselves. Likewise, the vocals, mostly done in Fratar's warm, comfortable, unadorned singing style, work with the arrangements to produce a sound that will please not only country fans, but just about anyone with an ear for good folk music. Their repertoire reaches from the last century all the way up to modern songs, including many written by Fratar. Kessler and Fratar currently live and work in San Francisco, and are active in the folk music community there.

will keys

what's available: Take Me Up ♪♪♪♪ (Rolling Robin, 1997, prod. Peter Kessler, Gail Fratar) is their only generally available CD release, a pleasant and entertaining, yet eclectic collection that combines elements of folk, old time, and bluegrass into what might be called "acoustic country," with special attention to Fratar's singing and songwriting. Of course, among the album's 15 tracks there are also lovely treatments of songs, old and new, that were written by others, such as Uncle Dave Macon's "My Ollie Is Waiting for Me," the Civil War-era ballad "Lorena," and Hugh Moffatt's "Rose of My Heart." The instrumentation is essentially old-timey, but Kessler's understated three-finger banjo and Gene Tortora's Dobro playing add a nice, light bluegrass touch. The album's title cut also features a calliope.

influences:

◀◀ Uncle Dave Macon, Delmore Brothers, Flatt & Scruggs, Reno & Smiley

▶▶ Jody Stecher & Kate Brislin, Cliff Perry & Laurel Bliss

John Lupton

Will Keys

Born in 1923.

Will Keys is the 16th of 17 children. He plays a unique two-finger banjo style where melody is the goal. Unlike other two-finger banjo players, Keys does not use his thumb for the bass notes and the forefinger for the melody. Instead, all of his down strokes are done with the thumb while the up strokes are relegated to the finger. Watching Keys play this way will seem strange to many people because at times he will be hitting the lowest string with his thumb while his index finger is reaching up to the highest (fifth) string. While it may look awkward, it doesn't sound awkward; the melody ends up being wrapped around a beautiful syncopation which, if you close your eyes, will make you think you are listening to the most beautiful clock there ever was. Keys hasn't spent much time playing outside of his region, although in 1993 and 1994 he participated in the Masters of Banjo tour put on by the National Council for the Traditional Arts. Then, in 1996, President Clinton honored him with the National Heritage Fellowship. Keys was only the fourth banjo player ever to receive this award, the others being Ralph Stanley, Earl Scruggs, and Wade Mainer.

what to buy: A Banjo Original ♪♪♪♪ (County, 1997, prod. Joe Wilson) is a stunning compilation of some recent recordings by Keys backed by Barbara Kuhns on fiddle and Doug Smith on guitar, with guest appearances from Laurie Lewis, Dudley Connell, Wayne Henderson, Jimmy Trivette, Jeff Little, and Tony Testerman.

what to buy next: Hear some excerpts of Keys on Masters of the Banjo ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1994, prod. Joe Wilson, Andy Wallace). This CD features selections from the national tour celebrating the masters of the banjo. Other banjo players featured include Seleshe Damessae, Kirk Sutphin, Tony Ellis, Seamus Egan, Carroll Best, and Ralph Stanley. Laurie Lewis and Dudley Connell guest as well.

influences:

◀◀ Urg Light, Dirk Powell, Art Stamper, Charlie Bowman

▶▶ Bill Keys

Steve Gardner

Greg Kihn /The Greg Kihn Band

Born 1952, in Baltimore, MD. Greg Kihn Band formed 1974.

The San Francisco-based Greg Kihn Band briefly became an album-oriented radio staple in the 1980s with power-pop hits including "The Breakup Song (They Don't Write 'Em)" in 1981, "Can't Stop Hurtin' Myself" in 1982, and "Jeopardy" in 1983. Their biggest hit, "Jeopardy" was so successful that it inspired a popular spoof by "Weird" Al Yankovic. Kihn was one of the first artists signed by post-punk label, Beserkley Records. His debut recordings were included on the influential compilation, Beserkley Chartbusters. Releasing an album a year in the late 1970s, Kihn and his band built a cult following on the West Coast, however, his days as a headliner were short lived. By the late 1980s, his music was becoming a parody of itself. Although Kihn's early albums reflected his wit in their titles—Rockihnroll, Kihntinued, Kinhspiracy, and Citizen Kihn—the novelty ran out in 1986 with the poorly selling Love & Rock & Roll. Kihn maintained a low profile until 1994, when he recorded the acoustic-rooted Mutiny. Although it took a much less commercially minded approach than Kihn's earlier recording, it signaled a return to the folk roots he tapped prior to moving to San Francisco and turning to electric music.

what to buy: Mutiny ♪♪♪♪ (Clean Cuts, 1994, prod. Jack Heyrman), Kihn's return to acoustic music, shows a true mastery of the musical form. With his Springsteen-like vocals and acoustic guitar rhythms accented by cellos, piano, Dobro, mandolin, steel guitar, accordion, and saxophone, Kihn celebrates the diversity of his influences with renditions of songs by singer-songwriters Richard Fariña, Eric Von Schmidt, and Bob Dylan and rock tunesmiths Lou Reed, Elliott Murphey, Buddy Holly, and Bo Diddley.

what to buy next: With Kihn's career seemingly over, Beserkley and Rhino Records combined to release the 18-track greatest hits collection Kihnsolidation ♪♪♪ (Rhino/Beserkley, 1989) and the live-in-concert album, Unkihntrollable ♪♪♪(Rhino/1989). While both albums showcase the hits, they're weakened by the inclusion of outdated and forgettable fillers.

what to avoid: Kihn's rock albums are weighed down by songs that fail to adapt to his commercially minded formula.

the rest:

Greg Kihn ♪♪♪ (Beserkley, 1976)
Again ♪♪½ (Beserkley, 1977)
Next of Kihn ♪♪½ (1978)
With the Naked Eye ♪♪½ (Beserkley, 1979)
Rockinhnroll ♪♪ (Beserkley, 1981)
Kihntinued ♪♪ (Beserkley, 1982)
Kinhspiracy ♪♪ (Beserkley, 1983)
Citizen Kihn ♪½ (Beserkley, 1985)
Love & Rock & Roll ♪♪ (Beserkley, 1986)
King Biscuit Flower Hour Presents ♪♪ (King Biscuit Flower Hour, 1996)

worth searching for: Kihn's background vocals helped make Jonathan Richman and the Modern Lovers' anthem, "Roadrunner" one of the most cherished tunes of the post-punk era.

influences:

⏪ Richard Fariña, Eric Von Schmidt, Bob Dylan, Lou Reed, Elliott Murphey, Buddy Holly, Bo Diddley, Graham Parker, Bruce Springsteen

⏩ Bruce Springsteen, Bruce Hornsby

Craig Harris

Albert King

Born April 25, 1923, in Indianola, MS. Died December 21, 1992, in Memphis, TN.

Never as well known as his like-named contemporary B.B. King, Albert King was nonetheless almost as big an influence. More rock guitarists—notably Jimi Hendrix, Cream-era Eric Clapton, and Stevie Ray Vaughan—have copped directly from Albert more than from any other bluesman. Standing an imposing 6' 5" and weighing in at 250 pounds, the left-handed former-bulldozer-driver played with brute force, bending the strings on his upside-down Gibson Flying V with a ferocity that could be downright frightening. King made his first recordings in the early 1950s and cut some fantastic sides for Bobbin and King from 1959–63, but he really hit his stride when he signed with Stax in 1966 and began working with Booker T. and the MGs and the Memphis Horns. His collaborations with them worked as well as they did because for all his toughness, King's music swung, a fact well-documented on the excellent live albums, where he recaptures the Stax albums' drive backed by a horn-less quartet. He was also a fantastic, if not particularly flexible singer.

what to buy: King's Stax debut, Born under a Bad Sign ♪♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1967, prod. Al Jackson), is an undisputed classic. The two-disc compilation, The Ultimate Collection ♪♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1992) offers a fine career overview. Any of the three live albums recorded at San Francisco's Fillmore West Auditorium in 1968 captures the full power of King onstage: Live Wire/Blues Power ♪♪♪♪ (Stax, 1968, prod. Al Jackson); Wednesday Night in San Francisco ♪♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1990, prod. Al Jackson); and Thursday Night in San Francisco ♪♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1990, prod. Al Jackson).

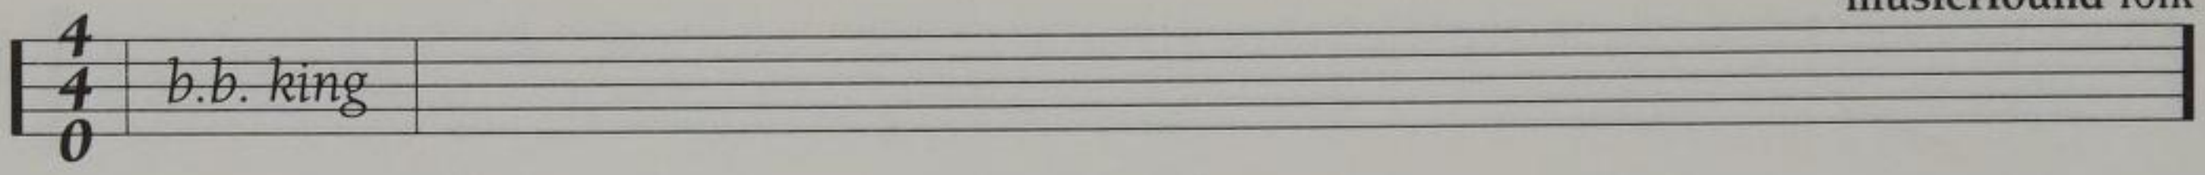
what to buy next: Let's Have a Natural Ball ♪♪♪♪½ (Modern Blues, 1989) collects King's late-1950s/early-1960s sides backed by a hard-charging horn section. I'll Play the Blues for You ♪♪♪♪ (Stax, 1972, prod. Allen Jones, Henry Bush) includes the killer title track as well as "Little Brother," perhaps King's most tender moment. Soul-blues never got much better than this.

what to avoid: Red House ♪♪ (Castle, 1991, prod. Joe Walsh, Alan Douglas) is a misguided although probably well-intentioned attempt to help the great bluesman by modernizing his sound. Ugh. Somebody got really excited when they discovered long-missing tapes of King jamming with John Mayall. Then Fantasy released The Lost Session ♪♪ (Stax, 1986), and it became painfully clear why the tapes got shoved into the warehouse in the first place.

the rest:

Jammed Together: Albert King, Steve Cropper, Pops Staples ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1969)
Years Gone By ♪♪♪♪ (Stax, 1969)
Lovejoy ♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1970)



I Wanna Get Funky ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1973)
The Pinch ♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1977)
Montreux Festival ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1979)
New Orleans Heat ♪♪♪½ (Tomato, 1979)
Blues for Elvis ♪♪ (Stax, 1981)
Crosscut Saw: Albert King in San Francisco ♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1983/1992)
I'm in a Phone Booth Baby ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1984)
The Best of Albert King ♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1987)
Years Gone By ♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1987)
Blues at Sunrise ♪♪♪♪ (Stax, 1988)
Lovejoy ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1987)
King of the Blues Guitar ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1989)
Roadhouse Blues ♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1991)
Albert ♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1992)
King Albert ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1992)
Truckload of Lovin' ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1992)
The Blues Don't Change ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1992)
Blues at Sunset (Live at Wattstax and Montreux) ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1993)
The Big Blues ♪♪♪½ (King, 1994)
Mean Mean Blues ♪♪♪ (King, 1994)
Chicago 1978 ♪♪♪½ (Charly, 1994)
Live ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1994)
The Tomato Years ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1994)
Funky London ♪♪♪½ (Stax, 1994)
Hard Bargain ♪♪♪ (Stax, 1995)
Live on Memory Lane ♪♪♪ (Monad, 1995)

influences:

B.B. King, Jimmy Reed, T-Bone Walker

Otis Rush, Eric Clapton, Jimi Hendrix, Stevie Ray Vaughan, Buddy Guy, Billy Gibbons, Joe Louis Walker, Kenny Wayne Shepherd

Alan Paul

B.B. King

Born September 16, 1925, near Itta Bena, MS.

No other blues artist has ever entered mainstream American culture quite like B.B. King. He is the only one to step inside from the commercial cold that has long been the bluesman's fate, to receive presidential citations and honorary degrees and star in commercials for the likes of Wendy's and Northwest Airlines. He has become so omnipresent that it's easy to forget why he's so revered: He fundamentally changed the way the electric guitar is played. The roots of any blues-based electric guitarist can be traced back to B.B. King, whether they know it or not. King took the single-string electric lead guitar playing pioneered by Charlie Christian and T-Bone Walker and coated it with Mississippi grit. The result was a highly personalized style marked by stinging finger vibrato, incredible economy, and uncanny vocal-like phrasing. King's style had tremendous impact on virtually every electric blues guitarist to follow, including Buddy Guy, Albert King, Freddie King, and Otis Rush. These players, in turn, inspired countless rock guitarists, notably Jimi Hendrix, Eric Clapton, and Stevie Ray Vaughan.

what to buy: The emergence of King's groundbreaking style can be heard on The Best of B.B. King, Volume I ♪♪♪♪♪ (Flair/Virgin, 1991), an essential collection of 1950s recordings that includes his original versions of standard-bearers like "Three O'Clock Blues," "You Upset Me Baby," and "Every Day I Have the Blues." B.B.'s vocal-like guitar playing is part and parcel of his rare ability to communicate intimately with an audience, a powerful rapport that is perfectly captured on Live at the Regal ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1971, prod. Johnny Pate),, a 1964 performance considered by many to be not only his finest recording but the greatest album in all modern blues. This treasure-trove of sophisticated yet down-home music includes such staples as "It's My Own Fault," "Every Day I Have the Blues," and "Sweet Little Angel." Completely Well ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1969, prod. Bill Szymczyk) contains King's only Top-20 hit, "The Thrill Is Gone," and is solid through and through.

what to buy next: Sooner or later, you'll probably want the four-CD box set, King of the Blues ♪♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1992, prod. Andy McKaie), an excellent summary of King's career. Live at San Quentin ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1990) and Blues Summit ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1993), the latter which features a host of guest stars, are King's best recent efforts, both showing that he still has plenty of sting in his vibrato and ideas in his head.

what to avoid: B.B. King in London ♪♪ (MCA, 1971) is the usual, pointless, hook-the-blues-guy-up-with-well-meaning-rockers-who-love-him-but-can't-play-his-stuff-half-as-well-as-his-own-band exercise. Also, the recordings he made in the '70s and '80s are virtually all burdened by over-production. Tread carefully.

the rest:
Blues Is King ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1967)
The Electric B.B. King—His Best ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1968)
Lucille ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1968)
Live & Well ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1969)
Incredible Soul of B.B. King ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1970)
Indianola Mississippi Seeds ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1970)
Live in Cook County Jail ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1970)

Albert King (© Jack Vartoogian)

b.b. king

carole king

B.B. King (© Jack Vartoogian)

Back in the Alley: The Classic Blues of B.B. King ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1973)
The Best of B.B. King ♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1973)
To Know You Is to Love You ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1973)
B.B. King and Bobby Bland: Together for the First Time, Live ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1974)
Friends ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1974)
Lucille Talks Back ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1975)
B.B. King & Bobby Bland: Together Again . . . Live ♪♪ (MCA, 1976)
King Size ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1977)
Midnight Believer ♪♪½ (MCA, 1978)
Take It Home ♪♪ (MCA, 1979)
Live at Ole Miss ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1980)
Great Moments with B.B. King ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1981)
There Must Be a Better World Somewhere ♪♪♪½ (MCA, 1981)
Love Me Tender ♪♪½ (MCA, 1982)
Blues 'n' Jazz ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1983)
Six Silver Strings ♪♪ (MCA, 1985)
Do the Boogie: Early 50s Classics ♪♪♪♪½ (Flair/Virgin, 1988)
King of the Blues 1989 ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1989)
The Fabulous B.B. King ♪♪♪♪ (Flair/Virgin, 1991)
Live at the Apollo ♪♪♪½ (GRP, 1991)
Singin' the Blues/The Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Flair/Virgin, 1991)
There Is Always One More Time ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1991)
Sweet Little Angel ♪♪♪♪ (Flair/Virgin, 1992)
Dueces Wild ♪♪½ (MCA, 1997)

influences:

⏮ Blind Lemon Jefferson, T-Bone Walker, Django Reinhardt, Lonnie Johnson, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown

⏭ Buddy Guy, Eric Clapton, David Gilmour, Albert King, Otis Rush, Albert Collins

Alan Paul

Carole King

Born Carole Klein, February 9, 1942, in Brooklyn, NY.

From the early '60s to the mid-'70s, Carole King was the champion of making musical memories. Like some favorite scent long gone but easily remembered, King and her then-husband Gerry Goffin covered a wide territory, placing a permanent stake wherever they went. Given pop music's far-flung scope and ever-changing tastes, King's accomplishments are extraordinary. From deft romantic ballads as realistic as they were heartfelt came such hits as "Take Good Care of My Baby," "Up on the Roof," "Crying in the Rain," and "Will You Love Me Tomorrow?" The British music invasion and a generation's mood swing didn't slow the tide. "Don't Bring Me Down," "I'm into Something Good," "I Wasn't Born to Follow," and "Pleasant Valley Sunday" circumnavigated a field of what were career-ending land mines for other songwriters. And to think that was only a hint of what was to come when King stepped out on her own.

what to buy: King's third release, Tapestry ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ode, 1971, prod. Lou Adler), is a benchmark recording for her and for pop music. With her earnest yet vulnerable vocals, a fluid backup band, and Adler's sure production, Tapestry combined a bit of classic King material ("You Make Me Feel like A Natural Woman," "Will You Love Me Tomorrow?") with new, self-assured songs such as "I Feel the Earth Move," "So Far Away," "It's Too Late," and "Home Again." The album was on the charts, deservedly, for more than five years. A Natural Woman: The Ode Collection 1968–1976 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Legacy, 1994, prod. Lou Adler) is a two-disc set that surrounds Tapestry with her better solo work and a previously unreleased live duet with James Taylor on "You've Got a Friend."

what to buy next: City Streets ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1989) is an unjustifiably overlooked effort, with King unhesitatingly delivering her most powerful and passionate vocals ever. Eric Clapton guests, and the title track is a killer.

what to avoid: Fantasy ♪♪ (Ode, 1973/Legacy, 1991) and Rhymes and Reason ♪♪ (Ode, 1972/Legacy 1991) go nowhere in the slow lane.

the rest:
Carole King: Writer ♪♪♪½ (Ode, 1970/Legacy, 1991)
Music ♪♪♪ (Ode, 1971/Legacy, 1991)
Wrap around Joy ♪♪ (Ode, 1974/Legacy, 1991)
Really Rosie ♪♪♪ (Ode, 1975/Columbia, 1986)
Thoroughbred ♪♪♪ (Ode/Legacy, 1976)
Her Greatest Hits (1972–1978) ♪♪♪½ (Ode/Columbia, 1978)
Colour of Your Dreams ♪♪♪ (Priority/Scarface, 1993)
Pearls ♪♪♪ (Priority/Scarface, 1994)
In Concert ♪♪♪½ (King's X/Rhythm Safari, 1994)
The Carnegie Hall Concert ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1996)

worth searching for: King's first band, the City, stepped out front and center with her reflective debut Now That Everything's Been Said ♪♪♪½ (Ode, 1968). Overlooked but not forgotten, it was as careful as it was an appropriate first recording for King.

influences:
◀◀ Doc Pomus, Mort Shuman
▶▶ Carly Simon, Tori Amos, Bonnie Hayes

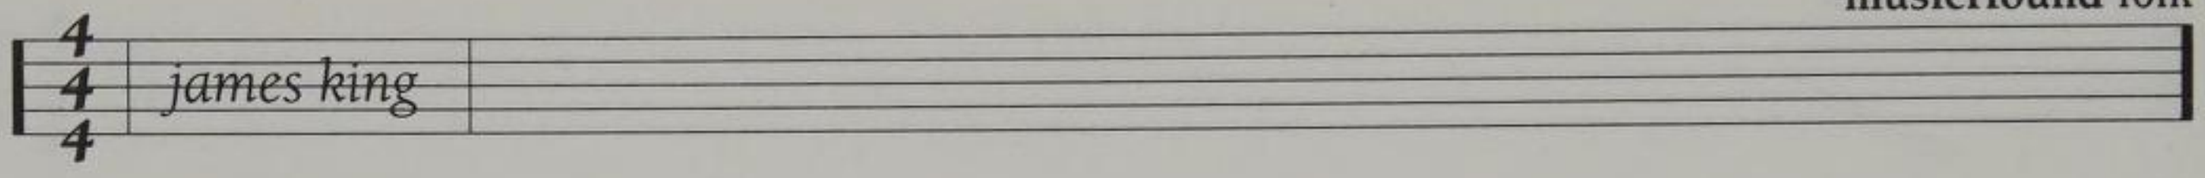
Patrick McCarty

Charlie King

Born in 1948, in CT.

The politics of the working class has been the major theme for singer-songwriter Charlie King. A conscientious objector, who worked in a Massachusetts hospital during the Vietnam War, King is a throwback to the Joe Hill and Woody Guthrie school of labor relations. Not only has he sung for rallies, fund raisers, and picket lines, but his songs have been covered by Arlo Guthrie, Pete Seeger, and Holly Near. King's musical career was launched in 1971, shortly after he graduated from Connecticut's Stonehill College. Moving temporarily to New York, he worked in a soup kitchen each morning and with the United Farm Workers (UFW) every afternoon. When the agriculture-based union learned of his musical abilities, they began to use his services more and more. In addition to providing a soundtrack for a national grape and lettuce boycott, King has sung for striking clerical and technical workers at Harvard and Yale Universities, auto workers, coal miners, and meat packers. The secretary/treasurer of Local 1000 of the North American Traveling Musicians, King successfully lobbied for official recognition from the American Federation of Musicians. Although he performed and recorded with a short-lived group called Bright Morning Star during the early 1980s; with singer-songwriter Martha Leader; and with Missouri-based duo, Dave and Kay Gordon, King primarily tours as a soloist.

what to buy: Food Phone Gas Lodging ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1990, prod. Dave Gordon) takes a cold, hard, look at modern America and leaves the listener chilled. King's baritone vocals and guitar strums are set to well-conceived acoustic arrangements featuring electric bass, drums, Dobro, percussion, and piano. A large chorus featuring Sally Rogers, Peter Alsop, Howard Bursen, and Bob Franke enhances the congregational roots of King's politically minded lyrics. King delivers dramatic interpretations of Pete Seeger's "Lisa Kalveledge," about an unsuspecting victim of Nazi Germany, Dave Gordon's "Hand on the Switch," about the death penalty, and Bob Franke's "A Still Small Voice," a tribute to the memory of Martin Luther King Jr.



Seven original songs are as potent. Although he occasionally shows a sense of humor, King means business—singing about the industrial complex ("Buy, Buy, This American Car"), alcoholism ("He Couldn't Let Go"), and the plight of the working class ("Are You Now or Have You Ever Been?").

what to buy next: King describes the mission of his album Two Good Arms ♪♪♪½ (Vaguely Reminiscent, 1992, prod. Darleen Wilson) by subtitling it, "Songs of the Hopes and Struggles of Working People." Accompanying himself on guitar and harmonica and joined by a six-piece band that includes Richard Gates (bass), Matt Levenworth (fiddle), and Mickey Bones (bones) and a chorus featuring Marcia Taylor, Ben Tousley, and Bob Franke, King offers a musical expose of the Reagan/Bush years with songs by Dave Gordon, Ewan MacColl, and Si Kahn, plus 10 originals. "Look into the Camera and Lie" looks at the Clarence Thomas hearings while the title track is a re-examination of Sacco and Vanzetti.

the rest:
My Heart Keeps Sneakin' up on My Mind ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1984)
Feelings of Fire ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986)
(With Martha Leader) Steppin' Out ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1988)

worth searching for: King's long out-of-print debut album, Old Dreams and New Nightmares ♪♪♪ (CW, 1975, prod. Gerry Mooney), marked him as a successor to topical songwriter Tom Paxton. With guitar and vocal accompaniment by Paul Despinosa, King captured the post-Richard Nixon era of the mid-1970s. Songs reflect on inflation ("Talking Whip Inflation Now Blues"), the lower class ("The Rats Are Winning"), the loss of American prestige ("America, Where Did You Go?"), and Nixon's resignation ("I Don't Feel Sorry for You, Mr. Nixon").

influences:
◀◀ Joe Hill, Woody Guthrie, Pete Seeger, Tom Paxton, Phil Ochs
▶▶ Fred Small, Marcia Taylor

Craig Harris

James King

Born September 9, 1958, in Martinsville, VA.

One of the strongest bluegrass/country music vocalists to emerge from the fertile Virginia soil (he shares his hometown, for instance, with Clinton Gregory), James King is a singer whose deep blue and lonesome voice can tackle strident bluegrass and honky-tonk tunes with equal brilliance. He's not afraid, for instance, to attach an even greater sense of urgency and sadness to Vince Gill's "When I Call Your Name," from his most recent album. An ex-marine, King became engrossed in the bluegrass scene in Delaware during the late 1970s. Influenced by Ted Lundy, a banjo picker from Virginia who had moved to Delaware, King began recording after relocating to Virginia, in 1985. His partners on his first album were none other than his idol, Ralph Stanley, Stanley's band, and Johnson Mountain Boys fiddler Eddie Stubbs. In 1988 King formed the Misty Valley Boys and recorded for Webco. In 1993 he made his Rounder debut with the acclaimed These Old Pictures, followed up in 1995 by his award-winning Lonesome & Then Some, and the Longview bluegrass "super- pickers" project in 1997.

what to buy: Lonesome & Then Some ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Ken Irwin) is hard to beat. Along with the Gill cover, there are songs written by Hank Cochran, Harlan Howard, and Ernest Tubb! And the true bluegrass tunes are kept strictly bluegrass. A pleasure from start to finish, King's voice is the star here.

what to buy next: These Old Pictures ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993) is Lonesome's worthy predecessor.

the rest:
Volume II, Webco Classic Series ♪♪♪♪ (Webco, 1990/1995)

influences:
◀◀ Stanley Brothers, Ted Lundy
▶▶ Dudley Connell, Del McCoury

see also: Longview

Stephen L. Betts

Kings of Calicutt

See: Eliza Carthy

The Kingston Trio

Formed 1957, in San Francisco, CA. Disbanded 1967.

Bob Shane, guitar, vocals; Nick Reynolds, guitar, vocals; Dave Guard, banjo, vocals (1957–61; died March 22, 1991); John Stewart, banjo, guitar, vocals (1961–67).

The Kingston Trio just made it look too darned easy; it's no wonder the group was reviled by folk-music colleagues who watched them leap to the top of the charts. The Trio—three glib, fun-loving West Coast guys with guitars, banjos, bongos, three-part harmonies, and matching striped shirts and chinos—became big stuff during the late 1950s and early 1960s, when five of its first six albums went to Number One on the Billboard charts, occupying the top spot for a total of 50 weeks.

The Trio's basic sound was deceptively simple and its albums—especially the choice of material—much better than its detractors were ready to admit. The group's this-business-is-easy attitude influenced many of its followers to pick up guitars and start groups of their own in country and rock. Dave Guard, the most gifted Trio member, left in 1961 and was replaced by John Stewart, who fit in perfectly before going on to a prolific solo career. Shane has continued to tour as part of the Kingston Trio into the '90s.

what to buy: The best short collection is The Kingston Trio ♪♪♪♪½ (Capitol Collector's Series, 1990, prod. Voyle Gilmore), which includes 20 of their best-known tunes and all the Top 10 hit singles. If you're really interested, try The Capitol Years ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1995, prod. Voyle Gilmore), an extensive, fascinating four-CD collection that favors outtakes and unreleased tracks and offers a more sympathetic look at the Trio's place in history.

what to buy next: Live at Newport ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1994, prod. Mary Katherine Aldin) was recorded live at the 1959 Newport Folk Festival before a demanding East Coast audience. And if you can't get enough of the Trio, there's The Guard Years ♪♪♪♪½ (Bear Family, 1997), a 10-CD collection of the group's early albums.

what to avoid: Once upon a Time woof! (Tetragrammaton, 1969) was recorded live at Lake Tahoe in 1966; although the singing is fine, the jokes have gone flat and the song selection is questionable.

the rest:
Children of the Morning ♪♪ (Capitol, 1966/Folk Era, 1997)
Greatest Hits ♪♪ (Curb, 1991)
Stay Awhile ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1965/Folk Era, 1994)
Tom Dooley ♪♪½ (Capitol Special Products, 1994)
Greatest Hits ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1996)
Evening with the Kingston Trio ♪♪½ (Folk Era, 1997)

worth searching for: Capitol has released many of the early albums on compact disc, though they don't stay in print very long. You can sometimes find the occasional CD or vinyl LP. Worth the search is New Frontier ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1962, prod. Voyle Gilmore), which centers around the enthusiasm over John F. Kennedy's presidency. Live at the Hungry I ♪♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1959, prod. Voyle Gilmore) captures a hot club show with Guard's original stage patter. At Large ♪♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1959, prod. Voyle Gilmore) features Bess Hawes's "M.T.A.," Guard's "Getaway John," "The Long Black Rifle," and Jane Bowers's "Remember the Alamo," and String Along ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1960, prod. Voyle Gilmore) includes Tom Drake's "The Escape of Old John Webb," Cisco Hayes and Lee Hays's "Bad Man's Blunder," and Harlan Howard's "Everglades."

solo outings:
New Kingston Trio:
Lost Masters (1969–1972) ♪♪½ (Folk Era, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Weavers, Pete Seeger, Gateway Singers

▶▶ Peter, Paul & Mary, Brothers Four, Chad Mitchell Trio, Limeliters, Journeymen, Serendipity Singers, New Christy Minstrels, Roger McGuinn, Bob Dylan, Simon & Garfunkel

see also: John Stewart

Leland Rucker

Alison Kinnaird

Born April 30, 1949, in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Young Alison Kinnaird seemed on track to pursue a career as a cellist until, at age 14, she discovered the clàrsach—the small, diatonic, traditional knee-harp or folk harp of Scotland. A protégé of the late Jean Campbell, she learned enthusiastically and quickly, and played well enough to start winning competitions, including Scotland's National Mod and the first-ever Pan-Celtic Festival in Killarney, Ireland. But Kinnaird soon grew dissatisfied with what was then the standard repertoire. In the absence of a current tradition, much Scottish harp music was scavenged from the repertoires of other instruments or culled from printed collections, which were themselves often edited by pianists or concert harpists. She undertook the task that was to suffuse her musical career from then on: to resurrect (or, if necessary, reinvent) a truly traditional, Scottish repertoire and performance style for the Scottish harp; a process that was to culminate in the beginning of her recording career in 1978 with the release of her first LP, The Harp Key.

what to buy: If you're going to get just one, the obvious choice is The Scottish Harp ♪♪♪♪½ (Temple, 1988, prod. Robin Morton), which is a CD-only compendium of her first two solo albums, a splendid duet album with U.S.-born wire-strung harper Anne Heymann, a couple of National Trust folk archive projects she did with the Battlefield Band, and three newly recorded tracks. The 52-plus minutes herein represent the very best of an awfully good batch of recordings.

what to buy next: Kinnaird and Christine Primrose's The Quiet Tradition ♪♪♪½ (Temple, 1990, prod. Robin Morton) is a duet album with one of Scotland's premier traditional singers and represents the culmination of many years of touring and making music together. Rarely do a singer and an instrumentalist seem so well matched; it's a tribute to Kinnaird's success in rekindling the clàrsach tradition that her playing blends so adeptly with a rigorous traditionalist like Primrose.

the rest:

The Harp Key ♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1978)
(With the Battlefield Band and Robin Morton) Music in Trust ♪♪♪ (Temple, 1986)
(With the Battlefield Band) Music in Trust 2 ♪♪♪ (Temple, 1988)
(With Ann Heymann) The Harper's Land ♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1992)
The Harper's Gallery ♪♪ (Temple, 1992)

influences:

◀◀ Jean Campbell

▶▶ Wendy Stewart, Sileas, Cheryl Ann Fulton, Robin Williamson

Chris Rietz

Kinvara

See: Skylark

Kips Bay Ceili Band

See: John Whelan

John Kirkpatrick

Born August 8, 1947, in Chiswick, London, England.

A virtuoso at accordion, melodeon, and concertina, John Kirkpatrick is naturally linked to Morris dance music; he's even formed his own Morris team, the Shropshire Bedlams. He's been associated with traditionally based performers, including Steeleye Span and Ashley Hutchings, but he's also performed on such non-traditional projects as Gerry Rafferty's Night Owl, Pere Ubu's The Tenement Year, and several Richard Thompson albums and tours. He recorded several albums with Sue Harris (oboe and hammer dulcimer) in the 1970s and 1980s.

what to buy: A Short History of John Kirkpatrick ♪♪♪♪♪ (Topic, 1994) is a compilation with excellent liner notes by David Suff that detail Kirkpatrick's career. The John Kirkpatrick Band's Force of Habit ♪♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1996, prod. John Kirkpatrick) is a fiery live album that contains many of the same songs as A Short History, including an even better version of "George's Son," undoubtedly the most delightful song ever written about a sheep dog.

best of the rest:

Plain Capers ♪♪♪♪♪ (Free Reed, 1976/Topic, 1996, prod. John Kirkpatrick, Neil Wayne)
(With the John Kirkpatrick Band) Welcome to Hell ♪♪♪♪ (Fledg'ling, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Ashley Hutchings

see also: Steeleye Span, Ashley Hutchings

Pamela Murray Winters

The Klezmatics

Formed 1986, in New York, NY.

Alicia Svigals, violin; Lorin Sklamberg, accordion, keyboards, vocals; Paul Morrissett, bass, tsimbl; Frank London, trumpet, keyboards; David Licht, drums; Matt Darriau, clarinet, saxophone. Other members have included: David Krakauer, clarinet.

The Klezmatics play radical Jewish roots music for the 21st century, combining their identity as Jews with a post-modern mysticism and progressive politics. This innovative ensemble has shared stage and studio with classical superstar Itzhak Perlman, avante garde dude John Zorn, the alternative rock band Ben Folds Five, transsexual cabaret singers, and the Moroccan Master Musicians of Jajouka. Their collaboration with Perlman, In the Fiddler's House, topped both World and Classical music charts internationally, becoming one of the top-selling folk albums of all time. Formed in 1986, the Klezmatics' music is by turns ecstatic, angry, elegiac, frenetic, and exquisite. Standout musicians in the group include violinist Alicia Svigals, whose mesmerizing fiddling swirls with echoes of ancient Greek and Turkish modes (combined with judicious use of MIDI, jazz stylings, and classical virtuosity) and the compelling vocalist Lorin Sklamberg, who infuses all his songs with intense emotion; but every musician in the Klezmatics is a technical wizard, able to switch gears instantly between a scholarly approach of re-creating an older, traditional sound, and their innovative modern perspective, which is often informed by jazz, rock, and avant-garde influences.

what to buy: Possessed ♪♪♪♪½ (Xenophile, 1997, prod. Robert Musso) reaffirms the Klezmatics' position as the premiere post-modern Klezmer band, as they march into the 21st century with a progressive agenda encompassing Jewish mysticism, gay rights, racial equality, and legalization of marijuana, all of which are given the celebratory treatment formerly reserved for such sacraments as weddings. The album starts in straightforward fashion, with Lorin Sklamberg's emotion-dripping vocals on the gypsy song "Shprayz Ikh Mir," lavishly backed by an expanded ensemble that includes the members of the Canadian group Moxy Früvous. The album soon veers from the traditional into the exotic, with the clamorous "Moroccan Game," featuring a jazzy, skittering group improvisation. "Mizmor Shir Lehanef (Reefer Song)" reflects the Klezmatics' involvement in the struggle to create honest public discourse about drugs in the United States. Unlike their earlier work, Possessed includes numerous songs in English, drawn from the Klezmatics' score for playwright Tony Kushner's "A Dybbuk: Between Two Worlds" (an adaptation of the classic turn-of-the-century Yiddish drama "The Dybbuk").

The Klezmatics (© Jack Vartoogian)

the rest:
ShvaygnToyt (SilenceDeath) ♪♪♪♪ (Piranha, 1988)
Rhythm & Jews ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1992)
(With Itzhak Perlman) Live in the Fiddler's House ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Classics/Angel, 1995)
Jews with Horns ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1995) worth searching for: The Klezmatics appear on the following compilations: Klezmer: A Marriage of Heaven & Earth ♪♪♪ (Ellipsis Arts, 1996), Festival of Light ♪♪♪ (Six Degrees/Island, 1996), Klezmania: Klezmer for the New Millennium ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997), and A Tribute to the Skatalites ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997)

solo outings:
Alicia Sigals:
Fidl ♪♪♪♪½ (Traditional Crossroads, 1997)

influences:
⏪ Schloimke Beckerman, Naftuly Brandwein, Dave Tarras
⏩ Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band, Brave Old World, Budowitz, Kapelye, Don Byron

Suzy Rothfield Thompson

Klezmer Conservatory Band

Formed 1980, in Boston, MA.

Hankus Netsky, alto saxophone, accordion, piano; Judy Bressler, vocals, tambourine, poyk; Gary Bohan, cornet; James Guttmann, bass; Mark Hamilton, trombone; Robin Miller, flute, piccolo; Miriam Rab-

klezmorim

son, violin; Javier Perez Saco, piano; Grant Smith, drums, percussion; Ilene Stahl, clarinet; Jeff Warschauer, mandolin, guitar, tenor banjo, background vocals. Other members have included Don Byron, clarinet; David Brody, violin; Merryl Goldberg, soprano, alto, and baritone saxophones; Evan Harlan, piano, accordion; Frank London, cornet, alto horn; Ingrid Monson, cornet; Steve Netsky, tenor banjo, guitar, mandolin; Marvin Weinberger, violin.

Known for their shimmering performances of traditional and contemporary-tinged Yiddish music, the members of the Klezmer Conservatory Band have been international ambassadors of their high-spirited and infectious dance music since Hankus Netsky assembled the group in 1980. Multi-instrumentalist and composer Netsky, who is chairman of the jazz studies department at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, got his introduction to Yiddish music from an uncle and a grandfather who played in Philadelphia Klezmer bands during the '20s and '30s. Although Klezmer music, also dubbed "Jewish jazz," faded in popularity in the United States after the 1940s, when immigrant Jews tended to want to blend into American culture, recent years have seen a strong renaissance, thanks in part to the efforts of Netsky and the KCB. The 11-piece powerhouse breathes new life into this passionate music, which dates back to medieval Europe and incorporates a gumbo of Greek and Romanian dance rhythms, Dixieland swing, ragtime, and classical elements. The band was featured in 1988's A Jumpin' Night in the Garden of Eden, a documentary about Yiddish music, and in the acclaimed film Enemies, a Love Story. The KCB, which now regularly tours Europe, made its debut abroad in the spring of 1990 when it played several concerts in Germany and brought down the house at the first International Yiddish Festival in Krakow, Poland. The group has also been featured in Joel Gray's Yiddish music revue, "Borschtcapades '94," and in the PBS special, In the Fiddler's House, with violinist Itzhak Perlman. Recorded in New York and Krakow, the latter traced the Klezmer roots of Perlman's brilliant career. Besides the ever-present high octane spirit in the songs, the KCB's album notes include translations and/or transliterations, giving an extra added dimension to this life-affirming, irresistible toe-tapping music.

what to buy: The band calls Live! The 13th Anniversary Album ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Hankus Netsky, George B. Hicks) its Bar Mitzvah album, and like that joyous coming-of-age milestone, this record, recorded at the Berklee Performance Center in Boston on May 2, 1993, teems with celebration, energy, and excitement. Highlights include "Lena from Palesteena," an "early oriental fox-trot" first recorded by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band in 1921, "The Epsteins," a raucous, cascading traditional New York-style wedding dance originally recorded by the Epstein Brothers Orchestra in the mid-'50s, and "Rumenye, Rumenye (Romania, Romania)," which shows off vocalist Judy Bressler's vocal gymnastics in a multilingual rendition of a song that's been sung by Billy Crystal and danced to by John Belushi. Throughout the album, the energy level is just short of delirious, and the concert setting notches things up even tighter than usual. With its songs and stories, Oy Chanukah! ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987, prod. Martin Miller) bristles with the spirit of Chanukah, one of the joyous celebrations of the Jewish year. The added "Oy" in the title (the liner notes describe this multipurpose exclamation as "a lament, a protest, a cry of dismay, a reflex of delight") is indicative of the band's omnipresent spunk and the record's historic reflections.

what to buy next: The group's Dancing in the Aisles ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Hankus Netsky, George B. Hicks) is guaranteed to transport all but the most lead-footed on a tour of show tunes, swing tunes, wedding music, and more. In addition to the group's instrumental savvy, vocalist Bressler has never sounded better. One of the album's most unusual tracks is "Freylekh Fantastique," which excerpts from Beethoven, Mozart, Tchaikovsky, Grieg, and Mendelssohn. Roll back the rug!

the rest:

Klez! ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1988)
A Jumpin' Night in the Garden of Eden ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988)
Old World Beat ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1991)
Yiddishe Renaissance ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1992)

influences:

- 1,000 years of Jewish culture, Seymour Rechtzeit, Miriam Kressyn
- Klezmatics, Brave Old World

David Sokol

Klezmorim

Formed 1975, in Berkeley, CA. Disbanded 1994.

David Julian Gray, clarinets, piano; Lev Liberman, flute, alto and soprano saxophones; Kevin Linscott, trombone; John Raskin, percussion, xylophone; Donald Thornton, tuba; Brian Wishnefsky, trumpet. Other members have included Ben Goldberg, clarinet; Christopher Leaf, trumpet; Ken Bergmann, percussion; Tom Stamper, drums, percussion; Steve Saxon, trumpet; David Skuse, violin; Greg Carageorge, double bass; Laurie Chastain, violin; Rick Elmore, bass trombone, tuba, bass drum, cymbals; Nada Lewis, tsambal mik, baraban; Susie Rothfield, violin; Miriam Dvorin, violin, vocal.

klezmorim

The Klezmorim played a pivotal role in the evolution of Klezmer music; the group's first album ushered in the currently burgeoning Klezmer revival. The members of the Klezmorim described their music as "the rollicking, vodka-soaked sound of a steam calliope gone mad." They blended the group improvisation of Dixieland jazz with the rougher sounds of the unschooled ensembles which once roamed the villages of Eastern Europe, and added a good measure of New Vaudeville theatrics. The result was a loose, roaring, funky brass sound, different from the more classical approach of the Klezmer Conservatory Band or the modern technical virtuosity of the Klezmatics. Today Klezmer music is in the midst of a renaissance, with active ensembles in every city.

Sometimes dubbed "Jewish jazz," Klezmer music first became popular during the 1920s, when musicians were in the midst of merging the Russian and Romanian dance music of their homeland with the newer sounds of early jazz. However, by the mid-1970s, Klezmer music had been practically defunct for decades, a casualty of immigrant Jews' desires to assimilate into U.S. mainstream culture. The resurrection of Klezmer music began in 1975 in an unlikely spot: Berkeley, California, where flutist Lev Liberman had unearthed a cache of 78-rpm discs in a Jewish museum, fell in love with this Yiddish soul music, and plunged into an exhaustive study of Klezmer (a mind-boggling task at this time, since none of the source material was readily available). Clearly the next step was to form a band in order to revive this all-but-moribund musical genre. At first, the band was string-based, with violinist David Skuse playing a key role in choosing repertoire and arrangements. By 1978 the string players had dropped out, and the Klezmorim became a horn ensemble, which they remained until disbanding in 1994. Encouraged by new Klezmorim member Rick Elmore (a member of the Cheap Suit Serenaders, and a seasoned street musician in his alter ego, one-man-band, Professor Gizmo), the Klezmorim began to move away from their previous scholarly approach, incorporating elements from the New Vaudeville movement into their stage show. The Klezmorim toured incessantly, both nationally and internationally, and its success inspired other musicians in other cities to take up the banner of Klezmer, with bands first emerging in Boston (the Klezmer Conservatory Band) and New York (Kapelye). In 1983–84, the Klezmorim collaborated on a theatrical production with the juggling supergroup the Flying Karamazov Brothers, whose bizarre humor left a permanent mark; the band went on to develop their own theatrical presentation combining slapstick comedy, melodrama, and Klezmer music, which became very successful, especially in Europe, where Jazz Babies of the Ukraine was recorded.

what to buy: Recorded live at the Great American Music Hall, Metropolis ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1981/1993, prod. Stuart Brotman) captures the stirring, celebratory and occasionally maniacal energy of the Klezmorim at their peak. "Constantinople," "Hot Dishes," and "The Good Soldier" showcase the Klezmorim's evocative recreation of a Russian military marching band from the turn of the century; the band is rhythmically relaxed yet cohesive, sounding as if they have been playing together for

editor's choice
15 unjustly overlooked gems

Stompin' Tom Connors, A Proud Canadian (EMI Music Canada)

Donovan, HMS Donovan (Dawn)

Arlo Guthrie, Arlo (Reprise/Rising Son)

John Hartford, Aereo-Plain (Warner Bros./Rounder)

Incredible String Band, Earthspan (Reprise/Edsel)

Mendelson Joe, Mr. Middle of the Road (Nobody)

David Lannan, Street Singer (San Francisco)

Phil Ochs, Interviews with Phil Ochs (Folkways)

Patrick Sky, Songs That Made AMERICA Famous (Adelphi)

Mason Williams, Listening Matter (Everest)

Duf Davis & the Book Club, Endless-Mindless Violence (Galactic)

Johnny Dowd, Wrong Side of Memphis (Johnny Dowd)

Hammell on Trial, Big As Life (Mercury)

Ashley MacIsaac, hi how are you today? (Ancient Music/A&M)

One Riot One Ranger, Faces Made for Radio (Fundamental)

decades. David Julian Gray's frenzied clarinet solos on "Kramtweiss Steps Out" and "Heyser Bulgar" feature the laughs, whoops, and swoops associated with Klezmer, giving the piece an authentic village flavor. Not all the tunes are as frenzied; the sinuous "Moldovanke" is more contemplative, and the beautiful "Tuba Doina" creates a unique texture, combining a slow, Middle Eastern-sounding tuba solo by Donald Thornton with the tinkling delicacy of the xylophone.

what to buy next: For a look at the very first stirrings of the Klezmer revival, First Recordings 1976–78 ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1977–78/1989, prod. Chris Strachwitz, Klezmorim) contains highlights of the Klezmorim's first two albums, including gems from their short-lived early era as a string-based ensemble. "Fidl Volach," featuring Skuse's exotic violin, and "Cintec De Dragoste/Hora Lui Damian," with Liberman's lovely flute playing, both serve as reminders of the connection between Balkan folk dance music and Klezmer. Another highlight is what the liner notes dub the "Turkey in the Straw" of Eastern Europe, "Yoshke Yoshke." From the Klezmorim's second album come the sprightly "Firen Di Mekhutonim Aheym" and one of the band's greatest hits, "Di Zilberne Khasene." First Recordings also boasts a charming cover (originally from the second album, Streets of Gold) by the comic-book genius Robert Crumb that pictures the band on the deck of a ship, with the Statue of Liberty in the background. Jazz Babies of the Ukraine ♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1987, prod. Gilles Hugo) gives a sampling of the music from the stage show for which the Klezmorim became best known. It is unfortunately incomplete without the visuals: picture six dark-haired, bearded men performing in fezzes, tossing rubber chickens into the crowd, leaping about like circus acrobats, conducting a mock Socialist rally, a holy-roller revivalist meeting, and kabuki drama onstage. Liberman sums it up by saying "It's true that Ken Bergmann used plastic Halloween bones as drumsticks. Yes, I did solo on the HarpoMarxophone. And it is indisputable that we stole our moves from Betty Boop."

worth searching for: Notes from the Underground ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1984, prod Bernie Krause) is a clear evolutionary step toward Jazz Babies of the Ukraine, and a precursor to such later modern Klezmer groups as The Klezmatics, Flying Bulgars, and New Orleans Klezmer All Stars. This excellent incarnation of the Klezmorim includes Tom Stamper on drums/percussion and Steve Saxon on trumpet, both experienced jazz musicians who bumped the general musicianship of the group up considerably. Highlights include Duke Ellington's "The Mooche" and the "oriental fox-trot" "Egyptian Ella" based on a late-'20s Ted Lewis recording with a teenaged Benny Goodman on clarinet. Another standout is the brilliant tuba solo on "Stambul Tants," originally recorded by the Ukrainian accordion player and bandleader Kornienko.

influences:

- Naftuly Brandwein, Abe Schwartz Orchestra, Dave Tarras, Danny Elfman's "Mystic Knights of the Oingo Boingo," Duke Ellington, Fleischman Brothers' cartoon music
- Kapelye, Klezmatics, Brave Old World

Suzy Rothfield Thompson

Cheri Knight

See: Blood Oranges

Koerner, Ray & Glover

Formed early 1960s, in Minneapolis, MN.

"Spider" John Koerner, vocals; "Snaker" Dave Ray, vocals, guitar; Tony "Little Sun" Glover, harmonica.

Like Dave Van Ronk and Keith Richards, these three white University of Minneapolis college students fell in love with the blues and set out to stamp their slightly fun-loving take on traditional music. But instead of hopping up the old styles into rock 'n' roll, they stuck to the folk crowds, becoming a popular festival act and releasing a string of well-written, respectful albums throughout the 1960s. They have much more in common with the Kingston Trio than the Rolling Stones, or even Howlin' Wolf, but Koerner's impeccable songwriting (including "I Ain't Blue" and "Boys Were Shooting It Out"), Ray's warm guitar licks, and Glover's "Blues Harp" instructional book and liner notes for John Lee Hooker and Jayhawks albums have had lasting influence. Koerner and Ray continue to perform regularly, but the full trio gets together only on special occasions.

what to buy: Blues, Rags, and Hollers ♪♪♪♪ (Audiophile/Elektra, 1963/Red House, 1995) and Lots More Blues, Rags, and Hollers ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1964/1988) are similar to Peter, Paul and Mary's material from that era; but this trio is more talented and understands and uses the soul and blues idioms better than their more hit-loving counterparts.

what to buy next: Good Old Koerner, Ray & Glover ♪♪½ (Mill City, 1972) is a nice comeback record, although the trio's time had clearly come and gone. The live reunion album, One Foot in the Groove ♪♪♪½ (Tim Kerr, 1996, prod. Mark Trehus), is an even better one, with fun songs like the traditional "Dodger" and more solemn takes on Bill Monroe's "With Body and Soul" and the classics "Black Jack Davy" and "Deliah's Gone."

the rest:
Return of Koerner, Ray & Glover ♪♪ (Elektra, 1966)

worth searching for: They're out of print, but Glover and Ray's two duet albums Ashes in My Whiskey ♪♪♪♪ (Rough Trade, 1990) and Picture Has Faded ♪♪♪½ (Tim Kerr, 1992) are powerful, often harrowing, mostly blues sets. Glover's career as a producer and music writer has been occasionally more interesting than his career as a performer: He has worked on albums by punk singer Patti Smith and an excellent documentary film, Blues, Rags, and Hollers: The Koerner, Ray & Glover Story (Latch Lake, 1996).

influences:

◀◀ Pete Seeger, Joan Baez, Bob Dylan, Dave Van Ronk, Mississippi Fred McDowell, Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee, Son House, Skip James, Doc Watson, Big Joe Williams, James Cotton

▶▶ Taj Mahal, Ry Cooder, John Hammond Jr., Keb' Mo'

see also: "Spider" John Koerner

Steve Knopper

"Spider" John Koerner

Born August 31, 1938, in Rochester, NY.

At the peak of the early-1960s collegiate folk era, guitarist and vocalist Spider John Koerner and his Minnesota-based trio—Koerner, Glover and Ray—reached back to earlier roots and produced a series of albums of traditional folk, country blues, and ragtime that influenced everyone from Bob Dylan and the Doors to John Lennon and Bonnie Raitt. During the decades since, Koerner has continued his explorations into the raw, gutsy, side of acoustic music. As a youngster, Koerner had little interest in music. Although he entered the University of Minnesota to study aeronautic engineering, he veered from his course after a dormitory mate introduced him to the songs of Josh White and the Weavers. Teaching himself to play from a Burl Ives songbook, he eventually left school to travel around the country playing music. After serving a stint in the Marine Corps and living for a while in San Francisco, he returned, in 1959, to Minnesota. In his absence, a folk music scene had been launched and there were scores of coffeehouses near the university. In addition to performing as a soloist, Koerner played with a duo that sometimes included a very young Bob Dylan. Meeting and playing with Tony "Little Sun" Glover and Dave "Snaker" Ray at after-hours rent parties, Koerner agreed to join resources. During a marathon recording session, the three musicians recorded an album Blues, Rags, and Hollers in 1963. Although initially released on the ultra-small Audiophile record label, the trio moved into national prominence after Elektra bought out the trio's contract with Audiophile later that year. In addition to re-releasing the album, the label produced the trio's second recording, Lots More Blues, Rags, and Hollers. The 25th anniversary of the album's release was marked by its reissue in 1988. Although he continued to occasionally perform reunite concerts with the trio, Koerner launched his solo recording career with Spider Blues in 1965. Running, Jumping, Standing Still, released in 1969, was his first collaboration with pianist and bass player Willie Murphy and showcased his skills as a songwriter with 10 original songs. After recording two albums during the early 1970s—Some American Folk Songs like They Used To and Music Is Just a Bunch of Notes—Koerner stopped writing songs and retreated from music in 1972, seeming to fade into obscurity. During his self-imposed absence from music, he moved to Denmark for a couple of years and focused his attention on other interests, including experimental film making and amateur astronomy. Koerner's resurrection was sparked by a copy of Alan Lomax's book, American Folk Songs that he found in a book store in Copenhagen. Forsaking his original songs, he became absorbed by traditional folk songs. During the mid-1980s, Red House Records re-released Running, Jumping, Standing Still, which included a collection of unreleased cuts that Koerner had recorded in 1980 with stellar musicians including Peter Ostroushko, Butch Thompson, Tony Glover, Dakota Dave Hull, and pianist Murphy. Koerner's return was solidified by a live album, Legends of Folk Music, recorded with Ramblin' Jack Elliott and Bruce U. "Utah" Phillips.

what to buy: Raised by Humans ♪♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1996, prod. Eric Bain Peltoniemi) captures Koerner's earthy tones in their most ambitious setting. Evenly split between songs written or adopted during the 1970s and new compositions, the album showcases Koerner's mastery of the 12-string acoustic guitar and his soulful singing. Although only two songs are original—"Summer of '88" and "Everybody's Going for the Money"—Koerner successfully resurrects traditional songs including "The Young Man Who Wouldn't Hoe Corn," "Boll Weevil," "The Farmer's Curst Wife," and "The Water Is Wide." An array of top-notch musicians, including Dakota Dave Hull, Dean McGraw, Peter Ostroushko, and Willie Murphy, help to make this a memorable recording.

what to buy next: Running, Jumping, Standing Still ♪♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1969/Red House, 1994, prod. Frazier Mohawk) captures Koerner at his most eclectic. A collaboration with Willie Murphy, who later produced, co-arranged, and played bass on his 1996 album Stargeezer, the album remains a treasured celebration of late-60s folk-rock.

the rest:
Spider Blues ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1965)
(With Willie & the Bees) Music Is Just a Bunch of Notes ♪♪♪½ (Sweet Jane, 1972)
Some American Folk Songs like They Used To ♪♪♪ (Sweet Jane, 1972)
Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Been ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1986)
(With Bruce U. "Utah" Phillips and Ramblin' Jack Elliott) Legends ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1990)
Stargeezer ♪♪♪½ (Red House, 1996)

worth searching for: The multi-artist anthology, Blues with a Feeling, Part Two ♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1997) features a live recording of Spider John Koerner's performance of the original tune, "Traveling Blues" at the Newport Folk Festival in 1965.

influences:
◀◀ Sam Charters, Woody Guthrie, Leadbelly, Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee, Skip James, Mississippi John Hurt
▶▶ Bob Dylan, John Lennon, Jim Morrison, Bonnie Raitt, Chris Smither

see also: Koerner, Ray & Glover

Craig Harris

Walt Koken

Walt Koken was a banjo player in the Highwoods String Band, an influential group during the old-time music revival of the 1960s. After playing with that group, he entered a self-imposed playing hiatus, re-emerging in 1994 with the album Banjonique on Rounder.

what's available: Both of Koken's recent albums, Banjonique ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Walt Koken) and Hei-wa Hoedown ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Walt Koken), are fine examples of old-time solo banjo. Playing in a clawhammer style, Koken breathes fresh life into traditional tunes as well as adding some songs of his own to the canon. The songs are mostly instrumental, but Koken occasionally sings as well. Also recommended listening is Feed Your Babies Onions: Fat City Favorites ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994) by the Highwoods String Band.

influences:
◀◀ Mac Benford, Bob Carlin
▶▶ Arnie Naiman & Chris Coole

Brian Mansfield

Fred Koller

Born c. 1950, in Chicago, IL.

There's a gruff sweetness to his voice that falls somewhere between Louis Armstrong and John Hiatt, but Fred Koller writes tight, folky songs perfectly suited for the smart, friendly coffeehouse environment. With pen pals like John Hiatt, John Prine, John Gorka, Pat Alger, and Shel Silverstein, the Nashville songwriter has also written some classic country-radio friendly songs, including the big Kathy Mattea hits "Goin' Gone," "She Came from Fort Worth," and "Life as We Knew It" (all Top Five); "Lone Star State of Mind," one of Nanci Griffith's best known tracks; and "Angel Eyes," the gorgeous pop hit for the bluesy Jeff Healey Band. The industry vet is also the author of the book How to Pitch and Promote Your Songs.

what to buy: Where the Fast Lane Ends ♪♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1990, prod. Fred Koller, Steve O'Brien) has a cozy, living-room vibe. Koller's songs are provocative, even chilling sometimes, and his voice is warm and inviting on this set of originals (including "Goin' Gone" and "Lone Star State of Mind") written with luminaries including Al Anderson, Pat Alger, John Hiatt, and Sonny Throckmorton.

what to buy next: Songs from the Night Before ♪♪♪½ (Alcazar, 1989, prod. Fred Koller, Steve O'Brien) contains another generous helping of the songwriter's economic, off-color musical observations, including an otherworldly Presley invocation, "King and I," a frightening "Dentist Blues," and a hilariously goofy Prine co-write, "Let's Talk Dirty" (as in "Let's talk dirty in Hawaiian").

the rest:
Night of the Living Fred ♪♪♪ (Alcazar, 1989)

influences:
◀◀ Tom Waits, Bruce Springsteen
▶▶ Randy Newman, John Hiatt

David Sokol

Ken Kolodner

Born September 24, 1954, in Baltimore, MD.

Though he also plays a respectable fiddle, Ken Kolodner is best known as a leading figure of the hammer-dulcimer revival in America. This instrument, which has little in common with the mountain or lap dulcimer other than half its name, has been around for several thousand years, known by such names as timpan, hackbrett, cimbolam, yang chin, santouri, and the lumberjack's piano. In Anglo-American circles, it languished in obscurity until 1975 when the West Virginia group Trapezoid named itself after the hammer dulcimer's shape and built its arrangements around the instrument's percussive, music-box sound. Like such fellow travelers as John McCutcheon, Malcolm Dalglish, and Walt Michael, Kolodner was captivated by the ringing tones of the hammer dulcimer and taught himself how to handle the wooden mallets. Though he eventually formed a duo with flutist Chris Norman, and a trio called Helicon with Norman and guitarist Robin Bullock, he also maintained an active solo career. He appeared at nearly every hammer-dulcimer festival in the United States and became the first American to play at the International Hackbrett Festival in Germany. Born and raised in Baltimore, Kolodner holds a Ph.D. in public health from Johns Hopkins University and works as a consultant in the field.

what's available: Kolodner's debut solo album, Walking Stones ♪♪♪½ (Dorian Recordings, 1997, prod. David H. Walters), features the leader solely on hammer dulcimer with accompaniment by guitarist Bullock of Helicon and fiddler Laura Risk of Cordelia's Dad. The all-instrumental project features 31 tunes, presented as 10 medleys and four individual selections. The slow, evocative title selection, which refers to the Neolithic stone markers scattered across the British Isles, was written by Kolodner, as were three other numbers. The balance of the melodies are traditional and neo-traditional tunes from Irish, Scottish, Quebecois, and Celtic-American sources. Kolodner is careful to sustain the ringing sustain of his instrument to gain more precision within his chamber-music-like arrangements of the tunes, and his accompanists follow his lead. The result is less emphasis on new-age atmosphere and more on musicianship.

worth searching for: Before they formed Helicon, Kolodner and Norman released a duo album called Daybreak ♪♪♪ (Jeb Records, 1985, prod. Ken Kolodner, Chris Norman). They were still trying to get a handle on their musical personalities, but the interplay between Kolodner's self-taught Appalachiana and Norman's classical training, between Kolodner's piercing hammer dulcimer and Norman's fluttering flute, pointed toward the distinguished careers to come. In addition to the Celtic and Appalachian tunes, the album includes two Mozart pieces that boast a folksy warmth, even as the folk tunes benefit from a classical discipline.

influences:

◀◀ Derek Bell, Trapezoid

▶▶ John McCutcheon, Malcolm Dalglish, Walt Michael

see also: Helicon

Geoffrey Himes

leo kottke

4/5/3

Ozzie Kotani

Born 1956, in Honolulu, HI.

One of the many Hawaiian slack-key guitarists who began playing during the 1970s, sometimes called the "era of the Hawaiian Renaissance," Ozzie Kotani has developed one of the more singular styles of playing. He began teaching himself from a Keola Beamer record and developed a unique four-finger playing style; his playing style is also characterized by rolling notes and the bass patterns he plays on his guitar's low strings. A one-time student of the late Sonny Chillingworth, he now teaches in Hawaii and has published an instructional book-and-cassette package called Guitar Playing Hawaiian Style, written with Dennis Ladd. He began recording in 1988.

what's available: The all-instrumental Kani Ki Ho'alu ("The Sound of Slack Key") ♪♪♪½ (Dancing Cat, 1995, prod. George Winston) is more harmonically adventurous than most slack-key albums. The album features Kotani playing solo, though he is occasionally overdubbed, as on "Ione's Theme."

influences:

◀◀ Keola Beamer, Sonny Chillingworth

Brian Mansfield

Leo Kottke

Born September 11, 1945, in Athens, GA.

Acoustic fingerpickers across the land are perpetually awed by the super-nimble guitar work of Leo Kottke. An eclectic guitar wiz, he has developed a cult following not only for his musicianship but also for his dark humor and deadpan vocal delivery. Labeling him a folkie is too limiting a term, as he prefers to jump all over the map without adhering to any one style. He made an auspicious debut in 1969 as a dazzlingly percussive folk/bluegrass based instrumentalist. He soon incorporated a rhythm section and occasional and gradually softened his whirlwind style. He abandoned the fingerpicks and heavy rhythms altogether near the end of the 1970s, when he developed tendonitis. Kottke had to virtually inhabit another approach to his guitar work, a softer, more muted tone. After concentrating more on live performance during the '80s, Kottke has successfully returned to regular album releases.

what to buy: Recorded in three hours, Six and Twelve-String Guitar ♪♪♪♪♪ (Takoma, 1969/Rhino 1994 is a ripping ride that has Kottke literally bursting at every seam. A must-have for anyone who takes traditional acoustic music seriously. Guitar Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1981, prod. Leo Kottke) is his celebrated return to solo acoustic music, with a fine turn on the Everly Brother's "All I Have to Do Is Dream" and the otherworldly "Sleepwalk."

jake krack

what to buy next: For a thorough, but not complete, sampler, The Leo Kottke Anthology ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1997, comp. prod. James Austin, Rick Clark) covers Kottke's debut through 1983. Most of his more celebrated material is from this period. They're all here as well as choice album cuts and self-penned liner notes. His later period work is more diverse, as is the case with Great Big Boy ♪♪♪½ (Private Music, 1991, prod. Steve Berlin). Kottke traipses between funkified folk and Mexican-flavored fare with guests Margo Timmins of the Cowboy Junkies and Lyle Lovett.

what to avoid: That's What ♪♪½ (Private Music, 1990) is too muted to appeal to all but the most devoted listener. It makes for a dull spin that strays too close to New Age.

the rest:
Mudlark ♪♪♪♪ (One Way, 1971/1995)
Greenhouse ♪♪♪♪ (One Way, 1972/1995)
My Feet Are Smiling ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1973/1995)
Ice Water ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1974/1995)
Time Step ♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1983)
A Shout toward Noon ♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1986)
Regards from Chuck Pink ♪♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1988)
My Father's Face ♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1989)
The Essential Leo Kottke ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1991)
Peculiaroso ♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1993)
Live ♪♪♪½ (Private Music, 1995)
Dreams and All That Stuff ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1996) Essential (Collection) ♪♪♪♪ (Alliance, 1997)

worth searching for: Chewing Pine ♪♪♪½ (Beat Goes On, 1975/1994) is an apt title for this rootsy import collection.

influences:
◀◀ Igor Stravinsky, Chet Atkins, Carl Perkins, Rev. Gary Davis, Roy Clark

▶▶ Jorma Kaukonen, Edward Wright, Ry Cooder, Chris Whitley

Allan Orski

Jake Krack

Born 1985, in IN.

Jake Krack began classical violin training at age six. With the help of both parents, his interest quickly turned to old-time fiddling. By age nine he had connected with renowned fiddler Brad Leftwich, whose influence shows strongly in Krack's steady, forceful playing. He has studied extensively with Melvin Wine and Glen Smith, both elder statesmen of West Virginia traditional fiddle music. Krack is a regular at old-time music festivals and contests throughout the Appalachian states and enjoys jamming with friends and strangers alike.

what's available: How 'bout That ♪♪♪♪ (Wisekrack Records, 1996, prod. Grey Larsen, Reed Krack) is Krack's first recording. It includes such old-time standards as "John Brown's Dream" and "Sweet Sunny South," as well as many of the tunes he has learned from Wine and other West Virginia sources. Several of the latter have not been recorded elsewhere. Krack is accompanied by Leftwich on banjo, Bob Herring on guitar, and his mother, Dara Krack, on guitar. Jake plays in standard tuning and several different cross tunings, all of which are given in the liner notes. Hopefully, this is just the first of many recordings from this up-and-coming young artist.

influences:
◀◀ Brad Leftwich, Melvin Wine, Glen Smith, Jimmy Triplett

Dave Shombert

Alison Krauss /Alison Krauss & Union Station

Born July 23, 1971, in Champaign, IL.

No one will ever be more important to bluegrass music than its progenitor, Bill Monroe. But it took Alison Krauss, a preteenager when she started her stellar career, to bring it to the masses. And the way she did it involved no gimmickry, but merely being herself—a fiddle champ who could share the stage with Monroe and hold her own, but also a young woman who's been exposed to pop culture and wants to reflect it in her own music. Thus the covers of rock and pop tunes, and guesting on albums by former Doobie Brother Michael McDonald and neo-hippie rock group Phish. In addition to being a world-class instrumentalist, Krauss possesses an angelic voice that recalls Dolly Parton and Emmylou Harris and is an accomplished bandleader and record producer. There may be no stopping her—nor should there be.

what to buy: Krauss is known for flouting stogy bluegrass conventions, but she shows just how far she's willing to go on Now That I've Found You: A Collection ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995,

Alison Krauss (© Jack Vartoogian)

alison krauss

kris kristofferson

prod. various), which collects tracks from her five albums plus songs from other projects and previously unreleased material. Among the latter, there are covers of Sidney and Suzanne Cox, as well as the Foundations. No problem there. But what's this? "Oh Atlanta" by . . . Bad Company? Indeed, and Krauss pulls it off with aplomb. There's also a version of John Lennon & Paul McCartney's "I Will," recorded for Tony Furtado's album Within Reach, and "When You Say Nothing at All," from a 1994 Keith Whitley tribute album. Krauss's collaboration with the gospel/bluegrass unit the Cox Family, I Know Who Holds Tomorrow ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Alison Krauss) is nearly perfect. The arrangements are both traditional ("Will There Be Any Stars?") and innovative ("Walk over God's Heaven"), and Krauss and the Coxes turn in lively performances on Loretta Lynn's "Everybody Wants to Go to Heaven" and Paul Simon's "Loves Me like a Rock."

what to buy next: Krauss's confidence as a bandleader and producer really shows on Every Time You Say Goodbye ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Alison Krauss & Union Station). Every move seems assured, and her relationship with her band, Union Station, is symbiotic. The traditional material is fine, particularly the instrumental "Cluck Old Hen," and Krauss steps out with a pair of pop tunes, Shawn Colvin's "I Don't Know Why" and Karla Bonoff's "Lose Again."

the rest:
Too Late to Cry ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987)
(With Union Station) Two Highways ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1989)
I've Got That Old Feeling ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990)
So Long So Wrong ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997)

worth searching for: Krauss contributes vocals to "If I Could" from rock band Phish's album Hoist ♪½ (Elektra, 1994). She's guested on dozens of Nashville albums as well. Just turn a recent country album over, and you'll likely find Krauss's name on it somewhere.

influences:
◀◀ Bill Monroe, Dolly Parton, Emmylou Harris
▶▶ Alison Brown, Laurie Lewis, Cox Family

see also: The Cox Family

Daniel Durchholz

Kris Kristofferson

Born June 22, 1936, in Brownsville, TX.

This former Army man and Rhodes scholar tried nearly everything to break into the country-music business during the late 1960s, including hanging out as a recording-studio janitor and, armed with a demo tape, piloting a borrowed helicopter onto Johnny Cash's estate. When he finally did break through in 1970, the waters ran mighty deep—Cash relented and scored big with "Sunday Morning Coming Down," Ray Price hit with "For the Good Times," Janis Joplin posthumously reached the top with "Me and Bobby McGee," and Sammi Smith recorded "Help Me Make It through the Night." That quartet of songs was enough to make Kristofferson an instant star, and though he never again equaled the enormity of those classics, he's continued to write, act, and perform up to the present day. His own versions of his work are limited by his rudimentary vocal ability, and the left-wing musings of the latter portion of his career turned off more than a few country listeners. Still, his importance as an insightful, sexual, rebellious songwriter at a time when country had grown staid can never be underestimated.

what to buy: The most obvious collection of Kristofferson in print is the comprehensive Singer/Songwriter ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia Legacy, 1991), in which the compelling deliveries of Joplin, Price, et al. are juxtaposed with the writer's ragged approach on "Why Me" and "Loving Her Was Easier."

what to buy next: Me and Bobby McGee ♪♪♪♪ (Monument, 1971/1988, prod. Fred Foster), Kristofferson's recording debut, is essential for the inclusion of "Law Is for Protection of the People" and one of his early greats, "To Beat the Devil."

the rest:
The Silver-Tongued Devil and I ♪♪♪♪ (Monument, 1971)
Border Lord ♪♪½ (One Way, 1972/1995)
Jesus Was a Capricorn ♪♪½ (Monument, 1972)
Spooky Lady's Sideshow ♪♪½ (Monument, 1974/One Way, 1995)
(With Rita Coolidge) Breakaway ♪♪ (Monument 1974/1988)
Who's to Bless and Who's to Blame ♪♪½ (One Way, 1976/1996)
Surreal Thing ♪♪ (One Way, 1976/1996)
Songs of Kristofferson ♪♪ (Monument, 1977/1988)
Easter Island ♪♪½ (One Way, 1977/1995)
To the Bone ♪♪½ (One Way, 1981/1996)
Live at the Philharmonic ♪♪ (Sony, 1992)
Shake Hands with the Devil ♪♪ (One Way, 1995)
A Moment of Forever ♪♪ (Justice, 1995)
The Best of Kris Kristofferson ♪♪♪ (Sony Music Special Products, 1995)

Kris Kristofferson (© Jack Vartoogian)

george kuo

influences:

Bob Dylan, Hank Williams

Any songwriter in Nashville alive today

David Simons

George Kuo

Born November 17, 1955, in HI.

Like many of Hawaii's slack-key guitarists, George Kuo comes from a family of players. For example, his granduncle, Albert Kawelo, taught slack-key great Ray Kane during the 1930s. With all that history in his family, Kuo developed a very traditional style of playing. He has recorded on his own, with steel-guitar player Barney Isaacs, and as a member of the Kipapa Rush Band and Eddie Kamae's Sons of Hawaii, a group he joined in 1986.

what's available: Aloha No Na Kupuna–"Love for the Elders" ♪♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1996, prod. George Winston) is a beautiful example of traditional slack-key playing. The influence of Sonny Chillingworth and the Sons of Hawaii is readily heard here: two of the songs Kuo plays here appeared on a 1971 Sons of Hawaii album. Aloha No Na Kupuna won Kuo a Nâ Hôkû Hanohano Award for Instrumental Album of the Year from the Hawaiian Academy of Recordings Arts in 1997. Barney Isaacs's masterful steel-guitar playing gives Isaacs and Kuo's Hawaiian Touch ♪♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1995, prod. George Winston) a more easily distinguishable Hawaiian sound (for mainlanders). The album's liner notes claim that Hawaiian Touch is the first album of acoustic guitar/steel guitar duets in Hawaiian history. Whether or not that's true, this is a fine album for aficionados of the music or the instruments.

influences:

Rev. Dennis Kamakahi, Ray Kane, Gabby Pahinui

Brian Mansfield

Leonard Kwan

Born 1931 in Honolulu, HI.

Along with Sonny Chillingworth and Gabby Pahinui, Honolulu's Leonard Kwan is considered by most to be one of the three most influential slack-key guitarists in history. He began playing guitar around age 10, and by the end of the 1940s, he was playing the Hawaiian style of ki ho'alu (or slack key) on the mainland. A talented musician who could play a bit of piano, ukulele, bass, and saxophone as well as guitar, Kwan played in dance and big bands as well as in Hawaiian combos with Chillingworth and others. He made his first single in 1957 and recorded occasionally for the next two decades, retiring temporarily from public life during the '80s. Shortly before his return to recording with George Winston's Dancing Cat label, Kwan was given the Bank of Hawai'i Ki Ho'alu Award from the Hawai'i Academy of Recordings Arts and named a Living Treasure of Honolulu.

what's available: Kwan hadn't recorded in 20 years when he made Ke'ala's Mele ♪♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1995, prod. George Winston), but he obviously hadn't lost any of his touch. Kwan's goal with Dancing Cat was to document the music of his career, so Ke'ala's Mele contains many Kwan originals, including "Ki Ho'alu Chimes," a song he recorded on his first single. Recorded acoustic and solo (Kwan's only such recording), this album of instrumentals reveals a player with a confident style and deep, resonant sound.

influences:

Sonny Chillingworth

Rev. Dennis Kamakahi, Ledward Kaapana, George Kuo

Brian Mansfield

Jim Kweskin & the Jug Band

Formed 1963, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Disbanded 1967.

Jim Kweskin, guitar, vocals, comb; Mel Lyman, harmonica, banjo; Geoffrey Muldaur, guitar, vocal, kazoo, washboard; Maria D'Amato (Muldaur), vocal, fiddle, kazoo; Bill Keith, banjo; Fritz Richmond, jug, washtub bass; Bruno Wolfe, vocal, harmonica; Bob Siggins, banjo, vocal.

Jim Kweskin and the Jug Band managed to be ahead of its time, behind the times, and quintessentially of its time. Led by guitarist/vocalist/comb player Kweskin, the group was fleshed out with a cast of characters who would go on to make their marks after the group fell apart in the late '60s. Harmonica player Mel Lyman was the subject of a Rolling Stone cover story exposing his bizarre cult organization (Kweskin was one his followers); Geoff Muldaur and Maria D'Amato, the group's two best singers, married and formed a duo after splitting from the Jug Band, then split from one another, Geoff signing on with Paul Butterfield's Better Days while Maria hit the charts as a solo artist in the mid-70s before settling into a cozy career that continues to this day. Kweskin himself later recorded for Reprise and Mountain Railroad. The Jug Band had a unique antique aesthetic that transformed everything from Peggy Lee to Chuck Berry standards into lively old-timey exercises. It didn't hurt that they were fine singers and players, and displayed impeccable taste in tunes.

what's available: Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1970, prod. Maynard Solomon), a 1988 reissue, is all that remains of the original Kweskin ensemble except for the odd slice of vinyl you may come across in used record racks. Its 24 tracks, however, suffice nicely in summing up the full Vanguard oeuvre. One complaint: The quickie packaging offers minimal credits and no liner notes.

influences:

◀◀ Cannon Jug Stompers, Washboard Sam

▶▶ Dan Hicks & His Hot Licks

Steven Stolder

[redacted]

Lá Lugh

Formed 1991, in Dublin, Ireland.

Gerry O'Connor, fiddle; Eithne Ní Uallacháin, voice, flute and whistle.

Historically, County Louth took its name from the pre-Christian god, Lugh Lámfhada or Long-handed Lugh. Lugh was the grandson of Balor of the Evil Eye from Tory Island, Country Donegal, and father of Cúchulainn, the central figure in the great Ulster epic, Táin Bó Cuailnge (The Cattle Raid of Cooley), the setting for which was the Cooley Mountains of north County Louth where Gerry O'Connor and Eithne Ní Uallacháin live. O'Connor was born in Dundalk, the principal town in County Louth while Ní Uallacháin moved there as a child. Historically, most of the county was part of Old Ulster. North Louth and the adjacent parts of South Armagh and County Monaghan were Irish-speaking areas within living memory. Ní Uallacháin, whose first language is Irish, draws her singing from that tradition. O'Connor's people have been fiddle players for generations and he first made his mark as the fiddler in the group Skylark who released two fine albums on the Claddagh label that were released on Green Linnet and Shanachie in the United States. He was also part of the band Kinvara. He was taught by his mother, Rose, and was fortunate to be in close contact with many of the older generation of traditional fiddlers still alive during the 1960s, notably the great Sligo fiddler, John Joe Gardiner. Ní Uallacháin is an exceptional flute and whistle player but is perhaps best known for her outstanding voice, which London's Time Out magazine described as "clear and brittle as hand-blown crystal."

what to buy: La Lugh ♪♪♪♪ (Claddagh, 1991, prod. Eithne Ní Uallacháin, Gerry O'Connor, others) is a stunning debut album filled primarily with sparkling instrumentals, although Ní Uallacháin's singing stands out. "The Emmigrant's Song" is the most beautiful and haunting and is alone worth the price of the CD.

what to buy next: Brighid's Kiss ♪♪♪♪ (Claddagh, 1996, prod. Eithne Ní Uallacháin, Gerry O'Connor, Shaun Wallace) is dedicated to Brighid, whose name mean "high or exalted one," and who was the most powerful female religious figure in Irish history. She was a triple goddess—a virgin mother, a lawmaker, a saint—and a folk image whose shadows still move over Ireland. On Brighid's Day, February 1, she is said to breathe life into the mouth of the dead winter. Lá Lugh celebrates this folk tale with another solid album of hot fiddle and flute tunes and songs. The only thing wrong with this one is that it doesn't have "The Emmigrant's Song" on it.

worth searching for: Cosa Gan Bhróga ♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1987) is the earliest recorded effort by the duo along with Belfast flute player Dessie Wilkinson, but it's long out of print and exceptionally hard to find.

influences:

◀◀ Altan, Arcady

▶▶ John Joe Gardiner, Kevin Burke

see also: Skylark

Neal Walters

Jimmy LaFave

Born July 12, 1955, in Wills Point, TX.

Rising to the top of the always competitive Austin singer/songwriter scene, Jimmy LaFave began his musical career as a drummer. During his teens, LaFave switched to guitar and began singing and writing songs. Moving with his family to Stillwater, Oklahoma, the budding musical talent took inspiration from a wide variety of Okie musical forbears, such as J.J. Cale, Chet Baker, Leon Russell and, of course, Woody Guthrie. Mixing blues, jazz, and country influences with the lessons learned from his musical hero, Bob Dylan, LaFave is both a perceptive songwriter and an appealing singer. Slowly but surely he was drawn back to his home state and the bustling music scene in

4
6 0 tim lake

sean-nós singing

Sean-nós, or old-style, singing refers to a specifically Irish singing tradition, generally of songs in the Irish language, performed solo and without accompaniment and in a rhythmically free and melodically decorated style. Not surprisingly, sean-nós singing has survived mainly in those areas of Ireland, known as "Gaeltacht," where Irish Gaelic is still spoken, the principal centers being Donegal, Connemara (Co. Galway), and the Southwest (Kerry and Cork). Although the singing of each region exhibits subtle stylistic differences, particularly in the manner of ornamentation, one main characteristic remains: sean-nós singing is about telling a story, often one that has special significance for the singer's audience, as it may relate actual events that may have affected persons present or their relatives. Therefore, the melodic material is typically altered, through the introduction of ornaments or the use of elongated notes, to express the story as it unfolds verse after verse and as each singer sees fit to "tell" it. Sean-nós singing has an instrumental parallel in slow airs, i.e., melodies borrowed from the sean-nós repertoire and performed on traditional instruments like the uilleann pipes, the fiddle, or the flute, in a style consistent with the vocal tradition.

Philippe Varlet

Austin. In 1992 he signed with Colorado-based (and Rounder-distributed) Bohemia Beat Records, LaFave formed the first edition of his ever-changing backup band Night Tribe and recorded his debut, Austin Skyline. That album featured four Dylan covers, including "Shelter from the Storm" and "Girl from the North Country." Two more Bohemia Beat albums followed: Highway Trance (1994) and Buffalo Return to the Plains (1995). In December 1995 LaFave won the Songwriter of the Year Award at the Kerrville Music Awards. In March 1996 he won the same award at the annual Austin Music Awards.

what to buy: Buffalo Return to the Plains ♪♪♪♪ (Bohemia Beat, 1995, prod. Jimmy LaFave) is his most distinguished collection of originals. Highlights include the title tune, "Foolish Pride," and the exquisitely sad "Never Be Mine." The obligatory Dylan cover is "Sweetheart like You."

what to buy next: On his second album, Highway Trance ♪♪♪½ (Bohemia Beat, 1994, prod. Jimmy LaFave), LaFave mixes it up more, blending more rockin' numbers like "Shakin' Your Hips" and "Austin after Midnight" with gentle ballads like "Dark Dancing Eyes."

the rest:
Austin Skyline ♪♪♪½ (Bohemia Beat, 1992)
Road Novel ♪♪♪½ (Bohemia Beat, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Bob Dylan, Butch Hancock, Townes Van Zandt

Robert Baird

Tim Lake

Born 1955, in New York, NY.

Don't pigeonhole Tim Lake just because he's a banjo player. Although a former protégé of legendary bluegrass banjo master J.D. Crowe, the Lexington, Kentucky singer/picker/songwriter/composer has invested considerable time and effort in convincing and demonstrating to the world that the five-string banjo does indeed have a life outside the realm of bluegrass and old-time music. While not venturing as far afield as players of the Béla Fleck and Tony Trischka ilk, Lake has released two recordings on his own Padraig label that contain an entertaining mixture of blues, jazz, and, yes, bluegrass, as well as doses of sly humor, pointed commentary, and imaginative lyricism via several of his own songs. And what album would be complete without a stirring bluegrass rendition of the University of Kentucky Fight Song? Following the release of his early Rounder album Same Old Roadside Inn (Rounder, 1978), Lake was engaged in writing the score for a film documentary, and feeling pleased to think of himself as a professional musician. In talking to a pair of horn players with whom he was collaborating, however, he was struck with the realization of how little he actually truly knew about music, and this led him to enroll as a graduate music student at the University of Kentucky. As his doctoral dissertation, he composed "An American Concerto for 5-String Banjo & Orchestra," and on the evening of April 27, 1993, he performed the concerto on stage with the Atlanta-Emory Orchestra. A recording of that event on CD is also available as the title selection on a Padraig release. Backed by his Little Big Band, Lake continues to challenge the preconceived notions and expectations people fall back on that limit their openness to new and different sounds. In Lake's musical world, there are no limits and no boundaries.

what to buy: Jazz with Bluegrass & Blues ♪♪♪½ (Padraig, 1995, prod. Tim Lake) is his most recent recording, and probably his most mature and accomplished all-around effort, particularly as a songwriter. Look for "Everybody Walks with Jesus," "conservative clothes," and "If It Weren't for Growing Up." He also demonstrates that classical music doesn't always have to be totally serious with "Handel's Dueling Banjos con Alleluia y Sarabande."

what to buy next: Only in the Movies ♪♪♪ (Padraig, 1992, prod. Tim Lake) is a little more experimental/conceptual than Jazz with Bluegrass and Blues, but still entertaining. Standout tracks include "A Prophet in Your Own Hometown" and a reworked version of a Woody Guthrie standard, here titled "This World Is Your World."

what to avoid: An American Concerto for Five-String Banjo & Orchestra ♪♪½ (Padraig, 1993) is a classical composition evoking the struggles and tribulations of the American immigration experience, good music that showcases Lake's talents as a composer and arranger, and an interesting experiment at placing the banjo in a symphonic setting, but not exactly what's usually thought of as "folk music."

worth searching for: Same Old Roadside Inn ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1978, prod. Hugh Sturgill) is his debut recording, all original tunes by Lake with the exception of the traditional "Devil's Dream." Instead of the banjo, on most of the cuts Lake plays guitar in support of his vocals, but his singing is expressive and effective. Foreshadowing his more recent efforts, this album is more "country" than straight-ahead bluegrass, but bluegrass aficionados will be interested in the early supporting appearances of modern-day veterans Jerry Douglas, Jimmy Gaudreau, and Bobby Slone.

influences:
◀◀ Earl Scruggs, J.D. Crowe
▶▶ Mike Cross, Tony Trischka, Alison Brown

John Lupton

Barbara Lamb

See: Ranch Romance, Asleep at the Wheel

Mary Jane Lamond

Born c. 1961, in Kingston, Ontario, Canada.

Nova Scotia's Mary Jane Lamond is one of the young artists turning traditional music on its head. On Suas e! her vocals are layered over rhythms and electric guitar samples, backing tracks and synth effects. None of these detract from the essential purity of her songs or voice, and she sings in a pretty traditional style; it's the settings that are shaking traditionalists. Fellow northern renegade Ashley MacIsaac (who's called her "Cape Breton's disco diva") guests on both of her albums; Lamond returned the favor by providing vocals on "Sleepy Maggie" on MacIsaac's superhit Hi How Are You Today?

Lamond grew up in Quebec and Ontario but traveled often to Cape Breton to visit her grandparents. The teenage punk fan ultimately became a student in the Celtic studies program at Saint Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, Nova Scotia. She sings exclusively in Gaelic these days and is one of only 500 people who can speak the language.

what's available: From the Land of the Trees (Bho Thír Nan Craobh) ♪♪♪♪ (B&R, 1994, prod. Al Bennett) reveals a sweet-voiced young woman singing traditional Gaelic songs from Canada. The emphasis on rhythm in the milling songs might have prepared listeners for what to follow, but her next album is still surprising. Suas e! ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1997, prod. Philip Strong, Laurel MacDonald) slips across centuries on fleet and graceful feet. One minute Lamond is singing against synthesizers; the next, she's duetting with the craggy voice of an elderly woman, Margaret Maclean. "Suas e!" roughly translates as "Go for it!"

influences:
◀◀ Ashley MacIsaac, Mouth Music, Sex Pistols

see also: Ashley MacIsaac

Pamela Murray Winters

Hollis Landrum

Born August 14, 1945, in Vicksburg, MS.

Born and raised in Mississippi, Hollis Landrum specializes in traditional American music and he plays banjo and mountain and hammered dulcimers with amazing skill. He won the National Dulcimer Championship in Winfield, Kansas in 1997. During the 1980s, he was a founding member of the four-piece group Irish Blend, featuring Irish and American Civil War music. Music from their cassette release, Songs of the Vicksburg Siege was used on the Arts and Entertainment (A&E) network's Civil War series, The Divided Union, in 1987. Although he remains devoutly traditional in sensibility, Landrum has changed focus recently to showcase an exciting and unique four-string fingerpicking dulcimer style on swing music of the 1940s.

what to buy: Swing Dulcimer ♪♪♪ (Hollis Landrum Productions, 1997, prod. Hollis Landrum) is a dulcimer tour-de-force covering 15 swing standards. Ranging from "Ain't Misbehavin'" to "Sentimental Journey," Landrum coaxes some remarkable sounds out of his solo baritone lap dulcimer made by Ohio luthier, Jerry Rockwell. This is certainly not the most traditional of Landrum's recordings but it is the only one on CD and it is exceptional.

what to buy next: The cassette-only Some Enchanted Evening ♪♪½ (Hollis Landrum Productions, 1995, prod. Hollis Landrum) is a nice set of solo dulcimer versions of Christmas material. The cassette-only Songs of the Vicksburg Siege ♪♪½ (Irish Catfish, 1986, prod. Hollis Landrum) is Landrum's most traditional recording and features music and narration of the 1863 Vicksburg siege, providing and preserving the musical backdrop against which the battle was waged. All recordings are available from Hollis Landrum, 407 Lake Forest, Vicksburg, Mississippi 39180.

influences:

◀◀ Janita Baker, Mark Tindle, Les Gallier

▶▶ Tull Glazener, Neil Gaston

Neal Walters

k.d. lang

Born Kathryn Dawn Lang, November 2, 1961, in Consort, Alberta, Canada.

The question facing k.d. lang at the beginning of her career was a sticky one: Can a vegetarian lesbian from north of the border make it in Music City? The answer seems so obvious that it's a measure of k.d. lang's moxie that she even bothered to ask. But lang—who, in campy garb and rhinestone spectacles, initially approached crooning "countrypolitan" tunes as performance art, and for a time even claimed to be the reincarnation of Patsy Cline (thus, the name of her band, the reclines)—is a singer/songwriter of rare talent and determination who eventually won the war, even if she lost the battle. After her U.S. debut mistakenly cast lang as a Canadian cowpunk, she brought legendary Cline producer Owen Bradley out of retirement for Shadowland, a triumphant album that proved lang could take Nashville on its own terms and succeed. After her next album took lang's torch-and-twang sound to its logical conclusion, she progressed to a more expansive pop sound, a move that coincided with lang declaring her lesbianism in the Advocate during 1992. Her continuing interest in other types of performance led her to a bold starring role in Percy Aldon's 1991 film Salmonberries, and she co-composed and performed the soundtrack to Gus Van Sant's 1993 film Even Cowgirls Get the Blues. Her political and social views—notably her 1990 "Meat Stinks" ads for People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)—often draw more attention than her music, but they're part and parcel of lang's iconoclastic personality. And besides, her music continues to speak for itself.

what to buy: On Absolute Torch and Twang ♪♪♪♪½ (Sire, 1989, prod. Greg Penny, Ben Mink, k.d. lang) lang and her backup band the reclines invented the perfect tag for her particular brand of music. lang also made her best album by internalizing her influences enough to come up with a sound all her own. Such songs as "Luck in My Eyes," "Big Boned Gal," and "Big Big Love" derive their energetic spunk from the raucous cowpunk of Angel with a Lariat, while "Three Days," "Wallflower Waltz," and especially the transcendent "Pullin' Back the Reins" reveal how much she'd learned from her sophisticated crooning on Shadowland. Speaking of which, Shadowland ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1988, prod. Owen Bradley) is the album on which lang realized the full range of her powerful voice, but also learned to sing with restraint and nuance. Bradley's careful production returns countrypolitan to its former luster, and the material is first rate, particularly the aching "Western Skies" and the weary, after-hours "Black Coffee." The "Honky-Tonk Angel" medley is something of an event, matching lang with three of Bradley's former charges: Loretta Lynn, Kitty Wells, and Brenda Lee.

what to buy next: lang jokingly called Ingenue ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1992, prod. Greg Penny, Ben Mink, k.d. lang) her "stalker" album, for it is full of songs about desire and obsession. Despite such onerous implications, the album is a charmer, thanks to her sincerity and passion and the (forgive me) languorous arrangements of such songs as "Constant Craving," "The Mind of Love," and even the campy "Miss Chatelaine." Switching genres is no small thing. On Ingenue lang moves from country to adult-contemporary pop with admirable élan.

what to avoid: There's nothing really wrong with lang's U.S. debut, Angel with a Lariat ♪♪½ (Sire, 1987, prod. Dave Edmunds). It's just that lang and the reclines never really click with producer Edmunds, and with the exception of the opening track, "Turn Me 'Round," nothing ever really takes off. And who needs a remake of Lynn Anderson's hit "Rose Garden"?

k.d. lang (© Ken Settle)

k.d. lang

the rest:
Even Cowgirls Get the Blues: Original Motion Picture Soundtrack ♪♪♪ (Sire/Warner Bros.)
All You Can Eat ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1995)
Drag ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1997)

worth searching for: lang's Canadian debut a truly western experience ♪♪ (Bumstead, 1984, prod. Jamie Kidd, k.d. lang, Gary Delorme) is an interesting look at lang and the reclines before k.d. truly hit her stride. The high-stepping "Bopalena" and "Hanky Panky" are standouts.

influences:
◀◀ Patsy Cline, Marshall Chapman, Roy Orbison, Gertrude Stein
▶▶ Shelby Lynne, Murmurs, Mrs. Fun

Daniel Durchholz

Patty Larkin

Born in Milwaukee, WI.

Patty Larkin's music feels like a wind across the water, holding both a chill and a promise. Her voice is breathy, with a little bit of grit in the lower register and almost pristine purity on the high end. She's at once sensual and intellectual with more than a touch of sardonic wit. Larkin grew up in Wisconsin and earned a degree in English literature at the University of Oregon. During the early '70s, she moved to Boston for post-graduate study in jazz guitar and music theory at the Berklee College of Music. She has been a fixture of the Boston scene ever since. Her training is clear both in the skill and accuracy of her singing and guitar playing and in the broad range of musical styles—folk, Celtic, jazz, rock, pop, Latin, country—that spices her acoustic-music brew. Larkin released her first album Step into the Light on the regional Philo label in 1985. In 1991 she jumped to Windham Hill's High Street subsidiary, and her exposure on "adult alternative" radio has been growing ever since, bolstered by a performance schedule of at least 150 shows a year.

what to buy: On Tango ♪♪♪♪ (High Street, 1991, prod. Will Ackerman, Patty Larkin), Larkin's third studio album, she set the bar for all her subsequent work. The lyrics are mature but not doddering. The music is diverse but unified by her sensibility. The atmosphere is introspective but anything but somnambulant. From the romance of "Tango" through the social criticism of "Metal Drums" to the light quirkiness of "Dave's Holiday," this is a fine collection of songs. I'm Fine ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1988, prod. Darleen Wilson, Patty Larkin) lives up to its title and is almost as good as Tango.

what to buy next: Although no song on Perishable Fruit ♪♪♪½ (High Street, 1997, prod. Patty Larkin) seems quite as affecting as her earlier material, the pleasure on this album is in the musical details. Except for the vocals, the music is performed on nothing but stringed instruments, producing a gorgeous field of sounds to get lost in. Strangers World ♪♪♪½ (High Street, 1995, prod. John Leventhal, Patty Larkin) is an oddly downcast and philosophical collection. Still, a light beams through such songs as "Italy" and "Me and That Train," while a song like "Johnny Was a Pyro" shows up all the young grrrls with its smoldering resentment.

the rest:
Step into the Light ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1985)
In the Square ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1990)
Angels Running ♪♪♪ (High Street, 1993)

influences:
◀◀ Joni Mitchell, Paul Simon, Bob Dylan
▶▶ Jane Siberry, Shawn Colvin

Salvatore Caputo

Grit Laskin

Called one of the most astonishing inlay artists in North America, Grit Laskin is a luthier who's got orders for guitars to fill through the year 2001. He also plays numerous instruments, including concertina, Northumbrian smallpipes, fiddle, mandolin, dulcimer, and banjo. As if he's not busy enough with all that, he sings, writes songs, runs a dance camp, and published his first novel in 1996! Laskin's first two albums were released on Stan Rogers's Fogarty's Cove label. (Laskin used to play backup to Rogers as well.) His songs have been recorded by Pete Seeger and the Tannahill Weavers as well as by many Canadian artists. He's worked extensively with children's artist Raffi. Take a bow, Laskin, and a breath!

what's available: A Few Simple Words ♪♪♪ (Borealis, 1995, prod. Ken Whiteley, Grit Laskin), Laskin's third album, tackles issues like AIDS and homelessness with sincerity. Laskin also offers a calypso-flavored look at his own profession, "Guitarmaker."

worth searching for: Unmasked ♪♪♪♪ (Fogarty's Cove, 1979, prod. Valerie Rogers), now out of print, shows Laskin at his folk best. Highlights include a moving tribute to the athletes assassinated at the 1972 Munich Olympics, "The End of a Pointed Gun," and a playful take on bawdy ballads, "The Photographers" (with Laskin on vocals and concertina).

influences:

⏪ Gordon Lightfoot, Pete Seeger, Stan Rogers

⏩ Cindy Kallett, David Wilcox

Pamela Murray Winters

The Laurel Canyon Ramblers

Formed 1994, in Los Angeles, CA.

Herb Pedersen, banjo, vocals; Bill Bryson, bass, vocals; Kenny Blackwell, mandolin; Billy Ray Lathum, guitar (1994–96); Roger Reed, guitar, vocals (1996–present); Gabe Whitaker, fiddle (1996–present).

In 1993, when the country-chart-topping Desert Rose Band formally disbanded, members Herb Pedersen and Billy Bryson got the bluegrass fever again. They hooked up with Kentucky Colonels/Dillards alumnus Billy Ray Lathum and mandolinist Kenny Blackwell to form the Laurel Canyon Ramblers. Rather than focus on grand flourishes and extended jams, the band hones in on tight harmonizing, crisp solos, and complementary instrumental accompaniment. Many of their arrangements follow in the Desert Rose Band style.

what's available: Rambler's Blues ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1994, prod. Herb Pedersen) contains the hot instrumental "Yellowhead" and the gorgeous bluegrass gospel "He Said If I Be Lifted Up." A bluegrass reworking of "Love Reunited," a Top 40 country hit for the Desert Rose Band, is also worth checking out; fiddler Byron Berline and LeRoy McNees guest. The somewhat more traditional Blue Rambler 2 ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1996, prod. Herb Pedersen) features a blistering bluegrass mix of Ralph Stanley's "Bad Case of the Blues" and Pedersen's achingly beautiful "Wait a Minute."

influences:

⏪ Bill Monroe & His Blue Grass Boys, Flatt & Scruggs, Kentucky Colonels, Dillards, Desert Rose Band, Country Gazette

⏩ Blue Highway, IIIrd Tyme Out, Unlimited Tradition, Fox Family

see also: Chris Hillman, Dillards, Kentucky Colonels

Douglas Fulmer and Rick Petreycik

Christine Lavin

Born January 2, 1952, in Peekskill, NY.

Having learned to play guitar from a public TV program while growing up, Christine Lavin quit her day job at a hospital in 1984 to pursue music full-time. She has gone on to become the doyen of the Manhattan folk scene, promoting the talents of many others in various ways, including a local weekly radio program. Four Bitchin' Babes, a female singer/songwriters roundtable that she organized, has proven to have a long life—practically a career unto itself—with regulars Sally Fingerett and Megon McDonough and a rotating fourth chair that's been filled by Patty Larkin, Julie Gold, and Debi Smith; temporary "guest Babes" have included Cheryl Wheeler, Kristina Olsen, Janis Ian, and Mary Travers. Lavin recorded three albums with the Babes, but in late 1997 she departed and Camille West has now taken her place on both new recording project and in the Babes' club appearances. Though Lavin's many humorous songs have typecast her as a comic singer, she also writes about relationships with an acute observatory eye and can be as deep and sincere as any other songwriter—she just doesn't take herself as seriously.

what to buy: Attainable Love ♪♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1990, prod. Christine Lavin) contains two of Lavin's most lasting humorous songs, "Sensitive New Age Guys" and "Shopping Cart of Love: The Play," and one of her most heart-rending plaints, "The Kind of Love You Never Recover From."

what to buy next: Good Thing He Can't Read My Mind ♪♪♪½ (Philo/Rounder, 1988, prod. Bill Kollar) features "Mysterious Woman," which simultaneously laments Lavin's failure to be Suzanne Vega and lampoons Vega's willful obscurantism. Four Bitchin' Babes' Buy Me Bring Me Take Me: Don't Mess My Hair!!! Volume II ♪♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1993, prod. Four Bitchin' Babes, Steve Rosenthal) offers the opportunity to hear the massively successful ballad "From a Distance" performed by its writer, Julie Gold, in a spare setting that doesn't overstate its pieties. Among Lavin's tracks is a charming cover of "Sealed with a Kiss."

what to avoid: Please Don't Make Me Too Happy ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1995, prod. Steve Rosenthal), while not a bad record, is flawed. The humor is more shaggy-dog than quirky observation and doesn't wear well on repeated listenings. But those who wish Lavin would lean more toward rock on occasion will like the denser production.

the rest:

Future Fossils ♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1986)

Beau Woes and Other Problems of Modern Life ♪♪♪½ (Philo/Rounder, 1987)

(With Four Bitchin' Babes) Buy Me Bring Me Take Me: Don't Mess My Hair!!! Volume I ♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1990)

Compass ♪♪♪½ (Philo/Rounder, 1991)
Live at Cactus Cafe ♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1993)
Shining My Flashlight on the Moon ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997)
(With Four Bitchin' Babes) Fax it! Charge it! Don't Ask Me What's for Dinner! ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1995)

worth searching for: Another Woman's Man ♪♪♪ (Philo/Rounder, 1987/92, prod. Christine Lavin) is a seven-song EP that at one time was available on LP but is now only on cassette. Formerly called Husbands and Wives, it contains 1983 recordings ranging from the bitter/funny "If You Want Space, Go to Utah" to "If I Could Be Sonja Henie," an obsession Lavin retains to this day. With a couple of exceptions, the arrangements are pleasingly spare.

influences:

◀◀ Joni Mitchell, Peter Paul & Mary, Loudon Wainwright III, Dave Van Ronk

▶▶ Debi Smith, Cheryl Wheeler, Shawn Colvin

see also: Four Bitchin' Babes

Steve Holtje

Doyle Lawson /Quicksilver

Born April 20, 1944, in Kingsport, TN. Quicksilver formed 1979.

Mandolinist and bandleader Doyle Lawson is considered one of the most influential forces in modern bluegrass; his bands are marked by their extremely well-honed vocal harmonies and bright, powerful renditions, especially of gospel material. Trained as a member of Jimmy Martin's Sunny Mountain Boys, Lawson also worked in groundbreaking bluegrass bands with J.D. Crowe and Red Allen and spent seven years as part of the Country Gentlemen making classic bluegrass recordings. In 1979 he formed his band, Quicksilver, with banjoist Terry Baucom, guitarist Jimmy Haley, and Lou Reid on bass. Doyle Lawson and Quicksilver quickly established themselves as among the most innovative vocal bands in bluegrass and became particularly well known for their gospel efforts, including an increasing number of a cappella efforts. The turnover in Quicksilver has been frequent and rapid—on at least three occasions, versions of the band have left virtually en masse to form new bands (The New Quicksilver, Lou Reid, Terry Baucom & Carolina, and IIIrd Tyme Out)—but Lawson inevitably finds replacements who are wonderful musicians and continues to make great and influential recordings.

what to buy: Quicksilver's breakthrough album and still one of the finest and most influential modern bluegrass albums, Rock My Soul ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1981, prod. Doyle Lawson) features inventive arrangements, inspired harmony singing, and a far-reaching and adventurous repertoire. A classic.

what to buy next: There's a Light Guiding Me ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1996, prod. Doyle Lawson) is an outstanding all-gospel effort. Heaven's Joy Awaits (A Cappella Quartets) ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1987, prod. Doyle Lawson) includes one of Lawson's finest vocal aggregations; Russell Moore, Scott Vestal, and Ray Deaton have all since gone on to success in other bands. I'll Wonder Back Someday ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1988, prod. Doyle Lawson) is a recording of mostly traditional secular numbers that showcases that side of Quicksilver. Never Walk Away ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1995, prod. Doyle Lawson) is a good secular effort with a young band; it includes a superior version of the soon-to-be-classic "In the Gravel Yard."

the rest:

Doyle Lawson & Quicksilver ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1980)
Quicksilver Rides Again ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1981)
Heavenly Treasures ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1981)
Once and for Always ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1985)
Beyond the Shadows ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1986)
The News Is Out ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1987)
Hymn Time in the Country ♪♪♪½ (Sugar Hill, 1988)
I Heard the Angels Singing ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1989)
My Heart Is Yours ♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1990)
Treasures Money Can't Buy ♪♪♪♪ (Brentwood, 1990)
Pressing on Regardless ♪♪♪ (Brentwood, 1990)
Doyle Lawson & Quicksilver Gospel Collection, Volume I ♪♪♪♪ (Sugar Hill, 1990)

influences:

◀◀ Jimmy Martin, Country Gentlemen

▶▶ J.D. Crowe & the New South, Ricky Skaggs

Randy Pitts

The Leaves

Formed 1966, in Los Angeles, CA. Disbanded 1968.

Jim Pons, bass, vocals; John Beck, guitar, vocals; Bobby Arlin, guitar, vocals; Robert Reiner, drums.

This was one of the first L.A. folk-rock bands, and it was influenced as much by the British as by the burgeoning West Coast rock scene. The Leaves' strength was its harmony vocals and an alternating jangling and minor-key tone. Not remembered for penning memorable material, the group was good at emulating others' styles, culling inspiration from the Beatles, the Byrds, the Rolling Stones, and Bob Dylan. Second only to Jimi Hendrix's rendition, the Leaves' folk-rock arrangement of "Hey Joe" hit the Top 40 in 1966.

what's available: All the Good That's Happening (Capitol, 1967/One Way, 1994) ♫♫ is the only Leaves album in print today.

worth searching for: Hey Joe (MIRA, 1966/One Way, 1993, prod. Norm Ratner) ♫♫ is worth having just for the fine title track. Unfortunately, the rest of the material is pretty weak.

influences:
The Beatles, the Byrds, the Rolling Stones, Bob Dylan

Patrick McCarty

editor's choice
12 old time banjo albums

Various Artists, Diller Collection, Vol. 2 (Augusta Heritage)
Various Artists, High Atmosphere (Rounder)
Various Artists, Banjo Anthology, Vol. 1 (Marimac/Augusta Heritage)
Various Artists, Banjo Anthology, Vol. 2 (Marimac/Augusta Heritage)
Dwight Diller, Harvest
Will Keys, Evergreen (Cloudlands)
Morgan Sexton, Shady Grove (June Appal)
Various Artists, Old 5-String (Heritage)
Roscoe Holcomb & Wade Ward, Them (Folkways)
Various Artists, Library of Congress Banjo Collection (Rounder)
Walt Koken, Banjonique (Rounder)
Arnie Naiman & Chris Coole, 5 Strings Attached (Merriwether)

Leadbelly /Huddie Ledbetter

Born Huddie Ledbetter, January 15, 1888, in Mooringsport, LA. Died December 6, 1949, in New York, NY.

While he is recognized as a seminal blues artist, Leadbelly was also one of the greatest repositories of American folk music. Many of his trademark songs—"Goodnight Irene," "Rock Island Line," "Take This Hammer," and "The Midnight Special"—are considered classics in any genre. Proficient on several instruments, he is generally associated with the 12-string guitar. Leadbelly grew up a farmer and a songster, playing reels and traditional songs at country suppers. He didn't add blues to his repertoire until he visited Shreveport in 1906. In 1912, Leadbelly moved to Dallas and befriended Blind Lemon Jefferson, who taught the twenty-something musician more about the blues and the bottleneck guitar technique. Leadbelly was imprisoned three times during his life, which actually helped his career as a musician. In 1934, while at the Louisiana State Prison, he recorded for folklorist Alan Lomax, who was collecting songs for the Library of Congress. After his parole, Leadbelly (who was also known as Walter Boyd) helped Lomax search for blues and folk singers to record, and accompanied the folklorist on a lecture tour. While in New York on the tour, Leadbelly performed over national radio and soon became popular within Manhattan society. His commercial recordings on Arc sold poorly, but Lomax continued to record him for the Library of Congress. In the 1940s, Leadbelly recorded prolifically for RCA and Folkways. When folk music became popular later in the decade, the demand for Leadbelly recordings and appearances soared. Unfortunately during a 1949 tour of France, the musician was diagnosed with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis—Lou Gehrig's disease. He died before the year was out, but not before leaving an important body of American blues and folk music.

what to buy: The selection of Leadbelly's CDs is daunting. A good start is choosing at least one of six The Library of Congress Recordings ♫♫♫♫½ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Alan Lomax). All are filled with timeless music and stories. The Original Asch Recordings ♫♫♫♫½ (Folkways, 1993, prod. Moses Asch) is just as enjoyable and important as Last Sessions ♫♫♫♫½ (Folkways, 1994, prod. Anthony Seeger, Matt Walters).

best of the rest:
Alabama Bound ♫♫♫♫½ (RCA Bluebird, 1989)
Sings Folk Songs ♫♫♫♫ (Folkways/Smithsonian, 1989)
Storyteller Blues ♫♫♫♫ (Drive Archive, 1994)
Goodnight Irene ♫♫♫♫ (Tradition/Rykodisc, 1996)
In the Shadow of the Gallows Pole ♫♫♫♫ (Tradition/Rykodisc, 1996)
Where Did You Sleep Last Night? ♫♫♫♫ (Smithsonian Collection, 1996)
Bourgeois Blues: Leadbelly Legacy Vol. II ♫♫♫♫ (Folkways/Smithsonian, 1997)

arthur lee

worth searching for: The excellent book The Life and Legacy of Leadbelly, by Charles Wolfe and Kip Lornell, is a great read. So, too, is the Lead Belly Letter (PO Box 6678, Ithaca, New York, 14851).

influences:

- Blind Lemon Jefferson
- Lightnin' Hopkins, Pete Seeger, Woody Guthrie, Burl Ives, Josh White

Jeff Hannusch

Arthur Lee

See: Love

Lorraine Lee

See: Lorraine (Lee) Hammond

Rick Lee

See: Lorraine (Lee) Hammond

Brad Leftwich /Brad Leftwich & Linda Higginbotham

Born in OK.

Known for the purity of his sound and his devotion to tradition, Brad Leftwich has been sharing his love of old-time music with audiences for more than 25 years. Brad's grandfather, a banjo player, and his great-uncle, a fiddler, came from the Blue Ridge mountain community of Fancy Gap in Carroll County, Virginia, near the towns of Galax and Mount Airy—an area noted for the abundance and quality of its traditional music—and was a major influence on his musical development. Leftwich has also learned from the legendary Tommy Jarrell of Mount Airy, North Carolina, as well as other musicians in his native Oklahoma and throughout the Ozark and southern Appalachian regions. Today, Leftwich is among the foremost old-time musicians of his generation. Known best for his fiddling, he is also an accomplished banjo player and singer. He won the prestigious fiddle contest at the 1990 Appalachian String Band Music Festival in Clifftop, West Virginia, and his band, the Humdingers, won the band contest the same year. His previous bands, Plank Road and Leftwich & Higginbotham, recorded several albums and performed at venues from the White House to the Philadelphia Folk Festival during the 1970s and '80s.

what to buy: Say, Old Man ♪♪♪♪½ (County, 1996, prod. Gary B. Reid) is a fabulous recording made by Leftwich and his wife, Linda Higginbotham. With this recording you will get to hear everything from full string-band dance tunes to some of the best solo, old-time fiddle that you will ever hear. This is one fabulous CD, from start to finish.

worth searching for: Leftwich has a substantial back catalog that has yet to make it to CD. Among the best are A Moment in Time ♪♪♪♪½ (Marimac) with Dan Gellert (cassette only), and Leftwich and Higginbotham's now out-of-print LP No One to Bring Home Tonight ♪♪♪♪½ (County, 1984, prod. Brad Leftwich, Linda Higginbotham).

influences:

- Tommy Jarrell, Rush Leftwich, Tom Fuller
- Jake Krack, Dirk Powell, Rhythm Rats

Steve Gardner

Adrian Legg

Born May 16, 1948, in Hackney, London, England.

Acoustic guitarist Adrian Legg broke into the world at large in 1991 with the release of Guitars and Other Cathedrals, an album whose bounding technical flourish, broad sense of style, and bone-deep lyricism immediately perked up the ears of guitar fans everywhere. Since then, Legg's career has amounted to a tidy whirlwind of activity, producing the award-winning albums Guitar for Mortals and Mrs. Crowe's Blue Waltz and the seasonally flavored album Wine, Women, and Waltz, touring extensively, and picking up a growing legion of fans along the way. His original compositions are performed with precision and dexterity. Legg is a unique and engaging artist who has steadily built a solid reputation among musicians, fans, and the press as one of Britain's most talented guitar instrumentalists, as well as one of its wittiest exports.

what to buy: Waiting for a Dancer ♪♪♪♪ (Red House Records, 1997, prod. Bobby Cochran) marks Legg's move from Relativity Records, a company best known for hard-rock guitarists like Steve Vai and Joe Satriani, to Red House, a subsidiary label of the well-known Windham Hill Records.

what to buy next: High Strung Tall Tales ♪♪♪½ (Relativity, 1994) features Legg's dry wit as much as it does his flawless technique. The man is an inhuman guitar player but, as this album shows, he doubles as a British Garrison Keillor as well, introducing nine tracks with a humorous warmth that rivals anything that goes on in Lake Wobegon.

the rest:
Requiem for a Hick ♪♪♪½ (Westwood, 1977)
Techno Picker ♪♪♪ (Spindrift, 1983)
Fretmelt ♪♪♪ (Spindrift, 1984)
Lost for Words ♪♪♪ (Making Waves, 1986)
Guitars and Other Cathedrals ♪♪♪½ (Relativity, 1990)
Guitars for Mortals ♪♪♪½ (Relativity, 1992)
Mrs. Crowe's Blue Waltz ♪♪♪½ (Relativity, 1993)
Wine, Women & Waltz ♪♪♪½ (Relativity, 1993)

influences:
Michael Hedges

Tuck Andress, Dan Ar Braz

Neal Walters

Eddie LeJeune

Born August 20, 1951, in Lacassine, LA.

Although Iry LeJeune died much too young to have much direct influence on his son's music, the music of Eddie LeJeune deeply echoes that of his father. The younger LeJeune has the same virtuoso quality about his accordion playing and the high lonesome LeJeune tinge in his singing. You can hear it the most when he launches into tunes associated with his father, like "Lacassine Special." The accordion runs spill over the bar lines, almost capsizing the band, and the vocals make you imagine the singer with tears streaming down his face. LeJeune is an ardent traditionalist and records with all acoustical instruments and no drums. Not that the loss of a drum matters much; there is plenty of rhythm in his singing and playing.

what to buy: It's in the Blood ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Ken Irwin) may be the most traditional Cajun album recorded in the last 20 years. LeJeune's deeply traditional singing and playing is accompanied by the late great Cajun fiddler Lionel Leleux, who started playing with Nathan Abshire in the early 1930s! They are accompanied by the "freight train" guitar playing of Hubert Maitre and the steady triangle of Eddie LeJeune Jr. Beautifully recorded and beautifully played.

what to buy next: Cajun Soul ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1988, prod. Ken Irwin) is LeJeune in the stellar company of D.L. Menard on guitar and the great Ken Smith on fiddle. This was Eddie's first recording and he squeezes every ounce of soul out of his old accordions that he can get. As beautiful and sincere an acoustical music experience as you can find anywhere.

worth searching for: Le Trio Cadien ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Ken Irwin) finds the same three musicians who played on Cajun Soul brought together as equals. With the singing split up between D.L. and Eddie, the result is two great Cajun singers and instrumentalists accompanied by the most tasteful Cajun fiddler around.

influences:
Nathan Abshire, Amédée Ardoin, Iry LeJeune

Steve Riley, Tasso, Balfa Toujours, Horace Trahan

see also: Iry LeJeune

Jared Snyder

Iry LeJeune

Born October 28, 1928, in Church Point, LA. Died October 8, 1955, near Eunice, LA.

Young Cajuns had pretty much lost interest in the old-fashioned accordion-based music by the time World War II rolled around. The airwaves were dominated by the Western Swing–influenced sounds of Harry Choates and Leo Soileau. But when the G.I.s returned after the war they wanted the comfort of those good old-fashioned tunes, and they found it in a nearly blind farm boy who sang his heart out. Iry LeJeune was too sight impaired to work and spent much of his youth hanging out at his uncle, Angelas LeJeune's, home. The older LeJeune was a superb accordionist who let his nephew listen and learn from his recordings of the great Amédée Ardoin. Iry was greatly influenced by Ardoin's virtuoso accordion and high, passionate singing. He would eventually record his interpretations of many of Ardoin's songs, as well as those of his uncle. He in turn would have enormous influence on a whole generation of Cajun musicians who would learn Ardoin's songs from LeJeune's recordings.

what to buy: Cajun's Greatest: The Definitive Collection ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ace, 1994, prod. Eddie Shuler, John Broven) is the one and only record to get. The people at Ace have tried valiantly to clean up the sound as much as possible. LeJeune was often recorded at home on a primitive portable recorder, and the studio mixing techniques of the originals did little to enhance these recordings and much to muddle them. But it is all here: the heartbreaking vocals, the breathtaking fast accordion runs overwhelming the music. If they listen to Cajun music in heaven, this is it.

what to avoid: The Legendary Iry LeJeune ♪♪ (Goldband, 1991, prod. Eddie Shuler) is much of the same music as the Ace CD except that there is an electric bass dubbed onto the original recordings that is mixed so that it sounds as if the bass player is playing along with a record player in the recording studio. At least it is a step up on the LPs that looked like they were pressed on recycled tires at a plant in the Dominican Republic.

influences:

◀◀ Nathan Abshire, Amédée Ardoin

▶▶ Steve Riley, Marc & Ann Savoy

see also: Eddie LeJeune

Jared Snyder

James Leva & Carol Elizabeth Jones

See: Carol Elizabeth Jones & James Leva

Dan Levenson

See: Boiled Buzzards

The Lewis Family

Formed 1951, in Lincolnton, GA.

James Roy "Pop" Lewis, vocals; Pauline "Mom" Lewis, vocals; Roy "Little Roy" Lewis Jr., banjo, vocals; Wallace Lewis, guitar, vocals; Miggie Lewis, vocals; Polly Lewis Williams, vocals; Janis Lewis Phillips, vocals; Travis Lewis, bass; Lewis Phillips, guitar, banjo, mandolin.

Known as the First Family of Bluegrass Gospel, the Lewis clan has been keeping the flame alive for three generations, adding new members whenever an interested family member was old enough to pick or sing. Pop Lewis was a singer and musician who recruited his three oldest sons to perform with him during the 1940s. They brought along little Roy Jr. and called themselves the Lewis Brothers for awhile before their sisters joined in 1951. They initially performed at churches, school houses and community functions in the Georgia/North Carolina area before they got their own radio show and, eventually, a TV show in the region. Though their membership has changed, their woodsy sound hasn't. Known for soaring female harmonies and Little Roy's virtuoso musicianship and screwball stage antics, the Lewises have made their name primarily on the busy bluegrass festival circuit.

Eddie LeJeune (© Jack Vartoogian)

what's available: Although the Lewises have cut more than 45 albums over the years, most are out of print and hard to find—though some are usually on sale at their shows. The family still records periodically, but its new album, Bluegrass Country Club 𝅘𝅥𝅯𝅘𝅥𝅯 (Thoroughbred, 1997) is the only one you're likely to find at a record store (and even then you'll probably have to order it). Their records, this one included, seldom do justice to the family group's tight harmonies and southern-fried playing. They have to be seen to be appreciated.

influences:

◀◀ Flatt & Scruggs

▶▶ Cox Family, Alison Krauss

Doug Pullen

Furry Lewis

Born Walter Lewis, March 6, 1893, in Greenwood, MS. Died September 14, 1981, in Memphis, TN.

Although his recorded legacy lacks quantity, Furry Lewis has had a major impact on the Memphis blues scene and the rest of the blues world that is still felt today. An original in the way he improvised his own lyrics in traditional songs, as well as showing an incredible sense of humor about human relationships, Lewis, who was also a presence playing slide guitar, should be best remembered for linking nineteenth-century traditional and ragtime pieces to the world of blues. One of the early country blues artists to garner attention for his fiery interpretations of traditional and ragtime works, Lewis got his first opportunity to record in 1927. Most of his reputation is built on this early period's recordings for Vocalion and Victor, which followed years of traveling in medicine and minstrel shows, where he developed a knack for showmanship such as tossing his guitar in the air and playing while holding his guitar behind his head. During this early period he performed for a time with the W.C. Handy Orchestra. Lewis was a storyteller, and his wit is yet another facet of his performance that helped sustain his popularity with audiences. Never able to fully support himself by his music, Lewis took a job with the city of Memphis in the 1920s, staying employed for more than 40 years as a way to protect himself financially because he had lost a leg in a train accident sometime in 1917. However, it was not until the middle of the Depression that Lewis abandoned music as a profession, playing primarily for friends at parties and other social functions. In 1959, Samuel Charters, having rediscovered him as part of the blues revival of that period, got Lewis back in the studio again, first for Folkways and then for Prestige. Lewis found even greater popularity in the 1970s as a result of an appearance on The Tonight Show, a Playboy magazine interview, and a small role playing himself in a Burt Reynolds movie, W.W. and the Dixie Dance Kings. In 1976 Joni Mitchell recorded "Furry Sings the Blues," a song that characterized the aging bluesman as cantankerous, living in poverty, and surrounded by people fascinated by the blues. Even though he had little activity after this period, he still played blues until the end of his life. He left behind a humble but significant body of work.

laurie lewis

what to buy: The single best collection of Lewis's early period, Complete Recorded Works (1927–29) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Document, 1990, prod. Johnny Parth) shows off his wit for lyrics that bemoan relationships, as in "Mr. Furry's Blues," and some great slide work on "Falling down Blues," and it contains both versions of "Kassie Jones." It also offers an alternate take for "I Will Make Your Money Green," showing off how Lewis would often alternate the pattern for singing lines and change his playing patterns.

what to buy next: Shake 'Em on Down ♪♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1972, prod. Samuel Charters) is a compilation of two albums from 1961, Back on My Feet Again and Done Changed My Mind. These 20 tracks find Lewis in good playing form, showing off his improvisational skills, slipping in lines like "I will turn your money green" into "John Henry" and telling a story about his showmanship in the medicine shows during "Old Blue." "Baby You Don't Want Me" and "Goin' to Kansas City" are another couple of cuts that return to his popular themes of failed relationships and moving on. In His Prime, 1927–28 ♪♪♪♪½ (Yazoo, 1991) has some cleaner sounding tracks than the Document collection, but at 14 cuts, it misses such significant sides as "Mr. Furry's Blues" and "John Henry," one of his performance staples. While it does include both parts of "Kassie Jones," it only offers one take of "Judge Harsh Blues." Mississippi Delta Blues Jam, Volume I ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1981, prod. Chris Strachwitz) includes three cuts that last 20 minutes and captures Lewis on "Furry's Blues" and a great version of "Judge Bushay Blues" performed during the Memphis Blues Festival in June 1969. His singing and playing are coherent compared to a session recorded a few months earlier. When I Lay My Burden Down ♪♪♪½ (Biograph, 1994, prod. Arnold S. Caplin) contains sets by Fred McDowell and Robert Wilkins, but clocks in 18 minutes of Lewis's music. The six songs show how easily Lewis was able to blend a variety of styles—traditional, gospel, and his original lyrics. "When I Lay My Burden Down" stands out, as well as a modified "Casey Jones (Ramblin' Mind)."

what to avoid: Fourth and Beale ♪♪♪ (Lucky Seven, 1992, prod. Terry Manning) is worth hearing, but it has much sloppier playing and singing. The liner notes state that the tracks were recorded in Lewis's home while he was "in bed, with his leg off." For whatever reason, they lack the fire that sets apart his early work, as well as the level of playing that other sessions from the same period in the late 1960s exhibit.

the rest:
Canned Heat Masters ♪♪♪ (BMG, 1992)

influences:
◀◀ W.C. Handy, Gus Cannon
▶▶ John Fahey, Stefan Grossman

John Koetzner

Laurie Lewis /Grant Street

Laurie Lewis born in 1950. Grant Street formed 1979.

Laurie Lewis grew up in the San Francisco Bay area, where she gained valuable exposure at area folk music festivals to the likes of Doc Watson and the Greenbriar Boys. Performing in fiddle contests, she was a two-time winner of the California State Women's Championship. Her involvement in the predominantly female groups Blue Rose and Good Ol' Persons were helpful in expanding women's roles in bluegrass music, but it's her stylistic diversity that has kept Lewis an interesting and vital artist to watch, especially in the last decade. Her recording career took off in 1986, when her Flying Fish debut won the National Association of Independent Record Distributors (NAIRD) Album of the Year award. The 1987 addition of mandolin player Tom Rozum to her Grant Street String Band was a turning point; in 1995 the pair released a highly acclaimed duet album. A year before that, Lewis was named the International Bluegrass Music Association's Female Vocalist of the Year. A gifted songwriter, Nashville producers and artists would do well to comb through her albums for material.

what to buy: Earth & Sky: Songs of Laurie Lewis ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, prod. various) collects some of the best tracks from her three Flying Fish releases, adding four previously unreleased tracks. It's wonderful but don't miss out on True Stories ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Mike Marshall, Laurie Lewis). Highlighted by IBMA Song of the Year "Who Will Watch the Home Place?" it also includes Lewis's beautiful "Knocking on Your Door Again."

what to buy next: Lewis and Tom Rozum collaborated on The Oak & the Laurel ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Laurie Lewis, Tom Rozum), a nice duet album with some great original songs alongside well-chosen covers. A high point is Rozum's vocal on Dave Olney's "Millionaire."

the rest:
Restless Rambling Heart ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1986)
Love Chooses You ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1989)
(With Grant Street) Singin' My Troubles Away ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1990)
(With Kathy Kallick) Together ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ Good Ole Persons, Blue Rose
▶▶ Kate MacKenzie, Mollie O'Brien

see also: Scott Nygaard, Good Ol' Persons, Kathy Kallick

Stephen L. Betts

Tom Lewis

Born April 16, 1943, in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

One of North America's finest exponents of contemporary nautical songs, Tom Lewis came to a career of singing and playing button accordion and ukulele after more than 30 years bridging the sea-going and folk-singing communities. Born in Northern Ireland and raised in England, Lewis joined the Royal Navy as an engineering apprentice in 1959, at age 16. Posted to a naval training establishment in Scotland in 1960, he soon started frequenting the Howff Folk Club in nearby Dunfermline, where he was exposed to such luminaries as Willie Scott, Alex Glasgow, Ewan McColl, Archie Fisher, Tom Paxton, and Louis Killen. Although Lewis was not exposed at that time to Cyril Tawney's music, Tawney eventually came to have an enormous influence on his own musical development. During a 24-year naval career (mainly in diesel submarines) Lewis managed to balance the requirements of the service with a growing commitment to participating in folk clubs, concerts, and festivals. On completion of naval service in 1983, Lewis and his wife Lyn immigrated to the mountains of British Columbia, Canada. Within a short time his work was being interrupted by calls from fans who wanted him to keep performing. Eventually, in 1987, Lewis decided to begin performing and recording seriously. In the decade since then, he has recorded four albums, and he and Lyn have traveled hundreds of thousands of miles in cars and motor homes, touring in Australia, Britain, Canada, and the United States.

what to buy: Making Waves ♪♪♪♪ (Self-Propelled, 1992, prod. William Pint, Felicia Dale), on which Lewis is teamed up with Washingtonians William Pint and Felicia Dale, is particularly compelling due to the combination of Pint and Dale's flair for unusual and energetic arrangements and Lewis's equally developed ability as a songwriter. Together, they add up to some of the best newly composed sea songs. "The African Trade," for instance, is one of Lewis's songs that deals with the uncomfortable issue of slavery, reminding us that Liverpool became what it is today only through the barbarism of times gone by. "An Ex-Sailor's Life," on the other hand, is one of his humorous songs, explaining why he prefers life ashore to life at sea, in the most graphic terms: "I'd rather drink m'tea in bed," he explains, "than leave m'breakfast in the head!" And who can blame him? The album casts a wider net to find most of its other songs. Two are the late Peter Bellamy's adaptations of Kipling's songs of the sea. One is a beautiful setting by Pint of a poem called "Sou' Spain," by C. Fox-Smith. Several are traditional, including "Congo River," sung unaccompanied, and "La Pampolaise," a French-language shanty from Brittany, sung by Dale with an arrangement that includes her fine hurdy-gurdy playing. All the songs are given bright, modern arrangements and are performed with gusto and emotion.

what to buy next: Tinker Tailor Soldier Singer ♪♪♪♪ (Self-Propelled, 1995, prod. Ken Whiteley) contains 14 songs, most of which are about seafaring. Shanties on the album include "New York Girls," (in a catchy, older version than the more common "Barrack Street" clone) and "Bully in the Alley." Two songs composed by C. Fox-Smith, one by Tom Waits, and "The Widowmaker" by John Conolly (who also wrote "Fiddler's Green" and "Dublin Lady") round out the covers. The other eight tracks were written by Lewis, and most of them are also nautical. He reprises "The African Trade," with its "Congo River" intro, from the album he made with Pint and Dale. Other nautical originals include "Sirensong," about the attraction of the sea, and "Swallow the Anchor" about the attraction of the land. All of them are compelling songs, and Lewis's direct delivery makes them ring absolutely true. The exceptions to the seafaring theme are equally good songs, and equally born of experience. The album features the Friends of Fiddler's Green, a well-known Canadian folk group, adding choruses, harmony vocals, and instrumental arrangements; Grit Laskin's smallpipes area particularly nice addition, but the whole band does a good job, putting the finishing touches on a fine album. Surfacing ♪♪♪½ (Self-Propelled, 1987, prod. William Pint, Felicia Dale) was Lewis's debut solo recording. Composed almost entirely of a capella renderings of Lewis's own songs, it nevertheless maintains strong links to the nautical tradition. "A Sailor Ain't a Sailor" compares the real life of sailors today with the romantic notions of seafaring life in the past, while "Watches" explains the unusual sense of time developed by seamen. There are odes to fellow submariner/songwriter Cyril Tawney ("Cyril Said It All Before") and to the last of the great shantymen, Stan Hugill ("Recall"), as well as whimsical songs about Lewis's decision to swap the sea for the shore. Perhaps the best of the lot is "Sailor's Prayer," in which a somewhat bloodthirsty sentiment is coupled with the all-too familiar plot of a merchant sailor's days ashore between trips around the Horn. The spare sound might put off those used to big arrangements, but they're bread and butter to sea shanty fans. Sea-Dog, See Dog! ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1989, prod. William Pint, Tom Lewis) is Lewis's second album, on which he branches out and performs songs by various other seafarers, including Ken Graydon, Rod Shearman, and Cyril Tawney, as well as his own songs. Most of the songs are excellent; the only misstep is a humorous monologue that's fine to hear a few times but gets to be a bit of a bore after a while. Fuller arrangements, including guitar, accordion, and other instruments, make this a bit more accessible than Surfacing, and there is a wider range of experiences discussed in the songs, from whaling to log-salvaging. Still, it falls slightly short of its predecessor in charm.

tom lewis

influences:

◀◀ Cyril Tawney, Peter Bellamy, Ewan MacColl, Louis Killen

▶▶ William Pint & Felicia Dale

Steve Winick

Gordon Lightfoot

Born November 17, 1938, in Orillia, Ontario, Canada.

Lightfoot is one of the few singer-songwriters who emerged during the folk music revival of the early '60s to achieve and retain recognition as a distinctive, enduring talent. Strongly influenced by Bob Dylan, Lightfoot specializes in simple yet compelling melodies and evocative lyrics about bittersweet love, the history and natural splendor of rural Canada, maritime adventures (and disasters), wanderlust, and memories of happier times—all sung in his rich baritone voice and accompanied by expert guitar arrangements. As a songwriter, his work has been recorded by Marty Robbins ("Ribbon of Darkness"), Ian and Sylvia ("Early Morning Rain"), and Peter, Paul, and Mary ("For Lovin' Me"). His own hit list included 1970's "If You Could Read My Mind"—since covered by more than five dozen other artists—1974's "Sundown," and the epic ballad of "The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald."

Gordon Lightfoot (AP/Wide World Photos)

what to buy: Gord's Gold ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner/Reprise, 1975, prod. various) is a terrific collection for which Lightfoot even re-recorded some of his pre-1970 material to good effect.

what to buy next: Don Quixote ♪♪♪♪ (Warner/Reprise, 1972, prod. Lenny Waronker) showcases Lightfoot at the height of his musical powers, from the show-stopping country stomper "Alberta Bound" (featuring superb bottleneck guitar licks by Ry Cooder) to the spare, energetic title cut and such mellow pieces as "Beautiful" and "Christian Island (Georgian Bay)." Summertime Dream ♪♪♪♪ (Warner/Reprise, 1976, prod. Lenny Waronker, Gordon Lightfoot) has "The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald" and a wide variety of song styles. If You Could Read My Mind ♪♪♪½ (Warner/Reprise, 1970, prod. Joe Wissert, Lenny Waronker) is Lightfoot's breakthrough album, marked mostly by its gentle, celestial melodies.

what to avoid: On Endless Wire ♪♪ (Reprise, 1978, prod. Lenny Waronker, Gordon Lightfoot), Lightfoot's images are muddy, while the songs lack the strength of his earlier work.

the rest:

Lightfoot! ♪♪♪ (United Artists, 1965)
The Way I Feel ♪♪♪ (United Artists, 1967)
Did She Mention My Name ♪♪♪ (United Artists, 1968)
Back Here on Earth ♪♪♪ (United Artists, 1968)
Sunday Concert ♪♪♪ (United Artists, 1969)
Sundown ♪♪♪♪ (Warner/Reprise, 1974)
Cold on the Shoulder ♪♪♪ (Warner/Reprise, 1975)
East of Midnight ♪♪½ (Warner/Reprise, 1986)
Gord's Gold II ♪♪♪½ (Warner/Reprise, 1988)
Best of Gordon Lightfoot ♪♪½ (Curb, 1991)
Waiting for You ♪♪♪ (Warner/Reprise, 1993)
Gordon Lightfoot: The United Artists Collection ♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1993)
Summer Side of Life ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1994)
Early Morning Rain ♪♪♪ (Capitol Special Products, 1994)
Live ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1996)

worth searching for: The bootleg If You Could Read My Mind: Live in Montreux 1977 ♪♪♪½ (Trade Service, 1977) includes "Edmund Fitzgerald" and others purported to be from the Montreux '77 concert. Others worth scouring used record stores for include the four albums not re-released on CD and deserving of at least ♪♪♪ apiece—Old Dan's Records (Warner/Reprise, 1972), Dream Street Rose (Warner/Reprise, 1980), Shadows (Warner/Reprise, 1982), and Salute (Warner/Reprise).

influences:

Woody Guthrie

Nanci Griffith, James Taylor, Harry Chapin, Tracy Chapman, Janis Ian

James Person

Lilly Brothers /Lilly Brothers & Don Stover

Formed 1952, in Boston, MA.

Everett Lilly (born July 1, 1924, in WV), mandolin, fiddle; Michell Burt "Bea" Lilly (born December 15, 1921, in WV), guitar.

Everett and Bea Lilly were West Virginia natives with a long history of performing live and on radio when, in 1952, fiddler Tex Logan talked them into joining him in Boston; there, with the addition of fellow West Virginian Don Stover on banjo, the brothers became for a time the Confederate Mountaineers and began a regular live gig at Boston's famed Hillbilly Ranch. They were one of the few true bluegrass bands in New England during that period, and as such were immensely important to the growth of bluegrass in the Northeast, exposing such future stars of the genre as Bill Keith, Jim Rooney, Joe Val, Peter Rowan, and members of the Charles River Valley Boys to the real stuff. The death of Everett's son in an auto accident prompted the return of the brothers to West Virginia; they performed sporadically with Stover and/or Logan at festivals throughout the 1970s and into the 1980s. Stover, an outstanding old time, or clawhammer, banjo player as well as one of the best bluegrass pickers, died November 11, 1996. Their early recordings continue to exert an influence through reissues.

what to buy: Live at Hillbilly Ranch ♪♪♪♪ (Hay Holler, 1996, prod. Kerry Hay), made at the Lilly's famous gig alongside Don Stover, features 23 tracks of traditional bluegrass. The trio (accompanied by an unknown bassist) are in fine fettle throughout. Early Recordings ♪♪♪½ (Rebel Records, 1991, prod. Dave Freeman), a reissue of recordings from 1956 and 1957 that also feature Stover, present the trio performing 11 examples of the finest traditional bluegrass imaginable.

worth searching for: Folk Songs from the Southern Mountains ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1962, prod. Mike Seeger) was highly influential to roots-seeking folkies of the 1960s.

solo outings:

Don Stover:

Things in Life ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1972)

influences:

Monroe Brothers, Blue Sky Boys

Joe Val, Charles River Valley Boys

Randy Pitts

The Limeliters

Formed in Hollywood in 1959. Disbanded, 1963.

Lou Gottlieb (born 1924 in Los Angeles, CA; died July 11, 1996, in Sebastopol, CA), bass, vocals; Alex Hassilev (born July 11, 1932, in Paris, France), guitar, banjo, vocals; Glenn Yarbrough (born January 15, 1930, in Milwaukee, WI) vocals, guitar.

This literate musical/comedy folk trio was in business two months after they first met in 1959 in a Hollywood coffeehouse. Lou Gottlieb had come down from San Francisco to write arrangements for the Kingston Trio. With an irrepressible wit and sophistication (he had a doctorate in music from U. California-Berkeley) and using his huge acoustic bass as a prop, Gottlieb was the perfect front man, and his voice found harmonic sympathy with Yarbrough's smooth tenor (his whistle was as slick as his voice) and Hassilev's baritone. The group's biggest hit was 1961's "A Dollar Down," and they remained very popular through the early '60s, especially after signing with RCA Records, for whom they recorded a series of albums, before going their separate ways: Gottlieb founded Morning Star, an infamous commune near San Francisco; Hassilev became a writer and producer; Yarbrough pursued a solo career. He worked with Rod McKuen, and between 1963–65 recorded 14 albums for RCA, with the biggest hit of his career coming with "Baby the Rain Must Fall" in 1965. The Limeliters reunited in the 1970s and again in the 1980s, with Red Grammer, and later, Rick Dougherty in Yarbrough's spot. Yarbrough continues to perform and record as a solo, while Hassilev occasionally performs as part of the Limeliters.

what to buy: Recorded at Hollywood's Ash Grove, Tonight: In Person ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1961, BMG/RCA, 1989, prod. Neely Plumb) is the best showcase of the trio's individual talents, including Gottlieb's outrageous seduction song, "Madeira, M'Dear," and the lovely closer, "Proschai."

what to buy next: Two Classic Albums from the Limeliters ♪♪♪♪ (Collector's Choice, 1996, prod. Neely Plumb) is the best way to still hear the group's topical, if dated, humor, and nice examples of their delicate harmonies. It packages The Slightly Fabulous Limeliters from 1961, a live recording with plenty of the wise-cracking Gottlieb's between-song patter, and Sing Out!, another nifty balance of over-the-top humor and harmony. Gottlieb's "Vikki Dougan," about a woman "whose dress was cut so low in the back/that it revealed a new cleavage," sounds pretty tame almost four decades later, but it's still funny, while "Harry Pollitt" pokes gentle fun at communist fears of the early 1960s.

the rest:
Folk Matinee ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1962)
Makin' a Joyful Noise ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1963)
Alive in Concert ♪♪♪½ (GNP-Crescendo, 1985)
Alive Volume II ♪♪♪ (GNP-Crescendo, 1986)
Singin' for the Fun ♪♪♪ (GNP-Crescendo, 1992)
Joy across the Land ♪♪♪½ (GNP-Crescendo, 1993)
Through Children's Eyes ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1962/Folk Era, 1995)

worth searching for: The Limeliters find their place alongside their peers on Troubadours of the Folk Era Volume III ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1992, prod. Bill Inglot). Though it might not seem the label for the Limes, Reunion Volume I ♪♪♪♪ (Stax, 1976), recorded during their first extended reunion, includes "Acres of Limeliters," their own often very funny tale of their on-again-off-again career, recorded with a small band.

solo outings:
Glenn Yarbrough:
Baby the Rain Must Fall ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1965/Folk Era, 1997)
Glenn Yarbrough Sings Rod McKuen/I Think of You ♪♪♪ (Laserlight, 1994)
(With Holly Yarbrough) Family Portrait ♪♪♪ (Folk Era, 1994)
Divine Love ♪♪♪½ (Folk Era, 1995)
Live at the Troubadour ♪♪♪ (Folk Era, 1995)
I Could Have Been a Sailor (Folk Era, 1995)
All-Time Favorites ♪♪♪½ (Folk Era, 1997)

influences:
⏪ Kingston Trio, Weavers, Brothers Four
⏩ Peter, Paul & Mary, Rod McKuen

Leland Rucker

Colin Linden

Born April 16, 1960, in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Blues singer-guitarist Colin Linden is probably best known as a producer; his work includes albums for Stephen Fearing, Hans Theessink, and Brooks Williams. He's also played guitar on albums by fellow Canadian, Bruce Cockburn, and he sang background vocals on the Band's 1993 release Jericho. That same year, Rick Danko, Levon Helm, and Garth Hudson returned the favor with guest appearances on Linden's South at Eight North at Nine. In 1996 Linden teamed with Stephen Fearing and Tom Wilson to record an album of songs by their mutual hero Willie P. Bennett, who now tours with Fred Eaglesmith's band. Linden, as composer and selector of songs, has a positivity that elevates his songs above the mass of artists in the genre; his blues imply a happy ending.

what's available: South at Eight North at Nine ♪♪♪♪ (Deluge, 1993, prod. Colin Linden) is a fiery, earnest blues recording with a strong, spiritual edge evident in the two concluding tracks, "Keep Your Lamp Trimmed and Burning" and "The Leap o' Faith." Through the Storm through the Night ♪♪♪♪ (Compass, 1997) is another of Linden's blues contributions, while he can also be heard as part of Blackie and the Rodeo Kings (with Fearing and Wilson, and Colin Linden) on High or Hurtin': The Songs of Willie P. Bennett ♪♪♪♪ (True North, 1996).

influences:
⏪ Band, Willie Dixon
⏩ Stephen Fearing, Fred Eaglesmith

Pamela Murray Winters

David Lindley

Born 1944, in San Marino, CA.

Winner of banjo and fiddle contests as a teenager, a long-time sideman to Jackson Browne through the '70s, a scraggly-haired solo artist during the '80s, and a world music collaborator during the '90s, Lindley has never met a stringed instrument he didn't like. His fiddle and explosive lap steel leads ignited Browne's concerts and songs (listen to "Redneck Friend" or "Running on Empty"), and his work livened albums by James Taylor (In the Pocket), Linda Ronstadt (Heart like a Wheel), Graham Nash (Wild Tales and Songs for Beginners), and Warren Zevon (Warren Zevon), among others. Lindley's solo career offers a different perspective: many of his songs are familiar, but laced with a whimsical sense of humor that matched his rayon/polyester attire and eccentric faux dub reggae/chunk/Tex-Mex/pop/rock/dance style. Lindley has spent the '90s recording with Henry Kaiser in Madagascar and Norway and touring with percussionist Hani Naser. Like Ry Cooder, the L.A. guitarist with whom he collaborates occasionally, Lindley is a musician for all seasons.

what to buy: El Rayo-X ♪♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1981, prod. Jackson Browne, Greg Ladanyi) is an album no discriminating rock lover should be without—particularly because of such tunes as "Mercury Blues" and "She Took off My Romeos." Win This

mance lipscomb

Record ♪♪♪♪ (Asylum, 1982, prod. David Lindley, Greg Ladanyi) is almost as good, especially the strangely prophetic "Talk to the Lawyer." Very Greasy ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1988, prod. Linda Ronstadt) offers the tackiest ("Tiki Torches at Twilight") and funkiest ("Papa Was a Rolling Stone") tunes in the Lindley canon. And World out of Time: Henry Kaiser and David Lindley in Madagascar ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Birger Gesthuisen, Henry Kaiser) presents a gorgeous romp, with the cream of Malagasy musicians topped off with an improbably wonderful "I Fought the Law."

